On the 19th August the parties appeared and further applications were made for addition of parties on behalf of the second party and the same were granted and the proceedings were again amended. The dispute was mentioned as "concerning certain boring operations carried on at Parsundi for possession of the underground coal and other mineral products in the said Mouzah." It also directed that written statements were to be put in to the respective claims of the parties regarding the fact of actual possession of the land in dispute.

On that day the petitioners put in an objection against the maintainability of the said proceedings, contending that the only overt act from which a breach of the peace was apprehended proceeded from the side of the second party, namely, obstruction to carts carrying coal for the petitioners, and that action should, therefore, be taken under section 107, Criminal Procedure Code, and that no proceedings under section 145 were maintainable as the Police report did not disclose any dispute as to possession of the entire Mouzah, but only as to the boring operations carried on in certain portions of the said Mouzah and that the proceedings if at all maintainable should be confined to those portions. They further contended that the Zemindar alone was entitled to the minerals and mineral rights and having been authorised by the Zemindar and having carried on boring operations, were in actual possession thereof and the second party having been mere wrong doers claiming title through the putindars who had no right to the minerals and mineral rights could not be said to have such a claim to possession as would justify proceedings under section 145.

The Sub-Divisional Magistrate overruled these objections and again amended these proceedings mentioning that the dispute was "concerning certain boring operations carried on in the Mouzah for possession of the underground coal and other mineral products in the said Mouzah" and written statements were again directed to be filed regarding the fact of actual possession of the land in dispute. Written statements were filed and evidence was directed to be produced on the 1st September 1919. The petitioners filed a list of 26 witnesses to be summoned on their behalf.

On the 1st September 1919 the second party verbally applied for a further amendment which was objected to by the petitioners but the Sub-Divisional Officer amended the proceedings for the fourth time stating that the dispute was "concerning possession of the under ground coal and other mineral products in the said Mouzah" and the parties were directed to put in written statements of their respective claims regarding the fact of actual possession of the land in dispute.

The petitioners applied for the inclusion of the mokarraridars whose rights they had acquired as additional parties, which was refused. The mokarraridars themselves applied to be added and they were also refused on the 1st September 1919 which is the subject-matter of Rule No. 870. They alleged that they were vitally interested in the subject-matter and that if the Maharaja of Burdwan had not got the mineral and mining rights they as mokarraridars had them and that they had transferred such rights to the first party petitioners.

The third Rule relates to the application of one Soshi Bhusan Tewari as one of the lakherajdars of certain portions of the Mouzah.

It is quite clear that the dispute is as regards the right to carry on boring operations in the said Mouzah. The first party petitioners claim such right upon a grant by the Zemindar, that Sampson, that is to say, Low & Company, on the other hand claim a similar right from the putnidars. The issue as between the Zemindar and the putnidars is as to whether there being no express mention of the mining rights and minerals in the grant by the Zemindar to the putnidars as alleged by the Zemindar the putnidars are at all entitled to such rights. The Zemindar relies upon the recent Privy Council rulings and asserts that the putnidars have no such right. The putnidars alleged that they have been in possession of the Mouzah from long before 1839 and prior to the decennial settlement, that one Mritunjoy Chatterjee had executed a registered kabuliyat in favour of the putnidars in December 1907 in respect of the underground right of Nij Mouzah Nakrakuda which includes Mouza Persundi and that Mritunjoy had let out such rights to the Indian Mineral Syndicate in March 1917 who in their turn had leased them out to the Tata Iron and Steel Co., Limited, and that the company were "in possession of the Mouzah both surface and soil by bringing boiler, boring instruments, fitting machinery and building bungalows and cooly huts, driving vehicles, sinking shafts and bringing out coal and exercising other divers acts of actual possession since June 1917;" that Low & Co. had taken a settlement of the surface and underground rights of Mouzah Parsundi from the putnidars the Chatterjees and mokarraridars the Misras and have been "in peaceful and undisturbed possession by making borings, sinking shafts, raising coal and testing fire clay and digging stones;" that Low & Co. having derived their title from the putnidars have been exercising acts of possession and were in actual possession of the minerals of the whole Mouzah by making borings and sinking shafts and raising fire clay and coal and other minerals since January 1919." They contend that the sole question for determination is as to who was in actual possession of the disputed land at the time of the initiation of these proceedings. The second party say that the first party have not carried on any boring operations although they may have collected machinery and men for that purpose, but that they themselves had bored in at least four different places and that two of their shafts were about 90 and 116 feet deep, a fact reported to by the District Superintendent of Police on the 9th July 1919. They further contend that the dispute is as to the right to carry on boring operations over the whole of the Mouzah and not in respect of portions in which boring operations are said to be going on and that it is not possible to give the boundaries of the separate plots where the boring operations are said to be going on and that these proceedings should, therefore, cover the whole of the Mouzah.

The Mouzah was originally let out to putnidars. The putnidars have let out portions to mokurarridars and the mokurarridars have tenants under them. The Mouzah is a very large one. The surface appears to be in the actual possession of tenants.

The first party contends that there has been no dispute with regard to the boring operations carried on by the second party which have not been interfered with, and say that they do not intend to interfere with their boring operations where they are being carried on; that so far as their own boring operations are concerned the tenants at the place do not object; that they have got their consent; that there was no dispute between them and the tenants who were in actual possession of the tracts where they were carrying on their boring operations. Mere recital of the above facts shows that the question of title in this matter is one of considerable difficulty in this case and involves a construction of documents, determination of rights of land owners prior to the decennial settlement and after the permanent settlement, and the consideration of Privy Council cases. It also involves a consideration of what is meant by possession in such matters and the difference between actual and constructive possession in the case of mines and minerals. The fact that the proceedings were amended four times shows that the Magistrate had difficulty in his own mind as to how to word the nature of the dispute. The dispute is not only as between the Zemindar and the putnidars but also between the putnidars, mokurarridars, alleged lakherajdars and actual tenants. What the Court has to find in proceedings under section 145 is actual possession only. Actual possession of the surface where the boring operations may have to be carried on is presumably in the tenants of the land. Finding of such actual possession will not help the matter at all. Sinking of a shaft and touching coal may be said to give title to the underground seam, but it is not for a Criminal Court to deal with these matters. It is not the function of that Court to go into such complicated questions of title and possession including that of adverse possession and of constructive possession of wide areas inferred from actual possession of limited areas, based upon disputed contractual rights and obligations and contested by independent claimants. The actual disputants do not hold mining leases but merely prospecting licenses. We have seen copies of the Amalnamah of the second party and the prospecting licenses of the first party. A license to dig minerals confers no estate or interest in the soil or mine containing them. Nor does it confer any estate or interest in the minerals before they are actually gotten. A license to dig minerals, coupled with a grant to carry them away, is a profit a prendre, an incorporeal hereditament lying in grant, and if exercised by an actual taking of possession it may be the subject-matter of use and occupation; and (if exclusive) may be, and (even if non-exclusive) probably may be, the subject-matter of an action to recover possession.

The documents, so far as we have seen them, give the holders a right to bore and in the event of their finding coal certain terms are to be arranged between the parties and leases granted. I do not think that, in a case like this, the dispute is one concerning land involving a question of actual possession. What is actually in possession of the parties is not in dispute, but what has given rise to the dispute between the parties is the right claimed by the first party, petitioners, and the second party, Low & Co., to bore holes for prospecting purposes over the entire Mouzah. I do not think that the Court has jurisdiction in a matter of this character to go into questions of title and possession which will arise between the various parties claiming and interested in the land both surface and underground.

A somewhat similar case is that of Bejoy Nath Chatterji v. Bengal Coal Company, Limited (12). The learned Judges there held that, although Courts are anxious not to unduly tie the hands of Magistrates who are responsible for maintaining the peace, the High Court has always so construed the provisions of section 530 (corresponding to our present section 145) and the corresponding provisions of earlier enactments on the same subject, as to take care that the Magistrates do not volunteer decisions on question properly cognisable by other Courts and unnecessarily complicate investigations which afterwards take place in those Courts. That case related to a dispute regarding the right to dig for coal on some land comprised within the limits of the Mouzah which belonged to the proprietors under whom both the contending parties claimed. In that case the question of actual possession of the whole Mouzah was raised and it was asserted by one party that they were in possession of the whole of that property. It was clear in that case, upon the terms of the document relied upon, that all that the Coal Company took under the grant was the right to dig for coals under such portions of the estate as might be found fit for the purpose. Such right was distinctly limited to purposes ancillary to the working of coal underground. The learned Judges there say that the jurisdiction of a Magistrate under section 530 is defined in these words, "that if he is satisfied that a dispute likely to induce a breach of the peace exists concerning any land or the boundaries of any land or concerning any houses, water, fisheries, crops or other produce of land within the limits of his jurisdiction, he is directed, without reference to the merits of the claims of any party to a right of possession, to proceed to enquire and decide which party is in possession of the subject of dispute." It is practically the same thing under the present section. The learned Judges held that the possession in regard to which a Magistrate's jurisdiction under section 530 should be exercised must be of a real and tangible character. They thought that when a party claimed under a document or agreement the right of doing certain things over a large extent of territory, the performance of acts under such alleged right in one portion of the ground over which the right extends, although it may be good and sufficient for the purpose of keeping alive that right so as to be an answer to the plea of limitation raised in a civil suit, was not of itself a sufficient possession on which the Magistrate's order under section 530 may be based for the purpose of forbidding in a distant locality acts not necessarily in conflict with such possession, though at variance with the right. They thought that the Magistrate was not the proper forum for determining such questions. I take the same view in this case.

One is always extremely unwilling to interfere with the orders of a Magistrate who is the proper authority for maintaining the peace, but I am of opinion that the same object can well be attained in this case by taking proceedings under section 107, Criminal Procedure Code. It is said that such proceedings may be infructuous as the man bound down may be immediately changed and re-placed by another set. There is no difficulty in binding down the principal officers in charge and any change in the officers can be immediately supplemented by taking proceedings against the re-placed men. Some vigilance is to be expected from the authorities. There has been no disturbance of any kind for a considerable number of months. No doubt there is a statement in the report that men had been collected on both sides; but it is clear from the report itself that such men had been collected for the purpose of carrying on mining operations. They are not mentioned as lathials and no reference is made that these men (coolies) who have been brought upon the land for the purpose of carrying on the boring operations have committed any unlawful acts. The only unlawful act mentioned is the stoppage of the first party's cart by the second party three miles away from the spot where they were preparing to carry on boring operations, and outside the Mouzah in question.

I am sorry that my learned colleague is of a different opinion. He thinks that the matter is concluded by the fact that the report shows that there is a likelihood of a breach of the peace and the dispute concerns land. He is opinion that if the Magistrate is unable to find possession he will act under section 146, if necessary, and that at this stage we ought not to interfere. I am of opinion that proceedings under section 146 with regard to such a large Mouzah may cause great injustice to the persons in actual occupation. It strikes me also that if proceedings under section 107 may be rendered nugatory by re-placing the men bound down by different sets of men, proceedings under section 145 may also be made nugatory by persons who are not actual parties to these proceedings. All the persons interested in the Mouzah are not before the Court. The mokurari-dars and lakhrajdars and actual tenants of the whole Mouzah are not before the Court.

While I feel that it is our duty to support a Magistrate in orders passed by him to prevent breaches of the peace, it is also a duty cast upon us to see that proceedings are adopted which are simple in their nature and which may be summarily and expeditiously dealt with. I think that proceedings under section 107 ought to be adopted. We agree with the ruling of this Court in Moniram Bewah v. Mirjan Sardar (22), that in such matters the Senior Judge's opinion prevails as the jurisdiction exercised by this Court is under section 107 of the Government of India Act of 1915, and not under the revisional sections of the Criminal Procedure Code.

We direct that the proceedings under section 145 are to be set aside and that the Magistrate will take proceedings under section 107 if so advised, and if he considers the same necessary. All the three Rules are made absolute.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 379—Attachment of property without warrant—Property removed by owner—Offence, whether committed.

Accused having failed to repay a takawi advance, his property was attached, but the attaching officer had not with him, at the time of the attachment, a warrant of attachment : the property was subsequently ordered to be sold when it was discovered that the accused had removed it, he accordingly was placed on his trial and convicted under section 379 of the Penal Code :

Held, that as the attaching officer had not with him a warrant of attachment at the time he attached the property there was no valid attachment and, consequently, the conviction of the accused could not be sustained. [p. 412, col. 1.]

Criminal revision from an order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Allahabad, at Mirzapur, dated the 26th June 1920.

Mr. Uma Shanker Bajpai, for the Applicants.

Mr. R. Malcomson, Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision against an order of the Sessions Judge of Allahabad, confirming an order of Mr. Radha Mohan, Magistrate First Class of Mirzapur, which has arisen under the following circumstances :—Takawi loan was advanced to a certain number of persons on there joint and several responsibilities Except two, all the debtors repaid the advances made to them. So far as these two debtors were concerned, the Tahsildar made a report that efforts had been made to realise the loans but with no result. He solicited orders for the attachment of the property and obtained the necessary orders from the Magistrate of the district. He directed the qurkamin to make the attachment and the property was attached and put by the amin in charge of a shahna. The attachment having produced no effect, the amin was directed by the Tahsildar to sell the property and, when he arrived at the spot, it was reported by the shahna that the property (crops) was taken away by the owners, that is, the accused. The defence taken was that wild boars had destroyed the crops, but the first Court came to the conclusion that the accused committed the offence of theft inasmuch as they removed the property which was in possession of the shahna and that the story of the property (crops) having been destroyed by wild pigs was a myth. The applicants in revision went up in appeal to the Additional Sessions Judge and it was argued before him that, inasmuch as there was no valid attachment, there was no theft. The learned Additional Sessions Judge, in the course of his judgment, says that "when the qurkamin took standing crops into his custody and placed it in the custody of shahna that amounts to attachment. Besides, all the accused admit that the property was attached," and he maintained the conviction. I am surprised to see this new proposition of law laid down by the learned Additional Sessions Judge of Mirzapur. The rules regulating recovery of takawi loans are embodied in section 5 of Act XII of 1884, and lay down that the same procedure has to be observed as in the case of arrears of Government revenue. Section 149 of the Land Revenue Act No. III of 1901 lays down that "every attachment and sale ordered under this section shall be made according to the law in force for the time being for the attachment and sale of moveable property under the decree of a Civil Court." So far as the Civil Courts are concerned, there can be no legal attachment unless the attaching officer has in his possession a warrant of attachment issued by a competent authority. In the present case it is admitted that there was no warrant at all; therefore, the attachment if it could be called so, under cover of the order of the Tahsildar was no attachment in law. The mere fact that the accused thought that there had been an attachment does not make the attachment a valid one. The remarks of the learned Additional Sessions Judge are incomprehensible. There having been no valid attachment effective in law, there was no transfer of legal possession and the property continued to be, in the eyes of the law, in the possession of the accused. Therefore, the accused could not be said to have committed theft. I am supported in this view of the validity or otherwise of the attachment by the case of Emperor v. Ganesh Lal (1). I am in full accord with the reasons given by Aikman, J., in that case. I am informed that the takawi due has been paid since but that, of course, does not influence my decision stated above. I, therefore, quash the conviction, set aside the sentence and direct that their bail bonds be discharged, Conviction quashed.

SUHELA—RESPONDENT.

Restriction of Habitual Offenders (Punjab) Act (V of 1918), s. 8—Order of restriction for period exceeding one year—Confirmation by Sessions Judge, whether necessary.

An order of restriction for a period exceeding one year passed under the provisions of the Restriction of Habitual Offenders (Punjab) Act does not stand in need of any confirmation by the Sessions Judge. [p. 418, col. 2.]

Case reported by the Sessions Judge, Karnal, with his No. 876 of 3rd July 1920.

GROUNDS.—Notice was issued to the accused Suhelu, a Gujar of Mauza Asan Kalan, Tahsil Panipat, to show cause why he should not be required to furnish a bond for Rs. 500, with one surety in a like sum, to be of good behaviour for three years, or to be restricted for a period of three years.

On the 14th May 1920 Mr. E. A. Penhearow, exercising powers of a Magistrate first Class, in the Karnal District, passed an order directing that the said Suhelu be restricted in his movements to his village Asan Kalan for a period of three years, and submitted the record of this case to this Court for confirmation of his order.

The case coming up for hearing in this Court on the 14th June 1920, the file was returned to the Magistrate on the ground that the Habitual Offenders (Punjab) Act V of 1918 did not require confirmation by the Sessions Judge of any order by a Magistrate restricting an accused for a period exceeding one year. As, however, some more cases of the same nature have been referred to this Court, I have deemed it expedient to obtain the file of Suhelu's case again from the Magistrate's Court with a view to referring the question to the High Court for a ruling.

Under section 123, Criminal Procedure Code, a reference is made to the Sessions Judge only in those cases where the accused, having been ordered to furnish security for a period exceeding one year, fails to do so and is committed to prison in consequence.

ZIAULLAH KHAN v. EMPEROR.

I am unable to find anything in the Habitual Offenders (Punjab) Act which makes the provisions of section 123, Criminal Procedure Code applicable to proceedings under it. Section 8 (1) merely empowers a Sessions Judge in a case referred under section 123, Criminal Procedure Code, to substitute an order of restriction for one requiring the accused to furnish security.

Under the Criminal Procedure Code an appeal lies to the District Magistrate from an order passed under section 118, but no appeal whatsoever is provided for against an order passed by the Sessions Judge under section 123 (3) of the Code. That order is an original one and not simply one of confirmation of the Magistrate's order. Under section 13 of the Habitual Offenders (Punjab) Act, the District Magistrate has power to hear appeals against orders of restriction passed by any Magistrate in the district.

This does not include an order passed by a Sessions Judge under section 8 (1) of the Act. If, then, a Magistrate passes an order of restriction for a period exceeding one year and such order is confirmed by the Sessions Judge the original order being that of the Magistrate, an appeal would still lie to the District Magistrate notwithstanding the order of the Sessions Judge confirming that of the Magistrate. Such a state of things was surely never contemplated by the Legislature.

For the reasons given, I refer the question as to whether an order of restriction for a period exceeding one year, passed by a Magistrate under the provisions of the Habitual Offenders (Punjab) Act V of 1918, requires to be confirmed by the Sessions Judge, to the Hon'ble Judges of the High Court for orders.

Sardar Bahadur Sardar Mehtab Singh, Public Prosecutor, for the Petitioner.

ORDER.—The question for determination in this case is, whether an order of restriction for a period exceeding one year passed by a Magistrate under the provisions of the Restriction of Habitual Offenders (Punjab) Act, (V of 1918), requires confirmation by the Sessions Judge. Now, I have perused the relevant sections of the aforesaid Act and am unable to discover any provision which requires the Magistrate to submit the proceedings to the Sessions Judge for his confirmation. It is true that in the Criminal Procedure Code there is a provision, contained in section 123, which makes it obligatory upon the Magistrate to submit the proceedings in connection with an order requiring a person to furnish security to the Sessions Judge for confirmation, but that provision applies only to a case where the period for which security is demanded exceeds one year and the person against whom the order is passed does not comply with it. In that case, failure to furnish security renders the man liable to imprisonment, and probably it was for this reason that the Legislature provided that a superior Court should examine the proceedings before the man is sent to jail.

Now, that reason is wholly wanting in the case of a person whose movements are restricted under Act V of 1918. If he disobeys the order, then he cannot forthwith be sent to jail. He can be only prosecuted, and the propriety of conviction can be questioned on an appeal from the order of conviction. It is, therefore, clear that there is no danger of a person dealt with under the aforesaid Act to be sent to jail without the Appellate Court adjudicating upon the question whether the order of imprisonment is or is not justified.

Accordingly, I am of opinion that the order of restriction for a period exceeding one year passed under the provisions of Act V of 1918 does not stand in need of any confirmation by the Sessions Judge.

Order accordingly.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 107—Magistrate, power of, to proceed against person within jurisdiction, whose residence is outside jurisdiction.

ADEPU REDDI v. RAMAYYA.

The fact that a person is within the territorial limits of the jurisdiction of a Magistrate when an apprehension of a breach of the peace arises, is sufficient to give the Magistrate jurisdiction to bind such person over under section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and such jurisdiction is not ousted merely because the person to be bound over has his place of residence outside the jurisdiction.

Criminal revision from the order of the District Magistrate, Basti, dated the 16th of February 1920.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Applicants.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The only point raised in this revision is that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to bind over the accused under section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code, inasmuch as the accused does not reside within the territorial limits of his jurisdiction. It is true that in the case of a Magistrate of the first Class one of the necessary requisites to authorise him to pass an order under section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code is that the person informed against and the place where the breach of the peace or disturbance is apprehended are within the local limits of the Magistrate's jurisdiction. The contention on behalf of the applicants is that the accused are residents of a place outside such jurisdiction and, therefore, the Magistrate had no power to bind them over to keep the peace under section 107 of the Crimimal Procedure Code. I cannot agree to this contention. The words "is" and "are" used in this section have been the subject of several cases and have been held to be synonymous with "resides" and "reside" vide Rajendro Chunder Roy Chowdhry, In the matter of the petition of (1): Dinonath Mullick v. Girji Prosonno Mookerjee (2) and Jaiprakash Lal, In the matter of the petition of (3). It has been further held in the case of Shama Charan Chakravarti v. Katu Mundal (4) that temporary residence is sufficient to give a Magistrate jurisdiction to act under that section. It has been found that in the present case the accused were within his jurisdiction when the apprehension of the breach of the peace arose and I do not see how it can reasonably be said that the order passed by him was ultra vires. If the interpretation contended for by the learned Vakil, who appears for the applicants, is correct it simply means that the administration of justice would in some cases be impracticable, and a man residing on the boundary of a particular district cannot be prevented from making preparations for committing a breach of the peace in that district although he might be going there every hour of the day. This will seriously interfere with the administration of justice. I agree with the view of the Calcutta High Court referred to above and hold that the Magistrate had jurisdiction to bind over the accused for keeping the peace. The application is rejected.

Section 517 of the Criminal Procedure Code is limited in its application to moveable property. [p. 415, col. 1.]

In order to make section 522 applicable to immoveable property it is not necessary that force should be an ingredient of the offence of which the accused is convicted, provided the use of force appears from the evidence. [p. 415, col. 1.]

ORDER.—The Deputy Magistrate has held, on the strength of a Lower Burma ruling, that section 517, Criminal Procedure Code, applies to immoveable property. He should confine himself to the rulings of the High Courts in which, for the present purposes, he would have found ample guidance. See Baisureswar Singh v. Bhola Nath Pathuk (Emperor) (1) and Ahmed Ali v. Keenoo Khan (2). Section 517 must be regarded as applying to moveable property only and the only question is, whether section 522 is applicable.

It is not necessary, in order to its applicability, that force should be an ingredient of the offence of which accused is convicted, if the use of force appears from the evidence. There seems in the present case to be evidence, on which a finding in favour of the use of the criminal force can be reached. The Deputy Magistrate's order as to possession is set aside and the case remanded, so that it may be restored to the file and the appeal, so far as it relates to possession, may be re-heard in the light of the foregoing. The petition is dismissed so far as it relates to the conviction.

The Hon'ble Mr. Raza Ali, for the Applicants.

Mr. R. Malcomson, Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—It seems that in the early part of February last one Niadar made a complaint against Mawashi and Naurang under section 498 of the Indian Penal Code for the abduction of his wife, Musammat Hardei. The Magistrate examined the complainant and, on the complainant stating that a warrant should be given to him for bringing the woman to the Court or else the accused would remove her from their house, the Magistrate issued a bailable warrant for her arrest. Two constables accompanied the complainant and arrested the woman. No one stood surety for her and, as they were taking the woman along, the accused came up and rescued the woman, but very little hurt was caused to the policemen. They were tried by a Magistrate of the second Class and convicted. They went up in appeal to the District Magistrate who dismissed the appeal saying that there was no cause for interference as the offence had been brought home to them. The points raised before me in revision are two,—(1) That the order for the arrest of the woman who was not an accused person was illegal, and (2), that the Magistrate had not recorded his reasons in writing as is required by the express provisions of section 90 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The case of Sukheswar Phukan v. Emperor (1) is quoted in support of this contention. I have not been referred to any decision of this Court on the point. I have carefully gone through the case above-mentioned. The Calcutta case was decided ex parte in the absence of any appearance on behalf of the Crown. The only thing to guide the Judges in that case was the order sheet. The provisions of section 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code were not even noticed. In the present case it appears that the complainant, when being examined, expressly stated that the accused would remove the woman, if they came to know that her presence was required by the Court. This being sworn to, the Magistrate was justified in passing the order for a warrant which he did. Having regard to the provisions of section 537 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, clause (a), I think that the mere omission in the present case in recording the reasons for the issue of a warrant in the first instance amounted to a mere irregularity, and would not vitiate the proceedings. It is not shown that, from any point of view, the accused has in any way been prejudiced. I would, therefore, affirm the conviction and sentence and dismiss the application. The accused must surrender to his bail to serve out the remainder of his sentence.

(1) 11 Ind. Cas 593; 38 C. 789; 15 C. W. N. 1001; 15 C. L. J. 186; 12 Cr. L. J. 409.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 256—Accused, right of, to summon prosecution witnesses for cross-examination—Magistrate, whether can direct payment of costs.

Section 256 of the Criminal Procedure Code gives the accused an absolute right to re-call prosecution witnesses for cross-examination at the expense of the prosecution, and it is not open to the Magistrate to order the accused to pay costs for re-calling those witnesses.

Case reported by the Sessions Judge, Rawalpindi, with his No. 932 of 17th July 1920.

FACTS.—Taqi Shah, who is accused in a case under section 498, Indian Penal Code, in the Court of Sardar Hira Singh, Assistant Cantonment Magistrate Rawalpindi, applied to re call prosecution witnesses for cross-examination after the charge. The Magistrate, by his order, dated 3rd June 1920, ordered the petitioner to deposit the costs of witnesses belonging to the Jhelum District.

GROUNDS—Section 256, Criminal Procedure Code, gives the accused an absolute right to re-call prosecution witnesses for cross-examination at the expense of the prosecution. Section 257, Criminal Procedure Code, quoted by the Magistrate has, I think, no application. The petitioner complains of bias on the part of the Magistrate. The case seems to involve a Hindu-Muhammadan question.

I forward the files to the High Court for such orders as the Hon'ble Judges may think fit to pass.

Mr. Abdul Razaq, for the Petitioner.

ORDER.—In this case charge was framed, and the accused was then asked if he wanted to re-call prosecution witnesses for cross examination. He said he did. The Magistrate then said he must pay costs for re calling these witnesses.

This is wrong. Section 256, Criminal Procedure Code, lays down that the witnesses must be re-called, and after cross and re-examination, discharged. The remaining prosecution witnesses (if any) are then to be examined. And then the accused shall be called upon to enter upon his defence and produce his evidence. Section 257 only relates to the stage after the accused has entered upon his defence.

I direct that the prosecution witnesses whom the accused wishes to cross-examine be re-called for the purpose at Government expense.

With regard to the concluding portion of the learned Sessions Judge's order of reference I note that, if the accused wishes the case to be transferred to the Court of another Magistrate, it is open to him to present an application to the District Magistrate

Order accordingly.

Specific performance—Sale-deed inoperative for non-registration—Deed, whether can be regarded as agreement to sell—Suit for specific performance, whether maintainable.

A sale-deed which becomes inoperative by reason of non-registration owing to the plaintiff's default cannot be treated as an agreement to sell and thus form the basis of a suit for specific performance of the contract of sale.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Vellore, in Appeal Suit No. 13 of 1918, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Ranipet, in Original Suit No. 470 of 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. P. R. Srinivasa Aiyangar, for the Appellant.—The sale-deed having been executed, the vendee plaintiff is invested with a right to effectuate it. Courts could allow the document that is incomplete for want of registration to be completed and made effective. There is an implied agreement in the document which the plaintiff could enforce. See Titali Venkata Seetharamaya v. Vedula Venkataramaya (1). Directly there was execution the vendee acquires his rights.

Mr. C. V. Anantha Krishnier, for the Respondents.—The document has become inoperative owing to non-registration and plaintiff cannot base any rights on it. He has deliberately refrained from presenting the document for registration and he is precluded, after the expiry of the period, either to ask for its registration or for execution and registration of a new document.

The document which purports to be a completed sale cannot be treated as an agreement to sell. Plaintiff cannot seek for any remedy on the basis of such an implied agreement. See Venkatasami v. Kristayya (2). The opinion to the contrary in Titali Venkata Seetharamaya v. Vedula Venkataramaya (1) is an obiter.

JUDGMENT.—Exhibit A. was executed by the 1st defendant to the plaintiff and he was given possession of it. It is in terms a sale-deed but it was not registered. The finding is that the plaintiff made default in the payment of the purchase-money and the document was not, therefore, registered. He now sues to enforce specific performance of an agreement which, according to him, is implied in the sale deed, Exhibit A. The question for consideration is, whether it is open to the plaintiff to regard Exhibit A; which has become inoperative by reason of non-registration, as an agreement to sell. In our opinion this remedy is not open to the plaintiff. He could have presented the document for registration under section 32 of the Registration Act and could have enforced the attendance of the 1st defendant to admit execution under section 36 of the same Act. If there was a refusal to register, he could have enforced his further remedies in this behalf under the Act. If he failed to take advantage of these provisions of the law, it is not open to him to ignore the plain terms of the document and to read into it an agreement to sell which was superseded by the conveyance itself. It is true that Courts of Equity would assist a plaintiff to effectuate an incomplete title, if the default is due to act of God or conduct amounting to fraud on the part of the executant. But here no default is attributable to the 1st defendant. On the other hand, it is the default of the plaintiff in not paying the consideration that led to the document remaining unregistered. This case is within the principle of Venkatasami v. Kristayya (2). There it was held that, when the plaintiff did not avail himself of the remedies provided by the Registration Act, he is not entitled to ask either that the document should be registered or that a new document should be executed and registered.

This decision has not been dissented from in this Court hitherto. The obiter dictum in Titali Venkata Seetharamaya v. Vedula Venkataramaya (1), that such a document can be treated as an agreement to sell was pronounced without adverting to Venkatasami v. Kristayya (2). In Calcutta there are direct authorities against the Madras view. But, with all deference, we fail to find the principle on which the contrary view can be based. The learned Judges apparently misunderstood the view taken in Chinna Krishna Reddi v. Dorasami Reddi (3), in saying that Venkatasami v. Kristayya (2), was dissented from. We are, therefore, not prepared to follow Surendra Nath Nag v. Gopal Chunder Ghosh (4), in preference to Venkatasami v. Kristayya (2). In Amar Chand v. Nathu (5) it is not shown who had the document and whether there was a suppression of it. On the whole, it seems to us that there is no ground for not acting on the principle of the decision in Venkatasami v. Kristayya (2). The second appeal should be dismissed with costs.

The proviso does not protect a bona fide transferee for value without notice of the real nature of a transaction if he holds under a registered deed executed less than twelve years before the institution of the suit. [p. 418, col. 2.]

Mr. Y. V. Bhandarkar, for the Appellants.

Mr. K. N. Koyajee, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The plaintiff sued for redemption under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act alleging that the document, dated 6th March 1911, passed by him to the father of defendants Nos. 1 and 3 to 8 for Rs. 75 though in form a sale out and out was really in the nature of a mortgage. The defendant No. 9 obtained, on the 12th May 1905, a sale deed from defendants Nos. 1 to 8 for Rs. 525. It has been found by both Courts that the sale-deed in favour of Tyeballi, the father of defendants Nos. 1 and 3 to 8, was really a mortgage. Accordingly, a redemption decree was passed in favour of the plaintiff. The defendants Nos. 9 and 10 have appealed, and contend that the plaintiff ought not to have been allowed to redeem the mortgage of 1911 on the ground that defendants Nos. 9 and 10 were bona fide purchasers for value without notice from the heirs of Tyeballi.

The Appellate Court seemed to be of the opinion that defendants Nos. 9 and 10 had notice. But, except for the fact that Rs. 75 was mentioned as the consideration for the document of 1911, there was nothing that was brought to their notice which would put them on inquiry to ascertain whether, as a matter of fact, Tyeballi was a mortgagee or a purchaser. But the 2nd proviso to section 10A of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act does not protect a bona fide transferee for value without notice of the real nature of a transaction if he holds under a registered deed executed less than twelve years before the institution of the suit. It has been contended that we ought not to read the proviso in that way, and that it has not been directly enacted that a bona fide transferee shall not be protected until after twelve years from the date of his title-deed. It is quite possible, from our point of view, that the intention of the Legislature might have been more clearly expressed. But it is difficult to see why this proviso was inserted unless it meant that a bona fide transferee for value without notice would only be protected if twelve years had expired from the date of the transfer. If that is not the meaning and the effect of the proviso, then there was no necessity whatever for its insertion. If the ordinary rule under section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act applies that a bona fide transferee for value without notice is protected, where the owner of the property can succeed in proving that the document which he executed to the transferee's vendors was a mortgage and not a sale deed, then that rule would apply in spite of section 10A of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, and a bona fide transferee would in all cases be protected. But apparently the object of the Legislature in enacting section 10A of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act was to protect the mortgagor and not the transferee, if the mortgagor was sufficiently diligent in seeking to redeem the property. In my opinion, the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

HEATON, J.—I concur. The judgment of the first Appellate Court is not, to my mind, altogether clear. It leaves me in doubt as to whether that Court really did find that the present appellant was a purchaser for value without notice. But I will assume, for the purpose of this judgment, that the appellant was a bona fide purchaser for value without notice, and that if the ordinary rule applied, i. e., the rule contained in section 41 of the Transfer of Porperty Act, the appellant would be entitled to succeed. But I think that where section 10A of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act applies, section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act ceases to have any application. It is re-placed by the 2nd proviso to section 10A. If that, is not the result, I confess I cannot conceive why section 10A was ever enacted. The fact that it is there, although it is not as explicit as it might be, seems to me to show quite clearly that the ordinary rule as to a purchaser for value without notice is abrogated. I find nothing surprising in this, for it has to be remembered that the rule in favour of a purchaser for value without notice is an exception to one of the fundamental rules of property, which is that the property belongs to its proper owner and cannot ordinarily pass away from its proper owner without the consent and active participation of that owner. But where you have an Act, such as the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, which is intended to protect agriculturists, not only against the rapacity of money-lenders but also against adventitious circumstances which are likely to operate to the prejudice of an agriculturist on account of his ignorance, it is not, to my mind at any rate, in any way surprising to find that the rule which is legalised by section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act is abrogated altogether. I agree, therefore, that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

C. P. Tenancy Act (XI of 1898), s. 41 (2)—"Premium," meaning of—Sub-lease—Lessor agreeing to pay rent to creditor—Surrender of holding—Sub-lessee, right of, to possession—Joint family—One member tenant of holding—Other members, whether also tenants.

The term "premium" in section 41 (2) of the C. P. Tenancy Act means a payment made in lump when a lease is granted or renewed and should not be pressed so as to make it include what is ostensibly a merely periodical payment. [p. 421, col. 1.]

On 3rd July 1914 B. with the consent of the malguzar executed a simple mortgage-bond of his absolute occupancy holding in favour of L., and undertook to pay the amount due by 19 annual instalments. On the same day, B. gave a sub-lease to L's. son J. of the holding for 19 years and agreed to pay the rent to the malguzar, and to pay to L. the rent payable by the sub-lessee. On 8th July 1914, B. surrendered the holding to the malguzar for a consideration, and the malguzar let the land to B's. son for a nazrana who, through his mother and guardian, executed a sub-lease in favour of the malguzar for a term of two years. On 16th April 1917 J., alleging that he had been illegally ejected in December 1914 brought the present suit for possession, and the question was whether the consideration for the sub-lease to J., viz, 19 annual payments, could be regarded as a premium :

Held, that the sub-lease to J. could not be treated as given in consideration of a premium and that he was entitled to possession thereunder. [p. 421, col. 2.]

Mr. V. R. Pandit, R. B , for the Appellant.

Mr. V. D. Sathaye, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Behari, the first defendant in the case out of which this second appeal arises, owed money to one Lachhiram on a registered mortgage, dated the 6th September 1907. In 1914 an account was made and it was proposed that for the balance (Rs. 700) found due and future interest Behari should mortgage his absolute occupancy holding of which the rent is Rs. 16 10 6 per annum. The Malguzar having consented to this transaction, Lachhiram took, on the 3rd July 1914, a simple bond for Rs. 874 from Behari who undertook to re pay by 19 annual instalments of Rs. 46 each. The same day Behari gave Lachhiram's son, Jagannath, a sub-lease of the holding for 19 years. Under this document (Exhibit P-1) Behari agreed to pay the rent due to the Malguzar and stipulated that Rs. 46, the rent payable by the sub-lessee, should be handed over to Lachhiram to satisfy the latter's bond. The sub lease was registered forthwith. On the 8th July 1914 Behari surrendered the holding to the Malguzar for an ostensible consideration of Rs. 200 and the Malguzar then let the land to Behari's minor son, the defendant Babulal, for a nazarana of Rs. 200 Babulal, through his mother and guardian, at once executed a sub-lease in the Malguzar's favour for a term of two years.

Jagannath sued on the 16th April 1917 alleging that both the defendants illegally ejected him in December 1914. For each defendant a separate written statement was filed. Behari pleaded that the bond and sub-lease together constituted a device to evade the provisions of section 41, Central Provinces Tenancy Act, 1898; that the sub-lease was, therefore, unenforceable, and that the plaintiff did not obtain possession under the document. For the minor defendant it was urged that the consideration for the sub-lease was inadequate, Rs. 100 being a fair rent, but this is no longer of importance.

The Trial Judge dismissed the suit on the ground that the landlord's consent to the sub lease in favour of the plaintiff was essential and upon the surrender by Behari the sub-lease determined.

The plaintiff appealed to the District Judge who held that the sub-letting to the plaintiff was in consideration of a fine, or premium, of Rs. 874 and was, therefore, bad for want of notice to the landlord. The learned Judge considered that the plaintiff and his father, Lachhiram, being joint, the sub lease was merely a ruse for evading the necessity of giving notice to the landlord under section 41 (2) of the Tenancy Act. He also held on the evidence that the plaintiff never obtained possession and was, therefore, not dispossessed as alleged. The plaintiff has preferred this second appeal.

The defendant, Behari, has made no appearance in this Court. For the other defendant it is admitted that the question whether the plaintiff obtained actual possession of the holding is immaterial.

For the appellant it is urged that the consideration for the sub-lease in his favour consisted of rent proper, not of any fine or premium, within the meaning of those terms in section 41 (2) of the Tenancy Act, and that the transaction must, therefore, be held good, in spite of the surrender of the holding, in accordance with the well settled principle recognized in Maharajsha v. Abheram (1), Saiyad Noor v. Ramji (2), Bhuray v. Vishwanath (3) and Baliram v. Ram Rao (4). For the minor defendant-respondent, on the other hand, it is urged that the consideration for the bond in Lachhiram's favour should be regarded as a premium paid for the sub-lease.

The words 'fine' and 'premium' have not been defined in the Tenancy Act. In Stroud's Judicial Dictionary a fine is said to mean something which is to go irrevocably into the pocket of the person who requires it as a condition of consenting to an assignment, and in section 2 (ix), Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, 'fine' is said to include premium or foregift, and any payment, consideration or benefit in the nature of a fine, premium or foregift. The term 'premium' is used in section 105, Transfer of Property Act, for the purpose of defining a lease of immoveable property and, according to that section, the consideration may consist of a price paid or promised, or of money, a share of crops, service or any other thing of value, to be rendered periodically to the transferor by the transferee. I think, then, that the term 'premium' should be regarded as the equivalent of the vernacular nazarana by which is commonly meant, a payment made in lump when a lease is granted or renewed. In these Provinces, it is usual when nazarana is taken to take also a periodical rent. The term 'rent' is defined in section 2 (8) of the Tenancy Act as meaning, whatsoever is paid in money, kind or service, by a tenant on account of the use or occupation of land let to him, and in this sense, may doubtless include a nazarana. In section 41 (2), however, the term 'premium' is evidently used in contradiction to rent and so, similarly, to its employment in section 105, Transfer of Property Act.

The question then to be considered is, whether the consideration for the sub lease, namely, 19 annual payments of Rs. 46 each, can be regarded as a premium. In this connection, I think, the Court should be guided by the terms of Exhibit P-1: it is where the consideration is plainly described as consisting of a periodical payment to the creditor. I would apply, in this connection, the principle laid down in Beniprasad v. Mulchand (5) that the restriction in section 41 (2) of the Tenancy Act should be strictly construed. The term "premium", therefore, should not be pressed so as to make it include what is ostensibly a merely periodical payment. If Behari had sub-let to a person unconnected with Lachhiram on terms identical with those in Exhibit P-1, I do not think it could possibly have been argued that the periodical payment constituted a premium. Why should the position be different merely because the sub-lessee is Lachhiram's son joint in estate with him? It is settled law in these Provinces that if one member of the joint family is tenant of a holding all the members are not necessarily his co tenants: see Anant Ram v. Takatsingh (6), Gulabrao v. Sitaram (7) and Deochand v. Moti (8).

For these reasons, I think the sub-lease to the plaintiff appellant should not be treated as given in consideration of a premium, and that he is consequently entitled to possession under his document. The decrees of the lower Courts are, therefore, set aside and, in lieu thereof, the defendants will be directed to put the plaintiff in possession of the land. There can be no doubt that the defendant Behari is responsible for this litigation: he must, therefore, pay the plaintiff's costs in all three Courts. The other defendant will bear his own costs in all Courts.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The opponent, appellant in this case, was appointed Receiver in Suit No. 137 of 1913 which was a partnership suit. He applied for leave to pass his accounts and receive his remuneration. On the 26th October 1917, the plaintiff's Pleader in that suit raised objections that the Receiver had not done his work properly; that owing to the Receiver's conduct the defendant had misappropriated the goods to a great extent; that if the Receiver had done his duty carefully and punctually, and had properly made inventories of the goods, the goods could not have been misappropriated; that from the beginning the Receiver had been grossly negligent, and had also helped the defendant, and that under the circumstances he was not entitled to his fees for his services as Receiver, on the contrary he was liable for plaintiff's loss.

The record shows that, on the 22nd December 1917, the Subordinate Judge passed the following order:—"The accounts submitted by the Receiver from time to time examined. I find everything correct and regular. I see no reason whatever to doubt the bona fides of the same. Hence I order that the amount claimed by the Receiver for his fees and the expenses incurred by him be paid over to him out of the balance in the hands of the Nazir."

I think it must be taken that the learned Subordinate Judge considered the objection raised by the plaintiff to the Receiver passing his accounts, and it was open to him under Order XL, rule 4 to find that the Receiver had occasioned loss to the property by his wilful default or negligence and if he had found that the Receiver had been guilty, he could have directed the Receiver's property to be attached and sold and the proceeds applied to make good the loss.

More than a year after that order was made, the applicant, plaintiff in Suit No. 137 of 1913, applied to the Subordinate Judge, a different Subordinate Judge, for leave to sue the Receiver for damages caused to him by the negligence, laches, &c., of the Receiver. It is not suggested that the negligence or laches of the Receiver was in any way different from the negligence and laches alleged when the Receiver applied to pass his accounts. The Court has granted leave, although I doubt whether, if the application had been made to the same Subordinate Judge who had made the order of the 22nd December 1917, it would have been granted. All that the learned Subordinate Judge had before him, when he passed this order, was the allegation made by the applicant. Apparently, the learned Judge did not consider that those allegations had been made on the previous occasion and had been found to have no weight whatever by his predecessor.

The first question is, whether an appeal from that order giving leave to sue the Receiver lies. Admittedly, the order giving leave is not an order under the Court. But it is an order according to the practice of the Court. The Receiver is an officer of the Court, therefore, any action taken against a Receiver without leave of the Court is contempt. But, unfortunately, section 104 of the Civil Procedure Code only provides for appeals against orders specified in that section. Therefore, the preliminary objection that no appeal lies against this order must prevail.

Then it was suggested that we could deal with the matter under section 115 of the Code. But there also it is difficult to find that the learned Judge has exercised a jurisdiction not vested in him by law, or has failed to exercise a jurisdiction so vested or has acted with material irregularity. He had jurisdiction to entertain the application and it was in his discretion whether or not he should grant it. We cannot say that he acted with material irregularity in the exercise of his discretion,

But it seems to us that an appeal lay against the order of the 22nd December 1917. Though the order was not against the Receiver, it was an order really refusing relief against the Receiver, so an appeal lay because under Order XLIII, rule 1there is an appeal against an order under rule 4 of Order XL, and in Zipru Talhoo v. Hari Supdushet (1) it was held that an order made upon an application under rule 100 of Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code, dismissing the application was an order made under rule 101. So that, where a Court is seized with a particular matter under a particular rule, and an order under that rule is appealable, the order made by the Court, whether it is a positive order or a negative order dismissing the application, is still appealable under Order XLIII, rule 1. Therefore, this order passing the Receiver's accounts was in fact a final order, and I should certainly like to express the opinion that the Court ought to protect its officers and to see as far as possible that they are not pestered with actions by parties to the suit who are not satisfied with their conduct, when they had every opportunity of making allegations against the Receiver at the time his accounts were passed. I do not say that all actions against persons who act as Receivers are to be excluded after their accounts are passed. There may be cases where the misconduct of a Receiver has been concealed, and could not have been ascertained even with due inquiry before the accounts were passed. When the Receiver applies to pass his accounts, then is the time for the parties to the suit to object to the accounts, and to make allegations of misconduct against the Receiver, and if the accounts are passed in spite of those objections, then the matter, as far as I can see, is decisive against those parties as far as the allegations which are made against the Receiver at that time. The appeal will, therefore, be dismissed, but, in the circumstances, without costs.

HEATON, J.—I concur in the order proposed. The matter of real importance and interest which has been the subject of argument before us is, whether a suit, in the circumstances of this case, will or will not lie against a Receiver. In my opinion, the suit will not lie. A Receiver was appointed and presented his accounts, and with it an application asking that his accounts be passed and his remuneration awarded to him, and in reply the plaintiff respondent objected. His application in objection has been read out by my Lord the Chief Justice, and I need not repeat it. But it follows that there was before the Judge a matter in dispute between the Receiver on the one hand, and the planitiff in the suit on the other, and this dispute concerned the performance of his duties by the Receiver, and the plaintiff alleged those very matters which the Judge, as is especially provided by rule 4 of Order XL, can take into account. The Judge, of course, considered whatever was placed before him when the matter came to be heard. The objections stated by the plaintiff were not made good. The accounts were passed, and the Receiver was allowed, to have his remuneration.

Now, was the order then made by the Judge an order under rule 4 of Order XL? I consider that Order XL is somewhat imperfectly framed, but I feel no doubt whatever that the order I speak of was an order made under rule 4. If we turn to section 94 of the Code, we find it is provided that in order to prevent the ends of justice from being defeated the Court may, if it is so prescribed, appoint a Receiver of any property and enforce the performance of his duties by attaching and selling his property. "So prescribed" means prescribed by the rules, and it is prescribed by the rules that a Receiver may be appointed, and it is further prescribed by the rules that the performance of his duties may be enforced by attaching and selling his property. That appears from rule 4 of Order XL which I have already referred to. It is clear also that the order made by the Court was an order in a matter in which the Court had to determine whether the Receiver's duties had been properly performed, and, if not, it was a matter in which the Court had power to enforce the proper performance, or, as it may be otherwise stated, to punish the non-performance, of the Receiver's duties by an order relating to his property. If that was the nature of the proceedings, then the order was either an order under rule 4 of Order

XL, or an order which you cannot possibly account for in any part of the Code. It certainly is an order which the Court must be empowered to make. That is quite plain. If you have a Receiver, the appointment of whom is provided for by the Code, and if he has to submit his accounts, and that is also provided for, the Court must necessarily have power to say whether those accounts are right or wrong, and whether it will accept them or not, and it is only to rule 4 that you can ascribe the order which was made in this case. Therefore, it was an appealable order. Where you have a Tribunal expressly pointed out, as here, which is the Court which appointed the Receiver; where you have an inquiry specifically indicated, and an irquiry is indicated here: where you have the power to make an order, such as there is here, and an appeal is provided for against that order, and that also is the case here; then you have an instance of a remedy and a Tribunal which excludes what otherwise would be the ordinary remedy, a suit. But having this special Tribunal and special method laid down in the Code, the suit is excluded. It was objected that the inquiry under rule 4 was a summary inquiry. Well, if by summary inquiry is meant an inquiry which secures the usual degree of fairness, and efficiency, and which gets rid of a good deal of formality and delay, I have no objection to this inquiry being described as summary. But if it fulfils the conditions I have mentioned, instead of being inferior, it would actually be superior to the ordinary method of a suit. I do not suppose, I do not think there is any reason for supposing, that an inquiry made under rule 4 of Order XL would in any material degree be either less fair or less efficient than a trial such as takes place in an ordinary suit. Once having arrived at the conclusion that a suit will not lie, that suffices for the purpose of this case, in which it is unnecessary to do more than express an opinion. For, if a suit is hereafter presented, and I doubt whether it will be, it will, of course, be at once either rejected or dismissed by the Court to which it is presented. It is, therefore, quite superfluous for us to deal with the matter under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure; even if to do so were not open to the objection that it would be setting at naught the pronouncements which from time to time we have ourselves made, as to the scope of section 115. I agree, therefore, to the order proposed by my Lord the Chief Justice.

THE FIRM KOTU MAL-CHARAN DAS OF AMRITSAR, THROUGH CHARAN DAS —DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

THE FIRM BIHARI LAL-JAGGA MAL OF AMRITSAR, THROUGH TIRATH RAM —PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Sale of goods—Warranty of quality—Re-sale—Buyer, duty of, to ascertain contents—Negligence—Damages, whether can be claimed.

Where there has been a re-sale, in order to recover special damages for a breach of warranty it is necessary that the buyer should not have been negligent in failing to detect the inferiority of the goods before he re-sells or deals with them. [p. 426, col. 1.]

One S. sold two cases said to contain muslin of a particular description and lying at Karachi to certain persons by making over the relative documents. The vendees passed on the goods in a similar manner until they were bought by the defendant firm K C. on the 17th May 1918. They sold it to a firm B. J on the 19th K. C. had never taken delivery of the cases at Karachi but B. J. took delivery on the 30th May. On the 25th July 1918 B. J. sold these cases to H. S and gave them delivery on the 31st. H. S, however, did not open these cases till early in September 1918 when they were found to contain muslin of a different description. On the 22nd October B. J. wrote to K. C. claiming damages which not having been paid, they instituted the present suit:

Held, that, although the sale by the defendants carried with it an implied warranty that the cases contained muslin of a particular quality, the plaintiffs ought to have ascertained earlier whether the contents of the cases corresponded with the invoice, and that, having been negligent, they were not entitled to recover any damages. Miscellaneous second appeal from the order of the District Judge, Amritsar, dated the 1 th November 1919, reversing that of the Munsif, first Class, Amritsar, dated the 2nd July 1919.

Lala Durga Das, for the Appellant

Lala Bhagat Ram Anand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are as follows :—One Sant Ram was the owner of two cases of muslin which were lying at Karachi. They were said to be muslins of a particular description and known to the trade as Mull No. 951. He sold these cases to certain persons making over the relative documents. His vendees passed on the goods by making over the said documents to other purchasers until they were bought by a firm known as Barkat Ram-Mehar Chand who sold them to a firm styled Kotu Mal-Charan Das on the 17th May 1918. This firm in its turn sold to a firm named Bihari Lal Jagga Mal on the 19th of May 1918. Kotu Mal-Charan Das had never taken delivery of the cases at Karachi but their vendees Bihari Lal-Jagga Mal took delivery on the 30th May 19 8.

On the 25th of July 1918 Bihari Lal-Jagga Mal sold these two cases to Hira Lal-Sheo Narain and gave them delivery on the 31st July 1918. Hira Lal-Sheo Narain, however, did not open these cases till early in September 1918 when it is said the cases were found to contain muslin of a different description, namely, Mull No. 2043 which Mull is of an inferior description to No. 951. On the 22nd October 1918 Bihari Lal Jagga Mal wrote to Kotu Mal-Charan Das pointing out this discovery and claiming from them a sum of Rs. 84[illegible]. As the sum was not paid Bihari Lal-Jagga Mal instituted this suit against Kotu Mal-Charan Das for the amount.

The Trial Court dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaintiff firm ought to have examined the goods within a reasonable time. They had taken delivery on the 30th of May 1918 and had not written to the defendants till the 22nd October 1918. The other issues in the case were not decided, and inter alia it had been pleaded that the contents of the two cases had not been shown to be other than Mulls No. 951. Bihari Lal Jagga Mal thereupon preferred an appeal to the learned District Judge who disagreed with the Court below and, under Order XLI, rule 23, Civil Procedure Code, remanded the case for a decision on the merits.

Against this order of remand Kotu Mal-Charan Das have preferred this appeal through Lala Durga Das and I have heard Lala Bhagat Ram for the plaintiffs-respondents. Mr. Durga Das referred me to Mitchell v. Murree Brewery Co. (1) and Remfry's Sale of Goods, page 697. It was contended that, although the sale by the appellants carried with it an implied warranty that the cases contained muslin of a specific description, namely, that known as No. 951, the plaintiffs should have ascertained within a reasonable time, (which according to Mr. Durga Das would be one week), what the contents of those cases were. Instead of ascertaining the contents, the plaintiffs sold the cases to a third party and gave delivery and that, by so doing, the plaintiffs have practically waived any claim under the warranty and the decision of the Trial Court was, therefore, correct. On the other hand, Mr. Bhagat Ram contended that his clients, the plaintiffs, had bought specific articles, namely, muslin known as No. 951, that the articles actually received by them were of a different kind and description, namely, muslin No. 2043, and that, therefore, provided the plaintiffs could prove that the cases were found to contain muslin No. 2043, they were entitled to a decree. He contended that the reasonable time referred to by Mr. Durga Das must refer to the time taken in making the claim after it had been ascertained that the warranty had been broken. The matter is not free from difficulty as there is a good deal to be said for Mr. Durga Das's contention that to allow a case of this nature, after a delay such as took place in this case, would materially interfere with trade. A good deal of business is done in Amritsar and elsewhere in the same way as was done in this case. Goods lying at Karachi, Calcutta and Bombay are sold in various up-country stations without inspection. All that passes are the invoices and bills of lading which contain descriptions of the goods contracted to be sold and, no doubt, it often happens that goods change hands several times merely by delivery of the relative documents of title before the goods are actually reduced to possession. In the present case the plaintiffs purchased the two cases from the defendants on the 19th of

May 1918 and took delivery at Karachi on the 30th May 1918. The two cases were thus in their possession from the 30th May to the 25th July 1918 when they were sold to Hira Lal-Sheo Narain. The plaintiffs thus had ample opportunity to ascertain whether the goods in their possession corresponded to the goods they had bought and answered to the description in their documents of title. Instead of taking the trouble to examine the goods, they kept the cases unopened and sold them unopened to Hira Lal-Sheo Narain. These persons in their turn, although they had taken delivery on the 31st July, did not open the cases till September 1918. In Remfry's Sale of Goods, page 697, it is said "where there has been a re-sale in order to recover special damages for a breach of warranty, it is necessary that the buyer should not have been negligent in failing to detect the inferiority of the goods before he re-sells or deals with them;" and various English authorities are cited in support of this proposition. In Mitchell v. The Murree Brewery Co. (1) it was held that if a purchaser who complains of a breach of warranty, does not challenge the quality of the article without delay, the presumption against him is that the warranty is complied with.

Taking all these circumstances into consideration, it seems to me that the plaintiffs have in the present case been negligent. They had the two cases in their possession for a period of nearly two months and yet took no steps whatever to ascertain whether the contents of the cases corresponded with the invoices and, for these reasons, I think that the decision of the learned Munsif is right.

Mr. Bhagat Ram contended that the present was not a case of the goods being of an inferior quality but of a different kind. I have carefully considered this contention but I am unable to agree. The goods bought by the plaintiffs were muslins of a certain number known in the trade, and muslins of that number are known in the trade to be of a certain quality. The cases were alleged to contain muslin but of a different quality known in the trade by a different number. The article bought was, therefore, the same article but of a different quality.

I accordingly accept this appeal with costs and, setting aside the order of remand, restore the decree of the trial Court dismissing the suit.

Appeal accepted.

Appeal from the decision of the Assistant Judge, Surat, in Appeal No. 89 of 1918, confirming the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge at Bulsar, in Civil Suit No. 194 of 1917.

Mr. M. H. Mehta, for Respondents Nos. 1 and 2.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The plaintiffs sued for an injunction against defendants Nos. 1 to 3 restraining them from using the way in question as a way for Bhangis, and other persons of an untouchable class, to clean the privy intended to be erected by them. The plaintiffs' claim has been rejected in both Courts. The defendants Nos. 1 to 3 are the owners of a house which is marked on the left side of the plan, and they instituted Suit No. 623 of 1912 against the present plaintiffs and defendant No. 4 to establish their right of passage for persons, cattle, carts, etc., over the open ground in front of the houses of the then defendant. The then plaintiffs' right of easement was held to be proved to a passage of six feet in width, and a decree was passed in their favour together with an injunction for the removal of the obstruction placed by the then defendant. At that time, the privy in the defendants' house was situated at the opposite end of their premises, and there was no suggestion, during the proceedings in that suit, that the defendants had ever used the road, or the ground over which they claimed the right of way for the purpose of removing night-soil fr m their privy. They now wish to alter the position of the privy, and claim that they are entitled to a passage for the Municipal sweepers carrying night-soil from their privy over the passage which is referred to in the decree in Suit No. 623 of 1912.

Under section 28 of the Indian Easements Act, the extent of any easement (other than an easement of necessity), and the mode of its enjoyment must be fixed with reference to the probable intention of the parties and the purpose for which the right was imposed or acquired. In the absence of evidence as to such intention and purpose, a right of way of any one kind does not include a right of way of any other kind. Therefore, when this right of way was fixed by the decree in Suit No. 623 of 1912, it is quite clear it was never intended by the Court to hold that the then plaintiffs had acquired a right of way over this ground for the Municipal sweepers removing night-soil from their privy.

Taking into consideration the conditions in this country, it seems to me that if a party is able to prove that he has used a certain way for himself and his servants during the time required by the Indian Easements Act, the Court, holding that he has a right of way, is bound to consider the evidence in the case, and decide in what way exactly the right of way claimed has been used.

We have been referred to the case of Esubai v. Damodar Ishvardas (1). That was a case where the plaintiff claimed an easement of necessity, and different considerations apply in the case of such an easement. Here there is no question of an easement of necessity. That would only arise supposing access to the defendants' property could only be obtained through the passage over the plaintiffs' land.

A very similar question arose in Narayanacharya v. Ganu, S. A. No. 255 of 1919, decided on the 13th February 1920. The plaintiff there proved that he and his people had a right of passage over the plaint ground, and he sued to obtain a perpetual injunction restraining the defendants from obstructing his sweeper. But it was proved that the plaintiff had erected a privy within five years of the suit, and that before his right of passage over the plaint ground had been acquired the passage could never have been used by the sweepers carrying night-soil. It was held in the lower Appellate Court that the right which the plaintiff had established did not include the right of passage for a sweeper carrying night-soil. That decree of the lower Appellate Court was affirmed by us in second appeal.

In my opinion, therefore, it was never intended, when the Court passed the decree in Suit No. 623 of 1912, that the then plaintiffs should be held to have a right of passage over the way for their sweepers carrying night-soil because there was no evidence whatever that the then plaintiffs had used the passage for their sweepers and if such a passage had been claimed, we cannot say what the Court would have decided. The decree in that suit upholding the then plaintiffs' claim to a right of way must be strictly construed according to the facts of the case, and to hold now that the right of way of the present defendants for themselves and their servants should be extended so as to include a right of passage for sweepers carrying night-soil would be going, in my opinion, further than the decree intended. I think then that the appeal must be allowed and the plaintiffs' claim decreed with costs throughout.

HEATON, J.—The defendants Nos. 1 to 3 have acquired by the decree of a Civil Court a very extensive right of way over certain property common to the plaintiffs and defendant No. 4. It is a right of way for the passage of persons, cattle, carts etc. to the house of the defendants. Of course, it includes everything that is properly incidental to such a right of way. If, for example, the defendant at the time that his right of way was declared by the Court possessed only one cart, and he afterwards came to possess two or three carts, he would have the right of way for all those carts. If his family become larger in number, or his servants more numerous, he would have the right of way for the additional members of his family and the additional servants. All that is included in the fundamental idea of a right of way, and is properly incidental to it.

But when you come to what is the subject of contention in this appeal, and that is a right of way for Municipal sweepers carrying night-soil, you introduce a new element altogether. It certainly is not generally incidental to a right of way that a sweeper carrying night-soil should use it. Such a person is not one of the normal class of servants of a house-hold in this country. Even in Municipal towns where there are privies and Municipal sweepers, even there the passage of a sweeper over a particular way is by no means a necessary feature of the general use of that way. There are ways over which these sweepers may pass: and there are other ways over which they do not pass. So that we have, in a case like the present, to determine whether the right of way as declared did either expressly or impliedly include the right of Municipal sweepers to pass over the way. It certainly did not expressly include it. In order to say whether it impliedly included it, we have to examine the circumstances of the case at the time when the right of way was declared by the Court. At that time there was no privy in existence which sweepers would reach by using this particular way. There was a privy, but it stood elsewhere, and was approached by a different way altogether, and what the defendants have done is to remove the old privy, or at any rate establish a new one, which can only be served apparently if the sweepers are allowed to use this particular way. By so doing, the defendants have introduced a new element into the matter which the established circumstances show was not, and could not have been, in the contemplation of the parties or of the Court at the time when the right of way was declared by the Court. I think, therefore, having regard to the circumstances which are established, that the appeal must be allowed and the claim decreed with costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

Co-sharers—Suit by joint co-sharer for village profits without asking for partition, whether maintainable—Undivided share, sale of, whether effects partition.

Appeal against the decree by the District Judge, Chhindwada, in Civil Appeal No. 73 of 1918, decided on 2nd September 1918

Mr. M. B. Kinkhede, for the Appellant.

Dr. H. S. Gour, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The learned District Judge in first appeal has assumed certain facts in favour of the appellant and decided that on these facts the suit must fail. These facts are as follows:—Mohanlal held an undivided share in ancestral property. This share was attached and sold in execution of a decree in favour of the plaintiff. The plaintiff at the auction sale purchased the share and obtained symbolical possession. He now sues the latter for village profits.

The learned District Judge holds that the plaintiff cannot sue for profits when he has not sued for partition. He cites Pirthi Pal v. Jowahir Singh (1) in support of this proposition. I consider that his finding on this point is entirely justified. The decision in Amritrao v. Govind (2) shows an alienee of a co-parcener is in no better position than his alienor. The alienor, a member of a joint family, could not sue the manager of the joint family for profits. The fact that the member is a co-sharer of a village and the manager is the lambardar cannot affect the case. It is only a separated co sharer who can sue the lambardar for profits. It seems to be urged in ground No. 3 of the appeal that the auction-sale effected a division of the village shares. This plea is opposed to all rulings regarding rights of the purchaser of an undivided share.

It might have been urged that the filing of this suit indicated the intention of the plaintiff to vary his status from that of an undivided co-sharer in the village to that of a divided co sharer holding a share not to be divided by metes and bounds: but this has not been urged. Had it been urged, it might possibly have been shown that the share which he would receive in partition was different from the share in this particular village to which he is prima facie entitled.

I do not need to decide the question whether the plaintiff is to be considered as in possession of the undivided share. The appeal fails and is dismissed. Costs on appellant.

THE ASSISTANT COLLECTOR, SURAT—RESPONDENT.

Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), ss. 11, 12—Award, when final.

An award made by a Collector in land acquisition proceedings becomes final and binding only when it is filed under section 12 of the Land Acquisition Act, the mere signing of the award by the Collector does not make it conclusive. Before filing an award it is open to the Collector to destroy one which he has already signed and to substitute another in its place. [p. 430, col. 1.]

First appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Surat, in Reference No. 5 of 1914.

Mr. K. N. Koyajee, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—This is an appeal from a judgment of the District Judge of Surat in Reference No. 5 of 1914. The land acquired was notified by Government in June 1912 on behalf of the B. B. & C. I. Ry. Co. The award under section 11 of the Land Acquisition Act by the officer appointed by Government amounted to Rs. 70 per Guntha, the area to be acquired being one acre and one Guntha. The learned District Judge came to the conclusion that the market-value of the ground was Rs. 60 per Guntha. He allowed Rs. 369 damages for severance. The total being under the Collector's award, the Collector's award stood.

The first point taken before us was that the first Acquisition Officer, Mr. Sedgwick, made an award which was binding on the Government, amounting to Rs. 132 per Guntha. That award was never communicated to the parties. The claimant never knew that Mr. Sedgwick had formed an opinion that the land was worth Rs. 132 a Guntha, until Mr. Sedgwick was called in the case as a witness and cross-examined.

The appellants now rely upon the decision in Dosabhai Beranji v. Special Officer, Salsette Building Sites (1). What happened in that case was that the Collector made an award in the following form:—"Government in their Memorandum No. 10578, R. D, of 17th October 1908, have directed me to award compensation at the rate of Rs. 4 per acre for khajan land and Rs. 120 per acre for kharif land, and I, therefore, make my award accordingly." The Court held it was not competent to Government to direct the Collector to substitute a smaller amount than that which, as the result of his inquiry, he had determined to offer.

I gather from the judgment of Mr. Justice Heaton that he concurred with the judgment of Mr. Justice Batchelor to this extent that the award stated the sum which, according to the opinion of another authority altogether, was the compensation which should be awarded, and, so far as could be judged from the terms of Mr. Waterfield's order, it was a sum which he would never himself have offered as compensation, and which in his judgment was strikingly inadequate. Therefore, Mr. Justice Heaton thought it was quite impossible to hold that an award in that form was an award made by a Special Acquisition Officer.

As appears from his judgment, Mr. Justice Batchelor went somewhat further than that, because at page 604* the learned Judge says:—"Then it was suggested that the order of Mr. Waterfield's proposing to award Rs. 50 per acre was not an award but was a mere proposal for an award. It seems to me that this argument comes with a certain want of grace from the representative of Government, since if the order fell short of being an award, it fell short only by reason of those very executive orders of the Government whose validity is now in dispute. And if I am right in thinking that those orders are of no effect, then it follows that the award is that which Mr. Waterfield would have made had he not been restrained by these orders." So that the learned Judge seemed to be of the opinion that, when an Acquisition Officer had come to the conclusion as to what should be awarded for a particular piece of land to be acquired, and had recorded his reasons in writing for the conclusions he had come to as to the value of the land, though, under special orders of Government, he had referred the matter of compensation to his superior officers, the Special Acquisition Officer had already made an award which was binding on Government, and if its contents could be proved, the claimant would be entitled to get that amount and nothing less in the first instance, while he could get more by an application to the Court.

If that had been the opinion of both the learned Judges in that case, then it would be binding on me. But my learned brother tells me that he did not agree with that opinion which was expressed by Mr. Justice Batchelor, but merely agreed with the conclusion arrived at that the award in that case, in the form in which it had been promulgated, was not an award by the Collector as was intended by section 11 of the Land Acquisition Act. He did not agree with the opinion expressed by Mr. Justice Batchelor that, as soon as the Collector had reduced his reasons to writing and signed them, there was an award which could not be altered, and that certainly is not my opinion either.

Section 12 of the Act appears to me to make it clear when an award becomes an award which is conclusive and binding on Government. First, the Collector makes, under section 11, an award under his hand. It cannot be, in my opinion, the case that as soon as he has signed the document that then it becomes conclusive. He can tear it up and substitute another if he pleases. But, under section 12, the award shall be filed in the Collector's office, and shall, except as thereinafter provided, be final and conclusive evidence, as between the Collector and the persons interested, whether they have respectively appeared before the Collector or not, of the true area and value of the land, and the apportionment of the compensation among the persons interested. Then, under subsection (2)—"The Collector shall give immediate notice of his award to such of the persons interested as are not present personally or by their representatives when the award is made." Therefore, it is the filing of the award in the Collector's office which makes it final and conclusive as against the parties interested. It is not suggested in this case that the award of Mr. Sedgwick had been filed in the Collector's office. The claimant has had to rely merely on the fact that he did sign what purported to be an award, and then asked for instructions from his superiors as to what should be done. Therefore, I think the learned Judge in this case was correct in declining to be bound by the opinion expressed by Mr. Sedgwick with regard to the amount of compensation to be awarded.

The only question remaining is, whether the District Judge's decision declining to interfere with the amount awarded by Mr Parekhji, who made a final award on behalf of Government, should be disturbed. Mr. Parekhji allowed Rs. 70 a Guntha, Mr. Murphy, Rs. 60 plus compensation for severance. The latter depends for his valuation on the amount realized by the owner under the leases which were signed by his tenant Ardeshir. It seems that the rent was increased by 50 per cent. about April 1912 very shortly before the land was notified for acquisition ; and that the parties were aware that the Railway Company were about to apply to Government that acquisition proceedings should be taken, is clear from the terms of the document itself.

If I thought that the learned Judge had based his valuation on any wrong method, or that in any respect his figures were erroneous then it might possibly be held that he has undervalued the property. But, as far as I can see, there is no clear error in the judgment. Then an Appellate Court, in my opinion, should not be prone to upset the judgment in the matter of a valuation by the lower Court which has heard the evidence, unless the Judge has fallen into an obvious error in coming to his conclusions. It is quite possible that one Judge might allow a few rupees more here or there than another Judge. But it is not the function of an Appellate Court to interfere in such a case. The claimant has been awarded Rs. 2,400 an acre for his land. Considering all the circumstances of the case, I should say that is a fair value. In my opinion, therefore, the appeal fails and should be dismissed with costs.

HEATON, J.—On the merits of the case, that is to say, the market-value of the land, I have nothing to add. But I confess I was rather surprised to find it was argued that the decision in the case of Dosabhai Bezanji v. Special Officer, Salsette Building Sites (1) supplied us with a solution of the problem in this particular case. Here there was merely a writing signed by a person who at the time was the Acquiring Officer. But that writing was never given effect to. It was never promulgated. It was never apparently filed in the Collector's office even. It was submitted to Government, and, before any promulgation came to be made, it was withdrawn. A different Acquiring Officer had taken up the affair, and it was his award based on the results of his inquiry which was promulgated, and was filed in the Collector's office and so forth. It seems to me to be perfectly clear that we have no award from the first Acquiring Officer. We have nothing more than what might have become an award if certain other proceedings had been taken, which in fact never were taken. This, to my mind, is quite clear when we take the facts and look at them in the light of the provisions of sections 11 and 12 of the Land Acquisition Act.

What we have to deal with in this case is the award which really was made, and it was made, not by Mr. Sedgwick, the first Acquiring Officer, but by Mr. Parekhji who came later. Consequently, what is said in Dosabhai Bezanji v. Special Officer, Salsette Building Sites (1) does not seem to me to help at all. In that case we were dealing with what undoubtedly was an award, in that it fulfilled all the formalities, it had been filed, had been promulgated and so forth, and we were dealing with matters which were stated in that award, and which appeared from that award. If in that case Mr. Justice Batchelor really went the length of saying, or implying, that a statement of opinion which had not been filed, and which had not been promulgated, was an award, then I certainly did not agree with that opinion, nor, in my judgment, did I state anything which would justify the supposition that I did agree. I find nothing in my judgment in that case which I would like to vary now, and I feel no doubt that the appeal in this case ought to be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 89—Calcutta High Court, Original Side, Rules—Sale held by Registrar under rules, without attachment—O. XXI, whether applicable.

Although the provisions of Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code apply ordinarily to sales on mortgage-decrees after attachment under the provisions of the Code, those provisions do not apply to cases where the sale is held by the Registrar of the High Court, without attachment, under, and in conformity with, the rules on the Original Side, of that Court. [p. 433, col 1]

Mr. A. K. Ray, for the Plaintiffs.

Messrs. B. L. Mitter, and D. N. Basu, for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application under Order XXI, rule 89, of the Civil Procedure Code in respect of an English mortgage executed in Calcutta upon which a decree for sale has been made by this Court. There was no attachment before sale. For, according to the practice of this Court, no such attachments are made in execution of mortgage-decrees. The question raised is whether Order XXI, rule 89 applies to the case. Such an application is contrary to the practice is not provided for and is in respects at variance with the rules of this Court and is without authority for the case before Chaudhuri, J., was (my learned brother tells me) by consent of all parties concerned and not after contest. Mention has been made of some case before Imam, J., but there was no judgment and what the circumstances of that case were and whether it was contested does not appear. The decision in Kedar Nath Raut v. Kali Churn Ram (1) is against the application. Since then the new Code has been enacted. I must, therefore, determine whether that order has abrogated the practice of the High Court and the Rules which express it. The question has greater importance than a mere matter of regularity of practice, for a disturbance of that practice would involve an alteration in the rules which have only recently been approved by the Judges and is likely to interfere with the sales by this Court. The conditions and practice existing as regards such sales are different from those prevailing in the mofussil. Good prices are fetched at such sales owing to the procedure here adopted, the security of title and certainty in the procedure. There is a considerable risk that the values of property will be affected if it is understood that it is open to the mortgagor to apply to set aside the sale on payment under rule 89.

These considerations are sufficient to make one cautious in reversing established practice. It may, however, have been the intention of the Legislature to do so and, therefore, we must examine the Code itself.

Rule 89 refers to a "sale in execution of a decree." When we turn to rule 64, which deals with "sales generally", we find that a Court may sell in execution any property attached by it and liable to sale. Properties are not attached under mortgage-decrees of this Court and in fact there has been no attachment in this case. If rule 89 applies, it will be necessary to alter the practice in this respect. It has been argued that Order XXXIV now incorporates the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act relating to mortgages and that this is a sale in execution of a decree and that rule 89 of Order XXI, therefore, applies.

That every rule in that Order does not apply to mortgages is shown by rule 20. This particular case, however, may be explained by the fact that rules 18 and 19 refer to decrees for money. Rule 83 (3) excepts property sold under mortgage-decrees. There is no such exception in rule 89. Assuming, however, for the sake of argument, that that rule applies to the execution of mortgage decrees where there has been attachment, as in the mofussil, it has not been made out to my satisfaction that the section applies to the case of a sale such as this without attachment by the Registrar of this Court under its special rules, and that it was intended to abrogate the special practice of the Court in this respect. It is admitted that the case must strictly come within the terms of the section and therefore, though the application does not so state (and is, therefore, not in form) it is conceded that provisions (a) and (b) must be strictly followed. The same considerations apply to the preceding portion of the rule. For the other side it is contended that if rule 89 does apply, which is denied, then the purchaser is, under the Court's Rules, entitled to extra charges and expenses in addition to the 5 per cent. mentioned in rule 89 of the Code. It is pointed out that there are purchaser's costs and commission of the Registrar and Accountant-General and the scale of mofussil expenses is different from those of this Court. A further question has been raised as to whether the deposit should accompany the application or not, and it has been pointed out that the Registrar does not accept deposits without a Court's order. I mention these contentions to show that, in these and other matters, the practice under the Rules of Court and the Code are not workable together. Although, therefore, it may be the fact that the provisions of Order XXI of the Code apply ordinarily to sales on mortgage-decrees after attachment under the provisions of the Code, I hold that it does not apply to cases such as this without attachment where the sale has been held by the Registrar under, and in conformity with, the Rules of this Court. The application, therefore, is dismissed with costs. I may, in conclusion, point out that the notice of motion is entirely out of order. It is alleged that the order sought was consented to but this is denied. The notice asks that the sale be set aside on such alleged consent. This, however, has not been proved. Learned Counsel has pressed for a decision on the law. The notice further asks that the sale be set aside on payment of 5 per cent. only of the 25 per cent deposit and not of the whole of the purchase-money. Lastly, no offer is made in respect of payment to the decree-holder. I have, however, for the purpose of this judgment, assumed that the notice was an order and that the applicant was ready and in a position to comply with the terms of the rule. Even assuming this to be so, I hold that the application fails on the grounds above stated.

Application dismissed.

Muhammadan Law—Marriage—Dower, husband's liability to pay—Wife pregnant at time of marriage, effect of.

Although marriage, under the Muhammadan Law, is spoken of as a contract, the performance of the contract accompanied by the appropriate ceremony involves a change of status. The contract is merged in the new status acquired by the parties, and, as long as that status continues, so long do the rights and liabilities of the parties under the contract continue. [p. 434, col. 1.]

Defendant married plaintiff and agreed to pay the latter a certain amount of prompt dower. Five months after the marriage the plaintiff gave birth to a fully developed child. Shortly afterwards, the defendant turned the plaintiff out of his house, but did not divorce her. Plaintiff brought a suit to recover the amount of her dower from the defendant:

Held, that the suit was maintainable.[p. 434, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Kanara, in Appeal No. 12 of 1918, reversing the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge at Karwar, in Civil Suit No. 25 of 1917.

Mr. Tyabji, with him Mr. V. R. Sirur, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. V. Palekar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The parties to the suit are Sunni Muhammadans. The plaintiff filed the suit against her husband to recover her dower. The facts are that the parties were married in 1912 the defendant agreeing to pay as prompt dower 525 putlis. Five months after the marriage, the plaintiff gave birth to a fully developed child. Though it must be presumed that the marriage was consummated as the parties lived together for some time after the marriage, the child was begotten by an unknown father. The defendant turned the plaintiff out of his house shortly after the child was born, but it has not been proved that he divorced her. No question of limitation, therefore, arises. The dower agreed upon was prompt and could be sued for.

KULSAMBI v. ABDUL KADIR.

The plaintiff obtained a decree in the Trial Court but this decree was reversed by the learned District Judge on the ground that the marriage was invalid owing to the concealment of pregnancy, and since cohabitation during pregnancy was contrary to Muhammadan Law the initial invalidity could not be cured by illegal cohabitation.

Now, although marriage is spoken of as a contract and no doubt in the first instance there must be an agreement between the parties to marry, the performance of the contract accompanied by the appropriate ceremony involves a change of status. The contract is merged in the new status acquired by the parties, and as long as that status continues so long do the rights and liabilities of the parties under the contract continue. There may be facts which, if proved, will bring about the cancellation of the marriage, in which case the parties will be relegated to the position they occupied before the marriage as if there had been no contract at all, or the marriage bond may be dissolved by divorce. But we have not been referred to any authority for the proposition that an agreement to pay dower can be separated after marriage from the marriage status and can be treated as voidable on the ground of fraud, while the marriage bond continues.

The plaintiff, as long as she is a wife, can sue for her dower unless the defendant can show there was no marriage at all. Where, however, a man marries a woman, and upon the condition that she is a virgin, provides a dower higher than the proper dower, he is only bound to pay the proper dower if it is proved that she does not comply with the condition of virginity. Radd ul-Muhtar, Volume II, page 374. Amir Ali in Volume II, page 434 of his work on Muhammadan Law says under the Shia Law when a man marries a woman stipulating her to be a virgin and finds her not one, he has no power to cancel the marriage. Under the Sunni Law there is a divergence of opinion some of the priests agreeing with the Shia Doctors, others holding that if the husband has been fraudulently deceived he could have a right of option. The latter is the generally accepted view.

I think it can be inferred from these authorities that where concealment of pregnancy is not by itself a ground for cancelling the marriage, the husband has his remedy by divorce.

Though it might be said that there is an implied condition in a marriage contract that the bride is a virgin, still, unless there is an express stipulation, the dower agreed upon must be paid.

We have been referred to Amir Ali, Volume II, page 408, as an authority for the proposition that a marriage is invalid where consent has been obtained by force or fraud. It is true that the proposition was accepted in the case of Abdul Latif Khan v. Niyaz Ahmad Khan (1). But it was found in that case after the marriage that the bride was so ill that consummation was impossible, so that the suit by her representatives after her death for her dower was dismissed. There were grounds, therefore, apart from the question of fraud, for treating the marriage as a nullity which is a different matter from setting aside a contract for dower on the ground that an implied condition has been broken. The Court said there was concealment of a fact which should have been brought to the notice of the husband in order to obtain his free consent to the marriage and so a fraud was perpetrated on him at the time of the marriage.

This is going further than the law as stated by Amir Ali appears to go. If fraud can be a ground for cancellation of marriage it must be express and not implied.

In my opinion, therefore, the plaintiff is entitled to succeed. This appeal must be allowed and the decree of the Trial Court restored with costs throughout.

The appeal being allowed, there must be the usual order for payment of Court-fees by the respondent under Order XLIV, rule 1, read with Order XXXIII, rule 10.

HEATON, J. The marriage contract under the Muhammadan Law is not a bare contract. Amongst Muhammadans, as amongst others, marriage brings about a change of status, which introduces conditions different from those which result from a bare contract. The difference is well-illustrated by a consideration of the differences in result and in remedy following from (a) a breach of a promise to marry, and (b) a marriage brought about by deception. In the first case, the contract is broken ; in the second, it is fulfilled, though one party or the other may have been deceived and may obtain something different from what he or she bargained for. What is obtained, however, is a wife or a husband, as the case may be, and that, as I understand it, is enough under Muhammadan Law.

That law provides ample remedies in the case of a husband, and here it was the husband who was deceived. He may divorce his wife.

The marriage in this case was not, I think, invalid. It was not prohibited or irregular, and the only ground asserted for invalidity is founded on deception. That is a ground which, as I understand, the theory of the Muhammadan Law of marriage, is not enough. The case of Abdul Latif Khan v. Niyaz Ahmad Khan (1) may suggest that deception may invalidate a marriage, but in that particular case the object of the marriage could not be fulfilled the wife was too ill. If, in the present case, the wife claimed that she was the defendant's wife, the claim would, I think, have to be allowed, unless it was shown that the defendant had divorced the plaintiff.

As the marriage was a valid marriage, it follows that the dower can properly be claimed unless the claim can be defeated either by the provisions of the Muhammadan Law or by some relevant provision of the law of contract. We are unable to find anything in the Muhammadan law which forbids the claim to dower in such a case as the present.

Nor does the law of contract forbid it, unless we can imply some term in the contract vital to the right to dower, which implied term was not fulfilled. There is no implied term that the wife shall be a virgin. Is there an implied term that she shall not, at the time of marriage, be with child by some man other than the husband? It would not, I think, be irrational to imply such a term, but we are unable to find that it has ever been done.

I am not prepared to introduce, what would apparently be, a new feature into the law regulating marriage in the case of Muhammadans, so I agree to the order proposed by my Lord the Chief Justice.

Appeal allowed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXII, r. 4, applicability of, to non-contentious proceedings in Probate—Duty of Court—Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), s. 50—Minor—Guardian appointed without consent—Guardian refusing to act—Probate—Minor, whether entitled to revocation.

Order XXXII, rule 4, of the Civil Procedure Code does not apply to a non-contentious proceeding in Probate, but where minors are concerned and citations are issued to them, it is necessary for the protection of their interest for the Court to be satisfied not only that a guardian has been appointed but that a guardian has been appointed who has consented to accept the appointment and take upon himself the onus that by virtue of the appointment falls upon him on behalf of the minors. [p. 437, col. 1.]

Where a guardian ad litem of a minor is appointed, without his consent, for the purpose of a petition for Probate, and he refuses to accept service of a citation on behalf of the minor, and Probate is granted, the minor, when properly represented, is entitled to maintain an application, under section 50 of the Probate and Administration Act, for revocation of the grant. Babus Mohendra Nath Roy and Jyotish Chandra Sarkar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is, an appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Dacca, dated the 8th of August 1917.

The real point at issue is, whether the citation served upon a minor in an uncontested Probate proceeding by serving it upon her husband after the husband has been appointed her guardian in the proceeding is bad because the husband was appointed guardian without his consent.

The facts are shortly as follows:—On the 10th August 1914 one Mohendra Narain Saha died leaving a Will, dated the 14th Sravan 1321 B. S., corresponding to 30th July 1914. He left him surviving a widow, Mrinalini Debya, and a daughter, Hironmoyee Dasi. On the 11th November 1914 Mrinalini applied for Probate of the Will. The petition states that the testator had two near relatives, namely, Hironmoyee Dasi, minor wife of Susen Behari Ray, residing at 13, Nather Bagan Street, Calcutta, represented by her husband Susen Behary Ray, residing at the same place, and also a sister's son named Jotindra Nath Saha. Upon the same day that the petition was presented a petition was also presented on behalf of the petitioner for the appointment of guardians of the two minors. The petition states that Hironmoyee is under the guardianship of her husband Susen Behary Ray, and that he has no interest adverse to the minor and that he was a fit and proper person to be her guardian. It appears from the order sheet that, on the 14th November 1914, Susen Behary Ray was appointed guardian ad litem of Hironmoyee Dasi. We have an affidavit, dated 23rd January 1915, of the bailiff of the Small Cause Court of Calcutta stating that, according to the identification of Debendra Chandra Datt, he affixed a copy of the notice with regard to guardianship on the outer door of 13, Nather Bagan Street. The first opposite party, that is, Hironmoyee, being a Hindu pardanashin lady and Susen Ray not being present the bailiff states that Hironmoyee's father-in-law, Gosto Behary Roy, was present and that he refused to accept service and sign the original. There is an affidavit also on the record of Debendra Chandra Datt stating that he accompanied Gosto Behary Gupta bailiff to serve notices on the two minors and he states that the bailiff served a copy of the notice by affixing it on the outer door of the dwelling house of the first opposite party, that is, Hironmoyee at 13, Nather Bagan Street. Upon the widow's application the grant of Probate was issued to her and no body appeared on behalf of Hironmoyee to contest the application for the grant. Upon the death of Mrinalini the present application was made on behalf of Hironmoyee Dasi by her husband and guardian, Susen Roy, asking for revocation of the grant of Probate upon certain grounds stated in the petition, one of them being that the Will was a forgery and that it was never signed by the testator, and another being that no notice of the proceeding was served upon Hironmoyee Dasi or upon her guardian, and also alleging that she was never represented in the Probate proceeding and was not bound by the same.

We have been referred to section 83 of the Probate and Administration Act which provides that, in any case before the District Judge in which there is contention the proceeding shall take as nearly as may be the form of a suit, and it is suggested that the proceeding for Probate by Mrinalini had not become contentious and that, therefore, the provision of the Civil Procedure Code, that is to say, Order XXXII, rule 4, which provides that no person shall, without his consent, be appointed guardian of a minor for the purpose of the suit had no application, and that, consequently, the application for revocation of the grant under section 50 of the Probate and Administration Act was not well founded as there had been no real defect in substance.

It is urged on behalf of the appellant that the learned District Judge who, upon the fact being brought to his notice that Hironmoyee Dasi's husband never assented to his appointment as guardian, revoked the grant, acted prematurely and that he should not have so acted unless he were satisfied by evidence that Susen Ray, the husband, was not a fit and proper person to be Hironmoyee's guardian, or that in fact Hironmoyee through her guardian had no notice of the proceeding, and it is pointed out with some force that Susen Ray must have been the proper person to be appointed as guardian and that it is not likely that his interest was in any way adverse to the minor, as we find that in the present proceeding he is her guardian for the purpose of these proceedings.

This is the only question that arises, and the point seems to be uncovered by any actual authority. We were referred to section 69 of the Probate Act which provides that in all cases it shall be lawful for the District Judge, if he thinks fit, to issue citations calling upon all persons claiming to have any interest in the estate of the deceased to come and see the proceedings before the grant of Probate or

MANAK v. NARAYAN.

Letters of Administration, and we were referred to the case of Nistariny Dabya v. Brahmomoyi (1) as an authority for the proposition that the mere non-issue of citations was not a defect in substance within the meaning of section 50 of the Probate and Administration Act and that the mere non-service of citation was not sufficient to invalidate the proceeding provided that the person to whom the citation should have issued had notice of the proceeding. We were also referred to Tristram and Coote's Probate Practice, page 305, which deals with the question of service on minors and from which it is stated that it appears that service on a minor is to be effected in the presence of the person who is the natural guardian of the minor, but that no provision is made for the assent of the guardian. We were also referred to Mortimer on Probate Pratice, Edition 1911, at page 530, on the same point. So far as the case in Nistariny Dabya v. Brahmomoyi Dabya (1) is concerned, this does not seem to have any application, for in that case the minor had been represented in the Probate proceeding by a guardian whose right to appear as guardian was disputed. But in those proceedings there had been contest as to the Will and Probate had only been granted after the contest had taken place. I am prepared to accept the contention of the learned Vakil who appeared for the appellant that Order XXXII, rule 4, does not apply as the proceedings had not arrived at the contentious stage, but, even so, I think that it was for the person who got the guardian appointed to show the Court that that person assented to the guardianship and took upon himself the burden thereof. It seems to me that it is a necessary protection in the interest of an infant that not only should the Court be satisfied that a guardian has been appointed, but that a guardian has been appointed who had consented to accept the appointment and take upon himself the onus that by virtue of the appointment falls upon him on behalf of the infant. We think, therefore, that the learned District Judge was right in the decision at which he has arrived, namely, in revoking the grant and directing the Will to be proved in solemn form in the absence of any evidence that Hironmoyee's husband assented to his appointment as guardian. We do not think that it was necessary for the Judge to await proof either as to the unsuitability of Hironmoyee's husband for the position of guardian or that the service had not been properly effected.

Under these circumstances, the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs. We assess the hearing fee at two gold mohurs.

NEWBOULD, J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

NARAYAN—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Bombay Land Revenue Code (Act V of 1879, s. 121—Boundaries fixed by Collector—Adverse possession—Suit to recover portion of survey number, maintainability of—Jurisdiction of Civil Courts.

The fixing of boundaries of different Survey Numbers by the Collector under section 121 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code has the effect merely of showing what land belongs to the persons in whose names the Survey Numbers are registered. It does not affect the right of any one of those persons to show in a Civil Court that he has acquired a title by adverse possession against a registered occupant. [p. 438, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The plaintiffs sued to recover possession of 4 acres of land out of Survey No. 676 situated in Thalner, alleging that he owned Survey No. 678 which is adjoining Survey No. 676 that the plot in dispute was separated from Survey No. 676 by a bandh and included in his Survey Number, that he had been in possession of the plot in dispute for about 50 years; that Survey No. 676 was measured about twelve months ago at the request of the defendant by the Revenue Authorities; that they found out that the plot in dispute formed part of Survey No. 676 which belonged to the defendant, and that, accordingly, he was dispossessed by the defendant in July 1915. He claimed that he had acquired title to the plot in dispute by adverse possession, and prayed, therefore, that possession might be restored to him.

It has been found in both Courts that the plaintiff had been in possession adversely of the plot in dispute for more than twelve years. But it has been contended that the order of the Revenue Authorities adjusting the boundaries of Survey No. 676 was a bar to the present suit. We cannot agree with that contention. Reliance has been placed for the argument on section 121 of the Land Revenue Code. But it does not follow that, because the Collector placed the boundary mark of Survey No. 676 at the place where it ought to be in accordance with the Survey map, that he in any way adjudicated upon the plaintiff's claim to be possessed of the plot in dispute by adverse possession. It is quite true that the fixing of the boundaries of these two Survey Numbers would show what land belonged to the persons in whose name Survey Numbers were registered. But that would not in any way affect the right of any one of those parties to show in a Civil Court that he had acquired a title by adverse possession against a registered occupant. I agree, therefore, with the opinion of the learned Assistant Judge that the order of the Deputy Collector adjudging that the plot in suit formed part of Suvey No. 676 does not at all stand in the way of a Civil Court going into the question of adverse possession. Therefore, I think, the order of the lower Appellate Court was right and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

HEATON, J.—I also think that the appeal must be dismissed with costs. The words of sub-section (b), clause (1), of section 121 of the Land Revenue Code are not perfectly clear, and are not free from difficulty. They might be construed as meaning that, when the Collector has determined the boundary, he has also determined all the rights of ownership. But I do not think that this is what they do mean, and I do not think it is what the words express, when we remember that they appear in the Land Revenue Code. The words are these,—"The settlement of a boundary shall be determinative of the rights of the landholders on either side of the boundary fixed in respect of the land adjudged to appertain, or not to appertain, to their respective holdings." I think the rights that are finally determined by the fixing of the boundaries are those rights which flow from the fact that the land is incorporated in a particular Survey Number, and I do not think they mean more than this. Land may be in one Survey Number, and yet may become by adverse possession the property of the owner of an adjoining Survey Number. That is what is found to have happened in this particular case. I think the Land Revenue Code itself provides the very soundest reasons for taking this view. In giving to the Revenue Authorities power to fix the boundaries it says in section 119 that, "the boundaries would be fixed by the Collector who shall be guided by the land records, if they afford satisfactory evidence of the boundary previously fixed, and, if not, by such other evidence as he may be able to procure". It is quite inconceivable to me that those words should have been used had anything more been intended than that the Collector should fix the boundary and so determine finally what land is to be incorporated in a particular Survey Number. He is not to inquire into the rights of ownership, but is to inquire into the position of the boundary, and nothing else. That being so, it is, to my thinking, quite impossible to suppose that the words of sub-section (b) gave to the Collector's decision a finality as regards those rights of ownership which are not dependent on the circumstance whether the land does or does not form part of a particular Survey Number.

In the matter of AN ARBITRATION BETWEEN BAIJNATH KALOORAM & ALIBHOY MAHOMED.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.
ORDINARY ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION
NOS. 350 AND 351 OF 1919.
December 9, 1 19.
Present:—Mr. Justice Greaves.
In the matter of THE IND'AN ARBITRATION ACT OF 1899.
In the matters of AN ARBITRATION BETWEEN BAIJNATH KALOORAM AND ALIBHOY MAHOMED.

Arbitration—Agreement in contract to refer disputes to arbitration—Arbitrators, power of, to decide what are terms of contract.

Where by the terms of a contract,—in this case an Advice Note,—it is provided that any dispute whatsoever arising on, or out of, the contract should be referred to arbitration under the Rules of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, for the time being, for decision, and that such decision should be accepted as final and binding on both parties to the Adivce Note, it is within the authority of the arbitrators under a submission made to them to decide what are the terms of the contract, and whether or not a particular term was included in the contract as originally made. [p. 440, col. 1.]

Mr. A. N. Chaudhuri (with him Mr. S. N. Banerji), for the Applicants.

Sir B. C. Mitter (with him Mr. S. M. Bose), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application by Allibhoy Mahomed to set aside two awards of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, Nos. 663 and 664, both dated the 27th August 1919, in favour of Baijnath Kalooram and to restrain Baijnath from withdrawing a sum of Rs. 21,067-10-0 deposited by Allibhoy Mahomed with the Sheriff of Calcutta on the 4th September 1919 in respect of the execution of the awards.

On the 24th June 1918 Baijnath applied for arbitration in respect of difference due to him from Allibhoy Mahomed on Advice Notes Nos. 28 and 31 and also in respect of Advice Note No. 34. On the 20th January 1919 Allibhoy Mahomed commenced against Baijnath Suit No. 223 of 1919 to stay the arbitration on the ground that there was an interpolation in Advice Note No. 31 stating that thereby Advice Note No. 28 was settled. Mr. Justice Chaudhuri refused an interlocutory application for stay and intimated, so I am told, that the question of interpolation was for the arbitrators to decide. Against Mr. Justice Chaudhuri's refusal to stay the arbitration there was an appeal which was dismissed. The order states that Counsel who appeared on the appeal stated that he had then no materials to establish the interpolation but that he reserved his rights to raise the question when the suit was heard.

On the 12th September last Allibhoy Mahomed applied in the suit to restrain the withdrawal by Baijnath of the Rs. 21,067-10-0. It was argued before Mr. Justice Rankin that the awards were bad as there was a suit pending when they were made which had not been restrained, reliance being placed on the case of Doleman & Sons v. Ossett Corporation (1). Mr. Justice Rankin held that this case had no application, as the arbitration had been allowed to proceed and he left the applicant to apply in the arbitration to set aside the awards, he stated in his judgment that, although the question whether or not there had been an interpolation had been determined by the arbitrators that no question upon which the validity of the submission depended could be finally determined by the arbitrators, and that it must be open to the complaining parties to make that contention on motion to set aside the award. This is the application which is now before me. On behalf of the applicant it is first argued that I should grant the relief sought or, at any rate, the later portion, on the ground that as the suit was not stayed the arbitration could not continue and the awards are of no avail; and, secondly, it is said that the question of interpolation goes to the root of the contract, inasmuch as if this is established, the contract is void and that this is a matter to be decided by the Court on evidence. On behalf of Baijnath it is said that the first point is not open as it has already been decided by Mr. Justice Rankin adversely to the applicant, and as to the second point reliance is plased on Produce Brokers Co., Ltd. v. Olympia Oil and Cake Co., Ltd. (2) as deciding that the question of what the contract is and the terms thereof are matters to be decided by the arbitrators who have already decided adversely to the applicant.

With regard to the question of the failure to stay the suit invalidating the arbitration, this point has already been decided by Mr. Justice Rankin adversely to the applicant and

I do not think that it is open to the applicant to re open it in this Court. As to the second question, although Mr. Justice Rankin expressed the opinion that the arbitrators could not decide finally with regard to the interpolation, it seems to me that this was an expression of opinion rather than a decision and that I am bound to decide this point. Moreover, I am told that Mr. Justice Chaudhuri expressed a contrary opinion although he, too, did not decide this point. By the terms of the contract it was provided (Term 13) that any dispute whatsoever arising on or out of the Advice Note should be referred to arbitration under the Rules of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, for the time being, for decision and that such decision should be accepted as final and binding on both parties to the Advise Note.

Now, as I read the decision in Produce Brokers Co. Ltd. v. Olympia Oil and Cake Co. Ltd. (2) it is a decision that, under a submission to refer all disputes arising out of a contract, which are the same words as in the Advice Note before me, the arbitrators have authority to decide what are the terms of the contract. This being so, it is difficult to escape from the conclusion that they have authority to decide whether a particular term was included in the contract at the time it was made. I suppose that, strictly speaking, the decision referred to above is not binding on me although it would, of course, demand my respectful consideration but, if I may say so, I respectfully agree with it and I think it would be a pity to be compelled to hold that, where business men have agreed that an Arbitration Tribunal shall decide any dispute arising on or out of the Advice Note in suit, it is not competent for them to decide whether or not a particular term was included in the contract when it was made. I do not think that I am forced to any such conclusion and I accordingly hold that it was competent for the arbitrators under the terms of the submission to decide whether or not this particular term was in the contract as originally made. With regard to Mr. Chaudhuri's argument that the question goes to the root of the contract itself and raises the question whether in fact there was any contract at all under which there could be a submission there seems to me to be a difference between a dispute which raises the question whether in fact X. entered into a contract at all or a question whether X. was induced to enter into a contract by fraud and a question such as the present whether a contract contained a particular term at the time it was made. In the result, the application fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Bombay Land Revenue Code (Act V of 1879), s. 121—Boundary fixed by Collector—Adverse possession—Suit to recover portion of Survey Number from registered occupant, maintainability of—Jurisdiction of Civil Courts.

When the settlement of a boundary is made by the Collector under section 121 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code, it does no more than establish where the boundary line lies and that the owners of the respective Survey Numbers are entitled to their property according to the boundary line as fixed by the Collector. This, however, does not prevent any of them filing a suit in the Civil Court on the ground that he has acquired a portion of his neighbour's Survey Number by adverse possession. [p. 441, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Surat, in Appeal No. 86 of 1917, confirming the decree passed by the Additional Subordinate Judge at Bulsar, in Civil Suit No. 125 of 1916.

Mr. G. N. Thakor, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. N. Koyjee, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The plaintiff sued to recover possession of the plaint land measuring 19 gunthas, said to belong to Survey No 420, alleging that the land originally belonged to one Kasna Mavji exclusively; that even if the said Kasna was not the sole owner of that land, he had become the sole owner thereof by adverse possession for more than twelve years. The plaintiff was the owner of Survey No 419. The defendant was the owner of Survey No. 420. The plaint land was situated between these two Survey Numbers. The question arose whether it formed part of Survey No. 419 or 420.

In April 1913 the defendant presented an application to the Mamlatdar of Pardi complaining of an encroachment made by the plaintiff over the land in suit, and praying that the boundary of the two Survey Nos. 419 and 420 might be determined and the encroachment removed. Statements of the plaintiff and the defendant were recorded before the Patel and the Talati and the Circle Inspector and, finally, the Collector of Surat decided, on the 25th November 1914, that the plaintiff was wrongfully in possession of the land in question, and he ordered his eviction therefrom under section 121 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code. The Collector in his decision said,—

"This is clearly a case to which the provisions of section 121 (2) of the Land Revenue Code might properly be applied. Dorabji had a complete and perfect title to the whole Survey Number but finding that he was in actual possession of too small an area he paid for measurement, he had the proper boundaries of his holding determined by the Collector under section 119, clause (2). As the result of that determination, I find that Bhagoji Motiji, (i. e., the plaintiff in this case) is wrongfully in possession without any proper title and I order his eviction under section 121 in favour of Dorabji."

An appeal was preferred from the said order to the Commissioner, but it was rejected about May 1915.

All that was decided then was that the boundary line between these two Survey Nos. 419 and 420 was as contended by Dorabji, and as Dorabji had a complete and perfect title to the whole Survey Number the Collector came to the conclusion that the plaintiff was wrongfully in possession of that portion which was in dispute, and which had been in the inquiry held to belong to Survey No. 420.

The plaintiff's suit, therefore, was to recover possession on the ground that he had acquired a perfect title to the land in dispute by adverse possession. Both Courts have held that they had no jurisdiction to hear the suit.

The learned Appellate Judge considered that the decision of the Collector was final, relying upon the case of Bai Ujam v. Valiji Rasulbhai (1). In that case, the Collector had settled the boundaries between the two Survey Numbers, and the Court held that as the defendant did not claim to have acquired, since the Collector's decision, the right to hold the plaintiff's land except by adverse possession, which the Subordinate Judge found not proved, the plaintiffs were entitled to have the possession of it restored to them.

A very similar point came before us in Manak v. Narayan (2). There had been a dispute between the owners of two Survey Numbers and after the Survey Numbers had been measured by the Revenue Authorities, it was found that the plot in dispute belonged to the Survey Number which belonged t the defendant. The plaintiff claimed that he had acquired a title to the plot in dispute by adverse possession, and prayed, therefore, that possession might be restored to him. We came to the conclusion that the order of the Deputy Collector adjudging that the plot in dispute formed part of Survey No. 676, which belonged to the defendant, did not stand in the way of a Civil Court going into the question of adverse possession. The meaning of section 121 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code was considered, and we held that when the settlement of a boundary was made by the Collector it did not more than establish where the boundary line lay, and that the owners of the respective Survey Numbers were entitled to their property according to the boundary lines as fixed by the Collector. But we held that it did not prevent one of the disputing parties filing a suit in a Civil Court on the ground that he had acquired a portion of his neighbour's Survey Number by adverse possession. Therefore, in my opinion, both Courts were wrong in coming to the conclusion that they had no jurisdiction to hear the suit, and that they ought to decide whether the plaint property was, as a matter of fact, the property of the plaintiff or of the defendant according to the facts proved in the case. They have jurisdiction to decide those questions, and it depends on the findings of fact whether the plaintiff is entitled to succeed.

(1) 10 B. 456: 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 692.

(2) 59 Ind. Cas. 437; 22 Bom. L. R. 1114 (Footnote.)

It was argued that the Secretary of State was a necessary party to the suit, and that if he was not a party, then the Court had no jurisdiction. But that point was never taken at the hearing, and no issue was raised. It may be, the Courts may hold that the plaintiff, before he can succeed, must get the order of the Revenue Authorities set aside. But that again is a question which is entirely apart from the question of jurisdiction. The appeal must be allowed, and the case remanded to the Trial Court to be heard on the merits. The appellant to get costs in both Appeal Courts. Costs in the Trial Court to be costs in the cause.

HEATON, J.—I concur. The judgments from which we are hearing this appeal were delivered before our decision in Manak v. Narayan (2). However, our decision in that case really settles the point which arises here. It is perfectly true that the decision of the Collector is final as to the boundary line between two Survey Numbers. Nevertheless, as we held in Manak v. Narayan (2), one party or the other may by adverse possession acquire a title to a portion of his neighbour's Survey Number. In my judgment in that case I discussed pretty fully the reasons which led me to that conclusion, and I need not repeat them. It is argued that clause (2), which was in the year 1913 added to section 121 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code, makes a difference. I do not, however, think that it makes any difference whatever to the reasoning, or to the decision, in Manak v. Narayan (2). It merely enables the Collector to evict summarily a landholder who is wrongfully in possession of land which has been adjudged by the settlement of a boundary, and no doubt the Collector might after inquiry decide that he ought to evict a person who had encroached upon his neighbour's Survey Number. But whether the Collector's order would be legally correct or not would still remain to be determined by a Civil Court if a suit were brought. The Courts below have based their decision on the view that they had not any jurisdiction to determine whether the plaintiff had or had not acquired a title as against the defendant by adverse possession. That is contrary to our previous decision, and I think is wrong. So the decrees of the lower Courts must be set aside, and the case must be remanded to be tried according to law.

Landlord and tenant—Abandonment of tenancy—Landlord taking possession under agreement with tenant, whether abandonment—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), Sch III, Art. 3—Landlord holding after termination of right to hold—Suit by tenant to recover holding—Limitation.

A landlord who, under an agreement with his tenant, takes possession of the tenancy with a view to cultivate it, cannot set up the plea that the land has been abandoned by the tenant. [p. 443, col. 2.]

Where a landlord takes over the tenancy of his tenant under a usufructuary mortgage, and continues in possession after termination of his right under the mortgage, his possession is adverse, and a suit by the tenant to recover possession is not governed, as to limitation, by Article 3, Schedule III to the Bengal Tenancy Act, as there was no dispossession within the meaning of that Article. [p. 443, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Rajshahye, dated the 16th of March 1917, affirming that of the Munsif Naogaon, dated the 12th of June 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Sarat Chandra Roy Chowdhury (with him Babu Satya Charan Sinha), for the Appellants.—The defendant is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of khas possession of an occupancy holding. The raiyat executed a usufructuary mortgage in my favour in respect of 5 out of 8 plots in 1896. Sometime after, the mortgagor, raiyat, left the village and has died. I took possession of the mortgaged plots by virtue of the mortgage which has not been re-paid. It has been found that I have also taken possession of the other plots as well. The representatives of the raiyat have brought this suit in 1915. The Courts below have decreed the suit in respect of the mortgaged lands. I would submit the raiyat having left the village after the mortgage there has been an abandonment of the holding. The plaintiff, therefore, cannot get a decree as the tenancy has been determined. The plaintiffs have no cause of action. My next point is that the suit is barred by limitation under Article 3, Schedule III of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The two years prescribed therein from the date of dispossession has long elapsed. I have been all along continuing in possession. Refers to Ram Pershad Koeri v. Jawahir Roy (1).

Babu Krishna Kamal Maitra, for the Respondent was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, ACTG. C. J.—This is an appeal by the defendant in a suit for recovery of possession of an occupancy holding. The holding belonged to one Budha Buna who executed a usufructuary mortgage of five out of eight plots on the 24th August 1896, in favour of the superior landlord, the present defendant-appellant. The usufructuary mortgage was to terminate on the 13th April 1911. The landlord went into possession as usufructuary mortgagee of the five plots years later, the occupancy raiyat left the village, with the result that the landlord seized the opportunity to take possession of the remaining plots included in the holding. The occupancy raiyat is now dead. Upon the expiry of the usufructuary mortgage, the landlord has not vacated possession, and on the 8th March 1915, the representatives of the occupancy raiyat instituted the present suit for recovery of possession. The claim has been decreed in respect of the five plots included in the usufructuary mortgage, but has been dismissed with regard to the remaindar. As there is no cross-appeal we need not consider whether the claim in respect of the other three plots has been rightly dismissed.

As regards the five plots now in dispute, two contentions have been advanced by the landlord, namely, first, that as there was an abandonment of the holding in 1898, there is no subsisting tenancy on the basis whereof the plaintiffs, as the representatives of the occupancy raiyat, can succeed, and secondly, that the suit is barred by the two years' rule of limitation embodied in Article 3 of Schedule III to the Bengal Tenancy Act. In our opinion, there is no foundation for either of these contentions.

It may be conceded that a holding is deemed to be abandoned by a raiyat if three elements are established, namely, non-residence in the village, non-cultivation of the land of the holding, and non-payment of rent to the superior landlord. These elements, however, do not justify an inference of abandonment if the landlord himself by an arrangement with his tenant, be placed in possession of either the whole or a part of the holding. The person competent to set up the plea of abandonment is the landlord himself, because it is his interest that no portion of the cultivable land of the Zemindari should remain uncultivated, but if the landlord himself, under an arrangement with his tenant, takes possession with a view to cultivate it, he cannot set up the plea that the land has been abandoned. In the circumstances of this case, the plea of abandonment consequently fails.

The plea of limitation is equally untenable. Under Article 3 of Schedule III to the Bengal Tenancy Act, a suit by a raiyat against his landlord must be instituted within two years from the date of dispossession. In this case, there was no dispossession. What happened was that, after the 13th April, the possession of the landlord became adverse, he continued in possession, although he should have made over possession to his tenant upon termination of his right under the usufructuary mortgage. Such a chain of events cannot attract the operation of Article 3 [Panchoo Kapali v. Jajneswar Majhi (2)].

Jurisdiction of High Court to restrain suit in Foreign Court—Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909), s. 45—Insolvency proceedings in British India—Discharge—Suit against insolvent in Foreign Court, maintainability of.

The High Court has jurisdiction to restrain a party within its jurisdiction from prosecuting a suit in a Foreign Court, and the principle on which this jurisdiction is exercised is that the Court acts in personam and will not suffer any one within its reach to do what is contrary to its notions of equity, merely because the act to be done may be, in point of locality, beyond its jurisdiction. [p 445, col. 1.]

It is contrary to all ideas of equity that an insolvent trading and incurring debts in British India and having property in foreign territory, which the Official Assignee could not get hold of, should be able to completely get rid of all his liabilities as regards his creditors inside British India, and then proceed to enjoy his property outside British India, free from all those liabilites. If, in such a case, after the insolvent has obtained his discharge, a creditor brings a suit against him to recover a debt in a Foreign Court within the jurisdiction of which the insolvent owns property, the High Court will not restrain the creditor from proceeding with the suit. [p. 445, col. 2.]

Mr. Bhandrakar, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. J. Wadia, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant in this appeal is an insolvent who has filed his petition under the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, in Bombay on the 27th November 1914. As far as this Court is concerned, the insolvent proceedings came to an end on the 1st of October 1918, when the insolvent got his discharge. One of the opposing creditors mentioned in the schedule, the respondent in this case, has obtained a decree for Rs. 2,834-4 0 in the Court of the Sirohi State, in respect of the debt for costs in Bombay High Court, Suit No. 581 of 1911. In the insolvency proceedings it had been alleged that the insolvent had succeeded, as the heir of his brother, to certain property in the Sirohi State, but he was able to prove that he was separate from his brother and that his brother's widow had adopted the insolvent's son. It would appear that the respondent still hopes to be able to attach that property. The appellant then took out a Rule in this Court calling upon the respondent to show cause why he should not be restrained from proceeding in the suit filed by him against the insolvent in Sirohi State and from executing the decree passed in the said suit.

The Rule was discharged on the 7th of October 1919 by Mr. Justice Kajiji. The learned Judge in the course of his judgment says :—

"It is contended on behalf of the insolvent that, under section 45 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, the discharge amounted to a release and, therefore, there was no debt and no cause of action for the suit in Sirohi State. In my opinion section 45 of the Act only applies when a creditor seeks to recover property of the insolvent which is in British territory or in foreign country or State if such foreign country or State will recognise the Official Assignee of Bombay and hand over the property belonging to the insolvent in order that it may be applied for the benefit of all the creditors and he may not be allowed to keep it. But in this case the Sirohi State has refused to recognise the Official Assignee and has refused to hand over the property, as appears from paragraph 6 of the opposing creditor's affidavit of 23rd September 1919. I, therefore, hold that there is nothing in the Insolvency Act, under these circumstances, to prevent a decree-holder from filing a suit in a Foreign Court and recovering his money from the property of the insolvent."

The opposing creditor undertook not to arrest the insolvent personally and to give notice to the other creditors mentioned in the schedule of any property and money received in execution of the decree in order to enable them to claim rateable distribution. No doubt, the point for agrument before the learned Judge was whether the order of discharge is a complete release or not from the debts mentioned in the schedule. Such an order, no doubt, would be recognised by all Courts in the British Empire, but certainly there would be no obligation on Courts outside British India to recognise the order of discharge as a complete release from debts mentioned in the order. The real question is whether this Court has got jurisdiction to restrain a party from proceeding in an action in a foreign country and, if it has, on what principle it will act in considering the question. This matter is discussed in Vanichand v. Lakhmichand (1) by Mr. Justice Pratt:—

"There is no doubt as to the jurisdiction of this Court to restrain a party within its jurisdiction from prosecuting a suit in a Foreign Court. The principle on which this jurisdiction is exercised is set forth in the judgment of Lord Cranworth in the case of Carron Iron Co. v. Maclaren (2). It is that 'the Court acts in personam and will not suffer any one within its reach to do what is contrary to its notions of equity, merely because the act to be done may be, in point of locality, beyond its jurisdiction.'"

Therefore, if we think that the action of the opposing creditor in filing the suit in the Sirohi State on the judgment of the Bombay High Court is contrary to our notions of equity, we should certainly restrain him from proceeding with that action. Of course, that will not prevent him from continuing the action in the Sirohi State; but if he came within the jurisdiction of this Court, proceedings might be taken against him for contempt. Now, on the particular facts of this case, there is nothing, as far as I can see, which offends our notions of equity in the opposing creditor continuing his proceedings in the Sirohi State against the insolvent, who had filed his petition to get rid of the obligation to pay the costs decreed against him in the suit I have referred to. He had no assets to hand over to the Official Assignee and, as far as his obligations in British India were concerned, the order of discharge freed him from the liability to pay those costs. But if he has assets in the Sirohi State, there is no reason why the opposing creditor should be at liberty to take proceedings in that State in order that he may recover his debt from any property he may discover situate in that State. Generally speaking, it would certainly be contrary to all ideas of equity that a party trading and incurring debts in Bombay and having property in foreign territory, which the Official Assignee could not get hold of, should be able to completely get rid of all his liabilities as regards his creditors inside British India, and then proceed to enjoy his property outside British India, free from all those liabilities. This case, in my opinion, does not come within any of the three classes of cases which were referred to in Carron Iron Co. v. Maclaren (2), in which it would be considered that a party within the jurisdiction should be restained from taking proceedings outside the jurisdiction of the Court.

I, therefore, think the appeal fails and it will be dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

VISCOUNT CAVE.—These are consolidated appeals against three decrees of the High Court of Calcutta, dated the 22nd May 1913, two of which affirmed decrees of the First Subordinate Judge of Saran, dated, respectively, the 17th March and the 12th May 1910, while the third modified a decree of the same Court dated the 18th July 1910.

The facts leading up to the litigation may be shortly stated as follows: Sri Kishun Singh, Bachchu Singh and Jugalkishore Singh were three Hindu brothers governed by Mitakshara Law and possessed of considerable properties in the districts of Saran and Gaya and in Oudh. Jugalkishore died on the 5th July 1872 without issue, leaving a widow Musammat Anandi Koer; Srikishun died on the 18th July 1872 without male issue, leaving a widow and two daughters; and Bachchu died on the 9th February 1874 leaving a son, Mahabir Singh.

After Jugalkishore's death Bachchu applied to the District Judge of Saran, under Act XXVII of 1860, for a certificate to collect debts due to the estate of Jugalkishore, alleging that the three brothers had been joint in estate and that he was entitled as survivor to Jugalkishore's estate. This application was opposed by Jugalkishore's widow, Anandi Koer, who claimed that a partition between the three brothers had been effected in the year 1864 and accordingly that at the date of her husband's death the brothers were separate and she was entitled to succeed to her husband's estate. Bachchu died while this dispute was pending, but in the result the District Judge decided that the alleged partition had not taken place and accordingly that the three brothers were joint and granted the certificate to Mahabir. This decision, being given only upon a question of representation, did not preclude Anandi Koer from raising the question of title again in a suit properly instituted for that purpose; but in fact Anandi, acting through her brother and Attorney, accepted the decision and executed an agreement, dated the 17th May 18 4, agreeing, in consideration of certain property being allotted to her for maintenance during her life, not further to contest the matter; and thereupon Mahabir took possession of the estate. This transaction, the effect of which is in dispute, will be referred to at greater length hereafter.

Mahabir died on the 21st June 1894 leaving no issue but leaving two widows, the defendant Musammat Bhagwat Koer and Musammat Rupkali Koer, the latter of whom was then enceinte and gave birth, on the 11th October 1894, to a daughter named Ramdulari Koer, Mahabir before his death executed a Will (to be referred to later), Probate of which was, on the 5th January 1895, granted to his two widows. The posthumous daughter, Ramdulari, died on the 4th June 1895, her mother, Rupkali, on the 8th February 1899, and Anandi, the widow of Jugalkishore, on the 4th August 1904. On the 13th February 1906, Bhagwat Koer, the surviving widow of Mahabir, purporting to act under a power conferred upon her by her husband's Will, adopted the defendant Ragheshwar Indar Sahi as his son and executed in his favour a deed of adoption, dated the 17th February 1906.

The plaintiff Dhanukhdhari Prasad Singh is the nearest reversionary heir to Jugalkishore and Mahabir, and claims to be entitled to their estates; and on the 20th August 1907, he instituted the three suits out of which these appeals arise against the surviving widow and the alleged adopted son of Mahabir in the Court of the First Subordinate Judge at Saran. One Ambika Prashad Singh, the purchaser of a part of the property, joined as co-plaintiff in two of the suits, but need not be further referred to. The causes of action in the three suits are different, and it will be convenient to deal with them separately.

In Suit No. 200 of 1907 (out of which Appeal No. 100 of 1916 arises) the plaintiff Dhanukhdhari sued to set aside the adoption of the defendant Ragheshwar as invalid and contended that the power of adoption conferred by the Will of Mahabir had, in the events which had happened, no operation. The terms of that Will must now be referred to in detail.

The Will of Mahabir, which was dated the 20th December 1894, was divided into paragraphs. By paragraph 1 the testator, after reciting that he had then no male issue but had two wives living, directed that if any child should be born of either wife, or if children should be born of both wives, they should after his death become possessors of all his moveable and immoveable properties whether ancestral or self-acquired, whereby the name and reputation of his ancestors might be perpetuated and the religious merit of his family might be preserved. By paragraph 2 he directed that if at the time of his death his children should be minors, his wives successively should act as their guardians and manage the estate. It was contended that, although the word "children" (aulad) is used in the above two paragraphs, they were in fact intended to operate in favour of male children only but it is unnecessary to determine this question, as, in any event, the first two paragraphs are controlled, so far as female issue are concerned, by the third paragraph of the Will. The third and fourth paragraphs of the Will are in the following terms:—

"3. If there be no son born of either of my wives and only, (a) daughter be born, in such a case also the management of the reasat shall be conducted by either the senior or the junior wife, whoever may be existing and her (the daughter's) guardianship and training and education shall be conducted as provided in paragraph 2. She will have the daughter married in a good family as is the custom in my family. My wives up to the terms of their respective lives shall remain proprietresses and possessors as provided in paragraph 2. After the death of both of them my daughter shall become the proprietress, and she shall perpetuate the name and reputation of my family by residing in my house and maintaining the same as the absolute proprietress.

"4. If by the will of Providence no male or female child be born to me, in that case both my wives, one after another as provided in paragraph 2, shall remain in concord, proprietors and managers and perpetuate the name and reputation of the family up to the terms of their lives. I also authorise my wives that if both of them exist, they, in concurrence, or if either of them die, the surviving wife alone shall select according to her choice some worthy boy from my family or the families of my relatives and adopt him, who shall remain obedient and dutiful as a son up to the terms of the lives of my wives; and the said adopted son after the death of my two wives shall remain absolute proprietor in my place as my son, and he shall have all authority such as is possessed by me."

In the suit now under consideration it was contended by the plaintiff that, under the express terms of the Will, the power of adoption conferred by paragraph 4 was contingent on no male or female child being born to the testator, and that, as a daughter was born to him (although after his death), the power of adoption never arose. He also contended that Ragheshwar was not a member of the class, consisting of the testator's family (khandan) or the families of his relatives, from which alone any adoption could be made. Both these contentions were upheld by the Subordinate Judge who accordingly set the adoption aside; and on appeal the High Court, while holding that Ragheshwar was within the class described in the Will, agreed with the Subordinate Judge in holding that, in the events which had happened, the power of adoption did not arise, and accordingly dismissed the appeal.

On appeal by the defendants to this Board, the appellants relied on the strong presumption that the testator, a Hindu, would have desired that, in the event (which happened) of his having no child who survived him and attained maturity, a son should be adopted to him by his widow, and contended that the Will must be construed as having that effect. The presumption is no doubt strong and in a case of this kind the Courts would not be astute to defeat an adoption not clearly in excess of the power; but in the present case it appears to their Lordships to be impossible, without unduly straining the words of the Will, to put upon it the construction contended for on behalf of the defendants. The words "if no male or female child be born to me" clearly govern the whole of paragraph 4 of the Will, including the power of adoption; and it is impossible without going outside the terms of the Will and in fact making a Will for the testator, to hold that, in the events which happened, the power took effect.

The result is that the decision of the High Court in this suit is right and that this appeal must fail.

In the Suit No. 198 of 1907 (out of which Appeal No. 131 of 1916 arises) the plaintiff Dhanukdhari sued for a declaration that, under the terms of the Will of Mahabir and in the events which had happened, the plaintiff was entitled to immediate possession of Mahabir's estate. He based his claim on the contention that, on the true construction of paragraph 3 of the Will, the widows were only entitled to be guardians of the testator's daughter and to manage the estate during her lifetime, and that upon her death the estate passed to her mother Rupkali and on the death of the latter to the plaintiff. The Subordinate Judge held that, on the true construction of paragraph 3, the widows took life-estates in succession and that on the death of the surviving widow the property passed to Ramdulari or her representatives under section 1 6 of the Succession Act. He, therefore, dismissed the claim for possession, but added to his judgment a declaration, under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, of the right of the plaintiff as heir or Ramdulari to succeed to the estate of the testator after the death of the surviving widow Bhagwat Koer. Both sides having appealed to the High Court, that Court affirmed the decree of the Subordinate Judge dismissing the suit for possession, but struck out the declaration as to the plaintiff's reversionary right, holding that his plaint contained no claim for such a declaration and that the plaintiff had not made out his title to succeed to the estate of Ramdulari. The plaintiff thereupon appealed to this Board. Their Lordships agree with the decision of the High Court in this case. They are satisfied that, on the true construction of the Will and in the events which happened, the estate was given to the testator's widows successively for life, and after the death of the survivor to Ramdulari. So that Ramdulari became entitled at birth to a reversionary estate under section 106 of the Succession Act; but the plaintiff has not in this suit adduced evidence proving his claim to be entitled to her estate, and accordingly no declaration should be made in his favour, under the Specific Relief Act. This appeal, therefore, also fails.

In the Suit No. 199 of 1907 (out of which Appeal No. 117 of 1917 arises) the plaintiff sued to recover the estate of Jugalkishore, alleging that in the year 1864 the three brothers, Srikishun, Bachchu and Jugalkishore, separated and partitioned their properties between them, and that accordingly on the death of Anandi in 1904 the plaintiff, as the next reversionary heir, succeeded to Jugalkishore's estate. The plaintiff also alleged in this suit that certain properties in Gaya held under mokurrari leases in favour of Bachchu alone in fact belonged to the three brothers jointly and were partitioned with the other properties. The defendants denied the alleged partition and, as an alternative, relied upon the agreement of 1874 above referred to as amounting to a relinquishment by Anandi of her estate to the next reversionary heir Mahabir, so as to vest the whole proprietary right in the latter. They also alleged that the Gaya properties belonged to Bachchu alone.

Upon the issues so raised a large amount of oral and documentary evidence was adduced, and, in the result, the Subordinate Judge was satisfied, notwithstanding the decision in 1874, that the alleged partition had in fact taken place, and accordingly that Jugalkishore at his death was separate in estate. He also held that the Gaya properties belonged to the three brothers and were included in the partition. With regard to the transaction in 1874, the learned Judge held that the agreement executed on behalf of Anandi was not within the authority of her agent and was obtained by corruption, and that such agreement was never ratified by Anandi. He accordingly made a decree in favour of the plaintiff. An appeal to the High Court against this decision was dismissed. On the appeal by the defendants to the Board, it at once appeared that, upon the question of the partition and upon the question of the ownership of the Gaya properties, there were concurrent findings of fact in favour of the respondents which could not well be questioned; and accordingly the argument of the appellants turned on the legal effect of the transactions of 1874, which must now be more fully stated.

After the decree of the District Judge, delivered on the 18th April 1874, by which he held that the three brothers were joint in estate and accordingly that Mahabir was entitled to a certificate, negotiations were entered into between Mahabir and the Attorney of Anandi, her brother, Babu Dukharan Singh, and on the 17th May 1874, two ekrarnamas or agreements were executed. By one of these ekrarnamas, which was executed by the Attorney on Anandi's behalf, after a recital of the recent litigation and the grant of the certificate to Mahabir, it was stated that Anandi, "in admission and acceptance of the judgment and order of the District Judge," and in consideration of the fact that Mahabir was the heir, proprietor and possessor of the estate of the three brothers, and that she had no proprietary interest therein and was entitled to maintenance according to the position of the family, "ceased from litigation," and that Mahabir, as the heir of the three brothers, had given her an 8-annas share of a certain Mouzah out of the joint estate of all the three brothers for her maintenance during her life; and after reciting that Mahabir had on the same day executed an ekrarnama, to the same effect, the agreement concluded: "Now, contrary to the terms of these ekrarnamas, my principal shall have no right, claim, dispute or demand in respect of the estates of the deceased persons against Babu Mahabir Prashad Singh." On the same day Mahabir executed another ekrarnama in similar terms, whereby he secured the agreed maintenance to Anandi during her life. In pursuance of these documents, Mahabir was forthwith let into possession of the whole property of the three brothers; and from the date of these documents until her death in 1904 Anandi duly received the agreed maintenance without dispute or objection.

It was considered, both by the Subordinate Judge and the High Court that these documents were executed by the agent of Anandi without authority and in consideration of the payment of a bribe to him. Their Lordships cannot accept that view. There was indeed some evidence to show that a sum of Rs. 3,000 was paid by Mahabir to the Attorney some time after the execution of the documents; but it was not proved that this sum was not paid in due course to the Attorney as agent for Anandi and duly accounted for to her. In any case, the agreement having been accepted and acted upon by both parties for a period of thirty years without objection, and the stipulated maintenance having been duly received by Anandi during the whole of that period, it is not open to the plaintiff now to dispute the authority which was plainly admitted by Anandi herself during her lifetime; and, in view of this circumstance, it appears to the Board that the agreements in question must be treated for all purposes as binding upon Anandi and the transaction cannot now be disturbed. In this aspect of the matter it became necessary for their Lordships to consider what was the true legal effect of the transactions referred to.

The power of a Hindu widow to surrender or relinquish her interest in her husband's estate in favour of the nearest reversioner at the time has often been considered and was fully dealt with by the Board in the recent case of Rangasami Gounden v. Nachiappa Gounden (1). As pointed out in that case, it is settled by long practice, and confirmed by a series of decisions, that a Hindu widow can renounce the estate in favour of the nearest reversioner, and by a voluntary act efface herself from the succession, as effectively as if she had then died. This voluntary self-effacement is sometimes referred to as a surrender, sometimes as a relinquishment or abandonment of her rights; and it may be effected by any process having that effect, provided that there is a bona fide and total renunciation of the widow's right to hold the property. In the present case there was indeed no formal surrender by the widow of her estate; but there was an express agreement, binding upon her, that for considerations which appeared to her sufficient she would abandon the claim which at the time she had a good right to make and would have no right, claim or demand in respect of the estate of her late husband. It is true that the documents were drawn up on the footing, not of a surrender of an acknowledged right, but of an admission that the right did not exist; but, in substance, and disregarding the form, there was a complete self-effacement by the widow which precluded her from asserting any further claim to the estate. The question is no doubt one of difficulty, but, upon the whole, their Lordships have come to the conclusion that the execution of the two ekrarnamas followed by the acceptance for thirty years of maintenance under the terms of those documents, amounted to a complete relinquishment by Anandi Koer of her estate in favour of Mahabir, and accordingly that the title of Mahabir's representatives is established and the plaintiff's action should have been dismissed on this ground.

Their Lordships will accordingly humbly advise His Majesty that the appeals in Suits Nos. 200 and 198 be dismissed and the appeal in Suit No. 199 allowed, and that the last mentioned suit be accordingly dismissed. The plaintiffs will pay to the defendants their costs of the hearing of Suit No. 199 before the Subordinate Judge except the costs of Issues Nos. 4 and 5 (relating to the partition and the Gaya estates) on which they succeeded, and will also pay to them their costs of the appeal to the High Court in that suit. The defendants will pay the plaintiffs' costs of Issues Nos. 4 and 5, with the usual set-off. Upon these consolidated appeals to the Board, in which each party has partly succeeded and partly failed, there will be no costs on either side.

Interference by way of revision with interlocutory orders is only justified where irremediable damage is likely to result [p. 451, col. 2.]

In a suit for the recovery of a sum of money five issues were framed and both the parties produced their evidence, at the conclusion whereof the plaintiffs asked for permission to produce additional evidence on the second issue. Lala Moti Sagar, R. S., for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case five issues were framed between the parties and both parties produced their evidence. At the conclusion of the evidence the plaintiffs asked for permission to produce additional evidence on the second issue. The trying Court, in an order which is somewhat difficult to understand, refused plaintiffs' application but allowed them to produce further evidence on the 5th issue. Against this order the defendants have put in an application for revision, stating that their case will be materially prejudiced if plaintiffs are given further opportunity, although the trying Court has agreed to give them an opportunity for rebuttal. Against this application Mr. Moti Sagar for the plaintiffs-respondents has urged that no question of jurisdiction is involved and that there is, therefore, no ground for revision. He has referred specially to Balakrishna Udayar v. Vasudeva Aiyar (1), a Privy Council judgment. He has also referred to Haur Kaur v. Munni Lal (2), Raoji Baburao v. Bansilal Narayan Marwari (3), Ma E Ko v. Ma Pwa Hmi (4) and Har Sahai Mal v. Brij Lal (5). He further points out that an appeal will be allowed against the decision of the trying Court and that any objection against the procedure adopted can be made in appeal. He cites a practically similar case reported in Gaya Singh v. Name Singh (6) in which a Division Bench refused on revision to hear objections to an order allowing additional evidence to be recorded. Finally, he refers to the plain wording of section 115, Civil Procedure Code, to the effect that on revision the High Court may call for the record of any case which has been decided and urges that the powers of revision of this Court are limited to interference in decided cases. He cites many authorities on this point on which the latest appears to be Bai Rami v. Jaga Dullabh (7). As against this preliminary objection the learned Counsel for the petitioners cites Hindley v. Joynarain Marwari (8) to the effect that any illegality committed during the course of the trial is a question of jurisdiction, inasmuch as no Court has jurisdiction to pass an illegal order. This judgment appears to me to stretch unduly the language of section 115 and to be plainly opposed to the Privy Council judgment reported in Balakrishna Udayar v. Vasudeva Aiyar (1). He also refers to two recent judgments of this Court Imdad Ali Shah v. Sayed Ali (9) and Gauri Shankar v. Ganga Ram (10), in which it was held permissible to interfere with interlocutory orders on the revisional side. These judgments, for one of which I was responsible, may or may not lay down a correct view of the law, but any how they only go so far as to lay down that interference is only justified where irremediable damage will result. In the present case there is no possibility of such irremediable damage.

Agreeing with Mr. Moti Sagar's objections, I dismiss the petition with costs.

Hindu Law—Succession—Acceleration, how effected—Limited owner and full owner, distinction between.

The succession of the next reversioner can be accelerated only by a limited owner, like a Hindu widow, by making a surrender or by relinquishment. A full owner can only transfer either by sale or gift and such transfer can only be by a registered instrument. [p. 452, col. 1.]

First appeal from the decree of the Sub-Judge, Morsi, dated the 23rd December 1918, in Civil Suit No 225 of 1915.

Mr. M. V. Joshi, for the Appellant.

Sir B. K. Bose and Mr. Barlingay, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff claims to be the assignee of a mortgage-deed. The deed of assignment has been executed by Musammat Yashoda, the step mother of the last male-holder, Chandrabhan, who died about the year 1905. It is no longer disputed that upon Chandrabhan's death his estate devolved upon his grandmother, Musammat Bayajabai, who died in 1908. It is also now admitted that, after the death of Musammat Bayajabai, the estate devolved on Chandrabhan's step-sisters, Shewanti and Jaiwanti, and not on Chandrabhan's stepmother, Musammat Yashoda. In the plaint the plaintiff appears to have thought that Musammat Yashoda was a preferential heir and no reference was made to her daughters, Shewanti and Jaiwanti. Later, in the course of the pleadings, the plaintiff stated that Shewanti and Jaiwanti orally relinquished their rights in favour of their mother when the deed of assignment was executed by her. The lower Court has held that the relinquishment has not been proved and cannot also be effected without a registered instrument.

It is unnecessary to deal with all the points raised in this appeal. Shewanti and Jaiwanti, being the step sisters of the deceased, obtained an absolute estate; it is only a limited owner like a Hindu widow who can accelerate the next reversioner's succession by making a surrender or relinquishment. A full owner can only transfer either by sale or gift. As the Transfer of Property Act was in force in Berar at the time, such a transfer can only be by a registered instrument. There being no such registered instrument it is unnecessary to examine the oral evidence in the case. But I entirely agree with the estimate of that evidence formed by the learned Subordinate Judge.

No question of estoppel is raised in the pleadings nor are there any facts established by evidence which would entitle the appellant to argue that Jaiwanti is estopped by reason of her conduct. On this view it is unnecessary to examine the other grounds of appeal. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871), ss. 4, 6—Suit to recover sardeshmukhi haq, maintainability of—Certificate, whether necessary.

A suit against the Secretary of State for India to recover the sardeshmukhi haq falls within the purview of section 4 of the Pensions Act, and is not maintainable in the absence of the requisite certificate under section 6 of the Act. [p. 453, col. 2; p 454, col. 1.]

First appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Ratnagiri, in Suit No. 1 of 1916.

Mr. Patwardhan (with him Mr. P. B. Shingne), for the Appellant.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The plaintiff filed this suit against the Secretary of State to recover his two per cent. Sardeshmukhi haq in certain villages in Deogad Taluka not on the old jamabandi but on the survey assessment. The suit was dismissed by the District Judge on the ground that the suit came within section 4 of the Pensions Act, and that, as the plaintiff had not produced a certificate as provided for by section 6, he could not proceed any further in the suit.

The only ground which has been argued in appeal is that the Pensions Act, so far as it deals with pensions and grants of land revenue in Ratnagiri, is ultra vires. The appellant relies on the decision in Secretary of State for India v. J. Moment (1). The question, therefore, arises whether a suit would have lain against the East India Company to recover on a grant of land revenue in Ratnagiri; if such a suit would have lain, then it would also lie against the Secretary of State, and any provision to the contrary contravenes section 65 of the Government of India Act of 1858.

In Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Co. v. Secretary of State for India (2), Sir Barnes Peacock, Chief Justice, considered what suits would lie against the Company and what suits would not lie. At page 14 he said : "Where an act is done or a contract is entered into, in the exercise of powers, usually called sovereign powers, by which we mean powers which cannot be lawfully exercised except by a Sovereign, or private individual, delegated by a Sovereign to exercise them, no action will lie."

In Vasudev Sadashiv Modak v. Collector of Ratnagiri (3) the plaintiff filed a suit to recover from Government certain emoluments due to him as deshmukh of four mahals, plaintiff alleging that he was the hereditary deshmukh thereof. It was held by the Privy Council that the learned Trial Judge was right in dismissing the suit on the ground that it was excluded from the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts by the Pensions Act of 1871, section 4. At page 125 their Lordships say : "It is difficult to see how the Government could impose upon the ryots the obligation of paying these allowances to their officers, except by the exercise of their sovereign right of imposing and receiving a revenue from all lands which were not in their nature rent-free".

The East India Company, therefore, were exercising their sovereign rights in collecting land revenue. It would follow that, if they chose to grant any share of that land revenue to individuals, they were doing so, not as a mere matter of contract in the ordinary affairs of life, but in the exercise of sovereign rights. It would follow then, from the passage I have already cited from the judgment of Sir Barnes Peacock, that an action would not lie against the East India Company on a grant of land revenue. It is true that the point was not taken in Vasudev Sadashiv Modak v. Collector of Ratnagiri (3) that the Pensions Act, so far as it barred a suit against the Secretary of State on a grant of land revenue, was ultra vires. But, in my opinion, it would have to be directly pointed out to us that a suit on a grant of land revenue would have lain against the East India Company before we can say that the Pensions Act is ultra vires. I do not think that it can be argued that, because under Regulation XXIX of 1827, which applied only to the Zillas of Poona and Ahmadnagar subsequent to the conquest by the Company of the territories of the late Peshwa in the Deccan and Khandesh, such suits would not lie in those Zillas, it can be deduced therefrom that such suits would have lain as regards grants of land revenue in any other territories of the East India Company. In my opinion, the real test is whether the East India Company was exercising sovereign rights and powers or was acting as an ordinary individual, as it would be doing, for instance, if it engaged in trade and in the course of such business caused wrongful damage to the inhabitants within its territories. In my opinion, therefore, the judgment of the learned Judge in the Court below was right and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

FAWCETT, J.—I concur. The point before us was considered in Secretary of State for India v. Jwahir Lal (4), where a similar contention was overruled on the ground that the jurisdiction of the Courts had, prior to the enactment of the Pensions Act of 1871, been expressly barred by Regulation XXIV of 1793, section 17. Accordingly, it was held that the East India Company could not have been sued in respect of a pension falling under the Pensions Act at the time of the transfer of the Company's powers and liabilities to the Crown.

The appellant's Counsel has, no doubt, been able to show that a similar clear enactment does not apparently exist in regard to the territories administered by the East India Company in the Bombay Presidency, except the Zillas of Poona and Ahmadnagar, under section 6 of Bombay Regulation XXIX of 1827. The learned Government Pleader has not referred us to any enactment for the other territories which expressly bars claims against Government on account of pensions except Regulation II of 1815 section 15. That enactment lays down the principle that, except in certain specified cases, the continuance or discontinuance of all pensions shall depend solely on the pleasure of Government, and shall not be subject to cognisance or determination in any Court of Justice. But the efficacy of this is somewhat weakened by the subsequent provision that, where any person deems himself aggrieved by the act of the Collector in respect to a pension, he can sue for redress in a Civil Court. This enactment is also rescinded by section 1 of Regulation I of 1827; and it is possible to contend that claims against Government on account of pensions fell under the wide terms of section 21 of Regulation II of 1827. But, in view of the clear principle laid down in Regulation XV of 1815, I very much doubt whether in practice claims against Government on account of pensions were taken cognizance of by Civil Courts in the time of the East India Company, and no such case has been cited to us. It is possible, therefore, that it was not considered necessary to make an express enactment in regard to the old territories of the kind specified in Regulation XXIX of 1827.

If the question before us depended entirely on this particular point I think further inquiry would be desirable. But I agree with the learned Chief Justice that a suit could not have lain against the East India Company, because the continuance of the pension on which the plaintiff bases his claim was a sovereign act, as is clearly shown by the judgment in the case of Vasudev Sadashiv Modak v. Collector of Ratnagiri (1). Therefore, I am of opinion that the contention fails and the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Landlord and Tenant—Permissive occupancy—Status of occupant—Ejectment, liability of occupier to.

A person who enters upon land subject to an agreement to be afterwards arrived at as to the rent, etc, and continues on the land without any concluded agreement having been arrived at, does not hold the land as a "raiyat" within the definition of that term in the Bengal Tenancy Act, because, his possession being merely permissive, he does not acquire a right to hold the land for cultivation and is subject to eviction at the will of the landlord after reasonable notice to remove his effects. [p. 455, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Mymensingh, dated the 25th of September 1916, affirming that of the Munsif first Court, at Kishoregnnj, dated the 22nd of March 1916.

Mr. N. C. Das and Babu Herambo Ch. Guha, for the Appellant.

Babu Gopal Chandra Das, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs in the suit out of which this appeal arises are the proprietors of a plot of land which is in the possession of the defendant. They brought the suit to eject the defendant on the ground that he was in wrongful possession without, as the plaintiffs allege, obtaining any settlement from the plaintiffs or from the predecessor of the plaintiff No. 2. The defendant, on the other hand, claims the right to occupy the land as an ordinary raiyati holding. The issue which arises is, whether the defendant has a right to hold the land as a tenant or raiyat under the plaintiffs. On that issue the Trial Court found in favour of the defendant and dismissed the suit. The plaintiffs appealed from that decision. The learned District Judge took a different view of the facts. He found that the defendant had been permitted by the landlord to enter upon the land subject to an agreement to be afterwards arrived at "as to the rent, etc."

He further found that no concluded agreement was ever arrived at In these circumstances, it seems to us that the defendant, if not a trespasser, has no right to hold the land as a raiyat, he does not come within the definition of "raiyat" in the Bengal Tenancy Act, because he has not acquired a right as against plaintiffs to hold the land for the purpose of cultivating it. His possession is permissive. At the highest, his position would appear to be that of a person who is known in England as a tenant-at-will or a tenent by sufferance. He is subject to eviction at the mere will of the plaintiffs though he is doubtless entitled to reasonable time to remove his effects. We cannot agree with the learned District Judge that, on the facts found, the defendant has an implied tenancy or an implied right to hold the land as a raiyat. Nor can we agree with him that the plaintiffs are estopped from denying that he has such a right.

It may be that, if the defendant had asked for compensation in this suit for the improvements which he says he has made upon the land, he might have been entitled to some small sum on that account. He has, however, never asked for compensation and there are no materials on the record on which compensation can be assessed. The defendant, moreover, has been in possession throughout the time that this suit has lasted more than three years and, as the plaintiffs have expressed their willingness to give up any claim for mesne profits, we are of opinion that it would serve no useful purpose to pursue the matter further. The result is that the appeal is allowed and the plaintiffs will have a decree entitling them to eject the defendant. The claim for mesne profits is disallowed. The parties will pay their own costs throughout.

AMBABAI—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 62, applicability of—Suit for recovery of rent received by joint lessor.

A lease for a period of five years was executed in favour of G. R. and his brother in respect of a field which was the separate property of the latter, and of a field which was the separate property of G. R., separate rents being reserved for the two fields. G. R. received the rents. The brother died and his widow brought the present suit to recover from G. R. the rent received by him in respect of her husband's field, on the 2nd February 1908. The suit was instituted on 2nd February 1914, and the question was whether the suit was barred by limitation:

Held, that the suit was governed by Article 62, Schedule I, to the Limitation Act as the rent received by G R was received to the use of the plaintiff, and, as it was not brought within the time prescribed by that Article, it was barred. [p. 457, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Akola, in Civil Appeal No. 67 1917, dated the 23rd October 1917.

Mr. R. M. Deshmukh, for the Appellant.

Messrs. M. V. Joshi, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT—Musammat Ambabai, the widow of one Balwant Rao, sued the first three defendants, with whom we are no longer concerned, and her husband's brother, Gopal Rao, for the rent of field No. 212 of Mouza Mhasang in the Akola District for the three years beginning on 1st February 1907 and ending on 1st February 1910, at Rs. 313 per annum, on the following allegations, while on his death bed her husband asked his brother, Gopal Rao, to get the lease of the field, which was his separate property, executed and registered, and Gopal Rao got a lease executed in the joint names of himself and his brother. He included in it a lease of field No. 212 which was his own separate property, or was under his management for another relative. Separate rents were reserved for the two fields. The suit was for the rent of the last three of the five years for which the lease was given, the claim in respect of the first two years being barred by time.

It appears that the three first defendants paid the rent for the first year of the three to Gopal Rao. The date of this payment is stated vaguely to have been "at the end of January or beginning of February" in 1908, and the parties in this Court have agreed that it shall be assumed to have been paid on 2nd February 1908 as the kabuliyat lays down that it is payable on the 1st of February every year.

In answer to the plaint, Gopal Rao pleaded in the first Court that he was joint in estate with his brother, and after Balwant Rao's death he became sole owner of field No. 210. In the lower Appellate Court it has been found that the field was the separate property of Balwant Rao; that Gopal Rao received Rs. 313 as the rent for the first year of the three in question on a date which the parties have now agreed was the 2nd February 1908; that the other defendants had not paid any rent for the last two years of the lease, and that consequently Gopal Rao is liable to pay Rs. 313 (with interest) and the other defendant Rs. 626 (also with interest) to the plaintiff.

Gopal Rao alone has appealed, and it seems that his appeal must succeed on the plea of limitation. This plea was raised by all the four defendants in both the Courts below and was rejected on the ground that the suit is one for compensation for the breach of a contract in writing registered and is, therefore, governed by Article 116 of the Limitation Act, which allows a period of six years. The suit was filed on the 2nd February 1914. The matter does not seem to have been considered with sufficient care. Article 116 applies to the suit against the first three defendants, but even against them it does not bring the claim for the rent payable on the 1st February 1908 within time. The rent for all the three years was primarily claimed from them, Gopal Rao being impleaded as possibly having received payment from them. But Article 116 cannot possibly apply to the claim against Gopal Rao, which is not based on the written registered document. Further, it would be impossible to decide whether the claim against him was laid within six years or not, till the Court had decided whether the payment to him was made before the 2nd February 1908 or not. The lease provides for payment on the 1st February and the parties can give no more definite information than that it was made shortly before or shortly after or on that date. The plaintiff and Gopal Rao have, however, agreed, as has already been stated, that the payment shall be deemed to have been made on the 2nd February 1908. The learned Advocate for the contesting respondent (the plaintiff) was, of course, constrained to admit that Article 1 6 had no application to the claim against the appellant. He contested, however, the submission of the learned Counsel for the appellant that Article 62 governs the case, and submitted that it is properly governed by Article 120. Article 62 allows a period of three years for suits "for money payable by the defendant to the plaintiff for money received by the defendant for the plaintiff's use." Article 120 provides a limitation of six years for all suits for which no period is provided elsewhere in the Schedule.

The learned Advocate for the respondent contended that Article 62 could not govern the case for the reason that Gopal Rao did not receive the money for the plaintiff's use, but under a claim of right adverse to her, and he cited Ghasiram v. Dhanraj (1) and Mohammad Farrukh v. Kadir Ali Khan (2). The former case would appear to give support to his contention. The plaintiff was paid a sum of money deposited in Court in satisfaction of a decree against one Wali Muhammed. His decree was set aside in appeal and he repaid the money into Court, and it was then rateably distributed amongst other creditors of Wali Muhammad. The decree was, however, restored in second appeal, and he sued the other creditors for the money. It is true that Neill, J. C., does say at the end of the judgment: "I do not think that Article 62 is applicable and I am satisfied that the suit must be governed by Article 120 of Schedule II" and this follows the statement that "the suit is one to recover money wrongfully paid to the defendants to which plaintiffs were legally entitled". But the question before the learned Judicial Commissioner was not between Article 62 and Article 120, but between Article 29 (which allows one year only) on the one hand and Article 62 or 120 on the other, as the suit was filed more than one year and less than three years after the payment, and the decision that Article 62 is not applicable must be regarded as an obiter dictum. The second case, that of Mohammad Farrukh v. Kadir Ali Khan(2) is very clearly distinguishable. That was a suit by a co-sharer proprietor of a village against a lambardar co-sharer for profits of the village and in discussing the applicability of Article 62 the learned Judicial Commissioner said: "Nor is it a question of merely suing for money received by the lambardar. The lambardar is entrusted with the general management of the village and has to incur expenditure as well as to receive money. From the nature of the business, the starting point of the period of limitation could not be taken to be the date 'when the money is received' as provided in Article 62, even if the words 'when the money is received' be taken in the widest sense as meaning, 'when the money is received for the plaintiff'." It seems to me that the suit is, in its nature, one for an account and that the right to receive the account accrues every year at the end of the agricultural year.

The leading case on the point seems to be the decision of Harington and Mookerjee, JJ., in Mahomed Wahib v. Mahomed Ameer (3), where we have an exhaustive review by Mr. Justice Mookerjee of all the authorities. In that case the plaintiff was entitled to a part of the money that the first defendant advanced to the second defendant on a mortgage executed in his favour alone, and when the second defendant repaid the principal to the first defendant, the plaintiff sued for his share. It was held that the suit was governed by Article 62 of the Second Schedule of the Limitation Act. The respondent in that appeal relied on Nund Lall Bose v. Meer Aboo Mahomed (4) from which decision both the learned Judges dissented. Mookerjee, J., said:—

"I am unable to hold that the view taken by the learned Judges who decided the case of Nund Lall Bose v. Meer Aboo Mahomed (4) is well founded, if they intended to rule that money is not received to the plaintiff's use in any case where, at the time of receipt, the defendant does not so intend to receive it. It seems to me to be clear, as pointed out by Markby, J., in Raghumoni Audhikary v. Nilmoni Singh Deo (5), that the Article, when it speaks of a suit for money received by the defendant for the plaintiff's use, points to the well known English action in that form; consequently, the Article ought to apply wherever the defendant has received money which in justice and equity belongs to the plaintiff under circumstances which in law render the receipt of it, a receipt by the defendant to the use of the plaintiff. As pointed out by Lord Mansfield, C. J., in Moses v. Macfearlan (6), this form of action lies for money paid by mistake, or upon a consideration, which happens to fail, or for money got through imposition (express or implied) or extortion or oppression or an undue advantage taken of the plaintiff's situation contrary to loss made for the protection of persons under those circumstances; in other words, this form of action would be maintainable in cases in which the defendant at the time of receipt, in fact or by presumption of fiction of law, receives the money to the use of the plaintiffs."

I have, then, no hesitation whatever in holding that Article 62 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act governs the present case and it is, therefore, barred by time as against Gopal Rao. It would seem that Article 109, prescribing the same period of limitation for a suit "for the profits of immoveable property belonging to the plaintiff which have been wrongfully received by the defendant," would also govern the case. The learned Advocate for the respondents was bound to admit that he was unable to bring the circumstances outside these words. In either case, the suit against Gopal Rao is barred by time and must be

The decree of the lower Appellate Court is, therefore, modified by the omission of the words "for Rs. 53₹ against the defendant No. 4 and", and the addition of the words "and the suit against the defendant No. 4 is dismissed" to the operative part of it. Hindu Law—Adoption—Wife of lunatic, whether can adopt during his lifetime.

Under the Hindu Law an adoption by a wife to her husband, the husband being alive and a lunatic, is invalid.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Kanara, in Appeal No. 106 of 1918, confirming the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge at Kumta, in Civil Suit No. 141 of 1917.

Mr. G. P. Murdeshwar, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. V. Palekar, for Respondent No. 1.

Mr. Nilkant Atmaram, for Respondent No. 3.

JUDGMENT.—The only question which has been argued in second appeal is, whether an adoption by a wife to her husband, the husband being alive and a lunatic, is a good adoption. Now, in this Presidency the wife cannot adopt to her husband while he is alive without his express consent. Such an adoption must necessarily be a very rare occurrence, but where the consent of the husband is expressly required and the husband is a lunatic he cannot possibly give his consent. In this case it is suggested faintly that his mother could give consent on his behalf. But if we were to hold that the mother of a lunatic could give consent on his behalf to an adoption by his wife, then we should be making an addition to the Hindu Law which, we think, we are not entitled to do. We think, therefore, that the learned District Judge was right and the appeal must be dismissed with costs. One set of costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 73—Execution of decree—Money paid into Court—Rateable distribution, right to, in respect of execution costs, whether permissible.

Money paid into Court in execution of a decree is assets available for rateable distribution under section 73 of the Civil Procedure Code, but such distribution is limited to the amount of the decrees and cannot be extended to the costs of the application for execution, unless, prior to the receipt of the money, there was an order made expressing in terms that such costs are to be added to the amount of the decree. [p. 459, col. 2.]

Mr. S. N. Banerji, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application by Hariram Sitaram as assignee of a firm called Noor Mahomed Dawood which, on the 24th January 1919, obtained an award against Bilasiram Thakursidas, the execution debtors. I will refer to the assignee as the present execution-creditor. The award was for Rs. 3,229 with certain interest and it became enforceable as if it were a decree on the 10th February 1919, having been filed in Court on that date. The execution-creditor's assignment is dated 25th February 1919. In the previous year the execution-debtors had had two other awards made against them in favour of Ram Chandra Chowthmull and Gopiram Bhutica respectively. These awards had been filed in Court and applications for execution had been made to the Court thereunder in July and August 191c. Both of these applications were for attachment of the moveable property of the execution-debtors. It does not appear that under either of these applications attachment was in fact made but in any case no attachment thereunder was subsisting, at the date of the proceedings, hereinafter mentioned, taken by the present execution-creditor. By that time the claim of Gopiram Bhutica on their award had been satisfied, but the "costs of execution" had not, and have not yet as I am informed, been paid. As regards the claim of Ramchandra Chowthmull this, it is alleged, has been satisfied only in part, the interest included in the award not having been paid.

Proceedings to enforce his award of the 24th January 1919 were taken by the present execution creditor as follows :—On the 25th March 1919 he applied for execution by attachment of moveables. The warrant of attachment was issued on the 12th April and on the 30th April a gross amount of Rs. 3,584 1 0 was paid to the Sheriff by the attorney of the execution-debtors. Sheriff's poundage and charges (Rs. 134 9 0) and Accountant General's fees or stamps (Rs. 17-0-0) reduced this sum to Rs. 3,432 8-0 and when on the 31st May the money was paid by the Sheriff into Court under the rules of the High Court, Chapter XVII, rule 24, it shrank still further by Rs. 34-5-3, the Accountant-General's commission, and the amount that lies in Court to the credit of the cause is Rs. 3,398-1-9.

The application now made by the present execution creditor is to have that sum paid out to him in full. Gopiram Bhutica and Ramchandra Chowthmull by their attorneys appear on notice and ask for rateable distribution under section 73 of the Civil Procedure Code.

I think that the claim of Gopiram Bhutica fails in limine. The word "thereof" in section 73 refers to the previous words "of decrees" and, at all events, unless prior to the receipt of assets there has been an order made expressing in terms that the costs of the application for execution are to be added to the amount of the decree, I do not think there can be a right to rateable distribution in respect of these, The addition to be made in the warrant under rule 17 of Chapter XVII of the High Court Rules of a sum for costs of execution over and above "the amount due and payable under the decree" does not bring that sum within the language of section 73 nor, as I think, within its spirit or intention. If an attachment is withdrawn although the terms of rule 20 are not satisfied, or if it is not proceeded with in view of a payment after application has been made for execution, the decree-holder may have a right to an order for costs of execution. But rateable distribution was never meant to be, and should not be, allowed to become a snow-ball system beyond necessity. When the decree is satisfied, the decree-holder must gather any other snow for himself, dormientibus non vigilantibus is not a principle and section 73 has not made it one.

The application as against Ramchandra Chowthmull has no such answer on the facts. He relies upon the Bombay case of Sorabji Coovarji v. Kala Raghunath (1) and says that the fund in Court was paid for a particular purpose under Order XXI, rule 55, viz., to release his attachment and is not "assets" within the meaning of section 73. I do not find that this decision has been formally dissented from by this Court, but it is true that our rules, and, as I am informed on enquiry, our practice, are based upon a contrary assumption. Thus, the Sheriff, instead of paying such monies direct to the attaching creditor, is required to pay it into Court and commission is deducted from it accordingly.

My own view on the matter is contrary to the Bombay decision. The words of the Code have been changed from "whenever assets are realised by sale or otherwise in execution of a decree" to "where assets are held by a Court." I cannot think it sound to hold that, because the latter words "after deducting the costs of realisation" have been allowed to remain, the word "assets" must be taken to mean "assets held in the process of execution" in such a narrow sense as would be equivalent to the former words. The words "sale or otherwise" covered every case, and if "held" is to be interpreted by "realisation" in the sense indicated in the Bombay case, the Legislature has gone out of its way to effect nothing. The word "assets" in the former Code did not import what is now contended for, as is proved by the fact that express words were added to convey the qualification. "Realisation" imports only that the Court has got the assets and got them in a distributable or payable form. That this should ever take place without some costs is a contingency too remote to require insurance even by the expenditure of the words "if any." The very language of Order XXI, rule 55 (a) shows that cases of the class now in question are not so noticeably free from such considerations as to ground an inference from words in section 73 which remain unaltered, that other words deliberately omitted are still intended as part of the connotation of the same word "assets" which never imported this before.

I agree, however, that the larger language of the present Code is still to be controlled by the consideration that section 73 is a section in Part II which treats of execution. It is equally true that rule 55 is one of a series of rules (41-57) dealing with attachment of property which come into Order XXI as part of this subject of "Execution of Decrees and Orders." If, for example, a defendant is made to pay into Court the amount of the plaintiff's claim as a condition of getting an adjournment it does not follow, from my reading of section 73, that other creditors could claim to share. Nor could they under Order XXI, rule 52 where funds in Court are themselves the subject matter of the exemption.

I see no support in these considerations or in the section or the rule for a theory grounded upon the "voluntariness" of the payment into Court. This is, I think, out of place as regards payments into Court under stress of execution. Such payments if made to the decree-holder may, and indeed must, be regarded as accord and satisfaction made by the parties bringing the decree to the position of a satisfied decree. But if made into Court under Order XXI they cannot without anomaly be treated otherwise than as the result of an execution would be treated. The debtor is allowed to arrive at the same result by means less distressing to him but there is no difference in the result because the debtor chooses the more convenient means. The money, paid with whatever motive, if paid to the Court, is paid upon terms of the Code whatever they may be. These terms, as I read section 73, have been laid down so that distinctions in the form in which execution has been had, in the precise extent to which execution has been allowed to run, in the exact source or genesis of the fund in Court, are now no part of the definition of the assets that are subject to distribution rateably. The object of the new Code in using larger language [Hari Saha v. Faizlar Rahman (2),] can only be to avoid anomaly. To reintroduce a distinction on the strength of the voluntariness of the payment or the purpose of the debtor is, I think, to cut down the language and intention of the Code upon a principle which is inapplicable to the subject-matter and which, if applicable; is very difficult to imply.

Rateable distribution under the Code clearly applies where one decree-holder takes out execution, and others, though they have applied for it, do not. Any warrant for execution must be limited—certainly in the first instance—to the debt and execution costs, of the particular creditor who takes it out. It must always be possible to end that particular execution for the moment by meeting that debt only plus its own attendant costs, just as it must always be possible to renew it if new claimants have come in-to share in time. In these respects, I see no difference in the Code and I see no difference in justice or convenience whether from debtor's or creditor's stand point between proceeds of sale and money paid to avoid sale. The debtor can get rid of the active creditor for good and for certain by paying him direct. He can stop his process by paying to the Sheriff or into Court, but with no certainty of permanent peace for later or more idle creditors can claim to share. In either case, these other creditors may proceed to execution on their own account.

Order XXI, rule 55, is addressed only to a provision that attachment shall come to an end without further order in certain plain but very different cases. It does not pretend to point to any method by which a judgment-debtor to several different people can dispose satisfactorily of all his troubles. The most that it says is that, if it is desired to terminate an attachment, this can be done in certain ways. Whether it is worth doing in any given case is another matter.

Clauses (a) and (b) are necessary on any view of the law. They are required in the class of cases under discussion to prevent any attachment going on for a single moment riderless, i e., without a responsible attaching creditor, after the records of the Court no longer show the decree unsatisfied. Rule 56 of Order XXI, is only facultative and though it suggests no trouble as to rateable distribution, I cannot control the language of section 73 by inference from this. It may be that the decisions in this Court and the rules which have followed them, to the effect that payment to the Sheriff is a payment to the Court and that the Sheriff must pay the money into Court, are not contemplated by the Code. It may be that such a payment as took place in this case might come under the first part of clause (b) of rule 55 but the decision of Harington, J., (Execution Case No. 49 of 1908) and rule 24 of Chapter XVII of our High Court Rules require these assets to be held by the Court and in fact they are so held.

Having regard to the fact that the view which I take is the view which underlies the rules of this Court, I propose to act upon it, not out of any lack of respect for learned Judges who are much more likely to be right than I am, but to obviate a change of practice and, perhaps, some alteration in our rules which might again have to be undone.

Ramchandra Chowthmull must put the facts as to the existing balance of his claim on affidavit in a formal manner and support them with the relavant documents. If Gopiram Bhutica desire to proceed further with this matter they must do likewise. I adjourn this summons for one week for this purpose, no order to be drawn up in the meantime.

Order for payment out of Rs. 72 to Ramchandra Chowthmull—balance to applicant. Applicant to have costs against execution-debtor added to his claim. Counsel certified.

Document, lost—Loss, proof of—Omission to prove loss, effect of—Irregularity—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 99—C. P. Tenancy Act (XI of 1898), s. 60—Lease by occupancy tenant for term exceeding one year, validity of—Ejectment of sub-lessee—Notice to quit, necessity for—Tenancy, manner of proving.

Where the explanation for the non-production of a document is that it is lost, the regular course to adopt is to prove the loss before tendering secondary evidence, but the omission to do this is not any worse than an irregularity such as section 99 of the Civil Procedure Code precludes an Appellate Court from treating as a ground for reversing the decree or remanding the case. [p. 463, col. 1.]

Under section 60 of the C. P. Tenancy Act a lease for a period exceeding one year granted to a sub-tenant by an occupancy or ordinary tenant is absolutely invalid, irrespective of whether the sub-tenancy was consented to by or on behalf of the landlord or not, and a lessee under such a lease cannot plead absence of notice to quit prior to being ejected. [p. 463, col. 1.]

A tenancy may be proved without proving any written lease that may exist. [p. 464, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Jubbulpore, dated the 22nd January 1918, in Civil Appeal No. 148 of 1917.

Mr. W. R. Puranik, for the Appellant.

Mr. V. Bose, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of a suit filed by the present respondents on the 6th March 1917 with the object of recovering possession of a field (No. 44) in Mouza Chapod from the present appellant Suratsingh. This field was originally the occupancy holding of one Sukhai and the basis laid for the claim in the plaint is that Sukhai surrendered it to the landlord on the 4th January 1916 by a registered deed, of which Exhibit P-4 is a duly certified copy, and that the plaintiffs took it on lease from the landlord the following day, obtaining possession and paying rent in due course.

Suratsingh was sued when the landlord gave the plaintiffs possession but was reinstated as the result of a suit brought under section 9, Specific Relief Act, and consequently figures as the defendant in the present case. His case, as put in the pleadings, was that in or about the year 1907 he was placed in possession of the field by Sukhai in return for a payment of Rs. 250, the arrangement being that he should remain in occupation for 12 years. He further alleged that the landlord recognized him as Sukhai's sub-tenant by accepting rent from him in that capacity and, further, that in Kartik Sambat 1972 (24th October to 21st November 1915) the landlord through his agent, Gopalrao, in consideration of a payment of Rs. 45, of which Rs. 2 had already been paid and Rs. 43 were handed over on the 16th January 1916, undertook to make him an ordinary tenant of the land and to execute a formal lease. The surrender was described as a fraudulent transaction designed by Sukhai to defeat the sub-lease and, therefore, to afford no basis for the plaintiffs' claim. The following issues were framed:—

1. Did Sukhai Badai, original tenant of the field in suit, surrender the field in dispute to the malguzar under a deed of surrender, dated the 4th January 1916 ?

2. Has the malguzar leased the field in dispute to the plaintiffs ?

3. Are these two transactions surrender and lease fraudulent and not enforceable against the defendant as alleged ? Did malguzar's agent collude with the plaintiffs as alleged ?

4. (a) Is the defendant an ordinary tenant of the field in dispute ? Has he been so recognised by the malguzar ?

(b) Are the plaintiffs tenants of the field in dispute as alleged ?

5. To what relief are the plaintiffs entitled ?

Exhibit P 4, as already stated, is a copy of the deed of surrender relied on by the plaintiffs. Both sides were represented by Pleaders when the landlord's agent, Gopalrao (P. W. No. 1), was examined on the 3rd September 1917 to prove the surrender and the witness was examined and cross-examined as if Exhibit P 4 had been the original deed. The plaintiffs' Pleader then obtained permission to question Gopalrao about the non-production of the original and elicited a statement to the effect that he had searched for the document without success. Gopalrao was cross-examined upon this statement at some length and, later on, Khubchand, father of the male plaintiff Amirchand, as the plaintiffs' 6th witness, deposed that he had endeavoured to obtain the original from Gopalrao who professed inability to comply as the document was lost. Upon the evidence thus elicited, the Trial Judge held the original to have been lost and found that the surrender took place. He also found that the field was let to the plaintiffs on the 6th January 1916 and that no collusion or fraud on the part of Sukhai or the plaintiffs was made out. The Judge disbelieved the story that the defendant paid Rs. 45 as nazrana and was promised a lease of the field by Gopalrao or had in any way been constituted an ordinary tenant of the field. He also found that the defendant had failed to establish any recognition of his status as sub tenant of Sukhai on the part of the landlord. The plaintiffs were accordingly given a decree for possession.

The defendant appealed without success to the District Court. Additional District Judge considered it unnecessary to decide whether the defendant's possession as sub-tenant of Sukhai had ever been recognized by or on behalf of the landlord and agreed generally with the conclusions of the Trial Judge.

It is contended, in the first place, that Gopal Rao should have been questioned, to begin with, regarding the loss of the original surrender deed and that the delay in this respect vitiated the proof of loss adduced later. No authority in support of this proposition is cited. The appellant's Pleader raised no objection when Gopalrao was testifying about the execution of the surrender by Sukhai and, if the plaintiffs' Pleader had not sought at the later stage already mentioned to elicit an explanation for non production of the original document, the omission would doubtless have passed unnoticed and, on the principle laid down in Dalchand v. Ganga Singh (1), Kishori Lal v. Rakhal Das (2) Inugunti Prakasa Rajaningaru v. Yeranki Peda Venkat

Rao (3), non production of the original could not have been successfully relied on in appeal. No doubt the regular course to adopt in such cases is to prove the loss of the original document before secondary evidence is tendered. But departure from this course is not, in my opinion, any worse than an irregularity such as section 99, Civil Procedure Code, precludes me from treating as a ground for reversing or remanding the case.

The next point pressed is that the lower Appellate Court should have decided whether the appellant's sub lease was consented to by the landlord. In this connection Maharajsha v. Abheram (4) is relied upon as authority for the position that a sub lease legally granted cannot be defeated by a voluntary surrender on the part of the lessor. That case was decided before the present Tenancy Act came into force, and the appellant's possession is now governed by section 60 of that Act, which lays down that, notwithstanding any agreement to the contrary, a lease granted to a sub-tenant by an occupancy tenant shall not be valid for a period exceeding one year. In Vishwanath v. Sitaram (5) it was held that this provision renders absolutely invalid a lease for a period exceeding one year granted to a sub-tenant by an occupancy or an ordinary tenant. In that case invalidity of the sub-lease was relied upon by the tenant against whom the lease was set up, but I can see no reason why the landlord, who has taken a surrender from the tenant, or an assignee of the landlord should any more than the tenant himself be debarred from taking advantage of the express enactment. The object of the Legislature evidently was to make a sub-lease null and void and the appellant should consider himself fortunate in having retained possession for ten years out of the twelve which, according to his oral pleading of the 18th April 1917, was the period fixed by the sub-lease. I agree then with the lower Appellate Court in thinking it unnecessary to decide whether the sub-tenancy was consented to by or on behalf of the landlord or not.

The third ground of appeal impeaches the finding of the Courts below that the sum of Rs. 45 paid by the appellant to Gopalrao did not constitute nazarana for the promise of the lease in dispute. It is urged that the lower Appellate Court has overlooked the jamabandi entries which form Exhibits D 6 and D 7. These are said to indicate that there were no arrears due at the end of 1915 or the beginning of 1916 on account of the agricultural year 1914 15. I have examined the jamabandis filed for the Sambat years 1968, 1969, 1970, 1971, and 1972 (Exhibits D-3—D-7) to which correspond the agricultural years beginning with 1911 12 A. D. and ending with 1915-16 A, D. From them I find that in Sambat 1968 only Rs. 23 were paid on account of the rent of that year, the balance (Rs. 25) being paid in Sambat 1969 when no payment was made in respect of the year then current. Further, no payment at all was made in Sambat 1970, Rs. 32 on account of that year being paid in the following year in addition to Rs. 48 for Sambat 1971. Thus, from the jamabandis, it does not appear that the rent for Sambat 1969 was paid at all and that in Sambat 1972 a balance of Rs. 16 was due on account of Sambat 1970. Further, the jamabandi for the last mentioned year shows Rs. 45 paid for that year by Suratsingh in addition to Rs. 6 only on account of Sambat 1971. Judging, then, from the jamabandis taken together, it seems clear that Sukhai was in arrears with his rent when he surrendered to the landlord and this explains why neither of the Courts below regarded the jamabandis as assisting the appellant. It is not suggested that the appellant paid Rs. 45 in the agricultural year 1915-16 (Sambat 1972) as the rent of that year in addition to Rs. 45 as nazrana. Moreover, his learned Pleader in this Court argued that the appellant could not have to pay rent for Sambat 1972 inasmuch as he was dispossessed on the 6th January 1916, that is, before the first instalment for the year fell due. He also referred me to Exhibit D 9, a receipt for Rs. 28, given by Gopalrao on the 12th June 1915 in which the money is described as paid towards the khata of Sukhai, and stress is laid upon the fact that in Exhibit D-9, (3) 21 Ind. Cas. 319; 38 M. 160, 25 M. L. J. 360; (1913) M. W. N. 800.

(5) 26 Ind. Cas. 708, 10 N. L. R. 159.

a receipt for Rs. 43 paid in January 1916, no reference to any khata is made. I find, however, on comparing Exhibit D 9 and a stamped receipt (Exhibit D-10) for Rs. 12 with the rasid bahi (Exhibit P 7), that the money referred to in the receipts was treated as part of the rent. The difference in the wording, therefore, has not the significance contended for. In these circumstances, I am not prepared to interfere with the concurrent finding of the Courts below that the sum of Rs. 45 was not paid as nazrana and that there was no creation of an ordinary tenancy in the appellant's favour in Sambat 1972.

The fourth ground of appeal needs no consideration in view of the conclusion last reached.

The fifth ground contends that the appellant cannot be ejected in the absence of a notice to quit. This plea was not taken in either of the Courts below and must fail, for the simple reason that the appellant had no sub-lease from Sukhai which can be recognized.

The last contention to be noticed is that the registered lease, Exhibit P-6, under which the plaintiffs ostensibly held the field, was not executed till the 9th July 1917, that is, four months after the institution of the suit. On the 6th January 1916 Gopalrao executed a lease in the plaintiffs' favour, which forms Exhibit P-5 of the Trial Judge's record. For some reason which has not been ascertained registration of this document was refused on the 25th May 1916, although Gopalrao holds a power-of-attorney which authorizes him to let out lands. The Trial Judge treated the second lease as relating back to the date of the earlier one, while the lower Appellate Court has found that there was a valid letting by Gopalrao which was merely confined by Exhibit P-6 which the landlord himself executed. I understand the lower Appellate Court to mean that the evidence establishes the relation of landlord and tenant apart from the leases and there is a basis for such a finding in the evidence of Gopalrao (P. W. No. 1), Mathole (P. W. No. 2), Kasiram (P. W. No. 3) and Khubchand (P. W. No. 6). Exhibits P-9, 10 and 11 are receipts for rent paid by the plaintiffs after Sukhai's surrender and so support the conclusion that the alleged relation of landlord and tenant existed. There is no question of proving the terms of the lease and it is well settled that a tenancy can be proved without proving any written lease that may exist: see Narayan Bisnoi v. Yaswant Singh (6) and Ameer Ali v. Yakub Ali Khan (7). The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. In the Courts below costs will be paid as already ordered.

Appeal dismissed.

SOMASUNDARAM PILLAI—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Hindu Law—Religious endowment—Management vested in family of founder—Right of one member of family to joint possession and management—Possession of one member of family, nature of.

The fact that the persons entitled to the office of trustee of a charitable endowment are unable to work harmoniously together is not a ground for dismissing a suit by one of the heirs of the founder for a declaration of his right to share in the management and for joint possession of the trust properties with the heir in possession and management, and, in the absence of a scheme of management settled by the heirs themselves or by resort to the Court, the plaintiff is entitled to the rights of joint possession and management. [p. 468, col. 2.]

MEENAKSHI ACHI v. SOMASUNDARAM PILLAI.

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Tanjore, in Original Suit No. 24 of 1916.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sues for a declaration that he is solely entitled to the management of 'Periabai Kattalai' in the Amirthagateswaraswami temple at Thirukkadaiyur and to the possession of the lands attached to the said Kattalai in the alternative, he claims that he should be given joint possession and management with the defendant. His first claim is based on the plea that, as he is the senior-most male among the descendants of the original founder Chidambaram Pillai, he alone is entitled to the sole management and possession of the Kattalai. Incidentally, he contends that the female members of the family of Chidambaram Pillai have no right. His second claim is based on the ground that, as he and the defendant are the only surviving male members of the junior branch of the original founder's family, they should both be declared trustees entitled to joint possession and management of the Kattalai and its emoluments. This claim also involves the contention that female members have no right.

Originally, there was only one defendant, Parameswara. During the course of the suit he died, and his widow is the 2nd defendant, and the son in-law who is alleged to be in sole possession of the lands is the 3rd defendant. The Subordinate Judge, in a judgment which both sides have attacked as being inconsistent with itself and as being inconclusive as regards the findings, held that the plaintiff was solely entitled to the management of the Kattalai and to the enjoyment of the lands appertaining thereto. The defendants have appealed.

Before dealing with the contentions raised on either side, it is desirable to state some facts.

The original founder, Chidambaram Pillai No 1, is said to have endowed the properties in the beginning of the nineteenth century. After some years, the Board of Revenue took up the management of the Kattalai; but in 1857, they restored to two members of the family, Namasivaya and Ambalavana, representing respectively the senior and the junior branches, the management of the Kattalai and the enjoyment of the lands. Disputes soon arose as regards the rights of the other members to a share in the management, Original Suit No. 19 of 1866 was filed by three persons representing both the senior and the junior branches against Namasivaya and Ambalavana and others belonging to both the branches for the purpose of defining the respective rights of the members of the family. Exhibit A is the judgment in the case and it shows that the rights of the various parties to the suit were adjusted by giving them definite shares. It may be pointed out that the shares fixed do not exactly correspond with what would have been obtained under the Hindu Law had the Kattalai been regarded as private property.

The next litigation was in 1876 by Ambalavana, Chidambaram Pillai No. 2, and others against some of the tenants. A decree was obtained for possession and it is clear that that decree was executed not only by Ambalavana but also by the other plaintiffs to whom shares were allotted in the suit of 1866. It is true that after the execution of the decree against the tenants, muchilikas were taken for the number of the years by Ambalavana alone. This is not sufficient evidence to show that Ambalavana (vide Exhibit VI series) had ousted the other members of the family from possession or management. The previous suits and the course of events suggest that, as a matter of convenience, Ambalavana was permitted to manage the Kattalai without prejudice to the rights of the other members of the family.

In 1878, one Muthuswami, son of Kattalai Pillai, one of the plaintiffs in the suit of 1866, transferred his share of management to the Pandarasannidhi of Dharmapuram (Exhibit B). In 1883, Namasivaya's son, Kankasabai, transferred his right to the same Pandarasannadhi (Exhibit B). On the strength of these two documents the Pandarasannidhi instituted a suit in 1891 for a share in the management of the Kattalai. Arunachella Pillai who belonged to the second branch was the 1st defendant, Somasundaram Pillai, the present plaintiff, was the 2nd defendant, Parameswara Pillai, the original defendant in this suit, was the 3rd defendant. The 4th defendant was the widow of Ambalavana Pillai. It may be mentioned that at this time Arunachella Pillai was in sole management of the Kattalai under a Will left by Ambalavana in his favour. The allegation of the Pandarasannidhi was that the defendants were unlawfully excluding him and his transferors from the management of the Kattalai, that an attempt made by his transferors to obtain possession of the lands under Chapter XII of the Criminal Procedure Code had failed inasmuch as the Magistrate maintained the possession of the defendants, and that by virtue of the rights possessed by his transferors, he was entitled to a share in the management of the Kattalai and the enjoyment of the properties. (Vide Exhibit C, paragraph 6). The plea of Arunachella in this suit was that the senior branch, from whose members the Pandarasannidhi had obtained the transfer, had been totally excluded for over the statutory period and that, therefore, the plaintiff had no subsisting right which he could enforce. He pleaded that the management should be in the family of the founder and that a stranger was not entitled to acquire any rights in it. He accepted the statement that the Magistrate maintained him and his co-defendants in possession of the property as correct. (Vide Exhibit C1, paragraph 6). He further stated that he was exclusively managing the Kattalai. The other defendants, including the plaintiff and the original defendant in the present suit, stated that they adopted the contentions of Arunachella (Exhibit C2). The suit was ultimately compromised by the Pandarasannidhi receiving back the consideration paid by him to his two transferors and executing a release in favour of Arunachella of all his rights (Exhibit C5). Arunachella continued in management till 1902. Muchilikas were executed by tenants to him alone (Exhibit VI series). His son Vythilinga succeeded him and died in 1912. He left a Will in favour of Parameswara, the original defendant in this case. This suit was instituted in 1913.

We have thus far traced the history of this litigation up to the date of the suit. Now, we shall deal with the contentions put forward on either side. The learned Advocate-General for the appellant contended that Ambalavana was in sole management when he willed away his right of management to Arunachella, that Arunachella became solely entitled to it under the Will as well as by adverse possession for over 12 years, that Vythilinga inherited this right, and that the defendant who claimed under the Will of Vythilinga was, therefore, entitled to the exclusive right of trusteeship and to the possession of the property. We are unable to agree with this contention. So far as Ambalavana is concerned, it is clear that by joining the other members of the family in instituting the suit against the tenants and in taking possession jointly with them of the property from which the tenants were evicted he never intended to set up any right adversely to the members of the family. His management must be taken to have been on behalf of all the members of the founder's family. It is the commonest thing in this part of India for one of the members of a family who happens to be more intelligent than the others to manage charities like the present one. It stands to reason that such management should be regarded as being held on behalf of all the members and not adversely to them. Therefore, we must hold that Ambalavana had not become the sole manager and that he had no right to will away that right in favour of Arunachella. In our opinion, Arunachella also took up the management on behalf of the other members of the family because he was considered to be better fitted than others to conduct the affairs. Arunachella in his own statement in the suit of the Pandarasannidhi (Exhibit C1) says that he assisted Ambalavana during his lifetime. It was, therefore, natural that he should have been selected to continue the management.

As regards the contention that Arunachella himself by exclusive management became solely entitled to it, the facts are against it. In 1883, immediately on the death of Ambalavana, the transferors of the Pandarasannidhi complained to the Magistrate and asked that Arunachella, the present plaintiff, and the defendant should be restrained from interfering with their possession. The Magistrate held that Arunachella, the plaintiff, and the defendant should be restrained in possession. This fact is alleged in the plaint of the Pandarasannadhi (Exhibit C) and is accepted in the written statement of Arunachella (Exhibit C1). As we stated already, the fact that he was solely looking after the affairs of the Kattalai is not, without more, evidence of ouster of the others, in view, especially of the fact that these were also maintained in their possession by the order of the Magistrate. We must, therefore, negative the contention that Arunachella had acquired a prescriptive right against the other members of his family. Vythilinga managed only for ten years, and we are not prepared to say that his management was adverse to the others. On his death disputes at once arose. In our opinion, it has not been proved that any of the active trustees acquired by prescription the right to exclude the other members of the family through whom the plaintiff claims.

We must now deal with the contention of Mr. Ramchandrier for the respondent. He argued that the plaintiff, as the senior-most male member in the family of Chidambaram, was entitled to the sole trusteeship. The first answer to this suggestion by the learned Advocate General was that there is one Kanakasabai who belongs to the senior branch and who is older than the defendant. If the contention of the respondent that the senior-most male member is entitled to manage to the exclusion of the other members is well founded, it would have to be considered whether the existence of Kanakasabai is any bar to such a right, because we find that Kanakasabai had not only parted with his rights in favour of the Pandarasannidhi by Exhibit B1, but, after the suit of the Pandarasannadhi, by a document dated the 7th September 1891, Exhibit C6, he and the other members of the senior branch of the family in terms relinquished their rights in favour of Arunachella. But, in our opinion, the contention of the learned Vakil for the respondent that the senior-most male is entitled to sole management has not been made out. As pointed out by the Subordinate Judge, during the lifetime of Arunachella and Vythilinga there were senior members who did not assert their rights to sole management as against the active trustee. The custom or tradition in the family in this behalf has not been established by any cogent evidence. We must overrule this contention.

It was next argued by Mr. Ramachandrier that, as the plaintiff is now only the male member in the junior branch he is entitled to the right to the exclusion of the females. He relied upon Purappavanalingam Chetti v. Nullasivan Chetti (1) and on Manally Chenna Kesavaraya v. Mangadu Vaidelinga (2) for the proposition that the office of a trustee in a public institution is indivisible and that succession to it must be regulated as in the case of impartible estates. However much one may wish that such a rule of law should obtain in regard to the management of trusts, we are of opinion that the course of the decisions in this Presidency, which has the sanction of the Judicial Committee, is opposed to this principle. In Ramanathan Chetty v. Murugappa Chetty (3) Sir Bashyam Aiyangar, J., pointed out that the right of trusteeship in a public institution possessed by the members of a family, where hereditary, descends in the same manner as the right to the enjoyment of ordinary family property. In that case, the founder, as the last trustee, had two wives. Both the wives had a number of sons. The dispute was as regards the right of management among the sons. The Madras High Court, holding that the senior branch had lost its right owing to adverse possession, decided that the arrangement among the members of the junior branch to manage the trust by rotation must be upheld. The matter was taken up to the Privy Council and, in the very opening sentence of the judgment delivered by Lord Macnaghten in Ramanathan Chetti v. Murugappa Chetti (4), it is pointed out that it was a public trust and that the right of management has devolved upon all the members of the family. This decision of the Judicial Committee has been applied to public trusts in a very large number of cases in this Presidency, and the decisions in Manally Chenna Kesavaraya v. Mangadu Vaidelinga (2) and Purappravanalingam Chetti v. Nullasivan Chetti (1), quoted by the learned Vakil, have never been regarded as binding authorities. Mr. Ramchandra Aiyar laid stress on certain observations contained in Sethuramaswamiar v. Meruswamiar (5), in the course of which Sir Walter Phillimore, who delivered the judgment of the Judicial Committee, referred to the decision in Ramanathan Chetti v. Murugappa Chetti (4) as relating to a private trust. These observations, which were purely obiter, appear to have proceeded on some misconception as to the facts of that case, as it cannot be contended that the trusteeship of a public temple is a private trust. The decision of the Judicial Committee in Ramanathan Chetti v. Murugappa Chetti (4) proceeded on the view that such a trust was a public trust, and, applying that decision to the present case, we must hold that in this case also the trusteeship devolved on the general body of the founder's heirs of whom the plaintiff is one. The learned Vakil for the plaintiff-respondent also contended that the 2nd defendant, the widow of the 1st defendant, Parameswara, who is now in possession and management through her son-in-law the 3rd defendant, is disqualified by reason of her sex. He relied upon the judgments of the suits of 1866, 1871, etc., which speaks of the descendants of the founders as being entitled to the management. We have looked into the original, and the language is "Vamsasta" which is not accurately translated as "descendants." Even, otherwise, we fail to see, except when it is established by cogent evidence that there is a custom to that effect, how the widows and daughters of a divided member can be excluded from the management of charity property. Even in regard to religious offices, this Court has held in a Full Bench decision that the widows of divided members cannot be superseded by the reversioners. A fortiori in the case of a secular office like the present, there is absolutely no justification for the contention that they are not entitled to manage. The evidence as to usage has been fully discussed by the Subordinate Judge, and we agree with his conclusion that it has been shown that females are not entitled to manage this Kattalai.

(1) 1 M. H. C. R. 415.
(2) 1 M. 343; 2 Ind. Jur. 249; 1 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 229.
(3) 27 M. 192; 13 M. L. J. 341.

The result of the above discussion is, that the plaintiff is one of the persons entitled to manage the Kattalai along with 2nd defendant and any other members of the family who have not lost their right. One of them who has not been made a party to the suit is the widow of Vythilingam. There may be others about whom the record is silent.

The question on these facts is, whether the plaintiff is entitled to any relief, and if so, to what. The learned Advocate-General contended that as the plaintiff had not brought a suit for settling a scheme of management, his suit should be dismissed. We are unable to see the force of this contention. The fact that the persons entitled to the office of the trustee may not be able to work harmoniously together is not a ground for dismissing a suit by one of the heirs of the founder for a declaration of his right to share in the management and for joint possession of the trust properties with the heir who is now in possession and management. If it is found that a scheme of management is necessary in the interests of the institution, such a scheme may be settled either by the heirs themselves, or by resort to the Court. In the absence of such a scheme, the plaintiff is entitled to the rights of the joint management and possession claimed in the plaint. We must, therefore, in modification of the decree of the Court below, declare that the plaintiff is entitled to manage the trust along with the 2nd defendant who is now in possession. It is unnecessary to decide anything as to the rights of Vythilingam's widow or other members of the family to share in the management of the Kattalai.

In the circumstances of the case, each party must bear his own costs. No portion of the costs should come out of the charity property.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Jalpaiguri, dated the 13th of March 1918, affirming that of the Munsif, first Court, at Jalpaiguri, dated the 31st of March 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Mohendranath Roy, (with him Babu Atul Chandra Gupta), for the Appellant.—Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were the shebaits and they sued the plaintiff for cesses due and got a decree. In execution of that decree the land in possession of the plaintiff was put up to sale and purchased by the defendant who is the appellant before your Lordships. The main point in dispute is, whether the sale in execution of the decree really passed the land. Is such a tenancy saleable? Section 60, Civil Procedure Code, describes the interests which are not saleable. The proviso under section 60, Civil Procedure Code, does not cover a case like this.

The plaintiff cannot be regarded as a trustee. He did not hold a hereditary office of any kind in connection with the sheba or under the deity. His father and he were mere menial servants. The land was not burdened with any service in connection with the sheba. Refers to Radha Pershad Singh v. Budhu Doshad (1). Refers to Mokbul Hossain v. Ameer Sheikh (2) in which case there was resumption. There is no substance in the argument that as the first suit was instituted by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 not as shebaits, the decree is inoperative. The plaintiff is not entitled to claim possession of the land.

Babu Bhupendra Chandra Guha, for the plaintiff respondent.—My service right subsists. he has purchased a chakrani right which does not exist. My right has not been interfered with in any way. I wanted a declaration that my right subsists. My right is inalienable. No service tenure is alienable by transfer or sale under a decree. Refers to Sri Raja Venkata Narasinha Appa Rao v. Sri Raja Sobhanadri Appa Rao (3). Land cannot be attached for a cess as it is a personal debt. This is a suit for cess, the right of plaintiff—the service tenure—cannot be sold in execution of the decree.

Babu Atul Chandra Gupta replied.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff claims to be a service tenure-holder of the land in suit, which is the debutter property of an idol, under defendants Nos. 1 and 2, the shebaits. He made preparations for the worship and sheba of the idol and his father did similar service before him. He held this land in lieu of remuneration for the service he rendered and paid Rs. 12 a year to the shebaits as cesses. This amount used to be Rs. 7 but it was enhanced to Rs. 12. He made default in payment of this amount on account of which a Suit (No. 899 of 1911) was instituted against him by defendants Nos. 1 and 2. It was decreed and in execution of that decree the jote was put up for sale and was purchased by defendant No. 3 on the 4th October 1912. The plaintiff then instituted this suit on the 20th April 1916 to recover possession of the jote alleging that the former suit was fraudulent; that he knew nothing about it; that in fact a wrong person, a name-sake of his, had been served, and that he knew nothing about the suit and decree. His case was that his right in the disputed land was a chakran right and that such right could not be attached or sold; the attachment and sale of such a right was prohibited by law and the sale was, therefore, void and fraudulent and so defendant No. 3 by his purchase had acquired no right in the land and he prayed that the decree and sale might be declared void and fraudulent and not binding on him and possession should be restored to him.

The Trial Court held that no summons had been served on the plaintiff in that Suit No. 898 of 1911 and so he was not bound by the decree in that suit. He further held that the right which the plaintiff had was the right of a service-holder but that the sale certificate showed that a chakrani right had been sold. He found that there had been irregularities in the sale and so the plaintiff's title had not passed. He did not decide whether the right of a service-holder was saleable. On these findings he gave the plaintiff a decree for possession. On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge held that the decree in Suit No. 898 had been properly obtained and the execution proceedings under it properly conducted. The plaintiff had appeared in the execution proceedings. He, however, held that the right which the plaintiff held in the land was that of a service holder, that the position of the plaintiff was that of a trustee, and that being so, the service-tenure was not liable to be sold. He held that section 47, Civil Procedure Code, was not a bar to the suit. On these findings he dismissed the appeal.

It seems to us the learned Subordinate Judge has erroneously held that the plaintiff was a trustee of this land. The plaintiff did not hold a hereditary office of any kind in connection with the sheba or under the deity. His father and he were menial servants. Instead of remuneration for the work they did, they were allowed to take the profits of some land, possession of which had been made over to them. They had to pay Rs. 12 a year to the shebaits for the land as cess. The land was not burdened with any service in connection with sheba. Hereditary character does not attach to it or the service, nor has it been shown to be service jote, or debutter chakran land. The learned Subordinate Judge has overlooked the distinction between the grant of an estate burdened with debsheba service and that of an office the performance of the duties of which is remunerated by the use of certain lands. See Radha Pershad Singh v. Budhu Dashad (1). There is a still greater distinction when the use is of a permissive character so far as the servant is concerned, when the land is not burdened with any service. The plaintiff held under a special arrangement. He was liable to dismissal and the land could be resumed at once upon cessation of his service. He had not paid the annual cess and that was a breach of the arrangement between him and his employers. The plaintiff alleged in his plaint that he had "enjoyed the land in lieu of rent for upwards of 12 years in succession to predecessors" by which we think he meant "in lieu of service." It is not shown he had an occupancy right. If the plaintiff held the land as a service-tenure he could not acquire a right of occupancy in it. See Hurrogobind Raha v. Ramrutno Dey (4). The sale certificate speaks of a chakrani jote. The learned Munsif understood by it a right of occupancy which is incorrect. Neither Court has found that a chukanidar has any kind of permanent right attaching to his jote. From the nature of the employment it is altogether unlikely that any permanency is attached to it. A chakrani jote is a subordinate jote under a jotedar. It is a korfa under tenancy, in the District of Rungpore, (Tagore Law Lectures) (see Phillips' Land Tenures). It is, so far as we know, the same in Jalpaiguri. The plaintiff was aware of the execution proceedings and knew what had been advertised for sale. He made a part payment to stop the sale. He did not then suggest that the tenure was not saleable. It was open to him to have the matter then determined but he refrained from taking any steps and now he has put forward false allegations before the Court and challenged the decree on the ground of fraud without any justification. Service tenures are exempted from the operation of section 89, Bengal Tenancy Act. See Mokbul Hossain v. Ameer Sheikh (2). In that case the plaintiff held the land in lieu of wages. He was dismissed and the land was held to have been rightly resumed.

It has also been argued that as the first suit was instituted by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 not as shebaits the decree is inoperative. There is nothing which requires the manager of a temple or the shebait of debutter properties to bring such suits in a representative capacity. The relationship in this case was that of master and servant.

In Juggodumba Dasses v. Paddomoney Dassee (5), Markby, J., held that, although the ownership of debutter property is vested in the idols, the shebaits, strictly speaking, were not trustees for the idols, but managers, and, having regard to Maharanee Shibessouree Debia v. Mothooranath Acharjo (6), he said that there was this peculiarity that in all transactions including even litigation the managers carried them on in their own names. It has been held by the Privy Council that the possession and management of property dedicated to an idol belongs to the shebait, and that carries with it the right to bring whatever suits are necessary for the protection of the property. Every such right of suit is vested in the shebait and in the idol and that such right is a personal right. But no such question as has been raised before us can arise in matters connected with the employment or dismissal of or the recovery of claims against menial servants of a temple, persons who hold no office of a hereditary character. In the case of land admittedly belonging to the office of "Gurav" and attached to it the Bombay High Court held in Lotlikar v. Wagle (7) that, although the property of the temple could not be sold away from the temple, there was no objection to the sale of the right, title and interest of such a servant of the temple in the land which he held as remuneration for his services, the interest sold being subject in the hands of the alienee to determination by the death of the original holder or his removal from office on account of his failure to perform the service. But in this case the land is not even burdened with any service. We are of opinion that, whatever right the plaintiff had as chukanidar or otherwise in lieu of his services, has been sold and he is not entitled to claim possession of the land. The plaintiff in this case went to the extent of filing a suit against the purchaser defendant No. 3 for a declaration that the auction purchase by the latter was a benami one. That itself is an admission that something passed by such purchase. What precisely is the right that defendant No. 3 has purchased is between him and defendants Nos. 1 and 2 but they are estopped from questioning the right of defendant No. 3 to hold the land as a chukanidar as he purchased in the execution of the decree they had obtained against the plaintiff. We also doubt whether this suit is maintainable having regard to section 47, Civil Procedure Code, but having regard to our decision on the other points it is unnecessary to consider it.

The appeal is decreed with costs of all the Courts.

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Sivaganga, in Original Suit No. 74 of 19.6.

Mr. R. Kuppusawy Aiyar, (with him Mr. V. Pattabhiram Aiyar), for the Appellants :—The suit is barred as more than three years have elapsed from the original claim. It is not shown how limitation is suspended or postponed. No exemption can be claimed which is not expressly provided by the Limitation Act.

Mr. K. Balasubramanya Aiyar for Mr. A. Krishnaswmi Aiyar, for the Respondents.—The suit is not barred. The satisfaction of the original claim having been annulled by the defendant's decree, a new cause of action arose. The plaintiff could not have sued so long as he held the money decreed to him by the award and if he had sued his claim would have been resisted on the ground of satisfaction. The claim revives on the annulment of the satisfaction. JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, C. J.—The plaintiff in this case is a principal and the defendant an agent. The plaintiff having a claim against the defendant preferred a complaint against him for misappopriating bangles and had him arrested, and he was afterwards bailed. Then the defendant was induced to appoint an arbitrator and the plaintiff appointed another arbitrator to settle their differences, and the award of the arbitrators was that the defendant should pay the plaintiff Rs. 10,000 in full satisfaction of all the plaintiff's claims and that the prosecution should be dropped. The defendant paid Rs. 7,000 and gave a hundi for Rs. 3,000 at the time. Then he refused to pay the balance of Rs. 3,000 and successfully sued to recover the Rs. 7,000 which he had paid on the ground that it was obtained by coercion. It was held by this Court, reversing the decision of the Subordinate Judge, that he had been induced to consent to this arbitration by coercion and that the money so obtained from him in the circumstances which I have mentioned must be refunded. Now, the plaintiff-principal accepting that state of things brings this suit and alleges that the agreement evidencing the settlement of the 1st defendant's agency accounts having been annulled the cause of action with respect to delivery by the 1st defendant of accounts after due adjustment and verification has accrued to the plaintiff afresh. That is the plaintiff's case.

The defendant pleaded that there had been no arbitration and no award at all.

The Subordinate Judge finds that there was no binding agreement to refer to arbitration which is not questioned but he mentions that the findings of fact of this Court in the other suit were accepted by both the parties, and included findings that there had in fact been an arbitration and a payment by defendant pursuant to it. The result of the previous suit was that the present plaintiff had to pay back the sum which he had accepted pursuant to the arbitration from the defendant in full satisfaction of all his claims against the defendant. The question then is, whether, as the result of the previous suit, he has not acquired a fresh cause of action, in the nature of his original cause of action, for an account which was satisfied so long as the adjustment to which I have referred stood. In my opinion he has.

It is unnecessary to refer to all the cases which were cited before us. There is a case in Musammat Ranee Surno Moyee v. Shooshee Mokhee Burmonia (1), a decision of the Privy Council which has been explained by their Lordships in Huro Pershad Roy v. Gopal Das Dutt (7). The latter case contains a clear statement of the principle which is applicable to this case, at page 259. Their Lordships say :—"The effect of that case in Musammat Ranee Surno Moyee v. Shooshee Mokhee Burmonia (1), may be very shortly stated. The Zemindar brought a certain patni taluq to sale, and sold it to a purchaser who was put in possession of it, and out of the purchase-money the arrears of rent were paid. Subsequently this sale was set aside for irregularity. The Zemindar had to refund the purchase money received by her, and the patnidar, who succeeded in setting it aside, obtained also the mesne profits for the time during which he was ousted. Under those circumstances, this Committee, whose judgment was delivered by Sir James Colvile, observe :— 'It is clear that until the sale had been finally set aside, she'—that is, the plaintiff—'was in the position of a person whose claim had been satisfied and that her suit might have been successfully met by a plea to that effect.' In other words, the effect of the judgment of this Board is, that under the peculiar circumstances, the patnidar having recovered possession, together with mesne profits, it was equitable that he should pay the amount of rent which was in arrear ; but that amount of rent did not accrue until the sale of the patni had been set aside, and, therefore, until that time that Statute could not run." Applying those observations to the present case, it is equitable that the plaintiff should be allowed to prefer a fresh claim seeing that he has been deprived of the satisfaction which he had originally obtained. The fact that satisfaction was obtained by coercion was good reason for ordering the money to be refunded, but is no reason for depriving the plaintiff of all remedy on his original claim. In the case cited, the Privy Council say that a fresh claim for the arrears of rent accrued when the patni sale was set aside, and that until the patni sale had been set aside the Statute could not run. That, in my opinion, amounts to saying that a fresh cause of action arose. Both in that case and in this the Statute ran as against the original claim. But when the original claim was satisfied there was an end of the Statute running in respect of that cause of action, and on the annulment of that satisfaction a fresh cause of action arose and the Statute began to run again. If there was a fresh cause of action this suit is in time, whatever Article is applicable. The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Inamdars in Berar—Alienation by inamdar, rule as to—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch I, Art. 144, applicability of—Suit to recover inam lands Adverse possession, plea of—Burden of proof.

MAHOMED SIRAJ-UD-DIN v. FAYAZ-UD-DIN.

The law in Berar in respect of alienations by inamdars is that, if an inamdar alienates an inam held under rule 5 of the Berar Inam Rules, he having only a life-interest, such an alienation cannot affect his successor, or the next holder of an inam certificate, and in the case of such an alienation the plea of adverse possession cannot be successfully raised against the successor of the alienor. [p. 475, col. 1]

Where in a suit by an inam certificate-holder to recover possession of lands alienated by his predecessor, the defendant admits the title of the plaintiff's predecessors, but seeks to show that that title was extinguished by adverse possession, Article 144 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act is applicable, and it is for the defendant to show when his alleged possession under the Article became adverse. [p. 475, col. 2.]

Mr. M. Y. Sherief, for the Appellants.

Mr. G. L. Subhedar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This judgment will also dispose of Miscellaneous Appeal Nos. 19-B to 24-B of 1918. The point on which the seven cases have been dealt with is the same. The plaintiff in all cases is the same, though the defendants are different. In 1904 and 1908 the plaintiff was made the inamdar of certain inam lands held under rule 5 of the Berar Inam Rules, that is, as a personal or subsistent grant. He sued for possession of certain portions of the inam lands. The principal defendants in each case are the members of the joint family to which the grant was originally made, and in each case the plaintiff sues for possession. The plaintiff's grandfather died in 1878 and his father in 1904. The defence inter alia was that neither the plaintiff nor his predecessors in-title had been in possession of these lands within 12 years of suit, and thus his claim in each case was barred by limitation. The cases were tried on the preliminary issue "whether the plaintiff's claim is within time". It was admitted for defendants that plaintiff is the inam certificate-holder though there are other persons who have rights in the inam. At a partition these lands came to the predecessors-in title from the contesting defendants.

The first Court came to the conclusion that the plaintiff's argument that this case comes under Article 140 of the Limitation Act was untenable as plaintiff was not a remainderman within the meaning of that Article. It was futher held that there can be adverse possession against inam certificate-holders holding merely a life-interest in the inam. Dealing with the question whether the cases are governed by Article 142 or 144 of the Limitation Act the Judge found that it was admitted by the plaintiff that, though his grandfather was in possession till his death in 1874, neither he nor his father had held possession since. The Court found that Article 142 governed the case and that all the cases were, therefore, barred by time. They were dismissed.

On appeal the learned Additional District Judge finds that as the defendants have admitted the title of the plaintiff's land in suit and having set up a plea of adverse possession for more than 12 years were bound to prove the same. He finds that plaintiff was not a remainderman nor yet a reversioner, the right of reversion being reserved to Government. It confirmed the finding of the first Court that Article 140, Limitation Act, was not applicable. The Judge thinks that unless the possession of defendants, who are members of the family, was proved to amount to an ouster in view of the alleged partition it could not avail them. If they were co-tenants under the law the possession of one co-tenant would not imply an ouster of the other. It held that the suits fell under Article 144 of the Limitation Act, and that the facts of the cases require to be further investigated before the plaintiff can be said to be barred from maintaining the suits. The appeals were allowed and the cases were remanded under Order XLI, rule 23, of the Code of Civil Procedure.

It is here argued for the appellant-defendants that the finding of the lower Appellate Court is wrong, that Article 142 of the Limitation Act applies and as the date of the discontinuance of possession by the plaintiff and his predecessors-in-title is more than 12 years the suits were barred by limitation. In Krishnaji v. Manwar Ali (1), Sir Henry Stanyon, A. J. C., held "An inam granted under rule 5 (2) of the Berar Inam Rules, to a grantee and his direct lineal heirs and undivided brothers, confers upon such grantee, and each of his successors, respectively, an estate for life only. Such an inam cannot be alienated, by any holder for the time being, so as to take it out of the family for whose perpetual maintenance it was made, or so as to defeat, delay, or encumber, the enjoyment thereof by any successor of the alienor." In that case it is further held that the grant conferred upon each successive inamdar must be an estate for life and the prohibition against alienation was absolute. In a later case, Aman Ali v. Imambi (2), an alienation in favour of a member of the family holding an inam granted under rule 5 (2) of the Berar Inam Rules was held to be void after the death of the alienor, and Krishnaji v. Nilkanth (3) is an authority for the proposition that unless and until an inam estate has been converted into an estate of full ownership, its devolution is governed by the Inam Rules, supplemented, as far as necessary and permissible, by the personal law of the inamdar. The law in Berar is that if an inamdar alienates an inam held under rule 5, he having only a life-interest, such an alienation cannot affect his successor, or the next holder of an inam certificate. It seems to me that adverse possession based on the alienation could not be successfully pleaded against the successor of alienor. Trimbak Ramchandra Pandit v. Sheikh Ghulam Zilani Waikar (4), is relied on by the appellants to support the argument that in cases of hereditary or impartible estates not governed by the ordinary rules of inheritance but subject to the condition that Government shall approve of the heir, the rights of successive holders may be barred by adverse possession. Under the inam rules it is not merely a case of Government approving of the heir, but, subject to certain limitations as to succession, Government appoints an inamdar. The case of Radhabai v. Anantrav (5) is distinguishable. It is contended for the respondents that as the plaintiff's right to sue arose when he was given his certificate and as the present suits are all brought within 12 years of that date the defendants' adverse possession as against the plaintiff can only arise from the date of granting the certificate and that Article 144 of the Limitation Act applied Seetaram Brahman v. Rambhaoo Patwari (6). As in the present case the defendants having admitted plaintiff's possession up to 1874 it rested on them to show when the alleged adverse possession under Article 144 commenced : Talshibhai Naranbhai v. Ranchhod Gobar (7), Tarubai v. Venkatrao (8), Secretary of State for India v. Ohelikani Rama Rao (9), and Ganno v. Beni (10). It seems to me that in the present case the title of plaintiff's predecessors being admitted and as defendants seek to show that that title has been extinguished by adverse possession founded on an alleged partition or family arrangement, Article 144 of the Limitation Act is applicable and that the cases have been rightly remanded by the Additional District Judge. I would invite the attention of the first Court to the observations of Sir Henry Stanyon in Krishnaji v. Nilkanth (3), specially those to be found on page 160 of the report.

The result is that the seven appeals governed by this judgment fail and are dismissed with costs. The appellants will pay the respondents' costs in each appeal.

THE OFFICIAL ASSIGNEE OF MADRAS —APPELLANT

S. R. M. M. R. M. RAMASWAMI CHETTY —RESPONDENT.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 171—Banker— Natukkotai Chetty, whether banker, and entitled to banker's lien—Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909), s. 115—Official Assignee, attorney of, whether exempt from payment of stamp duty on copies furnished for appeal.

OFFICIAL ASSIGNEE OF MADRAS v. RAMASWAMI CHETTY.

A Natukkottai Chetty in the Madras Presidency is a "banker" within the meaning of section 171 of the Contract Act, and is, therefore, entitled to a banker's lien on goods bailed to him as security for a general balance of account, unless it is shown that there is a contract to the contrary.

An Attorney of the Official Assignee is entitled to the same privileges as to stamp duty as the Official Assignee has by virtue of section 115 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, and is entitled to obtain copies of orders for purposes of appeal without the payment of any stamp-duty.

An appeal from the order and the judgment of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Coutts-Trotter, dated the 2nd September 1919, passed in the Insolvency Jurisdiction in Insolvency Petition No. 115 of 1917.

Messrs. Short Bewes and Co., for the Appellant.

Messrs. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar and M. Subbaraya Aiyar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the Official Assignee from the order of Coutts-Trotter, J., on a garnishee summons. The first objection taken is that the appeal is filed out of time. The Official Assignee was represented by an Attorney who claimed the same privileges as to stamp-duty as the Official Assignee has by virtue of section 115 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. This was apparently disputed in the insolvency office and a claim was made upon the Official Assignee's Attorney for stamp duty for a copy of the order appealed against and the Attorney ultimately paid it to save time. But the question before us is whether the Attorney, as representing the Official Assignee, has any stamp duty to pay. If not, the appeal is in time. As pointed out by Mr. A. Krishnaswami Iyer, the wording of section 115 is taken from the English practice. But, at the same time, it has to be applied to the practice obtaining in this Court. Now, section 115 says: "No stamp duty or fee shall be chargeable for any application made by the Official Assignee to the Court under this Act, or for the drawing and issuing of any order made by the Court on such application." The application for a copy appears to be either an application made to the Court or an application for the issue of an order made by the Court on his application because the only method of issuing orders which is known to us here is the issue of a copy. Therefore, we are of opinion that the appeal is within time.

The question in the appeal is, whether the garnishee was entitled to a banker's lien in respect of advance made by him on various packets of diamonds desposited with him. The first question is whether he was a banker. Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar has called our attention to an Irish case Shield's Estate In re (1), in which the question was whether the party there was a banker. In this case, we have evidence that this garnishee, who is a Nattukottai Chetty, does banking business and money lending business; that he has customers who deposit money with him and who keep pass books and some with those pass books and draw money; that he pays interest on their deposits, and that he buys and sells hundies and lends money on securities. There is abundant evidence that, in this particular case, the garnishee did carry on banking business, and, further than that, it is perfectly general knowledge, and we have recognised it in Vellayappa Chettiar v. Unnamalai Achi (2) and Annamalai Chetti v. Annamalai Chetti (3), that these Nattukottai Chetties are really the Indian bankers of this part of the country. There is, therefore, no reason why the garnishee in this case should not be entitled to a banker's lien. Under section 171 of the Indian Contract Act, bankers may, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, retain, as a security for a general balance of account, any goods bailed to them; and we agree with the learned Judge that the Official Assignee in this case has failed to show any contract to the contrary, what he has shown is that various advances were made from time to time on the security of deposits of diamonds, and that the diamonds so deposited were redeemed from time to time. But it also appears that loans were made without any deposit of diamonds at all which are included in the same account. The garnishee's affidavit also shows that all the diamonds were the subject of a sort of second pledge to another creditor. There is no reason for differing from the learned Judge in his conclusion that a contract to the contrary has not been proved.

DONGER SINGH—DEFENDANT—NON-APPLICANT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47—Decree-holder depositary of property attached—Detention of property—Suit for damages for wrongful detention, whether maintainable.

In execution of a decree against P. his property was attached and placed in charge of the decree-holder D as sapurdar or depositary. P. applied to the Court for an order directing D. to produce the property. D. alleged that under an oral order of release the property was made over to S, the brother of P. The present suit was brought by P. to recover from D. damages for wrongful detention, but the suit was dismissed on the ground that the matter being within the purview of section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code the suit was not maintainable:

Held, that the suit not having been brought against the decree-holder as such, or against a party to the suit, but being a suit against a depositary, who set up no right to the property deposited, did not fall within the scope of section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, and was maintainable. [p. 478, col.).]

Civil revision against the decree of the District Judge, Nimar, in Appeal No. 93 of 1918, decided on the 11th April 1919, arising out of Civil Suit No. 41 of 1918, decided by the Munsif, Seoni Malwa, on the 4th April 1918.

Mr. W. R. Puranik, for the Applicant.

Mr. S. O. Dutta Chaudhary, for the Non-Applicant.

ORDER.—In Civil Suit No. 283 of 1915 in the Court of the Munsif Seoni Malwa, the present defendant, Dongersingh, obtained an attachment before judgment, and two bullocks and a cart belonging to the present plaintiff Sitaram, were attached and placed in Dongersingh's custody as sapurdar. A decree for Rs. 65 and costs was eventually passed in the latter's favour. In 1916 the decree-holder applied for a warrant of arrest which was transferred for execution to the Munsif of Hoshangabad. The judgment-debtor complained that as the property attached had not been sold, he was not liable to be arrested. The decree holder replied that he had made over the attached property to the judgment-debtor's brother under an oral order for release of the same. The order passed was that the decree-holder should proceed against the property attached before applying for a warrant of arrest. In 1917 the judgment-debtor applied to the Munsif at Seoni Malwa praying that the decree-holder be ordered to produce the attached property for delivery to him and that the decree-holder may take what is due under the decree: The Munsif's order dated the 17th December 1917 recites that "The D file of this record which contained the list of attached property and the order of release (for the register of attached property shows that the property was released) is not available. Under the circumstances, the applicant is referred to a regular suit."

In the present suit Sitaram claims Rs. 150 as compensation for the wrongful detention of his property. His suit was decreed in the first Court, but on appeal an objection was taken that this was a matter coming within the purview of section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code. The District Judge upon this objection has dismissed the suit.

It is conceded before me that no second appeal lies in the case as the suit was cognizable by a Small Cause Court and the amount claimed did not exceed Rs. 500. The case would be registered as a petition under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code.

I think the applicant's contention that the District Judge has failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in him by law is well founded. Even assuming that the remedy lay in an application for execution, the Court in which the suit was instituted being the Court which passed the decree, the plaint should have been treated as an application for execution. The attention of the learned District Judge does not seem to have been drawn to sub-section (2) of section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Dongarsingh happened to be the decree-holder, but he was entrusted with the property as sapurdar or depositary in accordance with the Civil Circular I-31. In Joshi Powar v. Jiwraj Hazarimal (1) it was held that the security given by a depositary for the safe custoday of livestock which has been attached cannot be realized by summary process in execution, a view which was followed in Khetsidas Radhakishan v. Harba Marathe (2) (Civil Revision No. 5 B of 1918). It so happens that the decree-holder was the sapurdar, but the claim of the plaintiff is not against him in his character as decree-holder, nor can it be said that the question raised in this suit is one relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree. The defendant does not claim to hold the property for satisfaction of his decree. His plea is that it has been duly returned to the plaintiff's brother who, he says, is joint with the plaintiff. The plaintiff also does not allege that the decree has been satisfied, but simply denies that the property was returned to his brother, and that the defendant as sapurdar is absolved thereby from all further liability. The claim is, therefore, not against the decree-holder as such or against a party to the suit, but against a depositary who does not set up any right to the property deposited for the purpose of satisfaction of the decree. Such a claim is, in my opinion, outside the scope of section 47, Civil Procedure Code. The lower Appellate Court in refusing to enter into the merits of the case has thus failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it by law. The suit as framed, therefore, did lie.

It has been argued before me on behalf of the non-applicant that, until there is an order releasing the property from attachment, the plaintiff has no right to maintain a suit for wrongful detention by the sapurdar. It is true that the Munsif at Hoshangabad held that the property has not been released from attachment, but a fuller inquiry made by the Munsif at Seoni Malwa shows that, though no formal order releasing the property from attachment has been traced, an entry to this effect has been found in the register of property attached. In view of the plea taken by the defendant in the execution proceedings and of the order passed on the 17th December 1917, it must be taken that the Executing Court no longer holds the property as still under attachment. Whether there was an oral order for the release of the property as alleged by the decree-holder, or whether the property has been duly returned to the applicant's joint brother, I see no bar to the institution of the suit on the ground that it is premature.

The result is, that the application for revision succeeds. The decree of the lower Appellate Court is reversed and the appeal is ordered to be retried by that Court on the merits. Costs incurred in this Court will follow the result. I fix Rs. 10 as Pleader's fee in this Court.

SHAH NAWAZ v. SHEIKH AHMAD.

A person cannot be said to be in adverse possession of the right to redeem immoveable property where the right to possession and actual possession is all the time in the hands of the mortgagee. The fact that he succeeds in getting his name recorded in the revenue register does not confer a title on him. [p. 479, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, at Jullundur, dated the 16th May 1916, affrming that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Jullundur, dated the 30th August 1915.

Mr. Abdul Rashid, for the Appellant.

Mr. Faqir Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts giving rise to this appeal are simple and are fully stated in the judgment of the first Court. One Musammat Tajo, wife of Kasam Shah, mortgaged the land in suit on the 11th of March 1868 to Mehr Ilahi and Aziz-ul-Rahman. The defendants Nos. 1 to 3 are the representatives of the mortgagees and the plaintiff, Shah Nawaz, who claims to be a collateral of Kasam Shah, the husband of Musammat Tajo, has brought this suit for the redemption of the mortgage. Defendant No 4, Musammat Umri, is the daughter of Kasam Shah by another wife, Musammat Bhuri. Defendants Nos. 5 to 8 are said to be among the collaterals of Kasam Shah. Musammat Umri and the latter defendants Nos. 5 to 8 were not originally made party to the suit, but the matter having come up to the Chief Court at a previous stage the case was remanded for trial on the merits with the direction that the suit should be tried after impleading Musammat Umri and defendants Nos. 5 to 8 as defendants in the case. The case has now been tried with the result that the suit has been dismissed by both the Courts below. The plaintiff has preferred this second appeal to this Court.

The plaintiff claimed to be the adopted son of Amir Shah and a collateral of Kasam Shah, the husband of Musammat Tajo, and as such entitled to claim redemption. He also claimed to have acquired ownership of the equity of redemption by adverse possession against Musammat Umri on the ground that his name was mutated in the year 1888 on the death of Musammat Bhuri, the second wife of Kasam Shah. Both these points have been decided against the plaintiff.

In the memorandum of appeal, although exception is taken to the decision of the lower Appellate Court on both these points, yet the question of adverse possession only has been pressed before us. It has been contended that, according to the authorities, it is possible to acquire ownership of the right of redemption by adverse possession. In support of this contention reliance has been placed on the case of Lalla Kanhoo Lal v. Musammat Manki Bibi (1). On the facts of that case it was held that the equity of redemption claimed by the plaintiff was extinguished by adverse possession, inasmuch as the person claiming adverse possession had been receiving rent from the mortgagee as owner. In the present case, beyond the fact that the name of the plaintiff was entered in the revenue register, no manner of possession whether actual or constructive has been established by him. One mode of acquiring and keeping possession is by receipt of rent. In the Calcutta case possession was acquired and retained by receipt of rent. The ruling is, therefore, clearly distinguishable and cannot help the case of the plaintiff. Reliance was also placed on the case of Hubdar Khan v. Gajadhar Chaube (2), Judicial Commissioner's Court, Oudh. In that case the right of ownership was exercised by effecting a transfer of the equity of redemption and it was held, under the special circumstances of the case, that the claimant had acquired full ownership of the equity of redemption by adverse possession. This was a decision by a Single Judge and the facts were quite different from those of the present case. There is, however, a decision of the Allahabad Hight Court which fully applies to the present case [see Kunwar Sen v. Darbari Lal (3)]. On facts almost similar to the facts of the present case it was held that a person cannot be said to be in adverse possession of the right to redeem immoveable property where the right to possession and actual possession is all the time in the hands of the mortgagee. The fact that he succeeds in getting his name recorded in the revenue register does not confer a title on him. The decision in

Lala Kanhoo Lal v. Musammat Manki Bibi (1) above referred to was relied upon in that case also and the learned Judges made the following observations about it in their judgment:—

"This case no doubt is to some extent in favour of the plaintiffs. A number of authorities were referred to including the case of Casborne v. Scarfe (4) and the judgment of Lord Hardwicke is quoted. Lord Hardwicke no doubt pointed out in that case that an equitable estate might be barred by time just as much as a legal estate, and then he refers to and describes an equity of redemption. It must be borne in mind, however, that the equity of redemption where the possession remains with the mortgagor is quite different from the equity of redemption where the possession is with the mortgagee. There can be no doubt that an equitable estate as distinguished from a legal estate can be barred by time but it seems to us impossible that any person can be in possession of the right to redeem a mortgage where, under the terms of the mortgage, the mortgagee is entitled to the actual possession and is in fact in possession thereunder."

We entirely agree with the learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court and hold that the plaintiff could not and did not acquire ownership of the equity of redemption by merly having his name entered in the revenue register. In our opinion the view taken by the Court below was correct and we accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

An alienation by a Hindu widow is only voidable, not void, it is perfectly valid, until it is set aside, and the only persons entitled to dispute the validity of the alienation are the reversioners. [p. 480, col. 2]

Therefore, a mortgagee has no locus standi to resist the claim for redemption of a person who, on the face of it, has a perfectly good title to the equity of redemption granted by a Hindu widow. [p. 481, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decision of First Class Subordinate Judge, A. P., at Satara, in Appeal No. 443 of 1916, confirming the decree passed by the Second Class Subordinate Judge at Wai, in Civil Suit No. 469 of 1915.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The plaintiffs sued to redeem the plaint land. They claimed as the heirs of the donees of one Gopai. She purported to make a deed of gift, Exhibit 40, in favour of one Laxman and others of the equity of redemption in 1863. The defendant claims under a mortgage from one Krishnai. The plaintiffs' suit has been dismissed on the ground that Gopai could not convey to any one more than the right to redeem the mortgage during her lifetime. But it appears to me that the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Raja Modhu Sudan Singh v. Rooke (1) concludes the question regarding the nature of the widow's alienation. It is perfectly valid until it is set aside. In other words, it is only voidable, not void. The question is, who are the persons who are entitled to dispute the validity of such a grant. Clearly the reversioners. In this case the defendant mortgagee resists the attempt of Gopai's representatives to redeem the mortgage, on the ground that the gift of the equity of redemption was void. In my opinion, the mortgagee in a case like this has no locus standi to resist the claim of the person who, on the face of it, has a perfectly good title to the equity of redemption granted by a Hindu widow, and the only person who can dispute the validity of such a grant is the reversioner. It does not matter to the mortgagee who pays him off. Of course, in this case it has been found in the Trial Court that the mortgagee had been paid off long before the date of this suit on taking accounts under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, and, therefore, naturally the defendants are anxious to resist the plaintiffs' claim. In my opinion they are not the persons who could do so, and, therefore, the appeal succeeds, and the plaintiffs are entitled to the relief they sought. As it has been found that the mortgage has long been paid off, the plaintiffs would then be entitled to recover possession of the plaint land. The appellants to have the costs in this Court and the Court below. In the Trial Court they must pay the mortgagee's costs.

HEATON, J.—I agree. The Subordinate Judge who heard the first appeal founded his decision on the case of Jagannath Vithal v. Apaji Vishnu (2). I am not quite sure what the Subordinate Judge supposed was the effect of the decision on which he relied. If he supposed the effect of that decision to be that a gift by a widow is absolutely inoperative, that it is a thing forbidden by law, and, therefore, a thing which can have no legal effect, then I think either he misunderstood the judgment in Jagannath Vithal's case (2) or else that judgment is no longer in accordance with what is well understood to be the law in this part of India. The law, as now understood, is that a widow who takes a life-interest in her husband's property has an interest which she can dispose of. She can bargain with it She can sell it, mortgage it, or give it away. But it is only a life-interest and she cannot do more than finally give or sell or convey her life-interest except in special circumstances. But a life interest she can dispose of, and it follows from this fact, supplemented by what was said by the Privy Council in the case of Raja Mothu Sudan Singh v. Rooke (1), that not only does a widow convey her life interest, but she conveys something that may become a permanent interest, unless it is claimed by somebody competent to claim it. The next reversioner, for example, on the widow's death can get an alienation declared to be no longer of any validity. But any one dealing with a widow, and taking her interest in the property does acquire an interest in that property, and acquires an interest that does not automatically cease to exist merely because the widow dies. It may come to an end as the result of proceedings taken by the reversioner, or possibly in other ways, but it does not automatically cease. Indeed, it continues until it is put an end to in some regular and legal way.

In this case the plaintiffs acquired such an interest, or, rather, their predecessors acquired such an interest. It was in fact a right to redeem a mortgage. Now that right did not automatically cease to exist on the death of the widow, and it has never been put an end to in a legal and regular way, and, therefore, it still exists, and, therefore, I agree in the order proposed by my Lord the Chief Justice.

Appeal allowed.

MESSRS. AL. AR. RM. ARUNACHALAM CHETTIAR AND BROTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Income Tax Act (VII of 1918), ss 3, 9—Interest accruing due but not realized, whether assessable to income-tax.

Money which becomes due to a money-lending firm in the course of its business by way of interest, in the year of account, or the year on the income of which income-tax is to be assessed for the current year, and is not recovered or realized by the firm in that year either in cash or by adjustment in the accounts, does not form part of the assessable income for the year of account, and is consequently not liable to assessment under the Income Tax Act. [p. 485, col. 2; p. 488, col. 2; p. 489, col. 1; p. 495, col. 1; p. 498, col. 2; p. 499, col. 1.]

Case stated under section 51 of the Income Tax Act, VII of 1918, by the Secretary to the Board of Revenue, Income Tax, Madras.

This case came on for hearing on the 7th and 8th of September 1920.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

The Hon'ble the Advocate-General, for the referring authority, the Board of Revenue:—What is taxable as income is the profits accruing, arising or received in British India. That is wide enough to cover claims for interest which have fallen due. To restrict it to income actually realized would lead to subtle evasions of the Income Tax Act. The word 'profits' must not be narrowly construed. The words 'accrues or arises' in section 3 denotes that what is taxable is the income which has fallen due. Cases of exchange or set-off of the income actually earned would otherwise be excluded from the scope of the section. It is not actual receipts in cash that are alone taxable. Income on fixed deposits which are carried in the banker's new accounts, would be excluded from taxation if the section should be read as applying only to cash receipts. In Colquhoun v. Brooks (1) and Spanish Prospecting Co, In re (2) the question as to what is 'profits' is discussed. The words 'accuring or arising' are descriptive of a right to receive profits. An income is liable to taxation as soon as it has accured in British India and to create the liability for income-tax it is not necessary that it should have been actually received by the assesee.

Mr. K. V. Krishnasawmi Aiyar, for the Respondents:—What is taxable under the Act is income. Until a sum of money becomes an income the Income Tax Act can have no application. A fiscal provision must be construed in favour of the subject. Interest may accrue due, but until it is actually received by the assessee it cannot be said to be income or profits. It may turn out to be a bad debt and may have to be written off. It will be hard to tax all unrealized income. What is expected cannot be said to be 'income.' The fact that under section 9 deductions are allowed to be made from profits and the fact that the D. form prescribes for return of 'income received from business' indicate that what is taxable is only realized income. The cases cited by the Advocate-General do no strictly apply. In Colquhoun v. Brooks (3) the profits of a partner had been ascertained and fixed and entered in the firm's books to his credit. The judgment does not lay down that unrealized amounts could be taxed. Spanish Prospecting Co., In re (2) was not an income-tax case at all but was the case of a company in liquidation.

JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, C. J.—The only question argued before us was, whether money which became due to a money-lending firm in the course of its business by way of interest in the year of account, or year on the income of which the tax is to be assessed for the current year, is to be treated as part of the assessable income for that year of account, although it was not recovered or realised by the firm in that year either in cash or by adjustment in the accounts. Income is defined in the "Concise Oxford Dictionary of Current English," adapted from the great Oxford Dictionary, and published at the Clarendon Press, as "Periodical (usually annual) receipts from one's business, lands, work, investments etc; income tax (levied on this)." This is also the legal acceptation of the term, as appears from Stroud's Judicial Dictionary, and numerous definitions, some of which are there cited; while others have been referred to by Mr. K. V. Krishnaswamy in his argument for the petitioners. Lord Selborne's, "income signifies what comes in" is the interest, and, at the same time, sufficiently indicates that the taxation of interest which has not come in is not within the scope of an Income Tax Act. The use of the word 'income' in section 3 of the present Act, on which some reliance is placed in the reference, also seems to me to be entirely in accordance with this view. That section, which appears under the head of "Taxable income" provides in effect that the income which is to be taxed under the Act is income from whatever source derived if it accrues or arises or if it is received in British India; that is to say, income which accrues or arises in British India is taxable even if it is received elsewhere, as, in England; while income which is received in India is taxable even if it accrued or arose out of British India. With this may be compared the more stringent provisions of Schedule D of the English Income Tax Act, 1918, which make residents in the United Kingdom liable in respect of annual profits or gains accruing or arising from any trade or business whether the same be carried on in the United Kingdom or elsewhere. What we are concerned with in the present case is, not the liability of the petitioners to pay income tax which is admitted, but the way in which the income they derive from their business is to be arrived at. That, of course, is to be ascertained by reference to the provisions of the Act regarding the particular class of income, which in this case is "Income derived from business," but, in construing these provisions, and the uniform interpretation which has been put upon the corresponding provisions of the English Acts, it must always be borne in mind that, in its natural and legal meaning, income means periodical receipts, that an income-tax is, therefore, presumably a tax on annual receipts, and that, while it is open to the Legislature, for good and sufficient reason, to enact that debts which have not been paid but are still outstanding, shall be treated as income for the purposes of the Act, the Court would not be justified in attributing such an intention to the Legislature, in the absence of the clearest and most express language. As observed by Warrington, L. J., in Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Blott (4) with reference both to the Super Tax Act and the Income Tax Acts: "It is income and income only which is brought into charge."

The tax on income derived from business, which is the class of income with which we are dealing, has never been charged on the actual receipts of the year, which would involve postponing the levy of the tax to the following year, but has been charged in England on [the average income for the three previous years. The language of rule 1 of Schedule D of the English Income Tax Act, 1918, which has superseded all the earlier enactments dealing with this class of income, requires the tax in respect of trade not otherwise provided for to be "computed on the full amount of the balance of the profits or gains upon a fair and just average of three years ending, etc."

In Coltness Iron Company v. Black (5) Lord Blackburn traces this provision back to the Income Tax Act of 1803, (43 Geo. III, c. 122,) and observes: "Instead of saying that the duty should be imposed on a fair and just average of the amount of the profits for three years, it is imposed 'on the balance' of such profits. I have not been able to discover any difference in the meaning of the two phrases." Now, as I shall show, the uniform construction placed on this provision by the Courts, occurring as it does in an Act the general scope of which is to impose a tax on annual income, which, as already pointed out, means annual receipts, has been that, it refers to the difference between the amount of the receipts of the business for three years and the expenditure incurred in earning them. This interpretation has been accepted by the Legislature, which left this somewhat old fashioned phraseology unaltered for so many years with a full knowledge of the interpretation placed upon it by the Courts and has even reproduced it without material alteration in the new Consolidating Act of 19.8. Fully accepting the view that the tax is to be assessed on the basis of the receipts for three years, the Legislature has confined itself to legislating as to the deductions which are allowable on the other side of the account in order to arrive at the taxable income, and, as will be seen, the Indian Legislature, in the corresponding section 9 of the present Act, has followed exactly the same course.

It would be endless to cite all the cases in which the profits and gains on which the tax is computed under the Schedule have been held to be receipts. In Rhymney Iron Company v. Fowler (6) the Revenue Authorities observed in the case submitted for the opinion of the Court that, "the balance of profits and gains had repeatedly been held in the Exchequer Courts to be the difference between the receipts and the expenditure necessarily incurred in obtaining those receipts." In Gresham Life Assurance Society v. Styles (7) Lord Esher described this balance as, "the difference between what was received in any three years and what it cost to obtain those receipts." The rule was again laid down practically in the same terms by Lords Atkinson, Parker and Parmoor in Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Southendon Sea Estates Co, Ld. (8).

Something has been said about commercial balance sheets, but in Gresham Life Assurance Society v. Styles (7) Lindley, L. J., observed that, 'the rules in Schedule D were very different from the rules ordinarily employed in trade in ascertaining the net profits divisible among those carrying it on". Even so, as pointed out by Sir Francis Gore, the learned Author of the article 'Income Tax' in Volume 16 of Halsbury's Laws of England, who left his practise at the Bar to become Solicitor to the Inland Revenue, and writes with much experience of the subject, the difference between the commercial and the income tax balance sheet is not as to the receipts side but as to the deduction side of the account. He says, at page 650, paragraph 1310: 'The profits of a trade or business would for commercial purposes seem to be the difference between the receipts and the expenses necessary to earn them. In estimating profits, however, for the purpose of income tax the rules specifically prohibit a variety of deductions some of which would probably form proper subjects of deduction in a commercial balance sheet". The same view is taken by Kekewich, J., in Badham v. Williams (9), dealing with the case of two Solicitors going into partnership and getting a good deal of business in the first year for all of which they would only be paid later. In such a case the learned Judge points out there would be no profit or income for the first year for the purpose of income tax or otherwise, though there might be a good prospect of profit or income in furture years against which the partners might be justified in borrowing. Lord Moulton's method of calculating profit or loss for a particular period in Spanish Prospecting Co., In re (2), as the difference between the valuation of the total assets at the beginning and end of the particular period was not made with reference to the Income Tax Acts and could not be applied to them consistently with the authorities to which I have referred. The learned Advocate-General relied upon the decision of the House of Lords in Colquhoun v. Brooks (3) but the only question in that case was, whether a resident in Great Britain was liable, under the language of the English Income-Tax Acts, to be assessed on the profits of a business which arose or accrued in Australia and were not received by him in the United Kingdom. It was held that he was not liable to pay any income-tax on such profits, and no question arose as to the amount at which they were to be assessed. The respondent was apparently willing to pay, if liable, upon a sum of £ 9,000, odd, which probably was not very different from the sum which he would have been liable to pay if assessed regularly under the Schedule on the average profits for the three preceding years.

Coming now to the Indian Statutes, under the Indian Income Tax Act, 1886, trade profits were chargeable under "Class D other sources of income," and, under section 15 (1), the assessment was to be made on the income accruing during the preceding year.

(9) (1902) 86 L. T. 191.

This was admittedly interpreted in practice, and I think rightly, as meaning the receipts of the previous year less the cost of earning them. In the Indian Income Tax Act, 1918 'Income derived from business" forms the fourth of the six classes of income specified in section 5. By section 9 "the tax", that is income-tax, "shall be payable by an assessee under the head 'Income derived from business' in respect of the profits of any business carried on by him". This means, on the amount of the profits, and is, therefore, identical in scope and meaning with the provision in Schedule D of the English Acts as interpreted by Lord Blackburn in the passage to which I have referred. Section 9, which is clearly modelled on Schedule D of the English Act, also follows the Schedule in regulating the deductions which are allowable on the other side of the account, the main difference being that, under section 18 (5) of the Indian Act, the assessment is to be on the aggregate of the assessee's income in the previous year chargeable under the head, and not, as in Schedule D, to be computed upon the average profits for the previous three years. Unpaid debts, whether consisting of principal sums or interest, in so far as they are bad are allowed as deductions under the Statute and do not otherwise come into an income-tax balance-sheet. Having regard to the uniform interpretation placed by the Courts on the corresponding language of Schedule D and accepted by the Legislature, it is not, in my opinion, open to this Court to place a different interpretation on the word "profits" occurring in section 9 of the present Act and to hold, as contended, that they include not only receipts but also claims for interest which have fallen due but have not been paid within the year of account and, therefore, form no part of the income of the year in its natural and legal sense. Such interest when it is paid will necessarily form part of the profits or receipts of the year in which it is paid and I can see no reason for including it in the profits or receipts of an earlier year. If the present Act is found to admit of extensive evasion in India, the remedy, in my opinion, is to be found in an alteration of the law.

Since this judgment was written, the report of the recent decision of the Court of Appeal in National Provident Institution v. Brown (10) has become available. It was there held that the words in Schedule D "profits on discounts" and "profits on interest," in the Income Tax Act must mean profits arising from discounts received on discounting transactions and profits arising from interest received on securities bearing interest, and Lord Sterndale, M. R., observed: "The amount received is, in my opinion, to be taxed in the year in which it is received. Although it may be accruing over several years it only becomes taxable income in the year in which it is received." These words, in my opinion, supply an answer to the reference.

AYLING, J.—The question referred to us is, whether interest which became due to a money lending firm in the year of account but was not realised in cash or by adjustment in the accounts is liable to income-tax under Act VII of 1918.

I think the answer must be in the negative. I find it impossible to hold that, the mere fact that the assessee has become legally entitled to a sum of money as interest justified the inclusion of that sum either as "income" or "profits of the business" within the meaning of section 9 of the Act. It may be found impossible to recover the amount due, and I observe that section 9 contains no proviso for deduction of bad debts, nor is there any provision, as in the English Act, referred to by my brother Napier, for the valuation of doubtful debts. On the other hand, I would emphasize the word "adjustment" which I take to mean a constructive receipt. I agree with Napier, J., that, if a person entitled to receive interest agrees with his debtor to let the money stand in the hands of the debtor either by way of deposit or as a fresh loan or investment that would amount to a constructive receipt or "adjustment," and would justify the inclusion of the sum in question as profits or income, just as much as if it had been received in cash. Such an agreement might be express or implied, but should not, in my opinion, be inferred solely from the failure to take any steps for realisation.

This seems to me the reasonable construction of the Act as it stands. If it involves practical difficulties in working, the only remedy seems to be in amendment of the Act.

(10) (1920) 3 K. B. 35; 89 L. J. K. B 866.

I think it unnecessary to add to the exhaustive discussion of the authorities by my Lord the Chief Justice and my learned brothers.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The question referred to us by the Board of Revenue under section 51 of the Income Tax Act VII of 1918, is formulated vaguely, thus, in paragraph 3 of the letter: whether the interest in question accrued or arose in British India within the meaning of the Act. In paragraph 1 of the letter, "the interest in question" is described as "interest which became due in the year of account but which was not realized in cash or by adjustment in the account." One other sentence in the Board's letter refers to "interest accrued but not realized." Thus, taking the letter as a whole, the question referred to us might be expanded thus: whether the interest which became due in the year of account to a firm of Nattukottai Chettis in British India but which was not realized in cash or by adjustment in the accounts is income which accrued or arose in British India within the meaning of section 3 (1) of the Income Tax Act VII of 1918.

Section 3 (1) uses four verbs in the clause "to all income from whatever source it is (1) derived, if it (2) accrues or (3) arises or (4) is received in British India". The Board of Revenue assumes in its letter that, because in its opinion, the income in question was not "realized" (a fifth verb) the income was not "received" within the meaning of the 4th verb "is received". As regards the verbs "accrues" and "arises," they are both interpreted in the Board's letter as meaning "becomes the subject of a right to receive". (The word "accrues" seems to be the more appropriate word to be used in connection with a periodically recurring right to receive an income which is usually definite in amount while "arises" seems to be used more appropriately and frequently in connection with a business in which rights arise to receive income of a more fluctuating kind and at more uncertain intervals).

Very learned and subtle arguments were advanced before us on both sides based on the various shades of meaning in which the six verbs "derive," "accrue," "arise," "receive", "earn", and "realize," and the two nouns "income" and "profits" (with the grammatical variations of some of these words) have been used in the several English and Indian Income Tax Acts and in the numerous English decisions dealing with the provisions of certain English Acts. It must be admitted that large numbers of words are not used (either in the English language, or in any other language) with such precise and exclusive meanings as to give no room for doubt as to their exact meanings in particular contexts. I may add, with profound respect, that the language used in the English decisions quoted to us is not free in many cases from the ambiguity involved in the use of several of the above words each with different shades of meaning. I was, therefore, not much impressed with arguments based upon the root meanings of such words as "income," "received", etc. In Colquhoun v. Brooks (3) Lord Fitzgerald says: "The case stated further finds 'the amount standing to the credit of Mr. Henry Brooks in the books of the Australian firm, as representing the estimated profits due to him for the year ending April 5, 1885 would, if realized, amount to the sum of £9,219. This sum of £9,219 was arrived at by an estimate and valuation on taking of stock on a certain fixed day, after deducting therefrom the estimate and valuation of the preceding year but, as a matter of fact, only a portion of the amount had been actually realized." After thus stating the case, the learned Lord proceeds: "At first sight, it struck me very strongly that the respondent was chargeable here "(that is, in England) "for income-tax in respect of this sum of £9,219, though not actually received in this country, but as being income arising out of trade carried on in Melbourne, his share of the profits having been actually ascertained and fixed and accruing to him in this sense, that it was so completely under his control that by an act of his will he could have it actually transferred to his bankers here. There would be no hardship, and nothing dangerous or to be deprecated in charging the respondent on his share of profits so ascertained, but the facts of the case do not warrant our doing so. On looking critically at the findings in the case it will be perceived that there is no sufficient finding to warrant us in coming to the conclusion that the profits of the Australian firm have been so ascertained for the year 1885 as to be legitimately the subject of taxation here. It is only put that the profits due to him would if realized amount to £9,219 a sum 'arrived at by an estimate and valuation' on stock taking on some particular day (not stated) and 'deducting therefrom the estimate and valuation of the preceding year' (also made on a day not stated), 'but, as a matter of fact, only a portion of the amount had been actually realized' ——what the meaning of the word 'realized' there is I do not know." Lord Herschell and Lord Macnaghten and Lord Halsbury, (Lord Chancellor) have not in their judgments in this case expressed dissent from the above observations of Lord Fitzgerald. The decision itself depended on the answer to the question, whether the profits or gains arising from the Melbourne business of Brooks fell under the fifth clause of Schedule D of the English Income Tax Act, (5 and 6 Vict , c. 35), section 100, whose language is somewhat peculiar and special and which speaks of sums actually received in Great Britain. It was held by all the Law Lords that mere "arising" or "accruing" of the profits in England will not do, that they must also be received in England, and that the words "arising" and "accruing" do not mean the same thing when used in connection with profits or gains as the word "received". No doubt, the words "accrues" and "arises", in section 3 of the Indian Income Tax Act, cannot have (except in the very special circumstances referred to by Lord Fitzgerald) the same meaning and legal effect as the words "is received". Section 9 (1) of the Income Tax Act uses the words "income derived from business" by an assessee as synonymous with "profits of any business carried on by him". In Colquhoun v. Brooks (1), which is the case which went up from the Court of Appeal to the House of Lords in Colquhoun v. Brooks (3), Fry, L. J., says : "I cannot read the words arising or accruing" as meaning "received by". In Spanish Prospecting Co., In re (2) Fletcher-Moulton, L. J., goes elaborately into the question of what is income from profits of a business and comes to the conclusion (as I understand him) that what is treated as profits by a reasonable auditor auditing the accounts of a business for a particular year might be reasonably treated as "income or profits" accruing or arising or received from the business for the purpose of income tax. The learned Lord Justice deals at length with the meaning of the word "profits" in pages 98* to 101*. He says that the word has a "fundamental meaning" but, in mercantile phraseology, the word may at times bear meanings indicated by the special context which deviate in some respects from this fundamental signification". Then, he says, "the fundamental meaning is the amount of gain made by the business during the year. This can only be ascertained by a comparison of the assets of the business at the two dates," and then the learned Lord Justice proceeds to show how the net assets must be valued in money and "how difficult in practice" it may be "to follow out the strict consequences of the legal conception".

The small hand-book relied on by the Advocate-General, namely, Snelling's Income-tax Practice (see page 15) also takes the same view. I do not intend to refer to the other authorities quoted on both sides. I am not prepared, with the greatest respect, to go as far as Fletcher-Moulton, L. J., and to hold that the income derived from profits (whether the derivation is by way of accruing, arising or being received) should be calculated on the basis of the usual annual "profit and loss" account (subject, of course, to the special provisions of the Income Tax Acts which usually impose limitations on the deductions allowable for repairs of business premises and damage or destruction of building, machinery and plant, depreciation, and so on) and that such income is liable to tax as "received" in the commercial sense. If the opinion of Fletcher-Moulton, L. J., is to be followed, a business might have made no "profits" at all in the popular sense in a particular year (or might have even incurred loss), but because the commercial value of some items on the "assets" side, say, consisting of the business premises and the plant, had risen in price, income-tax might become leviable on "profits" shown on paper in the "Profit and Loss" account. I do not think, having regard to the rule that fiscal Statutes should be construed strictly in favour of the subject, that the Legislature should be held to have intended to levy income-tax even in such a case in the absence of unequivocal language to that effect.

However, even having regard to this canon of strict construction, I am of opinion that profits which were received in a year include not only money actully received but money which (in the language of Lord Fitzgerald) had accrued or arisen, in the sense that it was so completely under the assessee's control, "that by an act of his will he could have it actually transferred to his bankers." (The words "accrue" and "arise" are no doubt usually confined to moneys which are due but not received, and hence are used as alternatives to "received" in section (3). See also Secretary to the Commissioner, Salt, Abkri and Separate Revenue, Madras v. Ramanathan Chetty (11). While moneys accrued which cannot be immediately, in a business sense, received at the will and pleasure of the assessee ought not to be said to have accrued in such a manner as to have the same legal effect as moneys received, I think that an assessee should not be allowed to evade payment of income tax on interest and other moneys which have become due to him in such a manner that he could at pleasure receive them for reinvestment or otherwise or could get into his hands at once or within the reasonable time usually necessary to cash a cheque on a banker or which he knows will be treated according to the usual course of business by his banker-debtor as reinvested by him (the assessee). Whether any such profits in the shape of interest or other moneys had become due to the assessee in this immediately available manner and whether his omission to show them in his accounts as profits was consequently attributable to his intention to commit a fraud upon the intome-tax revenue, are questions of fact which must be decided in each case on the facts of that case and on the custom and practice of the assessee's and his debtor's business arrangements. The argument of Mr. K. V. Krishnaswami Aiyar that only those interest moneys which have become entered as cash receipts in the assessee's accounts or which have actually been placed in his hands, can be considered in arriving at his income for purposes of taxation goes, in my opinion, to the other extreme. If an assessee chooses to leave his interest income with his customer who is also a banker and does not bring it into his accounts as income on the date it falls due but he knows that his banker-customer would credit the money in his accounts in favour of the assessee and allow him interest thereon from the date of its accrual or if the assessee could at any time draw upon the customer for that money and obtain actual receipt of that sum in due course of business, I think that such interest-income has accrued and arisen of that year in such a manner that the legal effect is the same as if it had been "received" by him and that it is liable to be charged income tax thereon. It is well-known that deposits of moneys carrying interest are made with a Nattukottai Chetty firm not only by other Nattukottai Chetty firms but by gentlemen earning rich incomes in other professions. Take a case, where Rs. 10,000 a year is the year's interest-income from such an investment with A., a Nattukottai Chetty firm, by B., another Nattukottai Chetty firm, or a rich professional gentleman who has retired from his profession. A. at the end of that year adds Rs. 10,000, to the credit of B. in his accounts but B. makes no entry in his accounts of the receipt of that money, B. has some lands which yield him sufficient for the maintenance of his family and allows the interest to accumulate with the A. Chetty, drawing only Rs. 500 or Rs. 1,000 out of the interest annually either for expenses or in order that no question of limitation might arise (assuming that there is any risk of that question arising in such cases.) Is B. to escape taxation on the Rs. 10,000 income, though that income is being credited in his favour and he knows that he could receive it in cash at any time he wishes?

My answer to the question, therefore, is that the interest which became due to a firm of Nattukottai Chetties in British India which was not realized in cash or by adjustment of accounts would be such income as would be liable to be taxed under the Income Tax Act VII of 1918 if such interest-money had become due to the assessee in the manner and in the sense that it was so completely under his control that, by an act of his will, he could receive it in cash without greater trouble than is involved in drawing money from his bankers. If it has not become due in that sense, it is not such an income as would be liable to payment of tax.

Of course, I agree with my Lord that it is advisable that the Legislature should periodically try to remove anomalies and difficulties of interpretation by amendments of the Act expressed in clear and definite language.

NAPIER, J.—This is a reference under section 51 of the Income Tax Act VII of 1918 which empowers the Chief Revenue Authority if, in the course of any assessment, a question has arisen with reference to the interpretation of any of the provisions of this Act or any rule thereunder, to draw up a statement of the case and refer it, with its own opinion thereon, to the High Court. The question referred to us is as to the liability to tax under the Act of interest which became due on the year of account, but which was not realised in cash or by adjustment in the accounts. The statement further sets out that Messrs. A A. R. Arunachella Chetty and Brothers, a Nattukottai Chetty firm, carry on business in money-lending and other trade in several places in British India; that they were assessed for the year 1918-19 by the Collector of Ramnad on the amount of their net income in British India which, according to the assessing authority, should include interest which had accrued to them during the year of account, but had not actually been realised.

The relevant sections of the Act, for the purpose of this reference, are as follows:—section 3 (1) provides that "this Act shall apply to all income from whatever source it is derived if it accrues or arises or is received in British India," etc. Section 5 is the next section: "The following classes of income shall be chargeable to income tax in the manner hereinafter appearing:" subsection (4) "Income derived from business," The next section in section 9: "The tax shall be payable by an assessee under the head of, 'Income derived from business' in respect of the profits of any business carried on by him." Clause (2) "such profits shall be computed after making the following allowances in respect of sums paid or, in the case of depreciation, debited, namely," and the payments and debits allowed are set out in nine sub-paragraphs. Then comes section 14: "The aggregate amount of an assessee's income chargeable under each (of the heads mentioned in sections 6 to 11 shall be the taxable income of the assessee." Reading these sections together, it is, to my mind, clear that the form in which the reference is made is incorrect. It seems to me that we are not really asked any question about income as defined in the Act. What the reference requires is, a ruling from us as to whether a certain sum should have been entered in the account on which the profits, within the meaning of section 9, should be computed. This mistake has led to a misapprehension of a decision of the English Court which I shall refer to later. Nor have we to consider any question arising under section 3, for, we are not asked to say whether the income derived from business has accrued or arisen or been received within the meaning of section 3. It is, therefore, to my mind, not strictly necessary for us to consider the meaning of the word (income), as used in the Act, for income for the purpose of section 3, is income derived from business as defined under section 9, to be ascertained under that section.

The question is, how are the profits of the business carried on by the firm in question to be computed so as to make the resultant income derived from business chargeable under the Act? It is first necessary to see what assistance we get from section 9 itself; and it is to be noted that no part of the section lays down what is to be put on the credit side. The whole of clauses 1 to 9 are concerned with amounts on the debit side. Of those clauses, clauses 1 to 5 are payments which are allowed; clause 6 is depreciation which may be debited; clause 7 is a resultant of depreciation and sale price of buildings, machinery and plant; clause 8 is land revenue and local or municipal taxes paid; and clause 9 is, what may be described as, an omnibus clause for other expenditure incurred solely for the purpose of earning such profits which is in fact the main expenditure. For the credit side, as I have said, there are no statutory instructions, and it is with reference to the credit side item that we are asked to advise the Board. So far for the Act.

Then, as to the rules made under the Act, section 43 gives power to the Governor.

General-in-Council, and by delegation to the Local Government, to make rules for the ascertainment and determination of any class of income. I have examined them and find that there is no assistance to be procured from the rules.

Further, there are no decisions of any Courts in India to which our attention has been drawn which could throw any light on this subject, and we are driven to English decisions under the English Income Tax Acts. These Acts are in pari materia, but as their provisions are somewhat different, it is necessary, before examining the decisions, to see what the Acts provide. The Acts are the Income Tax Act of 1842, as amended by the Income Tax Act of 1853. The relevant sections of these Acts are section 2 and Schedule D of (16 and 17 Vict., c. 35) which has been substituted for the corresponding section and Schedule (5 and 6 Vict., c. 35). One curious feature of the Acts is that though they are called Income Tax Acts, the phrase "Income-tax" is never used in any part of the Act, nor is the word "income" applied to the resultant to be charged though in the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888, the tax payable under Schedule D is called income-tax. What is granted to Her Majesty under these Acts are "duties on profits arising from property, professions, trades and offices. Section 2 of the later Act provides that, "for the purpose of classifying and distinguishing the several properties, profits and gains for and in respect of which the said duties are by this Act granted, and for purposes of the provisions for assessing, raising, levying and collecting such duties respectively, the said duties shall be deemed to be granted and made payable yearly for and in respect of the several properties, profits and gains respectively described or comprissed in the several Schedules contained in the Act"; and the Schedules are set forth. Schedule D is the relevant Schedule. It applies to trade and professional profits, which correspond to clauses 4 and 5 of section 5 of the Indian Act, namely, income derived from business and professional earnings. The language of Schedule D is as follows: For and in respect of the annual profits or gains arising or accruing to any person residing in the United Kingdom from any profession, trade, employment or vocation, etc." What is chargeable here, therefore, is "annual profits or gains" just as under section 9 of the Indian Act, "profits of any business." The further provisions of the Income Tax Act of 1853, with respect to Schedule D, are sections 48, 49 and 50, of which section 50 is alone of importance. This section provides that "In ascertaining, estimating, or assessing the profits of any person chargeable under Schedule (D) of this Act, either upon appeal or otherwise, it shall be lawful to estimate the value of all doubtful debts due or owing to such person; and, in the case of bankruptcy or insolvency of the debtor, the amount of the dividend which may reasonably be expected to be received on any such debt shall be deemed to be the value thereof and the duty chargeable under the said Schedule shall be assessed and charged upon the estimated value of all such doubtful debts accordingly." I can find nothing in the Indian Act which at all corresponds to this section, but it is one to be borne in mind in considering what are "profits" under Schedule D of the English Act, for it seems to presume that debts due and owing shall be items in an account for the purpose of arriving at profits and gains and permits the assessee to value them in his account at a figure lower than the face value where they are doubtful debts. Returning to the principal Act, section 100 contains the rules for assessing and charging duties under Schedule D. Section 100 provides that, "the duties hereby granted, contained in the Schedule marked (D), shall be assessed and charged under the following rules, which rules shall be deemed and construed to be a part of this Act, and to refer to the said last mentioned duties" Under this section, the duties are provided for in respect of trade, in what is called 'First case,' and in respect of professions, in what is called 'Second case'. The first rule in the first case is as follows:—"The duty to be charged in respect thereof shall be computed on a sum not less than the full amount of the balance of the profit or gains of such trade on an average of three years." The third rule is: "In estimating the balance of profits and gains chargeable under Schedule (D), or for the purpose of assessing the duty thereon, no sum shall be set against or deducted from or allowed to be set against or deducted from, such profits or gains, on account of any sum expended for various purposes set out, nor on account of any capital withdrawn, nor on account or under pretence of any interest which might have been made on sums if laid out for interest, nor for any debts except bad debts nor for certain other matters set out in the rule." It is to be noted that the method of computing profits here is the exact opposite of that employed in the Indian Act. Section 9 of the latter, as already pointed out, provides what may be debited for the purpose of computing profits, whereas this rule under section 100 of the English Act provides what may not be debited. But the material for assessment after the proper deductions is the same in both cases. It is "the balance of profits" or gains in the English Act; "the profits of any business" in the Indian Act. And, as we are not asked to advise on any question of a debit item it is unnecessary to examine the differences between the English and the Indian Act on this point. Apart, too, from section 50, there is no instruction in the English Act as to what must be put on the credit side of the account.

Turning now to the cases, I will first deal with the decisions under the Income Tax Acts. The first relevant case is the Mersey Docks v. Lucas (12). This was a reference by the Commissioners, under powers analogous to those under which the reference in our case is made. The particular point under consideration need not be considered but in his judgment the Lord Chancellor, at page 903, states that the question arises under Schedule A of the Act, and enters into a discussion as to what are profits received from certain properties. He lays down that the manner in which those profits were to be disposed of under the Private Act was not a matter for consideration but that profits of the concern must be "all the net profits of the concern after deducting the necessary outgoings without which those proceeds could not be earned or received." Again, on the same page, he says that the word "profits" as here used, means the "incomings of the concern after deducting the expenses of earning and obtaining them." Again, at page 906, he uses the same phrase. Lord Blackburn, who concurred, states that the same result will arise from the construction of Schedule D. We have, therefore, here a definition of "profits" for income-tax purposes, "the net proceeds of the concern or the incomings of the concern after deducting the outgoings necessary for earning them or the expenses of earning and obtaining them." It is obvious that this definition of 'profits' will apply, whatever be the method under which the proper debts are to be ascertained.

The next case I wish to refer to is Colquhoun v. Brooks (1) and I do so not because I think it has any bearing on the question of profits but because it has been referred to by the Boad of Revenue, and, in my opinion, a wrong inference drawn from the language used in it. The Board of Revenue, in their reference, say: "The question to be decided is, whether the interest in question accrued or arose in British India," and go on, "the words 'accrued or arose' have nowhere been defined in the Act but in the judgment of Fry, L. J., reported in Colquhoun v. Brooks (1) these words were interpreted as general words descriptive of a right to receive." It is true that the decision in this case, which eventually went to the House of Lords, did turn on the question as to whether a certain income "accrued or arose in the United Kingdom." But that is not the point in this case at all, as I have already said, and the view of Fry, L. J., on the construction of the words 'accrued or arose' has no bearing whatever on this question. The words which the Court was construing were words of Schedule D, "arising or accruing to any person", etc., and, with reference these words, Fry, L. J. said "the tax is in respect of 'profits' or 'gains' or 'arising,' or 'accruing'. I cannot read those words as meaning 'received by'. I think that the words 'arising or accruing' are general words descriptive of a right to receive profits." That is the sole question decided by Fry, L. J., and it is obvious that it has nothing to do with the question of profits. The case has really no bearing on the question before us.

The next case is Russell v. Town and County

(12) (1882) 8 A. C. 891; 53 L. J. Q. B. 4; 49 L T. 781; 32 W. R. 24; 48 J. P. 212.

Bank (13). That was a decision as to the propriety of a certain debit for rent of business premises which contained dwelling accommodation for the Bank agent. The only point of importance in this case is the definition of 'profits'. Lord Herschell, at page 424, says, "The profit of a trade or business is the surplus by which the receipts from the trade or business exceed the expenditure necessary for the purpose of earning those receipts". Lord Fitzgerald says: "Profits, I read on authority, to be the whole of the incomings of a concern after deducting the whole of the expenses of earning them that is, what is, gained by the trade". The learned Lord is here obviously referring to the language of Lord Selborne in Mersey Docks v. Lucas (12).

The next case is Gresham Life Assurance Society v. Styles (14). In that case the learned Lord Chancellor stated that, "the word 'profits' is to be understood in its natural and proper sense, in a sense which no commercial man would misunderstand, and that the framers of the Act could never have assumed that the cost of the articles sold to the trader should not be taken into account before you arrive at what was intended to be the taxable profits". Lord Herschell said that the words 'profits and gains' should be construed according to their ordinary significance and says, in another passage, "the only thing to be regarded is the fact of expenditure and the purpose for which it had been incurred".

Another case referred to in argument was the Gresham Life Assurance Society v. Bishop (15). This turned on the construction of the words, "Received in the United Kingdom" within the meaning of the Income Tax Act of 1842, Schedule D. (4th case) which allows duty to be charged in respect of interest arising from foreign securities on the full amount of the sums which have been or will be received in Great Britain. It is not a decision on profits, but it is of value on the meaning to be given to the word 'receipts' and I will deal with it later.

So far, therefore, we have nothing but receipts or incomings to be put on the credit side. So far, then, for the Income-tax cases. The decisions appear to me to be all based on the assumption that an assessee should prepare a statement of receipts or incomings setting against them the outgoings necessary for earning receipts including also depreciation to the extent permitted by the Act and that this account should be annually prepared and be the basis on which the taxable income should be ascertained.

It was suggested, however, by the learned Advocate-General that such an account was not the proper method of ascertaining the profits and he has very strongly relied on the judgment of Fletcher-Moulton, L. J., in Spanish Prospecting Co., In re (2). In this case two persons agreed to serve the Company at a fixed salary which they were not to be entitled to draw except out of the profits. The question was, what were the profits. It arose in liquidation and the dispute was with regard to certain debentures which had been included in the yearly balance sheets of the Company as unvalued assets. In liquidation, the debentures realised a sum of over three thousand pounds and the claimants contended that these were undrawn profits arising from the business of the Company out of which they were entitled to be paid. In the course of his judgment, the learned Lord Justice discussed the meaning of word 'profits,' and says that, "the word 'profits' implies a comparison between the state of a business at two specified dates usually separated by an interval of a year." The fundamental meaning is the amount of gain made by the business during the year. This can only be ascertained by a comparison of the assets of the business at the two dates and the increase of the assets at the later date represents in strictness the profits of the business during the year in question. "To render the ascertainment of profits of a business of practical use, it is evident that the assets, of whatever nature they may be, must be represented by their money value. But, as a rule, those assets exist in the shape of things or rights and not in the shape of money. The debts owed to the Company may be good, bad, or doubtful, and profits may exist in kind as well as in cash." The learned Advocate General now relies on these statements as indicating that the debts good, bad or doubtful, must be shown on the credit side of an account. Now, the first observation, I would make about this case is, that the learned Lord Justice states, on page 101, that "the actual profit and loss of accounts of the Company do not in any way bind the Crown in arriving at the tax to be paid" and, therefore, clearly he was not considering the profits as meant in an income-tax sense. This method of computing profits is, in the language of the learned Lord Justice, totally unsuited for computation for income-tax purposes. The balance-sheet must, of course, contain a valuation of the whole of the property of the undertaking including, as stated by the learned Lord Justice, debts owing to the Company good, bad or doubtful. It must also include debts accruing due, and on the debit side must be placed debts considered bad or doubtful. One may venture to doubt whether many of the trading companies do in fact prepare their statements of profits for the year in the manner suggested by the learned Lord Justice. It is admittedly not the method contemplated by the Companies Acts. Article 106 of the Standing Articles of Association provided in table A of the First Schedule of the Companies Consolidation Act (1908) provides that, "once at least in every year the Directors shall lay before the Company in general meeting a profit and loss account for the period since the preceding account" and it is common knowledge that this account is an account of the actual transactions of the Company during the preceding year. Article 7 provides that, "no dividend shall be paid otherwise than out of profits;" and the learned author of Buckley's Law and Practice under the Companies Acts states the law to be as follows:—'The profits of a business' "are the excess of revenue receipts over expenses properly chargeable to revenue account."... "For the purpose of ascertaining profit available for the dividend, capital account and revenue account are to be treated as separate accounts. The credit balance of a revenue account is applicable for dividend." This language very nearly reproduces the words used by the learned Lords in the Income-Tax cases above referred to, and the learned Author relies strongly on the case of Lee v. Neuchatel Asphalte Co (16) That was a decision of the Court of Appeal, and the Court held there that there was nothing in the Companies Acts to prohibit a Company from calculating its profits and paying a dividend out of them without providing a sinking fund to meet depreciation in the value of wasting property, such as a mine. Lindley, L. J., draws a clear distinction between a capital account and a revenue account, and, speaking of the latter, says: "If your earnings are less than your current expenses, you must not cook your accounts so as to make it appear that you are earning a profit, and you must not lay your hands on your capital to pay dividend. But it is, I think, a misapprehension to say that, dividing the surplus after payment of expenses of the produce of your wasting property is a return of capital in any such sense as is forbidden by the Act." It is clear, therefore, that both Lindley, L. J, and the very eminent editor of Buckley's Law and Practice under the Companies Act, regard a revenue account as the proper basis for the ascertainment of profits under the Companies Acts.

The same view was expressed in the case of Badham v. Williams (9) by Kekwich, J. There the question arose on a partnership and the learned Judge points out the difference between the balance-sheet and the profit and loss account with regard to money accruing due but not actually received. He takes the case of six months' bills in payment for goods not maturing until the year after that for which the account was being made up and asks: "Are such bills to be considered so much cash for the purpose of the business of the year?" and answers: "For the purposes of the balance sheet, no doubt, they would estimate that there is an outstanding asset which they hope to realise; but for the purpose of ascertaining the profit and loss it seems to me that they must consider only what they have received, because those bills will only come in when met at maturity" in the next year. It is to be noted that in this case the learned Judge refers specifically to the profit and loss for the purposes of Income-Tax returns and says that "the Income-Tax return is a return of the actual receipts less such expenditure as is chargeable against those receipts." It seems to me that "profit" in a commercial sense differs very little from the meaning given to it in the Income-Tax cases quoted above, though there may be debits which are not permissible under the provisions of Income Tax Acts. I can see no practical difference between "the receipts or incomings after deducting the necessary outgoings without which profits could not be earned or received or after deducting the expenses of earning and obtaining them" and "the excess of revenue receipts over expenses properly chargeable to revenue account", as stated by the learned author, to be the profits of a business under the Companies Acts.

The net result of all these cases is that, on the credit side must be put receipts or incomings, and it only remains to consider what these words cover.

That actual cash need not be received is, of course, obvious. The receipt of any form of negotiable security would, of course, be receipt but the more difficult question is whether any, and if so, what form of constructive receipt is a receipt for the purposes of the Act? In Gresham Life Assurance Society v. Bishop (15) this very question was dealt with by Lord Lindley. He states as follows, at page 296, "First, let us consider what is meant by the receipt of a sum of money. My Lords, I agree with the Court of Appeal that a sum of money may be received in more ways than one, e. g., by the transfer of a coin or a negotiable instrument or other document which represents and produces coin, and is treated as such by business men. Even a settlement in account may be equivalent to a receipt of a sum of money, although no money may pass; and I am not myself prepared to say that what amongst business men is equivalent to a receipt of a sum of money is not a receipt within the meaning of the Statute which your Lordships have to interpret" (i. e., Income Tax Act). Then, referring to the Scottish case of New Mexico Co. (17), the same learned Lord states, on page 298, that "that case was very peculiar. Money received by the Company's agents abroad was clearly and unmistakably treated by the Company as remitted to and received by it here, and money here was treated by the Company as remitted abroad in exchange for it. The exchange was effected by a book entry; but that entry was the business mode of carrying out cross-remittances which it would have been unbusinesslike and really childish to have effected in any other way." Applying this last observation, apart from the complication introduced by the word 'abroad', it seems to me to come to this, that, as between two parties, where money has to be paid and received by both, an exchange effected by a book entry would amount to payment and receipt. In Larocque v. Beauchemin (18) their Lordships had to construe the words, "paid in cash", and in the judgment of the Board their Lordships relied on and applied the decision in Spargo's case, Harmony and Montague Tin and Copper Mining Company, In re (19). That was a decision in liquidation of the Spargo's case Harmony and Montague Tin and Copper Mining Company, In re (19) and turned on the meaning of the phrase "payment in cash" within section 25 of the Companies Act, 1867. Spargo subscribed for 31 shares in the Company and, instead of paying in full in cash, was credited in the books of the Company with a sum of £ 2,176 for the purchase of the lease of the mine in respect of the amount of £ 2,176, part of the amount due by him for his purchase of shares. James, L. J., laid down as follows: "Anything which amounted to what would be in law sufficient evidence to support a plea of payment, would be a payment in cash within the meaning of this provision": and Mellish, L. J., reiterated what he had stated in Pen Allt Silver Lead Mining Co., In re Fothergill's case (20): "If the circumstances relied on would in an action for the money due upon shares be evidence only in support of a plea of accord and satisfaction, this section would prevent their being a good defence; but that if they would support a plea of payment, then the 25th section did not prevent their being a good defence". He then continues, "nothing is clearer than that if parties account with each other, and sums are stated to be due on one side, and sums to an equal amount due on the other side on that account and those accounts are settled by both parties, it is exactly the same thing as if the sum due on both sides had been paid. Indeed, it is a general rule of law, that in every case where a transaction resolves itself into paying money by A. to B. and then handing it back again by B. to A., if the parties meet together and agree to set one demand against the other, they need not go through the form and ceremony of handing the money backwards and forwards." This form of constructive receipt is, therefore, clearly permissible. So, if a person entitled to receive money agrees with his debtor to let the money stand in the hands of the debtor, either by way of deposit or as a fresh loan of investment, that would, in my opinion, amount to receipt. No transaction of this character is indicated in the case submitted to us and I am, therefore, of opinion that the amount in question need not be taken into account by the assessee for the purposes of his statement of profits and gains and is not, therefore, chargeable under the Act.

KRISHNAN, J.—The question referred to us for our decision by the Revenue Board, under section 51 of the Income Tax Act VII of 1918, is, whether a person carrying on a money-lending business is liable to be assessed to income-tax on interest which has accrued due to him in the year of account but which has not been realised by him by payment or adjustment in the accounts or otherwise. In other words the question is, whether such interest becomes liable to taxation on accrual as the learned Advocate-General contends for the Government or only on its realization as the learned Vakil for the assessee contends.

The decision turns upon the construction to be placed on the relevant sections of the Act. The first section on which the learned Advocate-General insisted on is section 3, clause (1), and it is an important provision to consider, as it defines the scope and applicability of the Act. That clause says: "Save as hereinafter provided, this Act shall apply to all income from whatever source it is derived if it accrues or arises or is received in British India or is, under the provisions of this Act deemed to accrue or arise or to be received in British India" This clause defines the scope of the Act, and unless a sum of money can be brought within the words of the clause, I think it cannot be taken into consideration for purposes of taxation under the Act. A lengthy argument was addressed to us by the learned Advcoate General about the meaning of this clause but to my mind its meaning is perfectly plain. It makes the Act applicable to all incomes which would fall under one or the other of the heads mentioned in the latter part of the clause. Not only incomes which accrue and are received in British India, which form the bulk of taxable incomes, but also incomes which accrue in British India but are received outside British India and incomes which though accrued outside are received here are all brought by it within the purview of the Act and become taxable under the taxing sections. Sections 31 and 33 are examples of the former class of incomes. The Advocate-General tried to persuade us to read the clause as implying that an income becomes liable to taxation as soon as it has accrued in British India, and contends that it is not necessary that it should be received by the assessee at all to create the liability, I think his argument is untenable as it entirely ignores the governing word in the clause "income". Till a sum of money can be said to have become an "income" it is clear to me that the Act will not apply to it.

I fully agree that the words "accrues or arises" do not imply a receipt at all but only a right to receive, as pointed out by Fry, L. J., in Colquhoun v. Brooks (1). The two words seem to denote the same idea but one is, perhaps, more appropriate than the other in particular cases. Their meaning is, as observed by the Full Bench in Secretary to the Commissioner, Salt, Abkari and Separa Revenue, Madras v. Ramanathan

Chetty (11) "to become a present or enforceable right to demand". In fact, the words are used in contradistinction to the words "is received" in the clause itself. Though this is so, it is clear from the section that, before the Act can apply, what has so accrued or arisen must have become an income. The section cannot be read as applying the Act to a sum of money which has become payable to a person but which has not become his "income" yet. That the Act applies only to "incomes" is made further clear by the heading of the Chapter, which says "Taxable income" and by section 5, which says "the following classes of income shall be chargeable to income-tax" and also by the taxing section, section 14, which also speaks of taxable income

The question then is, what really is the meaning of the term "income" as used in the Act, and whether it involves the idea of receipt in some form or other or not. The word is not defined in the present Act, though the expressions "agricultural income" and "total income" are defined in section 2. Those definitions, however, throw no light on the exact connotation of the term "income". In the absence of a statutory definition, we must take its ordinary meaning in the English language as its proper legal meaning as well for construing the Act. The learned Chief Justice has adopted the meaning given to it in the concise Oxford Dictionary, viz., "periodical (usually annual) receipts from one's business, lands, work, investments, etc." I think that definition is correct and I adopt it. That this is also its legal acceptation is clear from Stroud's Judicial Dictionary. I think the word clearly implies the idea of receipt, actual or constructive. We cannot speak of a sum of money which is expected to be paid as an income; however well founded the expectation may be, it is still only an expectation. There is nothing in section 3, or anywhere else in the Act, inconsistent with this meaning of the term. In the case of incomes taxable at the source under the Act, the taxation is made simultaneously with the payment of receipt of the amount due by the payee when it becomes his income; the case is thus not against the view I am taking of the meaning of "income". What exactly would amount to a receipt to make a sum due to a person his income, is a different question and I shall deal with it later. The present case, however, refers to a particular kind of income from a money-lending business; section 5, clause (4), which makes income derived from business chargeable to income-tax and section 9, clause (1), which says that "the tax shall be payable by an assessee under the head of 'income derived from business' in respect of profits of any business carried on by him" apply to it. The Advocate-General argued that, whatever implication there might be in the term income, the term "profits" as used in section 9 included earned or estimated, but unrealised, profits as well and, in the case of a money-lending business, it included interest accrued due but unrealised; and he relied strongly on the case of Colquhoun v. Brooks (3), and the case in Spanish Prospecting Co. In re (2), in support of his argument.

Before considering the cases cited I may observe that as, by section 3, the Act is made applicable only to incomes and as that term implies, as I think, a realisation of the sum due, it is difficult to hold that by the use of the expression "profits" in section 9 the Legislature has extended the scope of the Act to unrealised sums as well in the case of business ventures, which would be the result of accepting the Advocate-General's argument. No doubt, the term "profits" is not a term of very precise and definite significance. It is used in different meanings in different connections. The profits of a business are ascertained in various ways for various purposes. But, as the learned Chief Justice has shown in his judgment, the word has always been understood in England for income-tax purposes to mean the difference between the receipts of a business and the expenditure incurred in earning them. I need not refer to the authorities as he has done so. This meaning is consistent with our Act and will avoid the difficulty I have pointed out at the beginning of this paragraph and I think it should be accepted by us. The ordinary meaning of the term as used for commercial purposes in ascertaining profits as on a revenue account is also much the same, the difference in ascertainment of profits for income-tax and commercial purposes being only in the ascertainment of the net profits, and not the total profits. The deductions allowable for income tax purposees to arrive at net taxable profits are only those allowed by the Act and are not the same as would ordinarily be allowed in a commercial account; but the credit side is the same in both.

The term "profits," as used in section 9, does not, in my opinion, properly apply to unrealised amounts at all. The fact that some firms include estimated profits in their balance-sheets for payment of dividends to share-holders is of no importance in this connection; when they so deal with unrealised profits they are really substituting for such a purpose the capital in their hands for profits hoping to recoup it from profits when they are realised. Such practice cannot affect the proper meaning of the term "profits," particularly in connection with income-tax purposes.

Our attention has not been drawn to any provision of the Act to show that the term "profit" as used in it is intended to include earned but unrealised profits. The deductions allowed to be made under section 9 from profits lend no support to the Advocate-General's contention. On the other hand, the D. form prescribed under the Act for returns to be submitted by assessees refers to "income received from business" and the use of the word 'received' supports the view I am taking.

I shall now turn to the case of Colquhoun v. Brooks (1) cited by the Advocate-General. Admittedly, the decision in the case has no bearing on the present case, but certain observations of Lord Fitzgerald are relied on which are no doubt not dissented from by the other learned Lords. The facts of the case are set out by Napier, J., and the relevant passages by Sadasiva Aiyar, J., and I need not repeat them. Lord Fitzgerald was dealing with the income of Mr. Brooks and not with that of his firm. Though the firm had not apparently realized the profits, it would appear from the judgment that it had taken such profits into consideration in ascertaining the profits due to each partner and, so far as Mr. Brooks was concerned, his share of the profits had been actually ascertained and fixed at £ 9,219, and that amount was apparently entered in the books of the firm to his credit so that, as his Lordship observes, "it was completely under his control that by an act of his will he could have it actually transferred to his bankers here (in England)." Apparently, his Lordship treated the money as received in Melbourne and was, at first sight, inclined to treat it as received in England also, as Mr. Brooks could have it transferred to England at his will and pleasure, but ultimately his Lordship held, with the other learned Lords, that the sum could not be treated as received in England. That I understand to be the effect of his judgment; I do not understand his Lordship to have laid down that a person was liable to pay income-tax on a sum not realised by him. His Lordship does not say so, and there is nothing in what His Lordship says that even implies it. The case, therefore, does not support the Advocate-General in any way.

Much reliance was also placed by the learned Advocate-General on the judgment of Moulton, L. J., in Spanish Prospecting Co., In re (2), and his observations on what constituted profits of a business. That facts of this case are set out by Napier, J., and I need not repeat them. The learned Lord Justice, it will be observed, was not dealing with an Income-Tax case at all nor even with a case of a Company which was a going concern, but with the case of a Company which was in liquidation. The ascertainment of profits of such a Company is clearly different from their ascertainment in the case of a going concern for revenue purposes, or for income tax purposes. In the former case one would no doubt take the total value of the property of the Company when wound-up, including the increased value of the stock in trade and other properties belonging to the Company and all the realisable outstandings, and deduct therefrom the capital invested to ascertain the total profits of the venture. As the Company had come to a stop the calculation of profits had to be made on the footing that all its assets and outstandings had been realised. Manifestly, such a method cannot apply in making up a revenue account of a going concern to ascertain profits. In such an account the unearned increment resulting from a rise in prices in the market never forms a proper item at all ; it is never entered as an item by any auditor in a revenue account of a going concern though it may no doubt be a proper item in a capital account made up to ascertain the financial position of the business. When a Company is wound-up the account made up is really much the same as a capital account, as the whole of its assets are taken as realised. His Lordship's observations cannot, in my view, be applied at all to a going concern or to an Income-Tax case and do not thus apply to the present case.

I have referred to these two cases, as they are the cases which the learned Advocate General relied on most strongly. I do not propose to refer to the other cases cited and the analogous English law of Income Tax as they have all been referred to by the learned Chief Justice and I think it unnecessary for me to refer to them again.

In the course of the argument I put to the Advocate-General an extreme case to test his contention and to see how far he was prepared to go. It was this : A. invested a lakh of rupees in a money-lending business and lent out the whole amount in the first year at 12 per cent. interest. At the end of the year Rs. 12,000 accrued to him as interest but none of his debtors paid him anything. The next year he, unfortunately, lost the whole of the capital and his interest by his debtors becoming unable to pay. Is A. liable to pay income-tax to the Government on Rs. 12,000 or not ? The Advocate General had to contend and did contend that A. was liable to pay, even though he had not realised any profit at all from his venture but had actually lost the whole of his capital. It seems to me that very clear and definite language in a taxing Act is necessary to make us hold that a person is liable under such circumstances. The Income Tax Act being a fiscal enactment has to be construed strictly against the Crown and I can see no provision in our Act to make a person liable to pay tax on unrealised incomes or profits. On the other hand, all its provisions indicate to my mind that it is only realised income or profits that is taxable.

The question what would amount to receipt or realisation of an income for the purpose is not one that properly arises on this reference, for, in the case stated by the Board, it is expressly mentioned that the interest in the present case was neither received by the assessee nor realised by adjustment of accounts or otherwise. But, as my learned brothers have dealt with the point, I shall briefly state my opinion on it. Actual payment of cash by the payer to the payee is of course not necessary to constitute a receipt or realisation. Generally speaking, I think it may be said that, whenever the payer deals with a sum of money due to the payee in any manner according to the directions or instructions of the payee so as to obtain a valid discharge for himself and the payee obtains the benefit thereof, there would be a case of realisation by the payee. The payment by a firm of the share of the profits due to a partner into a Bank or to his credit in the firm's own books according to his instructions would amount, in my view, to a realisation by him and that, I think, was apparently the case of Mr. Brooks in Colquhoun v. Brooks (3) already referred to with reference to the money in Melbourne. Payment by a Bank of interest earned by a fixed deposit to a person's current account in the Bank itself would also amount to a receipt by him as held in Matthews v. Cork County Council (21). Again, in the case put by the Board, of a Nattukotta Chetty not drawing the interest that has accrued to him but leaving it with the payer to be added to the capital and to carry interest itself, would also be a case of realisation in the view I am taking. Reference may also be made to the judgment of Lindley, L. J., in Gresham Life Assurance Society v. Bishop (15) on the point. In each case when the question arises it will have to be decided on its facts whether there has been a receipt or not.

Although actual receipt of cash is not required to constitute a realisation of the income or profit in my view, I am clearly of opinion that a sum of money unrealised in any manner by the assessee is not liable to be included in the amount for which he is taxable under the Income Tax Act, VII of 1918. The tax can be levied during the year when the income or profit is realised and the Crown, therefore, loses nothing in having to wait. I, therefore, agree that our answer to the reference must be in the negative.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Presumption as to jointness—Separation of some members—Burden of proof.

Although the ordinary presumption of Hindu Law is that a family is joint, yet that presumption is displaced by the presumption arising from the admitted separation of certain members of the family, and a person alleging jointness must prove it by other means. The mere fact that two brothers were living and messing separately would not necessarily indicate separation in estate, especially where it is shown that their cultivation was joint, and that they divided only so much of the produce as was necessary for household purposes, and kept the rest for purposes of lena dena. [p. 499, col. 2; p. 500, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Raipur, dated the 6th January 1919, in Civil Appeal No. 32 of 1918.

Dr. H. S. Gour, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. Gupta, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff, Dukalu, sued the defendant, Suwa, the widow of his deceased brother Ghasia, for a three-anna four-pies share of a village and some tenancy land. The lower Appellate Court has decreed the village share. This appeal is by Suwa.

The question to be decided in this suit was whether the plaintiff was separate from or joint with Ghasia and Ghasia's deceased minor son, Puran. If he was, his suit is rightly decreed against Suwa, who claims to hold for her life Puran's property as his mother.

The lower Appellate Court's finding is in favour of the plaintiff. In this Court it is argued that the burden of proving jointness should have been laid on the plaintiff, since it is admitted that, during the lifetime of Dhansingh, the father of the plaintiff, and Ghasia, the latter's three step-brothers had separated from the family. The position with regard to the burden of proof stands thus: plaintiff, as the party claiming possession, has to prove his right. He has, therefore, to establish that he and Ghasia were joint in estate. For this purpose he can rely, in the first instance, on the ordinary presumption of Hindu Law as to jointness: but this presumption is cancelled by the presumption arising under the ruling in Balabux v. Rukhmabai (1) from the admitted separation of the three step brothers. Plaintiff, therefore, has still to prove the jointness. He has produced evidence which the lower Appellate Court has considered in its two paragraphs numbered three and has held that the jointness has been proved. The burden of proof appears to have been correctly laid. The lower Appellate Court's finding, however, is attacked by the learned Counsel for the appellant. He urges that Exhibits P-17 and P-18 on which the lower Appellate Court has relied do not help the plaintiff, but if anything go against his contention of jointness. These Exhibits contain the statements of Suwa herself. The lower Appellate Court has relied upon the admission therein of joint cultivation by Ghasia and Dukalu, but, it is pointed out, that Suwa in the same statement also speaks of the employment of saunjhias by herself and Dukalu for the cultivation and of a division of the produce between Dukalu and Ghasia or herself. It is argued that the inference to be drawn from these statements is that the joint cultivation was a joint cultivation of partners rather than of members of a joint family. It is in evidence (See D. W.

(1) 30 C. 725; 30 I. A. 130; 7 C. W. N. 642; 5 Bom. L. R. 469; 8 Sar. P. C. J. 470 (P. C.).

No. 5) that Dukalu and Ghasia divided only so much of the produce as was necessary for house hold purposes and kept the rest joint for the purposes of len den. The brothers were living and messing separately and this division was, therefore, natural and does not necessarily indicate separation in estate. As to the employment of separate soun hias it is clear that this was after Ghasia's death when disputes had arisen between the plaintiff and the defendant.

It seems to me that each piece of documentary evidence referred to by the lower Appellate Court is of itself insufficient to establish jointness, but, taken together as a whole, the documentary and oral evidence afford a sufficient basis for the lower Appellate Court's finding that Dukalu and Ghasia were joint in estate till Ghasia's death in 1915. The circumstances relied on by the appellant as indicating a partition or separate residence, separate dealings and separation of interests are said to be evidenced by Exhibit P-13. The former two circumstances have been considered and weighed by the lower Appellate Court in paragraph 3 (2). Great stress is laid upon Exhibit P 13 which is a report and order in mutation proceedings in 1896. It is said that the arrangement referred to therein indicates a partition or recasting of the shares of each of the five sons of Dhansingh: but it seems to me that the arrangement referred to is not one between all the five brothers individually but between the two sets of Dhansingh's sons. The share of each of the five brothers out of the eight-annas of Dhansingh as originally recorded was one-anna seven pies, except Ghasia's which was one-anna eight pies, so that Ghasia and Dukalu had between them three-annas three pies and the other three brothers had four-annas nine-pies. This re-arrangement referred to in Exhibit P-13 apparently equalised the shares of the two sets, Ghasia and Dukalu getting four-annas and the other three brothers four-annas. Exhibit P-13, in my opinion, does not necessarily prove any division of interest between Dukalu and Ghasia. On the whole, I consider that the lower Appellate Court's finding as to Dukalu and Ghasia being joint till the death of Ghasia in 1915 is not open to any legal objection.

The next point urged is the one dealt with by the lower Appellate Court in paragraph 6 of its judgment. It is contended that as Suwa had, during Puran's lifetime, demanded the separation of Puran's share, the latter became divided from Dukalu according to the ruling in Girja Bai v. Sadashiv (2). The lower Appellate Court's finding on this point is this:—"In the first place, we have only the corroborated testimony of D. W No. 4 that Suwa had, during Puran's lifetime, asked for the separation of his share. But even if she did so, this would not have the effect suggested. Puran was a minor and a suit cannot be brought by or on behalf of a minor to enforce partition unless on the ground of malversation or some other circumstances which made it for his interest that his share should be set aside and secured for him. It was open to Suwa to bring a suit for partition as next friend of Puran, but, unless she satisfied the Court that a severance of Puran's share was in his interest, no disruption of the co-parcenary would take place. Mere declaration of Suwa of a desire to enjoy Puran's share separately would not effect a severance."

It seems to me unnecessary in the present case to go into the legal question as to the effect of a demand by the guardian of a minor of a separation of the minor's share (although I am inclined to hold that the conclusion of the lower Appellate Court on the point is correct), for it is not held by that Court that the demand is proved. The learned Counsel for the appellant has been unable to point out any other evidence of the demand than that of D. W. No. 4 on whose uncorroborated testimony the lower Appellate Court has apparently declined to rely. No doubt, the lower Appellate Court has not in so many words said that the demand is not proved, but this I take to be its finding. In any case, proceeding under section 103 of the Civil Procedure Code, and having given the parties an opportunity of putting their case on the point of the demand before me, I find that the demand is not proved. No other point is pressed. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal against the decree, dated 17th September 1917 of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Sivaganga, in Original Suit No. 151 of 1912.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. K. V. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Appellants.—The lower Court should have decreed the claim for contribution. A partner has the power to bind his co partner by a bona fide submission to arbitration. The award passed on such submission is equally binding on the non referring partner. At any rate, where money has been bona fide paid on the basis of the award, the payer cannot be deprived of his right to contribution. Whatever may be the right of a third party, creditor of the firm, to enforce the award as against the partners who did not submit to arbitration, at any rate, as between the partners inter se, the acts of a partner honestly done in furtherance of the interests of the partnership bind the other partner. The right follows from the general incidents of the partnership relationship.

Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Respondents.—One partner alone cannot submit to arbitration so as to bind his co-partners at the instance of third parties. See Stead v. Salt (1), Datoobhoy v. Vallu (2), Ram Bharose v. Kallu Mal (3).

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs and defendants are Nattukottai Chetties carrying on business in Akyab. They had a separate money-lending business of their own. It appears that they entered into a partnership with respect to a business in paddy as commission agents. They used to buy paddy for customers on commission and send it to their customers in India. The business, however, was conducted by the plaintiffs and defendants separately with their own customers and independently of each other. It was carried on in the separate names of the plaintiffs and the defendants and, so far as we can gather, they were to conduct the business entirely in their own way, but whatever was the profit or loss in the business as conducted by either party, that was to be shared by the other party equally. There was, at first, a suit for dissolution of this partnership but it was dismissed on the ground of limitation. The present suit is instituted by the plaintiffs for contribution, with respect to certain sums paid by them in connection with the joint business in paddy and in the appeal the learned Pleader for the appellants-plaintiffs has contested the finding of the Subordinate Judge with respect to three items.

The first refers to the amount recovered in Original Suit No. 80 of 1910 by the plaintiff in the suit against the present plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2. In that suit the present defendants (respondents in the appeal) were not made parties and the present appellants who were the only defendants agreed to the submission of the suit to arbitration. The arbitrators passed an award finding that a sum of Rs. 2,400 was due to the plaintiffs in that suit. Some small items concerned in that suit admittedly did not relate to the partnership in question. Those are a sum of Rs. 66 9-3, a sum of Rs. 38 8 9 and a sum of Rs. 31-6-0 mentioned in the plaint, Exhibit A. The appellant's contention is that the rest of the items to which the award related formed part of the partnership transaction. The practice adopted apparently was for the plaintiffs and the defendants to adjust the rights and liabilities with respect to each transaction soon after it closed. In accordance with that practice, they adjusted their accounts with respect to the dealings with the plaintiffs in Original Suit No. 80 of 1910 on the basis that a sum of Rs. 662-9 0 was due by the partnership to the plaintiffs while, under the award in the suit which was filed afterwards, the appellants were made liable, as already stated, for a sum of Rs. 2,400, less the three items mentioned above. The amount claimed in the suit was, however, more than Rs. 5,000. The learned Judge held that the award was not binding on the present defendants as they were not parties to the suit and the reference to the arbitration. He relied on Lindley on Partnership, 8th Edition, page 164. There can be no doubt, as laid down there, and in the rulings referred to therein, e. g., Stead v. Salt (1), that where a partner has submitted to arbitration, the award passed on such submission will not bind the other partner, at the instance of the third party. The ground on which this ruling is founded is obvious, that submission to arbitration ordinarily does not come within the scope of a partner's authority so as to bind the other partners. This ruling has been followed in Ram Bharose v. Kallu Mal (3) and Datoobhoy v. Vallu (2) and we may take it that the rule is well established and cannot be questioned. But the question here is not between a partner and a stranger but between the partners inter se. The point for determination is, whether, when a partner has in good faith submitted the claim of a third party against a firm to arbitration and that partner had to make payments in accordance with the award passed on the submission, he would not be entitled to claim contribution from his partner on the basis of that award. There is no express authority on this point. One which has been brought to our notice as being nearest to the present case is the ruling of the Privy Council in Dwarka Nath Sarkar v. Haji Mahomed Akbar (4). There the question was sought to be raised for the first time in the Appellate Court and their Lordships of the Privy Council held that it should not have been allowed to be so raised. The question whether a legal representative of the deceased partner should be bound by the reference made by a surviving partner in relation to a partnership contract was not a pure question of law to be decided without reference to the facts of the case; and it was held that the High Court was in error in permitting the question to be raised for the first time in appeal. That passage, at least, suggests that there may be circumstances in a particular case which would justify the Court in holding that the legal representative of the deceased partner was bound by a reference by the surviving partner relating to a partnership contract.

Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar, the learned Vakil for the respondents, however, urges that the surviving partner's powers are wider than those of an ordinary partner after the dissolution. That may be so, generally speaking. But it is a well established rule relating to partnership that if one partner has the authority to settle accounts relating to partnership and to give release with respect to partnership debts he can be sued alone on a contract entered into by him, and his other partner would be bound by the decree so obtained. That being so, it is not easy to understand why, in a case where a partner is sued alone, he should not be at liberty to agree to a submission and why the award on such submission should not, as between him and his co-partner, be good and conclusive evidence of the liability of the firm. It is not contended in this case that the submission was not bona fide. In fact, it was as much the interest of the plaintiffs as would have been that of the defendant, if he was a party to the suit, to resist an unjust claim and if the plaintiffs thought that the submission was the best way of settling the dispute, there is no good reason for holding that his partner should not contribute to the amount decreed by the award. As the submission was bona fide, and as it has not been shown that the award was vitiated by any illegality, we must hold that the defendants are liable on the basis of the award. On that basis the plaintiffs would be entitled to get from the defendants the sum of Rs. 800 with interest from the date of the award.

The next point taken in appeal refers to the expenses of certain litigation in Original Suit No. 80 of 1910, already referred to, and of Original Suit No. 118 of 1910. The lower Court disallowed the claim on the ground that the entries in the accounts stand in the name of one Palaniappa Chetty who was the agent of the plaintiffs. But if the money was spent through that agent there seems to be no reason why, on that account, the amount so spent should be disallowed simply because the amounts are entered in the name of the person who actually disbursed them. Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyer, however, argued that there is really no evidence that the sum claimed under this head was actually spent on account of the suits relating to the partnership transactions. We have the accounts, Exhibits S and T series, and the evidence of one of the plaintiffs that the entire expenses relating to the litigation amounted to the sum entered in the Schedule D of the plaint, that is, Rs. 865 3 0. There was no serious attempt made to show that this is incorrect. We, therefore, hold that half of this amount should have been decreed to the plaintiffs.

As regards the third point, it relates to the rate of interest. The Subordinate Judge has allowed interest at 6 per cent. but the defendant's own evidence is that the usual rate, that is the Madras rate of interest prevailing among the Chetties is $8\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. That, we think, is the rate which should be awarded. The decree will, therefore, be modified in accordance with the above findings. The appellants will have their costs from the respondents.

Among Birk Jats of the Phillaur Tahsil a daughter excludes collaterals of the seventh degree from succession to ancestral property. [p. 504, col. 1; p. 506, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Jullundur, dated the 1st June 1916, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Jullundur, dated the 29th February 1916.

Mr. Oertel (with him Mr. Cooper), for the Appellants.

Mr. Saraswati Ram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—One Sucket Singh, a Birk Jat, of village Birk, Tahsil Phillaur, District Jullundur, effected certain alienations of landed property and houses in favour of his step-sons, which have been from time to time declared to be ineffective, to destroy the rights of his collaterals, the present plaintiffs, after his death.

Sucket Singh is now dead and these three suits have been brought by some of his collaterals against the representatives of the alienees for possession of their shares in the property of the deceased; all three suits have been dismissed in the lower Courts by judgments proceeding on a common ground; so that the appeals preferred by the plaintiffs can conveniently be disposed of in one judgment.

The defence set up in the lower Courts is that the plaintiffs are collaterals of the deceased, Sucket Singh, only in the seventh degree, reckoning the generations commencing with, and including the deceased, upwards until the common ancestor is reached. He being also counted, and included, and being so remote are excluded by Sucket Singh's daughter, Musammat Basanti, from succeeding to his estate.

Both Courts have decided that, in the presence of Musammat Basanti, the plaintiffs have no locus standi to maintain the suit but the District Judge has granted the necessary certificate for a second appeal on the ground of custom. In appeal, it is first objected that the respondents failed to raise the question of Musammat Basanti's right to exclude her father's collaterals when they had the opportunity in the declaratory suits and that they cannot now do so.

The question, however, was not material in the previous suits as Musammat Basanti could not herself question the acts of her father, and it was in any case open to the reversioners to protect their own rights by obtaining declarations in respect of Sucket Singh's alienation irrespective of the possibility of their exclusion by a daughter. This objection, therefore, has no force.

Next, it is argued that Sucket Singh has definitely excluded Musammat Basanti from succession by the operation of his Will which is one of the alienations affected by the declaratory suits and that she cannot in any case claim to succeed to his property. We do not think that the plaintiffs can be allowed to turn round now and rely on Sucket Singh's Will seeing that they have already obtained a declaration that it is invalid in a suit against the same defendants.

The existence of a Will depriving Musammat Basanti does not, therefore, prevent the defendants from raising the defence that she excludes the plaintiffs in the succession, and that succession has not yet opened out to the plaintiffs.

The main question in the appeal remains, and that is, whether by custom amongst these Birk Jats of the Phillaur Tahsil a daughter excludes collaterals of the seventh degree from succession to property which must, for the purposes of this suit, be assumed to be ancestral, the issue whether the property is ancestral having apparently been decided against the present defendants in the previous litigation.

The question of onus is of some importance in the decision of the question of succession between daughter and collaterals.

In Bholi v. Man Singh (1), Chatterji, J., discussed the point at some length and concluded that, up to that time, there was no definite expression of opinion having a binding force in favour of collaterals of any degree as against the daughter to be found in the authorities of the Chief Court and that amongst Hindu Chuhan Rajputs of the Naraingarh Tahsil, Ambala District, collaterals in the sixth degree had failed to prove their right to exclude a daughter. This authority is often quoted in the judgments of original Courts and is, perhaps, regarded as laying down a much more definite presumption in favour of a daughter's rights than can be actually deduced from the very guarded wording of the judgment; but if such decisions are found to have been generally acquiesced in by the parties and accepted as finally settling the succession this fact must undoubtedly carry weight in the present case.

Now, there undoubtedly are a number of such decisions in recent years in the Jullundur District, and these seem to have the more force as they operate to limit the old view held in the Jullundur District generally and in the Phillaur Tahsil particularly, that agnates of any degree exclude daughters (Roe's Tribal Law, published 1895, page 135).

In Khaire Khan v. Ghulam Ghaus (2) it was held that, amongst Muhammadan Naru Rajputs of the Phillaur Tahsil, the onus lay on the daughter to show that she excluded collaterals in the fifth degree, and that the onus had not been discharged in that case.

On the other hand, Mr. Waring, Divisional Judge, Jullundur, has laid the onus amongst Muhammadan Rajputs of the district on collaterals of the seventh degree to show that they did exclude daughters (Judgment of 3rd November 1908).

The Munsif, Sher Ahmad Khan, decided that, amongst Hindu Jats of the Nawanshahr Tahsil, collaterals of the ninth degree were excluded by daughters in succession to ancestral land (24th November 1909).

This decision as regards these same Jats was repeated in the judgment of Lala Rangi Lal, Subordinate Judge, on 15th April 1913.

On 25th January 1915 Lala Sri Ram Poplai decided that, amongst Hindu Jats of Nawanshahr, daughters exclude collaterals of the sixth degree in succession to ancestral land. The area is considerable, 113 kanals, and this case is deposed to in the oral evidence in this suit.

After this, Ahmad Hussain, Munsif, found on 22nd December 1915 that amongst Hindu Jats of Nawanshahr daughters excluded collaterals of the fourth degree, but the land in suit was not found to be ancestral.

In the Nakodar Tahsil Lala Rangi Lal, as District Judge, found as long ago as 30th April 1912 that amongst Hindu Jats daughters exclude collaterals of the seventh degree even though the land be ancestral and the area large (45 acres and shamilat in addition).

There are also two decisions of Tahsil Phillaur amongst Hindu Jats, one of Ali Muhammad, Subordinate Judge, on 26th June 1914, where daughters excluded collaterals of the tenth degree and another of Sri Ram Poplai of 17th February 1914, confirmed by Mr. Prenter, Divisional Judge, on 10th July 1914, in which daughters excluded collaterals of the seventh degree, but in neither of these two cases was it shown that the land was ancestral of the contesting collaterals.

These eight decisions have all actually governed the succession to considerable areas of land and this fact certainly renders it probable that the view formerly held in the Jullundur District is subject in practice to considerable limitation. This is recognised in the new compilation of the Customary Law of the District by Rai Bahadur Bhai Hotu Singh in 1918. He says (Q. 45 A) that daughters are only excluded by collaterals up to the fifth degree in the three Tahsils of Jullundur, Nakodar and Phillaur and up to the seventh degree in the Nawanshahr Tahsil, the only dissentients being Muhammadan Rajputs of the Phillaur Tahsil. This volume appears to be the result of detailed inquiry made directly from the tribes themselves, the answers given being independently verified by instances, and it is noticeable that the question was a new one framed by the Settlement Officer himself.

This riwaj i-am, therefore is, as found by the Privy Council, "admissible in evidence to prove the facts therein entered subject to rebuttal. The statements contained in it form a strong piece of evidence in support of the custom which it lay upon the plaintiffs to rebut." Beg v. Allah Ditta (3).

It is in this case directly supported by instances which give additional weight to its pronouncement, and it certainly appears to lay the burden of rebuttal heavily upon the plaintiffs and no evidence in favour of the plaintiffs has been referred to by Counsel nor does any appear upon the record.

A few reported cases from other districts have been referred to and may be briefly noticed.

In Partapo v. Asa Ram (4), after a discussion of many authorities, it was held that, amongst Hindu Rajputs of the Ludhiana District, a daughter excludes collaterals of the seventh degree in succession to ancestral property.

Jiwan Singh v. Musammat Har Kaur (5) was a case of Wirk Jats of the Gujranwala District. It was then remarked: "The weight of authority and certainly the more recent decisions are distinctly in favour of the contention that the onus lies on collaterals more distantly related than the fifth or, at any rate, the seventh degree to show that they are entitled to succeed in preference to a daughter of the deceased." As in that case the collateral was in fact outside the seventh degree the decision was given without hesitation in favour of the daughter.

In Saide Khan v. Musammat Amir-un-nissa (6) amongst Muhammadan Rajputs of Jagraon

GORDHANDAS VITHALDAS v. MOHANLAL MANEKLAL DOSHI.

Tahsil, Ludhiana District, the onus was laid on collaterals of the sixth degree to prove that by custom they excluded daughters in succession to ancestral land, and they failed to discharge the onus.

Finally, there is a case Ishri v Bhola Singh (7) in which it was held on the riwaj-i-am and in the absence of evidence to the contrary that amongst Hindu Jats of Jullundur District a daughter does not exclude collaterals in the fifth degree in succession to ancestral property.

This is, however, in accordance with the riwaj-i-am whilst in the present case the riwaj-i-am is against the plaintiffs-appellants.

The onus in the present case was on the collaterals to prove that by custom they excluded the daughter, and this onus they have decidedly failed to discharge, and their appeal is dismissed with costs.

Covenant restricting user of land, whether runs with land—Registration, whether notice.

A covenant by which the covenantor restricts the ordinary user of his property does not run with the land, and is not binding on a purchaser without notice. [p. 508, col. 2.]

Registration does not necessarily give notice to anybody of anything. But if a registered document is so indexed that an inquirer anxious to ascertain whether there are documents relating to a property which he proposes, for instance, to buy, can find from the index documents relating to that property, then it will be held that he has notice of those documents, because if he made the inquiry, which as a prudent man he ought to make, then they would come to his notice. JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The plaintiff sued to obtain certain reliefs by way of injunction against the defendants. He had obtained a decree in the Trial Court which was upheld in first appeal. The defendants now appeal to this Court, and the real question is, whether they had notice of the agreement which was made between the plaintiff and their vendor. It seems to have been assumed by both the lower Courts that, because that document was registered, therefore, the defendants must have had notice of it. It has not been argued, and I do not think it can be argued, that the agreement creates an interest in the defendants' property in favour of the plaintiff or an easement therein. It is merely a restrictive covenant by which the defendants' vendor restricted the ordinary user of his property. Such a covenant would not run with the land, and would not be binding on the purchaser unless he had notice. The question of fact whether the defendants could have had notice of this particular agreement if they had inspected the register in the ordinary course has not been gone into in the Trial Court. No oral evidence was led. The defendants admitted execution of the document by their vendor, and the Judge seems to have come to the conclusion from this that the plaintiff had knowledge of the agreement when he bought the property. But, unless the defendant would have found this agreement in the register when he went to inspect the register, as he ought to have done as a prudent purchaser, it cannot be said that he had constructive notice. If the property to which this agreement refers is in the index of the register, so that on the defendant inspecting the index would have found it, then it can be said that the defendant had constructive notice of it. That is a question which can only be decided by taking evidence as to the state of the register, and where this agreement was entered into. Therefore, the following issues must go back to the Trial Court:—(1) Whether the defendant had actual notice of the agreement in suit? (2) Whether he had constructive notice, that is to say, if he had inspected the register in the ordinary way as a prudent purchaser, would he have found this agreement? Findings to be returned in four months after the record reaches the Trial Court. Otherwise, as the appeal has succeeded, the suit will be dismissed. As the plaintiff has been in fault, he must pay the costs in this Court and the Court below. The costs in the Trial Court will be costs in the cause. Same order in Second Appeal No. 250 of 1919.

HEATON, J.—I agree. There seems to be a good deal of misapprehension about registration and its effect as notice. Registration does not necessarily give notice to anybody of anything. But if a registered document is so indexed that an inquirer anxious to ascertain whether there are documents relating to a property which he proposes, for instance, to buy, can find from the index documents relating to that property, then it will be held that he has notice of those documents, because if he made the inquiry, which as a prudent man he ought to make, then they would come to his notice. The particular document we are concerned with was not a transfer of any property, but an agreement. It is an agreement entered into by two persons, the vendor to the defendant and the plaintiff, and it relates to two properties, the property belonging to the defendant's vendor and the property belonging to the plaintiff. How it is indexed in fact we do not know. The matter has never been inquired into. It is quite possible it might be indexed in various ways. It might be indexed under the names of the contracting parties. That would not give notice for the purpose of this case. It might be indexed by a reference to the property belonging to the plaintiff and that, again, would not be notice for the purpose of this case. But if it is indexed in relation to the defendant's property, then, no doubt, it would be notice.

Issues remitted.

JUDGMENT.

OLDFIELD, J.—Plaintiff, here appellant, purchased the mortgage right now sued on at a sale held by the Official Receiver, Tanjore District, in the insolvency of 4th defendant and has sued 1st defendant, the mortgagor, to recover by sale of the mortgaged property. The only defence with which we are concerned at present is, that plaintiff did not obtain the mortgage right by his purchase because it had not vested in the Official Receiver and could not be sold by him. The lower Courts accepted this with reference to Official Receiver of Trichinopoly v. Somasundaram Chettiar (1) in which two learned Juges held that when, as in the present case, an adjudication of insolvency is made by an Official Receiver in the exercise of the powers delegated to him under section 52 (1) (a), Provincial

(1) 34 Ind. Cas. 602; 30 M. L. J. 415.

Insolvency Act, the insolvent's estate does not vest in him under section 18, or any other provision, and will not do so, unless an order vesting it in him is passed by the Court. Official Receiver of Trichinopoly v. Somasundaram Chettiar (1) has not been judicially noticed except by one of the learned Judges responsible for it in Firm of Ramakrishna Iyer v. Official Receiver, Tinnevelly (2). The reasoning supporting the portion of the judgment in question is very shortly stated, but the conclusion reached must affect insolvency practice throughout the Presidency. That conclusion entails the Official Receiver's inaction after passing the order of adjudication, until he has reported his doing so to the Court, which originally entertained the insolvency petition, and has obtained its order appointing him Receiver and vesting the estate in him. Any postponement of the vesting of the estate in an authority more competent to administer it than that Court is to be deprecated and may have disastrous results, if moveable property is in question. We think it necessary to satisfy ourselves that this result is inevitable by close scrutiny of the law. It is urged first, that it is not, because the Official Receiver in the exercise of his delegated powers under section 52 becomes the 'Court' for purposes ancillary to that exercise, of which the vesting of the insolvent's estate in 'the Court' under section 16 (2) is one. This can be rejected shortly. The stages of adjudication and administration are distinct under section 52. The Official Receiver does not become the 'Court' in the exercise of his delegated powers, but under section 52 (2) his orders, or acts are merely to be deemed to be those of the 'Court,' and he does not come within the definition of 'the Court' in section 2 (1) (g). Allapichai v. Kupppai Pichai Rowther (3).

To turn to more substantial considerations, the decision in Official Receiver of Trichinopoly v. Somasundaram Chettiar (1) was reached with reference to the provision in section 16 (2) (a), for the vesting of the estate "in the Court or in a Receiver as hereinafter provided" and the construction of the last three words as relating only to the provision in section 18 (1) for the appointment of a Receiver and the vesting in him thereupon of the estate. Reliance is placed on the absence of any provision for vesting in section 19 relating to Official Receivers, and the argument that the Act does not provide for it, except in connection with an appointment, which is, therefore, necessary in each case. The alternative contention is that, under section 19 (2), the Official Receiver becomes by operation of law the Receiver in each case and that such Receiverships also and not only those conferred by appointment under section 18, are within the purview of the words already referred to, "as hereinafter provided" in section 16 (2) (a).

The balance of convenience is, as I have pointed out, in favour of the second of these constructions. But a consideration of the wording of section 18 (2) and of the English Act, on which this procedure is founded, forbids its adoption. For section 18 (2) assumes, by its reference to an order of appointment of a Receiver, that such an order is to be passed, even if the Official Receiver is to act; and, although there is no separate provision for such an order, this reference cannot be disregarded. Its significance, and probably its origin, are disclosed by comparison with section 9 of the English Bankruptcy Act of 1883 under which "on the making of a receiving order an Official Receiver shall be thereby constituted Receiver of the property of the debtor", the word 'thereby' supporting no appointment by mere implication, since, as the forms of receiving order Nos. 28 and 29 show, a distinct order constituting a Receiver for the estate is to be passed. The necessity for such an order is accounted for by the fact that in England, as section 66 (3) of the Act and rule 323 A framed under it show, the contingency of the existence of more than one Official Receiver for each area is contemplated; and it is possible that, although no explicit reference is made to this contingency in the Indian Act, it was in the mind of the draftsman and is provided for in section 19 (2); the introduction of the procedure authorised by section 17 of the Presidency Act with its immediate vesting of the property in the Official Assignee being deliberately avoided. It is consistent with this that, whilst under section 77, Presidency Act, only one person can be appointed to the office of Official Assignee of an insolvent's estate, for each High Court under section 19 (1) of the Provincial Act there is no restriction on the number of appointments for a particular area. It may be said, on the one hand, that this conflicts with the reference in section 19 (2) to the appointment of an Official Receiver for the local limits of any Court having jurisdiction under the Act, his designation as the Receiver to act in all cases arising in it and the omission of any direction, such as the English Act gives, regarding the method of selection of the Official Receiver to act when more than one have been appointed, and, on the other hand, that the Indian provisions cannot be explained by reference to the English, when the scheme of the latter, including the employment as matter of course of the Official Receiver as Receiver from the receiving order until the order of adjudication and the subsequent vesting in him as trustee under the English section 54, differs radically from that of the former. But the only conclusion can be that the adoption of the English procedure to Indian circumstances has been imperfect and that reason has not been shown for the rejection of an explanation of the wording of the Indian section 19 (2), for which appellant has failed to account and which must receive effect.

In these circumstances, I am constrained to hold that the law was stated correctly in Official Receiver of Trichinopoly v. Somasundaram Chettiar (1).

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—While not disagreeing with my learned brother, I cannot help saying that the previous decisions of this Court and the conclusion to which he has come have the effect of unsettling the practice in the lower Courts and of making an unnecessary departure from what obtains in insolvency matters in the Presidency towns. The drafting of the Act, and especially of clause 2, section 19 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, is responsible for this state of things.

Mr. Justice Oldfield has stated the facts and the law fully. I shall only add a few sentences. The contention of Mr. Seshagiri Sastri, Vakil for the 3rd respondent, is that unless the Official Receiver is appointed in each case of insolvency as Receiver of the estate, the property of the insolvent does not vest in him. Section 16, clause (2), provides for the vesting of the property in the Court or in a Receiver as hereinafter provided. Under section 52 the High Court can by rules, invest the Official Receiver with jurisdiction to hear insolvency petitions, to examine the debtors and to make orders of adjudication. Reading these two provisions, the natural inference is that the Official Receiver—appointed by the Local Government and invested with powers to adjudicate by the High Court, would have the property of the insolvent under his control. Unfortunately, section 19, clause (2), uses this language:—"Where any Official Receiver has been so appointed for the local limits of the jurisdiction of any Court having jurisdiction under this Act, he shall be the Receiver for the purpose of every order appointing a Receiver issued by any such Court....." I do not find it easy to understand the meaning of the words underlined by me. If it was the intention of the Legislature that the property should not vest in the Official Receiver unless he was appointed Receiver in the particular insolvency, fewer words would have sufficed. It is equally open to argument, as was suggested by the learned Vakil for the 3rd respondent, that if the Legislature intended that, if in the Official Receiver by virtue of his appointment, the property of the insolvent vests, the section would have been differently worded. The real trouble arises from the difference in language between the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, and the Provincial Insolvency Act. In section 17 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, there is an express declaration that, on the making of an order of adjudication, the property shall vest in the Official Assignee. There is no reason why an Official Receiver appointed by the Local Government should not have the same authority. There is nothing in principle to suggest a distinction. In the Presidency Towns as in the Moffasal, in addition to the Official Assignee or the Official Receiver, there can be a special trustee or Receiver but, whereas in the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, a special provision is inserted for vesting the property in the Official Assignee, there is no such provision in the Provincial Insolvency Act.

My learned brother has referred to the sections of the English Bankruptcy Act. I shall examine them with some care. Section 7 of IV and V George V says: "On making of a receiving order an Official Receiver shall be thereby constituted Receiver of the property of the debtor." Section 18, clauses (6) and (8), provide, for the Official Receiver assuming management and directing the proceedings, in case the debtors do not appoint a trustee. Section 53, clause (1), says "until a trustee is appointed the Official Receiver shall be the trustee for the purposes of this Act and immediately, on a debtor being adjudged bankrupt, the property of the bankrupt shall vest in the trustee." There can be no doubt that this section makes the Official Receiver the trustee of the property, without requiring that he should be appointed specially for that purpose. The next clause is, "on the appointment of a trustee, the property shall forthwith pass to and vest in the trustee appointed." On this clause, the use of the words 'a trustee' indicated that there is but one trustee from the beginning of the adjudication and that the Official Receiver will be that trustee, until the creditors appoint a trustee, and on such appointment the latter shall step into the shoes of the Official Receiver. That this is the meaning of the sections, I have referred to, is made clear Cohen, In re; Trustee, Ex parte (4). Lord Justice Vaughan Williams, in delivering the judgment of the Court of Appeal, says, in page 710: "Section 54, sub-section (2) (the learned Lord Justice was referring to the Act of 1883) provides that on the appointment of a trustee, the property shall forthwith pass to and vest in the trustee appointed .....in my judgment contrasts the case where the property of the bankrupt vests in the Official Receiver independently of any appointment of him, as trustee, and the case where the property of the bankrupt passes to a trustee forthwith on his appointment. There can be no doubt but that in sub-section 2 of section 54, the word 'appointed' is used in the sense in which it is employed in section 21." Then the learned Lord Justice quotes two decisions containing certain dicta of Lord Selbourne and Lord Esher and proceeds: "The provisions of sub-section 1 of section 54 will necessarily in every case in which the creditors appoint the trustee, make the Official Receiver the trustee, before there is a creditors' trustee, because a creditors' trustee is appointed by a meeting called after the adjudication."

A similar view has been taken in an earlier case, Calcott and Elvin's Contract, In re (5). The Court of Appeal had to consider whether an order of adjudication in bankruptcy is not a conveyance and whether the title of the Official Receiver was not postponed to that of the mortgagee, until the adjudication order was registered. Lindley, L. J., the Master of the Rolls says in page 465, referring to section 54 of the old Act: "The order by which a man is adjudicated a bankrupt, and which by the rules has to be in writing and in a particular form, is simply to the effect that the debtor has been adjudged a bankrupt. Is that a deed or conveyance, within the meaning of the Statute of Anne? No doubt the effect of it is that all the property vested in the debtor becomes vested in the trustee but that does not make it a conveyance."

I may also mention that the law is stated in 2 Halsbury, section 169, in the same way. Referring to the Official Receiver, it is said, 'He is not appointed trustee under the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act, but he becomes so automatically.'

This interpretation of the English Statute is not quite consistent with forms Nos. 28 and 29 under the English Bankruptcy Act, to which my learned brother has referred in his judgment. Those forms seem to contemplate that a prospective order in every case of bankruptcy is to be made, constituting the Official Receiver the Receiver of the estate of the debtor. These forms are known as the receiving orders. By adopting similar forms in this country also, the difficulty may perhaps be got over. For that purpose it may become necessary that the High Court should prescribe.....forms for employment by the Muffasal Courts.

I am, therefore, not prepared to differ from the conclusion which my learned brother has reached and which has the sanction of the previous decisions of this Court. I agree with the order as to costs.

JUDGMENT.

CRUMP, J.—The only question which arises for our decision in this case is, whether an uncle's daughter is or is not gotraja sapinda. Mr. Bhat for the appellant has sought to argue from a case of a sister that this question should be answered in the affirmative. It is almost sufficient to point out that Mr. Bhat has been forced to admit that the logical conclusion of his line of reasoning would be that all females must necessarily be counted as gotraja sapindas. We think that this would be contrary to the fundamental principles of the Hindu Law as hitherto interpreted by our Court. The lower Court has correctly stated that, as a general rule, the Hindu Law is opposed to succession of females and that such female heirs as have been recognized as entitled to inherit come in as exceptions to this general rule. It is, therefore, unsound to attempt to extend these exceptions by arguing that there is any principle involved in those cases where such exceptions are permitted. The special case of a sister can only be justified on the grounds which are special to herself as has been repeatedly decided in the decisions of this Court. We are not prepared to argue from the case of a sister to that of more distant relations, and to thereby extend the list of female heirs further than has already been done in this Presidency. It is admitted that there is no decision which is directly in point on this question, and such passages as have been cited to us from other decisions do not, we think, bear out the line of argument which is sought to be based upon them. In those cases the position of a sister is in question, and as is well known every case is only an authority upon its own facts. We think that the attempt to extend the list to an uncle's daughter must necessarily fail, and we, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Plaintiff to pay costs of the respondents and the Court-fees which would have been paid if she had not been allowed to appeal in forma pauperis.

Mr. G. R. Pradhad, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—On the 13th June 1899 one Laxmansa mortgaged the property in suit to Nagoji. The latter brought a suit for foreclosure on the basis of this mortgage, Suit No. 430 of 1902, and obtained a decree absolute for foreclosure on the 28th February 1903. Rukhmoddin who was a lessee of Laxmansa, under a deed, dated the 17th July 1899, for fifteen years, was not made a party to this suit. He instituted Suit No. 604 of 1905 and was allowed to redeem the mortgage. On the 7th July 1905 Nagoji sold his rights to one Mangosa. Both Nagoji and Mangosa were parties to Suit No. 604 of 1905. The present plaintiffs purchased the property from Laxmansa and his brother Raghosa by a sale-deed, dated the 26th November 1909. It has been found that Raghosa had no interest in the property in dispute. They seek to eject Rukhmoddin on the ground that the lease expired in 1913. The Courts below have held that the plaintiffs are entitled to possession upon payment of the amount paid by Rukhmoddin in Suit No. 604 of 1905. Rukhmoddin's legal representative, Golam Nubi, has filed this second appeal Both the Courts below refer to the case of Sonba Teli v. Lahanoo (1) but seek to distinguish the case on the ground that Rakhmoddin was not a puisne mortgagee but a lessee. It is not disputed that the right of a mortgagor who has been foreclosed is not revived by a puisne mortgagee redeeming the prior mortgagee. No case has been cited before me in which a view contrary to that laid down in Sonba Teli v. Lahanoo (1) has been taken. The Courts below seem to have overlooked that the person to redeem is not the representative of Laxmansa but Mangosa, who purchased the rights of Nagoji after the foreclosure. By the foreclosure decree in Suit No. 430 of 1902 Nagoji acquired the rights of the mortgagor. Rukhmoddin not having been made a party was entitled to redeem. In Suit No. 604 of 1905 Nago and his representative Mangosa could not seek in their turn to redeem the lessee. A zur-peshgi lease, such as the lease of Rukhmoddin was, cannot be redeemed before the expiry of the term which occurred in 1913. I do not see that there is any difference, so far as this case is concerned, whether the document was a zur peshgi lease or a usufructuary mortgage. In 1905 Nagoji and Mangosa, although they held the rights of the mortgagee as well as of the mortgagor, could not elect to redeem Rukhmoddin within the period of the term fixed. The effect of that decision is not to bar their right of redemption but only to postpone it. Their right is subsisting and can be now enforced, whereas Laxmansa has no interest left by reason of the foreclosure.

The lower Courts argue that the lessee is bound to deliver up possession at the expiry of the lease to the lessor, I would say, to the lessor or his representative-in-interest. If the lessor has no interest left, the possession is to be delivered to his representative; in this case Mangosa is that representative.

The question is not what rights Rukhmoddin has acquired, but whether the plaintiffs have any right in respect of the property entitling them to maintain a suit for ejectment or redemption. In my opinion they have none, as their predecessor lost all rights on the foreclosure and those rights have not been subsequently revived on the redemption by Rukhmoddin, who redeemed for his own benefit to protect his rights as a lessee and not for the benefit of Laxmansa.

The decrees of the Courts below are set aside and the suit is dismissed with costs in all Courts.

Decree set aside.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 73—Mortgage—Mortgaged property acquired under Land Acquisition Act—Injunction, suit for, by mortgagee, restraining mortgagor from receiving compensation, maintainability of.

Section 73 of the Transfer of Property Act is applicable to a case where the mortgaged property is acquired under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act.

Where, during the pendency of a mortgage-suit, a portion of the mortgaged property was acquired under the Land Acquisition Act and the mortgagee brought a suit for an injunction restraining the mortgagor from taking out the compensation-money in respect of the portion acquired:

Held, that the suit was maintainable and must succeed.

Appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge, Manbhum, dated the 27th November 1919.

Mr. Sishir Kumar Rai, for the Appellant.

Mr. Shiveshwar Dayal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

COUTTS, J.—This appeal arises out of an application for injunction to restrain the judgment-debtor from taking out money which is in the hands of the Land Acquisition Deputy Collector. The application has been refused and the decree-holder has appealed.

The facts of the case are, shortly, that Mouza Benipur which has an area of 600 bighas was mortgaged to the decree-holder. He brought a suit on his mortgage and obtained a preliminary decree. Meanwhile, 100 bighas of the mouza had been acquired for the Bengal, Nagpur Railway Company and Rs. 2,000, as compensation, is now in the hands of the Land Acquisition Deputy Collector. The judgment-debtor has applied for permission to withdraw this amount in order to pay off another decree and it was in order to restrain him from doing this that the application for injunction was made.

I am unable to agree with the learned

DALIP SINGH v. BALWANT SINGH.

Subordinate Judge that the injunction should not be granted. Under section 73 of the Transfer of Property Act, "Where mortgaged property is sold through failure to pay arrears of revenue or rent due in respect thereof, the mortgagee has a charge on the surplus, if any, of the proceeds, after payment thereout of the said arrears, for the amount remaining due on the mortgage," and it has been held, both in the Madras High Court in the Calcutta High Court, that this section applies where land is sold under the Land Acquisition Act. I need only refer to the cases of Venkata Viraraghavayyangar v. Krishnasami Ayyangar (1), Jatuni Chowdhurani v. Amar Krishna Saha (2) and Debendra Nath Sen v. Mirza Abdul Samed Seroi (3). An opposite view was taken by Aikman, J., in the case of Basa Mal v. Tajammal Husain (4). But this is a decision of a Single Judge and has been expressly dissented from in the case of Jatuni Chowdhurani v. Amar Krishna Saha (2). I agree with the view of the law expressed in the cases to which I have referred. I would accordingly set aside the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge and would decree this appeal with costs.

SULTAN AHMED, J.—I agree.

of 1912), s. 19—Will, construction of—Devise of land by tenant—Acquisition of proprietary rights before death, effect of.

On 5th July 1909, an occupancy tenant devised his square of land in favour of the defendant. In 1912 the Punjab Colonisation of Government Lands Act came into force and, subsequently thereto, the testator acquired proprietary rights in the devised square :

Held, that when the Will came into operation the testator's occupancy rights had ripened into proprietary ownership and that the Will was not, therefore, invalid under section 19 of the Punjab Colonisation of Government Lands Act. [p. 515, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Lyallpur, dated the 7th August 1915, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Lyallpur, dated the 23rd February 1915.

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Ram Chand Manchanda, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The following pedigree table will show the relationship of the parties:—

Musammat Prem Kaur=Sham Singh=Musammat Kishen Kaur.

Jawala Singh, Plaintiff.
Ishar Singh	Sharm Singh	Kesar Singh, Defendant.
	Makhan Singh, Defendant.
Balwant Singh, Defendant.	Jaswant Singh, Defendant.	Hazur Singh, Defendant.
		Kartar Singh, Defendant.

Sham Singh held a square of land in Chak No. 157, R. B., in the Lyallpur District, as a tenant. On the 5th July 1909 he executed a Will, which was duly registered, by which he devised the said square to his issue by his wife, Musammot Kishen Kaur.

On the 6th June 1912 Act V of 1912 came into force and, subsequent to this date, Sham Singh acquired proprietary rights in the said square ceasing thereafter to be a tenant. He died some time in 19 3, and the Will was apparently given effect to by the revenue authorities who mutated the square in the names of the present defendants. On the 3rd July 1914 Jawala Singh instituted the present suit claiming to be entitled to one half of the said square alleging (1) that the land was ancestral ; (2) that Sham Singh was not competent to make a Will ; (3) that Sham Singh, when he executed the Will, was not possessed of a disposing mind ; (4) that, subsequent to the making of the Will, Sham Singh had made an oral promise to come into effect after his demise, that the plaintiff was to get one-half of this square ; (5)that the Will propunded was of no effect having regard to the provisions of Act V of 1912, and (6) that the family was governed by the chundavand rule of succession and, therefore, in any event, he (Jawala Singh) was entitled to the land claimed by him.

The Trial Court held that the land was not ancestral; that the oral promise or Will had not been proved ; that Sham Singh was competent to make the Will propounded by the defendants and was of sound disposing mind when he executed it; that the Will was not rendered inoperative by Act V of 1912; that though, at the date of its execution, Sham Singh only held occupancy rights in this square, at the date of his death he was a proprietor, and that the proprietary rights passed under the devise. Jawala Singh's suit was accordingly dismissed, and he preferred an appeal to the District Judge who agreed with the findings of the Trial Court. Jawala Singh has now come up to this Court in second appeal, and on his behalf we have heard Mr. Nand Lal at length.

It was contended (1) that Sham Singh was not competent to make a Will; (2) that the Will was rendered void and inoperative by Act V of 1912; (3) that under a devise of occupancy rights proprietary rights could not pass, and (4) that by custom the appellant was entitled to the land claimed by him.

As to the first contention, we have no hesitation in holding that the square being self acquired Sham Singh was competent to dispose of the same as he liked. As to the second contention, while no doubt Act V of 1912 would have rendered the devise of the occupancy rights inoperative when the succession fell in, the testator was a proprietor and, therefore, the Will was in no way rendered void or inoperative by the provisions of section 9 of Act V of 1912. As to the third contention, a perusal of the Will shows that what was devised was "my square in Chak No. 157," and we have no hesitation in holding that what was devised was all the testator's right, title, and interest in the said square. When the Will came into operation the occupancy rights had ripened into proprietary ownership and, in our opinion, the square passed under the Will to the devisees. In this view we are supported by Saxton v. Saxton (1), where it was held that "a bequest of all my term and interest in the lease hold dwelling-house known as B. G. will carry the fee simple if subsequent to the date of the Will the testator buys in such fee simple."

Mr. Nand Lal further contended that the Will had been revoked by Sham Singh's subsequent conduct. This conduct he described as Sham Singh's omission to execute a further Will or to say anything more about the land. We are in no way impressed with this contention which we consider has no force. It is unnecessary to discuss the further points raised, and we dismiss the appeal with costs throughout.

Contract, breach of—Damages, suit for—Party wrongfully cancelling contract, whether can set up alternative defence—C. I. F. contract—Property, when passes.

If a buyer cancels the contract without any justification, he disables himself from setting up any defence which he might otherwise have done to an action for damages. [p. 516, col. 1.]

As regards a *C. I. [p. 516, col. 2.]

Messrs. Campbell and Kanga, for the Plaintiff.

Messrs. Setalvad and Desai, for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT.—On the 6th of September 1918 a contract was entered into between the plaintiff and the defendants for the purchase by the defendant of ten bales of Liepmanns' White Shirtings No. 1500, each bale containing 50 pieces, at Rs. 35 per piece, C. I. F. Bombay, shipment September 1918. Terms and conditions as per plaintiff's purchase from Messrs. Girdharidas Radhakisandas on further terms and conditions of Messrs. Volkart Bros.' contract freight in excess of 7£ Sh. per ton and war risk insurance over $5\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. to be borne by the purchaser.

It appears that, on the 21st of August, the plaintiffs had bought 30 bales of these Shirtings from Girdharidas and on the 22nd of August they bought 25 bales of similar Shirtings from Messrs. E. D. Sassoon & Co.

On the 13th of November, plaintiff received from E. D. Sassoon & Co., an invoice for ten bales of the contract goods. Notice was given to the plaintiff that the steamer had already arrived and that the goods were lying at the docks at the plaintiff's risk.

The goods were shipped on or about the 17th of September, as is shown by the bill of lading in favour of Messrs. Volkart Bros., and the steamer arrived about the 18th of October. But, as was often the case during the war, the shipping documents did not arrive till a later date, sometime in the beginning of November.

On the 25th of November the plaintiff sent an invoice for ten bales to the defendant and, immediately after that, they received a notice from the defendant which is dated 23rd of November: "We purchased from you Liepmanns' White Shirtings No. 1500, we hereby cancel the same as they were for September shipment and even now November is ending."

The defendants contend that they were entitled to cancel the contract, but there was no justification for their doing so. The obvious reason which made them cancel was the fall in the market It was their duty to demand delivery and it was only on a refusal by the plaintiffs to fulfil their part of the contract, that the defendants would be entitled to cancel it. But it has been suggested, and has now been ascertained as a fact, that the plaintiff was not in a position to deliver, in performance of his contract, goods which he had purchased from Girdharidas. He, in his turn, had a dispute with Girdharidas in October, which no doubt was due to the fact that he had only succeeded in selling ten bales out of the 55 which he had purchased in August.

That, however, would not help the defendant, as Braithwaite v. Foreign Hardwood Co. (1) is an authority for the proposition, that if a buyer, without any justification, cancels the contract, he disables himself from setting up any defence which he might otherwise have done to an action for damages. In that case, the contract was for the sale of rosewood, for shipment in 1903, to be delivered at Hull in instalments during that year, cash payable against bills of lading. When the first consignment of rosewood was on the sea, the buyers repudiated the contract and refused to accept any rosewood. Afterwards, it came to their knowledge that a portion of the rosewood in the first consignment did not answer to the description of the quality of the rosewood in the contract. It was held that as the original repudiation by the buyers was wrongful, the buyers had waived the performance of conditions precedent on the part of the sellers who were entitled to damages based upon the difference between the contract price of the rosewood and the price at which it had been sold against the contract.

I do not think, therefore, it is open to the defendants to take the point that the plaintiffs were not in a position to tender documents for ten bales of goods which they had bought from Girdharidas. I do not think, in any event, the point would be a good one, as I do not think the plaintiff guaranteed or warranted in his contract that he would deliver bales which he had purchased from Girdharidas and none other, so that the defendants would be entitled to refuse taking delivery of exactly similar bales which, as a matter of fact, had been purchased by the plaintiff from another party. All that the contract of 6th September said was, that the contract bales were sold to the defendants on the same terms as he had bought bales from Girdharidas, taken in conjunction with the conditions of the contract between Girdharidas and Messrs. Volkart Bros.

The plaintiffs have sued for the price of the goods or, in the alternative, for damages. If the property in the goods had passed to the defendants, then the plaintiffs could sue for the price. But, although as regards the C. I. F. contract between the buyer and the person importing the goods the property would pass when the goods were shipped, I do not think the property would again pass when the first purchaser sold to another party and again whenever a subsequent sale took place, unless the bills of lading were endorsed to each successive purchaser.

I think, therefore, the plaintiffs are entitled to damages, and it is admitted that the market rate for these goods C. I. F. at the date of the breach was Rs. 22. The plaintiffs are, therefore, entitled to a decree for Rs. 6,683, with costs and interest on judgment at 6 per cent.

Suit decreed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. II, r. 2, applicability of, to suits for immoveable property—Causes of action, joinder of all, in one suit, whether necessary.

In determining the applicability of Order II, rule 2 of the Civil Procedure Code to a suit respecting immoveable property the mere fact that the title to the property in dispute in both suits is the same and that the property is the same does not necessarily show that the cause of action is the same. Thus, in a suit by reversionary heirs for a declaration of their right and for possession after setting aside a deed of gift, and in a subsequent suit for possession as reversionary heirs of the estate, on the ground that they were in possession and were dispossessed by the defendant, the cause of action is distinct, and the mere fact that the cause of action in the latter case arose before the institution of the previous suit, did not make it obligatory on the plaintiff to include the claim in the previous suit. [p. 519, cols. 1 & 2.]

It is not necessary that all the causes of action should be joined in the same suit, but the suit should include the whole claim arising out of the same cause of action, that is, the cause of action for which the suit is brought. [p. 519, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge, first Court, Bardwan, dated the 0th of September 1918, reversing that of the Munsif, second Court at Katwa, dated the 21st of August 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Hemendranath Sen (with him Babu Dhirendranath Sen), for the Appellants.—The defendants are the appellants. The appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of possession. The case for the plaintiff was that the land in suit originally belonged to Ganga Roy which, on the death of his sons, devolved upon their mother, Mukta Kesi, and that, after her death in 1913, the plaintiffs, as the next reversioners, inherited the same. The plaintiffs are alleged to have been dispossessed in April 1915 by the present defendants. The defendants objected to the maintainability of the suit under Order II, rule 2. The plaintiff had, in May 1915 after the alleged dispossession from the present land in dispute, sued the present defendants for establishment of title to another plot of land which the defendants claimed to hold by virtue of a deed of gift executed by Mukta Kesi of her stridhan property in favour of the defendants. The learned Munsif upheld the defendant's contention and dismissed the suit on that ground.

On appeal, the learned Subordinate Judge held that the plaint did disclose a sufficient cause of action and that the plaintiffs were not precluded from bringing a fresh suit though the question of title involved in the present suit was the same as that in the previous suit. In this view, the learned Subordinate Judge reversed the decision of the first Court and remanded the suit for trial on the merits. The present appeal is directed against that order of the lower Appellate Court. My submission to your Lordships would be that the present suit is barred by the provision of Order II, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code. The cause of action of the present suit is alleged by the plaintiffs to arise in April 1915. The previous suit in which the same question of title as the present was involved was instituted in May 1915. That is, a month after the arising of the cause of action of the present suit. The plaintiffs ought to have included the present cause of action in that suit. The question, therefore, to be decided is, whether the present suit is barred under Order II, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code. I would submit that it does. Refers to Khardah Company, Limited v. Durga Charan Chandra (1). The causes of action in the two suits being identical, the later suit ought to fail according to the recent ruling just cited. I would, therefore, pray that the order of remand be set aside on the grounds urged and the judgment of the learned Munsif be upheld.

Babu S. K. Sinha, for the Respondents.—The previous suit was on altogether a different basis. That suit was by the plaintiffs for a declaration of their right to property different from the present which the plaintiffs claimed as reversionary heirs of Mukta Kesi, and further they prayed for the setting aside of the document on which the defendants based their claim. In the present suit the cause of action is different. The plaintiffs state that they, having been dispossessed from the land in dispute which they had been in possession of for three years after Mukta Kesi's death, hence the dispossession is the cause of action in present suit which is quite distinct from that in the previous suit. The mere fact that the cause of action in the present suit arose before the institution of the previous suit does not preclude the plaintiffs from bringing the present action. Order II, rule 2 does not operate as a bar to this suit. Refers to Rajah of Pittapur v. Surya Row (2), Amanat Bibi v. Imdad Husain (3). I would, therefore, submit that the order of the learned Subordinate Judge has been passed on a right view of the law.

Babu Hemendranath Sen replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—The question involved in this appeal is, whether the suit is barred under Order II, rule 2, of the Civil Procedure Code.

The suit was for recovery of possession of the lands in dispute on the allegation that the plaintiff had been dispossessed by the defendants.

The plaintiff's case was, that the land originally belonged to one Ganga Das Roy, that on the death of the latter the property devolved on his sons, on their death again their mother, Mukta Keshi, obtained it by inheritance, and that the plaintiffs, as the nearest agnates of Ganga Das, had succeeded to the property on the death of Mukta Keshi, they being the reversionary heirs. It is alleged that the plaintiffs succeeded to the property on the death of Mukta Keshi in 1913, and were in possession of it until dispossessed by the defendants on the 17th April 1915.

A previous suit was instituted by the plaintiffs on the 17th May 1915 against the defendants for establishment of their right to some other property which the defendants claimed to hold under a deed of gift executed by Mukta Keshi describing it as her stridhan property. It is contended on behalf of the appellant that the claim in the present case ought to have been included in the previous suit inasmuch as the title upon which the previous, as well as the present, suit, were instituted, was the same, namely, that the plaintiff was the reversionary heir of Gunga Das; and, secondly, that the cause of action for the present suit, which is said to have arisen on the 17th April 1915, arose before the date of the previous suit instituted on the 17th May 1915.

Now, Order II, rule 2, says: "Every suit shall include the whole of the claim which the plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of the cause of action; but a plaintiff may relinquish any portion of his claim in order to bring the suit within the jurisdiction of any Court;" and sub section (2) of the section lays down; "Where a plaintiff omits to sue in respect of, or intentionally relinquishes, any portion of his claim, he shall not afterwards sue in respect of the portion so omitted or relinquished."

The question, therefore, is whether the present claim was in respect of the same cause of action on which the previous suit was instituted.

The mere fact that the title to the property in claim in both the suits is the same, and that the property is the same, does not necessarily show that the cause of action is the same. In the case of Rajah of Pittapur v. Surya Row (2) the plaintiff sued to recover immoveable property in consequence of having been improperly turned out of possession, and afterwards sued to recover from the same defendant moveable property in consequence of its wrongful detention, and it was held that the causes of action were distinct. In that case, although the right to the immoveable as well as to the moveable properties was based upon the same Will, it was held that the causes of action were separate. Their Lordships observed, with reference to section 7 of Act VIII of 1859: "That section does not say that every suit shall include every cause of action, or every claim which the party has, but, every suit shall include the whole of the claim arising out of the cause of action' —meaning the cause of action for which the suit is brought. The claim in respect of the personalty was not a claim arising out of the cause of action which existed in consequence of the defendants having improperly turned the plaintiffs out of possession of viravarum. It was a distinct cause of action altogether, and did not arise at all out of the other. It is not like the case of one conversion of several things. There the act of conversion of the several things is one cause of action, and you cannot bring an action for the conversion of one of the things, and a separate action for the conversion of another. The conversion of the whole is one claim and one cause of action." See also the case of Amanat Bibi v. Imdad Husain (3) and the recent case of Saminathan Chetty v. Palaniappa Chetty (4). In the last case, after referring to section 34 of the Ceylon Civil Procedure Code, which corresponds to Order II, rule 2 of the Indian Code of Civil Procedure, Lord Moulton observed: "It is directed to securing the exhaustion of the relief in respect of a cause of action, and not to the inclusion in one and the same action of different causes of action, even though they arise from the same transactions. The first part of the clause makes it incumbent on the plaintiff to include the whole of his claim in his action. The second portion makes it incumbent on him to ask for the whole of his remedies."

On behalf of the appellant stress was laid on the fact that the cause of action for the present suit arose on the 17th April 1915 and that, therefore, this claim ought to have been included in the previous suit.

But that was a suit which was instituted for establishment of right to certain property as being the property of the sons of Ganga Das and for a declaration that the deed of gift set up by the defendant was a collusive transaction and did not affect the right of the plaintiff. It was a suit, therefore, by the reversionary heirs for declaration of their right and for possession after setting aside the deed of gift. The cause of action in that suit arose on the day of Mukta Keshi's death, which occurred in Baisak 1319, corresponding to April 1913. In the present suit, on the other hand, the plaintiffs alleged that they were in possession for three years after the death of Mukhta Keshi and had been dispossessed by the defendant. The cause of action in the present case was that the plaintiff, as the reversionary heirs of Mukta Keshi, succeeded to the estate and were in actual possession for three years after her death, and that they were dispossessed on the 17th April 1915. The causes of action, therefore, were distinct and the mere fact that the cause of action for the present suit arose before the date of the institution of the previous suit, did not make it obligatory on the plaintiff to include the claim in the previous suit The Judicial Committee pointed out that all the causes of action are not to be joined in the same suit but the whole claim arising out of the same cause of action—meaning the cause of action for which the suit is brought.

We have been referred, on behalf of the appellant, to the recent case of Khardah Company Limited v. Durga Charan Chandra (1). In that case the suit to recover possession of certain immoveable property was held to have been barred by the provisions of Order II, rule 2 of the Civil Procedure Code by reason of the plaintiff not having claimed the property in a previous suit which the plaintiff instituted for recovery of damages in respect of the demolition of a building on the land. The learned Judges (Chitty and Panton, JJ.) held the causes of action to be the same in the two suits on the ground that dispossession took place before the institution of the previous suit for damages. It appears that in that case the demolition of the building took place at the same time when the defendant dispossessed the plaintiff from the land, and in fact the dispossession was effected by the demolition of the building itself. That being so, the claim for damages and the claim for possession might be considered as having arisen out of the same cause of action. We think, therefore, that that case is distinguishable from the present one. In any case, we must follow the decisions of the Privy Council cited above.

We are of opinion that the order of remand made by the Court below is right. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Malicious prosecution—Suit to recover damages—Reasonable and probable cause, what is—Malice—Presumption.

In order to protect him from the liability of having to pay damages for malicious prosecution a prosecutor's belief in the guilt of the accused must be based on grounds which, or some of which, are reasonable and arrived at after due inquiry. [p. 521, col. 2.]

Where the desire to prosecute the accused arises, not from an honest belief in his guilt but from the disappointment experienced by the prosecutor in being prevented from reaping the fruits of a purchase, it cannot be said that he had reasonable and probable cause for the prosecution. [p. 521, col. 2.]

Malice might be presumed from the want of reasonable and probable cause. [p. 522, col. 1.]

First appeal from the decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge, Nasik, in Suit No. 25 of 1917.

Mr. Bahadurji (with him Mr. J. R. Gharpure), for the Appellant.

Sir Thomas Strangman, (with him Mr. D. C. Virkar), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—This is a first appeal from the decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge of Nasik who rejected the plaintiff's claim for damages against the defendant for malicious prosecution. It appears that one Vithu had obtained some disafforested land from Government on new terms in 1915. In October he sold the crop to the defendant. When the defendant wished to reap the crop, a claim was made on the first occasion by plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 4, and two days later the claim was renewed with the addition of plaintiff No. 1 who purported to have bought the crop from plaintiff No. 3. The defendant alleged that he had been assaulted by the servants of the plaintiff, and had left the ground under the honest belief that the plaintiffs had no right whatever to reap the crop and had been guilty of a criminal offence. He thereupon lodged a complaint of theft against the plaintiffs. In the first Court the plaintiffs were convicted but on appeal the conviction was reversed.

The question now arises, whether the first plaintiff who alone appeals is entitled to a decree for damages. In these cases the first thing is to ascertain the facts, the next step is to ascertain whether on those facts there was a reasonable and probable cause for instituting the prosecution, and finally whether there is malice. In a trial before a Judge and Jury, the Jury have first to ascertain the facts: then it is a matter for the Judge to decide whether there is a reasonable and probable cause; and then the question of malice will be one for the Jury. The learned Trial Judge has rightly laid down what the plaintiffs had to prove in order to succeed. He came to the conclusion that they had not proved that the defendant had no reasonable and probable cause for instituting the prosecution against them; that he came to an honest belief in the guilt of the accused based on a full conviction founded upon reasonable grounds, and there was a state of circumstances existing which, assuming them to be true, would lead any ordinary and cautious person to the conclusion that the person charged was probably guilty of the crime imputed.

The facts, however, are far from clear from the record. Undoubtedly, Vithu had leased the ground from Government, and undoubtedly Rama had raised the crop which was ready to be reaped in October. But in what circumstances Rama had raised the crop is by no means certain. It is alleged that he raised the crop on behalf of Vithu on payment of a specific sum, and therefore, he had no title to reap the crop, and, therefore, no title to dispose of the crop in favour of the first plaintiff. But this is by no means clear on the evidence. We are perfectly entitled to assume that Rama thought that he had got a good title to the crop and had a right to dispose of it to the first plaintiff. Undoubtedly, Vithu disposed of the crop to the defendant. But on the day when the defendant was dispossessed the first plaintiff produced a receipt for the amount that he paid to Rama. It was, therefore, a case of a purchaser of a crop finding that there was some ground for thinking that his vendor had not played fair with him. The defendant had no particular reason for knowing who had raised the crop until he was confronted with a person who asserted a title to reap the crop. Taking those as the facts in the case, could it be said that the defendant had reasonable and probable cause for instituting the prosecution? Had he an honest belief in the guilt of the accused, or, rather, was not the desire to prosecute the accused one which arose from the disappointment he experienced when he found that he would not be able to reap the fruits of his purchase from Vithu without a contest? And it is a common experience in this country that persons in that position are far too apt to rush off to a Criminal Court as the speediest method of establishing their case. On a due consideration of the evidence, I have come to the conclusion that the facts did not warrant any reasonable and probable cause for instituting the prosecution. I must mention that, placed in the position of a Jury, directed by the Judge that there was no reasonable and probable cause for instituting the prosecution, this would be a case in which one might safely infer malice for the purpose of giving the plaintiff a decree. The result must be then that the decree of the lower Court dismissing the plaintiff's claim must be reversed and there must be a decree in favour of the first plaintiff for Rs. 500 damages and costs throughout.

FAWCETT, J.—I concur. In the defendant's deposition in the suit he admits that, when the obstruction of the plaintiffs to the reaping of the crop occurred, he did not ask the plaintiffs as to why they were obstructing him. He also says he did not inquire as to what right the plaintiff Jamnadas or others had to the crops. Now, the fact that plaintiff No. 3, Rama, had cultivated the land and raised the crop in question is undisputed. The question whether Rama had a right to take the whole crop, as he alleges, or whether the right to the crop remained in the lessee, Vithu, is no doubt one that is open to dispute. Personally, I agree with the view which the District Magistrate took in his judgment in the criminal case that the probabilities are strongly in favour of Rama's assertion that, under the arrangement he made with Vithu, he had a right to the crop. I think that the Subordinate Judge is not justified in his conclusion that the probabilities are in favour of Vithu's assertion of a right to the crop, and that he erred in holding it was quite impossible that Vithu should have arranged to let this land to Rama in February or March 1915, as the plaintiffs stated he did. It is no doubt the case that the actual kabuliyat and possession did not take place until later on in April and May. But, undoubtedly, correspondence must have been going on in connection with the disposal of the disafforested lands, and it is to my mind quite possible that Vithu may have known in February that he was going to be given a particular piece of this disafforested land. However that may be, still as Rama, plaintiff No 3, had actually raised the crop, the defendant, when he found him, or his alleged assignees, claiming the crop, should as a prudent person have made inquiry into the claim; and I do not think he could honestly have thought that that claim was necessarily an untrue one and that plaintiff No. 3 and those who assisted him were mere thieves who were taking the crop without any right to do so. I take the law to be that the prosecutor's belief in the guilt of the accused must be based on grounds which, or some of which, are reasonable and arrived at after due inquiry. That is how it is summarised in Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume XIX, page 681, Article 1451. Here the defendant admittedly did not make due inquiry, and the facts are such as to contradict his plea that he had an honest belief in the guilt of the plaintiffs. No doubt, it very likely was a case of plaintiff No. 1 and the defendant each trying to get hold of the crop in order that his particular debt might be satisfied out of it. In the one case Rama, plaintiff No. 3, was a debtor of plaintiff No. 1 and in the other case Vithu was a debtor of the defendant. But this does not affect the fact that plaintiff No. 3 had at any rate some prima facie justification for asserting a title to the crop, and the fact that, as appears from the evidence, the defendant had been dunning Vithu for his debt may explain why Vithu assigned the crop to the defendant in spite of his having already transferred his title to it to plaintiff No. 3. It is a form of dishonesty which is not of an uncommon character. I think, therefore, that the plaintiffs have succeeded in showing that the defendant had no reasonable and probable cause for the prosecution of the plaintiff, and, having regard to the frequency of such cases, it is in my opinion very desirable that, when a prosecution is shown to have been without such reasonable and probable cause, the Court should assist the persons who have suffered thereby in recovering damages for the malicious prosecution. The judgment of the lower Court to my mind is a very one-sided one and, after going carefully through the evidence I think the view there taken is one entirely against the weight of the evidence.

On the question of malice, I think that, in addition to the inference arising from the want of reasonable and probable cause, there are clear indications that the defendant's main object was to get the plaintiffs in any case imprisoned and so cause them injury. As is pointed out in the judgment of District Magistrate in the appeal that he heard, the defendant did not go to the Police to report the theft, but preferred to file a complaint, and, in doing this, he did not go to the Second Class Magistrate but to the Third Class Magistrate. Further, the complaint was made on a holiday when there would be difficulties about the plaintiff obtaining bail. The result was, that they were two days in the lock up and after their conviction four days in jail. The circumstances, I think, therefore, show that the defendant was actuated by spite or ill-will towards the plaintiffs, and by improper motives in bringing the prosecution. I accordingly concur that the plaintiffs are entitled to recover damages.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of a suit in which the plaintiff, who alleged that he was a collateral of the alienor, sought a declaration in respect of eight different alienations that his reversionary rights should not be affected thereby. The first Court disposed of the suit on the merits and granted the plaintiff a decree. The defendants, alienees, appealed to the District Judge who accepted the appeal and dismissed the suit with costs throughout on the ground that there had been misjoinder of defendants and that the defect was not cured by section 99 of the Civil Procedure Code as, "on the whole," the learned Judge "was inclined to think that the defendants very likely had been prejudiced in their defence" by the misjoinder. Further, the learned Judge thought that the plaintiff, by joining all the alienees in one suit, had evaded the payment of the proper Court-fee.

On the question of misjoinder we are of opinion that the learned District Judge's decision was wrong. The language of Order I, rule 3, Civil Procedure Code, is extremely wide, and even if there be only one question common to all the cases, that is sufficient to justify a joint trial. In the case before us there was at least one question common to all the transactions, namely, whether the plaintiff by reason of his relationship to the alienor was competent to maintain the suit Moreover, this question of law is concluded by the decision Ralia Ram v. Mulk Raj (1).

Even, however, if there had been misjoinder, we do not think that the lower Appellate Court would have been justified in dismissing the suit on that ground alone. It was not one of the written grounds of appeal to the lower Appellate Court that the misjoinder had in fact prejudiced the defence, and the reasons given by the learned Judge for his conclusion that the defence had been prejudiced are vague. Before us, also, the learned Counsel for the respondents is unable to point out to us in any palpable manner how the joinder prejudiced the defence.

With regard to the learned Judge's remark that a joinder of several causes of action is prejudicial to the fisc, we refer him to section 17 of the Court Fees Act which provides for the levy of Court fees on each subject comprised in a multifarious suit.

For these reasons, we accept this appeal, set, aside the order of dismissal of the suit, and remand the case under Order XLI, rule 23, Civil Procedure Code, to the District Court for disposal on merits. Costs in this Court shall be costs in the case. Court fee on the memorandum of appeal to be refunded.

MARTAND TRIMBAK GADRE—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47—Execution of decree—Stay of execution, order granting—Appeal, whether lies.

An order granting a stay of execution is not a decree nor does it fall within the purview of section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code. No appeal, therefore, lies against such an order.

First appeal from the decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge, Poona in Suit No. 110 of 1918.

Mr. H. G. Kulkarni, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. V. Nijsure, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The plaintiff applied in darkhast No. 138 of 1918 for a stay of execution proceedings for the execution of the decree in Suit No. 69 of 1915, pending the disposal of his Suit No. 110 of 1918, in which he prayed for a declaration that the decree in Suit No. 69 of 1915 was void and incapable of execution as against him.

The First Class Subordinate Judge of Poona made an order for stay of execution in darkhast No. 138 of 1918 pending the disposal of the plaintiff's suit, on the plaintiff's furnishing security to the extent of Rs. 11,000.

The question now arises whether that is an appealable order. It can only be appealable if it is an order under section 47. In section 47 no mention is made of an order for stay of execution. The words which appear at the end of section 244 (c) in the Code of 1882, "or to the stay of execution thereof" have been omitted. It is argued that the words are omitted, because they are unnecessary, the question regarding the stay of execution being a question regarding the execution of a decree. Referance must be made to section 2 in which "a decree" is defined. It is provided that "decree shall be deemed to include the rejection of a plaint and the determination of any question within section 47,"

It is therefore, intended that orders made under section 47, as being in the nature of decrees, should be appealable as decrees. It is difficult to imagine that the Legislature thought that an order for the stay of execution would be considered in any way as in the nature of a decree and that, therefore, it should be deemed to be included within the term 'decree'. A question relating to the stay of execution is within the discretion of the Court to which the application is made, and it is certainly not desirable to extend the number of appealable orders unless there is distinct authority for such an extension.

I note this is the view taken by Mr. Mulla in his commentary, while the opposite view is taken by Mr. Woodroffe.

The appeal, therefore, must be dismissed with costs.

FAWCETT, J.—I concur. I would only add one further argument in favour of the view that no appeal lies. No doubt the words "questions relating to the execution of a decree" are very wide and prima facie cover a question regarding stay of execution of a decree. But in construing the words of section 47 the Court is entitled to have regard to the fact that the corresponding section of the old Code contains an express reference to a stay of execution, which has been omitted in the present section. I do not think that this omission is necessarily due to its being considered that the previous words of the section were wide enough to cover this particular question. I think it is very likely that it was considered that a suit would never be brought in regard to the mere question of a stay of execution and that it was, therefore, unnecessary to make the section cover such a question.

Companies Act (VII of 1913), s. 162 (6), scope of —Winding up by Court, when to be ordered.

Though a Court is not bound to construe clause (6) of section 162 of the Companies Act as only covering grounds of a like nature with those specified in clauses (1) to (5) of the section, yet it will require grounds of a like magnitude before acting under the clause, and it is only in extreme cases that it will, at the suggestion of the minority, disregard the wishes of the domestic forum, and condemn the company to extinction. [p. 525, col. 2.]

Messrs. Giles and Burjorji, for the Petitioners.

Messrs. Leutaigne and N. M. Cowasji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a petition by fifteen share-holders in the Nath Singh Oil Company, Limited, for an order winding-up the Company by the Court under section 162, clauses V and VI, of the Indian Companies Act, 1913

Previous to the hearing, petitioners' Advocates wrote to the respondents' Advocates (Exhibit A) that they did not intend to proceed with the ground under clause V, but wished to amend their petition by adding a new paragraph 23. At the hearing, petitioners' Advocate submitted that the proposed amendment should be allowed.

The amendment was opposed by the respondents' Advocate on the ground that it was contradictory to the allegations contained in the petition, and that it converted what was a subsidiary ground into the main ground, and that the respondents would be prejudiced in the conduct of the case, if the amendment were allowed. In my opinion, the admendment is not contradictory of the allegations in the petition, as it is quite possible that a Company might be unable to pay its debts, and yet have very valuable assets to realize. Also, the bulk of the allegations in the petition in no way relate to the financial position of the Company, but to the conduct of Baij Nath Singh, the predominant share holder, which, if relevant at all, could only be relevant under clause VI of section 162. Without the amendment, it would be impossible for the Court to try the real issue between the parties. It would not be in the interests of justice to dismiss the petition on such a technical ground only to have the same presented afresh with the consequent delay and expense. I accordingly allowed the amendment. As amended, it is submitted that none of the allegations in the petition would justify the Court in making the order, as clause VI must be read ejusdem generis with clauses I to V. If clause VI must be so read, I agree; for it cannot be contended that any of these allegations are of a similar nature to that given in any of these first five clauses. In support of this objection it is argued that the words of clause VI of section 162 are identical with those of section 79 of the English Companies Act of 1862, and section 129 of the English Act of 1908, and this Court should follow the Engligh decisions on the subject.

The ejusdem generis doctrine laid down by Lord Cottenham in the Agricultural Cattle Insurance Co., In re (1), in construing similar words in the Joint Stock Companies Winding up Act of 1848, has been followed by Lord Cairns in the Suburban Hotel Co, In re (2), in dealing with a petition to wind-up under the fifth head of section 79 of the Companies Act of 1862. It is a decision of the Court of Appeal in which Turner, L. J., concurred with the conclusion and the reasons, though he died before judgment was delivered. Lord Cairns was prepared to admit a kind of exception to the rule in cases where the whole substratum of the Company had gone. I have been referred by both sides to a great number of decisions, and I think the trend of the decisions is an attempt to get away from the ejusdem generis doctrine which was found to act as a fetter on the discretion which the "just and equitable" clause gave to the Court. The fact that long ago the Engligh Courts were compelled to recognise exceptions to the strict rule in cases where the substratum of the company had gone, or where it was impossible to carry on the business of the Company by reason of a deadlock, shows that almost from the first statement of the ejusdem generis doctrine the Courts were prepared to refuse to be bound by it, for it cannot be contended that either of the two exceptions cited were of the same nature as the grounds previously specified in the section. The modern view of the English Courts is, in my opinion, accurately stated by the late Master of the Rolls, Lord Cozens-Hardy, in Yenidje Tobacco Co., In re (3): "It has been urged upon us that, although it is admitted that the 'just and equitable' clause is not to be limited to cases ejusdem generis, it has nevertheless been held, according to the authorities, not to apply except where the substratum of the Company has gone, or where there is a complete deadlock. Those are the two instances which are given, but I should be very sorry, so far as my individual opinion goes, to hold that they are strictly the limits of the 'just and equitable' clause." A perusal of recent decisions Bleriot Manufacturing Aircraft Company, Limited, In re (4), American Pioneer Leather Co., In re (5) and the Newbridge Sanitary Steam Laundry, In re (6) leads me to the conclusion that the Courts of the United Kingdom have ceased to observe the ejusdem generis rule or have so widened it, that it has ceased as such to be a fetter upon the discretion of the Court. The Indian Companies Act of 1882, by section 128, clause (e), gave the ejusdem generis doctrine the force of law in India by adding the words "whenever for any reason of a like nature." These words are omitted from section 162, clause VI, of the Indan Companies Act, 1913, which follows the words of the English Acts. And, in refusing to read clause VI ejusdem generis with the preceding five clauses, I am supported by the decisions of the Courts of the United Kinkdom to which I have already referred. Though the Court is not, in my opinion, bound to construe clause VI as only covering grounds of a like nature with those previously specified, a perusal of the cases brought under the "just and equitable" clause shows that it has always required grounds of a like magnitude, and that it is only in extreme cases that it will, at the suggestion of the minority, disregard the wishes of the domestic forum, and condemn the Company to extinction.

The grounds relied on by the petitioners have been ranged under eleven heads, viz :—

(1) Juggling with shares so as to render the provision limiting the voting of vendor's shares abortive.

(2) Juggling with the constitution and personnel of the Board of Directors, so as to remove any director who showed independent tendencies.

(3) Vendor's conduct as regards the Managing Directorship.

(4) Corrupt return to the vendor of 17 well-sites in 1916 which he had agreed to sell to the Company.

(5) Abuse by the vendor of position as Managing Director and Company's agent to gain personal advantage at the expense of the Company by using the Company's tools and materials.

(6) The carrying on by the vendor of a separate oil-mining business in breach of his agreement.

(7) Breach of undertaking by the vendor to protect the Company's interest in regard to 12 oil well-sites transferred by the vendor to the Company, and active opposition by vendor to the Company's interests in regard to such sites.

(8) Wrongful substitution of well-site No. 38 for No. 43.

(9) Efforts of vendor to get rid of the managing agents in order to have a free hand.

(10) Efforts to remove the registered office of the Company to Yenangyaung for the same purpose.

(11) Wrongful withholding from the Board of Directors and the managing agents of accounts of stores since 1st June 1918.

It is not alleged that each of these grounds is sufficient in itself. The substantive charge is the fourth relating to the 17 well sites. The fifth and sixth directly spring from it. Most of the other grounds are rather facts qualifying this main charge than distinctive substantive charges. It is necessary to examine the matter of the 17 well-sites with some detail.

Five days before the registration of the company, the vendor Baij Nath Singh entered into an agreement with the first petitioner, B. Cowasji, as trustee for the Company. A certified copy of the agreement is attached to the petition on the file. It is dated 25th May 1908. It recites that the vendor has, (a) a number of oil wells some of which he has worked, and others are lying idle for want of capital, and (b) certain well-sites about which there are revenue proceedings. He agrees inter alia to sell 44 oil wells, 13 oil well-sites, the numbers and locality of which are stated in the first schedule, and one well-site subject to Revenue Case No. 150 of 1903 of Yenangyaung, that is, in all 58 wells and sites. He covenants to give a good title. The consideration is to be Rs. 51,720 for each well or site when duly transferred to the Company, to be satisfied by allotment to vendor of 5,172 fully paid shares of rupees ten each. Vendor was to retain possession until incorporation, and adoption of the agreement. The vendor further agreed to transfer the 12 well-sites mentioned in the second schedule as the subject of litigation with the Burma Oil Company in revenue proceedings without getting any shares in payment. These are referred to, for short, as the 12 free sites and are the subject of the 7th ground of complaint. The Nath Singh Oil Company was incorporated on the 30th May 1908. The Memorandum of Association specifies, as the first object of the Company, to adopt, carry into effect and seal the agreements mentioned in Article 3 of the Articles of Association. The capital of the Company is stated to be Rs. 40,00,000 divided into 4,00,000 shares of Rs. 10 each. The chief object of the Company is stated to be to acquire and develop Baij Nath Singh's properties in Yenangyaung consisting of 58 valueable oil wells and well sites.

For some reason the vendor did not transfer the 58 wells and sites as agreed but only 36 in 1908, for which he was allotted 1,86,192 shares by way of payment. Shares to the extent of 51,931 were allotted to various applicants in 1908, and since then no allotment has been made. Of the proceeds of those cash shares one lakh went to the vendor under the agreement of 25th May 1908 and the balance of over four lakhs constituted the working capital of the Company. The agreement was adopted without modification at the first Directors' meeting on 30th June 1908. The reason of the vendor's failure to convey the balance of 22 well-sites to the Company is not explained ; but I think we may take it that the correct reason is as stated by

Mr. Paton at the Directors' meeting on 29th November 1911, (Exhibit F 2) that "the transfer of the sites referred to has all this time been excused on the allegation that they were resumed sites, and could not be transferred to the Company on that account." At the same meeting the vendor stated that he had transferred 24 well-sites to the Company's name on the 8th December 1911; that they were all resumed sites, and that the resumption was revoked about September 1911; that as to the sites not yet transferred, all were in dispute except one No. 38 settled in his favour, but he expected four named ones to be decided by the 12th January 1912, and that, as regards the remaining five sites, he could not say if he ever could tender them, but would do so if he obtained them. This is an important statement. He tells the Board that there are five sites which he may never be able to transfer. He has already had 24 sites put into the Company's name, and in these 24 are included 12 which had been awarded to him by the Revenue Officer in the litigation with the Burma Oil Company. The Board resolved to accept 12 of the tender 24 sites as satisfaction in respect of the 12 free sites, but declined to accept the other 12 sites until (a) the date of resumption, (b) the validity of the title, and (c) the present value were ascertained. In ascertaining the present value, the Board stipulated that due regard was to be had to the comparative value of the sites which the vendor was unable to deliver. The vendor objected to any inquiry as to the value, but agreed to other parts of the resolution. The Board at this time consisted of Messrs. Cowasjee and Paton, representatives of the cash shareholders, and the vendor, and it is noteworthy that they do not suggest that they would be justified in refusing to take delivery of the well-sites by reason of the delay of over three years, thus leading one to infer that the delay was due to causes beyond the vendor's control. At the end of 1911, the Board was increased to five, Messrs. Desai and Pandia coming on as additional members and Mr. Turner taking the place of Mr. Paton.

In the latter part of 1911, Mr. Desai (afterwards a Director) and Mr. Warren of the managing agents' firm visited Yenangyaung and made a report, part of which is put in as Exhibit 4-A. In this report Messrs. Desai and Warren state: "The Company's manager and field manager, besides others at Yenangyaung well acquainted with the field, are of opinion that out of the 24 sites said to be transferred by Mr. Nath Singh on the 8th December 1911 only Nos. 2911, 3404, 3408 and 3438 (one of the 12 free well-sites) are of any value, a value which is rather doubtful. The rest are of no value at all." This information was no doubt in the minds of Messrs. Cowasji and Paton when they resolved, as we have seen in Exhibit F 2, and also explains why the Board seems to have taken no steps to carry out that resolution, and dispose of this question during 1912. Their failure in this respect is mainly responsible for much of the confusion and irregularity that subsequently ensued.

Both sides agree that difference arose in the year 1912 between Mr. Cowasji and the vendor. Mr. Cowasji is the largest of the cash share holders, having invested nearly a lakh of rupees in the Company's shares. He was active in the formation of the Company, and acted as Chairman of the Board of Directors from the first. He was guarantor of the vendor's account with the Bank of Bengal to the extent of some two and a half lakhs. Mr. Cowasji withdrew his guarantee, with the result that the Bank required payment, and the vendor was in financial straits, and had to borrow at high interest from Mr. Abba and a Mr. Jamal. Mr. Cowasji may have been perfectly justified in withdrawing his guarantee, but the vendor, who attributed his financial difficulties to Mr. Cowasji's action, not unnaturally determined to get rid of him and the other Directors who supported him. I should add that although the vendor had a vast predominance in shares, by clause 2 of the basic agreement, for voting purposes the vendor's shares only carried one vote for ten shares whilst in the hands of the vendor. This provision gave the cash shareholders a substantial majority in voting power over the vendor. The result of the vendor's financial difficulties was, that some 30,000 shares found their way into Abba's name on the register, and by the latter's help the vendor got the Company in general meeting to increase the number of Directors to ten, and to select as new Directors five of his nominees, including Mr. S. S. Halkar, who seems from the minutes, and the Court records in the Abba and Jamal litigation, to have acted for some time as the vendor's legal adviser. From May 1913, the control of the Company passed out of the hands of the cash share-holders to the nominees of the vendor. The next step of the vendor's party was to reduce the Board of Directors from ten to five, and eliminate their opponents. This was done about July 1913. The vendor finally ejected Mr. Cowasji from the Board in February 1914.

Though the vendor had thus got rid of all representatives of the cash share-holders, he still found himself in the toils of his creditors, Messrs. Abba and Jamal, both of whom by this time he had placed on the Board of Directors. It is admitted that he entered into an agreement purporting to sell his shares to them at a rupee a share, and that in 1916 litigation was going on between them, the vendor contending that the transaction was one of mortgage, and not a sale. The vendor became Managing Director under under Article 72 from the beginning, but ceased in November 1911 when his mortgage shares ceased to be registered in his name, and he did not again become Managing Director till 4th June 1913.

Though the Board refused to accept transfer of the balance of the 12 well sites in 1911 and 1912, drilling on these sites started early in 1913 with the Company's materials and tools and at their expense. The vendor says this was done at the instance of the Field Manager and it is pointed out that he was not then Managing Director. He was, however, the only Director resident at Yenangyaung and I have no doubt that the work was done at the vendor's instance, and under his directions. This drilling seems to have gone on during 1914 and 1915 with the result that on 9th December 1915 it was brought to the Board's notice that a number of the unaccepted well-sites had not only been drilled, but were producing. All this has an important bearing on the new Board's action in dealing with the 17 well-sites. We have seen that the vendor was anxious to transfer the well-sites and get his shares in 1911-12. I am asked to believe that he was equally anxious in 1916. This I cannot accept. Vendor's agreement with Abba and Jamal made it unsafe and impolitic for him to get any fresh shares until the question of the agreement was finally decided. Abba and Jamal were naturally keen to have the well-sites accepted and the shares issued to the vendor. The question was postponed by the Board on the 6th January 1916. (Vide Exhibit B 2). Vendor's brothers put in their claim that the well-sites were joint Hindu family property on the 11th January 1916 (exhibit B-3). It was brought up by vendor asking that shares be issed to him for the 17 well-sites, at the Board meeting of 29th January 1916. This I think, he did in pursuance of his agreement (Exhibit F in Civil Regular No. 62 of 1916) with Abba and Jamal, but it is not material whether he was obliged to do so or not. Messrs. Abba and Jamal voted in favour of this being done. Messrs. Halkar and Naikwara voted against it, and by Mr. Halkar's casting vote it was decided that the 17 well-sites be not accepted, and that operations on them be suspended. I am asked to hold that, in doing so, Messrs. Halkar and Naikwara were merely carrying out the policy of the earlier Board, and opposing the interests of the vendor on behalf of the Company. But some of the sites had now been proved to be valuable as they were drilled and producing. If these two Directors, who were elected as nominees of the vendor in this important matter, were acting contrary to the wishes of the vendor, we would expect that they would meet with the fate of Mr. Cowasji and his friends at the next meeting for the election of Directors. But this fate did not overtake them. They were duly elected. Messrs. Abba and Jamal brought up the question again on the 29th February 1916 (Exhibit C-2), but they are again worsted by Mr. Halkar's casting vote. At the Board meeting of 18th May 1916, by his casting vote Mr. Halkar secured the relection of the vendor as Managing Director, and at the meeting of 29th May 1916, the vendor repaid the compliment by seconding Mr. Naikwara's motion that Mr. Halkar be Chairman of the Company for the ensuing year. At the annual general meeting of 20th May 1916, we find Mr. Halkar as Chairman ruling that Messrs. Abba and Jamal cannot vote in respect of shares registered in their names, because there is litigation over those shares, and thus be prevented the control of the Company passing from the vendor's hands to those of Messrs. Abba and Jamal. At the same meeting, Mr. Naikwara is relected a Director on the proposal of Mr. Halkar, seconded by the vendor. From all this it seems clear that in rejecting the well-sites and refusing to issue shares, Messrs. Halkar and Naikwara were carrying out the wishes of the vendor, and were primarily concerned in assisting him in his struggle with Messrs. Abba and Jamal At the Board meeting on 24th May 1916 (Exhibit C-7), Messrs. Naikwara and Halkar, by means of Halkar's casting vote, decided that the 17 well-sites, and those still to be tendered be not accepted at the price specified in the principal agreement, and on 1st July 1916 by a like vote they caused the title-deeds of the 17 well-sites to be returned to vendor's Advocates Messrs. Cowasji and Das with the intimation that the Company did not relinquish possession. The meaning of this surious provision is explained in Mr. Halkar's first resolution, (Exhibit C-9), at the meeting of 9th September 1916, as a lien for expenditure on the sites till settlement of accounts,

In consequence of the Board's rejection of the well-sites and their return of the grants to the vendor, the vendor applied for their transfer before the Warden of the oil fields from the Company's name to the vendor's, and the field manager Willes consented to this being done on behalf of the Company. * * * It does not seem that even now the petitioners are willing that the 17 well sites should be taken over. That being so, it is difficult to hold that the vendor has committed such a breach of the original agreement in this respect, as would justify the Court in winding-up the Company. Proir to May 1913, while the petitioners controlled the Company they had refused to take over the sites, and failed to take any steps to get the price lowered on any ground of delay, in the belief that the sites were of little or no value. Subsequently, when vendor got control of the Company, and the sites were proved to be of value, the vendor got his nominees to adopt the same policy, and to refuse to take the sites. Finally, he got the Company, after the petition was filed, to endorse this action at the general meeting of 19th August 1918. (Exhibit E-3). However improper and reprehensible the action of the vendor may have been in many respects throughout the transaction, I do not consider that it constitutes an adequate ground for winding-up the Company under section 162, clause VI. This is the main ground in the petition.

The fifth ground charges the vendor with abuse of his position as Managing Director and Company's agent to gain personal advantage at the expense of the Company by using the Company's materials and tools to drill and equip the wells which are now his property. I have already held that the drilling was done at the instance of the vendor and under his directions, as he was the only Director resident at Yenangyaung. I do not see anything wrong or adverse to the Company's interests in demonstrating the value of these properties. At this time there is no indication that the vendor had formed the design of drilling the wells at the Company's expense, and then getting the Company to reject them so that he could carry on an oil business independent of the Company. He does not dispute his liability to pay for the materials and tools used, but claims that the Company has got more than the value of these in the oil won before 19th July 1916. This is a matter of accounts, and not a ground for winding-up. It is argued for the respondent, B. N. Singh, that he has committed no breach of clause V of the principal agreement as there is a necessary inference that carrying on business has no reference to the well sites named therein. I can discover no such inference in the agreement, and the words of the clause are in no way ambiguous. It is further urged that as the Company failed to take the wells tendered, the vendor was forced to work the wells to save serious loss, pending settlement of the question. This might be important, if I were assessing the damages. On the facts before me, there seems to be a substantial breach of clause V, but such a breach, in my opinion, does not justify a winding up order under section 162, clause VI.

The seventh ground relates to vendor's action in regard to the 12 free sites which we have seen were accepted with the concurrence of vendor on the 29th December 1911. (Exhibit F-2.). Vendor obtained from the Board the title deeds of these well-sites for the purpose of protecting the Company's interests in certain litigation with the Burma Oil Company, Limited. Vendor claimed the wells as his own in his written statement, and endeavoured to get the warden to transfer the wells to his name. It is pleaded for respondent that his claim in the written statement was a ruse de guerre to defeat the claim of the Burma Oil Company. This explanation might be of some weight if the vendor had offered it to the Directors at the meeting of the 17th March 1917, (Exhibit C 23), but, instead, he states that his undertaking was to make over these 12 well-sites on the Company taking over and issuing shares for all the wells. With justice the vendor is accused of the grossest breach of faith in this matter. But at most it is a fraud that did not succeed, and as such it is not a ground for winding-up the Company under section 162, clause VI.

The eighth ground relates to the substitution of well No. 38 for No. 46. A great number of Exhibits has been put in regarding this question and the time spent on it was out of proportion to its importance. Both wells are specified in Schedule I of the principal agreement, but well No. 46 was delivered to the Company, and the vendor got 5,172 shares in payment in 1908. One Po Ya claimed a half share in this well, and filed a suit early in 1910 which vendor compromised in May 1910. The well was given to Po Ya, and he was to pay vendor Rs. 22,500. Vendor said nothing to the Board about the well till August 1920, when he mentioned that there was a claim by a Burman to this well, but said nothing about the compromise as he certainly should have done. Mr. Paton, a Director, heard about the compromise in March 1917, and no doubt was not favourably impressed by the conduct of his co-Director. Vendor offered either to buy out Po Ya, or to present another well in lieu of No. 46 (Exhibit 3 C). Mr. Cowasji was for accepting one or other alternative, but Mr. Paton was not satisfied. I need not go in detail into the Board's attempts to deal with the cancellation of the shares issued in respect of No. 46 which do not seem to have been very successful. They resolved to charge him interest on the face value of the shares, viz., Rs. 51,720. This they probably would have been entitled to do, if they had resolved that the issue of 5,172 vendor's shares in respect of well No. 46 was for no consideration, or for a consideration that had totally failed, and must consequently be charged for like other cash shares. Ultimately, the new Board (Halkar's) agreed to accept well No. 38 in lieu of No. 46 and abandoned the claim for interest from the vendor. There is nothing before me to show that well No. 38 is less valuable than well No. 46. If vendor had, like an honest man, informed the Board of the claim brought in 1910, no one could have taken serious exception to the substitution of one well for another. But neither this nor the vendor's concealment of the Burman's claim, and the compromise, constitutes a ground for winding-up under clause VI of section 162.

As regards the ninth and tenth grounds, the managing agents, since the formation of the Company, have been Messrs. Wightman & Co., who also act as secretary to the Company. One of the first Directors, Mr. Paton, was a member of this firm and two of the petitioners, Messrs. Nuding and Look, are members of the firm. The vendor regards the managing agents as hostile to him, and has used his best endeavours to have them removed. His direct efforts having failed, he carried a resolution removing the registered office of the Company from Rangoon to Yenangyaung. But, as this involves an alteration in the memorandum of association, it is inoperative without the sanction of the Court, which has not yet been asked for. However ill-advised the vendor's actions may have been in these respects they do not seem to be going beyond his legal rights as the predominant shareholder and as such controller of the Company.

COWASJI v. NATH SINGH OIL COMPANY LTD.

As regards the eleventh ground, the vendor having failed directly to rid himself of the managing agents has forced them to give notice of resignation by reducing the Rangoon office to a nullity. It is allegred by the petitioners that since 1st June 1917 no stores account has been furnished to the managing agents, and since 1st June 1918 no account of cash transactions has been furnished. The facts are not denied by the respondent, and to my mind constitute one of the most serious charges against the vendor. Whether he likes it or not, Rangoon is the headquarters of the Company where the Board of Directors meets, and where the secretariat office of the Company is situated. To cut off the head office from all sources of information regarding the assets and expenditure of the Company, is so indefensible that, if only the vendor's interests were concerned, I should be inclined to direct that the Company be wound-up, as the legal remedy for this flagrant abuse of power is not very clear, and probably not very effective. There are, however, a large body of share-holders unconnected with the vendor who do not ask for the extinction of the Company. Under the circumstances, to extinguish a flourishing Company would require the most abundant justification. And, bad as the vendor's conduct in this respect is admitted to be, I do not think that it is sufficient.

I shall deal very briefly with the first three grounds as it is not seriously argued that by themselves they would justify an order for winding up.

As regards the juggling with shares it is pointed out that the vendor has placed 101,000 shares in his wife's name and 8,500 in his brother's name in order to evade the limitation in voting power on vendor's shares held by vendor. Vendor was restricted from alienating shares for the first three years after incorporation. After the lapse of this period he could transfer shares without restriction. And it is pointed out that the vendor and his family hold more shares in the Company to-day than at the time of incorporation. This strongly points to his confidence in the Company, as well as the fact that he has not sought to make money out of the public after the usual manner of the unscrupulous large vendor share-holder. I am asked to hold that the wife and brother are benami holders of these shares for Baij Nath Singh, the real holder. If this were an application to decide what voting power the wife's and brother's shares carried, I would decide the question. But I decline to do so in the present proceedings, as the vendor was not acting unlawfully in transferring his shares at the time that he did, and the question cannot affect the application now made.

As regards juggling with the Board of Directors, it is admitted that vendor used his influence to increase and decrease the number of the Board, to outvote, and get rid of Directors who did not vote according to his wishes, and that he caused 500 of his shares to be registered in the name of one of his nominee Directors. I was asked to infer that the same thing had happened as regards Halkar's and Naikwara's shares. With regard to the latter, after a reference to the transfer register, and the several different periods when shares were registered in their names, or transferred by them, I am unable to draw any such inference. I am referred to vendor's conduct in making Willes, the field manager, a Director after he had been dismissed by the Board for alleged misconduct, and in making Mahabir Singh a Director while occupying the relatively menial position of a storekeeper at the oil fields. All this might justify a Rangoon share holder losing confidence in the vendor's intelligence or business integrity. But the Court has no more disciplinary powers over a share-holder in exercising his right of electing Directors, than over parliamentary electors in choosing members of the Legislature. In both instances, they may be swayed by unworthy motives, and may not choose fit and proper representatives, but for such action there is no legal redress. In my opinion, the facts proved in connection with the second charge form no ground for winding-up. There is nothing in his acting as Managing Director when his period of office had expired, or in his acts as Managing Director apart from those already considered which would justify an order for winding-up.

I am asked by the petitioner's Advocate to consider the cumulative effect of all the charges admitted or proved, which, if too weak singly, are sufficient when taken together. It is also urged that, if recourse is had to suits, some eight suits would be necessary to obtain the redress claimed. Reference has been made to Lord Davey's judgment in Burland v. Earle (7) and it is argued that internal fraud, such as unconscientious conduct of the Directors in conducting the Company's business, would not give a right of action to the petitioners who are minority share holders, and consequently if they cannot invoke section 162, clause V', they have no remedy. But what Lord Davey had in mind in fixing the limits of the dissentient share holders' rights to sue was that all other questions had to be settled by the domestic forum. He was not contemplating that conduct which, though not fraudulent enough or unconscientious enough to justify a separate suit, would be enough to justify the much more drastic and extraordinary remedy of extinguishing the Company. None of the cases cited in which orders for winding up have been granted on the petition of minority share-holders bears any resemblance to the present.

Lack of precedent is not a reason for refusing to act, but it suggests greater care before acting. Associations with limited liability have been constantly growing in number and power in the commercial life of the United Kingdom during the past eighty years. If facts similar to those in the present case constituted adequate ground for windidg up a Company we should certainly expect to find many such cases reported. That there are not such cases is, because winding up is an extraordinary remedy to be resorted to in extreme cases to put an end to an intolerable situation.

Taking all the facts into consideration, I am not satisfied that it would be just and equitable to hold that the Nath Singh Company, Limited, be wound-up. The petition is accordingly dismissed. But the conduct of Baij Nath Singh in connection with a great many of the matters in issue has been so improper and unconscientious that I depart from the ordinary rule that costs follow the event, and I direct that each party bear their own costs. Mr. Clay's costs are to be paid by the Company.

Presidency Small Cause Courts Act (XV of 1882), s. 19 (g)—Suit to recover stones of well wrongfully removed, whether cognisable by Small Cause Court.

A suit to recover certain stones forming part of a well, and said to have been wrongfully removed, or their value, does not fall under clause (g) of section 19 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, and is cognizable by a Presidency Small Cause Court, even though, in order to dispose of the suit, it is necessary to determine the question of title to the well. [p. 533, cols. 1 & 2.]

Petition, under section 115 of Act V of 1908, and section 107 of the Goverment of India Act, praying the High Court to revise the decision of the Court of Small Causes, Madras, in Full Bench Application No. 156 of 1919, in Small Cause Suit No. 7201 of 1919.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Messrs. S Duraisawmy Aiyangar and S. Rangasami Aiyangar, for the Petitioner.—The suit falls under clause (g) of section 19 of Act XV of 1882. The defendant claimed title to the well and the site on which it stood and it is necessary to determine that question to dispose of the suit. In a case under the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act it was held by this Court that where the suit involved not incidentally but necessarily the determination of a question of title it fell under the analogous provision of Article 11 of Schedule II of that Act. Vide Tirupati Razu v. Vissam Razu (1).

(1) 20 M. 155; 7 Ind. Dec. (N. s) 109.

CHARANDAS CHATURBHUJ v. CHHAGANLAL.

Mr. K. Rajah Aiyar, for the Respondent.—The suit is only for recovery of moveables. Its character is not altered by the Court having to adjudicate on the question of title to the wall. It satisfies the requirements necessary to bring it within the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court. The question of title is not interwoven with the relief claimed. See Puttangowda Mallangowda Patil v. Nilkanth Kalo Deshpande (2), Venkatarama Chetty, In re (3), Chintala Ragava Reddi v. Chintala Krishna Reddi (4) and Vema Rangiah Chetty v. Vajravelu Mudaliar (5).

JUDGMENT.—The question for our decision is, whether the Small Cause Court had jurisdiction to dispose of this case or whether it falls under clause (g) of section 19, Presidency Small Cause Courts Act (XV of 1882).

We agree with the learned Judges of the Small Cause Court that it does not. The suit as framed is certainly not one for the determination of a right or interest in immoveable property but simply to recover certain stones forming part of a well and said to have been wrongfully removed, or to recover their value. Defendant claimed title in the well, and the land in which it was situate, and it was doubtless necessary to determine this question of title in order to dispose of the suit. But we do not think this affects the character of the suit or brings it within the scope of section 19 (g), vide the decision of a Full Bench of the Bombay High Court, Puttangowda Mallangowda Patil v. Nilkanth Kalo Deshpande (2).

We have been referred to a case of this Court reported as Tirupati Raju v. Viswam Raju (1). The suit was of a totally different nature and appellant relies simply on a single phrase of the judgment, in which the learned Judges speak of the suit as involving 'not incidentally but necessarily' the determination of a title to land and as consequently falling under Article 11 of Schedule II of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, which corresponds to section 19 (g). With all respect, we have great difficulty in understanding the distinction suggested: unless the disposal of a suit necessarily involves the determination of a title it is difficult to see why the title should be determined at all. But whatever may have been the meaning of the learned Judges, the practice and the current of decisions in Madras have been consistent with Puttangowda Mallangowda Patil v. Nilkanth Kalo Deshpande (2) and we need only refer to three decisions of this Court:—Chintala Ragava Reddi v. Chintala Krishna Reddi (4), Vema Rangiah Chetty v. Vajravelu Mudaliar (5) and Venkatarama Chetty, In re (3).

We consider that the Small Cause Court had jurisdiction and we dismiss this petition with costs.

ALIBHOY KHUSAL 3RD PARTY—RESPONDENTS.

Letters Patent (Bom.), cl. 15—"Judgment," meaning of—Bombay High Court Rules, rr. 130, 131—Third party proceedings—Order refusing directions, whether judgment—Appeal, whether lies.

The word "judgment" in clause 15 of the Letters Patent means a decision which affects the merits of the question between the parties by determining some right or liability. It may be either final, or preliminary or interlocutory, the difference between them being that a final judgment determines the whole cause or suit, and a preliminary or interlocutory judgment determines only a part of it, leaving other matters to be determined. [p. 535, col. 1.]

An order refusing directions in third party proceedings under rules 130 and 131 of the Bombay High Court Rules is not a "judgment" within the meaning of clause 15 of the Letters Patent of that High Court and is not appealable under that clause. [p. 535, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The plaintiff filed this suit against the defendants for damages for breach of contract because the defendants failed to take delivery of 100 bales of cotton which they had contracted to buy for the September delivery 1918. On the 8th January 1920 leave was given to the defendants to issue a third party notice against one Alibhoy Khushal. The defendants claimed to be indemnified by Alibhoy Khushal in respect of the breach of the contract with the plaintiff, because Alibhoy surveyed the said bales and failed to take delivery of the same from the plaintiff under the delivery order which had been sent to him. The third party entered an appearance on the 8th of March. The defendant then took out a summons for directions. The third party proceedings have been introduced into this Court by rules, while the Code of Civil Procedure makes no mention at all of such procedure.

"If a third party appears pursuant to the third party notice, the defendant giving the notice may apply to the Court or Judge for directions, and the Court or Judge, upon the hearing of such application, may, if satisfied that there is a question proper to be tried as to the liability of the third party to make the contribution or indemnity claimed, in whole or in part, order the question of such liability, as between the third party and the defendant giving the notice, to be tried in such manner, at or after the trial of the suit as the Court or Judge may direct; and, if not so satisfied, may pass such decree as the nature of the case may require in favour of the defendant giving the notice against the third party."

Again, under rule 131 :—

"The Court or a Judge upon the hearing of the application mentioned in rule 130 may, if it shall appear desirable to do so, give the third party liberty to defend the suit, upon such terms as may be just, or to appear at the trial and take such part therein as may be just, and generally may order such proceedings to be taken documents to be delivered, or amendments to be made, and give such directions as to the Court or Judge shall appear proper for having the question most conveniently determined, and as to the mode and extent in or to which the third party shall be bound or made liable by the decree in the suit."

The first direction that was sought in the summons was that the third party, Alibhoy Khushal, should be made a party defendant to the suit and the second that he should be ordered to file his written statement within a fortnight or such other time as this Honourable Court might deem fit, and that he should also be ordered to file his affidavit of documents. These directions ought to have been asked for, if at all, under the Code, on the ground that Alibhoy was a necessary party in the trial of the action between the plaintiff and the original defendant. As this was a summons for directions issued after the third party had appeared on the third party notice, the only directions that could be asked for were those directions which can be given by the Court under rules 130 and 131.

The directions under these rules which were asked for were as follows:—"That the said third party Alibhoy Khushal be at liberty to appear at the trial of this suit and the questions in issue between the defendant and the third party be tried simultaneously with the questions in issue between the plaintiffs and the defendant."

The learned Judge in dealing with the summons said that he was not concerned with the defendant's contention, that as plaintiff had treated Alibhoy as the person responsible for taking delivery he, the defendant, was exonerated and he considered the question, whether the defendant if liable had a right to indemnity or contribution against Alibhoy.

In considering the facts of the case, the learned Judge came to the conclusion that there was nothing in the rules of the Bombay Cotton Trade Association to support the contention that the defendants had any right to contribution or indemnity against the third party, and, therefore, declined to give directions.

It is contended that no appeal lies against an order refusing directions, on the ground that it is not a 'judgment' within the meaning of clause 15 of the Letters Patent. The meaning of the term 'judgment' has often been considered in this Court, and the following definition in Justices of the Peace for Calcutta v. Oriental Gas Company (1) has been consistently approved of by all the High Courts. Couch, C. J., in the course of his judgment, said :—

"We think that 'judgment' in clause 15 means a decision which affects the merits of the question between the parties by determining some right or liability. It may be either final, or preliminary, or interlocutory, the difference between them being that a final judgment determines the whole cause or suit, and a preliminary or interlocutory judgment determines only a part of it leaving other matters to be determined."

I find that the Judge did not consider, on the facts placed before him, that the questions in issue between the defendant and the third party should be tried in the suit which had been filed by the plaintiff against the defendant. Nothing has been decided which affected the merits of those questions between the defendant and the third party, by determining any right or liability between them. This is purely a question of procedure; furthermore, a procedure which is peculiar to this High Court under its own rules. There may be cases where the procedure may be of advantage to the parties, and may save expense, but, as far as my experience goes, much time is wasted and more money is spent than is saved in discussing whether the procedure should be applied or not. However, we are of opinion that the order refusing directions under rules 130 and 131 is not a judgment within the meaning of clause 15 of the Letters Patent, and, therefore there is no appeal. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

T. THOMSON AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Will—Probate—Burden of proof—Suspicious circumstances.

Where circumstances exist in connection with a Will which, in Probate proceedings, excite the suspicion of the Court it is for those who propound the Will to remove the suspicion, and to prove affirmatively that the testator knew and approved of the contents of the document, and it is only when this is done that the onus is thrown on those who oppose the Will to prove fraud or undue influence or whatever else they rely on to displace the case made for proving the Will. [p. 537, col. 2.]

Application for administration, with the Will annexed, of the estate of one T. M. T. Thomson, deceased.

Messrs. Villa and McDonnell, for the Applicant.

Mr. Rutledge, for the Crown.

Mr. O. Ray, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The only question for decision is, whether a Will, which is said to have been executed by T. M. T. Thomson on the 15th August 1919, is or is not his Will. The contention that the Will may have been made under undue influence or at a time when Thomson was not of sound mind has been abandoned. Deceased, who was of Canadian or American origin, came to Burma about forty years ago, and was for some time a driver in the Burma Railways. He never returned to America, and died in Rangoon on the night of the 21st August, or the early morning of the 22nd. He was about eighty-nine years of age. After he left the Burma Railway Company's employment, he became a money-lender. About twenty years ago, he went through the Burmese form of marriage with Ma Shin Hla at Leingon village, and lived there with her for some time. He came back to Rangoon, but seems to have left Ma Shin Hla behind at her village. Ma

PAUL v. THOMSON.

Shin Hla bore him one child, Thomas. She died when he was quite young. Thomson educated Thomas, and Ma Shin Hla's sister Ma E May. I think there is no doubt that Ma E May and her mother Ma Shwe Ma stayed with Thomson from time to time, and that he was attached to Ma E May. His account books show that he made Ma E May an allowance fairly regularly up till the time of his death, and gave her a present of jewellery on one occasion, and she has produced a letter written by him to her in April 1918 the tone of which was most friendly. His boy, however, caused him anxiety and disappointment. His career at school showed not only that he did not devote himself to work, but that he was not honest, and he was finally sent away in charge of a Buddhist priest to Mandalay. His schoolmaster had suggested that Thomas should be baptized, but to this Thomson objected. I have no hesitation in rejecting the evidence about Thomson's opposition to the boy taking the yellow robe. The evidence that Thomson approved of the step and encouraged it is overwhelming. Probably he hoped that the priest would exercise a good influence on his son. In 1917 Thomas was sent to him with his grandmother. It is suggested on behalf of the petitioner that Thomas's conduct annoyed his father so much, that he decided to disinherit him, and that the deceased severed his connection with his Burmese friends before his death. Batchelder says that Thomson spoke to him of his son as a 'bad pill and not to be trusted". Stevens states that Thomson told him he had warned his son that he would get no money from him and advised him to work. Such a warning, however might be given by any father to a son whose conduct was not pleasing him. The evidence of Mr. and Mrs. Gibbs, and Mr. and Mrs. Carter, who knew Thomson well, proves that, althogh he was anxious and annoyed about his son's behaviour, he did not lose interest in him, but was fond of him. He undoubtedly continued to make him an allowance until the time of his death. When Thomson sent his son to live with his Burmese relatives, he was eighty-seven years of age, and probably preferred that some one else should have the trouble of looking after Thomas. Possibly he also thought he would do better away from Rangoon. But whatever his motives may have been, Thomson certainly never severed his connection with either his son or his Burman friends, and there is no evidence to prove any intention on his part of abandoning the boy to his fate.

In 1919 Thomson began to engage Mr. Bose to conduct his cases. The petitioner, Paul, is Bose's clerk, Thomson was frequently litigating and must have had many interviews with Paul. In 1918 Thomson was ill, and spent a fortnight in the General Hospital, and in 1919 his health rapidly deteriorated. He proposed to go away from Rangoon for a change, and was advised to close his money lending business, On the 14th August he gave Paul a registered power-of-attorney to conduct his cases and collect his debts. Mr. Matthews, whom I regard as a reliable witness, saw Thomson a day or two before this, and discussed his business with him. Thompson told him he would give Paul a power-of-attorney to collect his debts, and would allow him the usual commission of five per cent. Mrs. Carter says she called on Thomson on the 13th August, and was told that he was making over his business affairs to his lawyer's clerk. He proposed that he should live with them after January. On the 17th Matthews again saw him. He was then very feeble, and talked of a sea voyage, and of going to the Carters' or to the Little Sisters of the Poor on his return. He evidently did not realise how short a time he had to live. Four or five days later he died.

The case for the petitioner, Paul, is that on the 15th August Thomson went into Chapple's typewriting school, and asked to type out his Will. Paul says that he had always been treated with great friendship by Thomson, and used to nurse him and wash him when he was sick. There is no evidence whatever to show that Paul was on intimate terms with Thomson, or that he was more than Thomson's agent in business matters. Chapple says that Thomson brought a draft Will written in his own handwriting, and after he had typed it for him, asked him to witness it, and to obtain another witness to the signature. Chapple went down and found Ebrahim, a lawyer's clerk, who had come to the office for the repair of a typewriter. Ebrahim's employer Mr. Agabeg had an office one door away from Mr. Bose's office. Ebrahim consented to be a witness, and the Will was signed by Thomson in his presence and in that of Chapple. If the evidence of Chapple and Ebrahim is believed, the Will is proved. The caveator denies that the signature of Thomson is genuine, and alleges that even if it is genuine, the Will has probably been typed over a blank paper given by Paul to Thomson for the purpose of having some Court petition written on it. Examples of the kind of petition referred to by the caveator are to be found at pages 29 and 30 of Civil Miscellaneous Suit No. 6 of 1917. Thomas and Ma E May swear that they have seen Thomson sign his name in this way, but their evidence is open to the obvious objection that they are deeply interested in the result of this case. The signature on the Will has been photographed by Mr. Savarese, but he is not a handwriting expert, and his opinion on its genuineness cannot be accepted. Other admittedly genuine signatures have also been photographed, but I am unable, in the absence of expert evidence, to come to the conclusion that the result of photographing the signature on the Will is a forgery. The signature seems to me to resemble Thomson's signature. The question is whether, assuming that the signature is Thomson's, it is proved that the Will is his.

The onus of proof lies of course upon the person setting up the Will. In Sukh Dei v. Kedar Nath (1) Lord Macnaghten, in dealing with a case where a plaintiff impeached a Will as a forgery, said: "In the opinion of their Lordships the conclusion of the Court below that the alleged Will of the 4th June 1890 was not proved is perfectly correct, and it was not necessary for the Court to go so far as to declare that the document was a forgery.....It would have been quite enough for the Court...to say that the alleged Will was not proved." In Tyrrell v. Painton (2) Lindley, L. J., said: "This rule in Barry v. Butlin (3), Fulton v. Andrew (4) and Brown v. Fisher (5) is not, in my opinion, confined to the single case in which a Will is prepared by or on the instructions of the person taking large benefits under it, but extends to all cases in which circumstances exist which excite the suspicion of the Court and wherever such circumstances exist, and whatever their nature may be, it is for those who propound the Will to remove such suspicion, and to prove affirmatively that the testator knew and approved of the contents of the document, and it is only where this is done that the onus is thrown on those who oppose the Will to prove fraud or undue influence or whatever else they rely on to displace the case made for proving the Will." This dictum was referred to by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Shama Charan Kundu v. Khettromoni Dasi (6) and it was pointed out that the only suspicion in that case rested upon a conflict of evidence as to whether the testator was in an unconscious state at the time he was alleged to have made the Will. The question, therefore, was merely which of two sets of witnesses ought to be believed. Their Lordships did not dissent from the dictum of Lindley, L. J. It was accepted as sound law by the learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court in Lachho Bibi v. Gopi Narain (7). The Indian Evidence Act lays down that a fact is proved if, after considering the matters before it, the Court either believes it to exist or considers its existence so probable that a prudent man ought, under the circumstances of the particular case, to act on the assumption that it exists.

The question for my decision, therefore, is, whether the circumstances in the present case are such as to excite suspicion sufficiently strong to raise a reasonable doubt as to whether the Will was made by Thomson or not.

There are, in my opinion, grave doubts about the genuineness of this Will. The estate, if regard is had to the station in life of those who are to be benefited by the Will, is a large one. It has been left entirely to a lawyer's clerk, who, beyond doing Thomson's business, has failed to establish any claim on his generosity. It excludes from all benefits and makes no provision for the testator's only child, or for the Burmese girl to whom he had been making a monthly allowance for many years. Paul is a man whose record is not free from suspicion. He was tried in the Chief Court for serious offences in connection with the estate of Redmond, a former employer of his, and was convicted by a majority of the Jury at the first trial, and unanimously acquitted at the second. He has been bankrupt twice. His witness, Chapple, has also been through the bankruptcy Court, but he gave evidence against Paul in the criminal case, and it was through the application of Paul that he was forced into the bankruptcy proceedings. The other witness, Ebrahim, is another lawyer's clerk who happened to be in Chapple's office when Thomson came in, but did not succeed in the purpose for which he says he came. He is one of those casual witnesses of the unfulfilled purpose who are generally regarded with mistrust. Chapple owed Thomson some money which he had borrowed in 1912, and the choice of the two witnesses to the Will is a curious one. Gibbs who was a friend of Thomson lived close to Chapple's school, and might easily have been called.

The execution of the Will is said to have taken place about 10 A. M. Chapple states that Thomson came to his office alone, and walking; that he looked well and hearty, and went upstairs without any difficulty. Thomson lived about half a mile from Chapple's office, and if his physical condition was such as some of the witnesses depict it is impossible that he could have walked to Chapple's office.

I shall now consider the Will. It begins: "This is the last Will and testament of me T. M. T. Thomson of the town of Rangoon, and by religion a Christian, being by the mercy of God in sound mind and health." Mr. Rutledge contends that the fact that Thomson described himself as a Christian, and uses such an expression as "by the mercy of God" is sufficient in itself to throw the most serious doubt on the Will. The evidence about Thomson's religious belief is somewhat conflicting, but I have no doubt that he was never a Catholic, as Paul asserted, but in his later years was an unbeliever with strong leanings towards Budhism. I regard Paul's statement that Thomson advised him to go to Church and went with him fairly frequently to the Roman Catholic Cathedral as absolutely false. The fact that he was sworn on the Bible when making affidavits proves nothing. Matthews has produced infidel books in Court which no Catholic or Christian would care to keep or read, and which were ordered by Thomson from America. One of them is a violent attack on the doctrines of the Roman Catholic Church. Thomson refused to allow his son to be baptized. The evidence that Thomson was, in his declining years, not only not a Christian, but decidedly opposed to that religion is overwhelming. It is certainly a matter for great surprise that he should commence his Will by a declaration of pious faith. Mr. McDonnell suggests that this paragraph of the Will has been copied from some form of a Will, but no stock form with such a declaration in it has been produced. It is remarkable that he should have inserted what is untrue in fact, and omitted to appoint an executor. The insertion and omission are explained if the Will was the work of some one who did not know Thomson's opinions, or whom he would be likely to appoint executor.

The evidence regarding the finding of the Will contains several discrepancies. Paul says he found the Will in the drawer at 6 P. M. the evening after the death of Thomson, in the presence of inspector Castor, Ahmed Meah and Thomas. Ahmed Meah lives below Thomson. He is one of Mr. Bose's clients, and is an undischarged bankrupt. Castor stated, when first examined, that the Will was found in an almirah. At the next hearing he corrected this statement, and said that it was in a chest of drawers. At the first hearing, he spoke of the finding of a gold watch in the drawer, and at the second of a revolver. He says the Will was handed to him, and he read it casually and gave it back to Paul. At first, Ahmed Meah stated that the Will was in the drawer, and that the drawer was looked. He then said that the drawer was in a chest of drawers, and that nothing else was taken out of the drawer. He further stated that it was read out by Paul and the Inspector. In his second examination Ahmed Meah stated that the Inspector took the Will out of the drawer. Paul talked about jewellery in the drawer. Thomas denies that any Will was found on the 22nd and says that the Inspector went upstairs only to take charge of his father's revolver, which was lying underneath the chest of drawers. Thomson had a safe where he kept his valuable papers, and it is strange that he did not put his Will there. But that safe could not be opened unless the key word was known. On the 26th, in the absence of any one to represent Thomas's interests, the safe was broken open by Sperrink in the presence of Inspector Castor. Castor was not authorized to break open the safe, and it was a most improper proceeding in the absence of such authorization and of Thomas. It was quite unnecessary, and afforded Paul an opportunity of tampering with Thomson's private papers. The evidence about the discovery of the Will, and the forcing of the safe, throws grave suspicion on the conduct of Paul.

Thomson had his own typewriter, and used it. Castor states that the typewriter could not be manipulated, but I sent for the machine, and tried it. It can certainly be used; the ribbon gives a faint impression, but there is no difficulty in changing a ribbon. There is no good reason why Thomson should not have typed his own Will, and had it witnessed by some of his friends.

The suspicions surrounding this Will have not been removed, and I am of opinion that it is not proved. I dismiss the petition of Paul.

Petition dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 20—Place of suing—Jurisdiction - Cause of action—Hundi drawn in Cawnpore for acceptance and payment in Calcutta—Hundi accepted and paid in Calcutta—Suit to recover sum paid - Place of suit—Commission to examine specific witness—Witness not named examined, effect of.

D., a firm at Cawnpore, drew a hundi in favour of the Bank of Bengal on P., a firm carrying on business at Cawnpore and Calcutta; the hundi was to be accepted in Calcutta for the accommodation of, and was to be debited to, D, who in case of non-payment undertook to indemnify P. against any loss or damage. P. accepted the hundi in Calcutta and made payment there. On failure by D. to pay the amount of the hundi, P. brought the present suit in Calcutta to recover that amount and it was objected that the Calcutta Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit:

Held, that as the plaintiff's cause of action would not be complete unless he proved the fact that he had accepted the hundi in Calcutta and had proved that he had paid in Calcutta on the due date in accordance with his acceptance, part of the cause of action arose within the local limits of the Ordinary Original Jurisdiction of the High Court at Calcutta and the Court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit. [p. 540, col. 1.]

Where, on the application of the defendant, a commission is issued for taking the evidence of one particular witness only, and, in spite of protests of the plaintiff, the evidence of another person is also taken, the Court would be justified in ignoring the evidence of such person. JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is an appeal from the judgment of my learned brother Mr. Justice Walmsley, whereby he gave judgment for the plaintiff.

The learned Counsel for the appellant has raised a point going to the jurisdiction of the learned Judge, and he, first of all, drew our attention to the fact that, although this plaint had been treated in the first instance as being a plaint under Order XXXVII, of the Civil Procedure Code the learned Judge had not so treated it but had held that there was a clear cause of action disclosed in the plaint by reason of paragraphs 4, 5, 6 and 7. The learned Counsel then proceeded to argue that, that being so the learned Judge had no jurisdiction to try the case because neither the whole of the cause of action nor any part of it arose within the local limits of the Ordinary Original Jurisdiction of this Court. I think that the learned Counsel's argument cannot be supported, because, in my judgment, a part of the cause of action. did arise within the local limits of the Ordinary Original Jurisdiction of the High Court; and inasmuch as leave was given by the Court the Court had jurisdiction to hear the case. The agreement which it was sought to enforce against the defendant is alleged in paragraph 4 of the plaint, and it is there alleged: "the plaintiff firm agreed to the aforesaid terms for the defendant firm's accomodation without receiving any value therefor at the repeated requests of the defendant firm, and the defendant firm agreed to indemnify the plaintiff firm against any loss or damage by reason of the plaintiff firm's agreeing to the aforesaid terms." In order to see what were "the aforesaid terms" we must turn to the first paragraph of the plaint. There it is stated: "on the 11th October 1916, one Jankidas Murlidhar of Delhi drew a hundi in favour of the Bank of Bengal in its Delhi Branch on the plaintiff firm in Calcutta for the sum of Rs. 2,500 payable 54 days after the said date. The said hundi was to be accepted by the plaintiff firm in Calcutta for the accommodation of and was to be debited to the defendant firm in case of payment by the plaintiff firm". Those are "the aforesaid terms" which the plaintiffs alleged they had undertaken to be bound by and in respect of which they alleged that the defendants had agreed to indemnify the plaintiffs against any loss or damage by reason of the plaintiff firm's agreeing to the aforesaid terms. It, therefore, appears that, by the arrangement between the plaintiffs and the drawers of the hundi, the plaintiffs were under a liability to accept the hundi in Calcutta for the accomodation of the defendants and the defendants had agreed to indemnify the plaintiffs against any loss or damage which they might incur by accepting the hundi in Calcutta. There is an allegation in the plaint that the plaintiff firm did accept the hundi in Calcutta, that the hundi became payable on the 7th of December 1916, and that on that day they in fact paid the amount of the hundi in Calcutta and that the defendants, although called on to perform their part of the agreement, had failed to reimburse the plaintiffs.

Our attention was drawn to what was said by Lord Justice Fry, when he was dealing with the meaning of the words "cause of action" in Read v. Brown (1) referred to in Dobson and Barlow Limited v. Bengal Spinning and Weaving Company (2), namely: "everything which, if not proved, gives the defendant an immediate right to judgment, must be part of the cause of action." And, again, Mr. Justice Brett in Cooke v. Gill (3), is reported to have said: "cause of action has been held from the earliest time to mean every fact which is material to be proved to entitle the plaintiff to succeed, every fact which the defendant would have a right to traverse." In my judgment, in this case the plaintiff's cause of action would not be complete unless they proved the fact that they had accepted the hundi in Calcutta in accordance with their undertaking to the drawers of the hundi, the plaintiffs' cause of action would not be complete unless they had proved that they had paid the bill in Calcutta on the due date in accordance with their acceptance. For these reasons, in my judgment, part of the cause of action did arise within the local limits of the Ordinary Original Jurisdiction of this Court and consequently the learned Counsel's point with regard to jurisdiction cannot be sustained.

The only other argument which the learned Counsel presented to us was with regard to the learned Judge's decision not to read or look at the evidence of a man called Gulzari Mull, whose evidence was taken on commission. It is clear from the terms of the order for the commission that the evidence of a man called Rameswar alone was to be taken, but by some means or other in the writ the words "Gulzari Mull" appeared before the word "Rameswar." It looks to me as if the person who had inserted those words regarded "Gulzari Mull" as being one of the names owned by the man Rameswar. But the defendants insisted upon Gulzari Mull being examined upon commission, and his evidence was taken on commission on the 7th of July 1918, in spite of the protest of the plaintiffs. From the letters, which appear at pages 155 and 156 of the paper-book, it is clear that Messrs. Leslie and Hinds were informed by Mr. Khaitan, who was then acting as Solicitor for the plaintiffs, that the order had been made for the examination of Rameswar alone and Messrs. Leslie and Hinds were pressed to wire that Rameswar alone should be examined: so that the defendant's Solicitors clearly had notice either on the 6th or the 7th of July that the order did not provide for the evidence of the Gulzari Mull being taken upon commission, and if the defendants had desired to have his evidence taken on commission they should have made a further application to the Court either before the trial or at the trial. As far as I know, no such application was made. The trial did not take place until the 17th of July and there was ample opportunity, as far as I can see, for the defendants to make an application to the Court if they wished to do so. In my judgment, the learned Judge was right in refusing to read the evidence of Gulzari Mull taken on commission. For these reasons, we refused the application made by the learned Counsel for the appellant to be allowed to read the evidence of Gulzari Mull or to call him as a witness in this Court. The learned Counsel frankly said that, if Gulzari Mull's evidence was not to be read or if he was not allowed an opportunity of calling Gulzari as a witness in the Appeal Court, it was hopeless for him to attempt to contest the findings of fact of the learned Judge, which accordingly must stand.

For these reasons the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 53—Execution of decree—Attachment of decree in favour of judgment-debtor—Sale of attached decree—Procedure.

Where a decree in favour of a judgment-debtor is attached in execution of a decree against him, the Court ought, under Order XXI, rule 53 of the Civil Procedure Code, to proceed to execute the attached decree and apply the net proceeds in satisfaction of the decree sought to be executed. The Court has no power to sell the attached decree. [p. 542, col. 1.]

Where, however, an attached decree was sold and was purchased by the attaching decree-holder who proceeded to execute it and realised a larger amount under it than he had paid for it:

Held, (1) that the procedure adopted by the Court was quite irregular; [p. 542, col. 1.]

(2) that the decree-holder must give credit to the judgment-debtor for the full amount realised by him in execution of the attached decree. [p. 542, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Kanara, in Appeal No. 218 of 1914, confirming the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge at Sirsi, in Darkhast No. 283 of 1912.

Mr. Nilkanth Atmaram, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. N. Karnad, for Respondent No. 2.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—This is an appeal under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code. The 3rd defendant in Suit No. 119 of 1911 prayed that the decree-holders realized much more than what was due on the decree which was sought to be executed, and prayed that the darkhast should be struck off. The application has been granted in both the lower Courts. What had happended was this. In execution of their decree, the decree-holders attached the mortgage-decree in favour of their judgment-debtors. Order XXI, rule 53 lays down the procedure to be followed when a decree, either for the payment of money or for sale in enforcement of a mortgage or charge, is attached. The Court shall, under sub-rule (2), on the application of the creditor who has attached the decree of the judgment-debtor, proceed to execute the attached decree and apply the net proceeds in satisfaction of the decree sought to be executed. Instead of doing that, the Court put up the decree for sale and the decree was purchased for Rs. 200 by the decree-holder. These proceedings were absolutely wrongly conceived, and it certainly is very strange that, in the face of Order XXI, rule 53, the Court should have allowed such a sale to take place. Then the decree-holder having become the purchaser of the decree proceeded to recover what he could on the decree and realized Rs. 600. Obviously, there is no equity whatever in favour of the decree-holder who seeks to pocket Rs. 400 which really belonged to his judgment-debtor.

But it has been argued that the matter which has been dealt with by the lower Courts is res judicata because the 1st defendant had endeavoured to stop the sale, and on his application it was held that the sale was valid. The 3rd opponent was not served with notice of that application. An order was obtained from the Court either that the notice might be served on the first opponent or, if he refused to accept it, that substituted service should be effected. The first opponent accepted service of the notice. But that cannot be taken as service on opponent No. 3 who has not been proved to have been living with opponent No. 1 at the time. It is quite possible that, if opponent No. 1 had not accepted service, then substituted service, according to the provisions of the Code, would have been effected. Then opponent No. 3 would be bound by it. But all that we have before us is that notice was served on some one who did not represent the 3rd opponent. Therefore, he cannot be considered as being bound by the decision in the matter. That is sufficient to dispose of the appeal, because, in my opinion, it is perfectly clear the appellants cannot take advantage of the wrong procedure which was adopted by the Court in order to put money in their pocket which really belonged to their judgment-debtor. What would have happened if an outsider had purchased the decree is a question which need not be gone into. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

FAWCETT, J.—I concur.

THE BENGAL STEAMSHIP COMPANY LIMITED—RESPONDENTS.

Companies Act (VII of 1913), s. 162—Suspension of business—Winding-up—Discretion of Court—Dead lock—Substratum gone, principle of, when applicable.

The matter of granting or refusing an application for winding-up a Company rests entirely in the discretion of the Court, and, in the case of a Company which has suspended business for a whole year, the power will be exercised only when there is a fair indication that there is no intention to carry on the business; if the suspension is satisfactorily accounted for and appears to be due to temporary causes, the order may be refused. [p. 543, col. 1.]

The fact that the firm of Managing Agents of a Company has been dissolved, but steps have been taken to appoint new Managing Agents, is no indication of a complete dead lock which can only be removed by compulsorily winding-up the Company. [p. 544, col. 1.]

In the absence of proof that the objects of a Company as set out in the Memorandum of Association, cannot be fulfilled in other ways, or by the employment of other agencies, the principle of 'substratum gone' cannot be applied. [p. 544, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, J.—We are invited in this appeal to consider the propriety of an order dismissing a petition for the winding-up of a Company incorporated under the Indian Companies Act, 1913. The facts are fully set out in the judgment of Mr. Justice Greaves and we need not recapitulate them.

The application is supported here on three grounds, namely, first, that the Company has suspended its business for a whole year; secondly, that there has been a dead-lock, and thirdly, that the substratum is gone; the first of these grounds falls within the third clause of section 162 and the second and third are comprised in the sixth clause which provides for the winding up of a Company if the Court is of opinion that it is just and equitable that the Company should be wound-up.

As regards the first of these grounds Mr. Justice Greaves has pointed out that the matter rests entirely in the discretion of the Court, as is clear from the decisions in Metropolitan Railway Warehousing Company, In re (1), Middlesbrough Assembly Rooms Company, In re (2) and Capitol Fire Insurance Association, In re (3). The power will be exercised only when there is a fair indication that there is no intention to carry on the business; if the suspension is satisfactorily accounted for and appears to be due to temporary causes, the order may be refused. Now, in the present case, if it be conceded, that the business has been suspended for a whole year, the suspension is due to very exceptional circumstances. To carry on their business, the Company employed a steamer and two flats. The flats were acquired by Government during the War and the Company have not yet been able to replace them in view of the rise in prices. Consequently, the suspension of business for a whole year is satisfactorily accounted for, and does not furnish an indication that there is no intention to carry on the business. In our opinion, no ground has been made out to justify the winding-up of the Company on the ground mentioned in section 162 (iii).

As regards the second ground, it is contended that the proceedings of the meetings of the Company furnish ample indication that there is a complete dead lock. The chief promoters of the Company are three brothers Muralidhar Roy, Sasadhar Roy and Halodhar Roy. These three formed themselves into a firm which became the managing agents of the Company. Subsequently, there was disagreement amongst the brothers and the firm was dissolved with effect from the 1st November 1918. There is no room for doubt that there are acute differences amongst the brothers, and the proceedings disclose much bitterness of feeling. In view of these circumstances, reliance is placed, on behalf of the appellant, upon the decision of the Court of Appeal in Yenidje Tobacco Co., In re (4). In that case, no doubt, the Master of the Rolls (Lord Cozens-Hardy) pointed out that the two Directors were not on speaking terms, that the so called meetings of the Board of Directors had been almost a farce or comedy, that the Directors would not speak to each other on the Board and that some third person had to convey communications between them which ought to go directly from one to the other. But the circumstances of that case were very peculiar and the real reason for the decision of the Court of Appeal was that there was no way to put an end to the state of things which existed, except by means of a compulsory order. Warrington, L. J., laid stress on the fact there were only two persons interested, that there were no share-holders other than those two, and that there were no means of overruling, by the action of a general meeting of share-holders, the trouble which was occasioned by the quarrels of the two Directors and share-holders, in such circumstances the Company should be wound-up, if there existed such a ground as would be sufficient for the dissolution of a private partnership at the suit of one of the partners against the other. The same principle was applied in Newbridge Sanitary Steam Laundry, In re (5) and an order for compulsory winding-up was made on the ground that, in the situation which had arisen, such winding-up order afforded the only means of enabling justice to be done to the petitioners. In the case before us, the circumstances are, however, of an entirely different description. No doubt, the firm of Managing Agents composed of three members, was dissolved on the 31st October 1918; but since then at Extraordinary General Meetings steps have been taken to appoint new Managing Agents. We need not express an opinion as to the propriety or legality of the proceedings taken; but it is sufficient for our present purpose that there are ample indications that it is possible to carry on the business of the Company. In such circumstances, it is impossible for us to hold that there is a complete dead-lock which must be got rid of by a compulsory winding-up; the Act creates as between the share holders a domestic Tribunal, and, unless a clear case is made out, the Court will be slow to withdraw from it the decision whether the Company's business shall or shall not be carried on. In our opinion, the second ground urged in support of a winding-up order has not been established.

As regards the third ground, it is urged that the whole substratum of the business has become impossible. Mr. Justice Greaves has pointed out that there is really no foundation for this contention. The objects of the Company, as stated in the Memorandum of Association, are, inter alia, "to purchase charter, hire, build, or otherwise acquire steam or other ships or vessels with all equipments and furniture and to employ the same in the conveyance of passengers, mails, live stock, grain and other agricultural produce and treasure and also of goods and marchandise of every description and species on the principal rivers of India and Burma with their tributaries, and also to run vessels to sea, to any port or ports whatsoever, whether inland or sea board and to take vessels, flats, barges and other crafts in tow of its vessels as the Company may from time to time determine, and to acquire postal subsidies and enter into mail or other contracts." No doubt, the business has hitherto been carried on with one steamer and two flats, and that the flats have been taken up by Government. But that does not prove that the objects of the Company, as set out in the Memorandum, cannot be fulfilled in other ways or by the employment of other agencies. The principle of substratum gone clearly cannot be applied to a case of this description. Two illustrations of that class of cases will be found in Haven Gold Mining Co., In re (6) and German Date Coffee Co., In re (7). In the first case, the principal and substantial object of the Company was to acquire a particular gold mine in New Zealand, and the title to the gold mine altogether failed. In the second case, the object was to manufacture from dates a substitute for coffee under a German Patent, but the German Patent was not and could not be obtained. In such cases, it could be rightly held that the substratum was gone, notwithstanding that the Memorandum of Association contained general objects and it might be justly ruled that a majority could not hold a minority to the speculative continuation of a scheme which had proved futile. That doctrine has plainly no application here. We are consequently of opinion that there is really no foundation for the application which has been rightly dismissed.

The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs, one set of costs to the Company and one set to the opposing share-holders.

FLETCHER, J.—I agree.

MOULMEIN MUNICIPAL COMMITTEE —RESPONDENT.

Bye-laws, Municipal, validity of, test of—Interpretation, rule of—Burma Municipal Act (III of 1898), s. 142 (d), bye-laws made under—Bye-law prescribing license-fee for lodging houses, whether ultra vires.

In determining the validity of bye-laws made by public representative bodies under statutory powers, their consideration is approached from a different standpoint from bye-laws of Railway or other Companies, which carry on business for their own profit, although incidentally for the advantage of the public. Courts of Justice are slow to condemn Municipal bye-laws as invalid, on the supposed ground of unreasonableness, and support them if possible by a "benevolent" interpretation, and credit those who have to administer them with an intention to do so in a reasonable manner. But, on the other hand, if a bye-law necessarily involves that which is unreasonable, it is the duty of the Court to declare it to be invalid [p. 548, col. 1.]

A bye-law of a Municipal body requiring keepers of lodging-houses to pay a license-fee reckoned on the maximum number of lodgers authorized, although the actual number of lodgers in the house may be less than the authorized number, is not illegal or ultra vires. [p. 546, col. 2.]

Messrs. Oowasji and Das, for the Applicant.

Mr. Ginwala, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The applicant P. S. Pillay has been convicted under section 180 of the Burma Municipal Act for keeping a lodging house without having the same registered and licensed and fined one rupee. He now comes to this Court to test the validity of the bye-law under which the Municipality acted. He is the owner of a tenement lodging house in Moulmein, and bye-laws had been made under section 142 clause (d) for fixing and varying the number of persons who may occupy a lodging house, for rendering licenses necessary and for fixing the fees payable for such licenses, and the conditions subject to which they shall be granted and may be revoked. The bye-laws provide that no person shall keep a tenement lodging house unless it has been registered and licensed, and that before the house is registered and licensed it shall be inspected by an officer generally or specially appointed in that behalf by the Committee who is to report in writing to the Committee whether the house is sufficiently ventilated and satisfies other requirements, and especially as to the number of lodgers that can be properly accommodated in the several rooms. It is then provided that any person wishing to have a lodging house registered and licensed shall make a written application in a form that is given. This form does not provide for a prayer as to the number of persons for which a license may be granted. Then the rules provide that no keeper of a lodging house shall, at any one time, receive or allow to be received into the house a greater number of lodgers than shall be fixed by the Committee as the maximum number of lodgers authorized and specified in a certificate in the prescribed form. This form gives the maximum number of lodgers authorized. The last rule to which it is necessary to refer prescribes that the fee to be charged for the licensing of each lodging house shall be two rupees for every lodger authorized in the certificate, that is to say, twice as many rupees as the number of lodgers authorized. It had been the practice for applicants to specify in their applications the number of lodgers which they wish should be specified as the maximum number, and provided that number was less than the maximum number which the Assistant Health Officer had reported as being permissible, licenses for a lesser number were issued and fees were charged according to that number. This practice continued even after the bye-laws assumed their present form, but it was brought to the notice of the Committee that they were losing revenue, and it was decided in future to charge fees strictly in accordance with the present bye-laws. The applicant applied for a license for thirty lodgers in respect of a house held by the Assistant Health Officer to be fit to contain thirty-nine lodgers. The Municipality declined to issue a license unless fees were paid on thirty-nine, and this the applicant refused to do. As he took out no license, he has been prosecuted. It is urged that the whole object of the Act and the bye-laws made under it in respect of lodging houses is to insure the public health, and public decency: and that, and not the revenue must be the first consideration of the Municipality in administering the power that they have under the Act. The powers were given not to supply the Municipality with a source of revenue, but primarily for the preservation of the public health, and the provision as to fees was intended only to enable them to provide the necessary staff for inspection, and for enforcing the bye laws. It is urged that, when the Assistant Health Officer has certified for thirty-nine lodgers, the primary object of his inspection and certificate will be even better served by entering in the certificate thirty instead of thirty-nine as the maximum number, and that if the proprietor so wishes there is nothing to prevent the Municipality acceding to his request, and that that request being eminently reasonable, the Municipality is bound to grant it.

The rules as to the interpretation of such Acts as the Burma Municipal Act are laid down in Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes, fifth Edition, page 481, et seq: "Rules and bye laws made under statutory powers enforceable by penalties are construed like other provisions encroaching on the rights of persons. They must, on pain of invalidity, be not unreasonable, nor in excess of the statutory power authorising them, nor repugnant to that Statute, or to general principles of law.....In determining the validity of bye laws made by public representative bodies under statutory powers, their consideration is approached from a different standpoint from bye laws of Railway or other Companies, which carry on business for their own profit, although incidentally for the advantage of the public. Courts of Justice are slow to condemn Municipal bye-laws as invalid, on the supposed ground of unreasonableness, and support them if possible by a "benevolent" interpretation, and credit those who have to administer them with an intention to do so in a reasonable manner. But, on the other hand, if a bye-law necessarily involves that which is unreasonable, it is the duty of the Court to declare it to be invalid." On the other hand, it is pointed out that "where the Statute conferring the power to make bye-laws enacts that any such laws consistent with the provisions of the Statute, and not repugnant to any other law in force, shall have the force of law when confirmed by the executive, it is doubtful whether a Court would not be precluded from questioning the reasonableness of such bye-laws, or whether they are ultra vires, unless it be in some very extreme case."

In considering these bye-laws in the light of these principles, it is impossible to say that they are ultra vires of the powers given by the Act, or that they are unreasonable or invalid as being repugnant to general principles of law. It is essential that the maximum number of lodgers which may properly be permitted must be specified, and it is impossible to say that the Municipality is not authorized to charge fees on that maximum number. Unless the bye law can be held to be invalid as being unreasonable, the Court is not justified in interfering. At the same time, it is impossible not to admit that the applicant's request is perfectly reasonable. This is a tenement lodging house divided for several families, and to compel him to pay fees calculated on the maximum number reported by the Assistant Health Officer may only lead him to take in more lodgers to the discomfort of families occupying a tenement or compel him to alter the construction of the house by reducing the size of the tenements to the detriment of families who might otherwise occupy the present accommodation. The wisdom of the Committee may be questioned, but it is not for this Court to dictate to them, and the Court has no power to interfere where the bye law is valid and legal, as it is in the present case. The application is dismissed.

Application dismissed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 55, 110—Accused, discharge of, from custody—Magistrate, jurisdiction of, to order further detention—Proceedings under s. 110—Defence evidence, when should not be discredited.

Where by the order of a Magistrate a person is discharged from custody on the ground of insufficient evidence to connect him with the offence in connection with which he was detained, the Magistrate has no authority to direct his further detention in connection with a different matter, unless and until he has been re-arrested by the Police under section 55, Criminal Procedure Code. [p. 548, col. 1.]

In a proceeding under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the fact that a large number of the defence witnesses are caste-fellows of the accused, many of them coming from villages several miles from the village of the accused, and that they have come forward voluntarily without being summoned is not sufficient to discredit their evidence, notwithstanding that they admit frankly that they have come forward because they regard the accused as head of their brotherhood and look upon it as a slur on the brotherhood that the accused should be treated as a habitual thief or robber. JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision in connection with a proceeding under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code in which ten persons were originally involved. All of them have been ordered to furnish security to be of good behaviour. Eight of these appealed to the District Magistrate, but without success. The application before me is on behalf of four of these persons. The record shows that the ten men concerned were first arrested on suspicion in connection with a particular case of dacoity. They were arrested, therefore, under section 54 and not under section 55 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Action was then taken under section 167 of the same Code and these men were lodged in the local jail under the warrant of a Magistrate. The investigation into the case continued for some time longer and before it was completed, and before any final report had been sent in under section 173 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the investigating Police Officer came to the conclusion that there was no sufficient evidence or reasonable cause of suspicion to justify further proceedings against these ten men on the dacoity charge. It does not seem to me that the Code of Criminal Procedure makes any express provision for a case like this, in which an accused person, after having been arrested, forwarded to a Magistrate and confined under a Magistrate's warrant, is found by the investigating Police Officer to have been arrested upon insufficient evidence. I should have thought that, ordinarily, a person so arrested would remain in custody until the final report under section 173 of the Code had been submitted and would then be released under the Magistrate's order, on the ground that the Police report disclosed no adequate ground for further proceedings. I am told, however, that the practice generally adopted is to stretch the provisions of section 169 of the Criminal Procedure Code, although that section in terms applies only to the case of an accused who has never been forwarded to a Magistrate. Apparently, the common procedure is for the investigating Police Officer to report to the Magistrate under whose warrant the accused has been committed to jail that he desires to release him under section 169 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The Magistrate then sends for the accused from the jail, discharges him from the custody of the jail authorities and hands him over to the investigating Police Officer; when this has been done the Police Officer can exercise the authority given him by section 169 aforesaid to release the accused.

The peculiar feature of the present case was that the investigating Police Officer or officers, although failing to find sufficient evidence to justify further proceedings against any of these ten men on the charge of dacoity, came to the conclusion that the ten persons arrested were members of a gang associated together for the purpose of habitually committing thefts and robberies. They desired in fact to institute proceedings against them under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code. A report substantially to this effect was submitted to the Magistrate by whose warrant the accused had been committed to the jail. The order passed on this report was, in my opinion, irregular and not to be justified by anything in the Code of Criminal Procedure Sufficient information had not been laid before the Magistrate to warrant his passing an order under section 112 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Indeed, it would appear that he was not the Magistrate who had jurisdiction to pass any such order. If, therefore, the ten accused persons were to be discharged from custody, so far as the dacoity case was concerned, no Magistrate had any authority to direct their further detention in custody on a different matter, unless and until they had been re-arrested by the Police under section 55 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The Magistrate, however, seems to have treated this as a mere technical difficulty and to have assumed that there had been a purely formal discharge of the accused under section 169 of the Criminal Procedure Code; but he ought to have allowed the Police to re arrest them under section 55 of the same Code. The order he passed was that the ten accused persons should be further detained in jail unless they could furnish security for their appearance when required. It was not until 12 days after this that a formal report was laid by a competent Police Officer before a Magistrate having jurisdiction in the matter under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and, three days later, the said Magistrate having caused the ten accused to be brought before him from the jail, drew up and communicated to them the necessary order under section 112 of the Criminal Procedure Code initiating the prosecution for bad livelihood. It has been contended before me that, on the principles laid down by a learned Judge of this Court in Maiku v. Emperor (1), these irregularities attendant on the initiation of the proceedings would in themselves justify this Court in quashing the orders which have been passed against these accused persons, or, at any rate, against those eight out of the ten accused who contested the matter in the Trial Court and appealed to the District Magistrate. I think this contention is based on some misapprehension as to the meaning of the decision above referred to and the evils against which that decision was directed. This Court was dealing in that case with an accused person who had been tried and acquitted and ordered to be released by a competent Court, but who was then immediately re-arrested, not because of any fresh information received as to his character or repute, but in accordance with a standing order, most improperly issued in that particular district, directing that all accused persons acquitted on a charge of dacoity should be immediately arrested under section 55 of the Criminal Procedure Code. I am of opinion that, although the proceedings prior to the passing of the order under section 112 aforesaid were irregular, and though, I have thought it right to point out my objections to those proceedings, the irregularity was cured when the accused persons came before the Magistrate on the 13th of February and the Magistrate, having jurisdiction to do so, proceeded upon proper materials to pass the formal order under section 112 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Having said this, however, I feel bound to add that the curious fashion in which this prosecution for bad livelihood was initiated has led me to examine the record with greater strictness than I would otherwise have thought necessary. The accused persons were a curiously miscellaneous lot to have formed a gang habitually associated for the purposes of committing thefts or dacoities. To take the case of the eight persons dealt with by the District Magistrate, they belonged to seven different castes and came from six different villages. Assuming it to be in no way impossible that such a miscellaneous assortment of accused persons might have been associated together for the habitual commission of thefts or dacoities, one would certainly feel inclined to presume that they would find it impossible to carry on such association without providing a competent investigating officer with [overwhelming evidence of the fact. Another criticisim which I have to make against the proceedings in the Court below is, that there seems to me to have been an attempt to combine the provisions of clauses (a) and (f) of section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and that, as regards some of the accused persons at any rate, the judgments before me do not clearly show whether the Courts below were satisfied that these men were habitual thieves and robbers, or whether the action against them was based upon a general finding that they were desperate and dangerous persons within the scope of section 110, clause (f), of the Code. The point is not a purely formal one, because, under section 117 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the fact that a person is a habitual offender may be proved by evidence of general repute or otherwise, but there is no similar provision to relax the ordinary rules of evidence where the case is sought to be brought under clause (f) of section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code. For these reasons, I have, as already stated, examined the record of this case with more particularity than would ordinarily be considered necessary upon an application in revision. I have come to the conclusion that the prosecution case against three, at any rate, of the applicants, Rahu, Narpat and Kharga, is a bad one, and that the orders against them are liable to be set aside, not merely on the general merits of the case, but on a specific ground which has been repeatedly held by this Court to be sufficient to warrant interference in revision. Rahu and Narpat are brothers, jats by caste As against the allegations made by the prosecution witnesses they were able to produce an exceedingly voluminous body of evidence for the defence, no fewer than 46 witnesses coming forward to give them a good character. The defence witnesses, moreover, proved that these men are substantial cultivators, that their methods of life are such as to render it distinctly unlikely that they could find time to indulge in the habitual commission of theft or robbery. This large body of defence evidence has been brushed aside by the Courts below upon what seem to me a wholly unadequate grounds. The District Magistrate himself was satisfied that these two men were substantial cultivators, with a considerable amount of occupancy land. He thinks that the evidence produced by them in their defence is wholly discounted by the fact that 38 of their witnesses are their caste fellows, many of them coming from villages four miles or more distant from that in which Rahu and Narpat reside, and that these witnesses came forward at their trial voluntarily, without being summoned. Some of the witnesses admitted frankly that they had come forward because they regarded these accused as sarpanch, or heads of their brotherhood, and looked upon it as a slur upon the brotherhood generally that these men should be treated as habitual thieves and robbers. I cannot see in this fact anything which should discredit the evidence for the defence. On the contrary, it impresses me with the good faith of the witnesses and their honest and emphatic belief that these two men have been prosecuted in consequence of some private feud, of which there are certainly traces on the record, and that they really are respectable persons enjoying the confidence of their community. I have examined the defence evidence for Kharga and Cheta on the same lines. I thought at first that the Trying Magistrate had given nothing which could be described as a reason for disregarding the evidence of the 13 witnesses produced by Kharga in his defence. I find, however, that, in a later passage of his judgment, where he is discussing the defence evidence produced by another of the accused persons, he makes, as it were, an incidental remark that, in his opinion, Kharga's defence witnesses, as well as those for the accused persons whose case was immediately under consideration, had no such adequate opportunities of forming an opinion as to the character of the accused persons as to make their evidence of any value. Upon this, I have been through the defence evidence of Kharga in detail, and I think it sufficient to say that it forms, in my opinion, a substantial and serious body of evidence which ought not to be brushed aside for the reasons given by the Magistrate. After careful consideration, I have decided that the case of the applicant Cheta, stands upon a different footing. His defence evidence was lumped in with that of a Muhammadan accused of the name of Rahim, a circumstance which alone would corroborate the prosecution assertion that there must be some especial and peculiar association between these two men. The evidence itself strikes me unfavourably and I certainly cannot take it upon myself to say that the body of prosecution evidence, where it affects Cheta, is outweighed or any thing like outweighed by the evidence produced by him and by his co-accused, Rahim, jointly.

The result is, that I dismiss this application so far as Cheta is concerned. I allow the applications of Rahu, Narpat, and Kharga and set aside the orders requiring them to furnish security to be of good behaviour. If these men are in custody they will be forthwith released; if they have furnished security, their own recognizance-bonds and those of their sureties will be discharged.

Application of Cheta dismissed and of the others allowed.

Where, in K's. absence from home, the accused entered his house with his wife's consent in order to commit adultery with her:

Held, (1) that the accused was guilty of the offence specified in section 451, Indian Penal Code;

(2) that the house being in the wife's possession on account of her husband, it was in his possession within the meaning of section 27, Penal Code, and the consent of the wife to the entry of the accused could not save him.

Petition, under section 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, for revision of the order of the Sessions Judge, Karnal, dated the 19th June 1920, varying that of the Magistrate, First Class, Karnal, dated the 30th April 1920.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—It has been found by the Courts below that, in Kundan's absence, the petitioner entered Kundan's house at about midnight with the intention of committing adultery with Kundan's wife, Budho, and he has been convicted of an offence under section 451, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to six months' imprisonment.

It is urged that the evidence is conflicting in regard to the place where Budho's little girl was at the time when the men who are said to have caught the petitioner in the house arrived, two witnesses saying that she was inside the house and that they brought her out, while the third says she was already outside when they came. This discrepancy seems important, and I see no reason for not accepting the finding of the Courts below on the facts.

The contention that the petitioner could not be prosecuted except on the complaint of Budho's husband is untenable. The prosecution is not for the offence of adultery but for that of committing house trespass with intent to commit adultery.

The main argument for the petitioner is that as the house was in the possession of Budho and he entered it with her consent he is not guilty of an offence. I cannot agree with this argument. Kundan lived in the house and his absence from it was only temporary. The house was in Budho's possession on account of her husband, and it was consequently in her husband's possession within the meaning of the Indian Penal Code (section 27).

The conviction is correct, but the petitioner has already undergone three months' imprisonment, and I think that this is a sufficient punishment for the offence. I accordingly reduce the sentence to the term of imprisonment which the petitioner has alredy undergone.

Sentence reduced.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 164—Confession, record of, when not in accordance with law.

A confession recorded in answer to the question—"(After due warning) do you want to say anything?" without any indication of what the due warning was, cannot be accepted as a confession recorded in accordance with law.

Criminal appeal against the order of the Sessions Judge, Purulie, dated 29th March 1920.

FACTS.—The confession was recorded by the Magistrate as follows:—

"Q.—(After due warning). Do you want to say any thing?

"A.—I want to say what is true, I won't make false statement.

"Q.—What do you want to say?"

Then follows the main confession.

In the end the Magistrate recorded the following certificate.

"The confession has been recorded when the accused has been in Court-room for about two hours while other cases were heard. It is very straight forward. I am convinced that it is voluntary."

The Magistrate was examined as a witness at the trial and stated: "I am satisfied the confession was a voluntary one and I gave him the usual warning."

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

COUTTS, J.—The appellants in this case have been convicted under section 396 of the Indian Penal Code and have been sentenced to ten years' rigorous imprisonment each. The convictions are based on the retracted confession of one of the appellants, Madhu Majhi. The only question put by the Magistrate before recording the confession was "(After due warning) do you want to say anything?" What the due warning was we are not informed and it is clear that this confession has not been recorded in accordance with law. It is impossible to accept it, and with it the whole basis for the convictions disappear. I would accordingly allow this appeal and, setting aside the conviction and sentences, acquit the accused.

SULTAN AHMED, J.—I agree.

Appeal allowed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 350—Failure to comply with provisions of section, whether vitiates proceedings.

The case of the accused was taken up by a Magistrate who, after recording the prosecution evidence and framing a charge, was transferred. On the case coming before his successor the accused applied for a trial de novo, and the Magistrate fixed a date for the trial, but took it up on an earlier date without notifying the change of date to Counsel for the accused, and on this date he merely read over to each witness the statement recorded by his predecessor, asking such further questions as he thought necessary. On a subsequent date Counsel applied on behalf of accused to re-call certain of the prosecution witnesses for cross-examination, but this was refused:

Held, that the whole of the proceedings were irregular and unfair to accused, who had a right under section 350 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to demand all the prosecution witnesses to be, re-summoned and re-heard, and that the proceedings must, therefore, be set aside.

Appeal from the order of the Magistrate first Class, exercising enhanced powers under section 30, Criminal Procedure Code, Multan, dated the 19th December 1918.

Mr. Brij Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Dalrymple, Assistant Legal Remembrancer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The three appellants have been tried and convicted of house breaking by night. The case came before Munshi Aminulla Khan, Magistrate, who recorded the prosecution evidence and framed a charge, but was then transferred before the trial could be completed. The case then came before Lala Hari Chand. On 16th November 1918 Lala Kewal Kishen, Pleader, appeared and asked for a trial de novo, and requested that it might be taken up at Sadr. But the Magistrate fixed 9th and 10th December 1918, for the trial, to take place at Macleod Ganj. For some unexplained reason the Magistrate took up the case at Macleod Ganj on the 6th December. No legal practitioner appeared, nor does it appear from the record whether appellant's Pleader was ever informed of change of date. The prosecution witnesses were examined, and the statements of the accused were recorded, and the case was adjourned to the 14th December 1918. On the 14th December Lala Kewal Kishen asked that certain prosecution witnesses should be re-summoned for further cross-examination. This was refused, the Magistrate writing: "It is by defence Counsel who is recently engaged too late, cannot re-call the prosecution witnesses when accused did not like to do so." Two defence witnesses were then examined, one on the 14th and one on the 18th December and the trial then closed.

Another point to be noted is that, when the prosecution witnesses were examined on the 6th December, they were not really re-heard.

Their statements recorded by Munshi Aminullah Khan were read out to them, and admitted by them to be correct, the Magistrate merely asking such further questions as he thought necessary. This is by no means a sufficient compliance with the requirements of section 350, Criminal Procedure Code.

The whole of the proceedings before Lala Hari Chand seem to be irregular and unfair to the appellants, who have been deprived of the benefit of Counsel. The request of the 14th December was a very reasonable one and might well have been allowed. The accused had a perfect right under section 350 to demand that all of the prosecution witnesses should be re-summoned and re-heard, i.e., that their evidence should be recorded anew, not merely that their former statement should be read out to them.

I accept the appeal and setting aside the conviction and sentence and all the proceedings in Lala Hari Chand's Court, I direct the appellants be re tried. Lala Hari Chand has been transferred from Multan. The fresh trial will be by the District Magistrate or by such Magistrate as he may depute. Care must be taken to see that this time the provisions of section 350, Criminal Procedure Code, are properly observed. The accused will remain in under-trial lock-up pending re-trial unless the District Magistrate should see cause to allow them out on bail.

for him. S. reported to the Commandant that in his endoavours to arrest M. he had been assaulted by two other persons who had released M. The Commandant invoked the assistance of the Police who, in the first information report, described S. as the complainant; he pointed out two men as those who had assaulted him and released M; they were arrested and sent up for trial, but the Magistrate discharged them finding the complaint to be false and malicious, and ordered S. to pay compensation. In revision it was urged that S. did not file the complaint and that as there was no finding that the complaint was frivolous or vexatious the order for compensation was not justified:

Held, (1) that S. was the complainant as it was he who pointed out the men whom he falsely alleged had effected the release of M.;

(2) that the finding that the complaint was false and malicious was tantamount to finding it to be vexatious, and that the order for compensation was justified.

Application to set aside an order of the Magistrate, Karachi.

Mr. Kewachand Vasanmal, for the Applicant.

Mr. A. G. Elphinston, Public Prosecutor for Sind, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this application are shortly as follows: On the 2nd of January 1919 one Ali Mahomed Khudabux, a recruiting agent, took a man called Mahomed Bux to Captain Shepherd, Commandant of the Combined Labour Depôt, to be enlisted. He was duly enlisted and received an advance of Rs. 15 0-0 and deserted a few days later. The Commandant complained to Ali Mahomed who in turn told one Shakar, the present complainant, to search for the deserter and seize him. On the 23rd of January 1919 Shakar with Ali Mahomed presented himself before Captain Shepherd and stated that at 9 P. M. the previous night he had met Mahomed Bux with two other persons near the Cantonment Railway Station. He had tried to arrest Mahomed Bux and take him to the Depôt but the two men with him had beaten him and released Mahomed Bux. On hearing this story, Captain Shepherd gave Shakar a note to the Cantonment Police Inspector. The same evening Shakar pointed out the two men who had been with Mahomed Bux, the deserter, and had, according to Shakar's account, beaten him and released Mahomed Bux.

The two men after their arrest were prosecuted before the Cantonment Magistrate, Mr. Richardson. He, however, found that the complaint was false and malicious. He discharged the two accused persons and after calling upon Shakar to show cause ordered him, under section 250 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to pay Rs. 25-0 0 to each of the two accused. Against this order under section 250 Shakar has made the present application.

The learned Pleader who appears for the applicant has urged that his client did not file the complaint before the Police. Relying on the case of Emperor v. Sumar (1), he has urged that a mere instigation to lodge a false or frivolous complaint was not sufficient ground for the Court to order payment of compensation. In our opinion however, the learned Pleader is wrong in stating that the complaint was not filed by Shakar. In the first information recorded by Mr. Samson, the Sub-Inspector of Police, Captain Shepherd is described as the informant, whereas Shakar is described as the complainant. Moreover, it was Shakar who went to the Police and who pointed out the two men who, as he falsely alleged, had effected the release of the deserter. All that Captain Shepherd did was to write a note in which he did not ask for the arrest of the accused persons but merely claimed Police assistance in securing the deserter. It cannot, thus, be said that he had any connection whatever with the arrest of the two persons whom Shakar pointed out to the Police.

The learned Pleader raised a further point, namely, that there was no finding by the Magistrate that the accusation made by Shakar was frivolous or vexatious. There is, however, a finding by the learned Magistrate that the complaint is false and malicious. It is impossible that a complaint which is false and malicious should not be vexatious.

We see no reason to interfere with the order made by the learned Magistrate and we dismiss this application.

Application dismissed.

Calcutta Police Act (IV B. C. of 1866), s. 54 A, requisites for conviction under—Possession of old chuddar, whether sufficient in itself to arouse suspicion.

To justify a conviction under section 54 A of the Calcutta Police Act there must be reason to believe that the article in possession of the accused has been stolen or fraudulently obtained. The possession of an old chuddar is not enough in itself to arouse suspicion that the article was stolen or fraudulently obtained.

Rule against the order of the Honorary Presidency Magistrate, Northern Division, Calcutta.

Babu B. M. Misra (with him Babu Debi Prasad Dut), for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner in this case was found in possession of a chuddar which we understand was an old one. He could not indicate the exact person from whom he had purchased it, but examined two witnesses to show that he had purchased it as an old cloth from a pilgrim at a dharamsala. Whether this account is correct or not need not be considered, for, in our opinion, the possession of an old chudder is not enough in itself to arouse suspicion. The conviction is under section 54 A of the Calcutta Police Act; and to justify a conviction under that section there must be reason to believe that the article has been stolen or fraudulently obtained. We are not satisfied that there was any reasonable ground for suspicion in this case.

We accordingly make the Rule absolute, acquit the petitioner and set aside the conviction and sentence. The petitioner will be discharged from his bail-bond.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 12 (1), (2)—Jurisdiction—Sub-Divisional Magistrate, whether can take cognizance of offence outside his sub-division.

A Sub-Divisional Magistrate has no jurisdiction to take cognizance of matters outside the local area within which the District Magistrate has appointed him to act. [p. 555, cols. 1 & 2.]

Criminal reference, by the Sessions Judge, Agra, dated the 3rd September 1920.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of an order of Mr. Mohammad Azim-ud-din Khan, who is a Magistrate of the First Class, at Agra. A complaint was laid before him in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate at Fatehabad. When the matter was looked into and some evidence taken, it appeared, to use the words of the learned Sessions Judge, that "undoubtedly the proper Court in which the complaint should have been launched was that of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Agra Tahsil." At this time Mohammad Azim-ud-din Khan was Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Fatehabad Tahsil and he, having heard part of the evidence, had the the question of jurisdiction brought to his notice. He thereupon returned the complaint for presentation to the proper Court. The matter was brought to the attention of the learned Sessions Judge and he took the view that, inasmuch as Mohammad Azim-ud din was a First Class Magistrate, he had the power to decide the matter and should have taken cognizance of it, and he called upon the Magistrate for an explanation which explanation is to be found amongst the papers Notice was given to the Government Advocate and he appeared before me. The question is a very simple one but it deals with an important matter of practice which turns apparently on the right construction of section 12, clauses (1) and (2) of the Criminal Procedure Code. The words in that section so far as they are pertinent to this matter, are as follows:—"the District Magistrate subject to the control of the Local Government may, from time to time, define local areas within which such persons (i. e., Sub-Magistrates) may exercise all or any of the powers with which they may respectively be invested under this Code." That, therefore, shows that districts may be carved up and Sub-Magistrates put in power over them. Clause (2) says: "except as otherwise provided by such definition, the jurisdiction and powers of such persons shall extend throughout such district." It is true that Mr. Mohammad Azim ud din Khan was a Magistrate of the First Class in a district: it also is beyond doubt that he had had jurisdiction defined within local limits by order of the District Magistrate; also there is no doubt that the offence in question lay outside his Sub-Divisional district. Under these circumstances, I am of opinion that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate took the right view when he stated that he, having been placed in charge of a sub-division, his jurisdiction was confined to that sub division, and he could not take cognizance of offences beyond this limit. The only case which was brought to my attention by the learned Government Advocate was the case of Emperor v. Syed Sajjad Husain (1). There is a marked distinction between the two cases. In that case the trial commenced before an Officiating District Magistrate. He ceased to be Officiating District Magistrate but he continued to be a First Class Magistrate and in that capacity continued the hearing of the matter. The question in that case was, whether the mere fact that he ceased to be the District Magistrate ousted his jurisdiction to continue and conclude a trial which he had commenced whilst he was District Magistrate. The answer to that, as may very well be imagined, was that it did not. That, however, involved quite different considerations from the case before me, which is whether the Sub-Divisional Magistrate can take cognizance of matters outside the local areas within which the District Magistrate has appointed him to act. For these reasons, I am of opinion that the Sub Divisional Magistrate was right in the view that he took and the order that he made that the complaint must be returned for presentation to the proper Court was the right order to make under the circumstances.

Complaint returned.

Marriage, validity of, test as to—Law applicable—Buddhist Law, Burmese—Consent of parties, whether necessary—Consent obtained by pressure, whether free.

The law of the place where it is contracted determines the validity of a marriage. [p. 556, col. 1.]

Under the Burmese Buddhist Law there must be free consent of the parties to a valid marriage. [p. 556, col. 1.]

Consent reluctantly given under pressure is not such free consent as is required by that law. [p. 556, col. 1.]

Mr. Sin Hla Aung, for the Applicant.

Mr. Thein Maung, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The point for decision in this case is, whether petitioner and respondent were man and wife. The two ran away together, and respondent kept petitioner in the house of one San Min. It is clear that he made no attempt to treat her as his wife during this period. He got tired of the girl, and did not wish to continue his connection with her. The girl would not return to her home unless he took her and surrendered her to her parents. It appears that considerable persuasion was used to induce him to take her back to them. Eventually, both went to the house of Tun Nyein which is close to the house of the girl's parents. The girl then returned to her home, the neighbours were collected, and the girl and her elder sister went and begged the respondent to come and surrender the girl to her parents. It is perfectly clear that he went there with the greatest reluctance. When he went there he found a collection of people waiting him, and some so called elders proceeded to question him. They asked him whether he would live with the girl as his wife, and he reluctantly said that he would. He was then asked where they would live, and he said in her parents' house. Two of these lugyis admit that they did not think that he ever intended to carry out his promise to marry the girl. These witnesses further go on to state that for about a month from that time they saw petitioner and respondent living in the girl's parents' house as man and wife. In order to decide whether there was a valid marriage, it is first necessary to decide the law binding upon the parties in this matter. Petitioner is a Burman Buddhist and respondent is a Chinese Buddhist born in Burma. I have no hesitation in agreeing with the dictum of Sir Charles Fox in the case of Maung Sein Kyi v. Ma E (1) that the law of the place where it was contracted determines the validity of a marriage and that this question must be decided by the Burmese Buddhist Law. Under that law there must be free consent of the parties, but it is obvious that the consent of the respondent was induced and was very reluctant. But, assuming that this amounts to such consent as would constitute this a promise of marriage, it would be necessary for that promise to be followed by open living as man and wife. As regards this latter point, the evidence is conflicting. The position of the so-called lugyis is not such as tends to inspire confidence in their veracity. They are neighbours. They were specially called in order to effect this marriage. No sufficient ground has been made out, in my opinion, for me to differ from the finding of fact on this point come to by the Magistrate. If, therefore, the parties did not live together after the surrender of the girl to her parents, the question is, whether the consent that he gave was such as would render the contract a marriage. It is clear that the respondent was only dragged there after much persuasion, and did not expect to find a number of people collected, and it is equally clear that he was rushed into giving his consent. Even the witnesses for the petitioner state that they did not think that he ever meant to carry out the contract. One of them went so far as to ask him what was to be done, if he did not carry out the contract. He said "Do whatever you like."

Taking all the circumstances into consideration, I am of opinion that there is no valid marriage. The application is dismissed.

Criminal revision from the order of the Sessions Judge, Lahore, dated the 23rd February 1920, affirming that of the Additional District Magistrate, Lahore, dated the 12th January 1920.

Lala. Narinjan Das, R. B. for the Petitioners.

Lala Tirath Ram (for Government Advocate), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of an order of the Sessions Judge of Lahore dismissing the petitioner's appeal to him as being barred by time.

The petitioner was sentenced by the Additional District Magistrate to two sentences of four years' and nine months' rigorous imprisonment, respectively. The sentences to run concurrently. Under these circumstances, the appeal lay to the Sessions Judge, see Sher Muhammad v. Emperor (1). The appeal was, however, erroneously filed in the High Court on the 2nd February 1920, the order appealed against being dated 12th January. The appeal was returned on the 21st February 1920 for presentation in the proper Court and was filed in the Sessions Court on the same day. The learned Sessions Judge dismissed it as time barred, relying upon Sant Singh v. Qaim (2). That was a case where, in a suit of which the jurisdictional value was over Rs. 5,000, the appeal was filed in the Divisional Court instead of in the Chief Court, and it was held that mere carelessness or oversight of the appellant or his Counsel in presenting the appeal in a wrong Court, which, by the exercise of due diligence, could have been avoided, cannot be recognised as a sufficient reason for delay under section 5 of the Indian Limitation Act. In that case the appellant's Pleader was obviously guilty of carelessness, and, further, when the memorandum of appeal was returned for presentation in the proper Court the appellant delayed for several days to present it in the Court having jurisdiction to hear it. Counsel for the petitioner tells me that he saw that the sentences were four years' and nine months' rigorous imprisonment, respectively, and, therefore, he thought that the total amount which the convict had to undergo was four years and nine months and that the appeal lay to the High Court. Had he exercised due diligence he would certainly have seen that the sentences were to run concurrently and, therefore, the total sentence of imprisonment to be undergone was only four years. Had he done this, he would no doubt have realised that the appeal lay to the Sessions Court and not to the High Court. The case, however, is in several respects distinguishable from that reported as Sant Singh v. Qaim (2), especially inasmuch as that was a civil appeal. The Judges there quoted, with approval, the following passage from the case reported in Karsondas v. Bai Gungabai (3), "when the time for appealing is once passed a very valuable right is secured to the successful litigant, and the Court must, therefore, be fully satisfied of the justice of the grounds on which it is sought to obtain an extension of the time for attacking the decree, and thus perhaps depriving the successful litigant of the advantage which he has obtained". Now, in the present case where the appeal is a criminal one there is no "successful litigant" who has secured any "valuable right". It cannot be said that the Crown has secured any valuable right by reason of the appeal not having been filed within the prescribed period. Government has nothing to gain by the appeal being dismissed as time barred. All that the Government is, or should be anxious for is that justice should be done. It would, I think, be very hard in this case if the appellant who is in jail should be deprived of the advantage of his appeal being heard on the merits merely because his Counsel has been somewhat careless in filing the appeal in a wrong Court.

I, therefore, allow the revision, and setting aside the order of the learned Sessions Judge, direct him to hear the appeal in accordance with law.

Revision accepted.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 297, 298—Trial by jury—Jury asked to take broad view of the evidence—Warning against minor discrepancies—Misdirection.

Where a Sessions Judge in his charge to the jury observed :—

"If you are satisfied that there was no object in proving a false case, not from the point of view of seeking for small discrepancies, but upon a broad view of the evidence given before you :"

Held, that there was no misdirection to the jury and the Sessions Judge was right in conveying the caution against minor discrepancies in immateria and collateral events in the case.

Messrs. Hasan Imam and G. C. Pal, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—I have carefully gone through the heads of charge to the jury recorded by the learned Sessions Judge and have considered the petition of appeal and the arguments advanced by the learned Counsel. The charges are full and comprehensive and the evidence appears to have been properly laid before the jury. I have not found any thing to show that the summing up of the case was, in any way, unfair to the accused.

The principal contention of Mr. Hasan Imam has been that the learned Judge misdirected the jury in concluding the general discussion of the evidence by giving a warning against small discrepancies in the evidence of the prosecution. The learned Judge drew the attention of the jury to the material parts of the evidence, which might, in his opinion, tell against the prosecution and in favour of the defence. Then he conveyed the caution against minor discrepancies in the following words :—

Reading this passage in the light of the context in the summing up, far from finding fault with it, I consider that it was a wholesome and proper caution to the jury. It does not do anything more than conveying to the jury the way in which the evidence, in any case, should be looked into. While discrepancies, affecting the material part of the case should receive proper consideration in favour of the accused, minor discrepancies in immaterial and collateral events should carry no weight in judging the case as a whole. A broad view of the evidence need only be taken. This is true both for the Jury as well as for the Judge and, in fact, for any one, who has to form a serious opinion upon the evidence placed before him.

The learned Judge has, therefore, done what he ought to have done, namely, to point out to the jury the way in which the minor discrepancies should be looked into. He has also asked them to take a broad view of the evidence and to be satisfied upon the evidence as to the case being false or true.

In the case of Queen v. Bustee Khan (1) the Sessions Judge conveyed the warning to the jury in the following words:—

"A large number of witnesses have sworn to the facts and if a minor discrepancy in their statements is here and there discoverable, I do not think that such stress should be laid upon them as the Vakil for the defendant urges, or that you should on such grounds only reject the whole of their testimony."

This warning is in terms similar to, if not stronger than, the one given by the Judge to the jury in the present case. Mr. Justice Kemp, so far back as in 1864, observed as follows :—

"I am of opinion that in giving the warning to the jury not to disbelieve a mass of otherwise consistent evidence, because in one or two minor and immaterial points the witnesses made different statements, the Judge used a wise discretion."

I agree entirely with the aforesaid view of that eminent Judge, and also with the reason stated by him that the warning is necessary so that the jurors may not jump to the conclusion that, because a case is weak in one point, the whole charge is false. That case, though ancient, does not seem to have been dissented from, or, in any way, varied by later decisions, nor can the principle of that decision, to my mind, be disputed. In that case, as in the present, the jury appeared to have exercised their own unfettered judgment. They appear to have weighed the evidence properly and given the benefit of the material defects and discrepancies in the prosecution case and have acquitted the accused of the serious charges of murder or of grievous or simple assault under sections 323/109, 325/114, 323/109. They unanimously returned a verdict of guilty under section 147, Indian Penal Code, against some of the accused and by majority against others. The learned Judge accepted the verdict of the majority of the jury and sentenced the prisoners under section 147 some to one year and others to six months' rigorous imprisonment. Mr. Hasan Imam has cited certain authorities, but, when pointed out, he conceded that those cases have no application to the present case. There was clear misdirection in those cases. It was then said that the learned Judge did not explain the common object to the jury. I find that he has done so very clearly. He has explained to them the essential elements that constitute an offence under section 147 and directed their attention to the common object specified in that charge.

I need not refer to the other minor points urged by Mr. Hasan Imam. Suffice it to say, that I have considered them and I do not find any defect in the charge to the jury so as to justify the admission of the appeal.

I, therefore, dismiss this appeal.

I need not have written a long judgment, but for the great importance attached by Mr. Hasan Imam to his contentions, particularly relating to the warning by the Judge to the Jury in the passage referred to above.

Appeal dismissed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 309—Sessions trial—Evidence taken and assessors discharged—Sessions Judge taking evidence thereafter, legality of.

In a Sessions trial with the aid of assessors, a Sessions Judge has no power to take evidence after the assessors have been discharged, and if he does so, the trial is vitiated.

Criminal appeal against the order of the Sessions Judge, Saharanpur, dated the 17th June 1920.

Mr. B. M. Vyas, for the Appellant.

Mr. W. Wallach (Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—Jaisukh, accused, was charged before the Sessions Judge of Saharanpur with having brought about the death of one Udmi by administering arsenic. A great deal of evidence was taken, the assessors gave their opinion and the assessors were discharged and then it occurred to the learned Sessions Judge, when he was about to write his judgment, that he would like to put one or two questions to another man by name Jaisukh, son of Sahibu, who had originally been challaned with the accused but had been discharged by the Magistrate. The learned Sessions Judge thought he would like to put further questions to another witness who had already given evidence. This he, in fact, did and did so in the absence of the assessors and he justifies having done that by placing reliance upon a decision of Mr. Justice Walsh who, in the case of Emperor v. Birbal (Criminal Appeal No. 580 of 1915, decided on the 22nd of September 1916), decided that a Judge after having discharged the assessors could, nevertheless, take further evidence. Now, Mr. Justice Walsh could have arrived at that decision only by the fact that the case of Queen-Empress v. Ram Lal (1) was not brought to his notice because that case is a distinct authority for the very salutary proposition that evidence must not be taken by a Sessions Judge unless that Sessions Judge has the two assessors sitting with him, otherwise, if the Sessions Judge is sitting alone, he does not appear to be a Court, the Court being the Judge plus the assessors. We, therefore, think that the learned Sessions Judge was wrong in taking the evidence of Jaisukh, son of Sahibu, and the further evidence of Nanu Gara and, therefore, we are obliged to set aside the conviction and sentence, and we direct that the accused be tried de novo by the Sessions Judge of Saharanpur as soon as possible.

Conviction and Sentence set aside.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 489—Order for maintenance—Subsequent declaratory decree of Civil Court, effect of.

DAULAT v. EMPEROR.

The jurisdiction conferred by section 488 of the Criminal Procedure Code is auxiliary to that possessed by the Civil Courts, and before enforcing an order for maintenance made under that section a Magistrate is bound to take into consideration any subsequent order of a Civil Court which would disentitle a wife to maintenance.

A Magistrate ought to refuse to enforce an order for maintenance of a child made under section 488 of the Criminal Procedure Code if, after the passing of the order, a Civil Court decides that the respondent is not the father of the child.

Mr. Lambert, for the Applicant.

Mr Nicol, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The respondent obtained an order from the Sub Divisional Magistrate of Shwegyin against the petitioner for payment of two rupees a month for the maintenance of her child The petitioner did not apply to have that order reversed but, instead, he brought a civil suit in the Township Court for a declaration that the child was not his. He obtained a decree and then applied to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate to cancel the order previously made for maintenance. His application was rejected, and properly rejected, as the Magistrate has no power to cancel the order under section 488 once made. But he now comes to this Court, and points out that the Magistrate is not entitled to disregard the civil decree that has been obtained, and which has finally settled the question of paternity.

It has been pointed out in numerous cases that the jurisdiction conferred on a Magistrate under section 488 is only auxiliary to that possessed by the Civil Courts, and a Magistrate ought to take the judgment of a competent Civil Court into consideration, if it settles the question of relationship, and finally places the matter outside the pale of discussion. The result of the civil decree is to supersede the order of the Magistrate directing maintenance, and, as the cases cited in the notes to section 488 of Sohoni's Criminal Procedure Code show, the Magistrate is not entitled to enforce his previous order. As the petitioner did not ask the Magistrate for any order which the Magistrate had jurisdiction to pass, I am unable to accept his application, and accordingly, with the above remarks, it is rejected.

Application rejected.

If a Sessions Judge, before whom an approver has given evidence, finds that the approver has not told the truth, he has power himself to pass an order committing the approver to stand his trial.

Petition, under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of the order of the Sessions Judge, Gurdaspur, dated the 8th June 1920.

The Hon'ble Mian Fazal i Hussain, K. B., for the Petitioner

Sardar Bahadur Sardar Mahtab Singh, Public Prosecutor, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The learned Sessions Judge has come to the conclusion that the approver has falsely accused two persons of murder in order to screen others. So he has acquitted the two accused and passed an order committing the approver to stand his trial.

The correctness of this procedure is questioned. Counsel for the petitioner quotes Emperor v. Kathia (1) and Emperor v. Abani Bhushan Chuckerbutty (2); according to these judgments the Sessions Judge is bound to discharge the approver, though a Magistrate can then make an enquiry and commit him. He also cites Habibullah v. Empress (3), though I do not here find anything to support the contention that a Sessions Judge before whom an approver has given evidence cannot order a commitment.

Crown v. Kadu (4) and Chanan Singh v. Emperor (5) are authorities to the contrary, and, following them, I dismiss this application

Hindu Law — Shudras — Succession—Illegitimate daughter, whether can succeed to mother.

Amongst Shudras an illegitimate daughter succeeds as heir to her mother in default of any nearer heirs.

Appeal from an order passed by the District Judge, Belgaum, in Appeal No. 43 of 1919, reversing the decree passed by, and remanding the suit to, the Subordinate Judge at Bail-Hongal, in Civil Suit No. 74 of 1918.

Mr. D. G. Dalvi, for the Appellants.

Mr. A. G. Desai, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued for an account under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act of a mortgage executed by her mother Somawa. In their written statement the defendants said that the plaintiff's mother Somawa was kept by Somanaik, therefore, the plaintiff had no right to sue. The seventh issue was: Does the plaintiff prove that her mother Somawa was the lawful wife of Somanaik? The plaintiff's Pleader notified to the Court that he did not wish to lead any evidence on issue No. 7, and it was, therefore, presumed that the plaintiff could not prove that Somawa was married to Somanaik. The Judge seemed to consider that that was conclusive, and that the plaintiff, being the illegitimate daughter of Somawa, was unable to sue for an account.

In appeal this question does not seem to have been dealt with. But the appellant relied on the fourth ground of the appeal that it was not open to the defendants-respondents to question the status of the plaintiff-appellant's mother, Somawa, as wife of Somanaik. Ground No. 6 was that the lower Court failed to see that appellant-plaintiff was entitled to sue as heir of her mother Somawa if not as heir of Somanaik. The judgment of the learned appellate Judge is not very clear but it appears from what he says that both Pleaders agreed that the case had to go back. Therefore, we have not got the findings of the learned Judge on the various grounds of appeal beyond this, that he thought that the defendants could not deny the title of their mortgagor Somawa. That, no doubt, is perfectly correct, but it did not follow from that that the plaintiff was entitled to sue in the place of the deceased Somawa. The decree of the lower Court was reversed and the suit was remanded for trial and decision of the other issues. All evidence having been led, neither side was to be at liberty to adduce further evidence.

Now the question whether the plaintiff can sue on the mortgage executed by her mother depends on the question whether, as an illegitimate daughter, she can succeed as heir of her mother's estate. There can be very little doubt that, amongst Shudras, at any rate, the illegitimate daughters succeed as heirs to their mother in default of any nearer heirs. Mr. Ghose, at page 763 of his work on Hindu Law (Third Edition), says: "According to Hindu Law, an illegitimate child is not the child of the father but only of the mother, and can thus have no relations or rights of inheritance except to the mother's property." The dispute has always been whether illegitimate children can succeed as heirs of their fathers. It has never been disputed that they are heirs to their mother's property. The result must be that as Somawa is the mortgagor, the defendants, as the learned appellate Judge points out, cannot dispute the fact that Somawa was entitled to mortgage the property. Then, as the plaintiff is the nearest heir to Somawa, she is entitled to sue for an account of that mortgage. The judgment of the learned Judge in the Court below reversing the decree of the Trial Court is, therefore, correct. The case must be dealt with by the Trial Court in the light of our remarks and findings recorded on issues Nos. 1 to 6. The appeal is dismissed. The respondent is entitled to her costs of the appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

Muhammadan Law—Sunni Schools—Guardianship—Mother, right of, to visit child after expiry of period of hizanat—Suit to enforce right, maintainability of—Jurisdiction of Chief Court of Lower Burma over infants, limits of.

According to Sunni law, a mother has a right to visit and see her child after it has come under the control and guardianship of the father or his relatives, but there is no machinery under the Guardians and Wards Act for working out such a right by means of a suit [p. 563, col. 2; p. 564, col. 1.]

The Chief Court of Lower Burma has no special jurisdiction over infants; its powers in this respect are confined to those given under the Guardians and Wards Act and are only those of a District Court. [p. 563, col. 2.]

Messrs. B. Cowasji and Rutledge, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Das, for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff, Hazara Bibi, is the widow of Abdul Guffar, and the defendant, Suleman Hajee Mohammad, is his father. Mohamed Ariff, who was born in March 1911, is the child of Hazara Bibi and Abdul Guffar. In 1918, Hazara Bibi married again, and the defendant, in consequence of her re-marriage, took away Mohamed Ariff from her custody and now refuses to allow her access to the boy. Plaintiff sues for a declaration that she is entitled to such access, and for orders as to the times and occasions on which such access is to be given. Defendant denies that he is under any legal obligation to allow Hazara Bibi to see her child, and asserts that there is no cause of action against him, and that the Court has no jurisdiction to make the order desired by the plaintiff.

Two preliminary issues have been fixed, and Counsel have addressed me on them. The first issue is, whether the plaintiff is entitled to access to her son.

The parties are Sunni Muhammadans. It is admitted that, according to the law binding on them, the defendant is entitled to the control and guardianship of Mohamed Ariff, Among the Hanifis the accepted doctrine is that the mother's hizanat terminates when the son has completed seven years of age. In Hamilton's Hedaya (Second Edition, page 139) it is laid down that a boy or girl who has passed the period of hizanat has no option to be with one parent in preference to the other, but must remain in charge of the father. The opinion of Shafei to the contrary is not accepted, on the ground that, in the instance given, the prophet gave the boy the choice of parents after prayer to God to direct him. The instances cited in sections 2 and 3, page 140, Tagore Law Lectures (1891-92) are also instances of choice made after special guidance. Mr. Rutledge relies upon the following passage in the Durr-al Mukhtar (Brij Mohan Dayal's translation, page 314) as authority for the mother's right of access to her child after her guardianship has ended:—

"It is in the Sirajiah: when custody of the mother ceases, and the father takes the child, the father cannot be forced to send the child to her, but whenever she likes to see the child, she will not be prohibited from doing so. My master Shaik Ramli has held that the father can take the child on a journey after expiry of the period of tutelage, and that all agnates other than the father are like the father in this matter, . . . Ramification:—a father goes away with his child and then divorces the mother, she demands the child. If the father took away the child with the mother's consent, he is not bound to take the child to her, but if he took it away without her consent, he is bound to do so."

The "Ramification" obviously applies to the case of a child still under the mother's custody, and Mr. Das argues that the previous portion of the Sirajiah should be restricted to children who have not passed out of the mother's control. The language of the passage seems to me to negative any such interpretation, and the reference in the very next sentence to the expiry of the period of tutelage seems to indicate that "ceases" means "when the period of her hizanat has terminated." In Neil and Bailey's Digest of Muhammadan Law (Second Edition, page 439) the rule regarding access is stated thus: "When a child is with one of its parents, the other is not to be prevented from seeing and visiting it." No other authority on this question has been quoted, nor have I been able to find any. The Durr-al Mukhtar is a great authority, and, in the absence of any text to the contrary, the rule laid down must be accepted as binding. I think, therefore, that, according to Sunni law, a mother has a right to visit and see her child after it has come under the control and guardianship of the father or his relatives.

It is argued that, even if Muhammadan Law does not confer this right, it is a right inherent in the mother; a natural right to which the Court will give effect, according to principles of equity, justice and good conscience. As my decision on the mother's right under Muhammadan Law is in her favour, it is perhaps not necessary to deal with this part of Counsel's argument, but, in view of the stress laid upon this view by Mr. Rutledge, I think it advisable to consider the point.

There is no doubt that this is a case in which, if we were not in a Court of law, but acted under the influence of feelings of natural indignation at the spite prompting the action of the boy's grandfather, we might be tempted to decide in the mother's favour from sympathy with her natural desire to see her child, and the ill effects the deprivation is having on her health. But, until the passing of Guardianship of Infants Act, 1886, even in England the rights of a father to the guardianship of his child were absolute. See A & B (Infants), In re (1). The history of the law on this subject, and the principle on which the law was administered in the Chancery Court, are discussed in Agar Ellis, In re, Agar Ellis v. Lascelles (2). In that case the father put a restriction on the intercourse between his daughter, aged seventeen, and her mother on the plea that he believed that the mother would alienate the daughter's affection from him. The Court suggested modifications of the terms imposed by him, but he was not willing to accept any of them. In spite of his somewhat unreasonable attitude, the Court declined to interfere. The "sacred rights" of the father were considered paramount, except in the utmost need and in the most extreme case. English case law seems to me to afford no foundation for the contention that a mother has a natural and inherent right of access to her children. Nor can such a right be founded on "justice, equity and good conscience." As their Lordships of the Privy Council pointed out in Waghela Rajsanji v. Shekh Masludin (3), equity and good conscience are generally interpreted to mean the rules of English law if found applicable to Indian society and circumstances. Until 1886 there was no rule in English law recognising the mother's right of access; and if Hazara Bibi had no cause of action under her own law, I do not think such a cause can be conferred by an English Statute altering the law relating to English mothers. In my opinion, her case, so far as it is based on "natural and inherent rights," cannot be accepted. I answer the first issue by saying that Hazara Bibi has a right of access to her child under Muhammadan Law, and as this right has been infringed, she has a cause of action.

The next point is, whether this Court has jurisdiction to make the mandatory order for which she asks. In the Court of Chancery, jurisdiction was exercised over infants by the Lord Chancellor, probably by way of delegation from the Crown as parens patriæ. The way in which that jurisdiction was exercised was discussed by Cotton, L. J., Agar-Ellis, In re, Agar-Ellis v. Lascelles (2) (p. 332). Special jurisdiction over infants has been conferred on the Indian High Courts by Charter, and this jurisdiction is not affected by the Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890): See section 3. But the Chief Court of Lower Burma seems to me to have no such special jurisdiction. It is not conferred by section 13 of the Burma Laws Act of 1898, which merely provides for the law to be administered in certain cases, nor by the Lower Burma Courts Act of 1900. Unless this Court has special jurisdiction, its powers are confined to those given under the Guardians and Wards Act, and are only those of a District Court. Hindu Law—Joint family—Partition—Sons, share of, whether included in share of father.

As a general rule, at a partition among the members of a joint Hindu family each member is presumed to represent not only himself but also his sons, and the sons take their share through their father as being included in the share allotted to him, and the rule is not limited in its application to cases where the sons are minors [p. 564, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 8th September 1919.

Mr. Har Dhian Ohandra, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs are the sons of Udairaj Singh. They instituted the suit from which this appeal has arisen against their father, against their father's brother, Ram Bahadur Singh, and his son, Jolai Singh, and against the descendants of a deceased brother of their father for partition of the family properties. It is not disputed that a partition took place three years ago between Udairaj Singh and his brothers. The partition was carried out in the main by arbitrators though some small portion of the property was divided by the parties themselves. The award was made a rule of Court and a decree was passed in accordence with it. The plaintiffs were not formally made parties to the partition proceedings though it is now beyond dispute that they were fully aware of them No division was made in those proceedings between Udairaj Singh and his own sons, and though the plaintiffs assert that they separated from their father at that time, the evidence leaves little doubt that they still remain joint. The learned Subordinate Judge in his judgment correctly states the general rule of law as being that laid down in Umed Babar v. Khushalbhai (1), which was quoted and approved in Jan Mahommed Abdulla Datu v. Datu Joffar (2) that, as a general rule, at a partition among the members of a joint Hindu family each member is presumed to represent not only himself but also his sons, and the sons take their share through their father as being included in the share allotted to him. It is true that in most of the cases in which the principle has been applied the sons have been minors, as, for instance, in the two Privy Council cases of Balkishen Das v. Ram Narain Sahu (3) and Ramkishore Kedarnath v. Jainarayan Ramrachpal (4). But the rule, as laid down in Umed Babar v. Khushalbhai (1), is not limited to minors nor, in the absence of fraud, is there any reason why it should be so limited. The share of the father and sons is partitioned as a single unit, and to affect a partition is surely within the extensive power wielded by the father as head and manager of the joint family. If there had been any fraud on the plaintiffs the matter would have been different, but no fraud is established by the evidence or even alleged in the plaint.

The learned Subordinate Judge, while fully accepting this principle, has held, on the strength of a single sentence in the deposition of two of the defendants' witnesses, that a disruption of the family by partial partition has occurred prior to the partition made by the arbitrators, and on this ground he considers that the principle does not apply. He says:—

A partition in the eye of law had taken place on the disruption of the family by partial partition of the family property and the right of 'representation by the father ceased to exist when there was no existing joint family' [Marudayi v. Doraisami (5)].

It may be noted that the Madras case relied on by the learned Subordinate Judge has been misunderstood by him. In fact, it lays down the exact contrary of the proposition for which the learned Subordinate Judge cites it. "It cannot be argued," say the learned Judges who decided that case, "that a right of representation is incompatible with the existence of separate interests on the part of the heirs in the inheritance. No doubt Vijnaneswara and other commentators, in expounding the doctrine of representation with reference to the partition of the ancestral estate, speak of 'unseparated brother' (Mitakshara 1, Verse 2; Saraswati Vilasa, Foulkes, section 207); but it does not follow that the same doctrine ought not to be applied among separated brethren." The question does not, however, arise, as we are satisfied that the two pages relied on by the learned Subordinate Judge wholly failed to establish any previous disruption of the joint family. The first witness referred to was Jagannath, one of the arbitrators in the previous arbitration. He says that the arbitrators did not divide the sir land in village Belawa as the parties informed them that they already had divided this before the aribitration commenced. The other witness, Mahadeo Singh, makes a similar statement as to a private division of grain, cattle and household effects. The whole thing was substantially one transaction, and the mere fact that the parties amicably divided a small share of the property before resorting to arbitration for the division of the rest does not affect the legal results of the partition or entitle the sons to have the partition re-opened in the absence of any evidence that their interest was prejudiced. We accordingly allow the appeal and dismiss the suit with costs in favour of the contesting defendants in both Courts.

Appeal allowed.

Held, that there was no relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties as the transaction of sale by P. to D. had the effect of making them co-owners; and that the fact that the parties had for years past understood their mutual relations to be that of landlord and tenant would not result in their being treated in law as if they were superior and subordinate holders respectively, because they could not have a mutual relation in law which was contrary to the true state of facts [p. 566, cols. 1 & 2.]

Letters Patent Appeal against the following judgment of Mr. Justice Newbould, dated the 2nd of June 1919, in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 774 of 1918 :—

NEWBOULD, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for rent. The contentions of the defendants, who have been unsuccessful in both the Courts below and who have preferred this appeal, are that the relationship of landlord and tenant did not exist between them and the plaintiffs and that a portion of the rent claimed is not recoverable as it is an abwab. As regards the first point, it appears from a kobala of 1824 that the defendants purchased from the plaintiffs a portion of the taluk in which this land is situated. Since then, although their purchase gave them a co ordinate right with the plaintiffs the defendants have accepted a subordinate position and have been paying rent to the plaintiffs. On this finding the defendants cannot deny in a rent suit that they are liable to continue paying rent.

As regards the second point, the rent claimed is found to be more than the rent which was payable for the land in suit at the time of the defendants' purchase of a share of the estate. But there is no evidence, and nothing else, to support the inference that this extra sum is an abwab. I think that the lower Appellate Court was right in inferring that either this extra sum was not an abwab or if it be assumed to be an abwab it had been consolidated with the rent. The appeal fails and is dismissed with cost.

Babu Shibaram Mukherjee for Babu Brojendra Nath Chatterjee, for the Appellants.

Babu Rajendra Chandra Guha, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendants in a suit for rent. The defendants resisted the claim on the ground that there was no relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties. The Courts below have found this allegation well founded in substance, but still they have decreed the claim.

In 1824, the predecessor of the plaintiffs transferred to the predecessors of the defendants a share of the lands. The result of the transaction was that the parties thereupon became co-owners, and it is inconceivable that the plaintiffs can treat the defendants as their tenants. Mr. Justice Newbould has found that the plaintiffs and the defendants are co-ordinate owners in possession, but, nevertheless, he has made a decree for rent in favour of the plaintiffs against the defendants as if plaintiffs were superior holders and the defendants held a subo dinate position. The plaintiffs-respondents, have conceded that neither law nor logic can justify this view, but they have taken refuge in the contention that, for many years past, the parties have understood their mutual relation to be that of landlord and tenant. It is manifest, however, that the parties cannot have a mutual relation in law which is contrary to the true state of facts; if the facts show, as they undeniably do in this case, that the parties are co-ordinate in position, they cannot be treated in law as if they were superior and subordinate holders respectively. To test the position we invited the respondents to state the incidents of the tenancy, if it was assumed that there was a tenancy between the parties. Mr. Guha, who appeared for them, frankly stated that it was an extremely difficult question to answer, for undoubtedly it is by no means an easy task to define the incidents of a tenancy which has no existence either in fact or in law. Another test, equally efficacious, is to ask, whether the plaintiffs have an estate in reversion immediately expectant on the termination of the lease. Mr. Guha confessed that, if the so-called tenancy came to an end, the plaintiffs-respondents would not be entitled to take possession of the land. We are consequently of opinion that there is no relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties, that the appeal must be allowed, and that the suit, framed as a suit for rent, must be dismissed with costs in all the Courts.

KISHAN DAYAL AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS – APPELLANTS

THE DEPUTY COMMISSIONER, PARTABGARH, AS MANAGER, COURT OF WARDS, KALAKANKAR ESTATE—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Declaration suit for that decree is ultra vires and void, whether maintainable.

KISHAN DAYAL v. DEPUTY COMMISSIONER, PARTABGARH.

A suit for a declaration that a decree is ultra vires and void and futile under the law cannot be maintained.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Partabgarh, dated the 28th February 1920.

Mr. Har Dhian Chandra, for the Appellants.

Mr. N. N. Ghoshal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In our opinion this appeal must be dismissed and we dismiss it on a purely legal ground, which will be evident from a perusal of the relief which was sought in the Court below. The appellants here, Kishen Dayal and Bhagwan Lal, were the plaintiffs and the defendant was the Deputy Commissioner in charge of Kalakankar estate. In paragraph 14 of the plaint the appellants asked for a declaration to the effect that the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Partabgarh, dated the 23th of April 190?, being ultra vires is void and futile under the law. It seems to us that no suit for such a declaration is maintainable.

We may refer to the facts which have given rise to this somewhat extraordinary litigation. A suit for possession was brought on behalf of the Court of Wards against these appellants here, Kishan Dayal and Bhagwan Lal, and a third man, named Ganga Prasad. The claim was for possession and for mesne profits.

The suit was dismissed in the Court of first instance. There was an appeal to this Court and this Court allowed the appeal and directed that a decree for possession be given to the Court of Wards plaintiff. It was also directed by this Court's decree that mesne profits should be awarded to the plaintiff; and for this purpose the Court included in its formal decree directions under the provisions of Order XX, rule 12, sub-rule (1). What happened then was, that the case went down to the Subordinate Judge. He held the inquiry which had been directed by this Court and proceeded himself to pass a final decree for the amount of mesne profits which he found due to the Court of Wards. The appellants here objected to this proceeding on the part of the Subordinrte Judge. They came up to this Court and filed a miscellaneous application in which they questioned the jurisdiction of the Subordinate Judge to pass any final decree. The ground taken, apparently, was that the functions of the Subordinate Judge were confined to making an inquiry and reporting the result of his inquiry to this Court in order that the amount of mesne profits ascertained by him might be incorporated in this Court's final decree. Whatever view we may take of the procedure followed by the Subordinate Judge, it appears to us that, so far as this is concerned, we are debarred from questioning it, because it seems to have been held in proceedings here that the order passed by the Subordinate Judge awarding mesne profits was in law a good decree, and for that reason the miscellaneous application, which the present appellants brought before this Court, was rejected and they were told that if they wanted any redress they ought to file an appeal.

The filing of an appeal against the order or decree of the Subordinate Judge would have involved the payment of a large Court-fee and so it seems to have struck the plaintiffs that it would be a cheaper way of going about the matter if they brought the present declaratory suit, which they were able to do on the payment of a Court-fee of Rs. 10. No doubt, this was the most economical course for the plaintiffs, but, in our opinion, it was not one which was open under the law. It is hardly necessary for us to cite any authority in support of the proposition that a suit for a declaration that a decree is ultra vires and void and futile under the law cannot be maintained.

We, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

The second appeal came on for hearing on the 29th and 30th October 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Messrs. K. P. M. Menon and K. P. Padmanabha Pillai, for the Appellants.—The plaintiff's suit should not have been dismissed on the ground of want of Court's sanction for filing the suit. There is no statutory obligation to get the sanction. It is not a condition precedent. Where it is an indispensable requirement it is expressly stated in the Civil Procedure Code. See Civil Procedure Code, section 62, and Provincial Insolvency Act, section 17. It is a Common Law obligation. In any case, the defect, if any, was cured by the plaintiff obtaining the sanction at a very early stage of the proceedings, even before the written statement was filed.

Messrs. C. Madhavan Nair and T. Eromani Unni, for the Respondents, referred to the decision of Venkatasubbaramiah v. Nambura Ramiah Sethi (1) as supporting the position that previous sanction is necessary.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff is the appellant. Her suit for specific performance of an alleged contract of 20th March 1910 (under which the plaintiff was entitled to obtain a deed of renewal of a kanom mortgage which had been enjoyed by her deceased sister from 1897) was dismissed by the District Court on two grounds: (1) The present suit having been commenced in June 1914 against the Receivers (defendants Nos. 3 to 5) appointed by the Sub-Court of Calicut in a Suit No 13 of 1913 (brought for removal of the 1st defendant, the promisor under the plaint contract, from his position of karnavan by some members of his tavazhi) without previously obtaining the sanction of the Sub Court, it could not be sustained even though in July 1914 (before even the Receivers filed their written statements), the plaintiff obtained the Sub Court's sanction to proceed with the present suit against the Receiver. (2) Though "there was a general understanding" between the plaintiff and the 1st defendant that the 1st defendant "would be agreeable to the plaintiff" (in the matter of the renewal of the kanom of 1897 in the plaintiff's name) "if she evicted one Syed Ali" (in possession of one of the kanom lands), "there was no definite contract" for renewal.

We are unable to agree with the learned District Judge as regards the first ground of his decision. Though the judgment in Pramatha Nath Gangooly v. Khetra Nath Banerjee (2) (the decision of a single Judge) is in favour of the view of the District Judge and though a decision of this High Court (again, that of a Single Judge) Venkatasubbaramiah v. Nambura Ramiah Sethi (1) also contains observations in support of the same view, we think that the better opinion is the one enunciated by Division Benches of the Calcutta High Court in Banku Behary Dey v. Harendra Nath Mukherjee (3) and Maharaja of Burdwan v. Apurba Krishna Roy (4) and in Jagat Tarini Dasi v. Naba Gopal Ohaki (5) (one of the members of the said Benches having been that very learned Judge Sir Asutosh Mookerjee). That opinion is also supported by text-writers of acknowledged authority, like High on Receivers, Woodroffe (page 91) and Kerr (page 167). That opinion is to the effect that the omission to obtain previous sanction (a sanction which is not a condition imposed by statutory law, like the sanction mentioned in section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure or section 17 of the Presidency Insolvency Act but one imposed by the Common Law to enforce due respect towards Courts of Justice) does not affect the jurisdiction of the Court but is an illegality which can be effectively cured by the plaintiff obtaining the sanction during the course of the litigation.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Family property sold for arrears of revenue and purchased by one member whether joint or separate.

Where joint family property is put up for sale by the Revenue Authorities on account of arrears of revenue and is purchased by one of the members of the family, then, unless it can be shown that it was purchased out of the joint family purse or was thrown back into the joint family property, it becomes the private property of the purchaser. Second appeal from the decision of the Assistant Judge, Sholapur, in Appeal No. 125 of 1918, reversing the decree passed by the Joint Subordinate Judge at Barsi, in Civil Suit No. 267 of 1917.

Mr. P. V. Kane, for the Appellants.

Mr. K. H. Kelkar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The plaintiffs sued for partition and possession of their half share in the plaint property. The learned Assistant Judge reversed the decree of the lower Court in favour of the plaintiffs and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit with costs. The learned Judge said: "the only issue in appeal was, whether the property was joint property of Nama, Vithoba and Raoji, the ancestor of the plaintiffs". He came to the conclusion that it was not. That, as far as we are concerned, is a finding of fact. But an entirely new point of law has been raised in second appeal, namely, that assuming that the property had been joint and then lost on account of its being sold for arrears of revenue but afterwards recovered by one of the members of the family, other than Raoji, out of his own means, then the text of the Mitakshara applies, which says that, when family property has been lost and then re acquired by one of the members of the family, that member is entitled to keep a quarter to himself, while the remaining three-quarters must go back into the family. That text and others were discussed in Bajaba Bajirao v. Trimbak Vishvanath (1). There the learned Judges say: "though there is no explicit rule which enables a member of a united family purchasing a portion of the patrimony, formerly sold, out of his separate means to enjoy it, as in the case of another acquisition, free from claims to partition by his co-parceners, yet neither is any express limit set to such enjoyment, and it would probably now be held that such property stands on the same footing as any other purchased property of his separate estate. A contention to the contrary was abandoned in the case of Gooroo Pershad Roy v. Debee Pershad Tewaree (2)". Then the judgment refers to the case of Visalatchi Ammal v. Annasamy Sastry (3) which said: "The language both of the texts and the commentaries seems to us as at present to indicate that the rule was intended to apply strictly to hereditary property of which the members of the family had been violently or wrongfully dispossessed or adversely kept out of possession for a length of time: 'property unjustly detained which could not be recovered before' is the import of the ordinance of Manu, Chapter IX, Sloka 209."

This is not a case of a family being violently or wrongfully dispossessed or adversely kept out of possession of the suit property. What happened was that, it was put up for sale by the Revenue Authorities on account of arrears of revenue and was purchased by one of the members of the family. Therefore, unless it can be shown that it was purchased out of the joint family purse or was thrown back into the joint family property, it became the private property of the purchaser. The judgment of the Court below must be confirmed and the appeal dismissed with costs.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Property transferred to pay off father's debts—Sons, right of, to recover property, extent of.

Where joint ancestral property has passed out of a joint family, either under a conveyance executed by a father in consideration of an antecedent debt, or in order to raise money to pay off an antecedent debt or under a sale in execution of a decree for the father's debt, his sons, by reason of their duty to pay their father's debts, cannot recover that property, unless they show that the debts were contracted for immoral purposes, and that the purchasers had notice that they were so contracted, and the operation of this rule is not limited to cases where the joint family property has passed out of the hands of the family and gone into the hands of persons who were neither previous creditors when the sale is a private alienation, nor judgment-creditors when the sale is by public auction. [p. 571, col. 2: p. 572, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Gonda, dated the 19th December 1919.

Mr. Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. P. Sen, for Respondents Nos. 1 and 4.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff, Basdeo Lal, against Mahabir, Nanku, Kalidin, and Bachcha, defendants Nos. 1 to 4, for recovery of possession of a one-anna eight pies share in the village of Kohaniar, Pargana Utraula, District Gonda. Ram Saran Lal, father of the plaintiff, was added as defendant No. 5 to the suit.

The facts necessary for the disposal of this appeal are as follows:—The plaintiff and the defendant No. 5 constitute a joint Hindu family; and so do the defendants Nos. 1 to 4. The defendant No. 1 is the son of one Salarn Baqqal and the defendants Nos. 2 to 4 are the sons of the defendant No. 1. On the 16th of January 1901 Ram Saran Lal gave a zar peshgi lease by way of usufructuary mortgage to Salarn Baqqal of the property in suit and, in virtue of it, Salarn entered into possession of the share mortgaged. On the 21st of November 1906 Ram Saran Lal executed a deed of further charge in favour of Salaru. On the 23rd of January 1907, Ram Saran Lal executed a deed of simple mortgage in favour of one Sita Ram in respect of an eight-pies share out of the share in suit. On the 11th of July 1908 another deed of further charge was executed by Ram Saran Lal in favour of Salaru. The debt due under the deed of the 21st of November 1906 merged into the consideration of the second deed of further charge. On the 30th of September 1908, Ram Saran Lal executed a deed of mortgage by conditional sale in favour of the defendant No. 1 in respect of the share in suit. On the 17th of February 1910, the defendant No. 1 purchased the mortgagee rights of Sita Ram. In execution of a decree for simple debt the share in suit was sold by public auction on the 20th of May 1910 and was purchased by the decree-holder, Lachman Das.

In a suit instituted on foot of the mortgage of the 30th of September 1908 by the defendant No. 1 against Ram Saran Lal and Lachman Das, a preliminary decree was passed on the 28th of October 1910, and it was made absolute on the 6th of June 1911. Mahabir, the defendant No. 1, obtained formal delivery of possession in pursuance of the said decree on the 8th of November 1911 over the property in suit; he was already in actual possession under the zar-peshgi lease of the 16th of January 1911. The present suit has been instituted on the allegation that the property in suit is the joint family property, that the deed of mortgage, dated the 30th of September 1907, was not binding on the plaintiff because the defendant No. 5 had no power to make an alienation of the ancestral property, nor had the plaintiff been benefited by the said alienation and that he is not bound by the foreclosure decree obtained by the defendant No. 1 because he was no party to it. A large number of pleas were raised in defence which necessitated the framing of no less than eight issues in the case. The lower Court decided the first two issues only and dismissed the plaintiff's suit: hence this appeal by the plaintiff. These two issues are as follows: "1. Whether or not the plaintiff is bound by the decrees, preliminary and absolute, passed in favour of the defendant No. 1 on the basis of the mortgage deed in suit? 2. Has the property in suit been sold in execution of a money-decree obtained by Lachman Das against the defendant No. 5?" I propose to dispose of the appeal with reference to Issue No. 1 only.

It is admitted that the plaintiff and his father, Ram Saran Lal, defendant No. 5, constitute a joint Hindu family, and it is also admitted that the property in suit is the ancestral property of the family. The debt contracted under the deed of the 30th of September 1908 was not challenged on the ground that it was incurred for immoral or illegal purposes or that it was illusory.

Such being the facts of the case, I am of opinion that the rule of law laid down by Sir James Colvile in the case of Surai Bunsi Koer v. Sheo Persad Singh (1) applies. His Lordship said: "That where joint ancestral property has passed out of a joint family, either under a conveyance executed by a father in consideration of an antecedent debt, or in order to raise money to pay off an antecedent debt, or under a sale in execution of a decree for the father's debt, his sons, by reason of their duty to pay their father's debts, cannot recover that property, unless they show that the debts were contracted for immoral purposes, and that the purchasers had notice that they were so contracted."

The learned Advocate for the appellant argues that the rule applies only to cases where a stranger and not the judgment-creditor is the purchaser. In support of this contention he relies upon certain observations in the judgment of Lord Shaw in the case of Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (2). The learned Advocate further contends on the same ground that the case of Gur Narain v. Gulzari Lal (3), upon which the lower Court has relied, must be taken to have been overruled and that I should, therefore, refer this appeal to a Bench of two Judges for decision. I do not think there is anything in the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sahu Ram Chandra's case (2), which limits the operation of the rule laid down by Sir James Colvile to cases where the joint family property has passed out of the hands of the family and gone into the hands of persons who were neither previous creditors when the sale is a private alienation or judgment-creditors when the sale is by public auction. On the contrary, the following observations in Sahu Ram Chandra's case (2) affirm the rule enunciated in Suraj Bunsi Koer's case (1) without prescribing any limitation of the nature suggested by the learned Advocate for the appellant:—"A perusal of the numerous authorities will show that where a joint family property has been sold out and out, or where a decree in execution of the mortgage has been obtained against the property, and rights have been sprung up with regard to the joint family estate, these rights are not to be defeated by the members of the joint family simply questioning the transaction entered into by its head." The learned Advocate refers to the following passage in the same judgment:—"They desire, in the first place, to make it clear that much if not all of the law upon this subject has arisen from the necessity of protecting the rights of third persons, say the purchasers of the property who have taken their title for onerous consideration and in good faith." These observations directly bear upon the question of onus in cases where a creditor is setting up a charge in his favour on the basis of an alienation made by a manager of a joint Hindu family. Immediately following the passage quoted above, occurs the following sentence:—"This is at the bottom of the doctrine of onus, which was dealt with so fully by Knight Bruce, L. J., in Hunooman-persaud Panday v. Musammat Babooee Munraj Koonweree (4)." This is followed by a quotation from the judgment in Hunoomna Persaud Panday's case (4), and at the end Lord Shaw says:—"The onus was accordingly properly laid and the issue of no benefit to the estate is settled." Similarly, the reference to "third parties" in the paragraph immediately following the observations quoted above is made in relation to the ground upon which the rule as to 'onus' in cases of enforcement of a charge rests.

The interpretation which I have placed on his Lordship's judgment bearing upon the point under consideration is supported by the decision of a Bench of this Court in the case of Muhammad Baqar Ali Khan v. Hazari Lal (5). I am aware of a more recent decision of another Bench of this Court to which I also was a party which has not accepted the interpretation adopted in the case reported in Muhammad Baqir Ali Khan v. Hazari Lal (5); but the view taken in the latter case as to the point with which I am concerned in this case remains untouched.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the authority of the decision in Gur Narain v. Gulzari Lal (3), based as it is upon several decisions of the Privy Council as well as of the Courts in India, is not shaken by the ruling in Sahu Ram Chandra's case (2). The learned Advocate frankly admitted that the case of Gur Narain v. Gulzari Lal (3) is fatal to his appeal. I may also refer to a decision of Mr. (now Sir Edward) Chamier in the case of Parmeshur Dat v. Debi Sahae (6) which entirely covers the present case and is against the appellant.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, ACTG. C. J.—This is an appeal under clause 15 of the Letters Patent from the judgment of Mr. Justice Shamsul Huda in a suit for recovery of damages due to an unauthorised distress warrant.

At the time of the incidents which have culminated in this litigation, the plaintiff-respondent was a resident within the Municipality of Balley, and the defendant-appellant was its Vice-Chairman. On the 8th October 1914, the Vice-Chairman served the plaintiff with a notice of demand for dues claimed as fees payable for removal of filth from a receptacle in his house. On the 31st October 1914, a bailiff under the orders of the Vice-Chairman, entered the house of the plaintiff and attempted to execute a distress warrant, as no payment had been made in response to the demand. The present suit was instituted on the 2nd February 1915, and the substance of the complaint of the respondent was that the proceedings of the Vice-Chairman were malicious and the Municipality had no authority to levy the sum claimed by summary process. The Court of first instance decreed the suit. Upon appeal the Subordinate Judge reversed that decision. On second appeal to this Court Mr. Justice Shamsul Huda has set aside the decree of the Subordinate Judge and restored that of the primary Court."

It is not necessary for our present purpose to deal with the question, whether or not the sum claimed by the Municipality was recoverable by summary process. The answer to that question turns upon the consideration of a somewhat recondite argument as to the meaning of the word 'rubbish' in section 6 (14) of the Bengal Municipal Act. Upon this matter of interpretation, the Courts below have been divided in opinion, and we shall assume that the sum claimed was not recoverable by summary process, as contended by the plaintiff respondent. We must also observe that the allegation of the plaintiff that the proceedings of the Vice-Chairman were actuated by malice has not been established and that finding plainly cannot be assailed in second appeal.

The Advocate-General has contended on behalf of the appellant that the suit should be dismissed on the ground that the plaintiff has failed to comply with the requirements of section 363 of the Bengal Municipal Act. That section is in these terms :

"No suit shall be brought against the Commissioners of any Municipality, or any of their officers, or any person acting under their direction, for anything done under this Act, until the expiration of one month next after notice in writing has been delivered or left at the office of such Commissioners and also (if the suit is intended to be brought against any officer of the said Commissioners or any person acting under their direction) at the place of abode of the person against whom such suit is threatened to be brought, stating the cause of suit and the name and place of abode of the person who intends to bring the suit ; and, unless such notice be proved, the Court shall find for the defendant. Every such action shall be commenced within three months next after the accrual of the cause of action, and not afterwards. If the Commissioners or their officer, or any person to whom any such notice is given, shall, before suit is brought, tender sufficient amends to the plaintiff, such plaintiff shall not recover."

There can be no doubt that the notice contemplated by section 363 was not given in the present case. Reference has, no doubt, been made to a letter written by the Solicitors for the plaintiff to the defendant. The letter, however, can in no sense be treated as a notice in compliance with the requirements of section 363. But, even if it be so regarded by any stretch of language, it is plain that the plaintiff has not complied with section 363 in so far as notice upon the Commissioners is required. It will be observed that section 363 requires the service of notice upon the Commissioners in every instance and also upon the person concerned, if the suit is intended to be brought against an officer of the Commissioners or any person acting under their direction. No such notice was served on the Commissioners, and we must proceed on the assumption that the plaintiff has not complied with the requirements of section 363. But his contention is that, section 363 has no application to the circumstances of the present case, because what is alleged by him to have been done by order of the defendant was not something "done under the Act." It is not necessary to consider seriously the suggestion faintly made that this was not a proceeding brought against a person acting under the direction of the Commissioners. There can be no room for controversy that the Vice-Chairman acted under the direction of the Commissioners, and if what was done under his instructions was something "done under the Act," section 363 is applicable.

The provisions of section 363 have a parallel in many Statutes in England, and there are cases in the books which lay down principles obviously applicable to the circumstances of the present litigation. In Waterhouse v. Keen (1) the plaintiff was obliged to pay, under a Turn-pike Act, two tolls on the same day in respect of the same stage coach. He instituted the suit for recovery of the sum paid on the second occasion, on the allegation that a second toll was not payable and that the levy was wholly unauthorised. The Turn-pike Act provided that no action should be commenced against any person "for anything done in pursuance of the Act," until after the service of a notice to the Clerk of the Trustees (similar to what is contemplated by section 363) and also required that the suit should be instituted within a prescribed time from the date of the Act. It was contended that as the act of which the plaintiff complained could not have been lawfully done under the authority of the Act, the act could not be said to be one done in pursuance of the Act. This contention was overruled. Mr. Justice Bayley pointed out the object of the Act in these terms: "The substantial part of the enactment is, that notice should be given to the Trustees in order that they may tender satisfaction, and that the action should be brought promptly after the fact committed If the Act of Parliament does not apply to this case, parties may be at liberty to maintain actions for all sums levied under a misconstruction of the Act within a period of six years. And thus the object of the Legislature, which was that the action should be brought promptly, will be defeated But it is said that, in this case, there was not anything done by the defendant in pursuance of the Act; but that expression, as used in this Act of Parliament, means that the thing done should be done by the defendant acting colore officii; if he did so act, he is within the protection of the Act of Parliament." Mr. Justice Holroyd pointed out that the protection of the Act was not confined to cases where the party had done an act which could be justified: in other words, if the act was so restricted, the result would be that there would be no occasion for the suit, which would necessarily fail on the merits.

A similar view has been taken in subsequent cases; Selmes v. Judge (2), Midland Railway Company v. Withington Local Board (3) where Fry, L. J., observed with reference to section 264 of the Public Health Act, 1875, that the protection of the Statute extended to everything done bona fide under the colour of the provisions of the Statute; in other words, if a person knows that he has not under a Statute authority to do a certain thing and yet intentionally does that thing, he cannot shelter himself by pretending that the thing was done with intent to carry out that Statute. These decisions were reviewed and approved in Cree v. St. Pancras Vestry (4). The substance of the matter is that, an act is to be regarded as done in pursuance of a Statute if the doer had a reasonable and bona fide belief that he was so acting Hazeldine v. Grove (5), Lea v. Facey (6), Agnew v. Jobson (7), Heath v. Brewer (8), Burling v. Harley (9), Booth v. Olive (10), Smith v. Hopper (11). Substantially the same view was taken by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of Richard Spooner v. Juddow (12), where Lord Campbell said that, if a party bona fide, and not absurdly, believes that he is acting in pursuance of a Statute and according to law, he is entitled to the special protection which the Legislature intended for him, although he has done an illegal act.

The same view was taken by a Full Bench of this Court in the case of Ohunder Sikhur Bundopadhya v. Obhoy Ohurn Bagchi (13) where Sir Richard Garth observed, with reference to section 87 of Act III of 1864, B. C., that the section was applicable where the plaintiff claimed damages or compensation for some wrongful act committed by the Commissioners or their officers in the exercise, or the honestly supposed exercise, of their statutory powers. See also Shudhangshu Shusan Roy Ohowdhury v. Bejoy Kali Roy Ohowdhury (14), Shama Bibi v. Baranagore Municipality (15).

Reference has been made on behalf of the respondent to the decision in Soonder Lal v. N. B. Baillie(16) and Gopee Kishen Gossain v. W. H. Ryland(17). These cases, however, are of no assistance to the respondent, because, on an examination of the judgments, it transpires that in each instance the requisite notice had been served.

We are accordingly of opinion that in the present case the parties were governed by section 363, and that as the plaintiff had failed to serve the notice required by that section the suit was not maintainable.

The result is that the appeal is allowed, the decree made by Mr. Justice Shamsul Huda set aside and that of the Subordinate Judge restored with costs both here and before Mr. Justice Shamsul Huda.

FLETCHER, J.—I agree.

JUDGMENT.—Both these cases raise the point whether the provisions of Order IX, rule 9 of the Code of Civil Procedure relate to applications made under Order XXI, rule 90 for the purpose of having an auction sale set aside on the ground of irregularity or fraud.

The lower Court held that Order IX, rule 9, could be applied and it acted accordingly and restored the applications which had been dismissed for default.

It is argued here, on the authority of a Full Bench ruling of the Patna High Court, reported as Bhubaneswar KONDAN DAMU v. INDARCHAND BACHARAJ.

Prasad Singh v. Tilakdhari Lall (1), that the provisions of Order IX, rule 9 do not apply to an order dismissing for default an application to set aside a sale held in execution of a decree. I have studied the cases on this subject and, with all possible respect, I am unable to accept the view of the law taken by the Patna High Court. The view which is taken there seems to be based upon the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Thakur Prasad v. Fakir Ullah (2). It was there held, on the construction of section 647 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882, that the provisions of section 373 could not be applied in a case where an application had been made for the execution of a decree. Their Lordships pointed out that the law, as laid down both in the Code of Civil Procedure itself and in the Limitation Act, contemplates successive applications for execution of a decree; and it may reasonably, therefore, be argued that, to apply the provisions of Order IX, rule 9, to applications for execution of a decree is not permissible on the ground that it would defeat the provisions of the law which contemplates successive applications for execution. But the applications with which we are dealing here were not, in my opinion, applications for execution of a decree. They were applications to set aside a sale which had been held in execution of a decree, and, therefore, it seems to me that the same reasoning does not apply as in a case where the application is strictly and properly an application for execution. This point is well brought out in a ruling of the Calcutta High Court which is reported as Diljan Mihha Bibi v. Hemanta Kumar Roy (3). I agree with the view which was taken by the Bench in that case and hold that the provisions of Order IX, rule 9, do apply to applications of this kind. It cannot, in my opinion, be argued that, because their Lordships of the Privy Council have laid it down that the provisions of the Code relating to the restoration of suits cannot be applied to applications of a decree; it necessarily follows that their Lordships' observations apply to all applications which are made in the execution department. In my opinion, they do not. They relate only to such applications as can properly be called applications for execution of a decree. Both these applications, therefore, fail and are dismissed with costs.

Applications dismissed.

Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), s. 13—Mortgage—Account, mode of taking—Evidence, absence of—Procedure.

It is not equitable, and it was not intended by the framers of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, that in a case where a mortgage is admitted a plaintiff should lose everything because he cannot go back far enough to a period before the Act was in force to distinguish what is principal and what is interest. [p. 577, col. 2.]

Where, in taking an account under section 13 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, in the absence of data showing exactly how much principal has been received, the Court forms a reasonable estimate from the amount of consideration stated in the bond as to the probable amount of actual principal, there can be no legal objection to that estimate being accepted and acted on. [p. 577, col. 2; p. 578, l.]

Second appeal from the decision of the Assistant Judge at Dhulia, in Appeal No. 193 of 1918, reversing the decree passed by the Joint Subordinate Judge at Chalisgaon, in Civil Suit No. 44 of 1917.

Mr. N. V. Gokhale, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. V. Bhat, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The plaintiff sued to redeem a mortgage bond passed by the first four defendants on the 6th February 1905 for Rs. 600. The mortgage was admitted by the first four defendants. But the 5th defendant who had purchased the equity of redemption from defendant No. 1 denied all knowledge of the mortgage, and said that he was a purchaser of the land. Defendant No. 6 said that he was a purchaser from defendant No. 5, and that defendant No. 5 ought to pay the mortgage debt. The mortgage was proved. But what was the principal consideration was not proved. The learned Judge came to the conclusion that Rs. 600 was due and passed a decree for that amount against defendant No. 5 and the heirs of defendant No. 6.

The 5th defendant appealed. The decree of the Trial Court was reversed, because the learned Judge was of opinion that there ought to be sufficient data before the Court to enable it to determine how much of the claim was principal and how much was interest, and, in the absence of such data, mere guess work would not be permitted.

The position is somewhat curious, because defendants Nos. 1 to 4 were agriculturists. They sold to defendant No. 5 who was not an agriculturist. Defendant No. 5 sold to defendant No. 6, deceased, who was an agriculturist. It is quite possible had defendant No. 5 not sold the equity of redemption, he could not claim the advantages of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. As he sold again to an agriculturist, clearly defendant No. 6 can take advantage of the Act. The only difficulty is to decide whether the learned Trial Judge was right in allowing Rs. 600 to the plaintiff, or whether the learned Appellate Judge was right in allowing nothing because he said it was impossible to take any account as required by the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. Now, the learned Trial Judge dealing with the previous transactions of the mortgagor and mortgagee said: "It is said that cash advances began long before 1899 when the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act was not in force in Khandesh, and the creditors did not know the utility of evidence to prove cash advance. The fact that past bonds have been produced by the defendants goes to show how little plaintiffs and their uncle then knew the importance of past documents to prove cash advance. I refuse to believe that Rs. 960 were for principal. It is not known how much was for principal and how much for interest in bonds for Rs. 800 and Rs. 160. I do not wish to penalise the plaintiffs by striking off the suit altogether as the circumstances of the case are peculiar. The Court has to deal with transactions by a creditor, admittedly an agriculturist, and the transactions commenced long before the Dekkhan Act came into force in this District. I allow Rs. 600 to the plaintiff." In my opinion that is a very reasonable judgment, considering the peculiar circumstances of the case. It certainly would not be equitable, nor I do think it was ever intended by the framers of the Act, that in a case of this sort when the mortgage is admitted that the plaintiff should lose everything because he cannot go back far enough to a period before the Act was in force to distinguish what is principal and what is interest. The decision in Dhondi v. Lakshman (1) was relied upon. But there the Court did not dismiss the claim entirely, but said that the parties could have recourse to arbitration under the provisions of section 15. Therefore, the appeal was remanded. That section has been repealed. Therefore, it is impossible to say that the Court would have made in that case, in the absence of an arbitration clause, a decree dismissing the whole of the plaintiff's claim. It is quite possible, on the facts of that case, that the Court would have found some way out of the difficulty to prevent injustice being done. It seems far more reasonable to come to the conclusion that the learned Joint Subordinate Judge, who has great experience in these matters, when dealing with the transactions between the parties, came to a very fair and reasonable decision that Rs. 600 should be allowed to the plaintiff. The appeal is allowed and the decree of the Trial Court restored. The appellants to get costs of the appeal.

FAWCETT, J.—I agree. My experience is that, in most cases under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, some guess work has to be done in drawing up an account under section 13 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act; and if (in the absence of data showing exactly how much principal has been received) the Court forms a reasonable estimate from the amount of consideration stated in the bond as to the probable amount of actual principal, I can see no legal objection to that estimate being accepted and acted on.

Appeal allowed.

THE PUNJAB NATIONAL BANK, LIMITED, LUDHIANA AND ANOTHER —RESPONDENTS.

In the matter of the insolvency of UMRAO SINGH.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 17—Mortgage, equitable, by deposit of title-deeds—Memorandum recording deposit, whether requires registration—Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), s. 37—Fraudulent preference—Transfer obtained under pressure, whether can be avoided.

Where an equitable mortgage is created by deposit of title-deeds, a memorandum recording the deposit and the purpose for which it is made does not require registration, for such a document does not create any interest in immoveable property the mortgage being complete independently of it. [p. 579, col 2.]

The test for determining whether a transfer or payment made by a debtor in favour of or to a creditor does or does not amount to fraudulent preference is, whether the transfer or payment is voluntary. [p. 579, col. 2.]

The law, however, regards only the motive of the debtor, and if the dominant motive of the debtor in making the transfer or payment is to save himself from exposure or from a criminal prosecution, it cannot be said that the transfer or payment is voluntary or amounts to fraudulent preference. [p. 579, col. 2.]

Miscellaneous first appeal from the order of the District Judge, Ludhiana, dated the 17th of January 1920.

Lala Jagan Nath, for the Appellant.

Mr. Mukand Lal Puri and Lala Durga Das, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—Umrao Singh, a Director of the Ludhiana Branch of the Punjab National Bank, became insolvent in 1917, on an application presented by creditors on the 17th January. His liabilities amount to over two lakhs, and his only assets appear to be a house at Delhi which has already been sold by the Receiver for Rs. 14,000 and a house at Ludhiana which is the subject of the present dispute. On this house the Punjab National Bank claims a prior lien as an equitable mortgagee, the deposit of title-deeds in its favour having taken place on the 31st December 1916. The other creditors have objected to this preference shown to the Punjab National Bank and wish to have it avoided under the provisions of section 37 of the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1907. The District Judge of Ludhiana has refused their application in a brief order in which he has held that the mortgage was a valid one and that it was owing to pressure put upon him by the Bank that Umrao Singh deposited the title-deeds of his house as security for the Bank's claim. For the decision of the case, on the arguments addressed to me, it is necessary to describe the facts in a somewhat greater detail than have been given by the lower Court.

The Bank has a claim of Rs. 41,000, odd, against Umrao Singh's assets. Of this amount Rs. 1,644 represents his personal debt and the remainder sums advanced by his authority to various other persons. The Bank apparently was ignorant of his financial position, and also of the nature of the loans to other persons which he had been authorising until the 26th December 1916. On the 29th December the Secretary of the Bank went to Ludhiana to inquire into the position. He found it unsatisfactory, but was not able to make any definite arrangement to secure the Bank's claim, but he persuaded Umrao Singh to accompany him to Lahore. On December the 30th, various conversations took place between Umrao Singh and the Directors of the Bank, and he eventually admitted that he had received some Rs. 41,000 himself and that he had merely utilised the names of other persons to obtain loans for himself. The Directors, including Lala Niranjan Das, Public Prosecutor, Lahore, Dr. Gokal Chand Narang, Barrister, and others, pointed out to him the criminality of his actions and threatened him with criminal proceedings unless he took immediate steps to secure the Bank against loss. As a result, he promised to sell his house at Ludhiana and settle the Bank's claim within 15 days. The Directors, however, were not fully satisfied with this but insisted on the immediate deposit of the title deeds of the Ludhiana house as an equitable mortgage for the amount due. On the following day, therefore, December the 31st, Umrao Singh deposited his title-deeds as security for the whole amount for which he was liable and, at the same time, gave the Bank a letter acknowledging the claim against him and showing the purpose for which the deeds had been deposited. On these facts Counsel has addressed two main arguments to me, (1), that the equitable mortgage was effected by means of the letter of the 31st December and that it is invalid for want of registration of this letter; and (2) that the effecting of the equitable mortgage was a voluntary action on his part made with a view to give preference to the Bank over other creditors.

On the first point Counsel refers to Behram Rashid Irani v. Sorabji Rustamji (1) and Gour's Transfer of Property Act, Volume II, Page 594. In the Bombay case it must be noticed that a document setting forth the clear intention of the defendant that the deposit of title-deeds should be security for the loan was the only evidence available of the defendant's intentions in making the deposit of his title-deeds. In the present case, on the other hand, there was a verbal agreement made on December the 30th, that the title-deeds of the house would be deposited on the following day as security for the amount due, and the intention of the depositor of these deeds is amply clear and amply proved without the letter of December the 31st. The authorities quoted at page 894, et seq, of Gour's Transfer of Property Act and the opinion of the learned Author also do not appear to favour the contention of the appellant as he states: "The question of registration falls into the back ground if the title deeds are deposited with the declared intention to secure an antecedent debt or under such circumstances that the law will imply that they are so deposited." There are also many authorities to the effect that a memorandum recording the deposit and the purpose for which it was made, does not require registration, for such a document does not create any interest in immoveable property, since the mortgage is complete independently of it. These general principles of law apply exactly to the present case. I hold, therefore, that the lower Court was correct in holding that no question of the necessity of registration arose.

As for the second point, the general principles of law regarding transfers made in favour of one creditor with a view to giving that creditor preference over others have been well explained in the judgment of Rattigan, C. J., in Labhu Ram v. Puran Chand (2). The learned Chief Justice has shown that the criterion in such cases is, whether the transfer or payment is voluntary. The correctness of the law as laid down by him is not contested by Counsel for the appellant, but he urges that, in the present case, the debtor spontaneously made a distinction among his creditor and this in spite of the fact that for the greater part of the amount which he admitted he was under no legal obligation to the Bank. These arguments appear to me to have no force in the present case. Umrao Singh may not have been prima facie under any legal obligation to give security for the debts of others, but in this case apparently, after cross-examination by skilled lawyers, he had been driven to the admission that he had fraudulently obtained advances for himself in the names of others. His legal obligation was, therefore, clear and it was equally clear that he had rendered himself liable to criminal proceedings which were threatened by the Directors unless he took immediate steps to secure the Bank against loss. In these circumstances, it cannot be urged that the transfer to the Bank was voluntary. The dominant motive of the debtor in making the transfer was to save himself from exposure or from a criminal prosecution, and, in such a case, as the law regards only the motive of the debtor, it cannot be held that the transfer was voluntary or amounted to a fraudulent preference. The leading case on the subject is Taylor, Ex parte, Goldsmid, In re (3), in which the circumstances were very similar to those of the present case.

In ground No. 6 of the appeal Counsel urged that the Bank could, at the best, prove only for the amount which the various debtors, who had obtained advances from Umrao Singh, are unable to pay. This proposition is not contested by Counsel for the respondent who asserts, however, that the admission of Umrao Singh himself is correct, namely, that the debts admitted by Umrao Singh, for the payment of which he deposited his title deeds, are all of a bogus nature. Counsel for the respondent, however, admits that the Bank has not yet made any definite attempt to recover any money from the nominal borrowers. He also undertakes that the Bank will make proper inquiries whether any of these items are legally recoverable and, if so, will take steps to recover the amounts. He agrees otherwise to hand over the various documents to the Official Receiver. The Bank will, therefore, after making due inquiries, inform the District Judge, as soon as possible, of the results of these inquiries, and further questions connected with these debts will be settled by the District Judge.

I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 2nd February 1920, reversing that of the Munsif, first Class, Hoshiarpur, dated the 6th November 1919.

Lala Fakir Chand, for the Appellants.

Sheikh Naiz Muhammad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in this case contests the validity of a gift of land made by Musammat Khatun, the widow of his collateral Ditta, to her husband's nephew Nizam-ud-Din. The first Court dismissed the suit, finding that, after Ditta's death, his widow had been living with her nephews, who cultivated her land, and that she was in need of their services, and holding that the alienation in lieu of services rendered was valid. The lower Appellate Court has reversed the first Court's decision, as it has not been established that the gift was necessary. Nizam ud Din and his brother have appealed to this Court.

Although in certain cases a male proprietor can make a gift of ancestral land in consideration of services rendered by the donee, a widow cannot, in the absence of a custom to the contrary, make a gift of land at all. She can ordinarily alienate only for necessity. No custom to the contrary is shown in this case, and I agree with the learned District Judge that the services which Nizam-ud-Din had rendered to Musammat Khatun did not make it necessary for her to make him a gift of her land.

There is nothing to support ground No. 4 of the appeal. The plaintiff is not debarred from attacking the gift by the fact that a suit was at first brought by his grandson and was dismissed.

I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

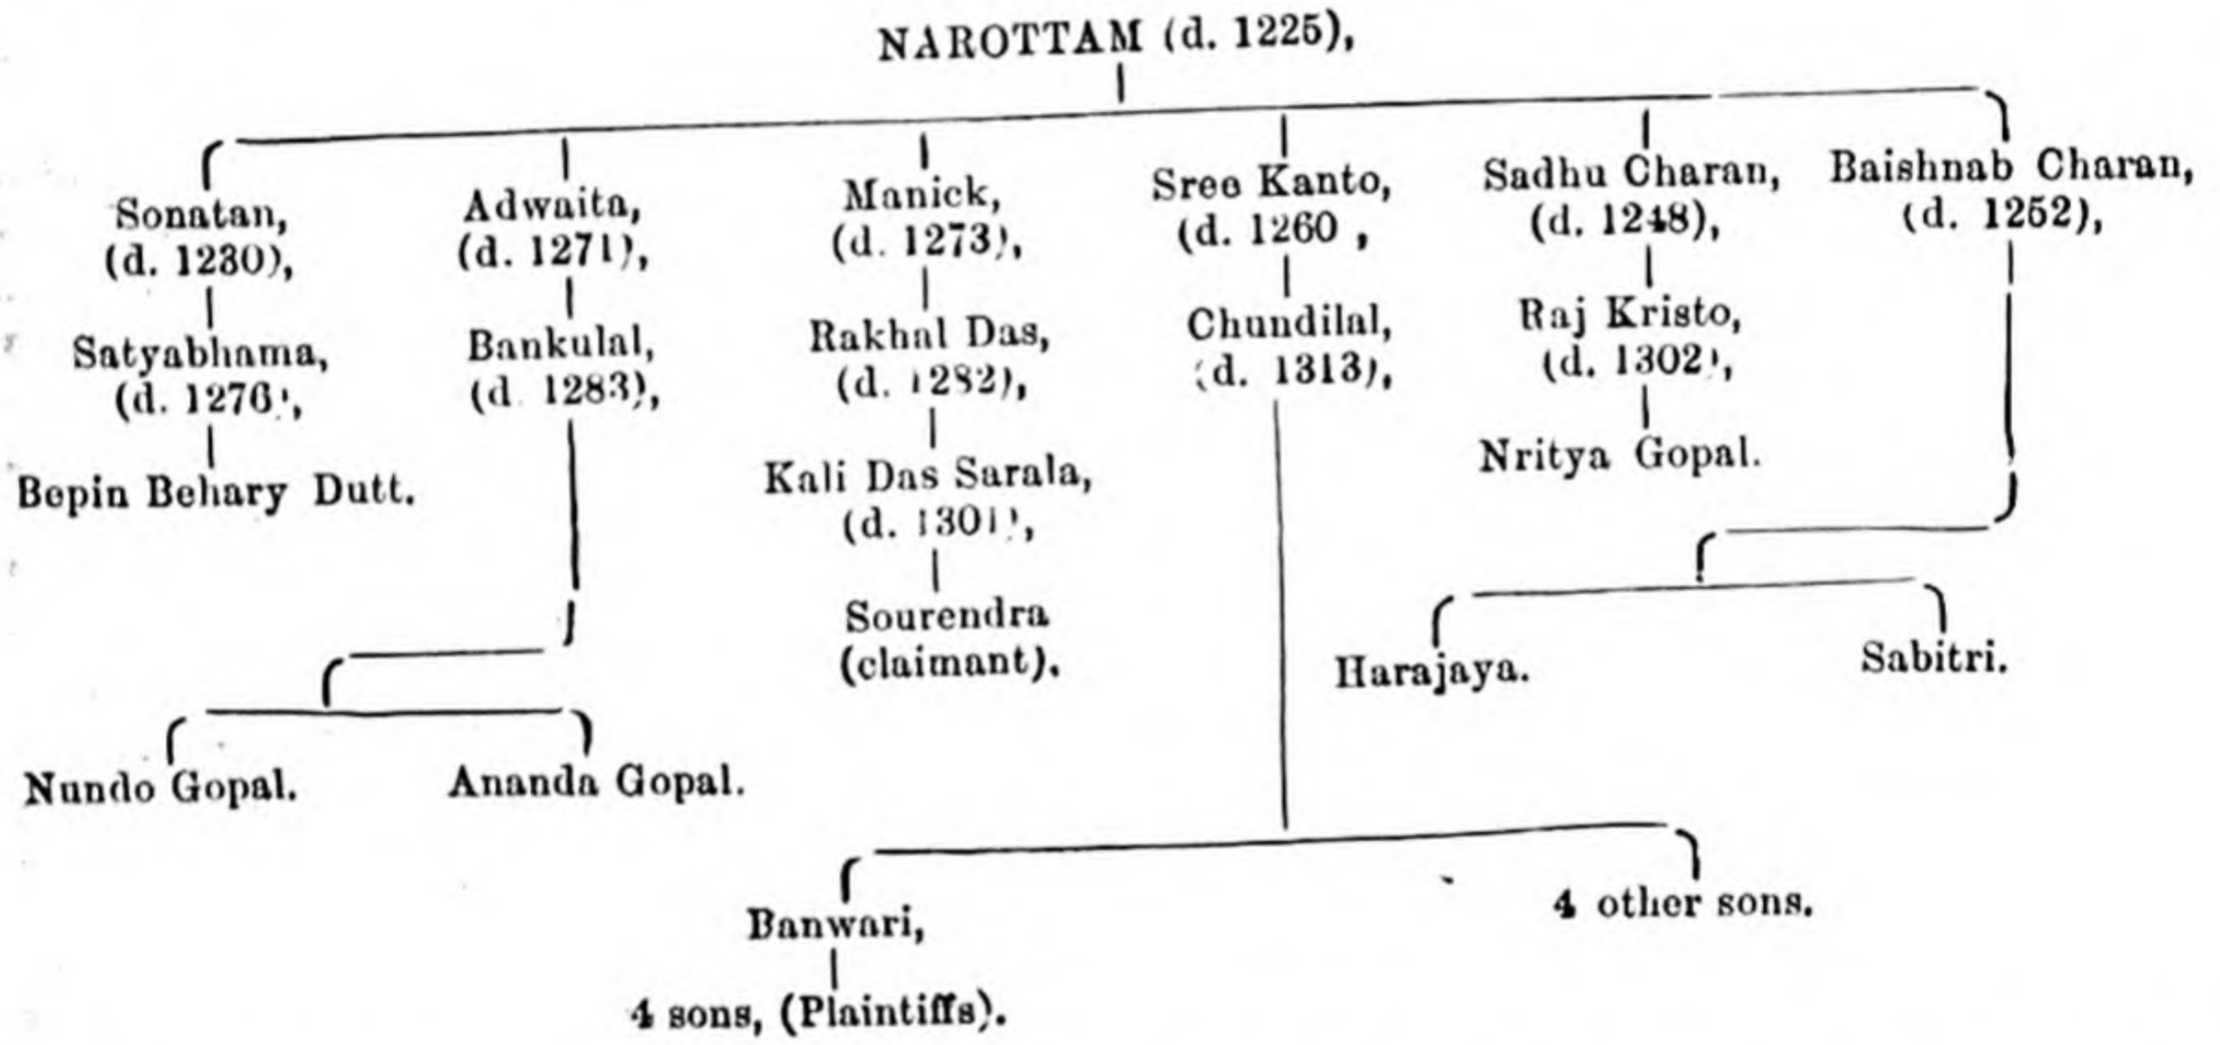
JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, ACTG. C. J.—This is an appeal from the judgment of Mr. Justice Beachcroft on exceptions to a report of the Assistant Referee disallowing the claim of the appellant against the estate of his grand-uncle which is the subject-matter of an administration suit on the Original Side of this Court. The facts material for the determination of the question raised before us may be briefly narrated by reference to the annexed genealogical table :—



Chandi Lal Sinha who, in his lifetime, carried on an extensive business in Calcutta and other places, died on the 11th August 1906, and left an estate of considerable value, both moveable and immoveable. After his death, his business was continued by some of his sons who incurred various liabilities to outsiders in course of time. On the 13th June 1910, the present suit for the administration of his estate, for partition, and for incidental reliefs was commenced by his heirs. On the 20th January 1910, Mr. K. P. Basu, an Advocate of this Court was appointed Receiver of the estate of Chandi Lal Sinha, and, shortly thereafter, he proceeded to take possession of the properties. On the 16th August 1912, a preliminary decree was made whereby the suit was referred to the Assistant Referee with directions to take the usual administration accounts and to make the usual enquiries. The decree further directed that creditors be invited by public advertisement to prove their claims against the estate before the Assistant Referee within a specified time. In answer to the advertisements, four claims were filed, only one of which represented debts left by Chandi Lal. An adjudication was held by the Assistant Referee on the claim so filed and a report followed. On the 26th January 1915, the Assistant Referee submitted a report after the accounts had been taken and the enquiries directed by the administration decree had been made. The report was confirmed by a decree dated the 19th April 1915, whereby the Receiver was directed to satisfy the claims which had been allowed in the report. Meanwhile, on the 15th December 1915, the present appellant, Sourendra Mohan Sinha, a grand-nephew of Chandi Lal Sinha, had instituted a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Burdwan to enforce a claim against the estate of his grand-uncle. He obtained a Rule from the Burdwan Court to restrain the Receiver from dealing with the estate of Chandi Lal Sinha. On the other hand, the Receiver, on the 21st September 1915, obtained a Rule against the claimant with a view to restrain him from proceeding with his application in the Burdwan Court. On the 10th December 1915, an order was made by this Court at the instance of the claimant, giving him liberty to prove his alleged claim against the estate of his grand uncle in the administration suit. Accordingly, the claim was filed on the 17th December 1915. The substance of the claim was that he was entitled to realise from the estate of Chandi Lal Sinha a large sum of money, as the latter had, during his minority, taken possession of and managed the estate of his father Kalidas Sinha. On the 17th January 1916, liberty was given to the Receiver to appear before the Assistant Referee and to contest the claim. Some weeks earlier, a similar order had been passed on the 5th December 1915, on the application of one Prithishandlal Chaudhuri who claimed to be a creditor, not of Chandi Lal Sinha but of the heirs of Chandi Lal Sinha, against whom he had obtained a decree for money on the 20th June 1910 in a suit instituted by him in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Purnea on the 5th June 1909. In the order made on the application of Prithishandlal Chaudhuri, it was explicitly stated that he was given liberty at his own risk as to costs to oppose the claim of Sourendra Mohan Sinha against the estate of Chandi Lal Sinha, deceased. In these circumstances, Prithishandlal Chaudhuri and the Receiver both appeared before the Assistant Referee and contested the claim of Sourendra Mohan Sinha. After a protracted investigation which, it is said, extended over 110 hearings, the Assistant Referee reported against the claim. Mr. Justice Beachcroft, after a hearing which lasted for 30 days, confirmed the report of the Assistant Referee and dismissed the claim with costs. On the present appeal, the decree made by Mr. Justice Beachcroft was intended to be assailed on a variety of grounds on the merits, and adjournments were repeatedly taken to enable the appellant to scrutinise the accounts. But, ultimately, Mr. Bose, who appeared on behalf of the claimant appellant, intimated that the grounds on the merits could not be pressed with any hope of success and that he would consequently confine himself to the question of costs which involved an important point of principle.

Mr. Justice Beachcroft has held, with regard to the hearing before the Assistant Referee, that both the creditor Pirthichand and the Receiver were entitled to their costs. As regards the hearing of the exceptions, he has allowed all costs of Pirthichand and the Receiver, subject to the reservation that there would be only one set of Counsel's fees, inasmuch as the main argument was that of the Counsel for the Receiver, and the Court had not been given any additional assistance by the presence of Additional Counsel because the defence of Pirthichand and the Receiver were identical. In our opinion, the order as to costs cannot be supported at his own risk as to costs and to oppose the claimant. His intervention was wholly unnecessary. The Receiver was quite competent to defend the estate from assailants who put forward stale or unfounded claims. As was ruled by the Court of Appeal in Williams v. Buchanan (1), where a third party with no sufficient reason appears and defends an action separately, he must bear the costs of so doing, even though the plaintiff be unsuccessful in the action. Lord Esher, M R, observed that, although the Court had a discretion in the matter [Hanbury v. Upper Inny Drainage Board (2)], the Court would refuse the third party his costs, as no one had a right unduly to increase the costs of litigation except at his own expense. He had no reason to think that the defendant would not fight the action to the uttermost, and it would certainly not be fair to make the plaintiff pay the costs of the appearance of the third party whom he did not want to see; he had no reason for going to the expense of a separate appearance and ought not, consequently, to have costs against any body: he had in fact chosen to indulge in a luxury for which he must pay. Bower, L. J, added that the third party might have gone to the defendant's Solicitors and got them to act for him, as his case and that of the defendant were identical The same principle was applied in Salmon, In re, Priest v. Uppleby (3). substance of the matter thus is, that the intervention of Prithiband, assuming it to have been proper, did not change the character of the proceeding or alter its scope; he voluntarily came into it as a prudent measure, not of immediate protection but of possible personal benefit hereafter, when upon the completion of the administration proceedings and the termination of the administration suit, the residue, if any, left of the estate of Chandi Lal might ultimately pass into the hands of his heirs. In these circumstances, it would be clearly unjust to compel the claimant to pay an additional bill of costs of the intervener. This view is substantially in accord with that adopted by Jessel, M. R, in Watts, In re, Smith v. Watts (4), and by Parker, J., in Schwabacher, In re, Stern v. Schwabacher (5).

Prithichand Lal, who is frequently described in these proceedings as one of the creditors, had really no locus standi to intervene. He was not a creditor of the estate of Chandi Lal Sinha which was under administration; he was merely a creditor of the heirs of Chandi Lal Sinha; even his application to attach any portion of the assets left by the latter had been unsuccessful. The way in which he is described as one of the creditors seems to indicate that this distinction was not realised, and he appears to have been treated as if he was a creditor of the estate under administration. It is not necessary for us to determine now whether he should have been at all allowed to intervene as a creditor of the heirs of Chandi Lal Sinha; this, at any rate, is clear that he was permitted to intervene

The result is that the appeal is allowed in part and the decree modified only in respect of costs. The claimant will pay the Receiver his costs of and incidental to the reference and of the application to the Court; such costs will be assessed as of a hearing on Scale No. 2 and the fees of one Counsel only will be allowed. The claimant appellant will also pay the Receiver the costs of this appeal. Prithibhand Lal, as also other parties, will pay their own costs of the reference, of the application before Mr. Justice Beachcroft and of this appeal. The order as to costs will include all reserved costs.

Second appeal from the decision of the Additional First Class Subordinate Judge, A. P, at Sholapur, in Appeal No. 141 of 1916, varying the decree passed by the Second Class Subordinate Judge at Pandharpur, in Civil Suit No. 194 of 1915.

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, J.—The plaintiff in this case sued to recover possession of a part of the house conveyed under a sale-deed executed by defendant No. 1, Ramchandra, in the year 1904 in favour of the plaintiff's mother as his guardian, during the plaintiff's minority. The defendant No. 1 occupied the house as a tenant under a rent note, which expired in February 1909. At the date of the suit his wife, Jankibai, defendant No. 2, was in possession of a part of the house now in question. The suit was filed against both of them. The defendant No. 1 died during the pendency of the suit and ultimately the suit was defended by the wife, both in her own right and as the legal representative of her husband. She pleaded that the sale deed was a hollow transaction and that, in any case, she had the right of residence in that part of the house and that the purchaser must be taken to have purchased it subject to that right. There was also a plea of fraud. On a consideration of all the defences, the Trial Court found against her and decreed the plaintiffs' claim for possession of the house. Defendant No. 2 appealed to the District Court and the Additional First Class Subordinate Judge with appellate powers who heard the appeal, raised the following point for decision: "Whether the defendant has a right of residence in the plaint-house, and, if so, whether the plaintiff purchased the said house under the sale deed, Exhibit 62, with notice of the said right of hers?' It is stated in the judgment of the Appellate Court that the appellant gave up all the remaining contentions. The Appellate Court came to the conclusion that the defendant No. 2 had a right of residence in the house and that the sale in favour of the plaintiff must be taken to be subject to her right of residence. Accordingly, the decree of the Trial Court was varied and a part of the house indicated in the decree was allowed to remain in the possession of Jankibai.

The plaintiff has now appealed to this Court, and it is contended on his behalf that the lower Appellate Court is wrong in its view of law that the wife has a right of residance which can be enforced against the purchaser from her husband. On the other hand, it is contended that she has such a right and that, in any case, her position after the death of her husband must be treated on the same footing as that of a widow having a right of maintenance against the family property. It is also urged on behalf of the respondent that she should be allowed to raise the point as to the benami nature of the sale deed in favour of the plaintiff and that there should be a remand on that point.

It may be mentioned that the Trial Court decided on the evidence against her on the question of fact as to whether the sale-deed was hollow, and in the Appellate Court this question of fact appears to have been abandoned. The statement of the Appellate Court on this point is quite distinct; and I do not think that the respondent could now be allowed to raise the point relating to a question of fact which was expressly abandoned in the lower Appellate Court.

As regards the question of the wife's right of residence I am of opinion that the lower Appellate Court has taken an erroneous view. All the right which the wife has during her husband's lifetime is a matter of personal obligation arising from the very existence of the relation and quite independent of the possession by the husband of any property, ancestral or self-acquired. It is not suggested in the present case that her right of maintenance including the right of residence, was declared a charge on this property during her husband's lifetime. There was a suit by Jankibai against her husband for maintenance after the sale of 1904 and it is common ground that no charge was created in favour of Jankibai in respect of this house, and, indeed, it is difficult to see how it could be done in view of the sale by the husband in 1904.

Under these circumstances, it is difficult to understand how the wife could resist the claim of the purchaser based on a sale-deed executed by her husband during his lifetime. The lower Appellate Court has relied upon the case of Manilal v. Bai Tara (1). That case is really against the view taken by the lower Appellate Court. In that case the auction purchaser was allowed to take the house free from the plaintiff's right of residence as a Hindu widow notwithstanding the fact that the purchaser had notice of her claim. The original mortgage was effected by the husband of the widow and the sale took place in execution of the decree on the mortgage after the husband's death. Mr. Shingne, however, has relied upon certain observations in the judgment, which were strictly not necessary for the purpose of the decision, and which suggest that if the alienation effected by the husband is not for the family advantage or is in any way in fraud of the rights of the wife, he may have a claim against the alienee. In that particular case there was no point as to whether it was not for the family advantage or whether the alienation was in fraud of the right of the wife. It seems to me that the opinion expressed about those observations in the case of Jayanti Subbiah v. Alamelu Mangamma (2) by Mr. Justice Bhashyam Ayyangar is correct. In that case, after referring to the observation in the case of Manilal v. Bai Tara (1), the learned Judge expressed his opinion as follows :—"It does not appear from the report of the case whether there was any male member of the family other than the husband. If, from the decision in that case, it is to be implied that, in the view of the learned Judges who decided it, the widow would have a right to continue to reside in the house after it has been sold in satisfaction of a debt owing by her husband, unless the debt was incurred for a purpose which would be beneficial to and binding upon his wife, I am unable to concur in that view". I do not think that, according to law, the wife's right to residence in this case could be recognized against the alienee claiming under a transfer effected by the husband during his lifetime.

I would, therefore, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the Trial Court with costs of this appeal and in the lower Appellate Court on the respondent, original defendant No. 2.

CRUMP, J.—I agree.

Decree set aside.

KANAKA SINGA—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Hindu Law—Custom—Adoption—Kshatriyas of South Kanara—Brother's daughter's son, adoption of, validity of—Custom, existence of, admitted in adoption deed—Burden of proof.

According to the custom prevailing among Kshatriyas in South Kanara, in the Madras Presidency, the adoption of a brother's daughter's son is valid. [p. 587, col. 2.]

The admission of an adoption in a deed amounts to an admission both of the fact and the validity of the adoption, and the burden of proving the contrary lies upon the person making the admission. [p. 587, col. 2; p. 588, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the revised decree of the District Court, South Kanara, dated the 4th March 1918, in Appeal Suit No. 189 of 1915, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Kasargod, in Original Suit No. 7 of 1914.

This second appeal coming on for hearing on 5th August 1919, the Court (Bakewell and Odgers, JJ.) delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The general rule of Hindu Law is against the validity of the adoption in this case [Minakshi v. Ramanada (1)], but this rule may be varied by custom, and such a custom has been held to obtain in the southern districts of the Madras Presidency [Vayidinada v. Appu (2), Appayya Bhattar v. Vengu Bhattar (3)] The lower Appellate Court has not found upon the evidence whether such a custom exists in the caste of plaintiff and defendant or in South Kanara, which does not form part of the southern districts. The appellant is responsible for all the costs of this litigation, and we direct him to pay all costs incurred up to this day before the 15th September 1919. Upon payment of the costs before that day, we direct the District Judge to record a finding upon the following issue :—

Is the adoption in this case valid according to the customs observed by the parties ?

(1) 11 M. 49 at p. 55 (F. B.); 11 Ind. Jur. 449; Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 35.

(2) 9 M. 44 (F. B.); 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 427.

(3) 15 M. L. J. 211.

No additional evidence will be taken. In default of payment the appeal will stand dismissed with costs.

The finding is to be returned before the 15th of October 1919, and seven days will be allowed for filing objections.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment the District Judge of South Kanara submitted the following

FINDING:—In this case, I am asked to submit a finding on the evidence on record on the following point :—

"Is the adoption in this case valid according to the customs observed by the parties ?"

2. Before considering the evidence, which is meagre, in this case I think that it is necessary to refer to the circumstances under which the evidence was adduced.

The issue framed by the Munsif is worded thus:—whether the defendant has not been truly and validly adopted by the plaintiff ? Thus, it is seen that the burden of proof is thrown on plaintiff and, therefore, the defendant must have thought that if there is not much evidence on plaintiff's side he need not adduce much evidence.

The adoption deed is a registered document which contains a special reference to the custom. It is a deed executed by plaintiff himself and, when he himself admits the custom in the registered document, it is strong evidence against him and, unless he proves that he made the statement under a mistake or other justifying circumstance, it may very well be presumed that it is a correct statement of facts. In this case it is not shown that there is any justifying circumstance. Therefore, Exhibit A affords a strong piece of evidence against plaintiff.

3. Apparently, therefore, it is for plaintiff to shift the burden on defendant but he has not succeeded in doing so. P. W. No. 1 is plaintiff himself and he is interested. Further, he contradicts Exhibit A. The next witness is P. W. No. 2 who is the natural father of defendant. His evidence has been disbelieved by all the Courts in this case on other points. So, he cannot be relied on on this point also. Further, it must be remarked that he is also a party to Exhibit A as an attestor. He was the person who gave away defendant in adoption and it was then that Exhibit A was executed and the attestation of this witness taken, and so he may be presumed to have known the contents of Exhibit A when he attested it. So, his present evidence must be received with very great caution.

It is argued that he gives evidence against his own interest, but I am not certain of that, because we do not know whether he admits the existence of any ancestral property in his hands. Probably, he may say that the properties in his hands are all his self-acquisitions and that his sons have no right to claim them as a matter of right.

Defendant's mother died and afterwards P. W. No. 2 married a second wife and has children by her and he does not care for defendant at all after the death of his (defendant's) mother.

4. Another fact to be considered in weighing the evidence in this case is the impression which the parties and the Munsif were under when the trial of the case began. They were apparently under the impression that the decision in Vayidinada v. Appu (2) applied. This accounts for the paucity of evidence on this point on both sides. Until the High Court pointed out that the decision applied to southern districts and not to western districts, no body concerned with this case seems to have thought that there is that way of distinguishing the case.

With the above remarks, I must examine the evidence. The burden of proof of the issue sent out is on defendant.

5. There is only the evidence of D. W. No. 3 on the point and he is no doubt interested, but the question is, whether he cannot be believed under the circumstances of the case.

6. In the usual course, I have no doubt that this evidence will be considered not sufficient to prove a custom, but, under the peculiar circumstances, I am inclined to consider the evidence true and sufficient. There is Exhibit A which is executed by plaintiff (P. W. No 1) and attested by P. W. No. 2 and P. W. No. 3 (purohit) in which the custom is mentioned.

D. W. No. 2 does not help us much because he does not know any instance of the custom. Here, it must be mentioned that, though this witness was asked in cross-examination whether he knew of any instance, D. W. No. 3 was not asked that question. Apparently the cross examining Vakil avoided the question because he knew that the witness would be able to give instances. Otherwise, he would not have left out that question which he put specially to the previous witness.

Taking the circumstances into consideration, I must find that the custom is proved.

7. Seeing that the custom is prevalent in southern districts it is probable that it is prevalent here also. The defence Vakil quoted the foot notes to Minakshi v. Ramanad (1), in the reprints of Indian Law Reports by Subramaniam and Krishnaswami, to show that the Bombay High Court has decided that the custom prevails in Gowd Sareswat Brahmins of South Kanara, but the book referred to therein is not here and I am, therefore, unable to say whether it was so decided or not.

On the whole, I find that the adoption is valid according to the custom observed by the parties.

This second appeal came on for final hearing, after the return of the finding of the lower Appellate Court upon the issue referred by this Court for trial.

Messrs. S. Srinivasa Ayangar, K. P. Madhava Rao and K. P. Lakshmana Rao, for the Appellants :—The adoption of a brother's daughter's son is, under the texts of Hindu Law, invalid The texts forbidding adoption where the mother cannot be warned by the adopter apply. There is no custom amongst the Kshatriyas favouring such adoptions. The fact that such a custom prevails among the Gowd Saraswat Brahmins of the place does not warrant its extension to the Kshatriyas who have migrated from the north. The oral evidence adduced by defendants is far too scanty to deduce a custom having the force of law.

Messrs. K. Sadasiwa Rao and K. Sundara Rao, for the Respondent.—There is proof of the existence of the custom among the Kshatyrias of South Kanara. The plaintiff admits that the usages of the Kshatriyas are not different from those of the Gowd Saraswats among whom the usage prevails. Even the adoption of a sister's son is valid among them. See Vayidinada v. Appu (2), Manjunath v. Kaveribai (4).

Again, the plaintiff has admitted the adoption in Exhibit A. That means he does not dispute its validity also.

JUDGMENT.—We think that the plaintiff's admission in Exhibit A was an admission both of the fact and of the validity of the defendant's adoption [See Ramalinga Pillai v. Sadasiva Pillai (5) . The burden of proving that it was not valid was, therefore, shifted on to the plaintiff's shoulders. Even if it is not so, the custom against the supposed rule based on the text relating to the reflection of a son is so widespread that very little evidence will turn the scale against that rule. The plaintiff admitted in his evidence that the usages of his community did not differ from those of the Gowd Saraswat Brahmins. He being a Kshatriya (presumably not very pure in extraction, clans of pure Kshatriyas being very rare), the customs of his community could not be more strict than those of Saraswat Brahmins. In Manjunath v. Kaveribai (4) it was held that the custom among Gowd Saraswat Brahmins of Kanara (both north and south which were situated near the Dravida country) allowed the adoption of a sister's son (see, as regards Dravida custom, Vayidinada v. Appu (2)]. The case of a brother's daughter's son (against whose adoption there is no direct text, as in the case of daughter's son, sister's son and mother's sister's son) stands on a more favourable footing. The community of the parties to the suit migrated from Rajputana and have settled in South Kanara for long. The law which they brought with them did not evidently prohibit the adoption of a brother's daughter's son [See Madhu Sudan Sinha (Biswanath) v. Kali Charan (6) and Yamnaia Govind Appaji v. Laxuman Bhimroo (7)].

Though the oral evidence on defendant's side in this case is meagre, we think that that evidence, being corroborated by the probabilities by the decision in Manjunath v. Kaverbai (4), and by the admission of the plaintiff as to the customs and usages of his community not differing Companies Act (VI of 1882), ss. 144 (a), 150—Payment order, who can obtain—Third party, whether can take advantage of provision.

Section 150 of the Companies Act, 1882, confers certain special privileges of which a third party cannot take advantage. [p. 589, col 1.]

The Liquidator of the Doaba Bank transferred, with the sanction of the Court, certain book debts and calls due by the contributories of the Bank to certain persons on the 24th March 1918. On the 19th August he entered into an agreement with the vendees whereby he undertook to execute powers-of-attorney in their favour in order to enable them to obtain a payment order, and sanction of the Court was obtained in respect of this agreement also. The vendees then applied under section 150 of the Companies Act, 1882, for an order of payment :

Held, that, inasmuch as the application was made in the interest and for the benefit of third parties, it could not be said to have been made 'in the name and on behalf of the Company' as contemplated by clause (a) of section 144 of the Act, and was, therefore, incompetent. [p. 588, col 2.]

Miscellaneous first appeal from the order of the District Judge in charge of Liquidation work, Lahore, dated the 19th January 1920.

Babu S. K. Mukerjee, for the Appellant.

Mr. Jai Gopal Sethi and Lala Fakir Chand, through Mr. Mukand Lal Puri, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a proceeding taken in the matter of liquidation of the Doaba Bank, Limited. The facts as stated in the judgment of the lower Court are as follows :—

On the 24th of March 1918 a sale-deed was executed in favour of certain persons transferring to them certain book debts and calls due from certain contributories of the Doaba Bank. The price paid being Rs. 1,05,000. The transferees are described as being either the partners or the respresentatives of the partners of the Phagwara Flour Mills. The sale was effected by the Liquidators with the sanction of the Court and the consent of the share holders and the contributories. On a subsequent date, namely, the 19th of August 1918, an agreement was entered into between the Liquidator and the vendees, one of the provisions of which was that the Liquidator would execute powers of-attorney in favour of the vendees to enable them to apply, under section 150 of the Indian Companies Act of 1882 on behalf of the Liquidator, to recover the debts and the calls due from the contributories. Sanction of the Court was obtained in respect of this agreement also. The vendees accordingly presented an application under section 150 as the attorneys of the Liquidator praying for an order of payment. This application was resisted by the respondents to this appeal on various grounds; one of which being that such an application was incompetent inasmuch as, in reality, it was not made "in the name and on behalf of the Company" as contemplated by clause (a) of section 144 of the Act. This contention found favour with the Court below and the application was disallowed. The present appeal has been preferred by the Liquidator himself and it is contended by him that, having regard to the terms of the agreement, he was in honour bound to help the vendees to recover the debts and calls due from the contributories, and that, therefore, the application must be treated as one made "in the name and on behalf of the Company." On the face of it, no doubt, the application purports to have been made in the name of the Company, but, as held by the Court below, it has been made in the interest and for the benefit of third parties. Section 150 of the Companies Act confers certain special privileges, of which apparently a third party cannot take advantage. The clear wording of clause (a) of section 144 presents no difficulty as to its interpretation. Power is given to the Official Liquidator with the sanction of the Court "to bring or defend any suit or prosecution, or other legal proceeding, civil or criminal, in the name and on behalf of the Company." The present application is certainly not one which can be said to be on behalf of the Company or for its benefit. Under the terms of the sale deed no duty is cast on the Company to recover the debts for the vendees. The agreement was an afterthought by which the transferees tried to get round the clear provisions of sections 144 and 150 of the Act, in order to take proceedings for their benefit which a Liquidator is empowered to take for the benefit of the Company in liquidation. This, in our opinion, was never contemplated by the Legislature. No decided case has been cited by either party dealing with the precise question arising in this appeal, but, having regard to the clear provisions of the Companies Act, we see no reason to hold that the view taken by the lower Court is wrong. We accordingly uphold the decision of the lower Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

BROJENDRA CHANDRA SARMA —PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

PROSUNNA KUMAR DHAR AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O XLI, r. 22, applicability of, to Letters Patent Appeal—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 44—Alienation by guardian of ward's property—Suit to set aside alienation—Limitation.

Rule 22 of Order XLI of the Civil Procedure Code is not applicable to an appeal under clause 15 of the Letters Patent, consequently, a memorandum of cross-objections filed therein cannot be entertained. [p. 591, col. 2.]

A transfer by the natural guardian of a minor of his ward's property is voidable and not void, and a suit to set aside such transfer must be brought within the period of limitation prescribed by Article 44, Schedule I of the Limitation Act. [p. 592, col. 2.]

Letters Patent Appeal under clause 15 from the following judgment of NEWBOULD, J.—The plaintiff in this case sued for recovery of possession on declaration of his title to one third share of a certain taluk. The facts of the case are as follows: There were four brothers, Joy Chandra, father of the plaintiff; Brindaban; Sarat who had two sons Atul and Udoi, and Ishan. Joy Chandra died leaving a widow, defendant No. 7, and a son, the plaintiff. The case turns on the effect of a document executed on 7th Bhadra 1311 B. S. At that time the two brothers Sarat and Ishan were also dead. Sarat having left the two sons named above who were both minors, and Ishan having died without any issue. By this document the plaintiff's mother, as his guardian, and Brindaban for himself and as guardian of his minor nephews, Atul and Udoi, transferred the property in suit to the principal defendants. The plaintiff brought this suit to recover possession on the allegations that the property had been purchased by his father alone; that his father's brother had no interest in it, and that the sale referred to did not affect his interest as it was not made for any legal necessity. In both the lower Courts the case was fought out on the issues, first, whether the property which was purchased in the name of the plaintiff's father was purchased for himself or for the benefit of the four brothers; and, secondly, whether there was any legal necessity for the sale to the principal defendants. Both Courts found on these issues against the defendants. The issue of limitation was raised and argued in the first Court only on the ground that the suit was not brought within 12 years from the date of the plaintiff's dispossession; but the point was not pressed as the suit was evidently brought within that period. Before the lower Appellate Court no plea of limitation appears to have been raised at all.

Before me, however, on behalf of the appellants it is contended that Article 44 of the Limitation Act applies and the plaintiff cannot succeed as he has not come within three years of the date of his attaining majority. It is conceded on behalf of the respondent that, if this Article applies, the suit must be barred, and that the plaintiff attained majority more than three years before the institution of the suit. On behalf of the appellants great reliance is placed on a case [Krishna Dhone Bhattacharjya v. Bhagiban Chandra Bhattacharjya] Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 3132 of 1914, decided on 24th May 1916 by Mr. Justice D. Chatterjee and myself, not reported in any of the recognized Law Reports.* In that case we held: "A sale by a guardian is only voidable and is valid until avoided. This avoidance must be by a suit within three years under Article 44 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act. As the ward cannot recover possession without avoiding the sale, his right to recover possession is also gone"; and then reference is made to the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Gnanasambanda Pandara Sannadhi v. Velu Pandaram(1), where their Lordships of the Privy Council said: "Chokalinga attained majority in 1880 and had, by Article 44 of the Act, three years for suing to set aside the sale by his guardian. He did not do so and, by section 28 of the Limitation Act, his right became extinguished." Of the other rulings cited on behalf of the appellants, I do not think it necessary to refer to any except the case of Sham Chandra Dafadar v. Gadadhar Mandal (2). There, at page 282,† it was held: "In so far, however, as the case of an alienation for consideration by the natural guardian of an infant is concerned, the decision of the Judicial Committee in Gnanasambanda Pandara Sannadhi v. Velu Pandaram (1) supports the view that the transaction is voidable and has to be avoided within the period prescribed by Article 44."

On behalf of the respondent reliance is placed on the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Mata Din v. Sheikh Ahmad Ali (3). But that was a case in which it was held that the persons who made the sale purporting to be guardians of the minors were not in law guardians and had no legal power to sell, and that Article 44 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act had no application to a case where the sale was effected by a wholly unauthorized person. It cannot be said that the mother of the plaintiff in this case, the plaintiff being a Hindu, was wholly unauthorized to sell. The case of Sidhu Sahu v. Gopi Charan Das (4) has also been cited. But that case only supports the proposition, that is not disputed in this case, that where a deed is ab initio void it is not necessary to set it aside. Here the whole contention on behalf of the appellants is, that the deed in suit is voidable and not void. Lastly, reliance is placed on the decision of the Allahabad High Court in Bachan Singh v. Kanta Pershad (5). In that case the following remarks of the Madras High Court in Unni v. Kunchi Amma (6) are quoted and followed: "Such are the cases of a guardian of a minor, the manager of a Hindu family or the sonless widow in a divided Hindu family. In these cases, as was argued by the appellant's Vakil, it is not only not necessary, but it is not possible, to have the instrument of alienation cancelled and delivered up, because, as between the parties to it, it may be a perfectly valid instrument. All that is needed is a declaration that the plaintiffs' interest is not affected by the instrument, and that declaration is merely ancillary to the relief which may be granted by delivery of possession." That case, and other cases cited in the judgment of the Allahabad High Court, seem to be in the respondent's favour; but, as there appears to me to be direct authority to the contrary in the decisions of this Court, I cannot adopt the view taken by the Allahabad High Court on this point. I must, therefore, hold that, so far as this deed of 23rd August 1904 is voidable, the plaintiff's suit is barred by limitation.

As regards the last point, to what extent the dead is voidable, I think the contention of the respondents should be accepted. The kobala treated the property as if it had been the joint property of the four brothers; and though it did not expressly say so, having regard to the fact that the appellant's case throughout was that this was a property of the four brothers and that Brindaban had a right to transfer his own share and the share of Sarat's sons as their guardian, the defendants cannot now say that the plaintiff's mother purported to transfer by this deed more than one-third as the property of the minor. Taking this view, and having regard to the finding of fact as to title, the deed, so far as it purports to transfer more than the plaintiff's share, is void since neither Brindaban nor Sarat's sons had any interest in the property. So far as the mother purported to transfer the plaintiff's one-third share, the deed is voidable and, in respect of that share, the plaintiff's claim is barred by limitation, for the reasons mentioned above.

The result is that this appeal is decreed and the decrees of the lower Court modified to this extent that the plaintiff's title to and right to get possession of two thirds share of the property in suit will be declared. As this plea of the appellants was not taken in either of the lower Courts, I make no order as to costs of this appeal.

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, ACTG. C. J.—This is an appeal under clause 15 of the Letters Patent from the judgment of Mr. Justice Newbould, in a suit brought by the appellant to recover possession of a property conveyed during his minority by his mother and uncle on the 23rd August 1904.

The case for the plaintiff is, that the property belonged to his father, and that there was no occasion for its transfer by his mother who was his natural guardian. The case for the purchasers is that the property belonged to the joint family and that there was legal necessity for the alienation.

The Court of first instance and the Subordinate Judge have concurrently found that the property did not belong to the family but was owned exclusively by the father of the plaintiff. The Courts have also found that there was no necessity for the sale. In this view, the Subordinate Judge, in affirmance of the decree of the Court of first instance, has decreed the suit.

Upon appeal, Mr. Justice Newbould has held that, in respect of a one third share, the suit is barred by limitation under Article 44 of the Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act. In this view, he has dismissed the suit with regard to a one-third share, and maintained the decree as regards the remaining two-thirds share.

The plaintiff has contended, in support of this appeal, that the suit is not barred under Article 44, inasmuch as the transfer was not voidable but void, and he was consequently entitled to recover possession within twelve years from the date of alienation. The respondents have preferred a memorandum of cross objection with regard to the two-thirds share, and have argued that the entire claim is barred by limitation. We are of opinion that the memorandum of cross-objection cannot be entertained. Rule XX of Order XLI of the Civil Procedure Code is not applicable to an appeal under clause 15 of the Letters Patent. Kausalia v. Gulab Kuar (7). The cross-objection must therefore, be dismissed.

As regards the appeal, we are of opinion that the conveyance of the 23rd August 1904, in so far as it was a conveyance by the mother of the plaintiff, was voidable and not void. This view is supported by the authorities reviewed in the case of Sham Chandra Dafadar v. Gadadhar Mandal (2) where reference is made, amongst others, to the earlier decision of the Judicial Committee in Gnanasambanda Pandara Sannadhi v. Velu Pandaram (1). The same view has subsequently been adopted in Bombay in the case of Mahableshwar Krishnappa v. Ramchandra Mangesh (8) and in Madras in the case of Muthukumara Chetty v. Anthony Udayan (9).

Our attention, however, has been drawn to the decision of the Allahabad High Court in Bachan Singh v. Kamta Pershad (5) which is in favour of the contention put forward by the appellant ; but we are not prepared to follow it, as it makes no reference to Article 44 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act.

(9) 24 Ind. Cas. 120; 38 M. 867; 15 M. L. T. 361; 29 M. L. J. 617.

Reference has finally been made to the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Mata Din v. Sheikh Ahmad Ali (3), where the alienation was by a de facto guardian who had no legal status as guardian. Lord Robson pointed out that, in such circumstances, Article 44 (which prescribes a period of three years within which a ward who has attained majority may set aside a sale by his guardian, the time running from the date of the ward's majority) had no application because the sale was effected, not by a guardian but by a wholly unauthorized person. In the case before us, as the transfer was effected by a guardian, Article 44 is applicable. We do not, however, express an opinion on the question, whether, in the view adopted by Mr. Justice Newbould, he should not have dismissed the entire suit. We need only hold on the appeal by the plaintiff that the decree, in so far as it has been made against him, is well founded and must be upheld.

As the appeal has failed, and the cross-objection has been rejected, there will be no order as to costs.

FLETCHER, J.—I agree.

Where the sale took place over forty years prior to suit the long silence of the plaintiff may be taken into account and strict proof of necessity should not be expected or required. [p. 593, col. 2]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Lahore, dated the 20th of April 1920, affirming that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Lahore, dated the 31st December 1919.

Mr. Mukand Lal Puri for Dr. Nand Lal, for the Appellants.

Mr. M. N. Mukerjee, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On the 17th May 1878, one Allah Ditta sold 193 kanals of land to Karam Chand for Rs. 800. In 1888 he sold some more of his land to the same Karam Chand and Narain Das. It is said that he died somewhere about 1900. In 1903 his reversioners, the present plaintiffs, instituted a suit for possession on the ground that these alienations were not for necessity but as his widows were alive the suit was dismissed as premature so far as possession was concerned. A declaratory suit was not brought. In May 1918 the suit giving rise to this appeal was instituted by the reversioner seeking to set aside the sale of 1878 only and claiming possession of 162 kanals, 11 marlas. Karam Chand is dead and in these proceedings has been represented by his sons and grandsons. Narain Das is alive. It was pleaded that the plaintiffs were not Allah Ditta's reversioners and that the property was not ancestral, also that the plaintiffs had acquiesced in the sale. The Trial Court converted the sale into a mortgage charging the property with Rs. 650. On appeal by the vendees, the learned District Judge maintained that decree, and the defendants-vendees have now come up on second appeal to this Court and on their behalf I have heard Mr. Mukand Lal Puri while Mr. M. N. Mukerji has addressed me on behalf of the plaintiffs-respondents.

Mr. Puri contended :—

(1) that the plaintiffs had no locus standi because the property was not ancestral ;

(2) that acquiesence had been established owing to the fact that the plaintiffs had taken no action for such a long period, and

(3) that inasmuch as out of Rs. 800 Rs. 650 had been found as a valid charge, the sale should not have been converted into a mortgage.

As to the first point whether or not the property is ancestral is a question of fact. There is evidence on the record which, if accepted, warrants the conclusion arrived at. In second appeal, therefore, I am unable to examine this question further.

As to the second point, viz., that of the acquiescence, I am unable to take a view different to that of the Court below. No suit for possession of the land was possible during the lifetime of Allah Ditta. On his death the plaintiffs attempted to get possession but were met with the defence that Allah Ditta's widows were alive. Their subsequent inaction during the lifetime of the widows cannot, I consider, be regarded as acquiescence. I, therefore, see no force in this contention.

There remains the question as the correctness of the conversion of the sale into a mortgage. It has been repeatedly held by this Court that, when the amount found to be not for necessity is only a fractional part of the total consideration, the sale should not be disturbed. In the present case Rs. 150 out of Rs. 800 have been found to be without necessity and the fraction is a small one.

The real difficulty in the case is, that the learned District Judge has not come to a clear finding on the question of the necessity for the balance of the consideration money, i.e, Rs. 650. As he has allowed this sum it may safely be presumed that he had, at the back of his mind at least, an idea that some necessity existed for this amount. The transaction took place as far back as 1878; Karam Chand is now dead, his brother Narain Das is not a man of too bright an intellect as is evident from the remarks made regarding him by the Trial Court. In a case where an alienation is challenged after so long a period strict proof of necessity can scarcely ever be expected. The Trial Court appears to have been influenced by certain views found by it regarding the method in which the 1888 transaction was entered into and there appears to have been an idea in the mind of the learned Subordinate Judge that the vendees in this case had been guilty of some fraud or sharp practice. I have been unable to discover any indication of such fraud or sharp practice so far as the transaction of 1878 is concerned. The plaintiffs have not challenged in this suit the transaction of 1888, although they have referred to it. Even assuming that the latter transaction was tainted with fraud, it does not follow that the earlier one was similarly tainted. The plaintiffs might have brought a declaratory suit, although they were not bound to do so, and although their failure to do so cannot be regarded as acquiescence, I think their long silence can be taken into account when the question of necessity is concerned in a transaction which took place nearly half a century ago. In these circumstances, it seems to me that the Courts below exercised their discretion in an injudicious manner when they converted this ancient sale into a mortgage.

I accordingly accept this appeal and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs.

Appeal accepted.

I must, therefore, reject this application. No order as to costs is necessary as the applicant has appeared himself.

It should be added that the plaint had previously been presented in the Court of the Munsif who, thinking that it was a Small Cause Court matter, returned it for presentation to the Small Cause Court by an order dated 20th May 1920. He is not entitled to get the second wall demolished in execution of the first decree. [p. 595, col. 2]

Miscellaneous second appeal from the order of the District Judge, Ludhiana, dated the 24th January 1920, confirming that of the Munsif, First Class, Ludhiana, dated the 4th June 1919.

Mr. Maqsudan Bhagat, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Jai Gopal Sethi and Badr-ul-Din Kureshi for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of proceedings taken in execution of a decree obtained by respondents Nos. 1 and 2. There were 20 defendants in the suit, and the respondents asked for a declaration of a right of way over certain land, shown as A. C. Q. R. in the plan, which was alleged to be used as a thoroughfare by the proprietors of the patti, and for an injunction against the first three defendants for the removal of a wall and a wicket which obstructed the way. The suit was contested by defendants Nos. 1 to 3 and by Maluka, defendant No. 5. who is the appellant in the present appeal.

The first Court passed a decree as asked for by the plaintiffs. On appeal the District Judge, while granting a decree declaring that the plaintiffs had a right of way over A. C. Q R. and restraining defendants Nos. 1 to 3 from preventing them from passing over that land, dismissed the claim for the injunction for the removal of the wall and the wicket. On second appeal by the plaintiffs this Court granted an injunction directing the defendants to demolish the structure B C. D. so as to make their wall A. B. in one straight line up to the main road.

The plaintiffs then applied for execution, and the executing Court appointed a Commissioner to give effect to the decree. The Commissioner accordingly had the structure B. C. D. demolished as ordered by this Court.

Subsequently, other walls at C. Q. and A R. were erected and it is apparently not disputed that it was the appellant who erected them. On the application of the decree-holders the Munsif ordered that those walls should be demolished, and a space 5 feet, 7 inches wide, from Sundar's wall towards the west, be left open. His order has been upheld by the District Judge, and Maluka has now come to this Court in second appeal.

It is contended for the appellant that the executing Court was functus officio and was not competent to order the removal of the walls O. Q. and A. R. which were found to have been newly built This contention appears to be correct. All that this Court ordered was the demolition of the wall B. O. D. and that order has been carried out. It is true that the new walls O Q and A. R. hinder the decree holders from passing over the land A. O. Q. R, in respect of which an injunction was granted by the District Judge and was not set aside by this Court, but that injunction was granted only against the first three defendants and not against the appellant, who is not affected by it.

The only decree against the appellant was the decree declaring that the respondents had a right of way over A. O. Q. R, and a declaratory decree is not capable of being executed. Counsel for the respondents has referred to the 5th clause of Order XXI, rule 32, Civil Procedure Code, but that clause applies only where a decree for an injunction has not been obeyed. In the present case the injunction was not disobeyed by the persons against whom it was granted.

The order for the demolition of the walls O. Q. and A. R. built by the appellant is, therefore, ultra vires. The respondents may bring a suit for an injunction to the appellant to demolish them, but they cannot get them demolished in the execution proceedings.

I accordingly accept the appeal and set aside the order of the District Judge and the order of the Munsif for the demolition of the walls O. Q. and A. R and for a space 5 feet, 7 inches wide from Sundar's wall to be left open. The decree holders-respondents will pay the appellant's costs in this Court and the lower Appellate Court.

Appeal accepted.

A person who is allowed to graze his cattle on the land of another upon payment of a fee per capita has no interest in the land and is not a tenant. Consequently, the grazing fee is not in the nature of rent [p. 596, col. 1.]

A suit for recovery of money claimed as grazing fee is of the nature cognizable by a Court of Small Causes and, under section 102 of the Code of Civil Procedure Code, no second appeal lies in such a suit if the amount in dispute is less than Rs. 500. [p. 596, col. 1.]

Letters Patent Appeal against the following decree of Justice Sir Syed Shamsul Huda, KT., dated the 12th of August 1919, in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1691 of 1918 :—

SHAMSUL HUDA, J.—This was a suit for realisation of grazing fee at one rupee per head of cattle. Plaintiffs are the Zamindars and allow their tenants to graze cattle on their khas lands. Plaintiffs' case is, that the defendants grazed their cattle on their khas lands but failed to pay their rent which the plaintiffs had fixed at one rupee per head of cattle. The first Court decreed the plaintiffs' claim at the rate of 12 annas per head of cattle with damages at 25 per cent. On appeal a decree has been passed at the rate of 4 annas per head of cattle with compensation at 25 per cent. Before considering the merits of the case, I have to deal with the preliminary objection that the suit is one of the Small Cause Court nature and, therefore, no second appeal lies. I think this contention must prevail.

The suit, in my opinion, is not for rent at all. The grazing fee is not rent as defined in the Bengal Tenancy Act or in the Transfer of Property Act. The license to graze cattle does not amount to a lease. It creates no right to the land and, not being a lease, the fee payable is not rent. This view is supported by the decision of the Allahabad High Court in B. & N. W. Railway Co. v. Bandhu Singh (1), and also by the decision of this Court in Deb Nath Ghose v. Pachoo Mollah (2), in which it was held that, where plaintiff agreed to let defendant tap certain date trees and appropriate the proceed that this was not rent. The head-note is, perhaps, slightly misleading. The fee is also not anything payable or deliverable in respect of any right of pasturage within the meaning of section 193 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and, even if it were so, there would be no right of appeal under section 153 of the Act. No question of right of pasturage arises in the case.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, ACTG. C. J.—Mr. Justice Shamsul Huda has correctly held that the appeal presented to him was barred under section 102 of the Civil Procedure Code, which provides that, "no second appeal shall lie in any suit of the nature cognizable by Courts of Small Causes, when the amount or value of the subject matter of the original suit does not exceed five hundred rupees." The suit was for recovery of money claimed as grazing fee and the amount in dispute was less than five hundred rupees. Prima facie, ther, the suit was of a nature cognizable by a Court of Small Causes. But, it has been contended that, the suit was not so cognizable, because the fee was in the nature of rent, and in support of this argument reliance has been placed upon the decision in Bandi Ali Fakir v. Amud Sarkar (3). That case is manifestly destructive of the contention of the appellant, because it is there pointed out that there can be no claim for rent unless there is a tenancy, and there can be no tenancy unless a right to the land has been given to the grantee. In the present case, the defendants have no interest in the land on which they are allowed to graze their cattle upon payment of a fee per capita, and by no stretch of language can they be deemed tenants: B. & N. W. Railway Co. v. Bandhu Singh (1), Deb Nath Ghose v. Pachoo Mollah (2). The decision in Manohar Lal v. Gauri Rautain (4) depended on the special terms of the lease between the parties, and the same remark applies to Fitzpatrick v. Wallace (5) and Latifar Rahaman v. Forbes (6), as explained in Helayet Ali v. Kamalanand Singh (7).

We hold accordingly that the appeal was rightly dismissed as incompetent and this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

FLETCHER, J.—I agree.

RAM KISHAN DAS alias BACHCHU LAL—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Principal and agent—Agent authorised to transfer property in his own name—Deed of transfer signed by agent not as such, whether binding on principal—Agent exceeding his authority, effect of.

The omission on the part of an agent to describe in a deed that he is acting for and on behalf of a principal is immaterial. The question whether an agent is to be taken to have contracted personally or on behalf of his principal depends on the intention of the parties to be deduced from the nature and terms of the particular contract and the surrounding circumstances. [p. 600, col. 2; p. 601, col. 1.]

Where an agent is given power to execute deeds of transfer in his own name and he executes a deed relating to the property of his principal without describing himself as the latter's agent, the omission is immaterial and the deed is binding on the principal and his representatives. [p. 601, col. 1.]

Where a principal entrusts an agent with securities and instructs him to raise a certain sum upon them, and the agent borrows a larger sum upon the securities and fraudulently appropriates the difference (the lender acting bona fide and in ignorance of the limitation) the principal cannot Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Unao, dated the 16th May 1919.

Mr. H. K. Dhaon, for the Appellant.

Messrs. A. P. Sen and Tara Shankar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appellants, Jagrup Singh and others, brought the suit out of which this appeal arises, for possession of a 2-annas, 8 pies share in Mauzah Hajipur Tireha, in the district of Unao, against Ram Kishan Das, minor, son of Lala Sri Kishan Das, resident of the city of Lucknow. The facts are as follows:—

One Lalta Singh owned, inter alia, the property in suit. He was tried on a charge of murder and was convicted and sentenced by the Sessions Judge of Lucknow on the 15th of August 1893 to transportation for life. An appeal was preferred to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner from the decision of the Sessions Judge but no success attended it. On the 23rd of December 1896 Lalta Singh executed a general power-of-attorney in favour of Bikram Singh, his wife's brother, which was registered on the 24th of December 1896. Presumably, for the purpose of his defence, Lalta Singh had incurred debts to a large amount. Accordingly, we find that Bikram Singh and Musammat Rukmin, wife of Lalta Singh, executed a deed of mortgage on the 29th January 1902 in favour of Beni Ram and Balgobind, money lenders of Lucknow, hypothecating—

(1) a 2-annas, 8 pies share in the village of Hajipur Tireha (now in suit).

(2) a 5 pies, 6 kirants, 10-decimal share in Mauzah Ambawan; both belonging to Lalta Singh; and by way of additional security,

(3) a 2 annas share in the village of Mowra, belonging to Bikram Singh. It is quite clear from the evidence on the record that the money raised by this deed was not enough to cover all the liabilities of Lalta Singh. On the 28th of September 1904 Bikram Singh and Musammat Rukmin executed another deed of mortgage in favour of Sri Kishan Das, father of the minor defendant, hypothecating the same properties as in the earlier deed for a sum of Rs. 2,375. Part of this amount, i. e., Rs. 1,156-12-9 was ostensibly intended for the repayment of the loan incurred under the earlier deed and I am satisfied, on the evidence, that it was actually utilized towards the avowed object. The original deed of 1902 has been produced in this case by the defendant, and Beni Ram has given evidence in proof of the repayment. It is not sought in this case to enforce the hypothecation under the deed; for the collateral purpose of proving the loan and its repayment it is amply proved by the evidence of Beni Ram, Gajraj Singh and Chhedi Lal.

Lalta Singh died in prison, perhaps in the Andaman Islands, in March 1910. Early in 1912, the present defendant brought a suit on foot of the mortgage, dated the 28th of September 1904, against Bikram Singh and Musammat Rukmin and obtained a decree on the basis of compromise on the 12th of March 1912. The decree provided that the properties belonging to Musammat Rukmin will be sold in the first instance and the property belonging to Bikram Singh would be sold to realise the balance, if any. Accordingly, the share in Hajipur Tireha was sold on the 20th of September 1914 and purchased by the defendant in complete satisfaction of the decree and has since been in his possession. Musammat Rukmin died on the 19th of January 1915. The appellants, claiming as reversioners of Lalta Singh, instituted the present suit on the 16th of January 1918. The suit has been dismissed by the learned Subordinate Judge of Unao: hence this appeal.

The grounds upon which the suit failed are the following:—

(1) That the mortgage of the 28th of September 1904, so far as it related to Lalta Singh's properties, must be deemed to have been executed by Bikram Singh in the capacity of his agent and is consequently binding on the plaintiffs.

(2) That in the litigation of 1912 Musammat Rukmin represented the whole estate of Lalta Singh, that the debts sued for were the debts due from Lalta Singh and that, therefore, the decree and the sale in pursuance of it are binding on the plaintiffs.

JAGRUP SINGH v. RAM KISHAN DAS.

(3) That the suit is barred by Article 91, Schedule I of the Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908).

All the three grounds above-mentioned were attacked before me by the learned Pleader for the appellants. In this judgment I will deal with the first ground only because, on a careful consideration of the real merits of it, I have come to the conclusion that the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge is right.

The power-of attorney which Lalta Singh executed in favour of Bikram Singh on the 23rd of December 18 6 (Exhibit A 11) confers plenary powers upon the donee of it and, in view of the circumstances in which it was executed, it was only natural that he should have conferred such powers. Lalta Singh recites in it that the need for executing the instrument has arisen on account of the sentence of transportation for life having been passed against him. After providing for various other matters, the document provides as follows :—

"Bikram Singh may execute and get them registered, deeds such as a mortgage-deed, a sale deed, a deed of gift and a Will et cetera in his own name and under his own signature ; .....all such acts of the above-mentioned general agent are equivalent to acts personally done by me and in all events I give my consent to them and accept them."

In the deed of the 29th of January 1902 Bikram Singh appears as a party to the deed along with Musammat Rukmin ; in the body of the document reference is made in express words to the powers of alienation conferred by the mukhtarnama and in his signature Bikram Singh describes himself as the agent of Lalta Singh. When we come to the mortgage of the 28th of September 1904, we again find Bikram Singh as a party with Musammat Rukmin to the deed. But there is no mention either in the body of the document or in the signature of Bikram Singh's position of an agent of Lalta Singh. It is upon this omission that the argument addressed to me on behalf of the appellants rests. I am of opinion that the omission does not affect the substance of the transaction. That Bikram Singh was the agent of Lalta Singh is undisputed and it is equally undisputed that he had, as such, powers of alienation. The first two properties mortgaged by the deed in question undoubtedly belonged to Lalta Singh who was alive on the date of the document and consequently his wife had no authority in law to make any sort of alienation in respect of them. Further, we find that the hypothecation clause with regard to all the three items of properties stands in the joint names of Bikram Singh and Musammat Rukmin. It is not that Bikram Singh mortgages his two annas share of village Ambawan and Musammat Rukmin mortgages the shares belonging to Lalta Singh. The document in this respect is to the following effect :— "We, Bikram Singh, executant No. 1, and Musammat Rukmin, executant No. 2, mortgage and hypothecate (rahan rakkhe aur giro rakkae) 2-annas, 8 pies share of village Hajipur Tircha, 5-pies, 6 kirants and 10 decimal zemindari share of village Ambawan, owned and possessed by the husband of the executant No 2 and 2-annas share situate in village Mowra owned by the executant No. 1" It is true that by paragraph 11 of the deed the security of the 2 annas share of village Mowra is made available to the mortgagee only in the event of the failure of the security of the first two properties ; but this condition, in my opinion, does not in the least detract from the original character of the hypothecation noted above. The matter does not rest here. The almost conclusive evidence of the fact that Bikram Singh was acting in the character of an agent in relation to the alienation of Lalta Singh's property is, to my mind, furnished by the reference in the deed in question to the deed of the 29th January 1902 which, as I have shown above, was intended to be, and, as a matter of fact, was paid off by a substantial portion of the consideration of the mortgage of September 1904. On these grounds I have come to the conclusion that Bikram Singh and not Musammat Rukmin was the primary party to the mortgage of 1904, he executed the deed in the capacity of Lalta Singh's agent and the mortgagee accepted the deed from him on the basis of Bikram Singh's authority to execute it under the power-of-attorney dated the 23rd of December 1896. But this finding, says the learned Pleader for the appellants, would not be sufficient to dispose of the appeal. He argues, as a matter of law, that, (1) where an agent, and not the principal, is party to a deed, and (2) where an agent does not expressly sign as acting in the capacity of an agent, the principal is not liable on the deed. Many extracts were read at the Bar from Pearson's Tagore Law Lectures on Agency in India, with special reference to pages 158 to 161 and page 173, paragraph 2. Reference was also made to the following cases: —

Soopromonian Setty v. Hoilgers (1), Koneti Naicker v. Jatu Gopala Aiyar (2), Yinuganti China v. Katagiri Venkata (3) and Sadasuk Janki Das v. Maharaja Sir Kishen Pershad (4).

I do not think that the law is what the learned Pleader contends for. It is of utmost importance that the law relating to liability on negotiable instruments should not be confused with the law bearing upon liability arising out of other contracts. It is not necessary to discuss in this appeal what the law in the former case is, but it is enough to say that it is not exactly the same as in the latter case. The cases of Koneti Naicker v. Jatu Gopala Aiyar (2), Yinuganti China v. Katagiri Venkata (3) and Sadasuk Janki Das v. Maharaja Sir Kishen Pershad (4) all relate to negotiable instruments. I do not, therefore, propose to discuss them. The case of Soopromonian Setty v. Hoilgers (1) is not against the view which I am presently going to express.

It is necessary to point out that the first proposition advanced by the learned Pleader rests upon the Common Law rule that 'a right of action upon a deed is restricted to those who are parties to it or persons who claim under them.' This doctrine is based upon the special characteristics of a 'deed' the origin of which is traced back to the reign of Edward I by the learned authors of 'History of English Law, by Pollock and Maitland'. "Before the end of Edward I's reign the King's Court had established the rule that the only conventio that can be enforced by action is one that is expressed in a written document sealed 'by the party to be charged therewith '.....The man who relies upon a covenant must produce in proof some 'speciality' (especialte aliquid speciale); the production of 'suit' is not enough. Thenceforward, however, it is only a short step to holding as a matter of law that a 'deed'—and by a deed (fet factum) men are beginning to mean a sealed piece of parchment—has an operative force of its own which intentions expressed, never so plainly, in other ways have not. The sealing and delivering of the parchment is the contractual act. Further, what is done by 'deed' can only be undone by 'deed'." (Volume II, pages 219 and 220). Bovill, C. J., in the case of Reg. v. A. H. Morton (5) said: "It seems to me that the meaning of the legal definition of a deed, to be gathered from the authorities, is a document under seal and delivered as a deed." In the case of Berkeley v. Hardy (6) the rule of Common Law was stated as follows: —"1. No man can bind another by deed, unless he has authority, by deed, to do so. 2. A person, acting by power-of-attorney, to execute a deed for another, should not be a party to the deed, even though he describe himself as acting under the power-of-attorney. The deed should run in language as if the principal himself intended to execute the deed. 3. No one but a party, or one who claims through a party, can maintain any action on a deed." Amongst later cases, the decision in International Contract Company, In re (7) may be referred to and the observations of Lord Esher, M R., in the case of United Kingdom Mutual Steamship Assurance Association v. Nevill (8) may be quoted: "I think that, in the case of such a contract as this under seal, it is not allowable to go behind the instrument to make undisclosed principals responsible, because they are not parties and have not attached their seals to the contract under seal". An instrument of mortgage executed under the provisions of section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882 (Act IV of 1832) is not a 'deed' within the meaning of the Common Law rule. I am not aware of any case except the one to which I will presently refer, nor was any cited at the Bar, in which the law as enunciated in the case of Barkeley v. Hardy (6) was applied in this country. The decision of Mr. Justice Farran in the case of Ragoonathdas Gopaldas v. Morarji Jutha (9) was expressly dissented from in Chinnaramanuja Ayyangar v. Padmanabha Pillaiyan (10). In the latter case reference was made to the decision of the Privy Council in Juggeewundas Keeka Shah v. Ramdas Brijbookundas (11) which fortifies the view that I am taking in the present case.

A contract under seal executed by an agent in his own name is treated in England as an exception to the general rule:—"any contract made by an agent with the authority of his principal may be enforced...by or against the principal whether or not his name or existence was disclosed to the other contracting party at the time when such contract was made." (Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. I, page 206, paragraph 439). I am of opinion that the exception being based, as shown above, upon a technical rule must be disregarded and the general rule be given effect to. Further, the rule of Common Law must be taken to have been materially modified by the provisions of section 46 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 and 45 Vict., C. 41) though no case seems so far to have decided the point. That section is as follows:—"46.—(1) The donee of a power-of-attorney may, if he thinks fit, execute or do any assurance, instrument, or thing in and with his own name and signature and his own seal, where sealing is required, by the authority of the donor of the power; and every assurance, instrument, and thing so executed and done shall be as effectual in law, to all intents, as if it had been executed or done by the donee of the power in the name and with the signature and seal of the donor thereof. (2) This section applies to powers-of-attorney created by instruments executed either before or after the commencement of this Act." Similar law was enacted by the Indian Legislature in the Powers-of-Attorney Act, 1882 (Act No. VII of 1882) to which my attention was drawn by the learned Pleader for the appellants. Section 2 of this Act is almost identical with section 46 of the English Statute and is as follows:—"The donee of a power of-attorney may, if he thinks fit, execute or do any assurance, instrument, or thing in and with his own name and signature and his own seal, where sealing is required, by the authority of the donor of the power; and every assurance, instrument and thing so executed and done shall be as effectual in law...as if it had been executed or done by the donee of the power in the name and with the signature and seal of the donor thereof. This section applies to powers of-attorney created by instruments executed either before or after...this Act comes into force." Whatever view may hereafter be taken as to the scope of these two sections, they would certainly apply to a case where the donee of the power has authority to contract in his own name. I have already shown that the power-of-attorney, dated the 23rd of December 1893, conferred such an authority upon Bikram Singh.

In a recent case decided in England it was held that where a person, although an agent for another, signed a contract in his own name, and described himself throughout as a principal, in an action against the real principal, parol evidence to show that the person was agent only was inadmissible, as such evidence would have contradicted the written contract See Formby Brothers v. Formby (12)]. This view is in harmony with the provisions of section 92 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, and must, accordingly, be respected. In the present case no infringement of the provisions of section 92 is attempted. The first part of the learned Pleader's argument must, therefore, be rejected.

As to the second part, I have already considered it in an earlier part of this judgment and it is sufficient to say here that there is no substance in the argument. I think the omission on the part of an agent to describe in the deed that he was acting for and on behalf of a principal is immaterial. The question whether an agent is to be taken to have contracted personally or on behalf of his principal depends on the intention of the parties to be deduced from the nature and terms of the particular contract and the surrounding circumstances. (Bowstead on Agency, Sixth Edition, page 388). This rule of construction is not in the slightest degree affected by the provisions of section 230 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872 (Act IX of 1872). Also see the case of Indian Companies Act, 1882, In the matter of (13).

In have already, on the interpretation of the deed of mortgage of the 28th of September 1904, held that Bikram Singh executed it in the capacity of an agent for Lalta Singh and it is also clear, in fact it is not disputed, that Bikram Singh acted within and not beyond the authority which he derived under the power-of-attorney, dated the 23rd of December 1896. In a case like this, where immoveable property is transferred as security for the debt, there is no room for the question as to whom, the principal or the agent, credit was given by the other party. The property which was primarily charged for the debt belonged to Lalta Singh; it is the property, therefore, which is liable. It follows that the mortgage was binding upon Lalta Singh and is consequently binding upon the plaintiffs as well. See the case of Hambro & Son v. Burnand (14).

It was also argued by the learned Pleader for the appellants that a portion of the consideration of the mortgage in question was debt really due from Bikram Singh. Assuming, but not deciding, that the contention advanced by the learned Pleader is correct, the plaintiffs who are the heirs of Lalta Singh cannot escape liability for the whole debt. In the case of Brocklesby v. Temperance Permanent Building Society (15) it was held that "where a principal entrusts an agent with securities and instructs him to raise a certain sum upon them, and the agent borrows a larger sum upon the securities and fraudulently appropriates the difference (the lender acting bona fide and in ignorance of the limitation)

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

November 17, 1919.

Present:—Sir Henry Drake Brookman Kt., J. C.

MOTIRAM AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS —APPELLANTS

versus

BHIKAN RAO AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Berar Land Revenue Code, 1893, ss. 206 (1), 209 (2) —Pre-emption—Share held by all members of joint Hindu family—Notice to manager, whether sufficient—Co-parceners in joint family, whether have independent rights of pre-emption—Presumption—Several co-parceners having equal rights of pre emption —Procedure.

Where a share in a Survey Number is held by all the members of a Hindu joint family, notice to the manager of the family will ordinarily suffice for the purposes of section 206 (1), Berar Land Revenue Code. This course would be an obvious one where all members other than the manager are minors, but where the would-be vendor chooses to depart from the procedure laid down in the Code and to rely upon a consent which would more properly be described as a definite expression of a determination not to exercise the right of pre-emption, he and his vendees should be careful to see that the substituted precaution is such as will bind all concerned [p. 603, col. 2.]

There is no presumption that where a manager does a certain act he does it in the capacity of manager. [p. 603, col. 2.]

Damodhar Vithal v. Damodhar Hari, 1 B. H C. R. 182, followed.

There is nothing in the Berar Land Revenue Code to militate against the view that every co-parcener in an undivided Hindu family has an independent right of pre-emption which he can exercise by himself [p 604, col 1.]

All the co-parceners should be considered as having equal rights of pre-emption until the contrary is shown. [p. 604, col. 1.]

MOTIRAM v. BHIKAN RAO.

Where two or more co-pre-emptors are equally entitled to the right of pre-emption the person to exercise it should be determined by lot. [p. 604, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Akola, in Civil Appeal No. 123 of 1918, dated the 10th December 1918, arising out of Civil Suit No. 445 of 1917, dated the 12th July 1918, before the Munsif, Malkapur.

Messrs. M. V. Abhyankar and A. C. Roy, for the Appellants.

Mr. G. V. Kukde, for Respondents Nos. 1 and 2.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs in the suit out of which this second appeal arises are brothers, the younger being a minor. They are co-occupants with their paternal uncle, Bhawan Rao, of a 5-annas, 4-pies share of Survey No. 2 in Mouza Jamune. The rest of the field belonged to the third defendant, Narayan Rao, and he sold it on the 1st January 1917 to the first and second defendants who are the appellants in this Court. Bhawan Rao attested the sale deed which is Exhibit D1 of the Trial Judge's record.

The plaintiffs sued to pre-empt the share sold by the third defendant on the ground that notice of the price at which the said defendant was willing to sell was not given to them as required by section 20[illegible] (1), Berar Land Revenue Code. The vendees pleaded as follows :—

"The plaintiffs are the brother's son of Bhawan Rao and they three form a joint family and Bhawan Rao is the karta. The sale in question was effected with the express consent of Bhawan Rao. He was asked at the time of settling the bargain whether he would like to purchase the field in dispute. He gave the defendants to understand that he did not want to purchase the field in dispute and he had no objection if the defendants were to purchase the same. Accordingly, the sale-deed in question was effected and the signature of Bhawan Rao was obtained on it as an attesting witness. Bhawan Rao being the manager of the family his consent to the sale in favour of the defendants and his refusal to purchase the same himself bind the present plaintiffs and they cannot, therefore, claim the right of pre-emption against the present defendants and they are thus estopped from pleading want of notice. The claim is denied in toto."

They were supported by their vendor who made the following statement :—"At the time the sowda was settled with the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, Bhawan Rao, paternal uncle of the plaintiffs, was present. He did not put forth his claim to purchase the field in dispute. Bhawan Rao and the plaintiffs are joint and all of them have got joint 5-annas, 4 pies share in the field. The plaintiffs have, therefore, no right to bring this suit."

The plaintiffs, in reply, denied that Bhawan Rao gave any consent to the sale or was present when its terms were settled. They alleged that they were separate from Bhawan Rao in mess, though joint in cultivation, and did not form a joint family with him. They added that, in any case, Bhawan Rao's consent did not benefit the minor plaintiff and so could not be binding on him.

The following issues were framed :—

"1. Whether the sowda or the sale of the field in dispute between the defendants, was done with the consent of Bhagwan Rao, plaintiff's paternal uncle, as alleged?

"2. Did Bhawan Rao represent that he did not want to purchase the field in dispute and whether the consent and the representation of Bhawan Rao as alleged estop the plaintiffs from bringing this suit?

"3. To what reliefs are plaintiffs entitled?"

The Trial Judge found that Bhawan Rao was present when the sale was negotiated and declined to purchase the share as he had only sufficient money to purchase another field which the third defendant was desirous of selling. He also held that Bhawan Rao and the plaintiffs were still joint in estate Bhawan Rao being the manager of the joint family, but that Bhawan Rao's consent to the sale could not bind his nephews, inasmuch as his action was not justified by legal necessity and did not benefit either of them. The claim for pre-emption was, therefore decreed.

The vendees appealed to the District Court complaining that the question of legal necessity or benefit was not put in issue and should not have been made a ground of the Trial Judge's decision and contending that the plaintiffs were bound by the so called consent which Bhawan Rao gave to the sale by declining to buy himself. The Additional District Judge held that no question of legel necessity or benefit arises in the matter, inasmuch as each member of the joint family has a right of pre-emption which he can exercise independently, and relied on Sonaji v. Radhika (1) as authority for this view. He went on to hold that the question, if it arose, must be decided in favour of the plaintiffs as the vendees had not shown that Bhawan Rao's action was expressly taken in the capacity of manager of the joint family and was for his co sharers' benefit. He considered that the question of benefit or no benefit was understood by the parties to be in issue though not expressly covered by the terms of any of the issues framed and, in this connection, cited Muthuraman Chetty v. Krishna Pillai (2). He also held, on the authority of Bapu v. Anand (3), that the plaintiffs could not be estopped from claiming pre-emption inasmuch as they were not served with the notice prescribed by section 206 (1), Berar Land Revenue Code: he cited Bollaprogada Ramamurthy v Thanmanna Gopayya (4) and Mahamaya Debi v. Huridas Haldar (5) as authorities for the proposition that there can be no estoppel against the express provisions of a Statute. The appeal was, therefore, dismissed and the vendees have preferred this second appeal.

In this Court it is conceded for the appellants and the plaintiffs respondents that no question of legal necessity arises. In the circumstances it is, therefore, unnecessary to consider whether the findings of the Courts below on the point of necessity are justified. The contention for the appellants that the plaintiffs did not deny that if Bhawan Rao led the vendor and vendees to understand that he would not buy the share, he did so in his capacity of manager of the joint family and that the assurance must, therefore, be taken to have been given in that capacity and so to amount to an estoppel. For the plaintiffs-respondents, on the other hand, it is contended that they were entitled to notice of the price at which the vendor was willing to sell and that the appeal is incompetent, inasmuch as it does not challenge the lower Appellate Court's finding to this effect. In my opinion, the appellants did not in their pleadings set up a case sufficient to deprive the plaintiffs of their right of pre-emption. It may well be that where a share in a Survey Number is held by all the members of a Hindu joint family notice to the manager of the family will suffice for the purposes of section 206 (1), Berar Land Revenue Code. This course would be an obvious one where all members other than the manager are minors, and in the present case one of the plaintiffs is still a minor, but where the would-be vendor chooses to depart from the procedure laid down in the Code and to rely upon what is termed in this case a consent but would more properly be described as a definite expression of a determination not to exercise the right of pre emption, he and his vendees should be careful to see that the substituted precaution is such as will bind all concerned. It does not follow from the fact that when a manager does a certain act he does it in the capacity of manager: see Damodhar Vithal v. Damodhar Hari (6). Nor do I find in the evidence recorded in the present case any indication that Bhawan Rao was addressed or purported to act for any one but himself when he attested Exhibit D1 and intimated that he had no intention of buying the share which was being sold. It is doubtless true that no member of the joint family could predicate that he had a definite share in the family part of the field, but it is no less true that, under section 209 (2), Berar Land Revenue Code, where there are two or more co-occupants equally entitled to the right of pre emption, the person to exercise the right must be determined by lot. The person interested in shutting out the right of pre-emption should, therefore, have been careful to have the position of Bhawan Rao made clear and this was evidently not done.

I do not feel much pressed by the decision in Sonaji v. Radhika (1), that having been delivered in August 1896, i. e., nearly five months before the present Berar Land Revenue Code came into force. The judgment gives no reasons for holding that every co parcener in an undivided Hindu family has an independent right of pre-emption which he can exercise by himself, but there is authority in Gandharp Singh v. Sahib Singh (i) for the view expressed and I am unable to find anything in the present Berar Land Revenue Code to militate against it. In the words of Petheram, C. J., all the co-parceners should be considered as having equal rights until the contrary is shown. Section 209 (2) of the Code lays down that where two or more co-parceners are equally entitled to the right of pre-emption, the person to exercise it should be determined by lot and Bhawan Rao having precluded himself from pre-empting it would seem that the plaintiffs should in this way settle, who is to pre-empt. No objection, however, has been taken to the form of the Trial Judge's decree which enables both the plaintiffs together to pay the requisite money and I shall, therefore, not interfere on this ground.

The appeal accordingly fails and is dismissed with costs. In the Courts below costs will be paid as already ordered.

Appeal dismissed.

JUDGMENT.—The issues in this appeal lie within a very narrow compass. The suit was filed on the basis of a hundi by the plaintiff in whose favour it was drawn against four sets of defendants:

(i) Gur Din and Rama Adhin (defendants Nos. 1 and 2) the drawers;

(ii) certain persons alleged to be members of the same Hindu joint family with the drawers (defendants Nos. 5 to 9);

(iii) Nanhe Mal the acceptor (defendant No. 4);

(iv) Bansidhar, Jagannath and Bachcha (defendants Nos. 10 to 12) as members of a Hindu joint family trading in partnership styled 'Nanhe Mal Gulzari Mal.'

The hundi was not paid at maturity; hence the suit. A number of defences were raised but were decided in favour of the plaintiff bank. Two of these findings are attacked by the respondents in this appeal but, as I should be prepared to hold, unsuccessfully. The contesting respondents plead payment and deny that defendant No. 4 accepted the bill on behalf of defendants Nos. 10 to 12.

Three points were decided against the plaintiff: First, the liability of the defendants Nos. 5 to 9. The appellant accepts this finding and there is an end to the case as far as these defendants are concerned. Second, that the hundi was not presented for payment to the acceptor and this discharges all parties to it from liability. The appellant accepts the finding of fact but denies that the acceptor and the drawers are discharged thereby. Third, that no notice of dishonour was given to the drawers and they are thereby discharged,

The principal issue, therefore, is :—

"Is presentation for payment necessary in order to charge; (1) the drawer, and

(2) the acceptor?"

The appellant's learned Counsel admits that the case against the drawers is weaker than that against the acceptor. After acceptance the drawer, under section 37 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, ceases to be a principal debtor and occupies the position of surety for the acceptor. The argument to be considered below does not, therefore, apply to him. A feeble attempt was made to suggest that there was a contract in the deed dispensing with presentment but the phrase relied on is not sufficiently definite to be pleaded as a contract, and even if it were, there is nothing in the language of the Act to suggest that its provisions are subject to any special contract contained in the instrument. In one or two cases where they are so subject there is an express provision to that effect in the Act, as in the last paragraph of section 61, which was added by the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881. Usage is expressly reserved by section 1 of the Act, but there is no evidence on the record of any special usage affecting presentment for payment. The absence of notice of dishonour under section 93 is also a fatal defect in the case against the drawers. The appellant cannot bring the case within any of the clauses of section 98.

The case against the acceptor depends on the construction of section 64 of the Act. The opening paragraph of the section says:—

"Promissory notes, bills of exchange and cheques must be presented for payment to the maker, acceptor or drawee thereof, respectively, by or on behalf of the holder as hereinafter provided. In default of such presentment, the other parties thereto are not liable thereon to such holder."

The question at issue depends on whether the words "other parties thereto" include or exclude the acceptor. Two constructions are possible. The first, and what seems at first sight the more natural construction, is to read "other parties" as meaning parties other than the person to whom the bill must be presented for payment. A promissory note must be presented to the maker, a bill of exchange to the acceptor, and a cheque to the drawee. Failing such presentment the maker of the promissory note, the acceptor of the bill of exchange and the drawee of the cheque may still be liable but no other party to the instrument will be. The other construction is to read "the other parties thereto" as meaning parties other than the holder. It is objected to this construction that, as the holder himself could never be liable, the phrase "other parties" is out of place. But, obviously, the holder is a party to the bill, so that there is nothing strained or unnatural in using the words "other parties" to convey the meaning suggested.

A third suggested construction, namely, that it was intended to exclude any person falling under the denomination of maker, acceptor, or drawee, whether of a bill, note or cheque, is ruled out by the word "respectively" in the first sentence. Moreover, except in Chapter II the word "maker" is used only of a promissory note, and the word "acceptor" only of a bill. "Drawee" is common to both bills and cheques but the drawee of a bill as such is under no liability. His liability only accrues when he accepts the bill.

The arguments for the appellant may be summed up as follows:—

(i) The Negotiable Instruments Act closely follows English Law on the subject, and under English Law presentment for payment is not necessary to charge the principal debtor.

The argument is not, of course, conclusive. There are admitted differences between the two, and English Law is only a guide when the construction of the Act is doubtful.

(ii) Mr. Chalmers in his commentary on the Law of Negotiable Instruments in British India supports this view. He refers (4th Edition, page 241) to the rule of the Common Law that a debtor must seek out his creditor and pay him, and then says:

"The maker cannot take advantage of any informality in the presentment to him..... Section 66 which requires that a promissory note or bill made payable at a specified period after date or sight thereof must be presented for payment at maturity, may seem to be an exception to the general rule as to the liability of the principal debtor; but the object of this section is to specify the time for payment (when such is necessary) and not to relieve the maker or acceptor from liability in the event of default."

(iii) Such authority as there is is in favour of the appellant's view. The cases are not very numerous but there are, as it happens, cases in three High Courts, namely:

Ramakistnayya v. Kassim (1), Ihul Chand v. Ganga Ghulam (2) and Ardeshir Sorabsha Moos v. Khushaldas Gokuldas (3).

On the other side I have been referred to the case of Nanhey Mal v. Chait Ram (4).

That case is not directly in point but it does contradict the view that acceptance is never necessary to render the principal debtor liable. In this case the bill had never been presented for acceptance, so that the drawer was the principal debtor. It was, however, held that the drawer was not liable unless the plaintiff could bring the case within one of the exceptions contained in section 76. The view of section 64 taken by the Court is stated in the following passage:—

"Section 64 of the Negotiable Instruments Act provides that a bill of exchange must be presented for payment in the manner mentioned in that and subsequent sections. Section 76 provides that no presentment for payment is necessary in certain circumstances."

(iv) An argument is drawn from the differences between the languages of sections 61 and 62 ("no party thereto is liable") and the expression "other parties" in section 64. This point will be considered later.

(v) Section 32 has been referred to as laying down, in the widest term, the liability of the acceptor to meet the bill at maturity. It is clear, however, that this liability is subject to any conditions imposed by special sections of the Act (e. g., under section 68 with reference to a bill of exchange or promissory note drawn and accepted at a particular place).

The argument on the other side is based on the language of the Act. The respondents' construction is the only possible construction if the latter portion of the section is to have any meaning at all. The last paragraph of the section consists of an exception and is worded thus:—

"Exception.—Where a promissory note is payable on demand and is not payable at a specified place, no presentment is necessary in order to charge the maker thereof."

If the exception is that in one particular case presentment is not necessary to charge the maker of a promissory note the general rule must be that presentment is necessary. If, however, "other parties" in the first part of the section means "parties other than the maker of a promissory note or the acceptor of a bill" presentment is never necessary in order to charge them and it is immaterial whether the note is payable on demand or at a specified place or otherwise. The exception is no exception at all but an illustration of the rule, and an illustration which serves no useful purpose but merely tends to confuse the mind of the reader. In order to make it an exception, the rule must be that in other cases presentment for payment is necessary in order to charge the maker of the note. In short, according to this construction, the rule to be deduced from the first part of the section is that presentment of a promissory note is only necessary in the case of persons other than the maker; the rule to be deduced from the second part is that presentment is necessary to charge the maker except in one particular case which is stated as an exception.

This argument seems to me conclusive. A construction of the earlier part of the section which makes nonsense of the later part cannot be correct. But the maker of a note and the acceptor of a bill stand precisely on the same footing. If "other parties" has reference to the persons mentioned in the first sentence of the section it excludes them both. If it means parties other than the holder it excludes neither of them. I should have felt considerable hesitation in differing from the authorities which have been cited, but the point has never really been discussed. It seems to have been taken for granted that the section merely reproduces English Law.

The inclusion of cheques in the section furnishes a further argument in favour of the respondents' view. It can hardly have been the intention of the Legislature that the banker on whom a cheque is drawn should be bound to pay it without its being presented to him for payment. He has no means otherwise of knowing of its existence. In the case of a cheque not the drawee but the drawer is the principal debtor (section 31). Moreover, the Act contains a special provision, section 31, defining the liability of the drawee, which is to pay "when duly required to do so" provided he has funds of the drawer in his hands.

The argument drawn from the language of sections 61 and 62 carries little weight. The use of the words "parties" or "other parties" in the Act is not always consistent. Thus, in section 8—a section which the appellant might have cited in his favour—the holder is defined as the person entitled to recover the amount due on the bill from the parties thereto. On the other hand, there are many sections of the Act in which "parties" is used as including the holder, e. g., section 43, Exception II and the second paragraph of section 47; and in section 36 the holder is contrasted with prior parties. In section 93 the words "all other parties" are used in contrast to the holder in exactly the sense contended for by the respondents ("The holder thereof... must give notice that the instrument has been so dishonoured to all other parties whom the holder seeks to make severally able thereon"). It will be noticed that in this section a separate provision is inserted to exclude the maker of the dishonoured note or the drawee or the acceptor (not the acceptor only) of the dishonoured bill.

For the above reasons, it appears to me that the lower Appellate Court was right in construing the words "other parties" as meaning parties other than the holder, and I decide accordingly. The result is that the appeal fails and it is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

BAHADUR, SON OF DINO—

APPELLANT

versus

GELOMAL AND OTHERS—

RESPONDENTS.

Instalment decree—Instalments, default in payment of—Acceptance by decree-holder, whether amounts to waiver—Waiver—Question of fact—Appeal, second—Question whether can be raised—Limitation.

On 31st August 1910 R. obtained an instalment decree against A. the amount being payable by yearly instalments on the 15th February of every year. A. made default and paid the first instalment on 2nd June 1912 and further sums were paid on 29th April and 17th November 1914. On 18th May 1915 R. applied to execute his decree for the balance due, but was met with the objection that the right to execute having accrued to him on 15th February 1912, and more than three years having elapsed since then, the application was barred by limitation. On appeal it was held that the application was within time on the ground that the acceptance by R. of the instalment on 2nd June 1912 amounted to a waiver of his right to enforce execution for the whole amount due under the decree. In second appeal it was urged that the question of waiver not having been raised in the Original Court the Appellate Court erred in going into it, and that that Court was wrong in finding that R. had waived his right:

Held, 1) that the question whether or not there was a waiver was a question of fact and the finding on that question could not be challenged in second appeal: [p. 609, col. 1.]

2 that, in any case, R. from the moment of his acceptance was barred from enforcing the right which was his by reason of A.'s default, and A. became barred from pleading that limitation ran from 15th February 1912. [p. 608, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this appeal are, shortly, as follows:—

Respondents obtained an instalment decree on the 31st August 1910 against the appellant for the sum of Rs. 4,150-0-0. The sum was payable in yearly instalments of Rs. 300 with interest at 6 per cent. Each instalment was due on the 15th of February of every year. The first instalment fell due on the 15th of February 1911. The second instalment fell due on the 5th of February 1912. On neither of these dates, however, were the instalments paid to the judgment-creditor. But on the 24th July 1911 the judgment-debtor paid and the judgment-creditor accepted the sum of Rs. 300 on the 2nd June 1912, in the same way the judgment-debtor paid and the judgment-creditor accepted the sum of Rs. 300. Further sums were paid by judgment-debtor and accepted by the judgment-creditor on the 29th April and on the 17th of November 1914.

On the 18th of May 1915 the judgment-creditor applied to execute his decree to the amount of Rs. 415 the balance due according to the calculation mentioned in the execution application. The judgment-debtor resisted the execution upon the ground that the judgment-creditor's right to sue for the full amount under the decree accrued to him on the 15th February 1912. As more than three years had elapsed that application, according to the judgment-debtor, was time-barred. This objection commended itself to the learned Judge of the First Court and on the 18th of September 1915, he dismissed the application for execution as time-barred. Against this order the judgment-creditor appealed to the District Court of Larkana. On the 29th of May 1916 the learned District Judge reversed the order of the lower Court finding that the application was in time and directed the lower Court to re-admit it and to dispose of it according to law. The view of the learned District Judge was that acceptance by the judgment-creditor of the sum of Rs. 300 on June 2nd, 1912, amounted to a waiver of his right to enforce execution for the whole amount due under his decree. In view of this waiver of the 2nd June 1912, the judgment-creditor was not time-barred on the 18th of May 1915, when he filed his application to execute his decree.

Against this order of the learned District Judge the judgment-debtor has appealed to this Court. Two main points were urged by the learned Pleader for the appellant. The first was, that the learned District Judge erred in going into this question of waiver when it had not been taken in the first Court. In any case, he should have given to the judgment-debtor an opportunity of calling evidence on the point. I am not of opinion that there is any good ground for this objection. There was no reason why the judgment-debtor should have been allowed to call fresh evidence. The facts were there before the learned District Judge and admitted by both sides, namely, that the instalments were not paid by the judgment-debtor on the 15th of February 1911 and 1912 but were paid by him and accepted by the judgment-creditor on the 24th of July 1911 and on the 2nd of June 1912. Nor was there any reason why the learned Judge should not have considered the point whether or not there had been a waiver. It was a question of fact, as was held in Bhagwandas Feroomal v. Menghraj (1). The first Appellate Court is empowered to go into questions of fact.

The second argument of the learned Pleader is that the lower Court was wrong in finding that the judgment-creditor had waived his right to sue. As I have already observed, it has been held in Bhawandas Feroomal v. Menghraj (1) that the question whether or not there has been a waiver is a question of fact. As the District Judge, Larkana, has found that there was a waiver in this case we are precluded from questioning that finding.

At the same time, we think that it is only fair to say that we consider that finding perfectly justified by the facts of this case. When the judgment-debtor went to the judgment-creditor with the instalment due by him on the 15th of February 1912 it was open to the judgment-creditor to say that he would not accept in June what should have been paid in February; that he intended to enforce the right which was his by law, that is to say, that he intended to apply for execution for the whole amount due under his decree. He did not choose to follow that course. He accepted the moneys tendered to him by the judgment-debtor. What then became the position of the parties? The judgment-creditor, from the moment of his acceptance, was barred from enforcing the right which was his by reason of the judgment-debtor's default. In the same way, the judgment-debtor became barred from pleading that limitation ran from the 15th of February 1912. This view of mine finds support in the Full Bench case of Kashiram v. Pandu (2). Therein Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., observed: "The true view appears to me to be, that, though there may be failure to pay punctually under an instalment decree, still the subsequent conduct of the parties may preclude either of them from afterwards asserting that payment was not made regularly and in satisfaction of the obligation under the decree." The learned Pleader for the appellant argued that in Bhawandas Feroomal Menghraj (1) there was a similar acceptv. ance of an overdue instalment but there the learned Judges declined to accept this as conclusive proof of waiver. The learned Judges, however, merely based their decision upon the finding of the fact of the lower Court that there was no waiver. The circumstances, too, of that case were distinguishable from the present. There the judgment debtor had paid Rs. 300 0 0 and these Rs. 300 0 0 has not been paid in sums equivalent of any one instalment or multiple of one instalment. It was, therefore, impossible to say that, at any given time, the judgment-creditor was accepting any particular instalment and that, therefore, he waived his right to apply for exe cution for the whole decree. Here, however, the learned Judge had found that the payment of 2nd June 1912 of Rs. 33 10 0 wiped off within an anna of two what was due by the judgment debtor on the 15th February 1912. The learned Pleader for the appellant has questioned the accuracy of this finding. But we must be bound by the decision of the learned District Judge who had materials before him which have not been supplied to us. We, therefore, find that the decision of the learned Judge of the District Court on the question of the fact whether or not there was a waiver by the judgment creditor was a decision fully justified by the facts before him. That being so, it is a finding of fact which is binding on us.

We, therefore, confirm the order of the lower Court and dismiss this appeal. In view of the importance of the questions of law involved in this matter, we think it is only right that the parties should bear their own costs in this appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

*Hindu Law—Widow—Adoption—Consent of kinsmen to adoption—Court, right of, to interfere—Husband's daughter's son, whether should be consulted—*Upanayanam *ceremony, performance of, when valid—Irregular performance of ceremony, whether bar to adoption—Custom—Adoption—*Andhra or Telugu Brahmins—Daughter's son or sister's son, adoption of, whether valid.

Inasmuch as the law imposes a responsibility upon kinsmen in granting their consent to an adoption the Court cannot interfere with their exercise of it, the right of the Court to scrutinize the kinsmen's reasons extends only to those cases in which consent is refused. [p. 614, col. 1.]

The son of the daughter of a deceased Hindu is not one of the gnatis whom it is necessary for the deceased's widow to consult regarding an adoption, and the absence of such consultation would not render invalid an adoption made by the widow. [p. 618, col. 2.]

In order to render the Upanayanam ceremony of a boy valid, it must be performed by the father, or, in his absence, by another kinsman in the family to which the boy concerned actually belongs, the performance of the ceremony in a family which the boy has not entered is invalid, and the irregular performance of the ceremony in a family into which the boy is wrongly believed to have entered is a nullity, and is no bar to the subsequent adoption of the boy into that family. [p. 619, col. 2.]

The custom of adopting a daughter's son or a sister's son obtains among Brahmins of the Andhra or Telugu portion of the Madras Presidency. [p. 630, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Rajahmundry, dated the 11th August 1916, in Original Suit No. 81 of 1914.

This appeal came on for hearing on the 15th, 16th and 17th of April 1919, and the case stood over for consideration till the 29th of April 1919.

FACTS.—The propositus left a widow who adopted her second daughter's son in 1900. The adoption, alleged to be made under authority, was set aside on the ground that the authority was not made out. Then, the 2nd defendant, that daughter's son, was again adopted, alleging consent of sapindas. The question was whether the adoption was valid for the following reasons:— (1) A daughter's son cannot be adopted. (2) There was corruption in getting the consent of sapindas. (3) The plaintiff (a daughter's son) should have been consulted as the next reversioner. (4) The upanayanam of the adopted boy was performed in the natural family in effect.

The Hon'ble Mr. S. Srinivasa Ayyangar (Advocate-General, with him Messrs A. Krishnaswamy Aiyar and S. Aravamudu Ayyangar), for the Appellants.—The first question I shall argue is, 'whether the consent of the daughter's son is necessary to validate the adoption." "Sapinda" in reference to adoption means only agnatic sapinda, the consent of a majority of whom is sufficient. The daughter's son is only a cognate. The word in the texts is gati (gnati) and the object of adoption itself is to introduce a gnati or agnate into the family. This very purpose of adoption is denied if the consent of a person who is the nearer heir to property were required. The daughter's son is only a bhinna gotra sapinda. See Vyavahara Mayukha (page 57 of the translation of Dr. Mandlik). Veerabasavara u Pantulu v. Balasurya Prasada Rao (1).

Mandlik's Hindu Law, page 57, 2 Strange's Hindu Law, page 115, Mayne.' Hindu Law, Article 211. If the theory that the consent of sapindas is required because they are the protectors of the widow is accepted, it is obvious that a member of another family, e. g., a daughter's son, cannot be the protector. See Ramnad case [Collector of Madura v. Moottoo Ramalinga Sathupothy] (3) and Subrahmanyam v. Venkamma (4). The consent of the nearest gnatis is sufficient. See Rao Rama Rao v. Narasimha Nayanini Varu (5), Veerabasavarazu Pantulu v. Balasurya Prasada Rao (1). See the text explained in Adusumalli Krishnayya v. Adusumalli Lakshmipathi (2). According to the texts the father of the husband, if alive, is the person to be first consulted. But if the right to the property is taken as the text, the daughter's son should have preceded the father but it is not so in the texts.

If interest in property is the test, the whole body of reversioners will have to consent. (A reversioner's suit is held to be a representative suit).

Upanayanam being a purely religious affair cannot interfere with affiliation because it was in a wrong family except in the case of Brahmins. See Parvatibayamma v. Ramakrishna Rau (6). If an adoption is invalid it is as if it never took place and anything done thereunder shares the same fate, Bowani Sankara v. Ambabay Ammal (7).

The presumption of law is that consent is proper. Venkatakrishnamma v. Annapurnamma (8). The bona fides or motive of the widow is quite immaterial.

Mr. V. Narayanamoorthy (with him Mr. P. Somasundram), for the Respondent referred to Ramnad case [Collector of Madura v. Moottoo Ramalinga Sathupathy] (3), and Adusumalli Krishnayya v. Adusumalli Lakshmipathi (2), and said that the test is, who are the persons interested in the property and so a daughter's son who is the nearest presumptive heir is a person to be consulted, for the object of adoption is mainly secular and only secondarily spiritual.

[PHILLIPS, J.—Has the daughter's son any interest in substituting an heir to the deceased propositus ?]

Yes, he has.

[PHILLIPS, J.—Apart from his interest in the property ?]

The daughter's son is a sapinda and he would succeed in preference to the agnates.

[PHILLIPS, J.—What interest has he in the adoption in its spiritual aspect ?]

He gives three pindas, one of which goes to the maternal grandfather.

Sunkuru Suryanarayana v. Sunkuru Ramadoss (9). It is interest in the property that is the primary criterion. The spiritual question comes only next.

[OLDFIELD, J.—This is practically overruled by Rangasami Gounden v. Nachiappa Gounden (11).]

Not on the present question, but only upon surrender and estoppel.

The daughter's son is a gnati. The word 'gnati' means ordinarily 'relative.'

Manu, Chapter V, page 148. (West and Buhler, 1005). Yajnavalkya, Chapter I, pl. 85 [translated in Adusumalli Krishnayya Adusumalli v. Lakshmipathi (2)].

The only word used is 'gnati', for after the 'gnatis' in the rank of protectors of the woman comes the King. So, unless the word means and covers all relations, how can the King come in? I submit that it is not used in the restricted sense of agnatic relations.

[PHILLIPS, J.—What is its primary meaning?]

[Mr. A. Krishnaswamy Aiyar.—Apte in his Dictionary gives the meaning as 'agnates' collectively].

Manu, Chapter IX, pl. 3.

The immediate reversioner is the first person to be consulted. Here it is the daughter's son.

[PHILLIPS, J.—Suppose the father-in-law is alive, the texts place him as the first person to be consulted.]

In an undivided family, the father-in-law is the immediate reversioner. The decisions hold the texts as applying only to undivided families. When a new coparcener is sought to be introduced. In such a case, the daughter's son cannot come in at all and the agnates alone come in.

In the case of divided families, the daughter's son is the most concerned and so he must be consulted. The texts do not exclude him.

On the effect of upanayanam.

The law is that a boy whose upanayanam is performed in one gotra is unfit for adoption into a different gotra. Even though the upanayanam is by a stranger or preceptor. It is a purely religious ceremony and has nothing to do with gotra.

[OLDFIELD, J.—How can it be said then that it bars a subsequent adoption?]

So say the texts. Parvatibayamma v. Ramakrishna Rau (6). Bhattacharja's Hindu Law, Volume I, page 454. The upanayanam is, no doubt, good. In no circumstances can it become invalid.

[PHILLIPS, J.—Muthuswamy Aiyar, J., seems to think differently.]

But it was not necessary to decide that point in Parvatibayamma v. Ramakrishna Rau (6). At best, it is only an obiter dictum.

As to the nature of the upanayanam, see Manu, Chapter II, pl. 28, Viraraghava v. Ramalinga (17) and Ganga Sahai v. Lekhraj Singh (18).

As to the consent obtained

Consent must be obtained bona fide. (The evidence was dealt with by Mr. P. Somasundaram).

The Hon'ble the Advocate General in reply.—There is no analogy between an alienation which is a purely secular act and an adoption which is both spiritual and secular, Kannepalli Suryanarayana v. Pucha Venkataramana (19). The essential object of adoption is continuance of the spiritual benefits, Madana Mohana Ananga Bheema Deo v. Purushothama Ananga Bheema Deo (20) (to discharge the obligations of a pious Hindu). The only resemblance is that the assent of sapindas within certain degrees is required for both. But the consent is not a condition precedent to an alienation while express assent is to an adoption. For an alienation the nearest sapindas of the same degree must all consent. It is not so far an adoption.

In the Marriage Chapter of the Mitakshara, no doubt, 'sapindas' is used to include both gotraja and bhinna gotra sapindas. But in the Chapter on Inheritance, the former alone are included.

Mitakshara, Chapter II, section 5, pl. 5 (Stoke's Translation).

Mayne's Hindu Law, page 711. See (Ramnad case) [Collector of Madura v. Moottoo Ramalinga Sathupathy] (3). The right of giving assent is confined to gotraja sapindas and does not extend to bandhus.

[Mr. Narayanamoorthy referred to Ramchandra Martand v. Vinayak Venkatesh (21) where the bandhus are held to be included under sapindas.]

Bandhus are sapindas except in matters of inheritance. A daughter's son is only of the same kind as a sister's son or an aunt's son, Mayne, page 789. See also Mandlik's Mayukha, page 57, West and Buhler (page 1006). 'Gnati' refers to the 'gentile' relatives. Vithoba v. Bapu (22) (a case of adoption); Sabdasthooma Mahanidhi, page 197; Ghose, Volume I, pages 677 and 182 (gnati agnate).

Gnati is a term of art and does not include a bandhu.

The texts are collected in Colebrooke's Volume II, pages 107-109, re the disabilities of the woman, and it is quite plain that the agnates alone are referred to, the words being "tesham jatya" (their gnatis).

Stoke's Hindu Law Books, page 579, gives the text that upanayanam is a bar, (Dattaka-Mimamse, section 4, pl. 30). The view is that upanayanam is a part of affiliation. Assuming it is right, the present case is different, in that upanayanam was performed in the adoptive family though wrongly. See also Viraragava v. Ramalinga (17). If the affiliation is by giving and taking alone, then upanayanam is not material to it. See per Shephard, J., in Parvatibayamma v. Ramakrishna Rau (5). See also Samskara Ratnamala and Dharmasindhu. It is essential that the investiture must be by the father, if alive, or at least by a gotraja. See also Nirnaya Sindhu, Smriti Chandrika. The upanayanam, if vaild, no doubt fixes the gotra. If invalid, it can be performed again, The upanayanam as it was performed in the adoptive family under an invalid adoption is of no binding force. The correct view is given in Parvatibayamma v. Ramakrishna Rau (6). There is no authority for the position that an upanayanam performed in a wrong gotra must be taken to be as if it was performed in the natural father's gotra. In order to be efficacious, it must be performed in the right gotra by the right person.

Dattahomam is not necessary in the case of a daughter's son.

See Mandlik, page 472. Even a valid upanayanam is no bar. Ghose's Hindu Law, page 652. The earlier view must be regarded as considerably affected by the later decisions. Sarcar (Adoption) takes the same view. See at page 365.

VADREVU RANGANAYAKAMMA GARU v. RYALI SOMASUNDARA RAO.

JUDGMENT.

OLDFIELD, J.—The question in this case is, generally, whether 2nd defendant is the adopted son of the late Zamindar of Vegayammapeta. Plaintiff originally denied that any adoption ceremony had been performed but he abandoned that position at the trial. There and here he has pressed only four objections, two to the consents of the kinsmen, which, in the absence of authority from her deceased husband, 1st defendant, the widow required to enable her to make a valid adoption, and two to the capacity of 2nd defendant to be adopted. I deal with them in order.

Of the kinsmen, two, Bhimasankara Row and Suryaprakasa Row, died during the trial. Neither informed 1st defendant of his reasons for not consenting to the adoption. Vide Venkatakrishnamma v. Annapurnamma (8). The former in fact did not refuse his consent explicitly. Part of the lower Court's judgment is occupied with their failure to consent. But nothing has been said regarding it by plaintiff in this Court and I, therefore, turn at once to his attack on the four kinsmen who consented.

The allegation is, first, that the consents of these four were obtained by corrupt means. Defendants before the trial naturally asked for particulars, but the lower Court in its order, Exhibit CXLII, did not insist on them on account of the delay in making the request, which may have been correct although it also gave the remarkable reason that, plaintiff having stated that the corruption was by payments of money, defendants were entitled to nothing more and could not expect plaintiff to disclose his evidence. In fact plaintiff, in Exhibit CXLII (b), had said that he could not give any particulars of the money payments alleged, until he had inspected the defendants' accounts; and his case must, therefore, start under the strongest suspicion that the detailed story he attempted to prove was invented for the trial. It was that Rs. 500 were paid to the four kinsmen concerned; and there was also evidence to show that they were poor and would easily be corrupted, that they were in funds more or less shortly after the alleged payments, and that 1st defendant's accounts contained a fictitious entry, by which the withdrawal of so large a sum from her treasury could have been covered. It is, however, unnecessary to pursue this in detail, because, after we had intimated our opinion as to the evidence regarding one of the four, Akkiraju, Mr. P. Narayanamurthy for plaintiff said that he would not argue against the finding in respect of the others. As regards Akkiraju the evidence of his poverty may be accepted. That relating to his sudden accession of funds showed only that he made a purchase seven months after the alleged payment; and there is no necessary or probable connection between the two. The entry in 1st defendant's accounts was made in June, whereas the bribe was paid, if at all, in the previous January and, as the large payment entered is described as representing previous disbursements made from time to time for a school, there is no reason why the closure of the school very shortly afterwards should justify suspicion of it. But all this is of very little moment, when the direct evidence regarding the payment of the money is considered. To leave out of account the uncorroborated evidence of the 3rd witness for the plaintiff, a person of no particular credit who said that in a conversation on an unspecified date Akkiraju told him of the receipt of the money, there is only the evidence of the 8th witness for the plaintiff regarding its actual payment, described as having taken place in the afternoon at so public a place as a Sub-Registrar's office. He is a servant by profession and deposed, with a certain amount of prevarication, that Akkiraju's share was kept by his master, one Buchiraju, who is now dead, Akkiraju's co son in-law and creditor. There is the evidence of the 14th witness for the plaintiff, a person who had to borrow petty sums from his master Buchiraju for his wife's funeral and the medical treatment of his wife, that seven months later this money was used to settle a debt due by Akkiraju and to obtain a re sale of property previously sold for its discharge. That evidence is improbable in its details, especially in the statement that, when Rs. 1,553.0 0 were tendered by the witness to Buchiraju as provided by the first sale deed, Exhibit A A, the latter refused it. Akkiraju no doubt was not examined. But there is no reason for believing this evidence or holding that the payment of any part of the five thousand rupees to him is in any degree corroborated by it. I agree with the lower Court that the payment is not proved and that there is no ground for a conclusion that the consents of these four kinsmen were obtained by corruption.

The lower Court, however, in a portion of its judgment, which it is not possible to understand, has nevertheless held that these consents were not such as to show that the adoption was made by the widow, not for corrupt or capricious motives, but on a fair consideration of what may be called the family council, although it afterwards found that "1st defendant's motive is not very material in itself and that plaintiff can question the 1st defendant's motive in so far as it can be inferred from the conduct of the sapindas, who gave their consent." If this means, firstly, that the consent of the sapindas is material as guaranteeing the propriety of the widow's action and, secondly, that nothing can be deduced from the consent owing to the circumstances in which it was given, the first conclusion may be endorsed. But, as regards the second, it has been found that consents were given, which are not shown to have been obtained by fraud, coercion or corruption; and that is sufficient, for the Court's right to scrutinize the kinsmen's reasons extends only to cases, in which consents are refused, not to those in which they are granted. The responsibility is imposed by the law on the kinsmen and the Court cannot interfere with their exercise of it. We have here, subject to the argument to be next considered, the consents of the four nearest sapindas and if plaintiff's next objection cannot be sustained the authority thus conveyed will be sufficient.

That objection is that plaintiff, as the daughter's son of the widow's deceased husband, was entitled to be consulted and that the adoption made without consulting him was bad.

There is no explicit decision that a daughter's son is to be considered a kinsman or gnati or should be consulted regarding an adoption. But plaintiff relies on, and the lower Court has found for him on consideration of, certain cases, in which consultation with or consent of the reversionary heirs of the deceased, to whom the adoption is made, is referred to as essential, and that he is such an heir there is no doubt. Contra, however, it is argued that in those cases the position of the daughter's son was not in question and that the reference to the reversionary heirs was made loosely, nothing in the circumstances turning on the distinction between them and the agnates, whose right to be consulted arises only from their responsibility for the spiritual welfare of the deceased. Plaintiff's contention has been supported by reference to principle and to authorities.

It is first material that in the earliest authority, the decision in the Ramnad case [Collector of Madura v. Mootoo Ramalinga Satupathy (3)] by the Judicial Committee in 1868, the doctrine of the widow's power to adopt with the consent of the kinsmen was recognized, not so much with reference to anything explicit in early texts as because it had been received by the particular school of Hindu Law, which governed the district in question. Accordingly, after reference to such reception as evidenced by the works of Mr Colebrooke and of Sir Thomas Strange and the opinions of the Pandits the Committee observed that the assents of the kinsmen seem to be required by reason of the presumed incapacity of woman for independence rather than the necessity for procuring the consent of all those whose possible and reversionary interest would be defeated by the adoption. That this was the basis of the Committee's conclusion is material in connection with the texts on which plaintiff has relied, as indicating the basis on which the doctrine is really founded. For it will be seen that the portions of them on which plaintiff's argument depends, is not that which the Committee had in mind.

The earliest of the texts is Manu, Ch. V, pl. 148, which runs in Sir W. Jones' translation: "In childhood must a woman be dependent on her father; in youth on her husband, her lord being dead, on her sons.....A woman must never seek independence." This is repeated in Ch. IX, pl. 3 and its last sentence may be supposed to be the earliest appearance of the foundation for the Committee's conclusion, so far as texts were in question. Plaintiff, however, relies on the gloss of the well-known commentator—Kulluka Bhatta, printed by Sir W. Jones upon sentence just quoted:—"If she has no sons, on the near kinsmen of her husband ; if he left no kinsmen, on those of her father ; if she has no paternal kinsmen, on the sovereign ;" and it is on this and similar references to the widow's dependence that the theory of the right of the agnates to concern themselves with her adoption rests. Another such reference is to be found in Yagnavalkya Ch. I, verse 85: "Let a female be taken care of by her father, while a maiden ; by her husband when married; and by her sons in old age. If none of these exist, let other gnatis take care of her. A woman is never fit for independence;" and this, as appears from Adusumalli Krishnayya v. Adusumalli Lakshmipathi (2), is interpreted by Viramitrodaya as follows:— "But, when the husband is dead, the assent of those only is necessary, on whom she is dependent." Again, in Narada, Ch. XIII, verse 28, quoted in Ghose's Principles of Hindu Law, 3rd Edition, Vol. 1, page 323, "after the death of her lord, the relations of the husband shall be the guardian of the woman, who has no son. They shall have full authority to control her, to regulate her manner of life and maintain her. When the husband's family is extinct or contains no male or is reduced to poverty, or when no one related to it within the degree of a sapinda is left, the father's relations shall be the guardians of a woman." And there is, lastly, the statement of Mr. Colebrooke in his commentary on the Mitakshara, Ch. I, section XI, Pl. 9, that whilst the author of the Vyavaharamayuka admits the right of the widow to adopt without her husband's authority he requires that she shall have the express sanction of his kinsmen, and there are certain cases to the same effect in Strange's Hindu Law and Hindu Law Cases. Plaintiff argues that the reference to kinsmen in those cases include cognates as well as agnates, not only because this is entailed by the words used but also because it is involved in the underlying principle.

The term "Kinsmen" is, of course, ambiguous ; and reference is necessary to the words used in the Sanskrit texts, "sapinda" and "gnati". But the former may or may not include bhinna ghotra as wall as ghotraja sapindas, the daughter's son being included only in the former; and we have not been shown authority for holding that Kulluka Bhatta in his gloss was using it in the one sense rather than the other. Similarly, as regards the reference to the exhaustion of the husband's sapindas in Narada. The difficulties in the way of adoption of one invariable rendering for the term in the case of one text, the Mitakshara, are illustrated by reference to Ramchandra Martand v. Vinayak (21). It is, however, significant that in the Ramnad case (3) one Muthusami, a Samanodaka, was excluded from the category of sapindas, and that the Judicial Committee may, therefore, be supposed to have used the term in its strictest sense. It is possible to say only that plaintiff has not established the inclusion of bhinna gotra sapindas in it, and I, therefore, turn to the other expression which is in question.

The word gnati in its primary significance is no doubt limited to agnates. Vide Apte's Dictionary. Mr. Ghose, in one passage in his Principles of Hindu Law at Volume 1, page 183,dealing with inheritance, has no doubt translated it sapinda, but in connection with an argument limiting sapindas to agnates, and elsewhere in connection with adoption (page 677) he translates it as agnate directly. In Mr Mandlik's Hindu Law, at page 57, the word is rendered in the passage from Yagnavalkya already quoted as Clansmen and in West and Buhler (A Digest of the Hindu Law of Inheritance, Partition and Adoption, etc.,) at page 1,006 as the Gentile relatives, the agnatic significance being clear. In Adusumalli Krishnayya v. Adusumalli Lakshmipathi (2) the decision in Chinnakimidi case [Sri Virada Pratapa Raghunada Deo v. Sri Brozo Kishoro Patta Deo (23)] was read as showing that the text of Yagnavalkya should be understood as limiting the expression "gnatis" to those who are in the line of heirs to the last holder and to this decision I shall return. But in Veerabasavaraju Pantulu v. Balasurya Prasada Rao (1), the Judicial Committee at page 1004* itself explaind the Ramnad case (3) as deciding that the widow might adopt with the consent of the male agnates. All this is against and nothing has been adduced in favour of this part of plaintiff's argument. It is in fact on the theory as deduced from the underlying principle that he relies.

Before examining that theory I refer to one form, in which it has been supported, that the daughter's son's consent is required to validate the widow's adoption, because it is required, in the case of her alienations, his heirship being the reason in both cases; and there is no doubt that this argument is referred to, although it does not appear to have been pursued in Sunkuru Suryanarayana v. Sunkuru Ramadas (9) and Vinayak v. Govind (15) where the extract given above from Narada is quoted, and by the Judicial Committee in Veerabasavaraju Pantulu v. Balasurya Prasada Rao (1) and it may by admitted that, so far as the character of the consent is considered in them as presumptive evidence, to use the words of Seshagiri Aiyar, J., in the first of these authorities, of the goodness of the widow's act, the analogy may be instructive. It does not, however, follow and it is not the case that a general argument from the persons who must give and the motives recognised for requiring consents in the one class of cases to the persons and motives appropriate in the other is admissible. For to contrast them, consultation with the kinsmen, if not, their consent, is a condition precedent to a valid adoption, one consenting person may be regarded as representing others; and the consent of all who have to be consulted is not necessary. But in the case of an alienation the law, as stated recently in Rangasami Gounden v. Nachiappa Gounden (11), is that an alienation can be supported on its merits with reference to necessity and independently of consent; that consent, not merely consultation, is essential, and that the consent of every person who may fairly be expected to be interested to dispute the transaction, is required. And in view of these differences it would be unsafe to assume, what has never statedly been decided, that the principle underlying the validation of the widow's act by consent of or consultation with other presons is the same in the two cases. The view of the necessity for the consents, for which plaintiff contends, is that they are required as a guarantee for the widow's motives in adopting, which should be, not only the promotion of the spiritual interests of her deceased husband, with which admittedly the daughter's son is not concerned, but also the protection of his estate for his heirs, and that the daughter's son being among those heirs is entitled to a voice in deliberations which affect his interests. It is no doubt not a valid objection to this theory that no similar claim is made for the daughter, who is a nearer heir, since, as a woman, she must be regarded as equally incompetent with the widow and as incapable of advising her. But it is a practical consideration that, ordinarily, the daughter's son will be a minor and his advice will be useless, when the adoption is under discussion. Another difficulty arises in connection with the position of the daughter's son, in the order of heirs before the parents and other agnates, since it is impossible to reconcile the right of the first mentioned to express a decisive opinion with the observations in the Ramnad case (3) which have also been quoted in later decisions on the exceptional value to be attached to "the consent of the father-in-law to whom the law points as the natural guardian and venerable protector of the widow," as in itself a sufficient justification for her action. In that case the purpose for which the assent of the kinsmen is insisted on is stated solely and unambiguously and in terms never subsequently repudiated as being to show that the act was done by the widow in the proper and bona fide performance of a religious duty and neither capriciously nor from a corrupt motive; "and the religious obligation to adopt" in order to complete or fulfil defective religious rites is mentioned. Again, in the Chinnakimidi case (23) there was a reference to the principle that the validity of an adoption is to be determined rather by spiritual than temporal considerations, that the substitution of a son of the deceased for spiritual reasons is the essence of the thing and the consequent devolution of property an accessory of it. This statement is no doubt made by way of an argumentum ad hominem in respect of a previous judgment of Holloway, J., and it is followed by the observation that, while it may be the duty of a Court of justice administering Hindu Law to consider the religious duty of adopting a son as the essential foundation of the law of adoption and the effect on the devolution of the property as a mere legal consequence, it is impossible not to see that there are grave social objections to making the succession to property and, it may be, in the case of collateral succession the right of persons actually in possession dependent on the caprice of a woman. But the only inference drawn was that the Court should keep the power strictly within the limits which the law has assigned to it apparently in the particular case under disposal by refusing to extend it, as Holloway, J., proposed, to authorise an adoption made with the consent of any one sapinda. The Ramnad case (3) was further explained in the Guntur case [Vellanki Venkata Krishna Rao v. Venkata Rama Lakshmi (24) and in connection with the requirement in the former that "the adoption should be made by the widow in the proper and bona fide performance of a religious duty and not capriciously or from a corrupt motive", it was observed that it "would be dangerous to introduce questions as to the particular motives operating on the mind of the widow" and that only proof of "such assent on the part of the sapinda was required as should be sufficient to support the inference that the adoption was made, not from a capricious or corrupt motive, but upon a fair consideration by what may be called a family council of the expediency of substituting a son by adoption to the deceased husband." These cases are the foundation of the doctrine of the consent of kinsmen as the widow's authority. Throughout them the religious motive insisted on in Ramnad case (3) is not abandoned; and if in the Chinnakimidi case (23) it is recognised that temporal considerations cannot be lost sight of, that can be explained consistently with the language used on the ground that reference to them will be a safeguard against the caprice or corrupt intention of the widow, as in many cases involving the disintegration of the estate. Adusumali Krishnayya v. Adusumi Ali Lakshmpathi (2) supplies an actual instance of the entertainment by her of such an intention, in case one is required.

It is in fact only after a considerable interval and in the case last cited that plaintiff can find anything directly supporting his contention. There Seshagiri Aiyar, J., after agreeing that the motive which should guide a widow, should be to minister to the spiritual wants of her husband, said that the assent of the sapindas should not necessarily be regarded as a religious act, because the text of Yagnavalkya already referred to implied that her protection by them in temporal affairs alone was contemplated. So far this is in plaintiff's favour. But it is not clear in what shape the argument from the existence of the religious motive was relied on or how its rejection influenced the decision, that the assent of a mere majority of sapindas, without reference to their character as mere reversioners was insufficient. For the learned Judge was dealing with a case, in which the consent of only one out of the six nearest sapindas had been obtained and the question was whether the other five should have been ignored. And he, therefore, had not to consider whether consultation with a more remote reversioner such as the present plaintiff, was obligatory or whether heirship, apart from spiritual responsibility, was material. He, in any case, proceeded to hold with reference to the interpretation placed on the text of Yagnavalkya by the Viramitrodaya that the guardianship of the widow did not vest in the whole body of gnatis, the natural interpretation being that she was dependent on those nearest to her husband; and he regarded the judgment in the Guntur case (24) as negativing the plea that the widow in obtaining the consents did not act on spiritual considerations. Nothing then was actually decided against the view that the spiritual should be the dominant consideration and much was said in favour of its being so; and there is no departure from that view in the observation of the same learned Judge in Sunkuru Surayanarayana v. Sunkuru Ramadoss (9) that the powers of consent had been given to the sapindas, as they were interested in the property and were expected to see that the spiritual welfare of the deceased was not jeopardized. Plaintiff relied lastly on the decision in Veerabasavaraju Pantulu v. Balasurya Prasada Rao (1). In this Court the question of spiritual motive was not dealt with, because the Bench, of which I was a member, reached a conclusion against the widow's authority on other grounds. But in appeal the Judicial Committee, confirming this Court's decision, referred to it at some length and undoubtedly specified the possession of an interest in the protection of the estate as a qualification for inclusion in what was described in the Guntur case (24) as the family council. They, moreover, quoted the opinion expressed in Golapchandra Sirkar Sastri's Hindu Law of Adoption that adoption is more a temporal than a spiritual institution and that, the requisites for a valid adoption being all temporal, the spiritual considerations should not be allowed to influence the judgment regarding the secular essential. If it were clear that this opinion had been adopted by their Lordships, it would go far towards supporting plaintiff's contention, that a daughter's son, on whom no spiritual responsibility rests and whose temporal interest in the reversion is comparatively close, is entitled to be consulted. But in fact the judgment does not either before or after this quotation express approval, either comprehensive or qualified, of the views contained in it, and there is no attempt to reconcile or contrast them with the references to religious duty contained in extracts from the Ramnad case (3) occurring elsewhere in the judgment, except a statement with reference to it and the Guntur case (24) that rights of property cannot be left out of consideration, when the question what sapinda's consent is primarily requisite is under consideration. It may be added that the learned author in the sentence prior to that cited by their Lordships (Op. cit. page 259), apparently describing the opinion of this Court in language taken from the judgment in the Chinnakimidi case (23), admitted that it does not share his views; and I would observe with all respect that this reasoning, as it appears in earlier passages of his work (pages 43, 45, 142, 145), seems to be rather influenced by his own experience of the actual sentiments or conduct of particular sections of the public than by the origin and development of the doctrine of adoption by consent of kinsmen in the authorities usually relied on.

On these authorities the conclusion must, in my opinion, be that the spiritual motive is at least dominant and consultation with those, who can appreciate it is essential. That the protection of the deceased's estate should be excluded from consideration as a motive is, as the authorities recognize, not to be expected or desired; and the extent to which it should be or in particular cases has been considered with reference rather to an estimate of the purity of the widow's motives than to the reversioner's prospects, is incapable of precise definition. But the conclusion must be that it is of secondary importance; and that corroborates the construction placed on the actual wording of the texts by which the daughter's son, to whom, it is not disputed, only the temporal motive can be supposed to appeal, is not one of the gnatis, whom it is necessary for the widow to consult.

This conclusion entails that the consents obtained by the widow were a sufficient authority for her action and I therefore, turn to the first of plaintiff's objections to the capacity of 2nd defendant for adoption. The facts on which it is based are that 1st defendant originally went through the ceremony of adopting him in 1900. A suit similar to that now before us was brought and the adoption was declared invalid by the lower Court on one ground, that he was incapable of adoption, being her daughter's son. She, however performed the ceremony of his upanayanam whilst an appeal to this Court was pending. After its decision against her on a different ground and the consequent failure of the adoption already made, she again on 24th January 1907 adopted 2nd defendant, that being the adoption with which we are concerned. The plaint averment regarding it was that, the ceremony of adoption having been performed with regard to 2nd defendant, although that adoption was found invalid, he was ineligible for any further adoption. On this the issue framed, it would seem without objection, was "whether the adoption of a daughter's son" (meaning apparently a person of a different gotra) "after his upanayanam is invalid?" and although there is some divergence from the pleadings that, it is agreed, is what we have to decide. It has been necessary to state the point thus fully, because it has been dealt with by the lower Court, not, as it apparently was presented to it and is presented here with reference to the general incapacity of a person, whose upanayanam has been performed, for adoption, but with reference to the effect of the upanayanam as introducing him into gotra of his adoptive family and the impossibility of his acqiring any further rights in it, in case a subsequent adoption should be made. To such an argument the answer would be simple, that either the upanayanam did introduce him into the new gotra and fix his position there, a new adoption being superfluous, or that it did not and there would be no obstacle to an adoption, which would do so,

The argument, as it is put forward here, involves, it is plain, firstly, that the upanoyanam, although celebrated by 1st defendant on the incorrect assumption that 2nd defendant had entered her family and become her son, was a valid performance of the ceremony, and secondly, that no person, who has undergone upanayanam, can be adopted into another gotra, inasmuch as his undergoing the ceremony in the gotra "in which his spiritual duties are to be performed is an indispensible qualification for their performance." On both points we have been referred to the opinion expressed in Bhattachary's Hindu Law, 3rd Edition, Volume I, page 456, that "even if the upanayanam and marriage are performed in the family of the adoptor, the informally adopted boy will not loose his rights in the family of his natural father", and that "the ceremony of upanayanam performed by the adoptive father would be valid, as if performed by a volunteer priest." On the 2nd point above specified this cannot be accepted since the decision in Viraraghava v. Ramalinga (17) proceeds on the assumption which apparently was not and has not since been contested, that a boy who has received upanayanam outside the gotra, cannot enter it by adoption. On the first point, which alone remains, the opinion of the learned author, in support of which he adduces no authority, is contrary to the decision of Colville, C J., quoted by him in Sreemutty Rajcoomaree Dossee v. Nobo Coomar Mullick (25) and also to the view taken in Sanskrit texts of good repute, of which we have been supplied with private translations, accepted by both sides. Thus, in the Dharma Sindhu, Nirnaya Sagara Press Edition, (a work referred to as authoritative in Mandlik's Hindu Law. Introduction LXA), at page 161, reference is made to one kind of upanayanam as that which is re-done on account of the first ceremony being inefficacious by reason of a defect in any of its parts such as the time; and again at page 150 and in the Nirnaya Sindhu (a work cited in Trevelyan's Hindu Law, page 17) at p. 244 there is the dictum: "The father alone should perform the upanayanam of his son or in his absence the grandfather and in his absence the elder brother." In the Vaithianatha Dikshitiyam, Varnasrama Kanda Kumbakonam Grandha Edition, a work referred to in Viraraghava v. Ramalinga (17) it is said at page 179*: "The father is the primary or principal person entitled to perform upanayanam." and at page 172 (for the performance of upanayanam) only in the absence of any sagotraja (person of the same gotra) is a person of a different gotra to be sought for." Lastly, and this is important with reference to the last portion of Mr. Bhattachary's opinion, the Smriti Chandrika, Mysore Government Edition, lays down at page 88 that, "he is called Guru, who does all the Samskaras (ceremonies) beginning with the Nisheka (nuptials) and ending with upanayanam and gives him (the boy) instruction in the Vedas. Here Guruhood belongs to the father alone and to nobody else. Thus, it is established that the father alone is a competent person to perform upanayanam and other ceremonies.....But that which is said that an Acharya (voluntary priest) performs the upanayanam is only applicable, when there is no father or when he is disqualified. For there is no reason for leaving out a competent father."

Plaintiff has not met these extracts by citation of others and their result, which I find no difficulty in accepting, seems to me to be that an upanayanam will not be valid unless performed by the father or in his absence another kinsman in the family to which the boy concerned actually belongs, that his upanayanam performed in a family which he had not in fact entered, would be invalid; and that such an upanayanam can and should be performed again. This entails that the irregular performance of an upanayanam in a family into which the boy is wrongly believed to have entered, is a nullity and is no bar to his subsequent adoption.

The result is that the lower Court's decision cannot stand and that we must, in order to the disposal of the case, call on it to return findings on the issues not yet dealt with, Nos: 9, 10, 12, 13, 16. The findings will be returned on the evidence on record within two months after the re opening of the lower Court. Seven days will be allowed for filing objections.

PHILLIPS, J.—I agree, and have nothing to add.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment, the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Rajahmundry submitted the following

FINDINGS.—The suit has been remitted by their Lordships of the High Court for findings on the following issues:—

(9) Whether the adoption of a daughter's son is illegal and invalid according to Hindu Law?

(10) Whether the custom of adopting a daughter's son or a sister's son obtains among Brahmins throughout the Madras Presidency or whether, as contended by plaintiff, it obtains only in the southern districts of the Presidency and does not obtain in the Andhra or Telugu portion of this Presidency?

(11) Whether the circumstances in paragraph 6 of the plaint are true, and, if so, whether they render the 2nd defendant's adoption invalid?

(12) Whether the succession to the estate of Vegayammapeta is governed by the law of lineal primogeniture?

(16) Whether the adoption is contrary to the provisions of the Impartible Estates Act?

2. 9th issue.—In the case in Bhagwan Singh v. Bhagwan Singh (26) their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the adoption of a mother's sister's son by a Hindu of any of the three regenerate classes (Brahmins, Kshatriyas and Vaisyas), equally with the adoption of a daughter's son or a sister's son, is contrary to Hindu Law, that the ancient texts condemning such adoptions are not merely monitory but have been judicially decided by all the Courts to be positive prohibitions, and that their effect is to make such adoptions wholly void. Their Lordships also held that the law on the subject has been settled in such a way and for such a length of time as to make it incompetent to a Court of justice to treat the question now as an open one. The decision of their Lordships is quite imperative and conclusive on the point, and it must accordingly be held on the 9th issue that the adoption of a daughter's son among the three regenerate classes is illegal and invalid according to Hindu Law. It is of course admitted for both the parties that such adoptions are not prohibited by law among the sudras.

3. 10th issue:—This issue relates to the question of the custom among Brahmins of adopting a daughter's son or a sister's son set up by the defendants. The defendants' contention is that the custom prevails generally throughout the Madras Presidency as in several other parts of India. For the plaintiff it is, on the other hand, asserted that, though the custom obtains among Brahmins in the southern districts of this Presidency, it is not in vogue in the Andhra or Telugu portion of the Presidency. The parties to the adoption in the present case are Niyogi Brahmins of the Godavari District in the Andhra country.

4. In reference to the question of the custom involved in the issue, the learned Vakil for the defence raises a preliminary point of law as affecting the burden of proof. His contention on the point is that, in the Full Bench case reported in Vayidinada v. Appu (27) the custom of adopting a sister's son or a daughter's son among Brahmins in southern India was recognised by the High Court as being a valid one, and that that decision must, in the usual course, govern the Brahmins in the whole of the Madras Presidency, including also those in the Andhra districts. The arguments in support of the contention are categorically set forth in paragraphs 6 to 11 of the 2nd defendant's affidavit, Exhibit 146-L, and it is hardly necessary to reiterate them here. On the other hand, it is pointed out for the plaintiff that, though the issue and the finding in the 9 Madras case purport to have reference to the prevalence of the custom in Southern India, the case arose among the Brahmins of the Tanjore District, that the instances of custom adduced in the case were limited to the Tamil Districts of Tanjore, Trichinopoly Madura and Tinnevelly and that, though their Lordships in the course of the judgment incidentally adverted to an instance among the Telugu Brahmins of Madras and to Strange's Hindu Law in reference to a case from the Cuddapah District, there are indications in the judgment itself that the actual finding related in particular to the southern Districts in the Presidency. In support of this contention, reference is made in particular to the observations of their Lordships at page 53 of the report, where they expressed themselves as follows :—

"We are satisfied that the practice of making such adoptions have prevailed among Brahmins in what are now the southern districts of this Presidency from time immemorial."

The learned Pleader for the plaintiff has also referred to Bhattacharya's Hindu Law, 3rd Edition, page 75, Narasammal v. Balaramacharlu (28), Ganga Sahai v. Lekhraj Singh (18) and Ganapati Aiyer's Hindu Law, pages 55 and 56, where the Andhra country or Telingana is recognised as a distinct unit of territory apart from the Dravida proper or Tamil country, though both of them, for purposes of general law, come under the main Dravida classification, in which are comprised Andhra, Carnataka, Ghurjhra, Dravida (Tamil) and Maharashtra as sub-classifications. The Pleader also refers to the ruling in Ohain Sukh Ram v. Parbati (29) where the ruling in Vayidinada v. Appu (27) has been understood as recognising the custom only among Brahmins in the southern districts of this Presidency, i. e., Tanjore, Trichinopoly and Tinnevelly. Southern India, as generally understood, includes not only the Madras Presidency, but also Hyderabad, Mysore and part of the Bombay Presidency, south of the line joining Cuttack with the Gulf of Cambay; and it could not possibly be that their Lordships in the 9 Madras case intended to find the existence of the custom in all said countries. In the course of the report, their Lordships observe as follows at page 50 in reference to a case from the Cuddapah District cited in Strange's Hindu Law :—

"The case was, it is true, one from the more northern part of the Presidency. But the learned Judge in his remarks speaks of the custom as prevalent generally."

This reference to Cuddapah as the more northern part of the Presidency and the doubt expressed by their Lordships in a way as to the importance of the case on that ground, also seems to afford some indication that the expression "Southern India" may have been used by their Lordships in the ruling in its restricted sense as applying to the southern part of this Presidency, i. e., the portion south of Madras (city). It cannot, of course, be seriously disputed that, for purposes of general law, there are only two main recognised schools, the Benares or Mitakshara School and the Bengal or Daya Bhaga School ; but it cannot, I think, be on that ground contended that the customary law obtaining in the different territories comprised in a particular school must always be uniform and identical. It is also true that in the 9 Madras case their Lordships did not confine the scope of their enquiry to the Tamil Districts alone, but proceeded on broader lines ; but it does not appear that their Lordships intended to find the existence of the specific custom among Brahmins of the Andhra District in particular, though Mayne, and some other authors on Hindu Law, seem to have understood the ruling as applicable to Southern India in general.

5. I, therefore, hold that the burden of proof as to the custom has been correctly set forth in the issue. Further, both the parties having actually adduced all available evidence on the question raised, the discussion under notice must be said to be of purely academic importance at this stage.

6. Then, in reference to the law as to the essentials of a valid custom and the sort of evidence that is necessary in proof thereof, their Lordships of the Privy Council ruled in the case Ramnad case [Collector of Madura v. Mootoo Ramalinga Sathpathy (3)] that under the Hindu system of law clear proof of usage will outweigh the written text of the law. In the cases in Sivananaja Perumal v. Muttu Ramalinga

Sethurayar (30) it was laid down as follows:—

"What the law requires before an alleged custom can receive the recognition of the Court, and so acquire legal force, is satisfactory proof of usage so long and invariably acted on in practice as to show that it has, by common consent, been submitted to as the established governing rule of the particular family, class, or district of country; and the course of practice upon which the custom rests must not be left in doubt, but be proved with certainty."

In the case in Gopalayyan v. Raghupatiayyan (31), which related to the adoption of a sister's son, it was ruled as follows:—

"The evidence should be such as to prove the uniformity and continuity of the usage and the conviction of those following it that they were acting in accordance with law and this conviction must be inferred from the evidence."

"Evidence of acts of the kind, acquiescence in those acts, their publicity, decisions of Courts, or even of panchayats upholding such acts, the statements of experienced and competent persons of their belief that such acts were legal and valid will all be admissible, but it is obvious that,...evidence of this...kind, will be of little weight if unsupported by actual examples of the usage asserted."

Again, in Eranjoli Illath Vishnu Nambudri v. Eranjoli Illath Krishnan Nambudri (32), which related to the adoption of a sister's son among the Nambudri Brahmins of the west coast, it is stated thus:—

"At the same time such a usage as is asserted must be proved by clear and unambiguous evidence; and it must be shown that it is exercised in pursuance of a custom understood to have the force of law and not to be a merely repeated violation of law."

In the Full Bench case in Vayidinada v. Appu (27) their Lordships adhere to the rule in Sivananaja Perumal v. Muttu Ramalinga Sethurayar (30) and Eranjoli Illath Vishnu Nambudri v. Eranjoli Illath Krishnan Nambudri (32), and refer to the ruling of the Privy Council in Ramalakshmi Ammal v. Perumal Sethurayar (33), where it was decided that it is the essence of special usages modifying the law that they should be ancient and invariable, and it is further essential that they should be established by clear and unambiguous evidence. [See pages 45 and 46 of the report]. In reference to the case in Gopalayyan v. Raghupatiayyan (31), in the course of which it was said that the Court was not prepared to recognise the existence of any customary law in the case of Brahmins of which no trace appears in any written authority of the place to which they belong, their Lordships of the Full Bench in the 9 Madras case observe as follows, at page 45:—

"All that the Court intended by the observations, from which this inference is drawn, was that strong proof of usage must be produced to establish a customary law at variance with the law declared in written treatises."

In Mirabivi v. Velloyinna (34), their Lordships of the Madras High Court, in distinguishing a practice from a custom, remark that, though a practice might be more or less common, it does not become a custom unless it was consciously accepted as having the force of law.

7. In reference to the inter-relation between a custom and a rule of law, Mayne in his learned work on Hindu Law, 8th Edition, observes thus, at pages 56 and 57:—

"The next question is as to the validity of customs differing from the general Hindu Law, when practised by persons who admit that they are subject to that law. According to the view of customary law taken by Mr. Austin, a custom can never be considered binding until it has become a law by some Act, legislative or judicial, of the sovereign power. Language pointing to the same view is to be found in one judgment of the Madras High Court. But such a view cannot now be sustained. It is open to the obvious objection that, in the absence of legislation, no custom could ever be judicially recognized for the first time. A decision in its favour would assume that it was already binding. The sounder view appears to be that law and usage act, and re act, upon each other. A belief in the propriety, or the imperative nature of a particular course of conduct, produces a uniformity of behaviour in following it and a uniformity of behaviour in following a particular course of conduct produces a belief that it is imperative or proper, to do so. When, from either cause, or from both causes, a uniform and persistent usage has moulded the life, and regulated the dealings, of a particular class of the community, it becomes a custom, which is a part of their personal law. Such a custom deserves to be recognised and enforced by the Courts, unless it is injurious to the public interests or is in conflict with any express law of the ruling power."

8. To summarise the foregoing, a custom, before it can be recognised by the Court as valid, must have these essentials:—

(a) It must be ancient and immemorial.

(b) It must be uniform and continuous.

(c) It must be shown to have, by common consent, been submitted to as the established governing rule of the particular family or community: or that the persons following it were convinced that they were acting in accordance with law; or that the custom was understood to have the force of law, but not (understood) to be merely repeated violation of the law. Or, in the words of Mayne, who sums up the whole matter, there must be a belief in the propriety or imperative nature of the particular course of conduct culminating in a custom.

(d) The custom must be made out by clear and unambiguous evidence.

(e) It should not be immoral or opposed to public policy.

9. While at this stage, it will be convenient to advert briefly to the authorities as to the prevalence of the alleged custom in other parts of this Presidency and elsewhere.

10. In the case in Vayidinada v. Appu (27), already cited, the custom of adopting a daughter's or a sister's son among Brahmins has been upheld at least in reference to the Southern or Tamil Districts of the Presidency. And, following that case, the adoption of a brother's [daughter's son by custom was upheld in Appayya Bhattar v. Vengu Bhattar (35). In the Full Bench case in Eranjoli Illath Vishnu Nambudri v. Eranjoli Illath Krishnan Nambudri (32), the validity of a custom of adopting a sister's son among the Nambudri Brahmins of Malabar was recognised. A similar custom has been judicially recognised among the Bobra Brahmins of the northen districts of the North-Western Provinces in Chain Sukh Ram v. Parbati (29). In Pondicherry a man may adopt his daughter's or sister's son or any one of his wife's relations, though he may not adopt his own brother (Mayne's Hindu Law, 175). Strange in his Manual of Hindu Law, at page 22, rule 88, states that the custom of making such adoption (of a daughter's or sister's son) even without emergency prevails in the Presidency of Madras, the opinion being based on the proceedings of the Sudder Court, dated 4th and 25th June 1836, though in an earlier edition of his book he seems to have thought the custom did not prevail in the northern country (See Exhibit KK 26). Their Lordships of the Madras High Court in Vayidinada v. Appu (27) also refer to another case in Strange's Hindu Law, Appendix II, page 100, in which, in the year 1806, it was said that "in practice the adoption of a sister's son by persons of all castes is not uncommon." It is in reference to that case that their Lordships said it was from Cuddapah. In the course of the ruling, their Lordships also refer to the unreported case of Inguva Brahmani v. Venkatalakshmi Ammal between Telugu Brahmins (as the name of the parties indicate) of Madras (Town) on the Original Side of the High Court, in which the adoption by a Brahmin of a sister's son was upheld. In that case, which was of 1859, evidence had also been given of the practice amongst Brahmins of making adoptions of daughter's and sister's sons and Pandits also were examined as witnesses (pages 50 and 51 of the report). At pages 52 and 53 of the report their Lordships advert to the practice of the adoption of daughter's sons in its relation to the affiliation of Putrika Putra (appointed daughter's son), recognised [by Hindu Law, in these terms:—

(35) 15 M. L. J. 211.

"The practice of making an appointed daughter whose son, if she had one, became the son of the father making the appointed daughter, if he had no male issue, was a mode of affiliation prevalent from the earliest time, even before the widow and daughter had a place assigned to them by the Mitakshara in the line of heirs.....Whatever doubt we may have as to how far the adoption of a daughter's son is inconsistent with the theory as to the invalidity of the adoption of a son within the prohibited degrees of connection, the usage may still be fairly referred to those texts which recognise the practice of creating a daughter's son heir by appointment, the only difference being one of form and not of principle, the consent being given in the one case at the time of marriage, and in the other at the time of adoption."

In support of that conclusion, their Lordships also quote with approval a passage from West and Buhler's Digest of Hindu Law, Volume II, pages 884 to 883. See also Minakshi v. Ramanada (36) where the adoption of a daughter's son is justified on the old doctrine of Putrika Putro. In the case in Narasammal v. Balaramacharlu (28), which was from the Ganjam District, the adoption of a sister's son was held to be invalid on the opinion of a Pandit of the Northern Division. In that case, no custom was pleaded by the parties and it was in that case that the High Court ruled that no custom, how long so ever continued, which has never been judicially recognised, can be permitted to prevail against distinct authority (Hindu Law Texts), an opinion which has since been held to be erroneous.

11. It will thus be seen that the custom as to the adoption of a daughter's son is traceable in its origin to the old Hindu Law itself, which recognised the affiliation of an appointed daughter's son though now obsolete. It cannot, therefore, be seriously doubted that the custom, where it is found to exist, is referable to a legitimate source, and the authorities cited above establish the existence of the custom not only in the Southern Districts in this Presidency but also in some of the Andhra tracts like Cuddapah and Madras Town, and generally in other parts of India also.

12. Then, coming to the question of the existence of the alleged custom in the Andhra or Telugu portion of this Presidency in particular, the evidence in the case being of a voluminous character, both the parties have for facility of reference, been permitted to put in printed statements prepared on the basis of the oral and documentary evidence bearing on the point. The defendants' statement, which sets forth 65 instances of adoption relied on for them is marked as "Statement A" and the plaintiff's statement, which analyses the oral and documentary evidence on his side as "Statement B." The instances relied on by the defendants will first be taken up seriatim, and then reference will be made to the rebutting evidence adduced by the plaintiff.

[The Court here discussed and considered the effect of 65 specific instances of adoption of daughter's and sister's sons.]

55. With these remarks, I hold that the custom of adopting a daughter's son or sister's son prevails generally among the Uriya Brahmins of the Ganjam District, and that instances Nos. 44 to 65 adduced by the plaintiff cannot be otherwise than true.

56. In addition to the aforesaid 65 instances of specific cases of adoption, reliance is placed for 2nd defendant also on two Wills Exhibits 61 and 126 of 1st February 1898 and 24th August 1895, under which one K. Papayya and G. Narasimharao, respectively, gave authority to their wives to adopt a daughter's son. It does not appear from the evidence if the power was exercised by either of the women; but the documents are relied on as indicating the consciousness and conviction of the testators as to the validity of such adoptions.

57. For a similar purpose, reliance is placed for the defence also on the revised decree of the Provincial Court of Appeal of the Northern Division in Original Suit No. 47 of 1834 filed as Exhibit 131, Somappa, the plaintiff in that case, was the father-in-law of the 1st defendant herein (see the pedigree Exhibit I). That suit having been brought by him for possession of the plaint estate, his paternal uncles Wumapati, the first defendant therein, raised the plea that the plaintiff had been given away in adoption to his maternal grandmother while an infant. (See page 640 of the printed record). The adoption set up for Wumapati was no doubt not true ; but there remains the fact that such a plea was set up so long ago as 1834 in all seriousness as a tenable one, provided it could be established as a fact. It is contended for the defence, and I think not without some reason, that the fact of such a plea being set up indicates the social consciousness of the community at the time as to such adoptions.

58. Lastly, a judgment of the local Additional Sub-Court in Original Suit No. 40 of 1902 (Exhibit 123) is relied on for the defence, in which the adoption of a daughter's son among the Vaisyas of Rajahmundry was recognised on the authority of Vayidinada v. Appu (27) in the absence of any evidence adduced by either party.

59. Besides speaking to the specific instances of adoption of a daughter's son or brother's daughter's son or a sister's son, many of the defence witnesses also refer in their depositions to other instances within their knowledge and also to the existence of a custom in regard to such adoptions in general. Their evidence, as a whole, indicates to their belief in the validity of such adoptions on the basis of custom.

60. Then, coming to the rebutting evidence adduced on the plaintiff's behalf, his statement B analyses the evidence under four classes. Class I consists of the evidence of the plaintiff's witnesses that speak to cases where a person, having daughter's sons eligible for adoption, adopted a brother's son or a gnati or other sapinda, giving some property to the daughter's sons. The witnesses Nos. 2, 5, 15, 18, 20, 21, 24, 37, 38 and 41, speak to cases of adoption of brothers' sons, Nos. 1, 9, 16, 19, 22, 29, 31, 32, 33, 34 and 36 of adoptions of sagotras, and the others of adoption of gnatis. Class II consists of cases where a person, having daughter's sons whom he could have adopted, distributed the property among daughter's sons without adopting any one. Class III consists of cases in which a person appointed one of the daughter's sons to perform his obsequies, etc., giving him a large portion of his property and giving smaller portions to the other daughter's sons. Some of the cases in the said three classes are also supported by documents in reference to the distribution of property. Under class IV is set forth the evidence of plaintiffs' witnesses, some of whom are also Pandits, who state that they are not aware of the custom and that the adoption of a daughter's son or sister's son is prohibited by the Sastras. Some of them also say that they intended to adopt daughter's sons, but that they adopted others among their sagotras or gnatis, etc., on being told that such adoptions were prohibited by the Sastras, and also on the ground that they were not satisfied with the existence of such a custom as would warrant an adoption of the kind (plaintiff witness No. 4).

61. For the plaintiff, reliance is also placed on a case that came up before the District Munsif's Court, Narasapur, in Original Suit No. 102 of 1868, in which the adoption of a sister's son was held to be invalid. In that case, the adoption itself was held to be true, though made without the authority of the husband. The decision in that case proceeded on the general law as laid down in Narasammal v. Balaramacharlu (28) and Jivani Bhai v. Javu Bhai (37). No custom was pleaded in that case, nor was there any inquiry about the same.

62. In reference to the evidence of plaintiff's witness under classes I to III of his Statement B, it may be observed that the custom relied on for the defence is not an imperative or obligatory custom binding on the community in general as in the case of inheritance or succession, but only an optional one limited in its operation. It is not the defendants' case that every childless man having a daughter's son when making an adoption is bound by the custom to adopt him alone in preference to another. What is claimed for them is only that the custom or usage permits the adoption of a daughter's son also at the choice and selection of the adopter.

63. As to the choice of a boy for adoption according to Sastras and how it has been varied gradually Mr. Mayne in his Hindu Law, observes as follows at page 171:—

"Hence, in the first place the nearest male sapinda should be selected, if suitable in other respects, and, if possible, a brother's son as he was already, in contemplation of law, a son to his uncle. If no such near sapinda be available, then one who is more remote; or in default of such, then one who was of a family which followed the same spiritual guide, or, in the case of Sudras, any member of the caste. Probably, this rule was strengthened by the feeling that it was unjust to the members of the family to introduce a stranger if a near relative was available. Originally, it seems to have been a precept. Subsequently, it sunk to a mere recommendation. It is now settled that the adoption of a stranger is valid even though relatives otherwise suitable are in existence."

64. The above being the law as to the selection of a boy in adoption, a childless Hindu may choose to follow the strict letter of the law by adopting a sapinda or sagotra, in the order of preference, or a stranger, or may adopt a daughter's son according to accepted custom, if one should be in vogue, Adoption itself being optional, he may not for reasons of his own, adopt anybody at all, but make an arrangement for distribution of his property at his pleasure. That being so, the instances included in classes I to III of plaintiff's statement do not seem to be of any real importance as disproving the custom relied on for the defence.

65. As to the evidence of plaintiff's witnesses under class IV, the persons concerned are apparently followers of the orthodox view, who prefer to act in accordance with the strict letter of the Sastras. The custom relied on in this case being, as already stated, of a restrictive operation it may be that the plaintiff witnesses and other persons in the community for the matter of that, may not be directly aware of the existence of the custom, having apparently had no occasion to have knowledge thereof. In the case of a custom, what the law requires seems to be not that each and every member of the community should have direct knowledge thereof which cannot be expected in the ordinary course of human conduct especially in regard to a permissive custom, but only that the persons following it should act, under the conviction that they were acting in accordance with a custom understood to have the force of law and (understood) not to be merely a repeated violation of law, and that the community coming into contact with such acts should acquiesce therein. According to the case in Gopalayyan v. Raghupatiayyan (31), already cited, such a conviction or consciousness has to be inferred from the acts of the kind, acquiescence in those acts, their publicity and so on. The acquiescence in such acts would, in general, be, on the part of the members of the community who get cognizance thereof by direct knowledge or information and also on the part of the Government, etc., See Ohain Sukh Ram v. Parbati (29). The case in Jugmohandas Mangaldas v. Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy (38), related to an obligatory custom of general application, and is thus clearly distinguishable.

66. The affiliation of a Putrika Putra or appointed daughter's son is as old as Hindu Law, and according to the Vayidinada v. Appu (27), the practice of the adoption of a daughter's son is referable to the old doctrine of Putrika Putra, though now obsolete. The custom of such adoptions has been in vogue among Brahmins in several parts of this Presidency and elsewhere, as stated already in paragraph 10 above; and if Brahmins in the Andhra Districts of the Presidency in practice make such adoptions it cannot be deemed that they did so without consciousness of the old Hindu Law as to Putrika Putra or of the custom in vogue in different parts of the Presidency. No Brahmin with any sense can be expected to go through such a serious act as an adoption for the mere fun of it, unless he be fully conscious of its efficacy; and the Andra Brahmins, as the plaintiffs would have them, must indeed be a peculiar people if they make adoptions without such consciousness and conviction.

67. As for the acquiescence of the community in such acts, there is a large enough body of evidence on the defence side to show that such adoptions were made with due publicity and that they were acquiesced in by the relations and other members of the public. In some of the instances adduced in the case, the adopter held mirasi office, to which the adoptee succeeded with the sanction of the Government. The plaintiff's witnesses themselves do not say that the persons that made adoptions of the kind were ostracized by the society or subject to other similar inconvenience. The plaintiff's own witness, C. Subbavadhanlu (Exhibit A), who, on his own showing, is an orthodox man versed in the Sastras and who professes to have declared the invalidity of the adoption proposed to be made by Sivarama Doss of Instance No 5, himself fixed the muhurtham for the adoption, graced the ceremony with his presence and took his sambhavana duly. Such conduct on the part of an orthodox Pandit like the witness indicates that persons of his like entertain no particular repugnance or abhorrence in reference to such adoptions, though they may not themselves have recourse to them in their own case, but prefer to act up to the letter of the Sastras. And, as indicated in the ruling in Vayidinada v. Appu (27), the rebutting evidence in such cases ought to be directed to show "that the members of the community declined to recognise sons so adopted as validly adopted, or that the custom is repugnant to the general sense of the community or that it is regarded as made in violation of law," the expression "law" used in the ruling being understood to be customary law, since otherwise every custom would in a sense be a violation of the Sastraic injunction. (See Mayne's Hindu Law at pages 56 and 57 quoted in paragraph 7, above). In Basava v. Lingangauda (39), his Lordship Justice Ranade says that, "Not a single case was shown on the defendant's behalf where the adoption of an only son by the Lingayats of these parts was disowned or repudiated by the people or their rulers, native or British." In Sri Balusu Gurulingaswami v. Sri Balusu Ramalakshamma (40) their Lordships of the Privy Council refer to the absence of resentment on the part of the people and of conflict between the decided law (customary) and the feeling of the people, in upholding the validity of the adoption of an only son. In the present suit, it is not shown for the plaintiff that the adopted sons were disowned by the community or that the custom is repugnant to the general sense of the community or that the community feels any resentment in such matters. It is not also shown that the adoptions are regarded by the community in general as violations of the (customary) law, though they may not be in accordance with the letter of the Sastras. As put by the plaintiff's own witness Dasaradha Padi, (Exhibit HH.2), such adoptions would seem to be regarded merely as Gounapakhsham (secondary), while adoptions made in accordance with the Sastras are deemed Mukhyapaksham (principal or primary).

68. Thus, the rebutting evidence adduced for the plaintiff as a whole does not seem to be of material consequence.

69. Of the 65 instances of adoptions for the defence, 46 are of daughters' sons (1 to 9, 11 to 16, 18 to 23, 25 to 35, 39 to 41, 43, 46, 48, 49, 54, 55, 57, 60, 62, 64 and 95), 6 of a brother's daughter's son (10, 17, 24, 37, 38 and 42) and the remaining 13 are of sister's son. Of these instances, 28 are from the Ganjam District, 9 from the Godavari District, 20 from Kistna, 7 from Guntur and one from Nellore. Of the 28 instances from Ganjam, 22 (44 to 65) relate to Uriya-Brahmins; and of the rest, 6 (Nos. 9, 15 16, 23, 29, and 41) to Vaishnava Brahmins living in the other districts. Of the total instances, 10 instances (Nos. 14, 19, 20, 25 to 30 and 43) being held as not properly established, there yet remain 55 instances. Of these, 5 relate to Vishnavites and 22 to Uriya Brahmins and 28 to Andhra Brahmins. Besides these, there are also the Brahmins two Wills (Exhibits 61 and 126) under which Andhra Brahmins authorised their wives to adopt their daughters' sons.

70. As to the instances from the Uriya Brahmins and the Vaishnavites the plaintiff's contention is that they are not relevant at all in reference to a custom among the Andhra Brahmins. It is no doubt true that the Uriya Brahmins come among the Pancha Goudas following the Bengal School of law and are given to animal food, and some of them (the Holuvas), who follow agriculture as a profession (Exhibit 138-t), are rather lax in their religious observances but, as spoken to by the plaintiff's witness, Dasaradha Padi, the law as to marriage and adoption is the same to the Uriya

'We observe only Karmas in keeping with the Vedas. Yagnavalkya and Mitakshara are our Dharma Sastras. The Sruthi relating to adoption is one and the same for us and the Andhras. * * * We do not marry girls who have already attained puberty. * * * Widow marriage is not in vogue among us. * * * The duties laid down in the Vedas are observed in one and the same manner by all Brahmins."

In view of this evidence, it does not appear that there are any essential differences in law as to marriage or adoption between the Uriya Brahmins and the Andhra Brahmins. Further, the Uriyas have been residing in close proximity with the Andhras of Ganjam for several generations, so that there would seem to be no serious objection to the Uriya instances also being taken into consideration in this case in view of the scope of the issue as settled. Further evidence in regard to such instances having been ruled out by the learned Sub rdinate Judge, Cocanada, in his judgment in the previous litigation between the parties (Exhibit GG), their Lordships of the High Court in their appeal judgment (Exhibit 122) were of the opinion that such evidence was relevant and should be obtained. And, when, in their Lordships' opinion, the evidence of the Uriya witnesses was relevant, a similar principle must apply to the Vaishnava cases, as well.

71. Even if the Uriya and Vaishnavite instances objected to for the plaintiff be excluded, there would still be 23 instances relating to Andhras. With these must be remembered the two cases of sister's son's adoption from Cuddapah and Madras Town referred to in Vayidinada v. Appu (27) as accepted by the Courts in 1906 and 1859 (see paragraph 10 above). The instances under notice cover a period of over 80 years from 1832 and come from four of the principal Andhra Districts. It is not to be supposed that the defence in the present case has been able to exhaust all cases of such adoptions in the Telugu country and the custom set up being itself of a limited operation, the absence of a larger number of instances placed before the Court may not be deemed to be a serious defect. In reference to a similar matter his Lordship Justice Ranade observes thus in Basava v. Lingangauda (39):

"Of course it has never been contended that every person adopting a child was bound to adopt an only son. Cases of adoptions of one, out of many sons will naturally be more numerous. But this preponderance by itself will not invalidate the adoptions of only sons when the custom was properly proved."

These remarks apply quite well to the present case also.

72. The custom in the present case has been shown to have been in vogue for 80 years; and, according to the ruling in Mahamaya Debi v. Haridas Haldar (41), evidence showing the exercise of a right in accordance with an alleged custom as far back as living memory can go, raises the presumption, though a rebuttable presumption, as to the immemorial existence of the custom. The custom set up in this case being according to the 9 Madras case, [Vayidinada v. Appu (27),] referable to the affiliation of appointed daughter's son recognised by the old Hindu Law, it may be taken to have been in vogue among Brahmins in general from time immemorial. There is also a text of Yama, quoted in Ghose's Hindu Law, 3rd Edition, Volume I, pages 683 and 755, which says that in adopting the daughter's son and the brother's son no ceremonies are required.

73. In view of the foregoing, the custom relied on in the present case must be held to be an ancient one. So far as the limited character of the custom under notice admits, the evidence also establishes the general uniformity and continuity of the custom. The various instances adduced in the case and the general acquiescence therein by the community without feeling any repugnance or resentment over the same, also indicates a conviction on the part of those following it that they have been acting on accordance with a customary law binding on them. The evidence on record, so far as it goes, must also be held to be clear and unambiguous; and it is not the plaintiff's case that the custom is immoral or opposed to public policy.

74. I accordingly hold on the 10th issue that the custom of adopting a daughter's son or a sister's son obtains among Brahmins of the Andhra or Telugu portion as in the rest of the Madras Presidency.

75. 12*th issue* :—The allegation in paragraph 6 of the plaint is to the effect that, after the birth of the plaintiff, in or about July 1877, the first defendant recognised him as heir to the estate entitled to succeed on her death, ceased to perform the annual and other ceremonies of her husband and appointed plaintiff to perform all such ceremonies in his own right.

76. In reference to this allegation, there is no direct evidence to show that first defendant specifically recognised plaintiff as heir to the estate on her death. The deposition of the defendants' own witness, N. Krishnayya (Exhibit A—68), the family purohit of the first defendant, however, shows that the mahalayams and annual ceremonies of first defendant's husband were being performed on the karthavyam of the plaintiff even prior to the first adoption of the second defendant in 1900. The evidence of the witness on the point clearly goes in corroboration of the testimony of the plaintiff's father (Exhibit A-63) and his deceased maternal aunt's husband (Exhibit A 36) that the transfer of the karthavyam to plaintiff's name in regard to the ceremonies of first defendant's husband took place soon after plaintiff's birth in 1877. It must, therefore, be held that the circumstances alleged in paragraph 6 of the plaint as to transfer of the karthavyam are true.

77. Next, as to the effect of such transfer, the first defendant, as widow of the deceased, was bound to perform the ceremonies of her husband on her own karthavyam, and any transfer of karthavyam to another person would be invalid according to Sastra-unless it be to a person validly adopted by her. If she purported to transfer the karthavyam to any other, her act would amount to a mere delegation of her power and can have no binding effect either on her or her adoptive son. The transfer of karthavyam to plaintiff after his birth no doubt shows that the lady had then no idea of taking any body in adoption; but I do not think her then conduct in the matter debars her for ever from changing her mind and making an adoption later on, if she has otherwise authority for so acting.

78. With these remarks, I hold on the 12th issue, that the circumstances set forth in paragraph 6 of the plaint are substantially true, but that they cannot render second defendant's adoption invalid, if it should be held to be otherwise valid.

79. 13*th issue* :—The plaint estate of Vegayammapeta is included in the Schedule appended to the Madras Impartible Estates Act (II of 1904), and as such the succession to the estate will be by the rule of primogeniture. The custom of lineal primogeniture as applying to the estate was set up by first defendant's father in-law, Somappa (II), as against his paternal uncle, Wumapati, and he succeeded in establishing the same in Original Suit No. 47 of 1834, on the file of the Principal Court of Appeal for the Northern Division. See the revised decree of the Court, Exhibit 131, and the pedigree, (Exhibit I). In a subsequent litigation brought against the first defendant by agnati of her husband after the latter's death, Original Suit No. 5 of 1876 on the file of the Sub-Court, Cocanada, their Lordships of the Privy Council say in their judgment, Exhibit MM-1, that it was not disputed before them in that case that the Zemindari, according to an ancient custom, was impartible and that it had been held and enjoyed by the eldest male member in the direct line up to and inclusive of Somappa (I), the grandfather of first defendant's father-in-law, Somappa (II). In that litigation, and in the course of an intermediate litigation between first defendant's husband and a widowed daughter-in-law of his paternal grand-uncle in 1854, the first defendant and her late husband no doubt relied on a family arrangement, under which the estate was assigned to his father and also succeeded in their plea; but that cannot affect the custom of lineal primogeniture in reference to the estate which his father had succeeded in establishing in the earliest litigation, especially when the family arrangement itself proceeded in accordance with the pre-existing custom. Their Lordships of the Privy Council in the suit of 1873 advert to the decision of the Provincial Court with approval so far as it went; and all that they say in the penultimate paragraph of their judgment, Exhibit MM-1, is that it was immaterial for the purpose of the litigation before them to decide who would have been entitled to succeed under the custom if the estate had remained part of the joint family property.

80. I, therefore, find on the 13th issue that the succession to the plaint estate is governed by the rule of lineal primogeniture. It must, however, be observed that a decision on this issue is not quite important for the purpose of this suit since, barring second defendant's adoption, the plaintiff would be the heir, whether the ordinary or lineal rule of primogeniture governs the succession.

81. 16*th issue* :—Clause 3 of section 4 of the Madras Impartible Estates Act (II of 1904) provides in express terms that nothing in that section shall be construed to restrict the power of the owner of an impartible estate to provide for the succession thereto in default of heirs. The first clause of the section prohibits an alienation of the estate except under certain circumstances ; but it does not prohibit the creation of an heir by adoption according to the Hindu Law. Such adoptions can be made under law not only by a male owner but also by his widow with his authority or with the assent of sapindas. It is no doubt contended for the plaintiff that an adoption by a widow, when it is made with the assent of sapindas is a sort of alienation ; but I feel unable to accept the position that an adoption of the kind can be held to be the equivalent to an alienation.

82. I accordingly find on the 16th issue that the adoption in dispute is not contrary to the provisions of the Impartible Estate's Act.

This appeal coming on for final hearing on the 19th April 1920, after the return of the finding of the lower Court upon the issues referred by this Court for trial, and the case having stood over for consideration till this day, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—No objection has been taken before us to the findings on issues Nos. 12, 13 and 16, which are against plaintiff, or to the finding on issue No. 9 in his favour that the adoption of a daughter's son is invalid under Hindu Law. Argument has been confined to the finding on issue No. 10 that custom authorizes such an adoption among Telugu Brahmins such as the parties. We concur in that finding and in the lower Court's reasons for it and, therefore deal shortly with the objections advanced here against it.

The Telugu country begins, roughly, north of the City of Madras, being bounded on the south by the Tamil Districts and on the north by the Uriya, though there is, particularly in the case of the latter, no sharp division. The materials before the lower Court consisted, firstly, in general evidence on the side of plaintiff, that such adoptions were not recognised as valid by Telugu and Uriya Brahmins, secondly, on the side of second defendant in evidence, that they had taken place in a sufficient number of instances in the Telugu and Uriya country to establish a custom.

The general evidence consisted in a number of statements, Exhibit HH series. But it was inconclusive in the case of two witnesses, who merely said that the adoption of a sister's son was avoided in their families on occasions on which it would have been possible, as contrary to law and custom. In other cases it consisted only in assertions by persons described as Pandits, who, if their competence in this branch of knowledge is presumed, would ordinarily be prone to depreciate any preference for custom over adherence to the injunctions of the texts, by the study of which they live. In fact, some of them, Dasaradha Padhi, Appanna Sastri, Lokhanada Misra and Ananta Doss, mentioned instances of the adoption of a sister's son without referring to any consequent social or religious stigma being imposed. Nothing of any value was established by these witnesses.

The lower Court has dealt with the evidence relating to the instances relied on by second defendant with great caution and no objection has been taken to its conclusion that twenty-seven cases of adoption of a daughter's son in the Telugu Districts have been proved. It is said that some of these cases are inconclusive, because they are recent. But the proportion of recent cases is not unduly high in view of the greater care with which evidence relating to them would be obtainable ; and there is no suggestion that in any the adoption was made to create evidence for this trial. It is pointed out next that in some cases there was, besides the adoption, a document transferring property to the adopted son consistently with the existence of doubt as to his position. But it is possible that this was due to a desire to prevent future litigation and this is probable in at least three cases, in which the adoptive fathers were persons of marked respectability, a member of the Legislative Council, a well-known Vakil, and a person on whom Government had conferred the title of Diwan Bahadur. Then it is argued that some, who speak to these adoptions, describe them as authorized by law, not custom. But these descriptions are so plainly wrong and the competence of those concerned to give them so small, that they may safely be ascribed to a natural and very ordinary desire to make no explicit innovation and to their inability as laymen to draw a legal distinction. Lastly, in six cases there is the objection that the families in question are those of Tamil immigrants in Telugu country and that, as they have brought their Tamil customs with them, their adoptions add nothing to the argument from the instances afforded by Telugu families proper. It does not, however, appear from the evidence that in any case the immigration was recent or that the adoptions in question were regarded with dislike or suspicion in their Telugu surroundings. Such a custom would be followed only at long intervals and on rare occasions. There is, therefore, no sufficient reason for discarding these six cases from consideration.

Argument has next been directed against the relevancy and weight of the remaining twenty-two instances relied on, on the ground that they occurred not in Telugu, but in Uriya families; and a similar argument has been attempted against the relevancy of the fact that adoptions of a daughter's son were held to be authorised by custom in the Tamil districts in Vayidinada v. Appu (27). The exhaustive judgment in that case no doubt dealt statedly only with the southern districts; and reference has also been made to the fact that it was to some extent, founded on the commentary of Vydianadha Dikshitar, a work alleged to be authoritative only in them. But there is no reason for supposing that the scope of the decision was limited to the southern districts for any reason but that the case before the Court came from Tanjore and there had naturally to be some limit to the collection of instances in support of the custom relied on; the argument from the reference to Vydianatha Dikshitar is answered by the observation that his commentary was afterwards treated as authoritative in Brindavana v. Radhamani (42), a case from Ganjam, a Telugu and Uriya district; and in fact in Vayidinada v. Appu (27) one instance relied on was from another Telugu district, Cuddapah. As regards the Uriya instances before us, there is nothing to support a distinction between the custom they support and that of the Telugu country. It has been pointed out that the territorial division between Telugus and Uriyas is particularly indefinite. The witnesses for plaintiff, of whom Dasaradhi Padhi, already referrred to, is the clearest, refer only to differences in ritual, to marriage with maternal uncle's daughter and to fish diet as peculiar to Uriyas, not to anything of significance in the present connection. Although Tamil, Telugu and Uriya Brahmins differ in language and residence, all alike, so far as we have been shown, agree in acceptance of Hinduism and of the Mitakshara Law; and we can see no reason why the judicial recognition in Vayidinadha v. Appu (27) of the custom now in issue as binding on the first mentioned and the evidence of instances in which it has been followed among the last, are not relevant and are not of material weight.

It remains to refer to six instances of adoption of a brother's daughter's son, which have also been proved. We need say only that the validity of such adoptions was regarded as standing on the same footing as that of adoptions of a daughter's son in Vayidianada v. Appu (27) and that in both the natural mother would be equally debarred from marriage with the adoptive father.

We, therefore, accept all the fifty-five instances, which the lower Court held to be established, as relevant and, in the absence of anything to rebut the inference from them, we regard them as sufficient to prove the custom alleged. It should be added that this conclusion is in accordance with the opinion in placitum 88, Strange's Manual of Hindu Law, 2nd Edition, page 22, the learned author abandoning therein the limitation to South India, expressed in placitum 92 of the First Edition of his work, page 17, and referring to a proceeding of the Sudder Court as his authority. We accept the lower Court's finding and, therefore, we allow the appeal, dismissing the suit with costs throughout.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1461 OF 1917.

Present:—Mr. Justice Sulaiman and Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47—Pre-emption suit—Decree awarding possession on payment of purchase-money—Money paid—Possession not obtained—Suit for possession, whether maintainable.

Where a person obtains a decree in a pre-emption suit for possession on payment of the purchase-money and pays the money, but fails to obtain possession, he is not entitled, by virtue of section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, to maintain a fresh suit for possession on the basis of the decree. [p. 633, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decision of the Additional Judge, Mainpuri, dated the 8th September 1917.

Messrs. Piare Lal Banerji and Gulzari Lal, for the Appellants.

Mr. G. Agarwala, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal has been referred to a Division Bench, as the learned Judge before whom it originally came on for hearing doubted the correctness of the rule of law laid down in Lakhrani Kuar v. Dhanraj Singh (1). As all the authorities did not seem to have been laid before us in argument we took time to consider our judgment.

It appears that in 1905 the present plaintiffs brought a suit against these very defendants to pre-empt the property which is now in dispute. On the 28th April 1905 a compromise decree was passed, according to which the plaintiffs were to obtain possession of the property if they paid Rs. 1,000, within three months of the decree; in case of default, the suit was to stand dismissed. The plaintiffs paid that amount within the specified period but obtained possession neither through the Court nor privately. On the 25th April 1917, long after the period of limitation for an application for execution had expired, but within twelve years of the last decree, the plaintiffs instituted the suit, out of which this appeal has arisen, for recovery of possession of the property decreed to them previously. The Court of first instance, after much hesitation, felt bound to follow the case referred to above and decreed the suit. The lower Appellate Court has refused to follow it in view of certain observations made in the Letters Patent Appeal from it. In that case a Single Judge of this Court had held; "the plaintiff while in possession of the land in question was wrongfully dispossessed by the defendant and I hold that the plaintiff is entitled to succeed on that ground." This was perfectly correct. He, however, went on to hold that, even apart from that, the plaintiff was entitled "to sue and succeed" upon the previous decree.

In an appeal under the Letters Patent [vide Dhanraj Singh v. Lakhrani Kuar (2)] it was held that the plaintiff having got actual possession, though out of Court, and having been subsequently dispossessed, was entitled to bring a fresh suit. The learned Judges, referring to the view that it is always open to a decree-holder to bring a suit on the decree at any time within twelve years notwithstanding that the decree has become incapable of execution by lapse of time, remarked: "This dictum, if correct, would mean that suit after suit could be brought upon barred decrees. If this is correct law, it is a very alarming situation." They were inclined to hold that section 47, Civil Procedure Code, would be a bar to such a suit, but did not think it necessary to say anything further as the point was not necessary for the decision of that case and the question had not been fully argued before them.

There can be no doubt of the general principle, "that where a Court of competent jurisdiction has adjudicated a certain sum to be due from one person to another, a legal obligation arises to pay that sum, on which an action of debt to enforce the judgment may be maintained," per Baron Parke in Williams v. Jones (3). The same principle was recognised in Civil Law where the action founded on the prior judgment was known as the actio judicata. Such an action may be treated as another form of execution, but the Legislature may prohibit it and prefer the more summary method. We must, therefore, examine the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, and also review the authorities, in order to see how these provisions have been interpreted and applied.

The case of Doobee Singh v. Jowkee Ram (4) may be put down as the earliest authoritative case of our own Provinces. There the plaintiffs had obtained a decree awarding to them one-half of an orchard and directing possession to be given to them. They remained inactive for upwards of three years, and then brought a fresh suit for possession. A Full Bench of five Judges enunciated the law as follows: "where a decree is merely declaratory and does not require to be carried into effect by process of execution, the right thereby declared and ascertained exists independently of any process for enforcing it. But when the nature of the decree requires that it should be executed, a decree-holder cannot, after allowing the limitation period to lapse without issuing process of execution, seek by a fresh suit on the decree to obtain that which he should have sought for by execution."

In Ram Jus Rae v. Ram Narain (5) two out of the three Judges re affirmed the same principle and held that section 11 of the Act XXIII (to which section 47 of the present Code corresponds) had taken away the right of a decree holder to recover in a subsequent suit founded on his decree what he could enforce by execution in the ordinary way.

In Sheikh Golam Hossein v. Musammat Alla Rukhee Beebee (6) the same principle was even extended to a redemption suit. A Full Bench of five Judges again laid down that, where by a former adjudication persons became entitled to a remedy by process of execution for the recovery of possession, and by their own neglect they have lost this remedy, they cannot be permitted to revert to the position which they held prior to the institution of that suit and to ask for a remedy by suit. The provisions of section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act have, perhaps, made the principle no longer applicable to redemption suits, vide Sita Ram v. Madho Lal (7). But we have not been able to find any recent case of our own High Court in which the soundness of that principle has been doubted.

The Madras High Court has adhered to the same view. In the case of Sanjeeviyah v. Nanjiyah (8) it was held that a suit does not lie to enforce a liability specifically imposed by the decree of a Civil Court in the Mofussil, the right of suit in such a case being taken away by section 11 of Act XXIII of 1861.

In the case of Muttuvelu Pillai v. Vythilinga Pillai (9) it was laid down that that section takes away from the parties the right to try by a fresh suit any question relating to the enforcement of the terms of the decree by process of execution, and, in accordance with the whole policy of the law of procedure, makes every such question determinable by an order in a summary proceeding before the same Court in the course of execution. And the same principle was followed in the case of Kangnasary v. Shapyani Asary (10) and in the case of Sungara Narayan Pillay v. Sandira Pillai (11).

In the Full Bench case of Periasami Mudaliar v. Seetharama Chettiar (12) which was not a case of a suit on a judgment, but one to enforce a Hindu son's pious obligation to discharge his father's debts, it was, however, observed on page 249* that "as against the judgment debtor himself or against his legal representative (who as such is equally bound by the judgment) it has long been held that under the Indian Processual Law the remedy is only by way of execution of the decree, and that no suit could be brought upon the judgment."

Following the old English practice of entertaining suits on judgments of the County Courts, a practice at one time grew up in Bombay under which suits on judgments of Small Causes Courts were allowed, till this had to be put a stop to after the enactment of section 94 of Act XV of 1852. But as for suits on decrees of an ordinary Civil Court the Bombay High Court does not appear to have permitted them.

In the case of Manchharam Kalliandas v. Bakshe Saheb (13) a suit for possession which had been granted by an unexecuted decree was held not to be maintainable.

In the case of Kisan Nandram v. Anandram Pachaji (14) the plaintiff's father had obtained a decree for possession which, however, was never executed. It was held that the remedy by a separate suit was barred by section 11 of Act XXIII of 1861.

In the case of Sayad Nasrudin v. Vankatesh Prabhu (15) it was remarked that section 11 of Act XXIII of 1861 and the decisions under that section seem to shut a plaintiff, who has failed to obtain execution of a decree in his favour, from making that decree the basis of a further suit, or from obtaining, by means of a subsequent suit, that which, by adopting the proper means, he might have obtained in execution; and that the recognition of such suits would tend to prolonged and possibly endless litigation, and so defeat the purpose of the Limitation Act.

In the case of Fakirapa v. Pandurangapa (16) it was pointed out that the practice of the Bombay High Court to entertain suits upon judgments of Courts of Small Causes was peculiar and too long to be disturbed though it might have been better if such a practice had never been initiated; that it was perhaps based on the fact that the Civil Procedure Code, with a few unimportant exceptions, had not been applied to the Bombay Court of Small Causes; but that no suit would lie upon a decree the execution of which was barred by limitation.

In the case of Merwanji Nowroji v. Ashabai (17) it was decided that even before the prohibition contained in section 94 of Act XV of 1882 a judgment-creditor in the Court of Small Causes had not the right to sue on his judgment, and that the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code preclude a judgment in a Court regulated by that Code being enforced by a separate suit.

The Calcutta High Court, though formerly upholding the view that no suit on judgment lies, has subsequently gone back the other way. In the case of Sandes v. Jomir Shaikh (18) it was held that a suit cannot be maintained in a Small Cause Court to recover the unsatisfied balance of a decree of such Court. This was followed in the case of Moonshi Golam Arab v. Curreembux Shaikhjee (19) where it was held that no suit would lie in the High Court in a decree of the Court of Small Causes. A dissenting note, apparently for the first time, was struck by Wilson, J., in Attermoney Dossee v. Hurry Doss Dutt (20). The learned Judge held that, as a general rule, a suit lies upon a decree unless the right is taken away by Statute, and that, in his opinion, there was nothing in Act X of 1877 to prevent such a suit. It is unfortunate that this case was decided ex parte, there being no one on behalf of the respondent to present the contrary view. Neither section 244 (c) of Act X of 1877 nor the previous cases seem to have been brought to his notice. This case was followed by another Single Judge of the Calcutta High Court in Annoda Prasad v. Nobo Kishore Roy (21) where a suit on an order of the Insolvency Court for payment of costs was held to be maintainable on the ground that section 244 of Act XIV of 1882 was inapplicable, and that the suit must be held to have been based on a new cause of action as afforded by the previous judgment.

In the case of Ashi Bhushan Dasi v. Pelaram Mandal (22) a decree had been obtained against an alleged adopted son (as the representative of the wrong doer) under the guardianship of the deceased's widow, but the adoption was found in another suit to be invalid. Mookerjee, J., threw out a suggestion that "the remedy of the decree holder might possibly be by way of a suit against (the widow) if it be still open to him to sue her successfully in view of the provisions of the Statute of Limitation."

In the case of Kalikananda Mukerji v. Bipro Das Pal Chouduri (23) one of the defendants having died, a co-defendant was substituted in his place as his legal representative, and the plaintiff having refused to make the widow a party the suit was decreed. In a subsequent litigation it was found that the widow of the deceased was his successor and legal representative. The plaintiff, being unable to execute his decree as the deceased's estate was in the possession of the widow, brought a suit for a declaration that the estate in the widow's possession was liable to pay the decretal amount. It was held that the suit was not maintainable as a suit on a judgment.

The case of Kali Charan Nath v. Sukhada Sundari Debi (24) was a suit for recovery of money. The defendant died during its pendency leaving a Will whereby he had appointed the wives of his sons executrices to his estate, the plaintiffs being unaware of the existence of the Will substituted his sons in his place and got a decree. It was held that the executrices were not bound by the decree and the decree could not be executed against the estate in their hands. The learned Judges went on, however, to remark: "At the same time, it is clear that a suit can be brought against the executrices on the basis of the judgment already obtained", and referred to a number of English and Indian cases, pointing out some divergence of judicial opinion on the matter.

It will be noticed that in both the cases in Ashi Bhushan Dasi v. Pelaram Mandal (22) and Kali Charan Nath v. Sukhada Sundari Debi (24) the remarks of the learned Judges on the point were purely obiter dicta and wholly unnecessary for the disposal of those cases. Further, those cases are distinguishable, inasmuch as in each the decree could not possibly be enforced, the real heirs of the deceased not being a party to it. These cases can, therefore, be no authority for the proposition that a second suit on a judgment is maintainable in spite of the provisions of section 47, Civil Procedure Code.

We have given our best consideration to the question before us, and we are of opinion that, both on authority and on a correct interpretation of section 47, Civil Procedure Code, the present suit was not maintainable. Stripped of all unnecessary details, the relief claimed by the plaintiffs, in substance, amounts to asking for the fruits of a decree which they are unable to execute owing to lapse of time. The suit in effect does raise a question "relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction" of the former decree and cannot be determined by a separate suit. The plaintiffs' claim in reality is that they obtained a decree for possession of this property, the defendants have not given them possession in spite of the said decree, and, therefore, the Court should compel the defendants to carry out their obligation under that decree. In our opinion such a suit falls clearly within the purview of section 47 and if it were not we fail to see what other form of suit would.

We may note that Article 122 of the Limitation Act can in no way help the plaintiffs. As was observed in the case of Hari Nath Chatterjee v. Mohunt Mothurmohun Goswami (25), the intention of the Law of Limitation is not to give a right where there is not one, but to interpose a bar after a certain period to a suit to enforce an existing right. In fact, the Limitation Act assumes the existence of a cause of action and does not define or create one.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

APPEAL FROM THE PATNA HIGH COURT.

November 16, 1920.

Present :—Viscount Cave, Lord Moulton and Lord Phillimore.

Maharaja SIR RAMESHVAR SINGH BAHADUR—DECREE-HOLDER—APPELLANT

HOMESHVAR SINGH—JUDGMENT-DEBTOR—RESPONDENT.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 182—Execution of decree—Limitation—Decree not capable of execution—Limitation, commencement of.

In order to make the provision of the Limitation Act apply to the execution of a decree, the decree sought to be enforced must have been in such a form as to render it capable, in the circumstances, of being enforced. [p. 638, col 2.]

Where a decree is passed against the estate of a deceased person in the hands of the judgment-debtor, limitation in respect of the execution of the decree begins to run from the date on which some part of the estate comes into the hands of the judgment-debtor. [p. 639, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decree of the Patna High Court, dated May 4th, 1917, and reported as 42 Ind. Cas. 666, reversing a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Bhagalpore.

FACTS are sufficiently stated in their Lordships' judgment. The Subordinate Judge allowed the application for execution, but the High Court (Sharfuddin and Roe, JJ.) dismissed it on the ground that appellant could have executed the decree after the Subordinate Judge's decision in favour of Ekradeshvar in the suit which the latter brought against Janeshvar's widow claiming Janeshvar's property, i e, after the 20th August 1903.

Hence this appeal:

Messrs. DeGruyther, K C., and Majid, for the Appellant, submitted that the application was not barred by limitation: the Article applicable was not 182 but 181. The Indian Courts have frequently held that when there is an obstacle preventing execution and not in the decree-holder's control, he gets three years from the time when it was removed. Article 182 is for cases when there is no such bar or obstacle: when the decree-holder sleeps on his rights.

[LORD PHILLIMORE.—Might not the application come under Article 182 (7) on the principle certum est quod certum reddi potest ?]

We submit not: the proper Article is 181, The cases lay down that you must apply for execution within three years: but if you do so and are unsuccessful, later applications are treated as continuations or revivals of the former ones. This principle was followed by Sir Lawrence Jenkins in Narayan Govind Manik v. Sono Sadashiv (1)

[VISCOUNT CAVE.—It would seem that you must make a hopeless application, or this principle will not apply].

It was held in this case that the decree-holder had three years from the termination of the litigation.

An application similar to the present one was held not to be barred in Shaikh Kamaruddin Ahmad v. Jawahir Lal (2).

[Reference was also made to Kalyanbhai Dilpchand v. Ghanasham Lal Jadunathji (3)].

The decree here was not capable of execution till 1914.

There are a very large number of applications which do not fall under Article 182. On no principle of equity can you be barred when there is no remedy you can enforce. Applications under Article 182 must be applications which can be made. That Article does not apply here because you cannot get your starting point.

We rest our case on this, that till Ekradeshvar got possession of the property we could not apply for execution.

Mr. Dube, for the Respondent.—This application is barred by limitation. The two previous applications were against the widow and against Ekradeshvar's personal property: they were both dismissed. To be a revival, the process must be the same and the first application must not have been finally disposed of. Neither of these conditions is fulfilled here.

Revival can only be of an application not finally dismissed.

Suryanarayana Pandarathar v. Gurunada Pillai (4).

There are many other cases to the same effect.

[LORD PHILLIMORE.—I do not think you need go into them. This cannot be a revival].

Next, I submit that the decree was capable of execution before 1914. In effect, it was a decree against Janeshvar's estate. The decree says: "in the defendant's possession" the judgment, "in the hands of the defendant." Here the legal representative is also the heir, and the sole question is did or did not the property descend to him?

Rajrup Singh v. Ramgolam Roy (5).

The decree could be executed as and when defendant became legally entitled to the property. There was nothing to prevent the Court's selling Ekradeshvar's right, title and interest in 1908. Limitation ran from 25th August 1908.

[LORD PHILLIMORE.—The decree is not against Janeshvar's estate in the legal ownership of Ekradeshvar, but against Janeshvar's property in his possession].

The words of the judgment and decree must be construed with reference to sections 234 and 252 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 under which this decree was made: I say the decree is against the deceased's estate.

[LORD PHILLIMORE.—I can understand you limiting the words of the decree by the Code, but you are extending it.]

[LORD MOULTON.—You must go by the words of the decree, not by what decree you might have got].

The obstacle was removed on 25th August 1908.

Time begins to run when the judgment of the first Court is given:

Deoraj Singh v. Karam Khan (6), Ruddar Singh v. Dhanpal Singh (7), Chalavadi Kotiah v. Polcori Alimelammah (8).

[LORD MOULTON.—I do not think any of these decisions touches this case].

In construing a decree in execution proceedings, the Court will look at the substance of the matter:

Bissessur Lal Sahoo v. Maharaja Luchmessur Singh (9).

The possession was in law with Ekradeshvar all along; alternatively, time ran from 25th August 1908.

JUDGMENT.

LORD PHILLIMORE.—This is an appeal from the High Court at Patna which has reversed a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpore. The question is whether the appellant is entitled to execute a decree, dated the 27th July 1906, or whether his right to do so is barred by the Limitation Act of 1908. The only provision of that Act which can apply is Article 182 of the Schedule, which prescribes three years from the date of a decree or order of a Civil Court as the time within which it must be enforced, subject to exceptions which do not affect the present case.

It appears that a former Maharaja of Darbhanga, who was the grandfather and predecessor-in-title of the appellant, made a Babuana grant of land to his younger son on condition that the Government revenue and cesses to which it was subject should be regularly provided for payment over to the Government. This younger son died leaving two sons of his own, Ekradeshvar and Janeshvar, who lived jointly for some time and then divided the property. Default in the payment to be provided having been made, the then Maharaja, who was the elder brother of the appellant, brought a suit in 1898 to recover the arrears due. During the pendency of this suit the appellant succeeded as Maharaja, and an arrangement was come to under which the shares and liabilities of the two younger brothers in the Babuana were defined. According to this arrangement the share in the Babuana of the defaulter was to be, in the first place, liable for sale to realise the amount due. In 1905 the appellant brought another suit against Janeshvar for Rs. 18,738.15.6

due for arrears. Ekradeshvar was made a party. During the pendency of this suit Janeshvar died in April 1906, and a dispute arose between his widow and Ekradeshvar as to the succession to Janeshvar's share. In May 1906 the appellant applied to have Ekradeshvar's name substituted as defendant for that of Janeshvar, on the footing that, according to the Kulachar or custom, the former had succeeded to him in the property in question. In May 1906 an order was made to that effect, but the widow, who was in possession and claimed to be entitled, was declared not to be bound by any decree passed in the suit, nor was her interest to suffer thereby. Ekradeshvar having admitted the principal claim of the appellant, on the 27th July 1906 a decree was made against him for the sum above-mentioned and costs. The decree did not provide that he was to be personally liable, but declared that the decretal amount was to be realised by the sale of the property belonging to Janeshvar and left in Ekradeshvar's possession, but the appellant was not enabled to make any portion of the property of Janeshvar which was in the possession of any one else liable for the decree.

On the death of Janeshvar, in April 1906, his widow had obtained possession of his share of the Babuana property. A suit was brought in the Civil Court by Ekradeshvar against the widow, claiming that, in accordance with the custom, the property was his. On the 15th August 1908, the Subordinate Judge decided in his favour. But on the 2nd August 1909 the High Court at Calcutta (execution having been stayed meantime) reversed this judgment.* Ekradeshvar then appealed to the King in Council, and this Board, on the 22nd July 1914, reversed the judgment† of the High Court and decided in his favour. The property in question had remained throughout in the possession of the widow, and it was not until after the judgment of the Privy Council that Ekradeshvar obtained possession.

On the 13th April 1908 the appellant had presented a petition for the execution of the decree of the 27th July 1906 against Ekradeshvar, but the latter had objected, on the ground that no part of Janeshvar's estate had come into his hands, and that no property in his possession except what had belonged to Janeshvar, could be attached. The Subordinate Judge allowed this objection on the 23rd January 1909. After the High Court had delivered judgment in favour of the widow, in August 1909, the appellant further endeavoured to enforce the decree of 1906 against her, but on the 21st November 1910, the application was dismissed, on the ground that the decree was not binding on the widow, and the High Court affirmed this dismissal.

In December 1914, after the decision of the Privy Council in favour of Ekradeshvar, the appellant applied to the Subordinate Judge for the enforcement of the decree of 1906 against him but was met by a plea that the claim was barred by limitation. This plea raised the question that is now before their Lordships. The Subordinate Judge decided the point in favour of the appellant, on the ground that the decree had then become capable of execution for the first time. Ekradeshvar appealed to the High Court at Patna, which held that there was no inherent defect in the decree which prevented the appellant from applying to enforce his claim so soon as, in August 1908, the Subordinate Judge had decided in Ekradeshvar's favour, and that he might then have proceeded against Ekradeshvar alone or the widow with him.

Since the hearing in the High Court Ekradeshvar has died and is now represented by his sons, the respondents, in the present appeal by the Maharaja to the Privy Council.

Their Lordships are unable to concur in the view taken by the High Court at Patna when it thus reversed the decision of the Subordinate Judge. They are of opinion that, in order to make the provision of the Limitation Act apply, the decree sought to be enforced must have been in such a form as to render it capable, in the circumstances, of being enforced. A decree so limited in its scope as that of the 27th July 1906 under consideration cannot in their opinion, be regarded as being thus capable of execution. Under that decree Ekradeshvar was not made personally liable, nor did it extend to any portion of the estate of Janeshvar which was not in his hands. None of the estate came to his hands until after the decision of the Board in 1914. As to the ability of the appellant to have applied to enforce his claim when, in August 1908, the Smbordinate Judge decided that Ekradeshvar was entitled to recover possession against the widow, it is enough to point out that the High Court at Calcutta promptly stayed execution of this decision, and later on reversed it. Neither can their Lordships accede to an argument put forward by Counsel for the respondents that the decree against Ekradeshvar could be treated as a decree aginst the estate of Janeshvar, still less as one against that estate though not in the hands of Ekradeshvar. Their Lordships think that the appellant has not been shown to have been responsible for the delay which has taken place in giving effect to his title, which did not become complete until after the decision of this Board in 1914. They are of opinion that, when the Limitation Act of 1908 prescribes three years from the date of a decree or order as the pericd within which it must be enforced, the language, read with its context, refers only, as they have already indicated, to an order or decree made in such a form as to render it capable in the circumstances of being enforced. This interpretation appears to them not only a reasonable one in itself, but to be in accordance with the previously expressed opinion of this Board in Shaikh Kamar-uddin Ahmad v. Jawahir Lal (2). The case may also be put in this way. The decree against Ekradeshvar could not have been executed without a further application. This application could not have been made till Ekradeshvar had come into possession of the property of Janeshvar, and, by Article 181 in the Schedule to the Limitation Act, the period of limitation for making an application is three years from the time when the right to apply accrues.

For these reasons, their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the judgment of the High Court at Patna should be reversed and that the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpore of the 19th January 1916 should be restored. The appellant will have his costs of this appeal and of the appeal to the High Court of Patna.

Held, that the decision of the District Judge was wrong, as he was not entitled to go behind the record, or to take into consideration the subsequent amendment of the khewat which did not operate in regard to the years in suit, but operated only from the date on which the order directing the amendment was passed. JUDGMENT.—Appeals Nos. 1617 and 1618 of 1917 arise out of a suit for profits brought by the plaintiff-appellant, Lachhman Prasad, who has since died and is now represented by Raja Babu. The original plaintiff sued to recover the profits of a 5 anna, 4 pie share in the mahal for the years 1912, 1913 and 1914 against Musammat Shitabo Kunwar. The defendant, among other pleas, raised the plea that the plaintiff was not the owner of the share recorded against his name. The Court of first instance found that the plaintiff was the recorded co-sharer of a 4 anna share and it gave the plaintiff a decree for a proportionate share in the profits, applying section 201 of the Tenancy Act and the presumption noted therein. Both parties appealed to the District Judge. While the case was pending in the Court of first instance, the defendant applied to the Revenue Court for the removal of the plaintiff's name from the khewat. Apparently, the Court of first instance in that case disallowed the application and an appeal was preferred to the Collector who on the 5th of April 1916, i. e., some six months or more after the decision of the profits suit by the Assistant Collector of the First Grade, directed the removal of the plaintiff's name from the khewat of that year. This order of the Collector was upheld on appeal and the final order on this matter was passed on the 17th of April 1917 by the Board of Revenue. The appeals, in the meantime, were kept pending in the Court of the District Judge. The District Judge has dismissed the plaintiffs suit in toto on the ground, apparently, that since the institution of the suit the Revenue Courts had themselves removed the plaintiff's name from the khewat. Two appeals were preferred to this Court and the learned Judge of this Court before whom they came for decision referred the two appeals to a Bench of two Judges. The essentials of the case are set out very clearly in his order of reference. He remaks that, when the case came up before the District Judge in appeal he took notice of the orders which had been passed by the Revenue Courts and dismissed the claim on the ground that the plaintiff was not a recorded co-sharer at the time the suit was brought. The District Judge did not say so, in so many words. What he did actually say was as follows:—"This order in the Revenue Court has the same effect as if it were to be discovered now that the plaintiff was not a recorded co-sharer at the time of bringing his suit." It is a little bit difficult to understand what the District Judge meant by this, because, as a matter of actual fact, plaintiff admittedly was recorded as a co-sharer on the date on which he brought his suit and was a recorded co-sharer in the years to which the suit relates. What actually the District Judge has done is, that he treated the order of the Revenue Court as if it were the decision of a Civil Court such as is mentioned in the last clause of section 201 of the Tenancy Act. The meaning of section 201, so far as the words "shall presume" are concerned, was set at rest, one would have thought, by the Full Bench decision to be found in Durga Parshad v. Hazari Singh (1). It was clearly and distinctly laid down there that the presumption, so far as the Revenue Court was concerned, was irrebutable but that it could only be rebutted by the decision of a Civil Court to which any party might go to establish by a suit, the fact that the plaintiff had not such proprietary rights in the years in suit to which he laid claim. It is urged on behalf of the defendant-respondent that the Revenue Court has found, as a matter of fact, that the plaintiff's name had been wrongly recorded since the year 1900. It appears that the plaintiff was a sort of puisne usufructuary mortgagee and that, apparently, there was some prior mortgagee who brought a suit and it is said impleading the plaintiff obtained a decree for sale and the plaintiff lost his rights because he did not redeem the prior mortgage. This may or may not be correct, but it is open to the other side to go to the Civil Court and to settle the matter. But so far as the Revenue Court is concerned it must be presumed that the plaintiff has the right against which his name was recorded in the years in suit and at the date of the suit. We do not think that the District Judge was entitled to go behind the record or to take into consideration the subsequent amendment of the record which did not operate in regard to the years in suit but operated only from the date on which that order was passed. The Judge was wrong in treating that decision as a decision of a Civil Court such as is mentioned in the last paragraph of section 201 of the Tenancy Act. We think that the decision of the Court below is wrong. We allow the appeal and set aside the decision of the Court below. We direct that the Court do restore the two appeals to their places on its file and determine them according to law. There are other points in the dispute which have to be decided. Costs in this Court will abide the result of the suit.

Appeal to Privy Council in criminal cases—Pardon, grant of, to appellant, whether sufficient reason for not entertaining appeal—Sedition, law of, application of, oneswpaper articles—Question of fact—Privy Council, whether will interfere with conclusions of local Courts—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 124 A.

Where an appeal in a criminal case is pending before the Privy Council and a free pardon is granted to the appellant, this of itself is a sufficient reason for the Board declining to entertain the appeal. [p. 643, col. 1.]

Levien v. Reg., (1867) 1 P. C. 536; 36 L. J. P. C. 62; 16 W. R. 159, approved.

Once it appears that in a trial for sedition the principles of the law of sedition have been rightly understood by the Tribunal in India, the question whether those principles have been properly applied to the facts of the case is so much in the nature of a question of fact and depends so largely upon local conditions that it is difficult for the Board to interfere on this ground with the conclusions arrived at by the Court in India. [p. 642, col 2.]

Appeal by special leave from a judgment, dated the 28th May 1919, of a Commission appointed under the Martial Law Ordinance, 1919, and sitting at Lahore.

FACTS of the case are sufficiently stated in their Lordships' judgment. The "case for the respondent" contained the following paragraph :—

12. Since special leave to appeal was given by their Lordships in this case, a free pardon has been granted to the appellant, among other persons, in the Punjab, and orders have been issued for the refund of the fine, and it is submitted that no good purpose could be answered by further entertaining the present appeal [Levien v. Reg. (1).]

Messrs. Upjohn, K. C. (with him Mr. Dube), for the Appellant :—With regard to the preliminary point about not entertaining the appeal, this case is distinguishable from Levien's case (1). There, a free pardon was granted after presentation of the appeal: here, the matter was mentioned when leave to appeal was granted, and it was explained that the commuted sentence would be worked out before the appeal was heard.

Sir Erle Richards, K. C., for the Respondent :—A pardon was granted by the Viceroy on September 18th, 1920 with regard to persons who had not taken part personally in the violent deeds. (He read the form of the pardon). I have had a telegram that orders have been issued to refund the fines.

Mr. Upjohn :—This is not a real pardon, one as if the conviction had never been.

(The Board intimated they would hear the appeal).

Mr. Upjohn submitted that there was new point of jurisdiction not covered by Bugga v. Emperor (2). The order appointing the Commission only mentions "offences committed with the recent disturbances." The articles complained of began on April 3rd and at that time the only disturbance had been at Delhi, not Lahore.

[LORD PHILLIMORE.—"Recent disturbances" may be anywhere].

The power of these officers is local: they cannot try offences committed elsewhere. The Commissioners here had no jurisdiction.

Further, on the merits these articles are not seditious. Sufficient weight has not been given to the explanations to section 124 A. The agitation was a perfectly constitutional movement to petition the King-Emperor to disallow the Rowlatt Act, which he still had power to do.

Mr. Dube followed, "sedition" cannot have a different meaning in England and India. These articles should be construed in the same way is if written here. They do not exceed the limits of fair criticism.

Sir Erle Richards K. C., and Mr. Kenworthy Brown, for the Respondent, were not called on.

JUDGMENT.

VISCOUNT CAVE.—The appellant was convicted on the 28th May 1919, by a Court of Commissioners sitting at Lahore under Ordinance I of 1919, and having the powers of a summary Court-martial, of an offence under section 124A of the Indian Penal Code, i.e., of having, by written words, excited or attempted to excite disaffection towards His Majesty or the Government established by law in British India, and was sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment—afterwards reduced to three months' simple imprisonment—and to a fine of Rs. 1,000. Special leave to appeal was granted by His Majesty in Council on the 16th August 1919.

The facts are shortly as follows:—In March and April 1919 there was unrest in the Punjab. Serious disturbances occurred at Delhi on the 30th March, when some persons were killed; and these disturbances were followed by disorder and violence at Amritsar and Lahore and elsewhere in the Punjab. The disturbances at Lahore occurred on the 6th, 10th, 11th and 12th April, the evidence showing that on the 11th April, Lahore city was "practically closed to the Police." The appellant was the Editor of the Tribune, a daily newspaper, published at Lahore, and on the 6th, 8th, 9th, 10th and 11th April, he published in that newspaper paragraphs and articles commenting on the deaths at Delhi the persons killed there being repeatedly described as "martyrs" and charging the Government with grave misconduct in connection with the disturbances. It was stated in the issue of the 10th April that the "atmosphere was highly surcharged" and the "public mind in a state of unusual excitement."

On the 6th May the appellant was charged, in consequence of these paragraphs and articles, with the offence above described, and also with an offence under rule 25 of the Defence of India Rules; and on the 28th May judgment was delivered convicting him of the offence under section 124A of the Penal Code and pronouncing sentence as above. The charge under rule 25 was not proceeded with.

The appellant in his case gave two reasons against his conviction, viz., (1) that his trial by the summary procedure of Martial Law was bad in law and wholly unconstitutional; and (2) that, on a reasonable construction of the articles complianed of, the appellant was not guilty of the offence of sedition as defined by section 124A of the Indian Penal Code.

The facts and Ordinances bearing on the first point raised by the appellant, viz., want of the jurisdiction in the Tribunal by which he was tried, were substantially the same as in the case of Bugga v. Emperor (2), decided by the Board in February last, the only distinction being that the order of the Lieutenant-Governor directing a trial before the Commissioners did not (as in that case) name the accused who were to be so tried, but applied to "all persons charged with offences connected with the recent disturbances." Their Lordships have no doubt that the offence with which the appellant was charged was connected with the disturbances referred to in the order, and accordingly that this case is not distinguishable from the case cited. This contention, therefore, fails.

With reference to the second point raised on behalf of the appellant, viz, that, on a reasonable construction of the articles complained of, the appellant was not guilty of the offence with which he was charged, their Lordships have carefully considered the judgment delivered by the President of the Commission, with a view to ascertaining whether the Commission properly construed the section and gave proper weight to its terms and to the explanations annexed to it. The judgment was a very careful one and their Lordships do not find that the section was in any way misconstrued or misunderstood. This being so, there remains only the question whether the principles of the law were properly applied in detail to the language of the various articles; and this question, as was pointed out in Annie Besant v. Advocate General of the Government of Madras (3), is one which partakes so much of the nature of a question of fact that it would be difficult for the Board to interfere on this ground with the conclusions arrived at by a Court in India. The decision of such a Court must necessarily depend, not only on the construction of the written matter complained of, but also on the local conditions obtaining at the time of publication and a just appreciation of the effect which the publication under those conditions of the articles in question would be calculated to produce; and the Board could not revise the conclusions of the local Tribunal on facts of this nature without putting themselves into a position which they have repeatedly declined to assume, namely, that of a Court of Appeal in criminal proceedings. In these circumstances, their Lordships, while not thinking it necessary to express any opinion of their own as to the intention of the articles in question, are not prepared to advise His Majesty to interfere with the conclusions arrived at by the Commission.

It should be added that, in the course of the argument, their Lordships were informed by Counsel for the Crown that since leave to appeal was given a free pardon had been granted to the appellant. If so, this of itself would be a sufficient reason, as pointed out in Levien v. Reg (1), for not entertaining the appeal; but as the pardon was disputed and direct evidence of its having been granted was not forthcoming their Lordships did not stop the case on this ground.

For the above reasons, their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 107, 145, 147—Dispute in respect of lac growing on trees—Proceeding under s 145, whether within jurisdiction—Rights of parties—Civil suit pending—Breach of peace apprehended—Proper course.

The Police submitted a report that, in attempting to collect lac on plum trees standing on lands comprised in the holdings of the tenants of a Zemindari concern, the officers of the latter were opposed by the lessees of the tenants, and that there was every possibility of a serious breach of the peace at any moment between the parties; an order was thereupon made by the District Magistrate directing a proceeding under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code to be drawn up and the lac trees attached: this order was attacked in a revision petition to the High Court and the question was, whether the subject-matter of the dispute came within section 145:

Held, that "lac" did not fall within the meaning of the expression "land" in section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and that the proceedings held under that section were without jurisdiction; that the matter did not come within section 147, and even if it did, no order for attachment could be made. [p. 647, col. 2.]

Where a civil suit is pending for the determination of the rights of the parties in certain property, it is improper to start proceedings under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code; if immediate steps are necessary to avert a serious breach of the peace proceedings under section 107 to bind down the parties are more appropriate. [p. 648, cols. 1 & 2]

Rule against the order of the District Magistrate, Maldha.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Dasrathi Sanyal (with him Babus Manmatha Nath Mukerjee, Debendranarain Bhattacharyya and Nisithanath Ghatak), for the Petitioners:—The petitioners before your Lordships are second parties in a proceeding under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The proceedings under section 145 were initiated upon a Police report at the instance of the opposite party who had laid information before the Police that a large number of armed men had collected to attack his men and adhidars (lessees) and loot his lac godown. The Police reported that there was a likelihood of a serious breach of the peace between the Zemindar and his tenants in connection with the collection of lac grown in trees on the lands in possession of the tenants. Thereupon, the District Magistrate took action under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code.

The first ground upon which the present rule was obtained was in these terms:—"For that the dispute in respect of which the present proceeding has been drawn up not being one in respect of any land or water within the meaning of section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, the learned District Magistrate had no jurisdiction to proceed under that section and make the order of attachment complained of." A dispute in respect of the collection of lac grown on trees cannot form the subject-matter of a proceeding under section 145. "Lac" is not "land" in its ordinary sense. It cannot also come within the extended meaning of 'land" given by sub-section (2) of section 145, because it is neither crop" nor "produce of land." As to the process by which lac is grown, reads Encyclopedia Britannica, under the heading 'lac." Reads also the counter-affidavit of Fazil Biswas to indicate the process of growing lac. It is clear that lac is not the natural product of the tree but is produced on the tree by a kind of parasite It is a resinous exudation of a kind of insect which lives on the sap of the trees and uses the twigs of the trees as their support. Conceding, for the sake of argument, that "trees" are "produce of land," it does not follow that anything produced on trees is also 'produce of land." Produce of a produce of land does not come within the meaning of sub-section (2) of section 145. Having regard also to the process by which lac is produced, it cannot be called a "crop" because the word "crop", within the meaning of sub section (2) of section 145, is really restricted to something which is a produce of land. The proceeding under section 145 in respect of a dispute over the collection of lac is without jurisdiction.

The second ground on which the Rule was issued was that, in view of the entries made in the finally published Record of Rights having the force of decrees of the Civil Court, and in view of the result of the suits under section 106, Bengal Tenancy Act, the learned District Magistrate was not competent to proceed under section 145,Criminal Procedure Code, in respect of the dispute which has in effect been finally determined by the Civil Court. In the finally published Record of Rights there is an entry that the tenants can cut the trees and appropriate the wood. The Zemindars then instituted civil suits for a declaration that the tenants have no right to cut and appropriate trees on their holdings without the consent of the landlords. The tenants filed written statements, issues were framed and some witnesses were examined when the Zemindars withdrew the suits without leave to bring fresh suits. Having regard to the Settlement proceedings and the result of the civil suits and to the provision of section 23 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, no proceeding should have been taken under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code.

Lastly at the time of issuing the rules further proceedings in the matter were directed to be stayed by the order of the High Court, but in the matter of stay of proceedings there has been a deliberate disobedience of the order of the High Court as is apparent from the orders of the District Magistrate for the sale of the attached lac.

Sir A. Chaudhuri (with him Babus Hemendranath Sen and Probodh Kumar Das), for the Zemindar, Opposite Party :—The omission of the Magistrate to give effect to the presumption arising from the entries in the Record of Rights is not a question going to the jurisdiction of the Magistrate, and the High Court cannot interfere on that ground. See Chintamoni Jena v. Jagannath Ramanuja Das (1). Refers also to Prafulla Nath Tagore v. Hodding (2).

Chapter XII of the Code of Criminal Procedure deals with disputes as to immoveable property. The present proceedings were drawn up under that Chapter. The Code of Criminal Procedure has not defined "immoveable property." The expression, as defined in section 3, clause (25) of the General Clauses Act (X of 1897), is comprehensive enough to cover a case like the present.

[CHATTERJEA, J.—But see section 145 (2), Criminal Procedure Code.]

That sub section only says what "land" "includes" and is, therefore, not exhaustive.

As to the right of the Zemindar to trees standing on tenant's holdings, see Nafar Chandra Pal v. Ram Lal Pal (3).

[CHATTERJEA, J.—That is a case under section 23 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and is really against you.]

It is open to the landlord to show that the tenants are not entitled to cut down and appropriate trees. Under the English Law trees are part of the land on which they stand. See Llewellin, In re, Llewellin v. Williams (4).

Refers also Chaurasi v. Rama Shankar (5), Maharaja Surjakanta Acharja Bahadur v. Maharaja Jagadindra Nath Roy Bahadur (6). If the dispute is one over trees, it is also a dispute over land. Then it is impossible to argue that lac is not "crop" of land. Reads Imperial Gazetteer, Volume III, under the heading "lac." People always speak of a lac crop. So, from whatever point of view the matter is look at, there is no escape from the position that there was a dispute over land and the Magistrate war, therefore, perfectly justified in drawing up proceedings under section 145.

Mr. U. N Sen Gupta, for the adhidars, Opposite Party :—I adopt the arguments of Sir Asutosh Chaudhri.

Babu Manmathanath Mookerji in reply :—The District Magistrate ought not to have drawn up proceedings under section 145, Criminal Prosedure Code, as it was clear that the Zemindars were attempting to get civil remedies through Criminal Courts. The practice of taking to Criminal Courts disputed claims involving questions of right and title has been strongly condemned by the High Court. See Amrit Manjhi v. Emperor (7).

If there was a real apprehension of a breach of the peace, the District Magistrate should have taken action under section 107, Criminal Procedure Code. The proceedings under section 145 are wholly without jurisdiction and should be set aside. See Gobind Chunder Moitra v. Abdul Sayed (8), Doulat Koer v. Rameswari Koeri (9) and Atul Hazra v. Uma Charan Changdar (10).

JUDGMENT.—This is a Rule calling upon the District Magistrate of Maldah, and the opposite party (who are the first party in a proseeding under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code), to show cause why the order of the District Magistrate of Maldah, dated the 30th April, 1920, should not be set aside on the 2nd and 3rd grounds mentioned in the petition, or why such other order should not be made as to this Court may seem proper.

The petitioners are tenants holding lands as occupancy raiyats under the Mathurapur Zemindari concern in the District of Maldah and were the second party, while the opposite party, who are the manager and other officers of the concern and the lessees under them, were the first party to the proceedings under section 145.

The dispute between the Mathurapur Zemindari Concern and the tenants relates to the right to grow and collect lac on plum trees standing on lands comprised in the holdings of tenants.

The proceedings under section 145 were started upon a Police report dated the 29th April 1920 to the effect that, the concern was trying to collect lac from the trees standing on the lands of the tenants by their adhidars (lessees) ; that the tenants on their part were equally anxious to oppose them in their so doing; that on the 26th April Mr. Stevenson, the Manager of the Concern, had laid information before the Police alleging that about 500 men had collected with 24 guns to attack his men and adhidars and loot his Taipur lac-godown ; that on enquiry it transpired that that there was every possibility of a serious breach of the peace at any moment between the Concern and its tenants in connection with the collection of lac grown on trees on the lands of the tenants in a number of mauzahs (naming them) ; that a serious breach of the peace, attended with loss of life, was imminent, and suggested that injunction might be issued under section 144, Criminal Proedure Code, upon the members of both the parties mentioned in the report directing them to abstain from collecting lac grown on trees on the lands of tenants in order to avoid immediate riot.

Thereupon, the District Magistrate made the following order on the 30th April 1920:—"Draw up proceeding under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, and attach the lac trees standing in the holdings of the tenants mentioned in the proseeding pending further orders. The Police will make arrangements for collecting the lac when it is ready and for bringing it into head quarters and stacking it here."

It appears that on the 4th May and subsequent dates, the Police from different Police stations submitted four reports praying for proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code and the District Magistrate on the 8th May, 10th May and 18th May 1920 drew up four different proceedings making in all about 700 tenants second parties in five different proceedings and in each case directed the lac trees to be attached. The proceedings ran as follows : —

....."I am satisfied from the Police report that a breach of the peace is imminent, I do hereby direct both parties to appear before me on the 29th May 1920, and to put in written statements of their respective claims as respects the fact of actual possession of the disputed lac on the said trees. As the case is one of emergency, the disputed trees with lac thereon are attached till the decision of the case." The 31st May was fixed for filing written statements, and this Rule was granted on the 1st June, and further proceedings were directed to be stayed pending the disposal of the Rule.

The opposite party has appeared by Counsel to show cause and the learned District Magistrate has shown cause by a letter.

The second ground taken in the petition is as follows:—

"For that the dispute in respect of which the present proceeding has been drawn up not being one in respect of any land or water within the meaning of section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, the learned District Magistrate had no jurisdiction to proceed under that section and make the order of attachment complained of".

The first question for consideration, therefore, is whether the subject matter of dispute comes within section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Proceedings under that section can be taken where "a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists concerning any land or water or the boundaries thereof". Sub-section (2) of that section lays down : "For the purposes of this section the expression 'land or water' includes buildings, markets, fisheries, crops or other produce of land, and the rents or profits of any such property". The subject-matter of dispute in the present case is lac grown on trees.

It is alleged by the petitioners that the process by which they and other tenants have been growing lac upon trees on their holdings is that described in the Encyclopedia Britannica, under the heading of 'lac', and which runs as follows:—"Lac, a resinous incrustation formed on the twigs and young branches of various trees by an insect, coccus lacca which infests them....As soon as the minute larval insects make their appearance, they fasten in myriads on the young shoots, and, inserting their young proboscide into the bark, draw their nutriment from the sap of the plant. The insects begin at once to exude the resinous secretion over their entire bodies; this forms in effect a cocoon, and the separate exudations coalescing, a continuous hard resinous layer regularly honey-combed with small cavities is deposited over and around the twig. * * * * To obtain the largest amount of both resin and dye stuff, therefore, it is necessary to gather twigs with their living inhabitants in or near June and November,—Lac encrusting the twigs as gathered is known in commerce as "stick lac..."

In the counter-affidavit of Fazil Biswas, filed on behalf of the opposite party, the process by which lac is grown by them is stated thus: "Lac cannot be grown on the same plum trees twice every year. To begin with, the branches of plum trees are cut in the Bengali month of Falgoon; then the new branches and leaves begin to shoot out. Then, in the month of Ashar little twigs covered with lac germs are placed over and together with new branches and thereupon lac begins to swarm and spread over the new branches. Thereafter, in the month of Kartic, this crop is collected. This process is repeated in respect of those other trees on which lac is sown in the month of Kartick and collected in the month of Bysack". Whatever may be the difference between the two processes stated above, it is clear that lac is not a natural product of the tree, but is produced on the trees by a parasite. The learned District Magistrate himself, in showing cause, points out that "lac is not a thing that is allowed to grow by itself : a certain quantity of each year's crop is saved as seed and a month or two later is attached to the trees by human agency from which the next crop develops."

It is contended on behalf of the opposite party that lac comes within the expression "crops" of land. We do not think, however, that lac is a crop. The meaning of the word "crop" as given in dictionaries is as follows:—"The plants or grains collectively that are cultivated for consumption: also the soil product of a particular kind, place or season, etc., etc., (See the Standard Dictionary).

"The 'produce] of the field, etc.....The annual produce of plants cultivated or preserved for food especially that of the cereals; the produce of the land either while growing or when gathared; harvest * * * * with qualification or contextual specification. The yield or produce of some particular cereal or the plant in a single season or in a particular locality. The crops the whole of the plants which engage the agricultural industry of a particular district or season. * * * * The annual or seasons yield of any natural product". (See Oxford Dictionary).

It has been argued that people speak of a lac crop, and hence that lac is a crop within the meaning of the term as used in section 145. People also talk of a crop of hair or a crop of cases and we think it is quite clear from the words of section 145 that crop is there restricted to something the produce of the soil. It is next contended that "trees" are "produce of land", and an observation in the case of Maharaja Surja Kanta Acharja Bahadur v. Mahara a Jagadindra Nath Roy Bahadur (6) is relied upon, where the learned Judges observed:— "The gazari trees may come within the term 'other produce of land.'"

It may be conceded that 'trees' are produce of land. But it does not follow that anything produced on trees is also "p oduce of land". We are not concerned with the definition of "immoveable property" as given in the Transfer of Property Act or the General Clauses Act which were referred to in argument, because, although the words "tangible immoveable property" occurred in the Criminal Procedure Code of 1882, they are replaced by the words "land or water" in the present Code. The ordinary signification of the expression 'land' has been extended to certain other things (among others) to "crops or other produce of land". But in order that the thing may be called land it must be (leaving aside the other things which have no application to the present case) either "crops" or "other produce of land". As stated above, "trees" may come within the definition of land as being "produce of land," but we are unable to hold that lac which is not a part of the tree itself, but is a parasitic growth on the tree is also "produce of land." It is said that as the lac insects draw their sustenance from trees, the lac is part of the trees. But, in order that a particular thing may fall within the definition of land, it must be either land or 'crops' or 'produce of land'. It is not open to us to add to, or extend the meaning of the expression 'land' as given in the section. We think that lac cannot be called 'produce of land' unless we hold that a parasitic growth on a tree which is a produce of land is also land, and that cannot be done without straining the language. We are accordingly of opinion that 'lac' does not fall within the meaning of the expression 'land' in section 145, Criminal Procedure Code. That being so, the proceedings held under section 145 were without jurisdiction. It is contended, however, on behalf of the opposite party that, even if the case does not come under section 145, the right of using the trees for growing lac might come under section 147 which relates to a dispute concerning the right of use of any land. But the definition of 'land', as including 'crops or the produce', is for the purpose of section 145 only and there is no such definition in connection with section 147. In the next place, even assuming that 'land' in section 147 also includes "crops or other produce of land", no proceeding has been drawn up under that section, and even if any such proceeding were drawn, the order of attachment of the lac was without jurisdiction, as section 147 does not provide for attachment and, having regard to the subject-matter of that section, no order for attachment can be made.

The third ground taken in the petition runs as follows:—"For that, in view of the entries made in the finally published Record of Rights having the force of decrees of the Civil Court, and in view of the result of the suits under section 106, Bengal Tenancy Act, the learned District Magistrate was not competent to proceed under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, in respect of the dispute which has been in effect finally determined by the Civil Court".

It appears that the Mathurapur estate comprises Touji No. 60 and several other Toujis, and in the course of the Settlement proceedings which took place in the year 1917-1918 it was claimed on behalf of the Zemindar that the tenant had no right to cut and appropriate the trees on their holdings. No question, however, was raised with respect to the right of growing lac. The Settlement Officer, Mr. Nelson, made enquiries into the dispute about the right to trees (in Touji No. 60); took evidence on both sides, and came to the conclusion (see his note dated the 19th June 1917) that the tenants have the right to cut down and appropriate trees in Touji No 60, and by his order dated 11th August 1917, directed that, "after the entry of fruit trees, in the khatian will be entered 'fruit and timber belong to the raiyat.'" In the case of non-fruit bearing trees the entry will be "timber belongs to the raiyat". It further appears that in 1918 a Revenue Officer made enquiries as to the right to trees evidently in respect of all the Toujis. Both the landlords and tenants were represented by Pleaders and witnesses were examined on both sides. The Revenue Officer submitted his report (together with the evidence and written arguments filed by both parties) to the Settlement Officer to the effect that the tenants have full right to cut and appropriate trees on their own lands without the landlord's permission, and suggested that a note be made to that effect in "Circle I and all villages". The Settlement Officer, Mr. Nelson, thereupon made the following order on the 5th July 1918:—"Make an entry in each case where there are trees The raiyat can cut the trees and appropriate the wood'". But although such an entry was directed to be made in "each case" by the Settlement Officer, Mr. Nelson, it appears that such an entry was made in the Record of Rights relating to lands of Touji No. 60 only and no such entry was made in respect of the lands of other Toujis in the finally published Record of Rights. The landlords (the Mathurapur Concern) thereupon instituted two sets of suits under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act one in respect of Touji No. 60 and the other in respect of the other Toujis, for a declaration that the tenants had no right to cut down or appropriate trees, and that entries to that effect might be made in the Record of Rights. These suits were transferred to the Subordinate Judge for trial. The tenants filed written statements. Pending those suits, the present proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, were started, and the Mathurapur Concern applied for withdrawal of the said suits with liberty to bring fresh suits on the ground that there were formal defects in the plaint, and on other grounds. The application was opposed on behalf of the tenants, and the learned Subordinate Judge refused to grant permission to withdraw with leave to bring fresh suits. The Mathurapur Concern, however, withdrew the suits without leave to bring a fresh suit. It is accordingly contended on behalf of the petitioners that, as the effect of the withdrawal of the suits, without leave to bring fresh suits, was to preclude the landlords from bringing fresh suits in respect of the same subject-matter having regard to the provisions of Order XXIII, rule 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure, they were debarred from disputing the rights of the tenants to the trees.

It is unnecessary to consider the precise effect of the withdrawal of the suits upon the rights of the landlords, if they have any. There was the order of the Settlement Officer (Mr. Nelson) directing entries to be made in the Record of Rights to the effect that the tenants have the right to cut down and appropriate the trees on their holdings. It is true, for some reason or other, the entries as directed were not made in the finally published Record of Rights in respect of the lands of all the Toujis, and it appears that that was one of the grounds upon which the withdrawal of the two suits were applied for. But a suit lies under section 106 for the decision of a dispute not only regarding any entry made by a Revenue Officer in the Record of Rights, but also with respect to any omission made from the Record of Rights, and the suits could have been proceeded with for declaration that the tenants had no right to the trees, and for making entries in the record accordingly. We may also refer here to a criminal case which originated in a dispute between a lessee of Mr. Hennessey (the predecessor-in-title of the Mathurapur Concern) and two tenants of the estate with regard to the collection of lac from trees standing on lands by the tenants, in the year 1918. Each party charged the other with theft of stick lac, and in the case against the tenants, summons were issued. The latter moved the High Court and obtained a Rule. The learned Judges (Richardson and Huda, JJ.,) in quashing the proceedings [See Amrit Manjhi v Emperor (7)] observed:—"In the view we take, regard being had to the nature of the dispute, there is little reason to suppose that the charge of theft, from whichever side it comes, will be substantiated. The dispute is eminently one for the Civil Courts where only it can be finally determined. It will be to the interest of all parties that a decision should be sought for there. The practice of taking to the Criminal Courts, for the purpose of a preliminary skirmish, disputed claims involving questions of right and title, about which the parties may intelligibly and with perfect good faith take opposing views, is in our opinion much to be deprecated". We entirely agree with those observations, and it is very much to be regretted that, in spite of the opinion expressed in the above case, the Mathurapur Concern did not think it fit to proceed with the suits actually brought by them and in which the rights of the parties could be satisfactorily determined, but withdrew them even when leave to bring fresh suits was refused by the Court, and that the Magistrate, in the face of the order of the Settlement Officer, and the fact that civil suits were pending for the determination of the rights of the parties to the trees, thought fit to start proceedings under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The learned Magistrate says that the withdrawal of the suits could not possibly affect the right to take the crop which was growing on the trees long before the suits were withdrawn" and in another passage says, "my information is that the landlords grew the lac". But we think that the version of one party should not have been accepted before any evidence was gone into as to the fact of actual possession. No doubt it was necessary to take steps at once to avert serious breach of peace which was apprehended by the Police; but proceedings could have been effectively taken under section 107 to bind down the parties.

The learned District Magistrate in showing cause refers to the findings of his predecessor, Mr. Lindsay, to the effect that the Zamindar for many years previous to 1916 had let out the right to grow lac on all plum trees in the estate including those standing on tenants' holdings, to persons who made a business of lac cultivation, and who were not tenants of the estate at all but residents of other districts who came at stated times solely for the purpose of placing the seed lac on the trees and taking it away when ripe; and that the tenants never themselves grew lac even on trees on their own holdings. These findings, however, were arrived at in criminal proceedings, and before the orders passed by Settlement Officers specially entrusted with the ascertainment and Record of Rights of landlords and tenants, and who enquired into and determined such rights on the spot.

The petitioners alleged that they and other tenants under the Zemindari having right of occupancy and other superior rights have enjoyed the right to cut and appropriate fruit growing and other trees upon their holdings and to otherwise enjoy the usufruct thereof, the Zemindar having no right or voice to interfere therein, and that, as an incident of their said right to the trees upon their holdings, the said tenants including the petitioners and their predecessors have always been growing lac upon trees on their holdings.

This is denied by the opposite party who allege that the tenants have no right to the trees, that the predecessors in-title of the Mathurapur Concern for the first time introduced the cultivation of lac in the estate, and brought men from other places who had knowledge of such cultivation, and through them (the adhidars) they and their predecessors have been growing and collecting the lac on trees both on khas land as well as lands in the possession of tenants, that the Court of Wards who was in charge of a portion of the Zemindari for some time used to do the same, and that the tenants had no right to the same. We cannot express any opinion on the point, as no evidence has been taken, and no written statements even have been filed by the parties, and what is stated above is taken from the affidavits filed by the parties and the documents referred to by the parties before us. We are not in a position to express any opinion on the questions, nor are we concerned now with the relative values of the findings arrived at by Mr. Lindsay in the criminal proceedings and Mr. Nelson in the Settlement proceedings. All that we mean to say is, that a dispute such as the present ought not to have been made the subject matter of a proceeding under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code. In the view we have taken of the first point (the second ground of the petition), however, it is unnecessary for us to discuss the matter further, or decide whether the order was wrong on the third ground taken in the petition.

The learned District Magistrate being evidently of opinion that the case comes within the purview of section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, was of course quite right in directing the lac to be attached. But the action taken by him with respect to the lac after it was attached is open to serious comment.

It appears that after the attachment, the Magistrate employed the men (the adhidars) of the Mathurapur Concern to collect the lac from the trees standing on the holdings of the tenants, and had it stored in the lac godowns of the Mathurapur Concern. This Rule was granted by this Court (Walmsley and Cuming, JJ.,) on the 1st June; further proceedings were directed to be stayed, and the Rule was made returnable on the 11th June. It appears that on the 7th June the Mathurapur Concern issued notices to the public that the lac was grown by them and would be sold by them at their Cutchery where it was stored, on the next day, i.e, the 8th June. On the 8th June the tenants applied to the Magistrate to stay the sale, but the lac was sold on the next day, the 9th June. In the face of the order of this Court directing further proceedings to be stayed, the District Magistrate should have stopped further proceedings as he was bound to do. The learned Magistrate, in his letter dated the 4th June, showing cause, states that he made "arrangements to have the crops cut and sold operations which must be performed within a limited time otherwise the entire crop becomes spoiled and useless"... "the cutting and preparation of the lac for sale requires a certain amount of skill and that, entrusting it to those who are not accustomed to the work, would result in a considerable quantity of the crop being damaged and unsaleable. Accordingly, I employed the landlords' lessees as the agents; but I wish to emphasize the point that not a single stick of lac is being cut or taken to the godown except under the direct supervision of a responsible Police Officer and that it is being stored in a pucca godown of which the Deputy Superintendent of Police himself keeps the key. There can, therefore be no question of loss or damage to the crop which would be sold by the Police in the ordinary way at the godown to purchasers from other districts who come every year and the proceeds would be deposited in the treasury ready to be made over to whichever party succeeded in proving its case in the section 145 proceedings."

We have no doubt the District Magistrate acted with a view to save the lac from loss or deterioration, but we cannot approve of the manner in which it was carried out. It may be that the cutting and preparation of the lac for sale requires a certain amount of technical skill, but each party asserted that they had always been growing and collecting lac, and each party claimed that they had grown, and claimed the right to collect and sell the lac in dispute; and one of the parties (the lessees of the Mathurapur Concern) was employed to do so to the entire exclusion of the other, and the lac was stored in the godown of the Mathurapur Concern. However that may be, the Mathurapur Concern should not have been allowed to issue public notices for the sale of the lac. The notice issued by the Mathurapur Concern on the 7th June was to the effect that the lac grown by the Mathurapur estate on all the trees on the jote lands of the tenants had been cut with the help of the Police and was in Police custody and that about 250 maunds out of the said lac would be sold at the godown of the Mathurapur Kothi of the Mathurapur Zemindari Company on the 8th June at 4 P. M. Thereupon a petition was submitted on behalf of the tenants to the District Magistrate annexing a copy of the notice. They pointed out that with the object of having their rights proclaimed, and with a view to appropriate the lac grown by the the tenants, and in disobedience of the orders of the Magistrate the Mathurapur Concern had issued notices on the 7th June for holding private sale of the lac on the 8th. They further pointed out that a Rule had been granted by the High Court, and the 11th June had been fixed for the hearing, that the opposite party had with a view to appropriate the lac grown by the petitioners at a small price had given short notice of the sale, and that if the sale were held on that day it could not fetch a proper price because, in order to secure purchasers of lac and sell it on competition at high prices, notices should be given at least at Pakur, Dhulyan, Sahebgunge and other places, and that the petitioners would suffer serious loss if the sale were held on that day and prayed that the sale might be stayed. The District Magistrate's order upon the petition was as follows:—

"I am informed by Superintendent, Police, who was present at the sale, that several buyers were present from the places mentioned in this petition, and that the lac fetched Rs. 80 per maund which is a very high price. If the lac had been kept any longer in the godown, it would have deteriorated and would not have fetched so high a price. No loss has been caused to any one as the full value has been deposited in the treasury and will be made over to whoever proves his case in section 145 Criminal Procedure Code proceedings."

Another petition appears to have been submitted later on the 9th June, and which ran as follows:—

"1. That the first party issued a notice on 7th June 1920 advertising for the private sale of all lac deposited in the godown of the first party under Police control which have out from the trees of the tenants and attached under your Honour's order to the utter disregard of the solemen order of the Court and in order to exercise their own absolute right and control over the property and to the utter ignorance and without the knowledge of the second party.

"2. That the date of sale in the aforesaid notice was fixed for 8th June 1920 at 4 P. M. and the place of sale was notified as the Cutchery house of the Concern. The petitioners beg to file herewith a copy of the said notice for your Honour's perusal.

"3. That the second party have come to know that some lac has been sold away in presence of the Superintendent of Police at Mathurapur at the appointed time and the petitioners beg to submit that all this has been done by the first party in hot haste and with a sinster motive.

"4. That all proceedings have been stayed under the orders of the Honourable High Court, and the Honourable High Court has fixed 11th June for the hearing and disposal of the Rule granted to the second party.

"5. That the petitioners beg to submit that, in spite of the above orders, the first party have acted illegally in selling away the lac and the petitioners have reasons to believe that the lac have been sold away at an abnormal value and they entertain every doubt of the misappropriation of the money realised by such sale by the first party.

"6. That the petitioners beg to submit that the lacs were grown by them on their own trees and they are entitled to them in their own right and title thereto.

"7. That the petitioners, therefore, humbly pray that your Honour will be graciously pleased to proceed against the first party for their illegal and wrongful act and pass orders for the deposit of the value in Court immediately, and pass such other orders as it may deem fit and proper under the circumstances of the case.

"The petitioners beg to submit that they filed a petition in the locality at 5 P. M. before the Superintendant of Police for stay of sale, there was delay of filing this petition by one hour as they had to come to town for legal advice."

The District Magistrate made the following order on the said petition on the 9th June 1920:—

"This petition is based on a misconception of the facts. The correct facts are as follows:—

"If lac is kept too long in the godown it deteriorates, therefore, it was necessary to sell the lac that had been first gathered in order to obtain the highest possible price for it. I accordingly directed the Police to hold a sale of half the total crop to begin with, and, in accordance with my orders, the Superintendent Police personally went to Mathurapur and held the sale. The notices were issued by the Mathurapur Zamindari Co., at request of the Police and the Company was not acting on its own behalf, but simply as agents on behalf of Government, to sell the lac which was under attachment by and the property for the time being of Government. There is thus no assertion of any right by the Company nor are the claims of the tenants prejudiced in any way nor is there anyting illegal or sinister about the proceedings which were all done openly in accordance with my orders to prevent loss of the lac. The tenants are not entitled to deal with the lac so long as it is under attachment. The price obtained was Rs. 80-1 per maund which is the highest figure I have ever heard of, bidders were, as appears from the Superintendent Police's report, present from Pakur which is the centre of the lac industry and the bidding was keen. There can, therefore, be no question of any damage having been caused to the tenants by the sale, and as for misappropriation of the proceeds by the Zamindars that is out of the question, as he has deposited Rs. 1,500 in the treasury as security which more than covers the amount realised at the sale. There still remains about half the crop which is not yet ready for sale. Before it is sold, notice will be issued as usual and the tenants may fetch any one they like to bid. The Zamindar is under agreement with the Collector to deposit the full amount realised in the treasury, if that comes to more than the Rs. 1,500 already deposited".

It appears from what is stated by the District Magistrate in the above orders and in his letter to this Court showing cause, that there was necessity for taking prompt action, because, as the learned Magistrate puts it,....."the operations of cutting and selling the lac must be performed within a limited time otherwise the entire crop becomes spoiled and useless". But, as stated above, the men of the opposite party were employed to cut and collect the lac to the exclusion of the petitioners. Even if the cutting and collection of the lac by men of the Mathurapur Concern and the storing of it in their godowns were justified by the exigencies of the situation, we do not see any justification for allowing the Mathurapur Concern to issue notices to the public for sale of the lac. It is stated in the order of the 9th June that they did so at the request of the Police and as agents of the Government to sell the lac which was under attachment and the property for the time being of the Government. It is difficult to see why the Police itself could not issue the notices and why one of the parties to the proceeding was requested to issue the notices of sale. The notice issued does not state that they were doing so on behalf of the Government or that the lac was Government property. The notice stated that the lac was grown by them and would be sold at their Cutchery on the 8th June. The notices were issued on the 7th June that the lac would be sold the next day, the 8th June. The tenants pointed out that the notice was a very short one, and that notices should be issued at various places mentioned in the petition and the sale stayed. Assuming that the sale could not be postponed till the 11th June, the date fixed for the hearing of the Rule, without risk of loss to the lac, it does not appear why notices were not issued earlier and why the Police left it to one of the contending parties to arrange the business. The fact that further proceedings had been ordered to be stayed by the Rule issued by this Court was brought to the notice of the District Magistrate, and he must have been aware of the order staying further proceedings, at any rate, on the 4th June when he wrote the letter showing cause. If urgent action had to be taken for selling the lac, we do not understand why the matter was not represented to this Court, and why directions of this Court was not obtained. The letter showing cause, however, was written by the District Magistrate on the 4th June, i. e., before the notices of sale were issued by the opposite party and before the petitions referred to above were submitted by the tenants. We think, therefore, that an explanation should be called for from the District Magistrate about the matters referred to above and we direct accordingly.

Before concluding this judgment, we think it necessary to point out the impropriety of the District Magistrate's writing a letter to the Subordinate Judge before whom the suits under section 106, Bengal Tenancy Act, were pending, for postponement of the suits. It appears that, while the suits were pending, the District Magistrate wrote a letter to the Subordinate Judge which runs as follows:—

Malda,
18. 5. 20.

"Dear Sir,

"I understand that certain section 106, Bengal Tenancy Act, cases of Mathurapur estate are fixed for to-morrow. The Manager informs me that he will be unable to produce his evidence then because his principal witnesses, the lac adhidars, are all engaged on behalf of Government in cutting lac. He asks me to confirm this statement to you so that you will not think it is put forward merely as an excuse to gain time. The statement is quite correct. The entire lac crop has been attached by me under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, and I have employed the adhidars as agents on behalf of Government to cut the lac under Police supervision as they are the only persons who know how to handle it. If they are taken away to give evidence here the work will be at a stand still and much of the crop will be destroyed, which would not be to the advantage of the tenants supposing they win the section 145, Criminal Procedure Case.

A. K. Jameson."

We think the Magistrate would have been well advised to avoid writing such a letter as his action was likely to be misconstrued. Even if any confirmatory statement of the District Magistrate was justifiable, in view of the fact that the witnesses had been employed by him as Government agents to collect lac, it could and should have been made by an affidavit sworn by some officer of the Government and filed in Court.

The learned District Magistrate in his letter showing cause refers to the nature of the action he had taken in order that this Court may not think that he had acted in an "arbitrary or partisan spirit" and also refers to the "entirely mistaken" idea of the tenants that he was biased in favour of the landlord. We have no doubt that he acted in good faith, and in order to avoid loss to the lac. But the facts stated above, viz., that the men of the opposite party were employed to cut and collect the lac (though under Police supervision) to the exclusion of the petitioners; that the lac was stored in the godowns of the oppoiste party; that he wrote the letter to the Subordinate Judge to help the opposite party in obtaining adjournment of the case; that the opposite party were allowed to issue notices for sale of the lac in their Cutchery as if it was their own property, and that, in spite of his attention having been drawn to the notices issued by the opposite party and the Rule issued by this Court, the District Magistrate took no notice of it, nor obtained directions of this Court, all these are calculated to create an impression that the Magistrate was biased in favour of the opposite party.

We set aside the proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code. The question of the disposal of the lac and the sale-proceeds of the portion already sold will be dealt with hereafter.

Proceedings set aside.

in such a case is not guilty of an offence under section 61 of the Punjab Excise Act.

Petition, under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of the order of the Sessions Judge, Gurdaspur, dated the 13th August 1920, affirming that of the Magistrate, First Class, Gurdaspur, dated the 16th July 1920.

Lala Mehr Chand Mahajan, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Sundar Das, for the Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Bishna and his wife, Thakari, have been convicted under section 61 of Act I of 1914 of being in possession, without a license, of liquor and of apparatus for manufacturing it. Bishna's application for revision has been rejected and I have only to consider Thakari's case. She has been convicted only because it has been found that, during the raid on the premises, she broke a bottle of liquor. But her doing this would show nothing more than that she wanted to destroy evidence, and does not prove that the liquor and other articles were in her possession. I think that those articles must be regarded as having been in the possession only of her husband, who was the owner of the house.

Mr. Sundar Das, who appears on behalf of the Crown, asks that the conviction may be altered to one under section 201 of the Indian Penal Code, but Thakari was not charged with that offence, and I must decline to alter the conviction at the present stage.

I accordingly accept the application so far as Thakari is concerned, and acquit her of the offence of which she has been convicted. The fine if paid will be refunded.

Application partly accepted.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 424—Dishonest removal of property—Burden of proof—Question of title—Civil dispute—Procedure.

Unless dishonesty is proved, a conviction under section 424 of the Penal Code cannot be sustained. [p. 655, col. 1.]

On the death of a person a dispute arose between his two widows as to the succession to his property and both of them put padlocks on the shop in which the property was. Some of it was subsequently removed from the shop by the accused at the instance of one of the widows: the other widow brought a suit to establish her title to the property:

Held, that the accused could not be convicted of an offence under section 424 of the Penal Code as, in the absence of a clear finding as to the respective titles of the widows, it could not be said that his removal of the property was dishonest. [p. 655, col. 1.]

Petition, under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of the order of the Sessions Judge, Multan, dated the 2nd August 1920, affirming that of the Magistrate, First Class, Multan dated the 17th June 1920.

Lala Mool Chand, R. S., for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner in this case has been convicted by the lower Court under section 424, Indian Penal Code, for dishonestly removing certain property from a shop upon which were the padlocks of Musammat Khushali Bai and Musammat Mulo Bai, the widows of one Jaikishen Das, who died some two months previously. The petitioner is the brother of the deceased and what has been found by the Courts below is, that he removed property, probably at the instance of Musammat Mulo Bai, who claims to be entitled to the whole of it. The deceased during his lifetime made over his keys to Musammat Mulo Bai, who was living with him, Musammat Khushali Bai not having lived with him for some eight or ten years before his death. Ten days after his death Musammat Khushali Bai, who claimed a share in the property, put her own lock on the shop. It was some two months after this that the property was removed, according to the petitioner, by Musammat Mulo Bai herself with the help of some third person, he himself having nothing to do with the removal. During the two months that elapsed after Musammat Khushali Bai put her lock on the shop, neither party took any steps to establish her right in the Civil Courts. Musammat Mulo Bai was in possession after the death of Jaikishen Das and it was, therefore, Musammat Khushali Bai who should have sued to establish her right in the Civil Courts. Taking as correct the finding of the lower Courts that Khushi Ram removed the property, the question is whether he did so dishonestly, for, unless dishonesty is proved, the conviction under section 424, Indian Penal Code, cannot be sustained.

Before the Magistrate Musammt Khushali Bai produced no evidence in support of her title. Evidence was produced on behalf of the accused to show that Musammat Mulo Bai alone was entitled to the property, but the Magistrate came to no clear finding on the point. He said that there was "no substantial proof of the complainant being a discarded wife, and whether she is or is not entitled to anything must be decided by a Civil Court." The civil suit brought by Musammat Khushali Bai is now pending between the parties, and the issues framed therein, a copy of which has been shown to me by the petitioner's Counsel, show that the dispute is of a complicated nature. If, eventually, it be decided that Musammat Khushali Bai is not entitled to a share in the property, it would follow that Khushi Ram's action in removing the property from the locked shop was not a dishonest one; for, if the property belonged wholly to Musammat Mulo Bai, then its removal was not done with any intention to cause wrongful loss to Musammat Khushali Bai or wrongful gain to Musammat Mulo Bai. In my opinion, the Magistrate was not justified in convicting the petitioner unless he could affirmatively hold that Musammat Khushali Bai was entitled to a share in the property. There is no such finding and the conviction cannot, therefore, be sustained. I think that this was a case where a Magistrate might very well have acted upon the principle enunciated in Emperor v. Bishen Das (1), to the effect that parties should not be encouraged to resort to the Criminal Courts in cases in which the point at issue between them is one which can more appropriately be decided by a Civil Court.

I, therefore, allow the revision and, setting aside the conviction and sentence, acquit Khushi Ram and direct that the fine, if paid, be refunded to him.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 476—Order directing prosecution—Evidence recorded in absence of accused—No opportunity to cross-examine—Order, whether justified.

An order under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, directing the prosecution of a person upon evidence recorded in his absence, and without affording him an opportunity to cross-examine the witnesses cannot be justified. [p. 656, col. 1.]

Criminal revision from an order of the Magistrate, First Class, Mainpuri, dated the 13th September 1920.

Mr. Satya Chandra Mukerji, for the Applicant.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—In the course of a murder trial before the Committing Magistrate, the Magistrate, at the instance of the prosecution, issued summons to Lal Lokpal Singh to appear in his Court apparently to give the prosecution an opportunity to examine him with reference to a letter produced by the prosecution. The summons was issued on three occasions but without result. The enquiry in the Magistrate's Court was concluded without the evidence of Lal Lokpal Singh having been recorded and the case was committed to the Sessions. In that Court also Lal Lokpal Singh did not appear and the case ended in the acquittal of the accused. Subsequently, the learned Magistrate issued notice to Lal Lokpal Singh under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code to show cause why he should not be prosecuted under section 174 of the Indian Penal Code for intentionally omitting to attend his Court. Lal Lokpal Singh appeard and put in an application through a Vakil to the effect that the witnesses, more particularly the Sub-Inspector and the constable who had deposed as to the service of one of the summons in the village on Lal Lokpal Singh, should be re called before the Magistrate and he should be given an opportunity to cross-examine them. This seems to be a very reasonable request. Lal Lokpal Singh was no party to the previous prosecution and the evidence was taken behind his back. The learned Magistrate, however, rejected the application holding that a prayer for regular enquiry should be rejected as it was not called for in the interests of justice.

It is quite true that under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code, as has been laid down in many rulings of this Court, a preliminary enquiry may be unnecessary, that is to say, it is not absolutely necessary to justify an order under that section, but in all those cases the person against whom an order was made, had always been before the Court and the evidence in the proceedings recorded in his presence and, therefore, an opportunity had been provided to him to test the evidence by cross-examination. The present case is very different and I do not understand how the Magistrate can come to any conclusion against the accused under section 476 without giving him an opportunity to cross-examine the witnesses whose evidence has been taken behind his back. He should certainly be given an opportunity to cross examine the witnesses. I, therefore, direct the record to be returned to the Magistrate and he be directed to call the witnesses whom Lal Lokpal Singh may summon and he be given an opportunity to cross examine them. It will be open to the Magistrate after such enquiry to proceed as he may be advised.

Record returned.

Where proceedings were started against a person under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code and at the very close of the case, without even calling upon him to show cause to the contrary, the Magistrate passed an order of restriction against him under the Punjab Restriction of Habitual Offenders Act :

Held, that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to make the order of restriction.

Petition, under section 439 of Act V of 1898, for revision of the order of the District Magistrate, Karnal, dated the 25th June 1920, comfirming that of the Magistrate, First Class, Karnal, dated the 15th May 1920.

Lala Ramanand, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the proceedings were started against the petitioner under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code At the very close of the case, without even calling upon the petitioner to show cause to the contrary, the Magistrate passed an order of restriction under Act V of 1918. The petitioner's appeal to the District Magistrate was dismissed. It is clear that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to pass the order complained of as no proceedings under Act V of 1918 had been even initiated against the petitioner. The necessary notice required by section 4 (1) of that Act was not served upon him, nor was he asked even verbally before the Court to show cause why the order of restriction should not be passed. In these circumstances, I am compelled to accept the petition and set aside the order of restriction.

Appeal against the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Akola, in Civil Suit No. 35 of 1917, dated the 30th April 1919.

Messrs. M. B. Niyogi and V. V. Ghitale, for the Appellants.

Mr. M. V. Joshi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The parties to this appeal are banking firms trading in the name and style of Dalichand Onkardas and Rakhabdas Sanklecha, respectively at Khamgaon. The plaintiffs have brought this suit alleging that the defendant firm on or about the 27th October 1913 drew a hundi on the plaintiff's firm for Rs. 5,000 payable 61 days after date, the payee being the Bank of Bombay; the hundi was for the benefit and use of the defendant, the latter firm having requested the plaintiffs before-hand to accept the said hundi and having agreed also to pay into the Bank the amount of the hundi on the date of maturity; that on or about the date of maturity they demanded the money from the defendants to pay the same in discharge of the hundi, but the defendants having failed to pay the same the plaintiff who had accepted the hundi and, therefore, bound in law to make the payment on the date to the payee had to pay Rs. 5,000 to the Bank of Bombay. The plaintiffs further pleaded that even if they fail to prove that there was an actual agreement between the parties before the drawing of the hundi to the effect that the defendants were to supply the funds, they, having accepted the hundi as drawees and having made the payment on the due date in good faith and the proceeds of the hundi being actually taken by the defendants, are entitled to recover this amount from the defendants both under the law and the custom of the market.

The defendant firm is owned by the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, who are joint Hindu brothers. The defendant No. 2 was a minor at the date of the suit; having attained majority during the pendency of the suit, he has defended the suit as major.

The defendant No. 1 alleges that though the hundi (Exhibit P-6) bears his signature, yet he has not drawn it. He denies its execution and consideration He also denies that there was any agreement between the parties previous to the drawing of the hundi and that he took any money under the hundi. He further alleges that he used to keep hundi papers signed in blank with Deokishan Aidan a firm of Akola, which was a broker of the Bank of Bombay, Akola Branch, and that there was an understanding between him and the said Aidan that a hundi was to be drawn on the said papers whenever he issued instructions to Aidan for the same. He pleads also that one Wasudeorao, the munim of the plaintiff's firm at Akola, has in collusion with the said Aidan caused the hundi to be drawn on one of the papers kept by him with Aidan and thus appropriated the proceeds of the hundi, and that the plaintiffs also were parties to this collusion. He thus denies the claim. Defendant No. 2 puts forward these grounds and further denies the claim on the ground that, if the said hundi was drawn by defendant No. 1, defendant No. 2 is not liable on it as the same was not for his benefit and in the usual course of business.

The learned Sub-Judge has found that the defendant's firm drew Exhibit P-6 for Rs. 5,000 on the plaintiff's firm; that the plaintiffs accepted the hundi and paid Rs. 5,000 into the Akola Branch of the Bank of Bombay; that the defendant's firm received the amount of the hundi; that the hundi is genuine and is not the result of collusion between Aidan and the plaintiffs' agent; that the assets of defendant No. 2 are liable for the payment of the plaintiffs' claim. The suit was decreed. The defendats appeal.

The first ground of appeal is that, the lower Court refused to examine the defendants' witness, Surajmal, who was present. I am referred to the entry in the order-sheet dated the 1st February 1919. This entry refers to an application for permission to summon one witness on behalf of the defendant No. 2. The order-sheet states:—

"He is the same witness, Surajmal Gangaram, whom defendants took several steps to summon but the witness could not be caught hold of."

It seems clear that, if the witness was present, the Court was not aware of the fact. The Counsel for the parties have signed the order-sheet. The appellants have not cared to submit an affidavit or even to ask that file D should be sent for. I must hold that it is not shown that Surajmal was present. The learned Sub-Judge was clearly justified in refusing an adjournment to summon the witness at that stage.

The next ground is that, the lower Court should have drawn presumptions against the plaintiffs from the plaintiffs' refusal to enter the witness-box, especially after their agreeing to enter the box. I note that the appellants do not now ask that the plaintiffs should be examined. On 5th April 1918 the plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 3 appeared and were ready to go into the witness box. The lower Court refused to allow them to go for reasons which appear insufficient Before me it is not stated that the plaintiffs could give useful evidence on any point except on the alleged request made by the defendants to the plaintiffs' firm that the latter should honour the hundi. The failure of the plaintiffs to enter the witness box will be considered with regard to the question whether such request was really made.

On the third it is alleged that, certain facts have been ignored or insufficiently considered by the lower Court. It is difficult to ascertain from the ground of appeal what is really urged by the defendants. The defendants allege conspiracy between Wasudeorao, the plaintiff's agent, and Aidan. The lower Court has come to a finding on this and other points. The grounds of appeal do not show which findings are attacked. The pleadings before me have been similary vague.

The defendants' case was that, defendant No. 1 had provided Aidan Laxmandas with blank hundis and with blank cheques. The hundis were to be negotiated whenever Aidan received instructions. It seems obvious that, after Aidan issued such hundis in accordance with the instructions received from the defendant, the defendant cannot say that such hundis were not executed by him. It appears to me to make no difference if Aidan filled in and executed this particular hundi without directions from the defendant. It was not possible for outsiders to know what instructions the defendant had given to Aidan. If the defendant used Aidan as his agent and put him in a position to issue hundis, then he is responsible if such hundis are accepted.

Again, it is not denied that the amount of the hundi, less discount, was credited by the Bank of Bombay to the current deposit account of the defendant's firm. The money was then paid on a cheque (Exhibit P 5). The Defendant's firm have admitted that they had provided Aidan with blank cheques in order that they might draw the amount. In the absence of collusion, the plaintiff cannot be responsible for the proceeds of the hundi after these proceeds had reached the defendants' account. The defendants then received the proceeds of the hundi.

Again, section 20 of the Negotiable Instruments Act appears clearly to apply to the present case. The defendant gave prima facie authority to Aidan to make a negotiable instrument upon a blank hundi. Section 20 of the Negotiable Instruments Act terms the person to whom a blank hundi is given a holder, and it seems clear that such a person received prima facie authority to deliver the hundi after executing it. The law on this point is explained in Chalmer's Negotiable Instruments in British India, Fourth Edition, Chapter XV. For the purposes of this case it is sufficient to quote the remarks of Creswell, J., see page 1751:—

"A person who gives another possession of his signature on a bill-stamp, prima facie authorises the latter as his agent to fill it up and give to the world the bill as accepted by him. He enables his agent to represent himself to the world as acting with a general authority, and he cannot say to a bona fide holder for value, who has no notice of secret stipulations, that there were secret stipulations between himself and the agent."

The plaintiff, unless fraud on his part is proved, is a holder in due course. It follows that, unless collusion between Aidan and the plaintiff's agent is proved, the plaintiff's suit must succeed.

I proceed to deal with the question whether the defendant has proved such collusion. Some of the facts mentioned in ground No. 3 of the memorandum of appeal are intended to support the plea that such collusion was proved. The Nos. 1 and 2 have no bearing on the point. On the Nos. 3 to 7 it is urged that there should have been better evidence of a request to the plaintiff's firm to accept this hundi. One of the plaintiffs should have entered, but did not enter, the witness-box; but it is clear that his evidence to the effect that his agent had spoken to him of such a request could have carried little weight and I can lay little importance on this omission. As both parties had their principal place of business at Khamgaon the absence of a letter is not strange. On fact No. 8 it is enough to say that, instructions to an agent at another town might well be given orally by the plaintiffs. On facts Nos. 9 to 11 it is sufficient to state that, Gopi Kisan is a person who would naturally be employed by Aidan for the receipt of the money on the hundi. On the facts Nos. 12, 13 and 15 it is enough to say that, I do not agree with the finding of the lower Court that the story of blank signed cheques being kept with Aidan is improbable. This does not affect the liability of the defendants.

It is strongly urged that the absence of any entry on a date prior to the payment by the plaintiff to the Bank in the plaintiffs' account-books leads to the inference that the plaintiffs' agent, Wasudeorao, accepted the hundi in collusion with Aidan and without authority from his masters. The theory is put forward that the plaintiffs' finding that, owing to Wasudeorao's bad faith, they were bound to make a payment to the Bank of Bombay made up their mind to represent that Wasudeorao had accepted the hundi on their instructions and to recover the amount paid from the defendant's firm by the present suit. There seems no particular reason why an entry should be made in the regular account-books of the plaintiffs at the time when the plaintiffs accept a hundi. No money passed hands at that time. The entry (Exhibit P-9), though it does not bear a date, appears to have been made before the payment to the Bank of Bombay; for the entry is in the nakal bahi for Sambat 1969, whereas the entry of payment to the Bank of Bombay is in the kird for Sambat 1970. A perusal of the entry (Exhibit P-9) shows that it does not purport to have been made on 29th December 1913 (the date on which the hundi matured) though there is a reference to that date in the body of the entry. There is then no substance in the foundation on which the theory to which I have referred is built. I find nothing on the record to justify an inference that Wasudeorao colluded with Aidan.

I cannot infer from the delay in filing the suit and the conduct of the case by the plaintiffs that the case is a false one. The appeal fails and is dismissed. Costs on appellants.

Appeal dismissed.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42—Mahabrahmin, status of—Right to receive alms, declaration as to, whether can be obtained.

Inasmuch as the right to beg, or a beggar's right to receive alms, does not constitute property as it is understood in law, a beggar cannot, under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, obtain an injunction entitling him to receive alms to the exclusion of other beggars. [p. 661, col. 1.]

The Mahabrahmins who solicit alms from pious Hindus on the bank of the Ganges river at Allahabad are beggars, and as such have no legal status. [p. 662, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge, Allahabad, dated the 10th of April 1917.

Messrs. B. E. O'Conor and Badri Narain, for the Appellants.

Dr. S. N. Sen, Mr. Panna Lal, and the Hon'ble Dr. T. B. Sapru, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a plaintiffs' appeal. The facts of the case are as follows:—

On the banks of the Ganges, not far from Allahabad, is a spot where a ferry crosses the river; it is named Kubri Ghat. This apparently is a convenient spot for pious Hindus to bathe in the Ganges and apparently many of them do this in connection with religious ceremonies connected with deaths and other circumstances in their families. The contending parties in this case are Mahabrahmans, the plaintiffs, and Ganga Putras, the defendants, they may both be described as parasites of Hindu society. These persons go down to the Kubri Ghat and when a pious Hindu is about to bathe they offer him what they call "kusha," that is, a small bunch of grass. They pronounce a Mantra and he returns the grass together with a small pecuniary present. The spot where it occurs is private property belonging to the Zemindars of two villages Swad Khat and Taj Mullahan. Between the Ganga Putras and the Mahabrahmans there have been constant disputes in the past each seeking to prevent the other from obtaining these alms which are given by the bathers.

In the year 1904 there was a dispute and a Magistrate, by an order, dated the 2nd of July 1904, passed apparently under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, restrained the plaintiffs, the Mahabrahmans, from taking any such gifts within a distance of 13 yards of the water's edge. The order held good only for two months and it was passed to prevent a breach of the peace taking place during that time. It was a period of festival during which many Hindus frequented the Ghat. Shortly before the present suit was instituted, in the year 1913, there was further trouble between these two classes and a Magistrate took action and bound down each party under section 107, Criminal Procedure Code. At the same time he published the old order of the 2nd of July 1904 for the information of the parties. He did not take action under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, himself but merely published the order for their information. Thereupon, the plaintiffs brought the present suit. In paragraph 1 of their plaint, it is stated that they and their ancestors had been receiving these alms from people who came to bathe at Kubri Ghat by giving them kusha on the bank of the Ganges. They admitted that the defendants, that is, the Ganga Putras, had all along been receiving similar gifts by sitting on a mat and tying up a calf on the bank of the river and they also admitted that the defendants used to pay Rs. 150 as rent to the Zemindars for the piece of land which they thus occupied. They recited the order of the 2nd of July 1904 and the occurrences of the year of 1913 and the orders passed by the Magistrate. In paragraph 6 they admitted that the gifts given by the pious Hindus were purely voluntary acts. They went on to say that the Criminal Court had improperly infringed their rights as against the rights of the defendants and that the parties were entitled to receive whatever offerings were given to them by the bathers who frequented the bank. They asked for three reliefs,—

(1) That the order of the Criminal Court dated the 23rd June 1913 should be set aside. This relief has been denied to them by both the Courts below and they lay no claim to it before us;

(2) that it be declared that they have a right to take dan, that is, alms, by offering kusha on the bank of the Ganges at Kubri Ghat, and

(3) that a perpetual injunction be issued to the defendants restraining them from interfering with the plaintiffs in receiving alms on the bank of the river.

The Court of first instance framed five issues. The defendants in their defence admitted that they paid Rs. 150 as rent every year to the Zemindars as mentioned by the plaintiffs but not for the right of tying a calf and spreading a mat but according to a decree passed by the Civil Court in a certain case; they also admitted the incidents which had occurred in the Criminal Court. They claimed that they had an exclusive right to take the gifts offered by the Hindu bathers and maintained that the Mahabrahmans had only a right to receive such gifts when the ceremony with which the giver was concerned was a funeral ceremony, otherwise the Ganga Putras had an exclusive right to take all gifts offered by bathers in the river. They maintained that the plaintiffs improperly interfered with their rights to take gifts. They maintained that the right of a Ganga Putra, is Birt Jijmani (which was a voluntary gift) and that a Man Birt was a purely personal gift. The Court of first instance framed the first issue as follows: "Have the plaintiffs got any cause of action?" It held that they had none and dismissed the suit. An appeal was preferred to the District Judge. He held that the plaintiffs had a cause of action and remanded the suit for decision on other issues.

The first Court then held that a gift made by the bathers in the river constituted Man Birt, that is a purely personal gift and not Birt Jijmani. It held in favour of the plaintiffs that they had a perfect right to go to Kubri Ghat and accept gifts by giving kusha to Hindus and it finally gave the plaintiffs the following declaration and injunction: "That the plaintiffs have always a right to accept dan by giving kusha on the bank of the Ganges at Kubri Ghat." It granted an injunction against the defendants restraining them from interfering with the plaintiffs in taking dan by giving kusha to bathers on the bank of the Ganges at Kubri Ghat.

There was no issue framed as to the alleged lease of the land used by the defendants. The defendants appealed and in their appeal they did not attempt to base their case in any way on the alleged lease. The Court of Appeal came to the conclusion that the plaintiffs were only entitled to accept such gifts as were ordinarily offered to Mahabrahmans and that their rights were not co-extensive with those of the defendants. It, therefore, set aside the decree of the first Court, so far as the declaration was concerned, and it gave the plaintiffs an injunction restraining the defendants from interfering with the plaintiffs in taking dan which bathers gave to them as Mahabrahmans at Kubri Ghat on the bank of the Ganges. The plaintiffs have come here in second appeal. They contend that they are entitled to a declaration such as was granted to them by the first Court; that they are entitled to accept any gifts whatsoever that are made to them whether they are connected with funeral rites or not; that the injunction granted by the Court of Appeal is of no use to them, and that they seek both the declaration and the injunction to maintain their right to accept alms of any sort offered to them by any body.

The defendants have filed objections: (1) One of the pleas which they have taken is that the right claimed by the plaintiffs is not recognised by law; (2) They further contend that the plaintiffs are neither entitled to the declaration nor to the injunction granted by the Court below. (3) The third plea taken is that the defendants, being lessees of the bank of the river at Kubri Ghat, the plaintiffs are not entitled to any injunction which interferes with the defendants' admitted right of Birt Jijmani within a distance of 13 yards from the river. In view of the fact that there had been no finding as to the lease throughout the litigation, nor had the defendants based their rights on their capacity as lessees, this third plea cannot be allowed to be taken before us.

The first question for consideration is whether, in view of the facts, the plaintiffs are in any way entitled to any relief whatsoever, either to the declaration or to the injunction. Section 42 of the Specific Relief Act lays down that: "Any person entitled to any legal character, or to any right as to any property, may institute a suit against any person denying, or interested to deny, his title to such character or right, and the Court may in its discretion make therein a declaration that he is so entitled, and the plaintiff need not in such suit ask for any further relief." In the present case the plaintiffs have come forward with no legal character whatsoever. The character they have assumed for the purposes of this litigation is the character of a beggar, that is, a person who begs from a person who is charitably inclined to give. In most countries this would render him liable to punishment in a Criminal Court. Even in this country, no beggar has a legal character. The character that he has is more likely illegal than legal. Therefore, the plaintiffs are not entitled to a declaration so far as their character is concerned. The next question is, whether they have any right as to any property which is in dispute in the present case. It is impossible to hold that a beggar's right to receive alms is a right to property in any way. On their own showing, the plaintiffs admit that what they call Mon Birt is nothing less and nothing more than a pure gift made by a Hindu bather and is a personal offering to the donee. This right is not claimed in connection with any property, such as a temple or shrine or any other immoveable property. It is impossible, therefore, to hold that what the plaintiffs claim in the present case is property. It appears, therefore, to us that, under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, it is impossible to give the plaintiffs the declaration which they now seek. Injunctions are dealt with in section 54 of the Specific Relief Act. Under that section "a perpetual injunction may be granted to prevent the breach of an obligation existing in favour of the applicant, whether expressly or by implication.... When the defendant invades or threatens to invade the plaintiff's right to, or enjoyment of property, the Court may grant a perpetual injunction." It seems to us that, on the facts of the present case, it is impossible for us to say that there was any breach of any obligation existing in favour of the plaintiffs. The question, of course, is simple. No body is obliged to give to them nor are the defendants, the Ganga Putras, under any obligation towards them. Again, it cannot be said that the Ganga Putras invade or threaten to invade the plaintiffs' right to, or enjoyment of property. As we have pointed out above, the right to beg cannot constitute property as it is understood in law. Therefore, on the facts of the case, it appears to us that the plaintiffs are in no way entitled either to an injunction or to a declaration; we do not think that the remand order of the District Judge under which he sent back the case at all precludes us from coming to this conclusion. The plaintiffs might well have a cause of action and yet be not entitled to the reliefs they claimed. It is not necessary for us to go into and decide the question whether the defendants, the Ganga Putras, have any exclusive right or any right whatsoever as against the present plaintiffs-appellants. It may be that they equally are with the plaintiffs only beggars and as such they have no right whatsoever greater than that of the plaintiffs. It may be, on the other hand, that they are lessees of the land and as such they are entitled to keep the plaintiffs off the land. But as to these two points we express no opinion whatsoever. On the facts of the case, the suit was bound to fail. The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

We allow the second objection, namely, that the right claimed by the plaintiffs is not recognised by law. The plaintiffs' suit will stand dismissed with costs in all Courts.

Appeal dismissed.

A mere defect in following the rule as to representation of minors is not necessarily fatal to the proceedings so as to render invalid a decree against the minors [p. 663, col. 1.]

Where a cause of action accrues to two brothers of a Hindu joint family when they are minors, time for bringing a suit runs from the date on which the older of the two attains majority. [p. 663, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Cuddalore, in Appeal Suit No. 113 of 1917, preferred against that of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Villupuram, in Original Suit No. 1 of 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Messrs. A. Rashyam Iyengar and T. G. Ragavachariar, for the Appellants.—The lower Court erred in holding that the suit was barred and that plaintiffs should have set aside the decree passed against them while they were minors. In the prior suit the minors were not properly represented. The interest of their mother who was their guardian ad litem was adverse to the interests of the minors. There was no effective representation and the decree should be treated as a nullity. It need not, therefore, be set aside. Baij Nath Rai v. Dharam Deo Tewari (1), Khiarajmal v. Daim (2).

Messrs. L. S. Veeraraghava Iyer and M. Patanjali Sastri, for the Respondents.—Mere defective representation of the minors will not render the decree obtained against them a nullity.

Adverse interest of the mother will not render her representation altogether void. The cases cited by appellants' Vakils are distinguishable. In Baij Nath Rai v. Dharam Deo Tewari (1), the question turned upon whether a prior decree was res judicata when it was obtained through the guardian's gross negligence. In Khiarajmal v. Daim (2) the Privy Council did not deal with the question of representation. The decree is not necessarily fatal to the proceedings. See Walian v. Banke Behari Pershad Singh (3).

JUDGMENT.—The lower Appellate Court held that the suit was barred, because, a previous decree having to be set aside, before relief could be given, Article 144, Schedule I, of the Limitation Act was inapplicable.

Appellants contend that the previous decree need not be set aside being a nullity, inasmuch as it was obtained against them as minors with their mother as a guardian ad litem and her interest in the litigation being adverse to theirs, she was not competent to represent them with reference to Order XXXII, rule 4 (1), proviso. Assuming, but not deciding, that the mother had any sort of adverse interest, we are not prepared to hold that she was so wholly disqualified that her representation must be treated as no representation and the decree must be regarded as null and need not be set aside on proof of fraud or otherwise. No authority cited for appellants goes that length. Baij Nath Rai v. Dharam Deo Tewari (1) has been relied on. But in it the question was not whether a previous decision should be set aside, but whether it was res judicata, when it was alleged to have been obtained through the guardian's gross negligence; and it is not clear that the same considerations arise on the latter question as on the former. The other case mainly relied on was Khiarajmal v. Daim (2) and in it the Judicial Committee no doubt referred to decrees obtained and sales held when the persons directly concerned were not parties to the proceedings or properly represented as nullities. But the question is then, what constitutes proper representation, their Lordships not dealing with the point further except by reference to Kishen Chunder Ghose v. Musammat Ashoorun (4) in which there was no representation at all. On the other hand, in Walian v. Banke Behari Pershad Singh (3) it was pointed out that a defect in following the rule as to representation of minors was not necessarily fatal to the proceedings. We are not, in the circumstances, prepared to hold that any possible adverse interest on the part of the mother rendered the decree against the present plaintiffs, the minors, a nullity. It, therefore, has to be set aside and the present suit is out of time.

Next, it is argued that this suit should have been regarded as one against the second defendant to recover from him the advantage which he has realized as implied trustee for the plaintiffs during their minority. It is not necessary to set out in detail the facts on which this plea is based, or to deal with it on its merits, because it was not, in our opinion, relied on in the Court of first instance and we are not prepared to consider it for the first time in second appeal.

Lastly, the suit has been held barred on the assumption that time ran from the date on which the elder of the plaintiffs attained majority, consistently with Doraisami Sirumadan v. Nondisami Saluvan (5). Reference has been made to Nobin Chandra Barua v.

There, however, perhaps with reference to the Dayabhaga Law, the elder of the plaintiffs concerned was held not capable of giving a discharge and that case must be distinguished on that ground.

The second appeal is dismissed with costs.

Sreemutty RANGA SUNDARI DASYA, WIDOW OF SAGAR CHANDRA DE— PETITIONER—RESPONDENT.

Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), s. 50 —Probate, revocation of—"Just cause," meaning of— Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXII, applicability of, to uncontested probate proceedings.

The mother of a deceased testator applied, as his executrix, for Probate of his Will; general citations were issued and a special citation was issued to the widow of the deceased, who was then a minor, with a direction that a guardian ad litem should be appointed for her; her father was so appointed, and a citation was issued to him, but he refused to receive it when it was tendered to him. The Probate proceedings were uncontested; the Will was proved in common form and Probate was granted to the mother. For several years the widow received benefits under the Will, and some five years after coming of age, and more than six years after the grant, she applied for revocation of the Probate, the petition being signed by her father on her behalf. The Probate was revoked on the ground that no appearance was entered for the widow, and the mother was directed to prove the Will in solemn form. On appeal:

Held that the facts did not disclose any "just cause" within the meaning of section 50 of the Probate and Administration Act, and that the delay in bringing forward a case against the Will was fatal to the application for revocation. [p. 666, cols 1 & 2.]

Although, as a rule, when a Will, of which Probate is sought, affects the interest of a minor, a guardian ad litem should be appointed for the minor, yet, until a contest arises, Order XXXII of the Civil Procedure Code has no application to the proceedings. [p. 666, col. 1.]

The effect of Order XXXII is, that no person can be appointed a guardian ad litem without his express consent, and the question whether the person appointed as such guardian consented to act is always one of importance on the merits, and the refusal by such a person to accept a citation when tendered to him might be regarded as a refusal by him to act. [p. 666, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the second Additional District Judge, Dacca, dated the 26th June 1919.

Mr. B. Chakraburty, Dr. Basak and Babu Paresh Lal Shome, for the Appellants.

Babus Mohendra Nath Roy and Rajendra Chandra Guha, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the judgment and decree of the Additional Judge of Dacca, dated the 26th June 1919.

On the 13th March 1912 Probate was granted of the Will of Sagar Chandra De, who died on the 1st Aswin 1318 (18th September 1211), leaving him surviving his mother, his childless widow, then a minor, a minor brother and one or two married sisters.

The proceedings were not contested; the Will was proved in common form and Probate was granted to the mother as executrix.

The decree appealed from revokes the Probate and directs the executrix, the appellant before us, to prove the Will in solemn form.

The petition for revocation was presented by the widow on the 18th November 1918, more than six years after the grant of Probate. The petition was signed on the widow's behalf by her father, Srish Chandra Dhar. The widow was 16 or 17 years old when her husband died and came of age in 1312 or 1313.

The Additional District Judge has found that, after her husband's death, the widow continued to live with her husband's relations in amity and has only recently gone to live with her father, who occupies a house opposite the testator's, in the same street. The suggestion contained in her petition that she was on bad terms with her mother-in-law is unfounded.

As to the terms of the Will, no doubt the testator left the bulk of his property to his brother, but he bequeathed to his widow a lump sum of Rs. 1,000, and a monthly allowance of Rs. 5 for her maintenance. His estate was valued by the Collector at Rs. 6,595. He and his brother appear to have carried on a joint business as Poddars and to have inherited from their father, in equal moieties, a one-fourth share in holding No. 85 of khas mahal No. 8397 of the Dacca Collectorate. The rent due on account of the share was Rs. 2-1.

The Additional District Judge seems to have accepted an account produced by Nagar Chandra to whom, as residuary legatee, the executrix had made over the estate. The account, in our opinion, shows that Nagar debited himself with the sum of Rs. 1,000 and that he had made payments to the widow (amounting to Rs. 250) besides meeting various small expenses incurred by her. Nagar says that he offered to pay the widow Rs. 1,000 but at her and her father's request he took charge of the money and paid her from time to time such sums as her occasions required. He states that he executed a hatchitta for the whole sum in her favour and there is evidence in support of that statement. As early as March 1912 he paid the widow a sum of Rs. 43.

Moreover, in 1913 or 1914, in connection with the holding above referred to, Nagar applied for the registration of his name in the Collectorate in place of that of the testator. A surveyor, who was formerly Khas Tahsildar at Dacca, has been examined. He was ordered to make an enquiry. He enquired about the testator's heirs and sent for Sris Chandra who told him that neither he nor his daughter had any objection to Nagar's name being registered.

It is clear, therefore, that Sris Chandra and his daughter knew of the Will shortly after the grant of Probate. We are further satisfied that they were cognizant of the Probate proceedings.

The application for Probate was made on the 1st December 1911. General citations were issued and the District Judge further directed that special citations should be issued on certain persons, including the widow, and that a guardian ad litem should be appointed for the latter. Srish Chandra was so appointed, and it is not disputed that he was the proper person to act for his daughter. Her present petition describes him as her "guardian and protector." A note in the order sheet, under date the 19th February 1912, states that the notices had been issued and the service proved except in the case of a married sister of the testator. That lady subsequently filed a petition consenting to the grant of Probate to the testator's mother and the order granting Probate was accordingly made. In spite of Srish Chandra's denial, there is no doubt that a citation was served on him as the widow's guardian. The service is proved by the peon and by the evidence of two witnesses, one of whom put his name on the citation at the time. Srish Chandra refused to receive the notice and it was fixed on the door of his house.

There is, further, the evidence of a Pleader of the Judge's Court that Srish consulted him with a view to revocation of the Probate. He says Srish came to him four, five or six years ago, his memory not being exact. But it must have been soon after Probate was granted, because he advised Srish to wait till his daughter attained her majority.

The petition alleges that the Will was collusively concocted by the testator's mother and his surviving son, Nagar Chandra. In the course of his evidence, Srish Chandra stated that the testator was delirious throughout the whole of the illness, lasting 22 or 23 days, which ended in his death. He was the only witness examined for the widow and his statement was denied by Nagar and another witness on the other side The widow herself was not examined. An application for her examination on commission was made so late that the Judge rejected it. Allegations such as those made by Srish Chandra ought to have been made as soon after the event as possible, when the circumstances were fresh in the memory of those who had access to the testator. As he intended to revoke the Probate, the Additional District Judge very properly did not discuss this question. In the view we take of the case, it is right to say that, in our opinion, any attempt at this distance of time to establish, on such evidence as that of Srish Chandra, that the Will was a forgery would be hopeless.

It is important to observe, in this connection, that there is no suggestion that any facts subsequently came to the knowledge of the widow or her father which were not known to them at the time of the Probate proceedings.

The ground on which the Additional District Judge has revoked the Probate is that Srish Chandra entered no appearance for the widow. It is true that he refused to accept the citation when it was tendered to him, and if the refusal was not due to pettishness, as it often is, it might be regarded as a refusal to act for his daughter. But father and daughter were living close to each other and it is difficult to suppose that they were not in communication during the Probate proceedings. No reason exists why, if they had a case to bring forward against the Will, they should not have brought it forward at the time. The question is, whether the facts disclose "just cause," within the meaning of section 50 of the Probate and Administration Act, for revocation.

A citation for Probate is not a summons to appear. The object of citations, whether general or special, is to give those interested an opportunity of coming in, if they so choose, and contesting the application for Probate. Until a caveat is entered the proceedings are not contentious. Section 83 of the Prabate and Administration Act shows that up to that stage there is no "lis" and no suit. Until a contest arises, Order XXXII of the Civil Procedure Code, which is headed, "Suits by or against Minors and Persons of Unsound Mind," would seem to have no application to the proceedings. It has, however, been laid down in a series of cases in this Court that where a Will of which Probate is sought affects the interest of a minor, a guardian ad litem should be appointed for the minor [Walter Rebells v. Maria Rebells (1), Shoroshibala Debi v. Anandamoyee Debi(2), Dwijendra Nath v. Golok Nath Sarma(3)]. Such a rule may be expedient as a rule of practice. But it does not follow that every rule in Order XXXII is thus made strictly and legally applicable. The question here turns on rule 4 of Order XXXII, the effect of which is, according to the authorities, that no person can be appointed a guardian ad litem without his express consent. In an unreported case, in some respects similar to the present (R. A. No. 266 of 1917, decided on the 17th March 1917), Sachindra Narain Saha v. Hironmoyee Dassi (4), this Court had occasion to consider the application of the rule to Probate proceedings. It was held by Greaves, J., (Newbould, J. concurring) that the rule did not apply to proceedings which had not arrived at the contentious stage. The learned Judge came to that conclusion after referring to relevant provisions in the Probate and Administration Act and to statements of the English pratice in this connection to be found in Tristram and Coote's Probate Practice and Mortimer on Probate Practice. We do not understand that the further observations which the learned Judge made were intended to prescribe a strict rule binding in all cases. The question whether the person appointed guardian ad litem consented to act will always be one of importance on the merits. But we much doubt whether it is open to the Courts, or advisable, to lay down a strict and binding rule which would govern every case irrespective of its particular facts.

There are, however, circumstances in the present case which differentiate it from the case which came before Greaves and Newbould, JJ. It is proved that, for several years, the widow has received benefits under the Will, and we are of opinion that the facts in this connection afford a good ground for refusing to re-open the proceedings. Kunja Lal v. Kailash Chandr (5), Manorama Chowdhurani v. Soshi Mohan Das Mazumdar (6)]. We have no wish to curtail the privileges of minors but there is a danger of those privileges being abused at the instigaton of designing persons with interested motives. Regard must sometimes be had to the convenience, the feelings and the pockets of those who labour from the commencement of the proceedings under the disadvantage of maturity. In the present case, in our opinion, it would be unfair and unjust to the testator's mother to call upon her to prove the Will in solemn form. No just cause is shown for doing so.

Court-fee—Decree for possession on payment of money—Appeal—Relief asked possession without payment—Court-fee payable—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 149—Appeal filed on insufficiently stamped memorandum - Deficiency made up after expiry of limitation—Extension of time.

Where a plaintiff is given a decree for possession of land on payment of a sum of money and he appeals from the decree asking that he should be given possession without any payment, the Court-fee leviable on the memorandum of appeal is an ad valorem fee on the amount directed to be paid by the lower Court.

Where an appeal is filed in time on an insufficiently stamped memorandum, and on the deficiency being pointed out to the appellant by the office he disputes the order and does not make up the deficiency till long after the appeal is barred by time, he is not entitled to the benefit of section 149 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Amritsar, dated the 14th July 1919, reversing that of the Munsif, First Class, Tarn Taran, District Amritsar, dated the 20th March 1919.

Lala Fakir Chand, for the Appellants.

Lala Bakhshi Ram, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Mr, Bakhshi Ram raises a preliminary objection to the effect that the appeal to this Court is barred by time. The judgment of the lower Appellate Court is dated the 14th of July 1919 and the memorandum of appeal was presented to this Court on the 7th of October 1919, but as the Court-fee stamp was insufficient, it was returned in order that the deficiency might be made up, and was re-filed duly stamped on the 10th February 1920. On that date the appeal was barred by time.

BASDEO MAL v. KANHAIYA LAL.

The plaintiffs had sued for possession of certain land without payment of anything to the defendants. The decree of the lower Appellate Court was one for possession on payment of Rs. 150, mortgage money; in other words, it was a decree for redemption. In appeal to this Court the plaintiffs asked that they should be given a decree for possession without payment of anything. The proper Court-fee stamp upon the memorandum of appeal was an ad valorem one upon the amount of the mortgage-money and the office order returning it for making up the deficiency was a perfectly correct one. The plaintiffs could have re-filed the appeal within time, but instead of doing so they disputed the order and did not re-file it until four months later. Under these circumstances, I do not consider they are entitled to the benefit of section 149, Civil Procedure Code. I follow the cases reported as Amtul Qadir v. Muhammad Yusaf (1) and Lekh Ram v. Ramji Das (2).

The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

II—Arbitration—Award—Extension of time for submitting award, whether proper—Agreement to refer to arbitration—Party to agreement, whether can withdraw—Revision.

Inasmuch as a Court has jurisdiction to extend the time for submitting an award, the mere exercise of that jurisdiction does not amount to a material irregularity. [p. 668, col. 2.]

Once a party agrees to submit a dispute to arbitration, and the arbitrator proceeds to evidence, it is not open to him to withdraw from the arbitration [p. 668, col. 2.]

The adjudication of disputes by arbitration should be the result of the free consent of the arbitrator to undertake the duties of arbitrating between the contending parties who have agreed to repose confidence in his judgment. [p. 669, col. 1.]

The Court has no authority to compel a private arbitrator to arbitrate against his own will. [p. 669, col. 1.]

The mere fact, however, that a Court has used threatening language towards an arbitrator is not a ground for interference under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code in the absence of anything to show that, in consequence of such language, the arbitrator was forced to arbitrate against his will.

Civil revision from an order of the City Munsif, Moradabad.

Mr. Shiva Prasad Sinha, for Mr. J. N. Misra, for the Applicants.

Mr. Surendra Nath Sen, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This revision arises out of two cross-suits. It appears that on the 2nd of January 1919 the parties referred their dispute to an arbitrator, and on the 21st of January 1919, the arbitrator made a partial award and returned the papers saying that there were not sufficient materials before him to come to a finding on the other issues. The finding on the issue decided by him was adverse to the present applicants, the Court sent the papers back to the arbitrator directing him to proceed with the case and decide it on the evidence. The applicants sent a registered notice to the arbitrator prohibiting him from proceeding with the case and requesting him to send the papers to the Court. The arbitrator asked for instructions from the Court and the learned Munsif directed him to proceed with the case regardless of the notice. After this, an application seems to have been made by the present applicants in the Court below withdrawing from the arbitration That application was also rejected. The date fixed for the submission of the award was the 29th of March, but no award was submitted till then. Time was extended up to the 5th of April, but no award was submitted even then. A further extension was, therefore, granted till the 16th of April 1919, and a reminder was sent to the arbitrator. Neither any award nor any reply to the reminder was received by the 16th of April 1919. The Court passed an order that, inasmuch as neither the arbitration award nor any application for extension of time had been received, a registered letter should be sent to the arbitrator calling upon him to send his award by the 30th April 1919, or to explain or show cause why he should not be charged with contempt of Court. On the 30th April 1919 the arbitrator made his award. Objections were taken to the award, but the learned Munsif overruled them and passed a decree in terms of the award. The applicants have come up in revision to this Court and on their behalf it is contended, (1) that the Court below had no jurisdiction to force the arbitrator to act, he having returned the papers to the Court; (2) that the Court had acted without jurisdiction and with material irregularity in extending the time for filing the award from time to time without any application; (3) that the applicants having given notice to the Court and the arbitrator that they did not wish to have the case decided, the Court has acted without jurisdiction in accepting the award. As to the last two grounds mentioned above, we think there is no force in them. The Court, under the Code of Civil Procedure, had jurisdiction to extend time to the arbitrator to submit his award and we are unable to see any want of jurisdiction or material irregularity in the act of the Court in ordering such extensions. Once the applicants had agreed to submit their dispute to an arbitrator who had made a partial award and recorded some evidence, it was not open to the applicants to withdraw from the arbitration, and the Court below was justified in rejecting their application. It has, however, been strongly urged that, in view of the order, dated the 16th of April 1919, the arbitrator was forced to act in the matter. We have examined the record and we find that there is nothing to show that, previous to the order of the 16th of April 1919, the arbitrator had declined to act and that he was forced to make his award by the threat contained in the order of the 16th of April 1919. Under these circumstances, we find ourselves unable to set aside that order. Further, this objection was not taken in the Court below but has been raised for the first time in revision.

At the same time, we cannot refrain from remarking that the language used by the learned Munsif in his order dated the 15th of April 1919, was wholly improper and objectionable. The Court has no authority to compel a private arbitrator to arbitrate against his own will. If it had been a fact that the arbitrator had refused to arbitrate and that he was subsequently forced by the Court to arbitrate, we would have had no hesitation in setting aside the order of the Court below. As was pointed out in the case of Shibcharan v. Ratiram (1), it is one of the most essential principles of the law of arbitration that the adjudication of disputes by arbitration should be the result of the free consent of the arbitrator to undertake the duties of arbitrating between the contending parties who have agreed to repose confidence in his judgment. The Court below was, therefore, not justified in sending a notice to the arbitrator to show cause why he should not be charged with contempt of Court. At the same time, as we have remarked above, there being nothing to show that the arbitrator had previously refused to act in the matter and that he was forced to arbitrate by the threatening language used in the order of the 16th of April 1919, we find ourselves unable to interfere. The two applications are, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Application dismissed.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 85—Mutual account, what is—Advance of money by plaintiff—Grain sent by defendant to plaintiff for sale—Suit to recover balance—Limitation.

An account is mutual when there are transactions on each side creating independent obligations on the other. [p. 670, col. 1.]

Where the transactions create obligations on one side only, those on the other being merely complete or partial discharges of such obligations, the account is not mutual. [p. 670, col. 1.]

The absence of a shifting balance, however, is not conclusive against the mutuality of an account. [p. 670, col. 2.]

Plaintiff made advances of money to the defendant. The latter used to send grain to the plaintiff who used to sell it and, after deducting his commission, used to credit the balance to the defendant's account. He brought the present suit to recover the balance due to him on the account :

Held, that the suit was governed by Article 85 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act. [p. 670 col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Shahpur, at Sargoda, dated the 9th March 1920, reversing that of the Munsif, First Class, Sargoda, dated the 9th December 1919.

Mr. Nanak Chand, for the Appellants.

Mr. Mukand Lal Puri, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In the suit out of which the present appeal arises the plaintiffs' firm made advances of money to the defendants. The defendants are dealers in grain and used to send their grain to the plaintiffs' shop. Plaintiffs' sold it as commission agents and, after deducting their commission and other charges, credited the amount remaining to the defendants in the account. On the 17th of April 1913 the accounts were made up and the defendants struck a balance in the form of an acknowledgment. The plaintiffs having sued for the balance due to them on the accounts, the lower Appellate Court has held that the suit is governed by Article 85 of the Limitation Act and is barred by time.

The plaintiffs have filed a second appeal in this Court.

It is not disputed that if Article 85 applies the suit is barred by time, but Mr. Nanak Chand, on behalf of the appellants, contends that Article 85 is not applicable and that the suit is really one for money payable for money lent under Article 57 of the Limitation Act. He admits that the so-called balance does not amount to an account stated. Article 85 relates to a suit brought for the balance due on a mutual open and current account where there have been reciprocal demands between the parties. It has always been held that an account is mutual when there are transactions on each side creating independent obligations on the other and that where the transactions create obligations on one side only, those on the other being merely complete or partial discharges of such obligations, the account is not mutual. For instance, in the present case, if it were shown that the plaintiffs made advances to the defendants and that the defendants from time to time sent them consignments of grain in part payment, then Article 85 would not apply. Ganda Ram, plaintiff, who was called as a witness on behalf of the defendants, stated that the latter were grain dealers and that he was their commission agent. He said that defendants' grain used to lie at his shop, that he used to sell it and, after deducting his commission and other charges, the balance used to be credited to the defendants' account. He admitted that on the first Katak 1970 four bags of bajra belonging to the defendants came to his shop, and that their price was credited on the 3rd of March i.e., some months later after they had been sold. Mr. Nanak Chand relies upon the case reported as Ishar Das v. Harkishan Das (1). In that case the course of dealings was as follows. Plaintiff advanced loans to defendant from time to time and in re-payment defendant occasionally passed grain to plaintiff which the latter sold and credited to the former's account. After some months, the accounts were examined and a balance was struck in plaintiff's favour. It was held that the plaintiff's suit was on a closed account and not on an open one, and that it was governed by Article 64 or by Article 57 of the Limitation Act. In that case there was apparently no relation of principal and agent between the parties and the consignments of grain made by defendant to the plaintiff were merely made in part payment of the sums advanced. The facts were distinguishable from those of the present case He also referred to Shive Gowda v. Fernandez (2). That also was a case where the plaintiff financed the defendant and the defendant in re-payment sent consignments of coffee to the plaintiff. It was held that the accounts, though current and open, were not mutual within the meaning of Artile 85 of the Limitation Act. It was said that payments made on account by one party and credited by the other whether in money or goods did not render the account mutual and that there must be independent obligations on both sides to make the account mutual.

One argument urged for the plaintiffs' firm was that the balance was always in their favour and that the absence of a shifting balance was an indication that the account was not mutual. In Velu Pillai v. Ghose Mohammad (3), however, it was held that the absence of a shifting balance was not conclusive against the mutuality of the account. The same was the view adopted in Ganesh v. Gyanu (4). The case appears to me to be very similar to the one reported as Namberumal Chetty v. Kotayya (5). In that case the plaintiff advanced moneys to the defendant and the latter consigned goods to the former for sale on commission, and it was held that there were independent obligations on each side and that the account between the parties was a mutual, open and current account within the meaning of Article 85.

Now, even if the simple relation of creditor and debtor existed between the parties in regard to the cash advanced by the plaintiffs' firm to the defendants, the relation of principal and agent existed between the defendants and the plaintiffs in regard to the sale of the former's grain. Defendants' grain used to lie at the plaintiffs' shop and the plaintiffs had to account to the defendants for its price after deducting thier own charges. There was, therefore, an independent Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXII, r. 4 (3)—Minor, suit against—Guardian, appointment of—Consent of guardian, nature of—Minor, when bound by proceedings.

It is not necessary that the consent of the person to be appointed guardian, under Order XXXII, rule 4 (3) of the Civil Procedure Code, should be express; it may be implied from conduct, as, where notice is served on a person to show cause why he should not be appointed guardian, and he does not appear in answer to the notice appointing him guardian. [p. 671, col. 2.]

In the absence of anything to suggest that the interests of a minor have not been duly protected in a suit, and that he has been prejudiced by the appointment of a guardian, an irregularity in the appointment is not a sufficient ground for setting aside the proceedings at the instance of the minor. [p. 672, col. 2.]

Second appeal from a decree of the Second Additional Judge of Aligarh.

Mr. Piare Lal Banerji, for the Appellants.

Mr. Panna Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a defendants' appeal against a decree setting aside a decree. The former suit was brought on a bond against the members of a joint Hindu family by the defendants who obtained the decree. The suit was brought against the members of the family including the karta or managing member and also the other adult members and also their minor brothers, who were sued by name in their individual capacity. With regard to the minors the following steps were taken. With reference to certain minor members of the family notice was issued by the then plaintiffs, defendants to the present suit, to one Gulab to show cause why he should not be appointed their guardian, and, with reference to the other minor members, a similar notice was issued to one Jamna Das. These two persons did not give any express consent. On the other hand, they did not refuse. They remained silent. The Court appointed them guardians. They were already themselves parties to the suit as defendants. They were, as has already been pointed out, members of the same family, and their interest in the suit and their defence, if there had been one, were precisely identical with that of the minors. They did not appear in answer to the notice appointing them as guardians and the Court, under the circumstances, inferring, as was natural, that they had no objection, appointed them as guardians of the minors. In these circumstances, the suit was decreed against all the defendants, not ex parte in the strict sense of the word, but against the persons who were on the record as defendants but who, having no defence, did not trouble to appear, as an undefended suit. The question raised by this second suit in which the minors seek to set aside the decree is, whether the former decree ought to be held binding upon them in law. The lower Appellate Court, disagreeing with the first Court, has decreed the suit on the ground that the minors were not properly represented. It has based its finding upon Order XXXII, rule 4, sub-clause (3), which provides that no person shall without his consent be appointed guardian for the suit. These words are new in the existing Code and are stronger than anything contained in the old Code, but were clearly put in for the protection of the person whom it was proposed to appoint. The lower Appellate Court has held that the consent mentioned in that sub-clause must be express. It disagreed with the first Court in holding that it might be implied, and held that it must be obtained. In our view this is untenable. Many instances may be given from legislation where consent may be implied and is not necessarily to be expressed in any document or record, and it is germane to the argument to point out that in the order itself which we are called upon to construe another of the rules, namely, Order XXXII, rule 7, sub-section (1), dealing with the leave required from the Court for a next friend or guardian to enter into any compromise enacts that such leave shall be expressly recorded in the proceedings. It, therefore, appears that in these rules of procedure, which, after all, are only directory, where the Legislature requires something to be expressly set out in writing or recorded, it says so in so many words. The lower Appellate Court is right in holding that the amended form, which the Rules Committee of the High Court has recently directed to be issued to the proposed guardian, cannot of itself alter the law or make that binding upon the guardian which would otherwise not be binding; but in our view it is a question of fact in each case to be determined by the Court appointing the guardian, such determination of course to be subject to review in any subsequent suit challenging the appointment, where, under all the circumstances of the case, it can be properly held that the particular guardian did or did not consent or was not willing to act. We do not agree with the view of the lower Appellate Court that the absence of a proposed guardian to a notice calling upon him cannot, in any circumstance, raise the presumption of consent. Circumstances such as those which we have enumerated in this judgment are very strong to raise the presumption that the brothers in question had no reason for refusing, and had every reason for consenting, and by their silence did consent. That finding of fact has been established beyond dispute. The only question is whether there is anything in the eye of the law sufficient to justify that finding of fact. We hold that consent under this rule may be implied from conduct, and that it was rightly implied in the circumstances of this case. If this view is correct, there is no irregularity; even if there had been any irregularity, we should have considered ourselves bound by the authorities which have been cited to us to disagree with the lower Appellate Court upon the ground that no prejudice had been shown to the plaintiffs. Three authorities have been cited upon this point. We think that the rule which ought to guide the Courts in these matters is best sought in the observations of the Privy Council in the case of Walian v. Banke Behari Pershad Singh (1). It is true that that decision was under a different provision in the earlier Code of 1882, but in substance there is no distinction between that case and this, and their Lordships' observations must be accepted in their widest significance as applicable to all similar cases, whatever detailed variation may take place in the actual rules governing the appointment of guardians. They laid great stress upon the fact that there was nothing to suggest that the interests of the minor were not duly protected and it had not been shown that the alleged irregularity had caused any prejudice to the plaintiffs. There is a decision of this Court, in the case of Rambrichh Ram v. Tarak Tewari (2), in which it was distinctly held by Mr. Justice Piggott and one of us that, whatever the irregularity may be, the moment it is shown that there has been no fraud and that the minor's interests have not been prejudiced, the minor's right to set aside the proceedings must be denied. In the course of the argument Mr. Justice Piggott used an expression which we adopt:—"The question whether the minor was in fact prejudiced depends upon the particular circumstances of each case and does not necessarily follow from an irregularity in the appointment of a guardian ad litem." In the judgment of one of us it was pointed out that there are in these cases two distinct issues, (1) whether the appointment was itself irregular, and (2) whether the minors have been prejudiced by such irregularity. Following the decision in that case, and having regard to the fact that no prejudice was either alleged or shown at the hearing of this case in the Courts below, we should hold, in any event, that the plaintiffs have failed to establish their legal right to succeed in this suit. The decree of the lower Appellate Court must be reversed and the decree of the first Court restored with costs.

Appeal from the decision of the Joint Judge, Sukkur.

Mr. Rupchand Billaram, for the Appellants.

Mr. G. A. Kikla, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this appeal are shortly as follows: A certain Deumal had two sons, Bodaram and Lila. The former had two daughters and a granddaughter. The latter had a son.

The family tree is as under,—

DEUMAL.

Bodaram, (died 26-7-1897)= Hundibai, (died 18-1—1901)

Lilaram,

Kundanmal, (deft. No. 2) alias Khemchand.

Sat Bhawan, (died 1906) =Deumal,

Devibai =Narainlal.

Bodaram died on the 26th July 1897. His widow, Hundibai, survived him but died on the 18th January 1901. After the death there arose a dispute between Sat Bhawan on one side and Lakhambai and Lilaram on the other. Sat Bhawan filed a suit No. 1093-1901 in the Court of the Sub Judge, Shikarpur, asking for the partition of Hundibai's property and she alleged that it had been the self-acquired property of Bodaram and that she and Lakhambai were each entitled to a half share to the exclusion of Lilaram. The disputes were referred to arbitration; an award was made and a decree was passed in the terms of the award. By this decree all the property, with the exception of Survey Nos. 94 and 95 and a sum of Rs. 7,810, were divided into three equal shares. These shares were allotted to Sat Bhawan, Lakhambai and Kundanmal. Lilaram appears to have resigned his rights in favour of his son. With these three shares we are not concerned. The dispute before the Court concerned Survey Nos. 94 and 95 and the sum of Rs. 7,810. The decree provided that Survey Nos. 94 and 95 were to be turned into a property for charitable purposes. People in general will take rest on this property and a trough for watering cows will receive water supply from the well and people in general will take rest (on the land). None of the parties will be entitled to dispose of it. But the plaintiff and defendants (Sat Bhawan and Lakhambai and Kundanmal) will look after the said garden from time to time. The said land stands in the khata transferred by Shewaram vod Changomal. The parties will get the khata transferred by Shewaram to their names whatever expenses is incurred on it will be borne by the parties in three equal shares.

As regards the sum of Rs. 7,810, the decree provided that Rs. 1,310 should be given in charity, that Rs. 2,000 shall be spent in building a pacca well, a reservoir, a dome and in constructing a trough for watering cows. The remaining Rs. 4,500 were to be spent in buying shops and houses in Sukkur or Shikarpur. The rents to be devoted to sadavarat in religious ceremonies connected with Bodaram's death. The surplus rents were to be divided into three shares, of these, two shares were to be spent by Kundanmal for charitable purpose. The other share was to be taken by Sat Bhawan and Lakhambai and at first devoted to the expenses of Kundanmal's trees and, after Kundanmal's majority, to the expenses of the garden and well.

In 1906 Sat Bhawan died leaving a minor daughter, Devibai. In 1913, while Devibai was still a minor, her husband Narainlal filed a suit asking that her name should be substituted in the revenue registers in place of Sat Bhawan, her mother, for the two Survey Nos. ; that she should be put in joint possession of them ; that an injunction should be issued to Lakhambai, Kundanmal and Teumal restraining them from interfering with her right to manage the two Survey Nos. jointly with them. The first Court dismissed the suit on the ground that the Survey Nos. had vested in trustees and not in Sat Bhawan and Lakhambai and Kundanmal. The latter, so the learned Sub Judge held, had only been appointed to assist the trustees. Against this finding Devibai appealed to the District Court of Sukkur. The learned Joint Judge reversed the first Court's decree and allowed Devibai the reliefs prayed for by her. Against this decision a second appeal has been made to this Court.

Mr. Rupchand, who appeared for the appellants, advanced several grounds. The judgment of the lower Appellate Court, he said, did not comply with the provisions of Order XLI, rule 31. Devibai, as a minor, was not entitled to sue. The plea of Teumal, Devibai's father, that he had inherited by Will from Sat Bhawan had not been considered. Lastly, the lower Appellate Court was wrong in holding that Devibai could inherit the right to manage the garden.

I shall consider these contentions one by one. It is true that the lower Appellate Court has not complied with the provisions of Order XLI, rule 31. The learned Judge has not stated the points for determination and his decision thereon. I would, therefore, specially direct his attention to that rule as its provisions are imperative. At the same time, the learned Judge's omission does not amount to more than an irregularity, and can be amended by section 99 of the Civil Procedure Code.

As regards the minority of the plaintiff, the answer is that she has been represented by her next friend, her husband. It has been urged that, so long as she is a minor, she cannot fill the office of a trustee. She is, however, not suing as a trustee but as the heir to her mother, Sat Bhawan. At the present moment, moreover, she is admittedly a major.

The argument that the case should be remanded, that the lower Court may decide whether Teumal had established his case that Sat Bhawan made a Will in his favour is met by the fact that Teumal has not appealed to this Court. There is also a finding of fact by the lower Appellate Court, that the Will relied on by Teumal is not genuine.

There remains the main contention that Devibai could not inherit the right to manage the garden. Now it has not been denied that Devibai is the heir of her mother, Sat Bhawan. Whatever rights therefore, were possessed by Sat Bhawan were inherited by Devibai. But, so Mr. Rupchand has argued, the garden land was vested in Kundanmal's trustees, Maghaldas and Kundandas. Sat Bhawar, therefore, had no rights in the garden which Devibai could inherit. I have, however, read very carefully the decree and nowhere can I find any vesting of the garden land in Kundanmal's trustees. On the contrary, the decree has directed that the khatta should be transferred to the name of Sat Bhawan and Lakhmibai and Kundanmal. The expense of doing so was to be borne by them in three equal shares, the management of the garden was expressly conferred on Sat Bhawan Lakhambai and Kundanmal.

On these two was thrown the burden of defending the title of the garden and of paying any excess in its upkeep. The conditions therefore, resemble those mentioned in section 438, Mayne, wherein will be found the following passage:—

"Another state of things arises where land or other property held in beneficial ownership subject merely to a trust as to part of income for the support of some religious endowment."

Here, again, the land descends and is alienable and partible, in the ordinary way the only difference being that it passes and with the charge upon it. The same rule would apply where the owner retained the property in himself but granted the community or part of the community an easement over it for specified purposes.

All that the decree created was an easement in the community over the garden which they were empowered to use as a public park. The right to manage it, the right of ownership over it, remained with Sat Bhawan, Lakhambai and Kundanmal. On Sat Bhawan's death Devibai succeeded to Sat Bhawan's share in these rights. The lower Appellate Court, therefore, was correct in awarding Devibai the relief claimed by her.

Lower Court's finding and decree confirmed with costs.

Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), s. 35—Indorser, liability of—Notice of dishonour, whether necessary.

Section 35 of the Negotiable Instruments Act restricts the liability of an indorser to cases where notice of dishonour has been given to him : or, in other words, the fact of the bill of exchange being dishonoured and the intimation thereof to the indorser are conditions precedent to his being made liable thereunder. Second appeal against the decision of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Moradabad, dated the 21st December 1917.

Mr. P. L. Banerjee, for the Appellants.

Mr. W. Wallach, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs under the following circumstances :—

Some money was due to the plaintiffs by the defendant, in payment of which the defendant sent a hundi to the plaintiffs drawn by Tulshi Ram-Ram Baksh on Bansidhar-Manohar Lal in favour of the defendant. The plaintiffs endorsed the hundi to Raja Ram and Raja Ram endorsed it to Nanak Chand. Nanak Chand lost the hundi. Without taking any steps to obtain a duplicate of it he brought a suit against Raja Ram and recovered the amount from him, his (Nanak Chand's) immediate endorser. Raja Ram in his turn sued the plaintiffs and the plaintiffs had to pay the consideration of the hundi together with costs and damages. The plaintiffs now bring this suit to recover from the defendant the amount that they had to pay to Raja Ram in execution of his decree. The defence raised was that neither the plaintiffs nor the subsequent purchaser of the hundi took proper steps for realising the amount due thereon and it was owing to their negligence and improper proceeding that the money could not be recovered from the drawer. Another plea in defence was that the hundi was not presented to the drawee and, for these two reasons, the defendant could not be made liable. The first Court came to the conclusion that the plaintiffs were not bound to supply information of the loss of the hundi to the drawer and drawee, nor were they bound to ask for a duplicate and that there was nothing which would prevent them from recovering the money. The defendant went up in appeal and the learned Subordinate Judge, finding that it was admitted that the hundi was never dishonoured by the drawee and that the plaintiffs could have called for a duplicate hundi from the drawer under section 45 (a) or have demanded the money from the drawee under section 81 by giving security, came to the conclusion that, having regard to these facts, the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover the amount from the defendant, the defendant's liability being contingent upon the hundi being dishonoured. He, consequently, dismissed the plaintiffs' claim. The plaintiffs come here in second appeal. Section 35 of the Negotiable Instruments Act is quite clear and it restricts the liability of the endorser to cases where notice of dishonour has been given to him, or, in other words, the fact of the bill of exchange being dishonoured and the intimation thereof to the endorser are conditions precedent to the endorser being made liable thereunder. Mr. P. L. Banerji has contended that he was not suing on the hundi but he was suing for recovery upon a contract for which the consideration had failed. We do not think that he can fall back upon general principles when the case is expressly governed by the provisions of section 35. Moreover, we are not satisfied that the consideration in this case has failed at all. It is admitted that the hundi was never presented to the drawee and, under these circumstances, we cannot assume that the consideration has failed. We, therefore, think that the judgment of the Court below is correct and dismiss the appeal with costs including in this fees on the higher scale.

RAMZAN—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 105—"Affecting the decision of the case", meaning of—Arbitration, order superseding, whether can be attacked in appeal from final decree.

The words "affecting the decision of the case" in section 105 of the Civil Procedure Code, mean affecting the decision of the case with reference to the merits of it.

An order superseding an arbitration is not an order which affects the decision of the case with reference to the merits of it, and even if such an order is erroneous the error cannot be made a ground of objection in the appeal from the final decree in the case.

Miscellaneous second appeal from the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Jhang, dated the 21st January 1920, reversing that of the Munsif, Second Class, Jhang, dated the 10th December 1919.

Mr. Mokand Lal Puri, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff sues to have a certain decree declared void on the ground that it was obtained by fraud.

On the application of the parties the case was referred to arbitration, and the 17th April 1919 was fixed for the filing of the award. On that date the defendant was present but the plaintiff was absent, and as the plaintiff had not paid the arbitrator's fee the Munsif superseded the arbitration and dismissed the suit for default under Order IX, rule 8, Civil Procedure Code. On the 7th October 1919 the Munsif on the plaintiff's application restored the case to the file, and he then proceeded to try the suit on the merits and finally dismissed it.

The plaintiff appealed to the Senior Subordinate Judge, who held that the order superseding the arbitration could be attacked in the appeal from the final decree under section 105, Civil Procedure Code, and that it was an illegal order, and he remanded the case with the direction that it be referred to the arbitrator.

The defendant has preferred a second appeal to this Court.

The main question is, whether the order superseding the arbitration was one "affecting the decision of the case" within the meaning of section 105 of the Civil Procedure Code. If it was, it could be attacked in the appeal from the decree, otherwise not.

There is ample authority for the view that the words "affecting the decision of the case" mean "affecting the decision of the case, with reference to the merits of it," e. g., see Chintamony Dassi v. Ragoonath Sahoo (1) and Gulab Kunwar v. Thakur Das (2) and I do not find a contrary view expressed anywhere except in an obiter dictum of Karamat Hussain, J., in Nand Ram v. Bhopal Singh (3). That learned Judge referred to Gopal Chetti v. Subbier (4), but there was no discussion of the point in that judgment. It is clear that the order superseding the arbitration was not one which affected the decision of the case with reference to the merits of it, and I hold, therefore, that, even if the order was wrong, the error could not be made a ground of objection in the appeal from the final decree.

It is unnecessary to go into other points. I accept the appeal, set aside the order Mahabrahmans, offerings to—Contract to divide offerings, whether can be enforced.

No contract for the division of money or other articles received by Mahabrahmans in the way of charity is enforceable except as between the immediate parties thereto. [p. 678, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the third Additional District Judge, Lucknow, dated the 3rd December 1919, upholding that of the Munsif, Lucknow, dated the 12th December 1918.

Messrs. A. P. Sen and Salig Ram, for the Appellants.

Mr. Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a plaintiffs' appeal and the only question for discussion is, whether or not the suit, in so far as it related to a claim for what is known as Mahabrahmani rights, was maintainable.

Both the Courts below have held on certain authorities of this Court that the suit was not maintainable and have dismissed the claim to this extent.

According to the pleadings, Ramma, who died long ago, left three sons, Sheo Din, Ghure and Rupan. One of the plaintiffs is a grandson of Sheo Din. The other plaintiff is a grandson of Ghure.

Rupan, it is said, left two widows, Musammat Bhagana and Musammat Gulbasi. The latter died on the 22nd of July 1918, and the plaintiffs claimed that as reversioners they were entitled to succeed to such Mahabrahmani rights as were once vested in Rupan. The defendant claimed under a transfer in their favour made by Gulbasi.

So far as this Court is concerned, the law on the subject has been laid down in a Bench ruling to be found in Baddu v. Babu Lal (1). In this judgment various previous rulings of this Court have been referred to and discussed, including a ruling reported as Bhagwan Din v. Mani Ram (2). In this case it was held that where a third person makes a voluntary offering to one of the parties and the other party claims a share in it, that is not a suit in which a right to property is involved and the plaintiff is not entitled to recover any share of that offering except on the ground of a contract between the parties. In Baddu v. Babu Lal (1) it was held that where such a contract has been made a suit would lie for the breach of it. It was also held that a contract amongst Mahabrahmans with respect to the distribution of alms to be received in the future by the exercise of voluntary charity was not enforceable against the heirs or representatives of the parties to the agreement.

In the present case the allegation of the plaintiffs was that the right to receive the Mahabrahmani dues had been divided by an arrangement which was come to between the three sons of Ramma. According to the Bench ruling in Baddu v. Babu Lal (1) any rights based upon this contract or agreement cannot be enforced by the present plaintiffs against the defendants. The plaintiffs, however, have relied upon the ruling of a Single Judge of the Court reported as Raghubar v. Musammat Rukmin (3). The decision in that case appears to favour the plaintiffs' contention, but it seems to me that if due effect is to be given to the ruling of the Bench in Baddu v. Babu Lal (1) this latter decision cannot be followed. I agree with the reasoning of Mr. Greeven in the Bench case and hold with him that no contract for the division of money or other articles received by Mahabrahmans in the way of charity can be enforced except as between the immediate parties to the agreement. If the decision in Raghubar v. Musammat Rukmin (3) purports to lay down the law in any other sense I cannot accept it. It is true that other High Courts have taken a different view of the law but we here are bound by the law of our Court and the Bench case to which I have referred above seems to me to be conclusive in the matter. For these reasons, I hold that the decision of the Courts below is correct.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

The only case in which, under section 6 of the Limitation Act, an extension of limitation in favour of one person may be tacked on to an extension in favour of a second person is where the first person dies while still under a disability and the second person is his legal representative who is also under a disability at the time of his death. Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Rawalpindi, dated the 11th July 1916, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Rawalpindi, dated the 25th May 1914.

Mr. Horgopal, for the Appellants,

The Hon'ble Pandit Sheo Narain, R. B., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit by the four sons of Harbhagwan for a declaration that the sale of 53 kanals, 5 marlas of land effected by him on the 27th of August 1900 shall not affect their reversionary rights. The suit was decreed by the first Court, but the learned District Judge on appeal held that the claim was time-barred and dismissed it. The plaintiffs appeal to this Court. While the case has been pending in this Court, Harbhagwan, who was a defendant, has died ; this however, makes no difference to the case.

It is admitted that the Article of the Limitation Schedule applicable to this case is Article 120, which lays down as the period of limitation six years from the time when the right to sue accrues. The right to sue undoubtedly accrued when the sale was effected, i. e., on the 27th of August 1900, but at that time only the oldest of the four sons was in existence. This son, Lachhman Das, was born on the 27th of October 1891, so he was over 21 years of age when this suit, which was instituted on the 6th of May 1913, was lodged. Lala Hargopal, who appears for the plaintiffs-appellants in this Court, admits that the suit is barred so far as Lachhman Das is concerned. The second son, Sundar Singh, was born in or about 1904 ; the third, Saran Das, in or about 1909, and the fourth, Bodh Raj, in or about 1911. Thus, all three of these were born after the alienation, but Sundar Singh and Saran Das were born before their eldest brother had attained the age of 18. Lala Hargopal claims that the suit is within limitation so far as all three are concerned. He relies on section 6 of the Limitation Act, which lays down that where a person entitled to institute a suit is, at the time from which the period for limitation is to be reckoned, a minor, he may institute the suit within the same period after the disability has ceased, as would otherwise have been allowed from the time prescribed therefor in the third column of the First Schedule. Lala Hargopal argues from the words of the section that time did not begin to run against Lachhman Das until he attained the age of 18 years, and that, therefore, the time from which the period of limitation is to be reckoned is the date when Lachhman Das attained the age of 18 and that the minor plaintiffs are, therefore, entitled to the benefit of section 6. We are unable to agree with this contention. In our opinion, the words in section 6, "the time from which the period for limitation is to be reckoned," refers simply to the time specified in the third column of the Schedule to the Limitation Act. Lala Hargopal is really making an attempt to tack on an extension allowable to the eldest brother to an extension in favour of the younger brothers. Reading the whole of section 6, we are of opinion that the only case in which an extension in favour of one person may be tacked on to an extension in favour of a second person is, where the first person dies while still under a disability and the second person is his legal representative who is also under a disability at the time of his death (see clauses 3 and 4 of the section). There are various rulings which lay down that an after-born son is, like all other persons, bound by the law of limitation, but none of them seem to be exactly on all fours with the present case. Lala Hargopal raises the old argument that the right to sue cannot accrue until the plaintiff is born, but this is confusing the right to sue with the power to sue. In some cases the after-born son entirely loses his right to sue by the fact that he is not born until after the period of limitation has expired. So it is clear that the date from which limitation is to be reckoned cannot be postponed until the subsequent birth of the claimant.

Lala Hargopal has referred us to the Privy Council ruling published as Ramkishore v. Jainarayan (1). At the foot of page 978* the following paragraph occurs:—

"On appeal to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, the learned Additional Commissioner held that as the first plaintiff had instituted the suit within three years of attaining the age of 21, he was entitled to the benefit of section 7 of the Limitation Act of 1877, and the suit was not barred as against him, but he held that it was barred as against his younger brothers, who were born after the commencement of what he regarded as the adverse possession of the defendant, Jainarayan. It was, however, conceded before this Board, and, as their Lordships think rightly conceded, that if the first plaintiff succeeds in the suit his younger brothers born before a partition of the estate will be entitled to share in the relief."

This, however, does not appear to us to be a finding of their Lordships that the suit of the younger plaintiffs was within time, but merely a finding that the first plaintiff single-handed could succeed in the suit.

We hold that the three minor plaintiffs, not having been in existence at the time when the right to sue accrued, cannot take advantage of the provisions of section 6 of the present Limitation Act, and we uphold the District Judge's decision dismissing the suit, and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Bareilly, modifying a decree of the Subordinate Judge.

Mr. Shiva Prasad Sinha, for Mr. J. N. Misra, for the Appellants.

Dr. Surendra Nath Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The sole point in this appeal which has been argued before us is the question of consideration. The vendor owned property, the market-value of which was Rs. 1,250. He had borrowed from the vendee appellant a sum of Rs. 800 many years ago and had hypothecated this property as security. At the time that this sale was transacted, the debt due on the mortgage was Rs. 2,468. The personal remedy against the mortgagor had vanished by lapse of time. Therefore, this sum of Rs. 2,468 could only have been paid by the sale of the property. The vendor was unable to pay the debt and, as far as we can judge from the record, was not the owner of any other property. The vendee gave him Rs. 100 in cash and took a sale-deed of the property ostensibly for a sum of Rs. 3,000 and cancelled the mortgage-deed. A pre-emptor at once arose and the Court below has given him a decree for pre-emption on condition that he should pay Rs. 1,250, the market-value of the property.

It is urged before us that the vendee is entitled to recover the full sum of Rs. 2,568, that being the amount of the mortgage-debt, plus the Rs. 100 paid in cash. We agree with the argument raised on behalf of the appellant that the vendee is entitled to recover from the pre-emptor the full amount that he has in good faith actually paid for the property purchased, but we have to see what the appellant-vendee did in the present case actually pay. He gave up the debt due on the bond plus Rs. 100 for the propety. The value of the debt due on the bond is clearly limited to the value of the property in question. Nobody would have given to the vendee a price for his mortgage-debt greater than the security afforded by the property. Just as a time-barred debt is practically of no value, so a mortgage-debt, where the personal remedy is barred cannot be greater in value than the security itself. No one in the open market would have given the appellant anything more than Rs. 1,250 for his mortgage-debt. It, therefore, is clear that the amount which the appellant paid for the property is not the amount which was due on the face of the martgage-deed but the amount which was recoverable under the bond from the security. Nothing more than the market-value of the property could have been recovered. We, therefore, think that the decision of the lower Court was quite correct. The defendant-appellant, when he has received payment of Rs. 1,250, the market-value of the property, will be in exactly the same position as he stood after the execution of the sale-deed. On the execution of that deed the mortgage-debt was cancelled and the appellant stood possessed of property to the value of Rs. 1,250. The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—"Case", meaning of—Jurisdiction, decision as to—Revision, whether maintainable.

The word "case" in section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code does not necessarily in every case mean the whole case but may mean a particular branch of a case for which an independent remedy, or a different procedure, is provided by the Code.

Where on the objection of the defendant that the Court has no jurisdiction to entertain the suit the Court decides it has jurisdiction, the order of the Court does not amount to a decision of a case and no revision lies against it.

Petition, under section 44 of the Punjab Courts Act of 1918, for revision of the order of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Lahore, dated the 30th March 1920.

Diwan Mehr Chand, for the Petitioners.

Lala Tirath Ram, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs, who carry on business in Lahore, sue the defendant, who carry on business in Delhi, for damages for non-delivery of oil which the defendants had contracted to sell. The suit was instituted in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Lahore, and the defendants pleaded inter alia that the Court had no jurisdiction. The Subordinate Judge after taking evidence has held that he has jurisdiction. The defendants have applied to this Court for revision of the Subordinate Judge's order. On behalf of the respondents a preliminary objection is taken that no revision lies, and I am of opinion that the objection must prevail.

The revisional powers of this Court under section 44 of the Punjab Courts Act can be exercised only when a "case" has been decided; so that what has to be determined is, whether the lower Court's decision on the question of jurisdiction is a decision of a "case." If it is not a revision cannot be entertained even though section 21, Civil Procedure Code, may be a hindrance to the defendants from raising an objection as to want of jurisdiction in the appeal from any decree that may ultimately be passed against them.

It was held by a Full Bench of the Chief Court in Pandit Ram Kant v. Pandit Rajdeo (1) that the word "case" in section 622, Civil Procedure Code does not necessarily in every case mean the whole case but may mean a particular branch of a case for which an independent remedy, or a different procedure, is provided by the Code. In Mahtab Rai v. Kaman Lal (2) the learned Judges agreed with the construction put by the Full Bench on the word "case" and went on to say (page 241) that it was quite clear that the meaning of the word "case" could not be extended further. Following these authorities, I think it is impossible to hold that the Subordinate Judge's decision on the point of jurisdiction, with regard to which no special procedure is laid down in the Civil Procedure Code, is a decision of a "case."

The learned Counsel for the petitioners has referred me to Bhargava and Co. v. Jagan Nath Bhagwan Dass (3) which is undoubtedly in his favour. It was there held that the decision of a question of jurisdiction as a preliminary to the hearing of the suit, and after taking evidence and hearing arguments, was a decision of a "case" within the meaning of section 115, Civil Procedure Code. With all respect, however I am unable to agree with the view taken by the learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court, and I notice that in Sultanat Jahan Begam v. Sundar Lal (4) another learned Judge of the same Court remarked that he found it difficult to follow that view.

I hold that the order of the lower Court determining the question of jurisdiction, not being a decision of a "case", is not open to revision, and I accordingly dismiss this application with costs.

A testamentary disposition of joint family property by a Hindu co-parcener in favour of his wife is invalid under the Hindu Law, because on the date of his death, when the Will takes effect, there is nothing for the Will to operate on, his share in the property passing to the other co-parceners by survivorship. [p. 683, col. 2.]

Where a Hindu family consists of a father and his infant son, and the father makes an alienation of the family property, he cannot be said to have consented to the alienation in his capacity of guardian to his minor son [p 684, col 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Court, Nellore, in Original Suit No. 22 of 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. A. Krishnasawmy Aiyar (with him Mr. B. Somaya), for the Appellants.—A Hindu co-parcener cannot devise property by Will to take effect after his death, as, at the moment of his death, the property passes by survivorship to co parceners and there is nothing in the Will to operate upon.

See Vitla Butten v Yamenamma (1). It is one thing to make provision for the wife's maintenance during the lifetime of the husband, and another to dispose of a co parcener's share in family properties by Will. See also Lakshman Dada Naik v. Ramchandra Dada Naik (2), Suraj Bunsi Koer v. Sheo Persad Singh (3) and Lakshmi v. Subramanya (4).

Messrs. T. M. Krishnasawmy Aiyar and S. Varadachariar, for the Respondent.—A Hindu co parcener's testamentary capacity is co extensive with the right to make gifts inter vivos. The former follows as a corollary, given the existence of the latter right. In Appan Patra Chariar v. Srinivasa Chariar (5), the right of a co-parcener to make a Will of family properties was recognised.

At any rate, to the extent that it only made provision for maintenance to which the widow has an undoubted right, the Will is valid.

Mr. A. Krishnasawmy Aiyar in reply.—The decision in Appan Patra Chariar v. Srinivasa Chariar (5), does not affect the present case. In that case the former was recognised only where the other co parceners consented to the alienation. Here there is no question of consent at all as the only other member is the testator's minor son.

This appeal coming on for hearing on the 8th January 1920, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, C. J.—This is an appeal from a decision of the District Judge of Nellore giving the plaintiff a decree in a suit brought by her to enforce the provisions of a Will made in her favour by her deceased husband dealing with properties which, at the time when he made the Will, and at the time of his death were the joint family properties of himself and his infant son. The learned District Judge has held that the provision made by the testator for his wife would have been a proper provision for him to make during his lifetime, that such a disposition of joint family properties during his lifetime would have been good and that if he could make such a provision during his lifetime, he could equally make it after his death and he has relied on the decision of Sadasiva Aiyar and Spencer, JJ., in Appan Patra Chariar v. Srinivasa Chariar (5), which, as I shall point out presently, is distinguishable from the present case. Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar for the appellants has contended that it is now settled law that a co parcener cannot devise joint family property by Will because, on the date of his death, when the Will takes effect, there is nothing for the Will to operate on because at the moment of his death his share passes by survivorship to the other co parceners. That was very clearly laid down in Vitla Butten v. Yamenamma (1), where it is said, at page 12, "that the Will in the case referred to cannot take effect. At the moment of death the right of survivorship is in conflict with the right by devise. Then the title by survivorship, being the prior title, takes precedence to the exclusion of that by devise."

It has been contended before us, and certain general dicta of the Privy Council have been referred to, to the effect that testamentary capacity is co extensive with the right of making gifts inter vivos. That that principle has not a universal application is shown by the decision of the Privy Council in Lakshman Dada Naik v. Ramchandra Dada Naik (2), which expressly approved the decision of the Madras High Court to which I have just referred. At that time the view that prevailed in the Madras High Court was that a co parcener might, during his lifetime, make a gift of his undivided share (a view which has since has been overruled) and the Madras High Court held in Vitla Butten v. Yamenamma (1) that, in spite of that, he could not dispose of his undivided share by Will. The Privy Council in the case in Lakshman Dada Naik v. Ramchandra Dada Naik (2), says with reference to the case: "Its reasons for making the distinction between a gift and a devise are, that the co-parcener's power of alienation is founded on his right to a partition; that that right dies with him, and that the title of his co sharers by survivorship resting in them at the moment of his death, there remains nothing upon which the Will can operate. This principle was invoked in the case of Suraj Bunsi Koer v. Sheo Persad Singh (3), and was fully recognised by their Lordships."

This principle has already been applied to a case exactly such as the present by Muttusami Aiyar, J., in Lakshmi v. Subramanya (4). At page 492, the learned Judge says: "It is conceded that where a Hindu father disposes by Will of ancestral property, the disposition is inoperative as against his son; but it is argued that when the disposition made is in the nature of a provision for the maintenance of the testator's widow, the Will is valid. I am unable to adopt this view. The ground on which a Will in regard to ancestral or joint family property was held to be invalid in the case of Vitla Butten v. Yamenamma (1), is that, directly the testator dies, the co-parcener's right of survivorship takes effect and that a testamentary disposition cannot be permitted to prevail against that right. In the absence of the testamentary power, the contention that that power was exercised for the purpose of making a provision for the support of the testator's wife could not, in my opinion, validate the Will."

I respectfully agree with these observations of this distinguished Hindu Judge which, in my opinion are conclusive of the present case.

With regard to the more recent decisions of this Court, beginning with Kudutamma v. Narasimha Charyulu (6), that a managing member of a Hindu family may lawfully make certain gifts of ancestral properties to the female members of the family, I may merely point out that it is quite a different thing to say that he may do so during his life-time, and to contend that he may do so by a Will operating after his death. Where he does so during his life time, he is acting as manager and as representative of the family. If he is to make such gifts by Will to operate after his death, he is assuming a function which really belongs to the surviving co-parceners and he is purporting to exercise powers and perform duties which have devolved upon them, and it seems to me that if we were to admit the principle contended for, it might have very far reaching results.

As regards the decision in Appan Patra Chariar v. Srinivasa Chariar (5), I may observe that none of the authorities, which I have cited, are referred to there. Further, the case is distinguishable on the facts. In that case the alienation in favour of the daughter was made by the father with the consent of his adult son who was his co-parcener and also with the consent of the testator's wife who was the mother of an infant co parcener. We have, no doubt, been referred to certain cases in which the Privy Council have suggested that a Will which would otherwise be invalid might become operative by virtue of the consent of those co parceners: but no such question has actually come before them for decision. Looking at the matter on principle, it might seem that a Will made by one co-parcener with the assent of all the other co-parceners would be like a settlement or family arrangement between all the co-parceners to take effect from the death of the co-parcener who was the testator unless that co parcener, in the meantime, revoked it. It is not necessary to consider that question in the present case. After hearing very fully the arguments, I am satisfied that the Privy Council has never had to consider either that question or the question now actually before us. As I have said, the question of consent does not arise in this case where the only members of the family were the testator and an infant son. In such a case, I do not think an alienation of this kind can be supported on the ground that the father must be taken to have consented to his own alienation in his capacity of guardian to his minor son.

We must, therefore, modify the decree by declaring that the Will, in so far as it contains dispositions in favour of the plaintiff, is inoperative. The parties have left it to us to say, on the materials before us, what we think is a reasonable rate of maintenance, and I think that Rs. 30 a month is a reasonable sum and that amount is payable by the defendants from the 1st of January 1916.

The parties are not agreed as to the provision, to be made for the residence of the widow which is the subject of the 8th issue. Therefore, before disposing of the appeal, I must ask the Court below to return a finding upon that subject within two months; seven days will be allowed for filing objections. Fresh evidence may be taken.

As regards the 2nd issue, it has been found in favour of the plaintiff and therefore, the decree will be modified by giving the plaintiff the jewels, Items Nos. 1 and 2.

Maintenance will be charged upon a sufficient portion of the joint family properties to be determined by the Court below. A finding should be returned on this point also.

Costs reserved.

KRISHNAN, J.—I entirely agree with the learned Chief Justice in the order that he has just proposed in this case. He has dealt so fully with all the authorities that have been cited before us that it is quite unnecessary for me to go over them again. With all respect to the learned Judges who decided, Appan Patra Chariar v. Srinivasa Chariar (5), it seems to me that their decision is open to question. I was at first inclined that this question should be referred to a Full Bench for a final settlement, but, as pointed out by the learned Chief Justice, the present case is distinguishable from that case on the ground that in that case the consent of the adult co-parcener was obtained and the decision was, to a great extent, based upon that consent. Such a consent is absent in the present case. I also agree with the learned Chief Justice that the testator in this case cannot be treated as having acted as the guardian of his infant son and given consent to the arrangement made by himself in favour of his widow He did not purport to act as his minor son's guardian with reference to his Will, and to infer from the fact that he was the legal guardian of his son when he made the Will, that he gave consent to the provisions in it as such guardian will be, it seems to me, to introduce an unwarranted fiction into the case. This case being distinguishable from Appan Patra Chariar v. Srinivasa Chariar (5) we need not express a final opinion about it. As regards the other points in the case, I entirely agree with the learned Chief Justice and have nothing further to add.

This appeal coming on for final hearing, after the submission of the report of the lower Court that the parties filed a compromise petition regarding the two issues remitted by this Court for findings in pursuance of the order contained in the above judgment, upon perusing the said compromise petition, and Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 1199 of 1920 for leave to enter into a compromise on behalf of the minor 1st appellant and the record in the case, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—We sanction the compromise as beneficial to the minor.

In the result, we reverse the decree and pass a fresh decree directing the defendants to deliver up to the plaintiff jewels forming Items Nos. 1 to 10 of F schedule to the plaint or pay their value Rs. 1,800 and awarding to the plaintiff maintenance at 30 rupees per mensem from 1st January 1916 to be charged on the properties mentioned in the compromise, and further awarding her the provision for residence contained in the compromise. Parties will pay and receive proportionate costs throughout on the value of the properties claimed under the Will.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), s. 25—"Case", "decided", meanings of—Order setting aside ex parte decree—Revision, whether lies.

The word "decided" in section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act means disposed of.

The word "case" in section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, does not necessarily, in every instance, mean the "whole" case, but may mean a particular branch of a case for which an independent remedy, or a different procedure is provided and may include an interlocutory order.

A petition for revision is maintainable against an order of a Small Cause Court setting aside an ex parte decree.

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, for revision of the order of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Rawalpindi Cantonment, dated the 3rd January 1920.

Mr. D. C. Ralli, for the Petitioner.

Lala Madan Gopal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—An ex parte decree was passed against the respondent on the 19th February 1917. He applied on the 18th December 1919 to have it set aside. The Judge of the Small Cause Court granted the application on the ground that it was doubtful whether the summons had been served on the respondent. The plaintiff applies for revision of that order.

It is contended for the respondent that no revision lies, as the case has not been "decided" within the meaning of section 25 of Act IX of 1887. The word "decided" in that section means "disposed of" [Ramanathan Chetty v. Maruthuppa Kone (1)], and it has been held in Pandit Ram Kant v. Pandit Rajdeo (2), that the word "case" in section 622 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 does not necessarily, in every instance, mean the "whole" case, but may mean a particular branch of a case for which an independent remedy, or a different procedure, is provided in the Code and may include an interlocutory order. Following that judgment, the reasoning in which appears to be equally applicable to the construction to be placed on the word "case" occurring in section 25 of Act IX of 1887, I hold that the application for revision is maintainable.

The learned Judge of the Court below set aside the ex parte decree because he was doubtful whether the summons had been duly served on the defendant. But he did so without taking the evidence of the process-server or giving the plaintiff a chance of proving that service had been effected. The ex parte decree was passed on the 19th February 1917, and it was not till the 18th December 1919 that the respondent applied to have it set aside. The application was barred by limitation unless it was made within 30 days of the date on which the respondent came to know of the decree. The endorsement on the summons was against him, being to the effect that the respondent was present at his house, but refused to take the summons which was, consequently, attached to his door in the presence of witnesses.

I accept this application, set aside the order of the lower Court, and remand the case under Order XLI, rule 23, Civil Procedure Code, directing that Court to pass a fresh order on the respondent's application after taking the evidence that the parties may have to produce. Court fee on the application for revision to be refunded. Other costs to be costs in the case.

Application accepted.

Hindu Law - Joint family—Debt—Partition after incurring debt—Co-parceners, liability of.

Where after a debt is incurred for the benefit of the members of a joint family, the family property is partitioned, such partition has not the effect of relieving the co-parceners from liability for the debt to the extent of the family property in their hands. [p. 686, col. 2; p. 687, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Additional Temporary Subordinate Judge, Cuddalore, in Appeal Suit No. 173 of 1918 (Appeal Suit No. 123 of 1918 on the file of the District Court, South Arcot) preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Panruti, at Cuddalore, in Original Suit No. 83 of 1914.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. S. T. Srinivasagopalachariar, for the Appellant.—When the ex parte decree was set aside, the assignee-decree-holder was not entitled to relief on the re trial of the case. The decree as against 2nd defendant ceased to exist. The 2nd plaintiff should have obtained re assignment from 1st plaintiff of the right to continue the litigation against 2nd defendant. The right revived, on the setting aside of the ex parte decree only in 1st plaintiff's favour.

Mr. K. Bashyam Iyengar, for the Respondent.—On the assignment the transferee 2nd plaintiff, obtained all the rights of his transferor, the 1st plaintiff, which flow from his position as the holder of the property transferred. He was entitled to obtain a fresh decree if the decree in favour of the 1st plaintiff was set aside. The 2nd defendant impleaded the 2nd plaintiff as party in his application to set aside the ex parte decree. The 1st plaintiff consented to the 2nd plaintiff obtaining a decree on the re-trial.

The lower Court erred in not decreeing the claim against all the family properties. Partition between the co parceners after the incurring of the debt does not affect the creditor's rights.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The 2nd defendant is the appellant. The facts are shorlty as follows: The 1st plaintiff obtained a personal decree against the 1st defendant, the brother of the 2nd defendant, for a sum of money due to the plaintiff by both the 1st and 2nd defendants who carried on a family business, the debt sued on being a family debt due by both the defendants. He obtained a contested decree against the 1st defendant for the amount and he also obtained an ex parte decree in the same suit against the 2nd defendant to the extent of the family property in the 2nd defendant's hands. This decree (containing two reliefs) was assigned by the 1st plaintiff to the 2nd plaintiff and the 2nd plaintiff was recognised by the Court (on an application in execution) as the transferee decree-holder. But on that same date, on the 2nd defendant's application, the decree, so far as it was passed ex parte against him, was set aside and the case was posted for re trial so far as the 2nd defendant was concerned, with both the original decree holder and the assignee decree-holder as co-plaintiffs. On the merits, the facts were found against the 2nd defendant but the District Munsif gave a decree for only half the suit amount, against the 2nd defendant, making him liable (as before) to the extent of family properties in his hands, the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 having effected partition after the family debt was incurred but before the suit was brought. The lower Appellate Court confirmed this decree. Hence this appeal by the 2nd defendant, in which he has impleaded as respondent the 2nd plaintiff alone.

The contention on the appellants' side is that the Courts below had no right to award any relief to the assignee-decree-holder because the decree against the 2nd defendant which the 2nd plaintiff obtained an assignment of, was subsequently set aside on the application of the 2nd defendant, that decree, therefore, ceased to exist, and as 2nd plaintiff did not afterwards obtain an assignment from the 1st plaintiff of the right as creditor on which the 1st plaintiff brought the suit or of the right of the 1st plaintiff to continue the litigation against the 2nd defendant, the Court was not justified in giving a decree in the 2nd plaintiff's favour on the claim and on the right which revived in favour of the 1st plaintiff alone.

I think that when a property of whatever kind is transferred the assignee or transferee obtains not only the particular property described in the transfer-deed as transferred, but he also obtains in law all the rights of the transferor which the transferor then had to protect the title to the transferred property and obtains all appurtenant and subsidiary rights and titles flowing from his position as holder of the property transferred. That proposition seems to me to flow from a broad principle of general jurisprudence which has been recognised in numerous cases and is also mentioned in section 3, relating to transfer of property, at page 343 of Broom's Legal Maxims, 5th Edition. For instance, where two persons X. and Y. exchange properties A and B and the person X. who got the property B in exchange, afterwards conveys away the property B to a third person Z. who then loses his possession of the property owing to the absence of title in Y. The purchaser Z. can get back the property A from Y (to whom it had been given in exchange) on the right on which his vendor X. could have got it back, if he had lost possession of B before he sold it to Z. This transference of the effects flowing from a legal transaction from the property or right covered by it to another property or right substituted by law for it, or revived by law on the destruction of the property or right covered, can be illustrated by several other instances. It seems to me, therefore, that when the 2nd plaintiff got the assignment of the decree, he became ipso facto clothed with all these rights of the original decree-holder (1st plaintiff) which could be enforced by the latter for the protection of his rights, under the decree and for obtaining any fresh decree, if that decree is set aside and further entitled to stand in the shoes of his transferor for all purposes connected with and legally flowing from the right transferred to him (see also sections 8, 44 and 73 of the Transfer of Property Act which are placed on this same general juristic principle). In fact, the 2nd defendant himself recognised such a right in the 2nd plaintiff when he impleaded him as co-respondent with the 1st plaintiff in the 2nd defendant's application to set aside the ex parte decree. I am, therefore, of opinion that the lower Courts were justified in treating the 2nd plaintiff, as clothed with all the rights of the 1st plaintiff, when the 1st plaintiff was relegated to his rights, under his original claim, and to his original position, as a plaintiff, whose suit became still pending against the 2nd defendant, when the ex parte decree was set aside.

The next question argued was that because the suit was brought against the 2nd defendant, after the partition between the 1st and 2nd defendants, the 2nd defendant cannot be made liable even to the extent of the joint family properties of the 1st and 2nd defedants, which came to the possession of the 2nd defendant on partition. I think there is nothing in this contention, having regard to the decision in Ramachandra Padayachi v. Kondayya Chetti (1). In the result, the second appeal fails and should be dismissed with costs.

There is a memorandum of cross objections by the 2nd plaintiff. The contention in that memorandum is that the 2nd defendant is liable for the whole of the family debt to the extent of the family properties in his hands and not merely to the extent of half of the family debt. I think this contention is sound. The lower Courts have given no grounds which can be supported by any legal principle, for their confining the plaintiffs' rights against the assets in the hands of the 2nd defendant to half the family debt, the whole of that debt having been found to be binding upon both the defendants Nos. 1 and 2. The memorandum of cross-objections is, therefore, allowed with costs.

NAPIER, J.—I am not so clear as is my learned brother on the first point that was argued before us, namely, that although the decree was set aside, there still remained in the assignee decree-holder, a right of property which entitled him to a decree in his favour in the suit as re-tried. It would seem like this proposition carries with it also the further proposition that the 1st plaintiff would have no interest in the suit at all, and although I recognise the use of the words of section 8 of the Transfer of Property Act, I am not clear that it applies to this case. I am, however, quite clear that the judgment can be supported on the very simple ground which was relied on by the District Munsif. If the 2nd plaintiff was not entitled to a decree, the 1st plaintiff was entitled. He considered himself bound by his contract to assign the benefit of any decree, which would be passed to the 2nd plaintiff and he requested the Court to so pass a decree in favour of the 2nd plaintiff and the Court has accordingly given a decree in favour of the latter. I know of no reason why the Court should not do so, and I am strongly under the impression that it has been done frequently. I would, therefore, support the decision of the Subordinate Judge on that part of the case on those grounds. I entirely agree with what my learned brother has said about the legal laibility of the property of the 2nd defendant after partition, for it seems to be clearly established by Ramachandra Padayachi v. Kondayya Chetti (1) and Vinjanampati Peda Venkanna v. Vadlamannati Sreenivasa Deekshatulu (2) which explains that decision.

I also agree with my learned brother that the memorandum of cross-objections should be allowed.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 10—Khudkasht land, mortgage of—Ex-proprietary rights—Rent, rate of, payable.

A person who owns khudkasht lands in a village has the right to make a usufructuary mortgage of those lands, and after the mortgage he becomes an ex-proprietary tenant of the khudkasht land which he had cultivated for more than twelve years, and under the law he is liable to pay only ¾ths of the rent which is paid ordinarily in respect of non-occupancy holdings. [p. 688, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decision of the District Judge, Agra, dated the 29th of January 1918.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Gulzari Lal and N. P. Asthana, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a defendant's appeal arising out of a suit for profits against a lambardar, under section 164 of the Agra Tenancy Act. It appears that the defendant was in possession of some of the khudkasht land in this village and a number of suits for profits were brought against him. The profits of these khudkasht lands were calculated at Rs. 241-7-6 per year. On the 10th of August 1914 the defendant purported to make a usufructuary mortgage of the khudkasht lands in favour of a third party for a sum of Rs. 1,000. On the same date he executed a kabuliyat in favour of the mortgagee agreeing to pay Rs. 100 a year as rent for the ex-proprietary tenancy to which he became entitled in lieu of interests. The Court of first instance, in calculating the profits for the years in dispute, took Rs. 100, the agreed amount, as the profits for these lands. On appeal the District Judge has varied the decree of the Court of first instance and has taken the profits at the former figure, viz, Rs. 241-7-6. The defendant comes up in second appeal and on his behalf the decree of the learned District Judge is challenged.

When the defendant owned certain khudkasht lands in this village he had a right to make a usufructuary mortgage of those lands. On the making of such a mortgage by the operation of law he became an ex proprietary tenant of the khudkasht lands which he had cultivated for more than twelve years. The law gives him a concession and no one can deprive him of his right to pay only ¾ths of the rent that is ordinarily payable in respect of non-occupancy holdings of similar lands. In our opinion, therefore, after the execution of the mortgage deed it is not fair to the defendant that he should be called upon to give credit for the sum of Rs. 241-7-6 which had been taken to be the profits of these lands before the mortgage. The rent which he would have had to pay as an ex-proprietary tenant would be ¾ths of this amount which comes to Rs. 181-6-7½.

It appears, however, that after the execution of this mortgage deed in the mutation proceedings which followed under section 35 or 36 of the Land Revenue Act, the Revenue Court accepted Rs. 100 as the rent which had been agreed to be paid to the mortgagee. We may note that the present plaintiff was not a party to this agreement nor was he made a party to the proceeding under section 35 or 36 of the Act, and it is difficult to see why he should be held bound by it.

In paragraph 2 of the plaint the plaintiff had alleged that a fictitious rent had been caused to be assessed by all sorts of tricks and machinations in spite of the real amount of rent having been assessed on it, and in his grounds of appeal to the lower Appellate Court he stated that the agreement for payment of rent was collusive and fraudulent and was also void as being against the provisions of section 10 of the Tenancy Act. As this point has not been considered by the learned Judge we thought fit to go into the evidence ourselves and consider the nature of the transactions. On a perusal of the evidence and the terms of the mortgage deed and the kabuliat we are satisfied that the agreement was not fair to the other co sharers in the village, and the only inference that we can draw is that its object was to prejudice their rights. As they were neither parties to this agreement, nor were they parties to the proceedings under section 36 of the Act, and the agreement was clearly to their prejudice, they were not bound by this agreement which was entered into between the defendant and his mortgagee.

The correct amount of profits to be taken into account in calculating the profits of this village would be the rent which the defendant as an ex-proprietary tenant of these lands would be liable to pay to the proprietors; that sum, as has been noted above, comes to Rs. 181-6-7½ per year. We accordingly allow this appeal and direct that a fresh account be prepared and in that account the rent of khudkasht lands be taken as Rs. 181-6-7½ instead of Rs. 241-7-6 and the interest will be calculated on that amount. The office will prepare a decree in accordance with the above directions. The plaintiff would be entitled to interest at Rs. 12 per cent. per annum up to the date of the suit and thereafter at the rate of Rs. 6 per cent. per annum. The parties will receive and pay proportionate costs of this appeal in all Courts.

Appeal allowed.

Where a finding of the Trial Court is accepted by the appellant in his grounds of appeal, the Appellate Court has no power to go behind that finding. The fact that the appellant's Counsel was careless in drafting the grounds of appeal makes no difference. [p. 690, col. 1]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Amritsar, dated the 14th July 1919, varying that of the Munsif, First Class, Tarn Taran, District Amritsar, dated the 20th March 1919.

Lala Fakir Chand, for the Appellants.

Lala Bakshi Ram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In the case out of which the present appeal arises Wadhawa Singh and his minor brother sued for possession of a house and a vacant site adjoining it on the ground that the property belonged to them and had been given in exchange by one Budh Singh acting as their guardian during their minority to the defendants. Sundar Singh pleaded that the house was his own property and was not received by him in exchange. The first Court found that both the house and the vacant site were given in exchange by Budh Singh and, secondly, that Budh Singh had no power to exchange on behalf of the minors of whom he was not the guardian. The plaintiffs were, therefore, given a decree for the property claimed. Sundar Singh appealed to the District Judge who held that the exchange of the house had not been proved and that the oral evidence was not strong enough to justify the dispossession of Sundar Singh who had been in possession for many years. He accepted the appeal and modified the decree to one for possession of the vacant site only.

From this plaintiffs have filed a second appeal to this Court, and it is urged on their behalf that in his grounds of appeal to the lower Appellate Court Sundar Singh accepted the finding of the Trial Court to the effect that the house in dispute had been given in exchange, and that, under these circumstances, the lower Appellate Court had no authority to go behind that finding at all. The second ground of appeal shows that Sundar Singh did accept this finding. It is urged on his behalf that his Counsel in the lower Appellate Court must have made a mistake in drafting the grounds of appeal. It is possible that he was careless in drafting them, but they must be taken as they stand and in their presence, I hold that the lower Appellate Court could not interfere with the finding of the first Court upon this point. Budh Singh is not shown to have been a guardian of the plaintiffs who had power to dispose of their property and they are, therefore, entitled to repudiate his act. The Courts have concurrently held that Wadhawa Singh was under 21 years of age when he instituted this suit and this finding cannot be disputed in second appeal.

I accordingly accept the appeal and, setting aside the order of the lower Appellate Court, restore the decree of the first Court with costs throughout.

Appeal accepted.

*Hindu Law—Succession—*Bandhu—Last male owner paternal grandfather's mother's brother's grandson of claimant.

A person cannot be regarded as the bandhu of his paternal grandfather's mother's brother's grandson, and cannot, therefore, succeed to the latter's estate. [p. 690, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Tinnevelly, in Appeal Suit No. 53 of 1917 (Appeal Suit No. 511 of 1917, on the file of the District Court, Tinnevelly), preferred against the decree of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Tinnevelly, in Original Suit No. 266 of 1914.

The Hon'ble Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar, (Advocate General), for the Appellant.

Mr. S. Srinivasa Aiyangar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

NAPIER, J.—In this suit the plaintiff claims to be entitled as an heir to a moiety of the estate of one Ramsawmy Iyengar, deceased, and to set aside certain alienations as not binding on him. The sole question before this Court in second appeal is, whether the plaintiff is a heritable bandhu and is entitled to the estate of the last male owner.

The District Munsif has found, and there is no dispute on this point, that the last male owner is the plaintiff's paternal grandfather's mother's brother's grandson and has held that as such he is not entitled to inherit. The lower Appellate Court accepted that view.

It is argued before us that the statement to this effect in Dr. Sarvadhikari's Book on Hindu Law is not correct and that, even if it was thought good law previously, the decision of the Privy Council in Buddha Singh v. Lallu Singh (1) renders this view no longer tenable. I do not propose to consider the principles underlying sapinda relationship on which this plaintiff is excluded. It seems to me sufficient to say that the view taken by this learned text-writer is supported by a decision of the Calcutta High Court as long ago as Umaid Bahadur v. Udoi Chand (2). In that case the question which is at issue here was not directly at issue, but the Full Bench used this relationship as an illustration of a case in which sapindaship did not exist, and the principle they laid down was as follows:—"Although F. is within six degrees from the common ancestor yet B., the propositus, not being a descendant of the line of the maternal grandfather either of F. or of his father or mother they are not sapindas to each other." F. in the Calcutta case would represent the plaintiff in this case. It is contended before us that this dictum is obiter, which is true. But it is used by the Bench as axiomatic of the principles governing the relationship between the bandhus. Mr. Sreenivasa Iyengar, for the respondents, finds authority for it in Chapter II, section 6, placitum i, of the Mitakshara. His argument, is that cognates to be heirs must be one of the three classes referred to in the passage, i. e., related to the person himself, or to his father or to his mother. He admits that the persons enumerated in the placitum can be extended but he contends that the classes cannot be extended. The appellant contends that, on a proper reading of the passage, the plaintiff does come within the class.

I can only deal with this question on authority. If I found that the dictum in Umaid Bahadur v. Udoi Chand (2) had ever been doubted or departed from the matter would be different. But where I find it treated as axiomatic, and where there is no case in which it has ever been doubted, I cannot treat it as a mere obiter dictum.

In a later case in Babu Lal v. Nanku Ram (3) the decision in Umaid Bahadur v. Udoi Chand (2) and the rule expounded in Dr. Saravadhikari's Book to the same effect were referred to with approval, and the principles underlying bandhu relationship laid down in that case accepted. It was suggested before us that the decision in Umaid Bahadur v. Udoi Chand (2) was peculiar to Calcutta. But Babu Lal v. Nanku Ram (3) shows that it is based on the Mitakshara. Unless, therefore, a different view has to be taken based on the authority of the Privy Council in Buddha Singh v. Liltu Singh (1), the law laid down in Umaid Bahadur v. Udoi Chand (2) must, I think, be followed. The appellant contends that the decision of their Lordships in that particular case, that the term 'putra' includes grandson and great-grandson, must be generally applied and relies on a passage at page 616.* The words are: "having regard to the fact that this great legist, whose logical acumen, judging from his work, seems to have been remarkable, has used the term putra in previous parts of his book on inheritance in a comprehensive and generic sense, their Lordships find it difficult to conceive why he should arbitrarily and without any explanation have used the word towards the end in quite a different and restricted sense, or why, if his intention was to confine the descent in the case of the collaterals to the actual sons of brothers and uncles, he did not employ terms which would have exactly conveyed his meaning, such as atmaja or aurasa, which their Lordships understand, mean 'son of one's loins'." He contends that their Lordships intended to rule that in the Mitakshara whether the words of the Commentator or an original text are being construed the word putra must always include grandson and great-grandson. This is a very extreme contention. Their Lordships in that case were not dealing with sisters' or aunts' sons but with the case of sons ex parte paterna. It seems to me that the language of their Lordships at page 623* is the real summing up of their Lordships' decision. It is as follows: "They have already given reasons for holding that in the Mitakshara, as expounded in the Benares School, the word putra and its synonym employed by Vijnaneswara in connection with brothers and uncles must be understood in a generic sense as in the case of the deceased owner, and that the descendants in each ascending line, up to the fixed limit, should be exhausted, at any rate, to the third degree before making the ascent to the line next in order of succession." Their Lordships were undoubtedly dealing with a case of succession among agnates, as laid down in section 5 of Chapter II, and it is, if I may say so, perfectly understandable that, where the word putra is being used in connection with sons of males, it should always be given an extended meaning to include grandson and great-grandsons. But very different considerations arise in a case of succession of bandhus and I do not think we are entitled, from the general language used by the Privy Council on one page, to apply the principles enunciated with regard to agnate's succession to a case of cognate kindred where such application would result in the destruction of the principle to be found in the section dealing with the succession of cognate kindred. There must surely be a profound distinction between relationship in one gotra and the relationship in persons belonging to a different gotra. I cannot, therefore, hold that the decision of their Lordships in Buddha Singh v. Lallu Singh (1) has created a law of succession among cognates different from that which seems to have been accepted for a great many years. That is the view of the District Munsif in this case and I see no reason to doubt that it is correct.

(3) 22 C. 839; 11 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 228.

*Pages of 37 A.—[Ed.]

I would dismiss the second appeal with costs. One set.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The facts have been set out in the judgment of my learned brother, which I have had the advantage of reading before writing this opinion of mine. I have considered, in Subramania Mudalior v. Ranganathan Chettyar (4), the sloka about atma bandhus, pitru bandhus and matru bandhus which is attributed to baudhayana by one commentator and Vridha Satatapa by others. I have expressed my considered opinion in that case that the sloka is a childish and spurious text and that it is an illogical, incomplete and inconsistent classification of bandhus. Mr. Srinivasa Aiyangar, with great legal acumen and a wealth of legal terms of highly subtle meaning, tried to establish that the classification was not so illogical or inconsistent as I thought. I can only say that he has merely confirmed me in my view, though it may be that the subtlety and (what he called) the intricacy of the ideas involved in the classification make it so elusive as to escape the grasp of ordinary minds including my own.

As regards the case in Umaid Bahadur v. Udoi Chand (2) I recognise that it contains the opinion of a Full Bench of five Judges, of whom Mr. Justice Romeshchunder Mitter was one. But, as my learned brother points out, the passage in that judgment of the Full Bench relevant to the question which we have to consider is an obiter dictum. There is no discussion of the subject, and the obiter dictum is laid down as if it is an axiomatic truth. In the phrase 'maternal grandfather either of F. or of his father and mother,' found in the relevant passage, the word 'and' seems a clerical error for 'or'. The enumeration (in this sentence of the judgment) of the persons within whose category the male claimant's male ancestor (who is the nearest common male ancestor of the propositus and the claimant) should be found in order that the male claimant can be recognised as a heritable male bandhu is very incomplete. The persons enumerated are, (1) the maternal grandfather of the claimant, (2) the maternal grandfather of his father, and (3) the maternal grandfather of his mother (the claimant being lettered F. in the tree found in the end of the judgment.) The atma bandhus, pitru bandhus and matru bandhus, as given by the text already referred to, include the descendants not only of the three ancestors mentioned in the above sentence in Umaid Bahadur v. Udoi Chand (2) (which is the first sentence in the last paragraph of the judgment at page 128) but also of several others. The full enumeration of the male ancestors of the claimant F. (whose descendant is traced through a female or females from the common male ancestor) should, therefore, have been as follows (confining ourselves to that text for the moment): —

	Name.		Class.	Remarks.
1.	Father's Paternal grandfather	... ...	Atma bandhus.
2.	Father's Maternal grandfather	... ...
3.	Father's Father's Paternal grandfather	... ...	Pitru bandhus.
4.	Father's Father's Maternal grandfather	... ...
5.	Father's Mother's Paternal grandfather	... ...	Matru bandhus.
6.	Father's Mother's Maternal grandfather	... ...

The male heritable bandhus should be found among the descendants of these six ancestors, if the text is taken to impose a further restriction on the number of the heritable bandhus than the restriction already imposed by the general rule of restriction, that where the claimant claiming through a common male ancestor has a female or females intervening in the line of descent, he should be within five degrees of the common male ancestor. It is clear that several bandhus nearer than some of those enunciated in the text, such as maternal uncle, sister's son and son's daughter's son of the propositus, do not find a place in the text. I can only again express my regret that in Umaid Bahadur v. Udoi Chand (2) the learned Judges did not even indicate the chain of reasoning by which they arrived at the conclusion that the enumeration of bandhus in the text was not merely illustrative but restrictive and, if restrictive, how far and on what principles the restriction proceeded. The atma bandhus mentioned in the text are descended from the paternal or maternal grandfather alone but it has now been settled by decisions that atma bandhus might be the descendants of the father, such as sister's son or even of one's self, such as son's daughter's son.

However, I am reasonably certain that neither the old spurious text nor the commentators intended to impose any restriction on the number of heritable bandhus based on the limitation of the classes of the (male) ancestors of the claimant (in whose descent there is female intervention) from which ancestors the propositus ought also to be descended. But Umaid Bahadur v. Udoi Chand (2) by great ingenuity, did derive three such classes as following from the text. Mr. Sarvadhikari extended them and such farfetched deductions remained unquestioned for long. I might here remark that the text classifies only the claimant—bhandhus of the propositus, into three classes. If propositus A. is a bandhu (blood relation by cognate affinity) of the claimant B. claimant B. is also clearly a bandhu of propositus A. The relation of bandhuship of the claimant to the propositus is alone considered in the text relating to the class of heritable bandhus. But a further ingenuity has been elaborated, namely, that not only should the claimant be a heritable bandhu that is a bandhu restricted by the ingeniously evolved limitations deduced from the text but the propositus must also be a heritable bandhu of the claimant with the same limitations (that as we must hypothetically assume that the propositus was living and claiming to succeed as heir to the claimant who must be supposed to be dead for that purpose). In other words, the principle of so called 'mutuality' was to be further considered in these cases. Ingenuity calculated to make this branch of the law so obscure as to lead to mere gambles in litigation, cannot go further than this. I, therefore, consider, with the greatest respect, that the conclusion in Umaid Bahadur v. Udoi Chand (2) is fallacious. As I said in Subramania Mudaliar v. Ranganathan Chettyar (4), "when two irrational principles become the foundation of all further reasoning, it is no wonder that a branch of law based upon reasons themselves founded upon unreason becomes most unsatisfactory." But I do not wish to differ from the precedents unless I am convinced that any broad principles of equity, justice and good conscience are contravened thereby.

I feel that no such principles are at stake in considering these claims by remote relations to succeed to the property of a deceased man. In olden days, when the ties of relationship were very strong, and when agnates, even to the 14th generation sometimes lived together in one family commensality, the claim of a remote relation to succeed might have a basis on broad principles of justice, equity and good conscience. But in these modern days, when even first cousins rarely live together, I do not see any justice or equity in claims to inherit made by very remote relations, and I should be glad if legislation is initiated to prevent claims by bandhus not descended from the propositus himself or his father or his paternal grandfather or his maternal grandfather, so that even the persons specially mentioned in the spurious text of pitru bandhus and matru bandhus may be excluded.

In the result I agree that the second appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Custom—Succession—Vighmal Khojas of Shahdara—Females, exclusion of.

In the case of a family which belonged originally to a non-agricultural Hindu tribe, there is no initial presumption that the family is governed by custom. Among Vighmal Khojas of Shahdara, females are excluded from succession by custom. [p. 695, col. 1.]

First appeal from the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Lahore, dated the 21st of February 1916.

Sheikh Niaz Muhammad and Sayad Mohsin Shah, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Mr. Fazl-i Hussain, K. B., and Sheikh Asim Ullah, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the daughters and one widow of one Muhammad Bakhsh Sheikh (Khoja) for 81/192nd their shares under Muhammadan Law in property of great value left by Muhammad Bakhsh and his father Chiragh Din who died, the former on the 17th, the latter on the 22nd of December 1912.

The chief defendant is Muhammad Fazal Elahi, son of Muhammad Bakhsh, and the other defendants, viz., another widow of Muhammad Bakhsh and the widow of Chiragh Din, support him.

The defendants' main contentions were that, as he was a co-owner with his father and grandfather, the plaintiffs at the best were entitled to their shares in 2/3rds only, of the whole property, but that the family was governed not by personal law but by agricultural custom which excluded daughters from succession; further that the parties were Hindu Jats and not Sheikh Khojas.

The Trial Court found for the defendants on the first two points and against them on the third, and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit on the ground that they were excluded from succession by custom.

The plaintiffs have appealed to this Court and their main ground of attack is that the custom alleged by the defendants does not exist; that the attempts by the defendants to prove that they belonged to an agricultural tribe have failed hopelessly; that the evidence adduced by them is untrue and, even if true, is vague and insufficient to warrant a finding that the alleged custom exists.

The Court below has come to the following detailed findings :—

(1) that the family settled in Shahdara village and that it is comparatively unimportant whether the original settler came from Lahore or from Gopi Rai;

(2) that Hafiz Kamal, the ancestor of the parties and the first convert of the family to Islam, was a Vighmal Khatri and the parties are Khojas, i.e., converted Khatris;

(3) that the plaintiffs, by documentary evidence, have proved 21 instances among Khojas in which females secured their rights of succession according to personal law, of which instances one occurred in this very family, but that the defendants have proved nine instances in the family and 77 other instances among Khojas of other gots living in or having connections in Lahore, in which succession had been governed not by personal law but by custom;

(4) that the parties' family has agricultural traditions and associations and that the custom recited by the defendants has been proved.

We have heard Counsel for either side at very great length and the instances referred to by either side have been most meticulously and laboriously dissected.

Ground No. 4 of the appeal was withdrawn on an assurance given by the respondents' Counsel and accepted by appellants' that the necessary formalities have been completed.

There thus remain only two questions for decision :—

(1) Whether the family observed custom or personal law in matters of succession; and

(2) Whether the heritable property was two-thirds or the whole of the estate left by Muhammad Bakhsh and Chiragh Din.

On the second question the sole argument addressed to us is that the admission of Fazal Elahi into partnership should have been evidenced by some formal deed; but we need not do more than adopt the arguments of the Court below, especially as we hold that the appeal fails on the first point.

At pages 571 to 574 of the paper-book will be found a pedigree table put in by the defendant with his pleas, but not proved by him, whilst at pages 614, 619, 623 and 631 will be found pedigree tables proved by defence witnesses. Those pedigree-tables support to illustrate the instances of succession in the defendants' family.

With regard to the question whether Hafiz Kamal came and settled in Shahdara from Lahore or from some other place, we regard as the best evidence the statement in the Shahdara pedigree-table of 1868 that he came from Lahore. Oral evidence to the contrary must of necessity be of little value.

We find then that Hafiz Kamal about 1768 left Lahore and settled down in Shahdara where he acquired land by clearing the jungle. Many years later, his grandson, Chiragh Din, migrated back from Shahdara to Lahore where he was formally or informally adopted by Pir Bakhsh, his maternal uncle, and married a neice of his adoptive father. Though there is no proof of a formal adoption, there is clear and inconvertible evidence that Chiragh Din was known simultaneously as the adopted son of Pir Bakhsh and also the son of his natural father.

On these facts, inasmuch as Chiragh Din was a Vighmal Khoja and came originally from a non agricultural Hindu tribe, there is no initial presumption that the family is governed by custom, but having regard to the fact that its original religion (Hinduism) excludes females from succession in the presence of males and that the family took up land and lived for several generations outside a town it would be no matter of surprise to find that it had followed custom rather than a personal law involving the morcellement of landed property.

Now, the Court below finds that the defendants have established the occurrence in this very family of nine instances in which females were excluded and in addition have cited 77 other instances occurring in the brotherhood. As against this, the plaintiffs are found to have established 21 cases in which Muhammadan Law was observed, but of these only one relates to this family.

The lower Court, however, appears to have been mistaken in supposing that Exhibit P. W. 48 referred to this family. The Alla Bakhsh therein mentioned was not the Allah Bakhsh of Chiragh Din's family but belonged to quite a different family, so that we must hold that not a single instance, of the operation of Muhammadan Law has been proved within the family of the parties.

The lower Court, moreover whilst dealing with the defendant's oral instances has ignored the oral instances recited by the plaintiffs. These also we have had to consider in detail. They are, however, open to the objections which appellants have levelled against the oral instances recited by the defendants, namely, the evidence regarding them is vague; many cases are cited by only one witness and all the circumstances surrounding them are not disclosed. This being so, parties before us agreed that the oral instances recited by the one side might fairly be set against the oral instances recited by the other, so that we have to deal in the result merely with the documentary instances.

Now, a consideration of those instances shows that among Khojas Muhammadan Law is observed in some cases and custom in others, but the crucial test is that, whereas in this family, daughters in several cases have been excluded, in not one single case have they taken a share according to their personal law. It has been suggested by the appellants that the existence of some of these females mentioned by name, is mythical and that it is not clear that they survived their fathers. But even if the oral evidence on this point be discredited, it would be very strange if, in the many generations since Hafiz Kamal, there had been in this large family no females capable of inheritance.

If we examine the revenue record and pedigree-tables of the family in the villages of Shahdara and Gopi Rai, we find no trace whatever of succession by females according to Muhammadan Law, but we do find females succeeding under custom to a life-tenure on the death of their husbands, e g., Musammat Murad Bibi, widow of Arura, (page 238), who on her demise was succeeded by her husband's collaterals (page 594).

The defendant's instances Nos. 1, 2, 4, 8, 9 and 11, as marked by the Court below, are instances of the observance of custom in this very family and are established by clear documentary evidence. Moreover, the wajib-ul-arz of Shahdara village as well as that of Gopi Rai excludes daughters from succession in very clear terms.

The other instances proved by both sides are instances which occurred among the brotherhood in families with which the parties may or may not be connected by marriage; but it does not follow that the custom prevailing in those families would be followed by this family which, as we have seen, has had a peculiar history.

For the appellants it was urged that the late Chiragh Din had performed a Haj and, on more than one occasion, had expressed his adherence to Muhammadan Law. But those circumstances in themselves prove nothing, for all over the Punjab we find instances of Muhammadans who observe Muhammadan Law strictly on the religious side but in matters of succession most undoubtedly observe custom from the instances proved by the parties which have occurred outside this family, it is clear that among Khojas (who almost invariably are residents in urban areas) some follow custom and others their personal law, and on behalf of the appellants it is urged that, that being so, the instances occurring in this family are not sufficient to warrant a finding that the family follows custom, especially in view of the fact that, with the exception of Chiragh Din who achieved wealth, the other members of the family were poor and the shares that would have fallen to females of the family, had Muhammadan Law been observed, were of such little value that the failure of the females to insist upon their rights of succession under Muhammadan Law was susceptible of the explanation that the rights did not merit any serious struggle to obtain them.

It is true that in all the cases of exclusion of females proved in this family the value of the property which under Muhammadan Law would have fallen to each female was small but it must be remembered that to necessitous persons a property of even small value would appear something considerable and desirable. Moreover, the indications that the family followed custom do not consist merely of cases of exclusion of females from succession but also of other cases in which the succession that did take place was in accordance with custom but entirely opposed to the principles of Muhammadan Law, e. g, case No. 9 that of Miraj Din who succeeded his grandfather, Imam Din, in spite of the fact that Abdullah, father of Miraj Din, had predeceased his father, Imam Din.

From the foregoing it follows that the family of the parties, unlike most Khoja families, has agricultural traditions and that within recent times it inhabited not a city but a village and depended, at any rate, in some degree, upon agriculture for its maintenance. Indeed, many of its members are still villagers. Before its conversion to Islam, the family was familiar with the principle of the exclusion of females from succession and since the conversion not one single instance has been proved to have occurred in the family of a female succeeding along with or to the exclusion of males. On the other hand, there is, at any rate, one clear instance of the succession of a female to her deceased husband's estate on a life tenure in accordance with custom.

On this ground we consider that the finding of the Court below that the family to which the parties belong observes custom and not Muhammadan Law must be upheld and we, therefore dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Madras District Municipalities Act (IV of 1884), ss. 113, 117, 216 to 221—Municipalities, right of, to levy fees for transport of night-soil, from owner's premises.

Under the provisions of the Madras District Municipalities Act, IV of 1884, as amended by the Act of 1897, it is not the duty of the rate-payers to carry their night-soil from their premises to the Municipal depôt wherever situated. It is the duty of the Municipal Council to remove the rubbish and offensive matter from outside the occupier's building or land to the depôt which they are bound under the Act to provide, and they are bound to have covered vehicles or vessels for the removal of offensive matter, and it is illegal for them to charge any fees for such transport. JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The plaintiff, the South Indian Railway Company, Limited, is the appellant before us. The suit was brought for recovery of the total of the sums paid by the Railway Company to the Municipal Council of Trichinopoly between March 1912 and November 1914 for what are called private scavenging services performed by the Municipality for the Railway Company. I find that they are called 'scavenging fees' in the relevant notices, reports and bills (See for example Exhibit J).

The Railway Company own stations and offices at the Junction and Fort of Trichinopoly. There are several latrines and urinals in these places, and the washings and the night soil are collected by the Railway authorities through the Railway coolies into certain receptacles and a repository and into cisterns, the urinals being drained into cisterns. The Municipality owns carts and bulls and employs drivers to drive the carts to the Municipal night-soil-depot, which is situated at a distance of 5½ or 6 miles from the junction station. The so-called scavenging fees recovered from the Company seem to be the hire charged for the supply of the night-soil cart and urinal carts with bulls and drivers. Three night-soil carts and four urinal carts seem to have been usually supplied in the year 1913 and the hire charged for three night-soil carts is Rs. 55 a month and for the four urinal carts Rs. 62 a month. (See Exhibit A.2). (The requirements in previous and subsequent years have, of course, varied from what they were in 1913) The 2nd paragraph of Exhibit A.2 says:—"The nature of the service rendered is carting away the night soil and urine collected by Railway scavengers and kept in readiness in receptacles for removal." After going through the records carefully, I am satisfied that the claim of the Municipality relates to the cost of transport to the Municipal depot from just outside the Railway premises and that the removal of the night-soil and urine in the receptacles and cisterns from within the Railway compounds to just outside the compounds were treated as a negligible preliminary to the main work of transport to the depot. It may be that the hired carts proceed some distance into the Railway premises to receive the offensive matter and then go out to the Municipal road outside the premises and are then driven off to the Municipal depot at a distance of six miles, but the transport from inside the Railway premises to just outside those premises, assuming that it is done in the Municipal carts, does not seem to have been considered as a separate service chargeable by itself, any more than a cart driven charges for removing things from the verandah of a bangalow to the gate separately from the charge of conveyance to the Railway station. It is the employment of the carts, bulls and drivers in transporting the stuff to a distance of six miles which is the service which has been charged for and objected to in this case.

The plaintiff (Railway Company) contends in paragraph 6 of the plaint "that the provisions of the District Municipalities Act do not entitle the Municipal Council to charge fees for the transport of night soil etc., to their rubbish depot; and also that, in levying the fees in dispute from the Railway Company, the Municipality has not complied in substance and effect with any of the provisions of the District Municipalities Act. The Council in their written statement contended, among other defences which are unsustainable and which, therefore, need not be further noticed, (a) "The services rendered are such that the defendant Council is not in any view of the law bound to do the same free of charge. These services have been rendered throughout by special agreement between the parties and the defendant Council and avers that it would not have rendered them but for such agreement. (b) From the year 1889 the defendant Council has been doing the work of removal in and from the premises of the plaintiff Company under special agreements between the parties by which the plaintiff requested such specific services to be done in the manner and to the extent required by the plaintiff Company to suit their own convenience and by which they agreed to pay the defendant Council specified sums per mensem. (c) The defendant Council submits that the above said agreements are legal and binding on the parties and are further in substantial compliance with the provisions of the District Municipalities Act. (d) The suit is barred by limitation

As regards the removal "in the premises" as distinguished from removal from the premises of the Railway Company, I have already stated that the charge was not intended for removal "in the premises" themselves.

The learned Subordinate Judge's findings and the reasons for his finding are as follows : (a) Under section 216 of the District Municipalities Act, V of 1884 (as amended in 1897) the duty of making arrangements for the regular removal from the latrines and private houses of night-soil and other offensive matter is cast on the Municipality. The clause in section 216 "so far as the funds at their disposal permit" does not in any way detract or omit from the duty of the Municipality laid down in the section but has reference only to the extent to which the Municipality ought to make arrangements for the regular removal. The latter part of the section directs the Municipality to provide depots for the deposit of night-soil and other offensive matter "and also covered vehicles or vessels for the removal of the same." The duty of providing carriers, drivers and bulls, if required, for the removal of the night-soil and offensive matter from latrines and premises is also clearly laid on the Municipality in the discharge of the duty laid down in general terms in section 216. There is no duty laid on the rate-payers to provide their own bulls, carriers and drivers at their own cost for the removal of the night-soil and other offensive matter from their latrines and premises to the distant Municipal depots, and the contention of the Municipality that such a burden is placed primarily on the rate-payers is (to use the words of the Subordinate Judge himself) "as absurd as it is ingenious." (b) The contention of the Municipality that there was an agreement between the Railway Company and the Municipality for payment of the charge is unsustainable. No such contract has been proved and the contract set up is also unlawful, as a contract about scavenging fees can be made by the Municipal Council only under section 218 of the Act (as amended in 1897) and the payment of fees under such contract could be demanded only at such rate or rates as the Municipal Council may have prescribed with the approval of the Governor in Council ; and as the approval of the Governor in Council has not been obtained to the rates at which the hire for carts, drivers and bulls in this case has been charged against the Railway Company, the charge was illegal. On these findings the Subordinate Judge decreed the claim for the amounts paid within three years before suit dismissing the portion of the claim which related to the amounts paid more than three years before suit as barred by limitation.

On appeal the learned District Judge gave findings as follows :

(a) "My reading of the effect of the provisions" of the District Municipalities Act "is that the Municipal Council is ordinarily obliged to provide depots for the disposal of the night-soil, means of transport and an agency for assisting occupiers in collecting night-soil, etc., from their premises." (b) As occupiers of buildings or land are prohibited from keeping night-soil for more than 24 hours on their premises or land (vide sections 221 and 220) and they are liable to penalties for retaining it for even a shorter period if it be not kept in a proper receptacle it is the primary duty of the occupier to get rid of the night soil and "as I understand the Act he may make his own arrangements to convey it to the place of deposit" provided for by the Municipal Council. (d) "It is not disputed that the Railway Company entered into a contract with the Municipal Council under the provisions of the original section 209. It is clear from the correspondence that the charges were levied not for collection only but for transport as well. The charges were varied and increased from time to time. The contract was originally made in 1888 and payments on the basis of this contract continued to be made without objection till long after the amendment of the law by Act III of 1897. The first objections were raised in 1906. Then the Municipality required the Railway Company to enter into contracts under section 218 and was demanding fees for its services under section 218. They were admittedly paid and there is no proof that the payments were made under protest prior to 1912."

I think it must be held that an implied contract existed between the parties. There was, however, a defect, in that the fees had never received the approval of the Governor-General in Council. This approval was accorded in pursuance of Government Order No. 1322 of 5th August 1908. I am unable to agree that this approval was inadepquate. (d) It is further urged that the fees are illegal because they were not prescribed by the Council. As far as the record goes there is nothing to show that any resolution was passed by the Municipal Council as to the amount of the fees. (e) "I think the provisions of the Act were substantially complied with. A contract was entered into under section 218 and the fees were levied under this agreement."

On these findings which I have noted down mainly in the words of the learned District Judge himself, he allowed the appeal and dismissed the suit with costs throughout.

We have heard elaborate arguments on all the questions in issue in this second appeal preferred by the plaintiff Company. After careful consideration, I have come to the conclusion that this appeal ought to succeed. I am unable to agree with the learned District Judge that, under the provisions of the Act, as amended in 1897, it is the duty of the rate payers to carry their night soil from their premises to the Municipal depot wherever situated. I have compared the provisions of Act V of 1884, as originally passed, with the same provisions of that Act, amended by the Act of 1897. But it is unnecessary to set out the difference in detail as the learned District Judge himself does not rely on any contract entered into under the provisions of section 209 of the unamended Act, but only what he considers implied contract which he considers to be established under the provisions of section 218 of the amended Act. The whole correspondence in 1888 is not produced in the case and the single letter, Exhibit 2, written by the Collector, as Chairman of the Municipal Council, in 1888 states merely that "there should be a contract between the Municipality and the Railway Company to remove their night-soil and urine at a fixed rate," and that he proposed a rate of Rs. 12 per month for one night soil cart and Rs. 9 12-0 per month for one urinal cart, the rates being liable to variation in future years. Having regard to the language of section 209 of the old Act (which says that the Chairman may, subject to the approval of the Municipal Council, contract with the owner or occupier of any building or land to supply him on payment with a scavenger for the removal of night soil, etc.,) and to the fact that the Chairman did not get the approval of the Municipal Council, and supplied not a scavenger or scavangers, but carts, bulls and drivers, I do dot think that the contract implied by the payment by the Railway Company (or even expressly entered into as is said to have been admitted before the District Judge) at the rates mentioned in Exhibit II between 1888 and 1897 can be treated as made in accordance with any lawful contract (or contracts as the rates have varied) contemplated by section 209. However, as I said, section 209 was omitted when the Act was amended in 1897. The Railway Company objected in 1906 to make any payments thereafter and the District Judge relies, therefore, not on section 209 of the old Act, but on section 218 of the amended Act and finds an implied contract established under that section because, between 1906 and 1913 the Railway Company made payments without any formal protest. Section 218 says: "The Chairman may contract with the occupier of any building or land to remove night soil from latrines or cess pools therein or thereon, or to remove any other offensive matter or rubbish generally from such building or land, on such terms as to times and periods of removal and other matters as, to the said Chairman, seem suitable and on payment of fees at such rate or rates as the Municipal Council may have prescribed with the approval of the Governor in Council." I am clear that the contract intended under section 218 is an express contract and not an implied contract. Further, section 45 of the Act says: "Every contract made by, or on behalf of, a Municipal Council, whereof the value or amount exceeds Rs. 100 shall be in writing, and, except in the case of contracts made under the provisions of sub section (3) of section 44," (which has no reference to the present case) "shall be signed by the Municipal Councillors, one of whom shall be the Chairman or Vice-Chairman." There is no such written contract produced in this case and any contract which contravenes the express provisions of the Statute Law is clearly illegal and cannot be enforced.

I am further of opinion that section 218 relates to contracts with a rate payer for removal of offensive matter and rubbish from inside his building or land to outside the building or land with a view that that matter may be transported in the covered vehicles and vessels mentioned in section 216 (2) (which ought to be provided by the Municipality) and not the transport of the matters so placed in the Municipal covered vehicles or vessels from outside the building or land to the depots mentioned in section 216 (1). Even as regards the removal from within the building or land to the Municipal covered vehicles or vessels, fees can be charged only after the approval of the Governor in Council has been obtained. There is nothing to show that such approval was obtained in this case. The learned District Judge refers to Government Order No. 1322, dated 5th August 1908 as furnishing an 'adequate' approval by the Governor in Council. That Government Order is not on record, and even if it furnishes adequate sanction and was intended to be a sanction under section 218, the absence of a written contract signed by two Councillors and the fact that section 218 does not relate to the transport to the depot which is the contract now in dispute renders the levy illegal.

I am also clear that the District Judge was in error in holding that sections 220 and 221 imply that it is the duty of the occupier of a building or land to remove his night soil to the Municipal depot. Reading sections 216 to 221 together, I am satisfied that it is the duty of the Municipal Council to remove the rubbish and offensive matter from outside the occupier's building or land to the depot which they are bound under the Act to provide, that they are bound also to have the covered vehicles or vessels for the removal of the offensive matter placed at or pass by convenient positions on the road so that when what is collected by the occupants of the buildings or lands is placed by them in convenient spots (outside their buildings or lands) the matter can be taken into such covered vehicles or vessels by the Municipality and transported to the depots, and that it is illegal for the Municipality to charge any fees for the transport of such covered vehicles or vessels to the depôt. Even a written contract for such transport to the depot would, in my opinion, be void for want of consideration.

In the result, I would reverse the judgment of the District Judge and restore that of the Subordinate Judge with costs here and in the Court below payable by the respondent to the appellant.

NAPIER, J.—This second appeal arises out of a suit by the South Indian Railway Company to recover from the Municipal Council of Trichinopoly sums levied from them as scavenging fees and paid by the Company under protest. The Subordinate Judge gave a decree for Rs. 2,457-0 0 with interest. The decree was reversed by the District Judge. Hence this second appeal.

It is clear from the judgments in the case that the fees were levied for removal of night soil from the premises of the plaintiffs to the Municipal depot about six or seven miles from the town and it is admitted that, unless the levy of these fees can be justified under section 213 of the District Municipalities Act, it was illegal. The lower Appellate Court has suggested that they were payable under an implied contract. But no attempt has been made in this Court to support this view. The Subordinate Judge, in a long and elaborate judgment, has found that the Municipality have no right under the Act to charge the plaintiffs for removing night soil to their depot, and in this view, I entirely concur.

A minor question has arisen during the hearing as to whether the Municipality could charge the Railway Company for carting night soil over their premises as far as the public road. I do not think it necessary to express any final opinion on this point because Mr. Chamier for the appellants stated that the Railway Company would have no objection in coming to an arrangement with the Municipality for this limited work or, if such an arragement could not be made, would be prepared themselves to place the night-soil in convenient access to the public road.

As far as we can ascertain, the basis on which these fees were calculated was the supply of a certain number of Municipal carts and drivers for the removal of night soil to the depot above referred to. We have not got any account showing exactly how the figure was arrived at, but it appears from the previous correspondence and previous payments that this was the basis. Mr. Chamier contended that, under section 216, it was the duty of the Municipailty themselves to remove the night-soil to any place they chose over the public roads. Mr. Ramesam on behalf of the respondent stated two propositions: (1) that the Act intended to impose upon the house-holders in a Municipality the primary duty of removing night soil to any place, (I assume within reasonable limits) chosen by the Municipality and (2) that the Act threw no duty whatsoever on the Municipal Council in connection with the removal of night soil even though the funds at their disposal permitted. It is sufficient to say that an examination of the scheme of the Chapter containing the provisions which we have to construe negatives these contentions completely. Chapter II of the District Municipalities Act, 1884, as amended, creates Municipal Councils, vests property in them and states their mode of doing business, and Chapter III permits levying of certain taxes and tolls and provides the mode of realising them. Chapter IV lays down the purposes to which the funds raised under this Act shall be applied. We are concerned with the sections in Chapter IV. Section 113 says: "The funds raised under this Act shall.....be applicable within the Municiplities in which they are raised" to certain purposes one of which is "measures of public utility calculated to promote the safety, health, comfort or convenience of the people." From section 117 onwards are a series of specific provisions for the application of Municipal funds. Some of them are compulsory and some are permissive and all of them are, so far as the funds at their disposal may admit. The purposes are education, medical relief, vaccination, water-supply, repair of public streets and bridges, erection of buildings, provision of slaughter-houses and markets and public latrines and construction of drains." The 12th clause, beginning with section 216, is headed "General Sanitary Regulations" and section 216 is in the following terms: "The Municipal Council shall, so far as the funds at their disposal permit, make arrangements for (a) the regular sweeping and cleansing of the streets; (b) the regular removal from latrines and private houses of night soil, the carcasses of animals and other offensive matter; and (c) the regular removal from dust bins and private houses of dust, ashes, kitchen refuse and other similar offensive matter." It is to be noted that the removal from the latrines and private houses of night soil is put in the same classification as regular sweeping and cleansing of the streets. Therefore, unless the Municipality can show that the funds at their disposal do not admit of their doing the work of removal of night soil they are by Statute required to sweep and clean the streets. The section continues as follows: "and with this object, they shall, so far as the funds at their disposal permit, provide depots for the deposit of street sweepings, of night soil, the carcasses of animals and other offensive matter, and of dust, ashes, kitchen refuse and other similar inoffensive matter." These are the three classes referred to in the previous sub sections. They shall also provide covered vehicles or vessels for the removal of night soil and other offensive matter; vehicles or other suitable means for the removal of the carcasses of large animals and of dust, ashes, kitchen refuse and other similar inoffensive matter. This provision covers also the classes above referred to. And, lastly, they shall provide dust bins for the temporary deposit of dust and other similar inoffensive matter. This last provision applies only to one of the above mentioned classes. So that there is no duty under the section thrown on the Municipality to provide receptacles for night soil, carcasses of animals and other offensive matter, their duty being only to provide suitable vehicles for the removal. Then comes section 217 under which the Municipal Council may, by notification, require all occupiers of buildings to provide, within a period specified in such notification, moveable receptacles for the temporary deposit of night soil or other offensive matter. This section gives the Municipality the right to compel house-owners to provide the receptacles for offensive matter whereas under the previous section they are themselves compelled to provide dustbins for inoffensive matter. They may further, under section 217, require that such receptacles shall be in readiness screened from public view for the removal of the contents thereof free of charge by the Municipal servants. These provisions in section 217 are alternative to the Council having made a contract with a house-holder for the removal of nightsoil or other offensive matter. It was suggested that though section 217 might throw on the Municipality the duty of removing over the public streets night soil kept in temporary receptacles, yet if they did not choose to make any such notification the whole burden of such removal was thrown on the occupier. And, in aid of this construction, reliance is placed on section 218 which is the alternative to section 217, the language of which is as follows: "The Chairman may contract with the occupier of any building or land to remove night soil from latrines or cess-pools therein or thereon or to remove any other offensive matter or rubbish generally from such building or land on such terms as to times and periods of removal and other matters as to the said Chairman seem suitable and on payment of fees," etc. I am quite clear that sections 217 and 218 cover the same ground and that it is impossible to infer from section 218 that if the Chairman does not contract and if he does not by notification "require" under section 217 the duty is cast on the occupier of the building of removing night soil along the public road in spite of the fact that this duty is thrown on the Municipality by section 216.

Another section relied on by the respondent is section 221, which provides that: "Every occupier of a building or land who keeps for more than twenty-four hours, or otherwise than in a proper receptacle any night soil or other offensive matter in such building or on the roof thereof or in any out-building or yard or on any pavement or verandah attached or belonging to such building or on such land, shall be liable to a fine." This is the section relied on by Mr. Ramesam as being the legislative provision for which this portion of the Act, headed "General Sanitary Regulations," was enacted. As was pointed out above, this method of construction ignores the scheme of the Act and it is necesary, therefore, to read the section in such a manner as not to conflict with section 216, the opening section of this group of "General Sanitary Regulations." There is no difficulty in doing this. The duty of removal being thrown on the Municipality by section 216, the object of this section is to penalise persons who do not make arrangements necessary for the Municipalities carrying into effect their duty of removal. It also punishes the improper deposit of night-soil in any building which is offensive to public health. Section 220 which immediately precedes it indicates that section 221 must have a limited meaning for section 220 enacts that when a notification has been issued under section 217 and the house-holder has provided a moveable receptacle as required by the Municipality, then if he does not deposit therein all night soil or other offensive matter or keep the same in readiness, screened from public view, he shall be liable to fine. Section 220 having provided for cases arising after notification section 221 applies to cases where no contract has been given for the removal from a building or land and also I have no doubt for cases where such a contract has been made. It would be impossible to contend that, where a notification under section 217 has been issued and a suitable moveable receptacle supplied and kept in readiness screened from public view, there still remained the duty on the house-holder of removing the night soil from such receptacle over the public road. This has not been suggested but the alternative suggestion is, to my mind, as great a violation of the provisions, as this would be; for it amounts to this, that where a Municipality has not issued such a notification for the provision of the receptacles there is cast on the public the duty of removing the night soil from the latrines the whole way to the depot. It is obvious that if such a duty had been intended by the Act no Municipality would be so foolish as to incur the liability for carrying the night soil from the private premises to the depot in return for a provision by the house-holder of a moveable receptacle kept in readiness. I have little doubt that section 217 was intended to make the execution of the duty cast on the Municipality under section 216 of removal from latrines more simple in operation and I am clear that if the Municipalities do not choose to issue such a notification they cannot impose upon the occupier of the building a higher liability where no such notification has been issued then there remains the duty cast on the house-holder of making such arrangements as will enable the Municipality to perform the duties cast on them by section 216. This can be done either through a contract by the house-holder with the Municipality under section 218 or, in the absence of such a contract, the house-bloder may by himself make such a provision Whether the Municipality, in the absence of a notification under section 217, can be compelled to enter the premises and remove the night soil, etc., over the private land of a house-holder is a matter I do not propose to decide at present. But, bearing in mind that section 218 enables the Municipality to contract for this work, I am inclined to think that a house-holder cannot even under the wide words of section 216 throw this duty on the Municipality. Where we find two provisions, sections 217 and 221, under which a Municipality may by notification give directions for the removal to a place of access by carts of night soil and where under section 218 the house-holder can enter into a contract for this work with the Municipality, it would be strange if, in the absence of such a notification and in the absence of a contract, this duty was imposed on the Municipality. This question is not, however, before us and I express no final opinion on it. The fees were admittedly levied for the removal over the public roads to a Municipal depot and I am clear that the levy of such fees is beyond the powers of the Municipality. I agree, therefore, with the Subordinate Judge that the plaintiffs are entitled to recover three years' fees paid under protest and would restore his decree with costs of the plaintiffs throughout here and in the lower Appellate Court.

CIVIL REVISION PETITION No. 450 OF 1920.

THE FIRM KNOWN AND STYLED AS Haji PIR MUHAMMAD-SADR-UD-DIN, AMRITSAR, THROUGH SHAMS-UD-DIN—PLAINTIFF—PETITIONER

PIR MUHAMMAD SADR-UD-DIN v. KHAIR-UD-DIN.

(iii)—Small Cause Court—Procedure—Issues not struck—Case involving many questions—Duty of Court.

Although under the law a Small Cause Court is not required to frame issues, yet where the matter in dispute is not very simple and various questions arise for decision, the Court should indicate to the parties what the points are on which evidence has to be adduced and give them an apportunity to produce their evidence thereon.

Petition under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, for revision of the decree of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Amritsar, dated the 20th March 1920.

Sheikh Niaz Muhammad, for the Petitioner.
Mr. Ghulam Rasul, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The defendant bought a certain quantity of skins and took them to the shop of the plaintiffs, who are commission agents. The plaintiffs paid for the defendant the price due to one firm from which the defendant had bought some of the skins, and they sold all the skins for Rs. 262 2-3. They sue for what they allege is due to them on the account.

The lower Court has dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaintiffs acted without authority in selling the skins for so low a price.

The plaintiff applies for revision and the main argument on his behalf is that he was not given a proper apportunity of proving his case, the lower Court not having indicated the points which he was required to prove.

There seems to be force in this contention. It is true that, under the law, a Small Cause Court is not required to frame issues but the present case was one in which it was necessary to indicate to the parties what the points were on which evidence had to be adduced. The matter was not a very simple one, as there were various questions which arose. The defendant admitted in his statement of the 20th March that he had left the skins at the plaintiffs' shop for sale. He said he never permitted them to sell the lot for Rs. 262-2-3. But did he give any instructions at all or fix a reserve price? If not, were the plaintiffs justified or not in selling the skins for Rs. 262-2-3? The lower Court says they ought not to have taken the responsibility of selling so many skins for that price when they had paid a much higher price for a smaller number of skins to the persons from whom the defendant had bought the skins. But the skins were sold by plaintiff several months after the defendant had bought them, and questions may arise as to whether the price obtained for them by the plaintiffs was a fair one at the time when they sold them, whether or not they acted with reasonable diligence whether they should have sold the goods earlier than they did, or whether they should have waited longer than they did before selling.

Then, it is to be observed that in the pleas filed by the defendant on the 10th March the question of the authority of the plaintiffs to sell the goods for Rs. 262 2-3 was not raised, so that the plaintiffs could not be expected to produce evidence on the point at the next hearing. It was only on the 20th March that the defendant said he had not permitted plaintiffs to sell the skins for Rs. 262 2-3. The plaintiffs replied that it was not their custom to obtain such authority and that they had sold at the market rate. They were not, however, given time to prove that authority was not necessary, or what the market rate was on the day of the sale, but the Court at once proceeded to give judgment.

I think the case is one in which the points which have to be determined should be stated for the information of the parties, who should then be allowed to produce their evidence thereon.

I accept the application, set aside the decree of the lower Court, and remand the case to that Court, under Order XLI, rule 23, Civil Procedure Code, for fresh disposal with reference to the above remarks. Court fee on the application to be refunded. Other costs to be costs in the case.

Application accepted;
Case remanded.

CIVIL REVISION No. 133 OF 1919.

July 17, 1920.

Present :—Mr. Hallifax, A. J. C.

GANPAT RAO MOHITEY—AUCTION-PURCHASER—APPLICANTS

versus

KESRICHAND AND OTHERS—AUCTION-PURCHASER, DECREE-HOLDER AND JUDGMENT-DEBTOR—NON-APPLICANT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 86—Execution of decree—Sale—Auction-purchaser, deposit by—Failure to deposit balance of purchase-money—Deposit, when may be refunded.

Where an auction-purchaser, after depositing the required quota of the purchase-money, fails, for some good reason to the satisfaction of the Court, to deposit the balance, the matter is one in which the discretion given to the Court by Order XXI, rule 86 of the Civil Procedure Code, should be exercised in his favour, and the amount deposited refunded to him.

Civil revision against the order of the Additional District Judge, Nagpur, dated the 20th March 1919, in Execution Case No. 26 of 1917.

Mr. B. R. Pendharkar, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—Ganpatrao Mohitey, the applicant for revision, purchased a house at Nagpur in auction-sale for Rs. 3,030 on 29th November 1918 and deposited Rs. 875 on the same day as one fourth of the purchase money. This is slightly in excess of the sum required, which is only Rs. 757-8-0. He had to deposit the balance in fifteen days, that is, by 14th December 1918, but did it on 19th December 1918, five days late. His explanation which is accepted by the Additional District Judge and seems true enough, is this. Ten days after the sale he received a message to say that his brother and daughter had been attacked by influenza at Khursapar, about 30 miles from Nagpur, and he was obliged to go there at once and remain in attendance on them for some time. Also, while there, he suffered himself from an attack of malaria. He was unable to arrange for the payment of the money from Khursapar, but did so as soon as he was able to return to Nagpur.

On 6th February 1919, the date fixed for confirmation of the sale, the Court ordered the property to be re-sold because the balance of the purchase money had not been paid within the time allowed by law, and issued notice to the purchaser to show cause why the one-quarter which he had deposited should not be forfeited under Order XXI, rule 8[illegible], of the Civil Procedure Code. A payment of Rs. 3,500 by the judgment-debtor in part satisfaction of the decree was also recorded. On 20th March 1919 the learned Judge heard the purchaser but rejected his application for a return of the Rs. 757-8-0 and ordered its forfeiture, remarking that he ought to have deposited the balance during the ten days before the sale and his departure for Khursapar. He appears to have had in mind the principles laid down by Stanyon, A. J. C., in Kedarnath v. Zumberlal (1), that a litigant who leaves a matter to the last moment is guilty of negligence, and is not entitled to any consideration if some unexpected or unforeseen contingency takes him beyond the last moment. It is to have this order of forfeiture set aside that the auction-purchaser now applies in revision.

I doubt very much whether rule 86 of Order XXI makes it compulsory that a re-sale shall be ordered in circumstances like those of the present case, and leaves the Court no power to confirm the sale. This appears to have been assumed in the lower Court but we are not concerned with that matter, as the applicant asks for nothing but the setting aside of the order of forfeiture and the return of his Rs. 757-8-0, and this appears to me very clearly a case in which the discretion given to the Court by Order XXI, rule 86, ought to have been exercised in his favour. Leaving the payment to the tenth day of the fifteen allowed does not indicate that negligence of which Stanyon, A. J. C., spoke in Kedarnath v. Zumberlal (1). It is accepted as true that he was unable to send the money from Khursapar or get it paid in by some other person, and his good faith is sufficiently established by his having deposited it immediately on his return to Nagpur only five days late.

It is further to be noted that the wording of rule 86 of Order XXI clearly indicates an intention that it is not forfeiture which is to be regarded as the normal course in the absence of cause shown to the contrary, but rather the return of the money to the auction-purchaser. Forfeiture, the rule says, may be ordered if the Court thinks fit and such forfeiture can only be justified as a penalty in order to prevent that laxity and delay which result in waste of the time of the Court and the parties. It must not be used as a means of bringing money into the coffers of the Government. Here there was delay but no laxity. For these reasons, I think the learned Judge was wrong in exercising the discretion vested in him by Order XXI, rule 86, in the way he did. The order of forfeiture is accordingly set aside and it is ordered that the sum of Rs. 757 8 0, after defraying the expenses of the sale thereout, shall be refunded to the applicant. As the non-applicants were not really interested in the matter at all and made no appearance, I make no order as to costs.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Montgomery, at Lahore, dated the 7th January 1920, affirming that of the Munsif, 1st Class, Montgomery, dated the 4th August 1919.

Mr. Kanwar Narain, for the Appellant.

Mr. Badar-ud-Din Qureshi, for Mr. Brij Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case one Bul Chand had four sons of whom plaintiff and defendant No. 3 were the issue of one mother and defendants Nos. 1 and 2 of another mother. There were constant disputes between the two branches of the family and Bul Chand in his lifetime divided the bulk of his moveable property, giving outstanding debts of Rs. 9,000 to the plaintiff and defendant No. 3 and the same share to defendants Nos. 1 and 2 who were both minors. After this, Bul Chand and his two minor sons continued to live together and Bul Chand managed their property for them. He has now died and the dispute is with regard to the property left by him. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 stated that Bul Chand remained joint with his two minor sons and that they were therefore, entitled to the property left by him. This was found to be the case by the first Court, and the lower Appellate Court, in a judgment which has dealt little with the point in dispute, has agreed with the first Court and against this decision a second appeal has been preferred on the ground that the decision is not based on the evidence on the record and that, although it is a finding of fact, it is liable to be set aside.

After a perusal of the record I find that, as a matter of fact, there is no justification whatever for the finding of the lower Appellate Court. Defendant No. 2 as a witness himself admitted that all the four sons were heirs of their father. Defendant No. 1 in a case decided after Bul Chand's death Punjab Ram versus Bul Chand, made two applications for the decree being set aside and for the impleading of Bul Chand's four sons as his legal representatives. There were only two witnesses for the defence produced in the case, viz., Dogar Ram, a grand-uncle, and Mangu Ram. They both stated that, after the partition of the moveable property, Bul Chand kept some outstandings as his own share. Further, after the division of the outstandings during Bul Chand's lifetime he himself sold on behalf of his minor sons their share, viz, Rs. 9,000, to the plaintiff. A dispute followed and Bul Chand had to sue defendant No. 1 and in his suit he described himself as the next friend of the minors. All these facts show beyond any doubt whatever that Bul Chand did not remain joint or re-unite himself with his two minor sons. The judgment of the lower Appellate Court is, therefore, contrary to law, inasmuch as it is entirely opposed to the evidence on the record. It is also liable to be set aside on second appeal as the question of the re-union of a Hindu family and the facts relevant to prove such a re-union is a matter of law.

The lower Appellate Court also erred in deciding that "there is no evidence as to the amount said by the plaintiff to be due under bahis, etc., no such bahis being produced nor deeds, etc. As to the ornaments and cattle, etc., there is no evidence on the record as to this, what it is or where it is." This point was not in issue between the parties, as the first Court merely framed one preliminary issue as to whether Bal Chand remained joint with his minor sons.

I accept this appeal and hold that the plaintiff has proved that he is entitled to a share of the moveables left by Bal Chand and remand the case to the Trial Court for a decision as to the value of these moveables. The costs of this appeal will be costs in the cause and the Court-fee on the memorandum of appeal be refunded.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 116—Lessee denying title of lessor to lease—Estoppel.

Where a person executes a lease in favour of another, he is estopped from denying that other's title to grant the lease, it being immaterial whether he was the tenant of some other person before the execution of the lease.

Appeal from the decree of the Additional District Judge, Akola, in Civil Appeal No. 7 of 1919, dated the 12th April 1919.

Mr. D. T. Mangalmurti, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Sir Bepin Krishna Bose, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff alleged that the fields in suit had been leased to the defendant for one year. The defendant denied the lease and denied plaintiff's title to lease. He stated that he had been holding from the rightful owner for about 25 years. In a rejoinder the plaintiff did not deny that the defendant had been in possession for many years but relied on the fact that the lease was in his favour. The learned Sub-Judge held that the defendant had executed the lease in favour of the plaintiff and that the defendant was estopped from questioning plaintiff's right to sue. He, therefore, passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff. This decree was upheld in first appeal.

In second appeal it is urged that, as the defendant had been in possession for long, section 116 of the Indian Evidence Act had no application. The point in issue is discussed on pages 799 and 801 of Woodroffe and Ameer Ali's Law of Evidence, 6th Edition. A tenant who was already in possession but had paid rent or otherwise acknowledged the tenancy is entitled to show that he did so through ignorance, fraud, misrepresentation or mistake. But where in a suit for rent the tenant denied the execution of the kabuliyat propounded by the plaintiffs, pleaded that it was forged and denied payment of rent under it to the plaintiffs and failed to establish these pleas, it was held that the tenant was not entitled to prove that the plaintiffs were not his landlords although he had not been inducted into the land by the plaintiffs.

In the present case the first question to be considered is, whether the defendant was a tenant of the plaintiff. As he did not come into possession by the license of the person in possession he is not debarred from challenging the title of the plaintiff unless he is a tenant, but there is a finding of fact, which is binding upon me, that the defendant executed the kabuliyat. He might have urged that he had executed under fraud or coercion but he has not done so. In virtue of the admission in the kabuliyat it must be held that he is the tenant of the plaintiff. This tenancy commenced when the kabuliyat was executed. It is immaterial whether he was the tenant of some other person before execution. He cannot, therefore, deny the title of the plaintiff.

The remaining grounds of appeal need no further consideration. Section 116 of of the Evidence Act estops the defendant from disputing the facts which these grounds urge should have been decided.

The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed. Costs on appellant.

Interest—Agreement to pay interest, absence of, effect of—Delay in bringing suit, effect of.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Lyallpore, dated the 5th August 1919, reversing that of the Munsif, First Class, Jhang, dated the 31st March 1919.

Messrs. Des Raj Sawhney and Mukand Lal Puri, for the Appellant.

Mr. Devi Dayal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff sued upon a balance of Rs. 500. The lower Appellate Court has held that this balance is not proved but that a previous entry of Rs. 402-2-4 is proved and has accordingly granted a decree for this sum but has refused any claim to interest. The balance in question was dated 27th December 1913. The lower Appellate Court has refused interest on the grounds that it is not shown that any rate of interest was specifically agreed upon; that the plaintiff has unnecessarily delayed the case, and that he has already charged some interest as kat. Finally, he says that he is not sure whether the item of Rs. 292 was paid in full. As for the lower Appellate Court's remark that it is not sure that Rs. 292 were paid in full, this remark cannot be considered seriously owing to the fact that the defendants themselves admitted this item. The delay in bringing the suit is no good ground for refusing interest; the defendants have had the use of the plaintiff's money. Lastly, the District Judge was uncertain whether interest was specifically agreed upon, and this appears to be a finding of fact that no specific rate of interest was agreed upon. It, therefore, remains to consider whether, legally, interest should have been granted or not.

Counsel for the appellants urged that the Interest Act was not exhaustive and that the Court had power to grant interest. On this point he cited Muhammad Abdul Gaffur v. Hamida Beevi Ammal (1), also Murlidhar v. Mulchand (2), and Khetra Mohan Poddar v. Aswini Kumar Saha (3). Paintiff is entitled to a reasonable rate of interest when it is obviously not the intention of the parties that the money should be retained by the defendants free of charge, vide Raghu Mal v. Bandhu (4). I consider, therefore, that the lower Appellate Court was legally in error in not granting interest, and I accept the appeal to this extent that I award interest at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum from the date of the balance till the date of the decree. Plaintiff will get his proportionate costs in all Courts.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 20—Payment of interest 'as such', when may be availed of to obtain extension of time—Appeal, second—Question of payment, whether can be raised.

In order to obtain the benefit of an extension of the period of limitation under section 20 of the Limitation Act by virtue of a payment of interest "as such" there must be something to indicate that the debtor made the payment with the intention that it should be taken in reduction or satisfaction of interest due; the mere appropriation of the payment by the creditor towards interest is not such an indication nor is the fact that interest was due at the date of the payment. The fact that the amount paid and the amount due for interest were exactly the same, may amount to such an indication. [p. 709, col. 2.]

The question of the payment of interest "as such" is a question of fact, and a plea that such a payment has been made cannot be raised for the first time in second appeal.

Revision of the order of the Additional District Judge, Nagpur, in Civil Appeal No. 237 of 1918, decided on 18th February 1919.

Mr. M. R. Bobde, for the Applicant.

Mr. D. P. Tiwari, for the Non-Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued the defendant for payment of money due to him, bringing his suit within time by producing a ruju or acknowledgment of the debt executed by the defendant on Jeth Badi 14th of the Fasli year 1324, corresponding to 12th July 1915. He filed his suit on 8th July 1918, that is just four days before it was time barred, and he further alleged a payment of Rs. 40 on 30th July 1916, out of which in the plaint he appropriated Rs. 29-11-0 to the payment of interest and the rest towards principal. On an allegation made by the defendant it was found that the date had been wrongly entered on the ruju which had really been executed on Jeth Sudi 14th, corresponding to 27th June 1915, so that the suit was filed eleven days too late. On appeal to the Court of the District Judge the finding in regard to the date of execution of the ruju was upheld but the plaintiff's claim was held to be in time under section 20 of the Limitation Act,

The sixth paragraph of the judgment of the Appellate Court which contains all there is on this point is as follows:—

"Payment of Rs. 40 was made on 30th July 1916 and this payment was not denied specifically and, according to rule 5 of Order VIII of the Civil Procedure Code, it must be deemed to have been admitted. Part of the payment was made towards interest as such and, therefore, the suit is within time according to section 20 of the Limitation Act."

It is clear that the learned Judge entirely overlooked the very important words "as such" in the section to which he refers. In Mohammad Abdullah Khan v. Bank Instalment Company Limited in Liquidation (1) these words were explained to mean that there must be something to indicate that the debtor made the payment with the intention that it should be taken in reduction or satisfaction of interest due and that mere appropriation of the payment by the creditor to interest is not such an indication. The same principle was laid down earlier by Ismay, J. C., in Gopal Rao v. Chindhu (2). It is now urged that the mere fact that the interest was due at the date of the payment is sufficient indication of the intention of the debtor. It appears to me to be an indication of an exactly contrary intention, if it can be called an indication at all, because where simple interest is payable, as here, it is to the debtor's advantage to have the payment taken in reduction of the principal, and in a case of compound interest it makes no difference in the amount of the debt but payment towards interest gives a fresh start for limitation. Such an indication might conceivably be found in the fact that the amount paid and the amount due for interest were exactly the same, but that is not the case here.

This matter of the payment of interest as such is obviously a matter of fact and the plea that such a payment had been made could not be decided or even raised in the Appellate Court. There were no materials whatever before that Court for a decision of the issue and it was too late for the plaintiff to make this allegation of fact which he had all along omitted to make. This particular allegation it was specially incumbent on him to make in his plaint under Order VII, rule 6, of the Civil Procedure Code, and the necessity for it was brought to his notice later by the defendant's plea that the suit was barred by time counting from the date of the puju, the plea on which the whole case was fought. For these reasons, I do not think that he is entitled to ask that the case should be remanded for the production of evidence and a decision on the issue whether the payment of Rs. 40 was a payment of interest as such. Indeed, it is hard to say from the case as it stands how there could possibly now be any unfabricated evidence on the point to produce. If the plaintiff has to forego payment of a debt otherwise justly due to him it is through his own negligence. The extraordinary habit of postponing every kind of business in the Courts to the last possible moment was so described by Stanyon, A. J. C., in Kedarnath v. Zumberlal (3). He has only himself to thank and is not entitled to any consideration. The suit was barred by time and should have been dismissed. The decree of the Appellate Court is accordingly set aside and that of the first Court dismissing the suit is restored. The plaintiff must pay the costs of this application and of the appeal in the Court of the District Judge.

Appeal allowed.

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), s. 16—Mortgage-decree—Application for personal decree, whether new proceeding—Grant of personal decree, whether remedy.

An application under rule 6 of Order XXXIV of the Civil Procedure Code for a personal decree is not a new proceeding but a continuation of the original suit, and does not come under the bar of section 16 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. [p 711, col. 1.]

The issue of a personal decree against a mortgagor is not the grant to the mortgagee of a remedy against the mortgagor within the meaning of section 16 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. [p. 711, col. 1.]

Miscellaneous first appeal from the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, First Class, Delhi, dated the 5th February 1917.

Mr. Manohar Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. S. Bhagat, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts out of which this appeal arises are as follows:—

The appellant was adjudicated insolvent in January 1911. At that time he was defending a case for recovery of Rs. 69,346 8 0 on a mortgage-deed, in spite of his adjudication he continued the defence of the suit and the first Court decreed it against him.

He then came up to this Court in appeal and was successful in obtaining a modification of the original decree, in that a preliminary decree for the sale of the mortgaged property was passed but plaintiff was left at liberty to apply, subsequently, for a personal decree against appellant in the event of the sale proceeds proving insufficient to meet the principal and interest due on the mortgage and the costs of the case.

On the happening of this contingency the plaintiff moved the Court of first instance to take action under Order XXXIV, rule 6, Civil Procedure Code, and a personal decree for the balance due issued against defendant.

In appeal it is contended that the defendant's insolvency was a bar to the grant of the decree and section 16 of the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1907 as well as Mamraj v. Birjlal (1) are referred to.

Section 16 of the Act provides that no creditor in respect of any debt provable under the Act shall, during the pendency of insolvency proceedings, have any remedy against the insolvent, nor shall he commence any suit or legal proceeding without the leave of the Court.

The Act is silent with regard to the continuation of a suit, but the continuation of a suit or defence by the Receiver is contemplated by section 20 (d) of the Act.

Now the application by the plaintiff under Order XXXIV, rule 6, Civil Procedure Code, was clearly not a new proceeding, but a continuation of the original suit and such was held to be its nature in Mamraj v. Birjlal (1), so that it does not come under the bar of section 16 of the Provincial Insolvency Act as a new proceeding.

We hold further that the issue of the personal decree was not the grant to the plaintiff of a remedy against the appellant within the meaning of the section.

A decree is not a remedy for a civil money (sic) but merely a step towards the remedy. The remedy is the benefit accruing to the creditor through the execution of his decree, i e., the compensation secured to him in execution. That remedy he can secure only through the Insolvency Court by proving his debt.

The Allahabad ruling above cited, with all deference, we are unable to accept both because we do not regard a decree as a remedy and also because all the provisions of the English Act have not been reproduced in the Indian.

Section 10 (2) of the English Bankruptcy Act empowers a Court to stay any action, execution or other legal process against the debtor, or to continue them, if it sees fit, but there is no similar provision in the Indian Act; consequently the decisions of the English Courts in questions of stay of action owing to insolvency are not sure guides for the Courts of this country.

Moreover, if the words shall 'have any remedy' are a bar to the continuation of a suit, then they are irreconcileable with the provision that a suit may be continued on terms.

On grounds of expediency, it is obviously desirable that the Court which has fully considered all the evidence and has studied all the aspects of the case should decide on the merits and then leave the decree-holder to seek his remedy in the Insolvency Court.

We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Hyderabad Assigned Districts Land Revenue Code, 1898, ss. 72 (2), 78 (4), scope of—Section 78 (4), whether confined to cases under section 72 (2).

Section 78 (4) of the Hyderabad Assigned Districts Land Revenue Code, is general in its application to tenants and is not confined to cases where the rent of tenants falling under section 72 (2) alone is sought to be enhanced. Once the rent of a tenant of whatever class he may be, is sought to be enhanced, provided it can be legally enhanced, clause (4) of section 78 comes into operation. [p. 712, col. 1.]

Appeal against the judgment of the District Judge, Amraoti, in Civil Appeal No. 181 of 1918, decided on 18th January 1919, arising out of Civil Suit No. 57 of 1917, decided on 28th August 1918, by the Subordinate Judge Yeotmal.

Mr. M. V. Joshi, for the Appellant.

Messrs. M. Gupta and S. C. Dutt Choudhary for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The finding that the defendant was an annual tenant was accepted in the lower Appellate Court and is not challenged here. On the 6th July 1912 the plaintiff-appellant gave the defendant a notice of enhancement of rent from the 1st April 1913 under section 78, clause (8) of the Hyderabad Assigned Districts Land Revenue Code, asking him to vacate the land by the 31st March 1913 in case he did not agree to the enhancement. The present suit is for rent for three years at the enhanced rate with interest and for possession.

The first Court passed a decree for such rent as it deemed just and reasonable with interest, and declared that the defendant was liable to be ejected if he failed to pay the sum decreed by a fixed date. The District Judge confirmed the decree.

In second appeal it is contended that, in a case where the annual tenant is required to pay an enhanced rent, clause (4) of section 78 does not apply, and the Court cannot go into the question of the reasonableness of the enhancement and decree ejectment only in default of payment of such rent as it deemed reasonable. I am unable to accept this contention. Clause (4) is general in its application to tenants and is not confined, as contended by the learned Advocate for the appellant, to cases where the rent of tenants falling under section 72, clause (2), alone is sought to be enhanced. In my opinion, once the rent of a tenant, of whatever class he may be, is sought to be enhanced, provided it can be legally enhanced, clause (4) comes into operation.

It is next urged that, inasmuch as the plaintiff notices the tenant to vacate in default of his agreeing to pay the enhanced rent, it must be deemed to be one also under section 79, clause (2). This contention cannot be sustained. The plaintiff himself professes to issue the notice under section 72, clause (8), as the heading of the notice, Exhibit P 2, shows and it is also clear that his intention was primarily to claim an enhancement and continue the tenancy at the enhanced rent and not to eject the tenant unconditionally.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

The effect of a sale being indivisible is merely to prevent some of the vendees from defeating a claim for pre-emption by pleading that their rights are not inferior to the plaintiff's although the rights of the others are infeiror. But the claim can nevertheless be defeated if, before the suit is instituted, those vendees whose rights are inferior sell their share to a person who has an equal or superior right to that of the plaintiff. [p. 713, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Ludhiana, dated the 16th October 1919, modifying that of the Munsif, First Class, Ludhiana, dated the 14th May 1919.

Lala Har Gopal, for Dr. Nand Lal, for the Appellants.

Lala Balwant Rai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Hazara, defendant No. 1, sold the land in suit for Rs. 600 to defendants Nos. 2 to 8. The plaintiff, a collateral of the vendor, has sued for pre-emption. Defendants Nos. 2 to 5 are also collaterals of the vendor. Defendants Nos. 6 to 8 are not, but they say they sold their half share to Bhag Singh, another collateral of the vendor, and Bhag Singh was consequently added as a defendant.

The Munsif found that the plaintiff was more nearly related to the vendor than defendants Nos. 2 to 5 and Bhag Singh were, and that whatever rights Bhag Singh had he had lost by not buying the entire property. He also found that the alleged sale to Bhag Singh was fictitious, and that the transaction, which consisted in an entry in the patwari's roznamcha, took place after the institution of the suit. He passed a decree for possession of the land subject to the payment of Rs. 300. Defendants Nos. 2 to 5 and Bhag Singh appealed to the District Judge.

It was admitted by plaintiff's Counsel at the hearing of the appeal before the District Judge that the plaintiff and the appellants had equal rights of pre emption, but it was contended that Bhag Singh's title was defective because he had purchased only half the land from those vendees who were not related to Hazara, (namely, defendants Nos. 6 to 8), although the sale by Hazara was an indivisible transaction.

The District Judge agreed with this contention and held that the plaintiff's title was superior to that of the vendees. He then went on to find that the full price entered in the deed had been paid, and he modified the decree to the extent of enhancing the amount payable by the plaintiff to Rs. 600.

Defendants Nos. 2 to 5 and Bhag Singh have filed a second appeal in this Court, and the plaintiff has filed cross-objections in regard to his costs.

No authority is cited before me which supports the view of the learned District

Judge that, because the sale by Hazara was an indivisible one, the purchaser from some of the vendees of their share is not entitled to resist the claim on the ground that his right of pre-emption is equal to the plaintiff's. The effect of the sale being indivisible is merely to prevent some of the vendees from defeating the claim for pre-emption by pleading that their rights are not inferior to the plaintiff's although the rights of the others are inferior. But the claim can, nevertheless, be defeated if, before the suit is instituted, those vendees whose rights are inferior sell their share to a preson who has an equal or superior right to that of the plaintiff and this has been held in Mughal v. Jalal (1), which is a case on all fours with the present one.

If, therefore, Bhag Singh purchased the share of defendants Nos. 6 to 8 before the institution of the suit, the plaintiff's claim would fail. It is urged for the respondents that Bhag Singh is more distantly related than the plaintiff to the vendor Hazara, and that, therefore, his right of pre emption is inferior, but I cannot entertain this argument as it was admitted at the hearing of the appeal before the District Judge that the plaintiff and Bhag Singh had equal rights of pre emption.

The question whether there was in fact a sale to Bhag Singh before the institution of the suit has yet to be gone into by the lower Appellate Court. It is true that the District Judge says, near the beginning of his judgment, that the vendor's non-relatives sold their share to Bhag Singh on the 16th November 1917, but it would seem that he was only assuming this to be a fact for the purpose of his argument, for he has not attempted to consider the evidence on the point, notwithstanding that the finding of the Trial Court was that there was no genuine sale at all, and that the transaction which took place was of a date subsequent to the suit.

The case will, therefore, have to be remanded.

I accept the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court, and remand the case to that Court under Order XLI, rule 23, Civil Procedure Code, for a fresh decision of the appeal before it after the question of the alleged sale to Bhag Singh has been determined. I dismiss the cross objections as the finding on the question of price was against the plaintiff.

Court-fee on the appeal in this Court to be refunded. Other costs to be costs in the case.

Certain perishable property belonging to a defendant having been attached before judgment and sold, the sale-proceeds were paid into Court to the credit of the suit. Eventually, a decree was passed in the suit, but before the decree-holder could apply for execution a person who had previously obtained a decree against the same judgment-debtor obtained an order of attachment and payment of the sum lying in Court, and the money was paid to him. The subsequent decree-holder thereupon brought a suit to recover from the prior decree-holder the amount which he would have got out of the moneys attached if there had been rateable distribution. The suit was dismissed. In revision:

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The petitioner filed Suit No. 71 of 1916 in the Subordinate Judge's Court at Satara against one Kondanmal and applied for attachment before judgment. The attachment before judgment was granted and the property, being of a perishable nature, was sold and the sale-proceeds, viz, Rs. 420, were paid into Court to the credit of the suit. Eventually, a decree was passed in the suit on the 10th of April 1916. The plaintiff should then have applied for execution, but it was not necessary to apply for a re-attachment of the property, because after the decree was passed the property remained in detention. Then the opponent, who had previously got a decree against the same defendant, applied for execution on the 7th of April and asked that the sale-proceeds, which were lying in Court to the credit of the petitioner's suit, be attached. That he could do under rule 10 of Order XXXVIII. The opponent's application for attachment was heard on the 12th of April and an order was made for attachment. On the 19th of April the opponent obtained an order for payment and the money was paid to him. The petitioner meanwhile had not applied for the execution of his decree as he had not got a copy of the decree. Then he brought Suit No. 779 of 1916 against the opponent to recover the amount of Rs. 174-5 0 which he said he would have got out of the moneys attached if there had been rateable distribution. His suit has been dismissed by the learned Subordinate Judge and also by the District Judge in appeal.

The question before us is, whether there has been any material irregularity which would entitle us to interfere in revision. No doubt, on the face of it, it seems a very hard case, and if the attaching Court had clearly done what it ought not to have done, or left undone what it ought to have done, and the lower Courts in the present suit filed by the petitioner had failed in their duty to observe that, then it might be said that there was a material irregularity which would entitle us to interfere. But, although it may be said that the attaching Court, before it paid out the proceeds of the petitioner's attachment to the opponent, ought to have given the petitioner notice as a matter of equity, still I cannot see anything in the Code which makes it necessary for the attaching Court to give such notice. Until the petitioner applied for attachment, no doubt the money was lying in Court, detained for his benefit, but still available for any decree-holder of the same defendant. If a decree-holder applied for attachment of those moneys which were being detained, the Court was bound to grant such an application. If the Court had given notice to the petitioner, and he had made an application for the execution of his decree, the Court might then have said that he was entitled to rateable distribution. It seems to me that the petitioner, having got his decree, failed to observe that there was a risk of his losing the fruits of his attachment. He did not apply to the Court at once to confirm the previous attachment; in other words, he did not apply for the execution of the decree, so as to make his position secure. I cannot say, therefore, that there has been any material irregularity in the proceedings of the lower Court in dismissing the petitioner's suit.

The Rule, therefore, will be discharged with costs.

FAWCETT, J.—I agree. But I think the case suggests the advisability of a Rule being made under the powers conferred on the High Court, requiring a Court in such a case to issue notice to the person at whose instance the property sought to be attached is already under attachment before judgment prior to directing a disposal of such property in execution of a decree.

Rule discharged.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLIII, r. 1 (4)—Appeal from order of remand—Findings of fact, whether can be questioned.

The policy of the Legislature being not to allow a second appeal on facts, the appellant, on an appeal from an order of remand is not entitled to question the findings of fact recorded by the Appellate Court.

Miscellaneous second appeal from the order of the District Judge, Multan, dated the 14th April 1919, reversing that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Multan, dated the 17th June 1918.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sheo Narain, R. B., for the Appellants.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for the redemption of a mortgage dated the 25th of June 1897. The suit was resisted upon various grounds, one of which being that the document though in appearance a mortgage-deed, was really a sale deed, and the transaction was that of a sale and not that of a mortgage. In support of this contention, the terms of the mortgage deed were relied upon and oral evidence was called to prove the intention of the parties. The Court of first instance gave effect to this contention and dismissed the suit.

An appeal was preferred by the plaintiff to the lower Appellate Court which, after going into the evidence, has come to a different conclusion and has set aside the decree of the Court of first instance on the preliminary point on which the judgment of the Court of first instance was based. The lower Appellate Court has made an order of remand under Order XLI, rule 23, Civil Procedure Code, remanding the case to the Original Court for the decision of the remaining questions arising in the case.

RAMCHANDRA GOVIND v. JAYANTA RAVJI.

An appeal has been preferred to this Court under Order XLIII, rule (1) (u). Mr. Sheo Narain Counsel for the appellant has attacked the finding of fact arrived at by the lower Appellate Court and has contended that this being a first appeal from order, he is entitled to challenge the findings of fact of the Court below. He has also contended that the lower Appellate Court has wrongly excluded oral evidence under section 92 of the Evidence Act.

This argument ignores the fact that, in spite of holding that oral evidence was inadmissible, the Court has actually considered the evidence and has held it to be insufficient and unreliable. The question whether on an appeal from an order of remand an appellant is entitled to question the findings of fact recorded by the Appellate Court was considered by a Bench of this Court in Sawan Singh v. Mothu (1), and was answered in the negative. The learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court also expressed the same opinion.

We ourselves feel not the slightest difficulty in coming to the same conclusion. The policy of the Legislature being not to allow a second appeal on facts, it is difficult to see how the appellant coming in appeal under Order XLIII, rule (1) (u) can question findings of fact in this Court.

We are clearly of opinion that the findings arrived at by the lower Appellate Court are findings of fact and cannot be questioned. We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Execution of decree—Executing Court, whether can go behind decree—Jurisdiction of Court.

RAMCHANDRA GOVIND v. JAYANTA RAVJI.

The only question with which an executing Court has jurisdiction to deal is the question whether the application for execution should proceed, it has no jurisdiction to deal with the question whether the decree should stand or whether it should be set aside on any of the grounds on which a decree can be set aside.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Sholapur, in Appeal No. 22 of 1918, reversing the decree passed by the Second Class Subordinate Judge at Madha, in Darkhast No. 222 of 1917.

Mr. P. B. Shingne, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. N. Koyajee, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—In this case a decree was passed on a private award directing the judgment debtor to pay the decree-holder Rs. 900 by annual instalments of Rs. 100 each. It also directed that in case two instalments were in arrears, the decree-holder should recover the whole sum at once by sale of two lands belonging to the judgment debtor. Default having been made the decree-holder filed a darkhast for the recovery of the whole sum. The judgment-debtor contended that before the award was made, which resulted in the decree in question, the decree holder agreed to advance him Rs. 200 as a fresh loan and that that sum was included in the total of Rs. 900. He thus practically said that as Ramchandra, the decree-holder, had not paid him Rs. 200 as agreed, the decree was vitiated by fraud. The Trial Judge came to the conclusion that it was not open to the judgment-debtor to raise this contention in the case. He also found that it was not proved that the decree-holder had agreed to advance the judgment-debtor Rs. 200 or that that sum was included in the decretal amount. He, therefore, directed that execution should proceed.

In appeal both these findings were reversed, the learned Judge coming to the conclusion that the judgment-creditor agreed to advance Rs. 200 to the judgment-debtor as consideration for his consenting to a decree passed in terms of the award. He also came to the conclusion that the award was a bogus one, and that, therefore, the Court had, on the true state of facts coming to its notice, the power to vacate the decree passed on such a bogus award and to prevent the abuse of the process of the Court. The Judge, therefore, vacated the decree, reversed the decree of the lower Court and dismissed the plaintiff's application with costs throughout.

Whatever powers the Court had to decide questions relating to the execution of the decree, we are of opinion that it is perfectly clear that the Court had no power to deal with the decree itself. The Court executing the decree cannot deal with the question whether the decree should stand or whether it should be set aside on any of the grounds on which a decree can be set aside. In Chintaman v. Chintaman Bajaji (1) it was held that the validity of a decree where execution is sought cannot be disputed in execution proceedings under section 244 of the Civil Procedure Code. It will be noted that in this case all that the judgment debtor pleaded was that he had not received the Rs. 200 additional advance which was the inducement held out to him to consent to the decree for Rs. 900 instead for Rs. 700. But the learned Appellate Judge went a great deal further than that and dealt with the question whether the Court which passed the decree on the award was justified in so doing. It is quite true that cases have been known where a money-lender, as a condition for advancing money, induces his borrower to consent to a bogus award on which a decree is passed. It may be that in this case this particular award decree was passed by means of such an arrangement. But whether that was so or not it is perfectly clear that the executing Court had no jurisdiction to deal with the question, and the only question with which it had jurisdiction to deal was the question whether the darkhast should proceed.

The decree of the lower Appellate Court must, therefore, be set aside and the order of the Trial Court restored with costs in the first Appeal Court and in this Court. Costs of the Trial Court to be determined in execution.

FAWCETT, J.—I concur. Section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code was cited as giving the lower Appellate Court authority to interfere in the way it did. But, as was ruled in Bhausing Ragho v. Ghaganiram

(1) 22 B. 475; 11 Ind. Dec. (N. s.) 899.

Harchand (2), that section was clearly not intended to give authority to superior Courts by way of conferring supplemental jurisdiction to that conferred by section 115 of the Code. The only legitimate ways in which the decree award could, so far as I can see, be set aside are under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, as was done in the case of Velchand v. Liston (3), or by a separate suit.

Muhammadan Law—Wakf—Mutawalli—Minority, whether absolute bar to valid appointment—Appeal—Plea of minority not taken in Trial Court, whether permissible in appeal.

A minor can be validly appointed a mutawalli of wakf property under Muhammadan Law if he has attained puberty (bulug) and has understanding (aql) and a person who has completed his fifteenth year may fairly be presumed to have attained both these, both under section 114 of the Evidence Act and the Muhammadan Law.

A plea as to the incompetency of a plaintiff, who describes himself as a minor suing through his next friend, to be a mutwalli of a wakf on account of his minority, which is not taken in the Court of first instance nor mentioned in the petition of appeal, cannot be raised for the first time in the course of argument in the appeal.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Nagpur, in Civil Appeal No. 135 of 1918, decided on the 24th March 1919.

Mr. N. K. Vaidya, for the Appellant.

Dr. H. S. Gour and Mr. K. L. Daftari, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued as mutawalli of a wakf and described himself in the plaint as a minor suing through his next friend. In the course of the argument in appeal in the Court of the District Judge, it was sought on behalf of the defendant to take the plea for the first time that the plaintiff was not competent to be a Mutawali on account of his minority. This plea had not been taken in the Court of first instance nor mentioned in the petition of appeal, and the learned Judge held that it was then too late to raise it. On this point the defendant has come up in second appeal. The plaintiff was stated in evidence by his own father to be 15 or 16 years old on 31st January 1918. That would make him very near or over 18 to day. He appeared in this Court during the hearing, and his appearance fully justifies this conclusion.

2. It is, however, by no means clear that the plea of minority if taken would have the immediate success the defendant seems to anticipate. It certainly was held in Hasan Raza Sahib v. Hasan Ali Sahib (1) that a child of 11 could not be a mutawalli, but that was not because he had not attained the age of 18 but because, as had been laid down by Mr. Justice Ameer Ali at page 219, et seq of the report of his judgment in Piran v. Abdol Karim (2), "puberty (bulug) and understanding (aql) are necessary in all cases to a valid appointment," and a child of 11 could not be supposed to have attained either. It is not minority that is required in a mutawalli, but puberty and understanding, and the plaintiff may fairly be presumed to have attained both these on the completion of his fifteenth year, both under section 114 of the Evidence Act and also under the personal law to which he is subject, as explained at page 42 of Ameer Ali's Muhammadan Law.

Further, in the judgment in Piran v Abdool Karim (2) cases are mentioned where, according to the custom of a particular dargah, a child might hold the office of mutawalli and if the defendant had taken the plea, now sought to be put forward, at the proper time, the plaintiff would have had an opportunity of answering it by one or more pleas of fact. It was, therefore, much too late to ask to be allowed to put forward this plea of mixed law and fact in the Court of the District Judge in appeal. In any case, as has been shown above, the plea would be of no avail.

The third ground of appeal is a direct attack on a clear finding of pure fact and cannot be supported in this Court. The fourth and last urges that the plaintiff's decree for possession should be made conditional on his refunding the Rs. 300 found to have been paid to Gous Ali Shah, his predecessor on the gaddi. In regard to this the learned District Judge wrote: "On the fourth ground it is enough to say that there is no proof that the money given to Gous Ali Shah benefited either the trust or the plaintiff personally." To this I might add that it has all along been the defendant's case that Gous Ali Shah was selling the land to her husband as his own personal property, and in that case the natural inference would be that he treated the sale-proceeds as his own. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Landlord and tenant—Tenant acquiring permanent rights by adverse possession—Burden of proof—Notice to landlord.

Where a tenant wishes to acquire permanent rights of tenancy by adverse possession, he must give the landlord specific notice of his claim.

Appeal from the decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge, A. P., at Satara, in Appeal No. 683 of 1917, amending the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge at Patan, in Civil Suit No. 558 of 1919.

Mr. P. B. Shingne, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. N. Koyajee, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal must be allowed.

The plaintiff sued to recover possession of the suit land from the defendant. The Trial Court found that the defendant had perfected his claim to mirasi rights by adverse possession, but that the plaintiff was entitled to claim enhanced rent. In appeal the finding as regards the mirasi tenure was affirmed, but plaintiff's claim for enhanced rent was disallowed, the Judge holding that the defendant ought to have been given an opportunity to lead evidence as regards that claim. The plaintiff could only claim enhanced rent by local usage, or prescription or agreement.

We think that the decision of both the Courts that the defendant had succeeded in proving his claim to hold as a permanent tenant by adverse possession cannot be supported. Reference may be made to Budesab v. Hanmanta (1) where it was held that where a landlord seeks to recover from his tenant possession of land in his tenant's occupancy, and the latter alleging a perpetual tenancy, successfully resists on that ground the landlord's attempt to dispossess him, the tenant may, after the statutory period has expired, plead limitation in bar of a subsequent suit in ejectment by the landlord. The question then arises, if the person in occupation of the land as a tenant can assert permanent rights of tenancy and can acquire such rights by adverse possession, when does time begin to run against the landlord? The Judges said (page 516):

"We do not say that a tenant by a false allegation as to the terms of his tenancy, though continuously repeated, can alter those terms. Such allegations do not necessarily throw upon the landlord the onus of refuting them by suit,..... But where a landlord seeks to recover possession of land in his tenant's occupancy from the tenant, and the latter, on the allegation of a perpetual tenancy, successfully resists the landlord's attempt to dispossess him for the statutory period, the current of authority to which we have referred, in our opinion, establishes that the law of limitation can be successfully pleaded in bar of a suit in ejectment by the landlord."

We do not think that the history of this case is a sufficient indication of the tenant's claim to set up a permanent tenancy against the landlord, so that the onus of refuting the claim by suit is necessarilly thrown upon the landlord. Neither the suits referred to by the lower Court, which were merely rent suits, nor the suit of 1913 support the defendant's contentions. What is required is that when a tenant wishes to set up a larger claim by adverse possession, the landlord must have specific notice of his doing so. In the last suit, which was filed in 1913, it was directly in issue whether the plaintiff could recover the rent claimed or whether the defendant was a mirasdar and had already paid the fixed rent which she stated was all that she was liable to pay. It was nowhere suggested in that suit that the tenant had acquired a right to remain in possession as a permanent tenant at a fixed rent by adverse possession. It is only when this suit for possession has been filed that it is asserted that the defendant is entitled to resist the claim for possession on the ground that, since the time of his ancestors, he and his family had been in possession of the land as mirasdars.

The decree of the lower Court must be set aside and a decree must be passed in favour of the plaintiff for possession of the suit land with rent at Rs. 24 8 0 for one year prior to the suit and after suit until possession.

The defendant must pay the plaintiff's costs throughout.

Decree set aside.

Section 66 of the Civil Procedure Code is not restricted to benami purchases made by or on behalf of judgment-debtors. [p. 720, col. 2.]

P., the landlord, purchased a holding at an execution sale benami in the name of D. and the latter was certified as the purchaser. P., however, remained in possession of the holding for more than three years when he was dispossessed by D. P. thereupon brought the present suit to recover possession :

Held, that as D. had been kept out of possession for a period of two years his title had become extinguished by virtue of the Third Schedule to the Bengal Tenancy Act. [p. 720, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 3rd Court, Dacca, dated the 28th of February 1918, affirming that of the Munsif, 4th Court at Munshigunj, dated the 17th of February 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Upendra Kumar Mitter, for the Appellant.—The suit is barred by the provisions of section 66 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The holding was purchased by the plaintiff at an execution-sale in the benami of my client. The plaintiff is, therefore, precluded from denying the title of the certified purchaser.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak (with him Babu Urukramdas Chakravarty), for the Respondents.—The object of section 66 of the Code of Civil Procedure is to prevent benami purchases by judgment-debtors in fraud of their creditors. See Bodh Singh Doodhooria v. Gunesh Chunder Sen (1) and Ganga Sahai

(1) 12 B. L. R. 317 (P. C.); 19 W. R. 356; 3 Sar. P. C. J. 253.

v. Kesri (2). That section is, therefore, not applicable to the present case. Then, again, I rely on my possession for more than two years after the auction-purchase. Admittedly, I am the landlord of the appellant. My possession for more than two years is sufficient to extinguish the title, if any, of the appellant. See Bengal Tenancy Act, Schedule III. Moreover, the failure of the appellant to assert his rights against me during my possession of the holding should be regarded as a waiver or transfer. See Monappa v. Surappa (3).

Babu Upendra Kumar Mitter in reply.—There is no authority for the proposition that the general language of section 66 of the Code of Civil Procedure must be restricted to benami purchases by judgment-debtors. Refers to Hanuman Persad Thakur v. Jadunandan Thakur (4). The doctrine laid down in Monappa v. Surappa (3) was not approved in Musammat Buhuns Kowur v. Lalla Buhooree Lall (5). See also Bishan Dial v. Ghazi ud-din (6).

JUDGMENT.

TRUNON, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff to recover possession of a certain holding.

The facts, as found by the Courts below, are as follows:—The original tenant was defendant No. 6. In execution of a decree for arrears of rent the holding was purchased by the landlord-decree-holder the present plaintiff, the plaintiff was put into possession on the 19th of March 1911, and continued in possession until April 1914 when he was dispossessed by defendant No. 1, the certified purchaser acting in collusion with the other defendants. On these findings the suit was decreed in both the Courts below. Defendant No. 1 now appeals to this Court, and his contention before us is that the suit is barred by reason of the provisions of section 66 of the Civil Procedure Code. The plaintiff-respondent, on the other hand, contends that section 66 is not applicable, and further relies on his possession for more than three years after his purchase.

In support of the plaintiff-respondent's contention reference has been made to certain observations by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the cases reported as Bodh Singh Doolhooria v. Gunesh Chunder Sen (1) and Ganga Sahai v. Kesri (2) to the effect that the intention of the section is to prevent or check benami purchases made by judgment-debtors in fraud of their creditors. But we have not been referred to any case in which their Lordships have definitely decided that the general language of section 66 must be restricted to benami purchases made by or on behalf of judgment-debtors, while there is a decision to the contrary by a Divisional Bench of this Court in Hanuman Persad Thakur v. Jadunandan Thakur (4).

We have next been referred by the plaintiff respondent to the case reported as Monappa v. Surappa (3). It is contended, on the authority of that case, that defendant No. 1 being the father of the plaintiff's tahsildar, his failure to assert his rights against the plaintiffs during the latter's three years' possession should be regarded as a waiver or transfer. But that case was decided before the Transfer of Property Act and, as pointed out in Bishan Dial v. Ghazi-ud-din (6), the doctrine therein laid down was disapproved by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Musammat Buhuns Kowur v. Lalla Buhooree Lall (5).

The question then remains whether plaintiff has acquired title by his possession for three years. In the eye of the law, and on the case of defendant No. 1 that defendant is the purchaser of the holding and raiyat of the plaintiff, plaintiff, the landlord, kept him out of possession for a period of three years. The period of limitation under the 3rd Schedule to the Bengal Tenancy Act in such a case is two years. The title of the defendant has, therefore, been extinguished. In this view, this appeal is dismissed with costs.

NEWBOULD, J.—I agree.

Messrs. Bevan-Petman, Bakhshi Tek Chand and Hari Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit brought by Bhai Indar Singh, minor son of Bhai Harnam Singh, deceased, head granthi of the Sikh Golden Temple at Amritsar, for succession to the office of the head granthi in the place of his father on the following allegations:—

That Bhai Jawahar Singh, uncle of the plaintiff, was the head granthi of the Temple for about 25 years; that before his death, which took place on the 14th of November 1835, he had appointed Bhai Harnam Singh the father of the plaintiff, as his successor, having already initiated him as his chela (servant or disciple); that after the demise of Bhai Jawahar Singh, Bhai Harnam Singh, his brother, succeeded to the office of the head granthi and was installed on the gaddi of Sri Darbar Sahib; that he occupied the office for about 23 years and continued to perform the duties of the office during the period; that Bhai Harnam Singh before his death, which took place on the 30th July 1907, initiated the plaintiff as his chela and nominated him as his successor; that accordingly the plaintiff had the right to succeed to the office of the head granthi of the Temple on the ground that he was the son and duly initiated chela and nominated successor, and that his claim to succeed was in accordance with the rule of succession obtaining at the Golden Temple at Amritsar. The defendant to the suit is Bhai Fateh Singh who is actually in possession of the office and is performing the necessary duties in connection with it. Before the institution of the suit Bhai Fateh Singh had instituted a suit on the 22nd of April 1913 against the present plaintiff for the recovery of possession of certain properties to which he laid claim by virtue of his right as the head granthi. The suit for possession was based on the following allegation:—That Bhai Harnam Singh in his lifetime had initiated Bhai Fateh Singh as his chela and had nominated him as his successor, and that, accordingly, he had been formally installed on the gaddi of the Darbar Sahib with due formalities.

The present suit was instituted on the 27th of May 1913, i.e., more than a month after the suit for possession. It was resisted on the following pleas:—

(a) That Bhai Harnam Singh never initiated the plaintiff as his chela or appointed him as his successor, he being only about a year old at Harnam Singh's death.

(b) That the plaintiff was not entitled to succeed to the gaddi merely because he was a son as this was against the custom obtaining in the religious institution of the Darbar Sahib regarding the succession to the gaddi of head granthi.

(c) That the defendant Fateh Singh was the chela as well as the nominated successor of Bhai Harnam Singh, and that as such he had been installed on the gaddi, his title to succession being publicly acknowledged by sants, mahants, sadhs, pujaris, granthis, the manager of the institution and the Deputy Commissioner, and that the plaintiff's mother and his other relations had acquiesced in his installation.

In this suit for succession the following reliefs were claimed:—

(a) A declaratory decree in favour of the plaintiff against the defendant to the effect that the plaintiff is entitled to the office of head granthi and gaddi nashin of the Darbar Sahib, Amritsar, in place of the late Bhai Harnam Singh, and that the defendant's occupation of the office is quite unlawful and by way of usurpation ;

(b) The defendant may be removed from the office of the head granthi and the plaintiff appointed to it ;

(c) The defendant may be required to render account of the entire income from offerings received by him as head granthi and gaddi nashin since the time of his appointment and a decree for the sum that may be found by that account to have been received by him may be passed in favour of the plaintiff.

In the suit for possession by Fateh Singh the relief claimed was for recovery of possession of properties detailed in the lists A. B. C. D. and E. on the ground that, as the lawfully appointed head granthi, Fateh Singh was entitled to the relief claimed. In addition to certain preliminary issues regarding the sufficiency of stamp on the plaint and the maintainability of the suit with reference to section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the following main issues were framed by the Trial Court :—

* * * *

(3) What was the custom obtaining at the Golden Temple, Amritsar, regarding the succession to the gaddi (office) of head granthi of the Darbar Sahib ?

(4) Whether the plaintiff, Indar Singh, was initiated as his chela and appointed as his successor by Harnam Singh, deceased, head granthi Sri Darbar Sahib, Amritsar ?

In order to indicate more clearly the points raised by the parties, the following additional issues were added at a later stage :—

(5) If Bhai Fateh Singh alone was made a chela and appointed as successor by the deceased, is he entitled by custom to succeed to the office of head granthi in the presence of his Guru's son, namely, the plaintiff ?

(6) If both were made chelas and nominated successor by the deceased, then has the plaintiff a preferential right over a mere chela though installed publicly ?

(7) Is the defendant liable to dismissal, from the office of the head granthi in spite of the fact that the plaintiff is still a minor ?

(8) Is plaintiff entitled to ask for rendition of accounts re the offerings of the Sri Darbar Sahib collected by the defendant as head granthi ?

The Trial Court, after considering all the evidence, both documentary and oral, dismissed the suit of Indar Singh, plaintiff, in toto by its judgment, dated the 28th of June 1916. The result was that the defendant Bhai Fateh Singh was held to have been lawfully appointed as the successor of Bhai Harnam Singh to the office of the head granthi. As a corollary to this decision, the suit for possession by Fateh Singh was decreed in part. From the decree in the suit for possession Appeal No. 3009 of 1916* was instituted by Indar Singh in this Court, while Appeal No. 569 of 1916 against the decree in the succession suit was preferred by him to the Court of the District Judge, Amritsar. This latter appeal was transferred to this Court by an order, dated the 26th of January 1917, and was numbered as Civil Appeal No. 907 of 1917. Both these appeals have come up before us for decision as connected appeals. The evidence in one case has been treated as evidence in the other and at the hearing, the Counsel for the respective parties have freely used and discussed the evidence to be found on the record of both the cases. In Appeal No. 300 of 1916 three paper books have been printed. For facility of reference, we have marked paper-book printed on the 9th of September 1919 as book 'A' and the two smaller books as 'B' and 'C.' No evidence has been printed in Civil Appeal No. 907 of 1917, but it has been translated and typed on behalf of Fateh Singh, respondent, and copies thereof have been supplied to the Counsel of the appellant Indar Singh by Mr. Petman, Counsel for Fateh Singh.

From the pleadings stated above, it is clear that the crucial issue arising for decision in this case is relating to the precise rule of succession to the office of the head granthi of the Darbar Sahib. It is, therefore, necessary to ascertain those conditions which qualify a claimant to the gaddi. The first question which requires determination and which has been argued as a preliminary point by the Counsel of the parties is, whether the office of a head granthi is a religious office or merely a secular appointment. In order to be able to answer this question one must refer to the history of the Sikh religion, to find out the origin of this office and ascertain the duties which are to be performed by its incumbent. It is well known that the Sikh religion was founded by Guru Nanak who is known and styled as the first Guru of the Sikhs. After him nine more Gurus came in succession, the last of whom was Guru Gobind Singh. These Gurus were looked upon as incarnations of God. The Granth Sahib, or the religious book of the Sikhs, was compiled by Guru Arjan. It is stated in the Third Volume of Macauliffe's History of the Sikh religion in Chapter VII, page 55, that Guru Arjan felt the necessity of laying down rules for the guidance of his followers in the performance of their daily religious duties and expiatory rights. Accordingly, he made plans for the compilation of the Granth Sahib. At Amritsar he constructed a tank, took up his abode near it where he was accompanied by a crowd of Sikhs. He occupied himself with collecting materials for the compilation of the Granth Sahib and composing hymns of his own. He, therefore, instructed Bhai Budha to take his place in the Har Mandar and do duty for him by giving religious instructions to all who presented themselves. At the conclusion of his task the Guru told the Sikhs that the Granth Sahib was the embodiment of the Gurus and should, therefore, be held in extreme reverence. He then considered to whom he should entrust the sacred volume. He, therefore, decided to give charge to Bhai Budha (vide Macauliffe's History, pages 59, 60 and 65). Thus Bhai Budha was appointed the first granthi. The other granthis will be referred to in succession later on when we come to deal with the line of succession among the granthis after Bhai Budha the Gurus, being the incarnations of God, religious instructions used to be imparted by each of them directly in his lifetime. After the Gurus the Granth Sahib was to be looked upon as the fountain of religious instructions and inspiration. The head granthi was to recite the Granth to the devout crowd of Sikhs who were to come to the Sikh Temple at Amritsar. The line of the Gurus came to an end at the death of the 10th and the last Guru, namely, Guru Gobind Singh. As all the Guru's sons predeceased him, and as he was disappointed in his envoy Banda, he left no human successor but vested the Guruship in the Granth Sahib and his seat. (Encyclopedia, Britannica, 11th Edition Volume XXV, page 86). This information gleaned from the Sikh History leaves no manner of doubt as to the religious character of the office of a granthi. The duties enjoined upon Bhai Budha in connection with the recitation of the Granth Sahib according to the injunctions of the Gurus are to be performed, and have been regularly performed, by all the successive granthis.

In view of the above information gathered from the history of the Sikh religion the contention that the office of a granthi is not religious but secular falls to the ground. Another contention in favour of the application of the rule of secular succession was that, whatever may be the rule of succession among the incumbents of an office in the religious institutions, which enjoined the practice of celibacy, the same rule cannot be applied to the succession among the granthis of the Darbar Sahib as the practice of celibacy, if ever in existence, had ceased to exist, and married life had been introduced into the institution at a very early stage. As a corollary to this contention, it was claimed that natural sentiments of love and affection regarding heredity must be given effect to and that the right of a son must be given preference over that of a spiritual successor. This question, however, must be decided with reference to the evidence relating to the actual practice and custom prevailing at the institution relating to the succession among the granthis, for in determining this question the only law to be observed is to be found in custom and practice which must be proved by evidence. In relying on the evidence in this case, both the parties have tried to derive assistance from the analogy afforded by succession among the Gurus to the office of a Guru. We shall, therefore, examine the rule of succession in the line of the Gurus with reference to the evidence to be found in the historical books on the Sikh religion, as it is not possible to obtain any other kind of evidence, oral or documentary, on the subject. For this purpose we have studied

INDAR SINGH v. FATEH SINGH.

Macauliffe's History of the Sikh religion and also the article on Sikhism to be found at pages 84 7, Volume XXV, of the Encyclopedia Britannica, Cambridge Edition, 1911. The word 'Sikh' literally means 'learner' or 'disciple' and was the name given by the first Guru, Nanak, to his followers. A Sikh must be a devout follower of his Guru, and in order to be a true Sikh one must be also a Singh. A man is not born Singh but becomes so by initiation. While there was a good deal of divergence of opinion as to the rule of succession, it was possible to discover from the argument of Counsel that they agreed at least on one point, namely, that in order to be qualified for the office of a Guru or a granthi, it was necessary that the candidate must be a good Sikh and a properly initiated Singh.

As we have already mentioned Guru Nanak was the first Guru and the founder of the Sikh religion. He was a khatri by caste. His successor was Guru Angad. He was also a khatri and was chosen by Guru Nanak in preference to his sons. Guru Angad's successor was Guru Amar Das. He, too, was appointed a successor by Guru Angad in preference to his sons by reason of being his faithful servant (chela). The fourth Guru Ram Das became the chela of Guru Amar Das and was a pious and devoted servant of his Guru. Amar Das, therefore, gave him his daughter in marriage and made him his successor. It may be mentioned here that it was Guru Ram Das who founded the celebrated Golden Temple of Amritsar, which has ever since been the centre of the Sikh religious worship and to which the office of the granthi is attached.

The fifth Guru, namely, Guru Arjan, was the third son of Guru Ram Das. The two elder sons were found by the Guru unfit for the duties of Guru. The third son, Arjan was, therefore, appointed to succeed him. Guru Arjan was succeeded by his son, Hargobind, and the latter by his grand son Guru Har Rai.

The eighth Guru, Har Kishen, was the second son of Har Rai His elder brother, Ram Rai was passed over in his favour. The ninth Guru was Teg Bahadur, the second son of the sixth Guru, Hargobind, and uncle of Har Rai. Ram Rai, the elder brother of Guru Har Kishen, was again passed over. Teg Bahadur was succeeded by his son, Guru Gobind Singh, the tenth Guru. This last Guru left no human successor, but vested the Guruship in the Granth Sahib of which the charge had first been given to Bhai Budha by Guru Arjan, as already mentioned.

From this history of succession among the Gurus it is clear that the appointment of three Gurus after Guru Nanak was made by the election of a chela as a Guru. With regard to the rest a selection of the best and most suitable relative was made. The right of a son or the nearest relative to succeed as such was never recognised. The analogy derived from the succession of the Gurus, therefore, does not support the contention of the plaintiff that the right of a son to succeed as such was deducible from the rule of succession in the line of the Gurus.

Two things, however, may be gathered from the above short sketch of the history of succession in the line of the Gurus, namely, (1) that the person who was appointed a Guru was either a chela or a fit relative, and (2) that he was nominated by his predecessor. The qualifications or attributes of a chela or the ceremony, if there was any, according to which a chela was made, are shrouded in obscurity. Guru Gobind Singh, the last Guru, however, prescribed a ceremony called khanda ka pahul, or baptism by the sword, by which a person was created a Singh. We find this ceremony described in the 25th Volume of Encyclopedia Britannica, at page 86, in these words:—

"This baptism may not be conferred until the candidate has reached an age of discrimination and capacity to remember obligations, seven years being fixed as the earliest age, but it is generally deferred until manhood. Five of the initiated must be present, all of whom should be learned in the faith. An Indian sweetmeat is stirred up in water with a two-edged sword and the novice repeats after the efficient the articles of his faith. Some of the water is sprinkled on him five times, and he drinks of it five times from the palms of his hands; he then pronounces the Sikh watchword Sri wah Guru ji ka Khalsa, Sri wah Guru ji ki Fateh and promises adherence to the new obligations he has contracted. He must from that date wear the five Ks. and add the word "Singh" to his original name. The five Ks. are (1) the kes, or uncut hair of the whole body, (2) the kachh, or short drawers ending above the knee, (3) the kara, or iron bangle, (4) the khanda, or small steel dagger, (5) the kanga, or "comb."

It may be taken as an axiom that, in order to be initiated as a Singh, one must be a Sikh and in order to become a chela one must be a Singh. With these preliminary remarks we proceed to describe the line of succession among the granthis.

We have already mentioned that, having compiled Sri Guru Granth Sahib (the religious book of the Sikhs), Guru Arjan entrusted the duties of the granthi to Bhai Budha. Bhai Budha was succeeded by Bhai Gopal Das. How the office devolved upon one granthi after the other will appear from the following pedigree table:—

B. CHANCHAL SINGH (BARBER BY CASTE).

B. Atma Singh (Arora).

B. Sham Singh (Arora)	B. Gopal Singh (Brahmen)	B. Makhan Singh Arora)
B. Jassa Singh (not a relation)	B. Diwah Singh (a nephew)	B. Kanhya Singh son)
B Jawahar Singh (Jat)	B. Hira Singh (a nephew)	B. Bhagat Singh (a nephew)
B. Harnam Singh (brother of Jawahar Singh)	B. Partab Singh (brother)	B. Sundar Singh (son)
B. Fateh Singh (alleged chela and successor of Harnam Singh).

B Sant Singh (grand-uncle).	B Gurbachan Singh (brother).

It cannot be definitely ascertained when the gaddi (office) ceased to be occupied by one sole gaddi nashin and was divided. From the evidence, however, it appears that Bhai Chanchal Singh was succeeded by Bhai Atma Singh. They were in no way related to one another as they belonged to different castes. After Bhai Atma Singh, the sole incumbent, we find Bhai Makhan Singh and Bhai Gopal Singh as the granthis of the Darbar Sahib. A full history of the succession of the granthis is given in Bhai Bhagat Singh v. Harnam Singh (1) and much valuable information can be gathered from it. We quote the following passage from the report of the case, at page 183, as it has a material bearing on the question under consideration :—

"It is clear that both Chanchal Singh and Atma Singh exercised an undivided sway. I am also inclined to believe that Sham Singh succeeded in the first instance to the sole authority. How the authority came to be divided appears to me to be somewhat in this way. No doubt from the earliest times the gaddi nashin would be assisted in his less important duties by his disciples and other subordinates, and it is probable that some of these would be entrusted with more important duties than others. It seems to me that, in the days of Sham Singh, Gopal Singh and Makhan Singh managed in this way to obtain such influence that possibly during Sham Sing's lifetime and, at all events, after his death they had themselves obtained the footing of something more than mere assistants, so that when Sham Singh died they succeeded in getting themselves recognised along with Sham Singh's successor, Jassa Singh, as gaddi nashin entitled to share with the direct representative of the original branch, the duties and profits of the gaddi nashin. At all events, we find from documentary evidence that in 1850-51 Jassa Singh, Makhan Singh and Gopal Singh were all established as gaddi nashins with rights which were nearly equal if not altogether so."

The succession to the office in the line represented by Makhan Singh is relied upon by the plaintiff as a proof of hereditary succession. The evidence discloses the following state of these things. In 1855 Makhan Singh finding himself too old to discharge the duties of his office appointed his son Gehna (Kanhya Singh) as his successor during his lifetime. A suit was instituted for the cancellation of the appointment but it was dismissed. Gehna Singh, however, having predeceased Makhan Singh, the latter appears to have resumed his seat on the gaddi until his death in 1863. In his lifetime, however, he had obtained leave to appoint his grandson, Bhagat Singh, as his successor. Consequently, on his death Bhagat Singh was appointed to the gaddi in 1863. A suit was instituted by Naurang Singh and Bhai Sant Singh claiming the right to succeed to the gaddi after Makhan Singh in preference to Bhai Bhagat Singh, the following pedigree table will explain the nature of the suit:—

Makhan Singh had two sons, Gehna Singh and Lehna Singh. Lehna Singh's son was Bhagat Singh, and Gehna Singh had two sons, Naurang Singh and Sant Singh. Both Lehna Singh and Gehna Singh having predeceased Makhan Singh, Bhagat Singh was nominated by Makhan Singh as the successor to the gaddi. The plaintiffs, Naurang Singh and Basant Singh, as the sons of Gehna Singh, who had been appointed to the gaddi in the lifetime of Makhan Singh, claimed the right to succeed to the gaddi as the heirs of Gehna Singh. It was held in that case that the office of gaddi nashin was not a descendible inheritance and the plaintiff's claim was dismissed. This case had come in appeal to the Chief Court and the judgment of that Court is reported as Nowrung Singh v. Bhagat Singh (2). The result was that Bhagat Singh remained in possession of the gaddi. Bhagat Singh resigned the office of gaddi nashin in his lifetime and appointed his son and chela, Sunder Singh, as his successor. After his death Bhai Sant Singh was appointed as the gaddi nashin but Bhai Gurbachan Singh, brother and disciple of Bhai Sundar Singh, brought a suit for a declaration of right regarding the gaddi and succeeded in obtaining a decree by means of a compromise, dated the 3rd of January 1906. The decree provided that Bhai Sant Singh shall up to his death or up to the time of his vacating the office of granthi of his own accord work as a granthi of the Darbar Sahib. After his death the plaintiff, namely, Bhai Gurbachan Singh, shall occupy the office of granthi. Bhai Sant Singh shall not be competent to nominate anybody as chela. Up to this time he has not nominated any one as his chela or goddi nashin nor shall he do so in future.

The history of succession in the line of Makhan Singh, therefore, in no way supports the claim of the plaintiff to treat the gaddi nashini as a descendible inheritance.

In the line of Gopal Singh, Bhai Diwan Singh and after him Bhai Hira Singh and after the latter Bhai Partap Singh succeeded to the gaddi. Diwan Singh was a nephew of Gopal Singh. Bahi Hira Singh was Diwan Singh's nephew while Partap Singh succeeded as the brother of Hira Singh. Strict rule of inheritance does not appear to have prevailed even in this branch. The evidence shows that the younger member of the family was given preference over the elder member of the branch. This, as remarked by the lower Court, leads to the conclusion that the office was conferred upon the younger members probably on the ground of their being chelas. This is prominently brought out by the rule of succession followed in the principal branch of Bhai Sham Singh. Bhai Sham Singh was succeeded by his chela Bhai Jassa Singh who was in no manner related to him. Jassa Singh in his turn was succeeded by Jawahar Singh. Although Jassa Singh, shortly before his death in 1857, had executed a deed of gift (not strictly proved in this case) in favour of Jawahar Singh, whom he had described not as a chela but as one whom he had brought up from infancy and treated him as his son, yet the document was treated as an instrument of appointment as a gaddi nashin and in fact the evidence shows that Jawahar Singh was installed on the gaddi as chela with the concurrence of the brotherhood, the sants, mahants and pujaris, etc. After the death of Bhai Jawahar Singh, Harnam Singh, his chela and real brother, succeeded to the gaddi in 1892, but his succession was disputed by a suit which went up to the Chief Court in appeal and resulted in the judgment reported as Bhai Bhagat Singh v. Harnam Singh (1) already referred to, in which it was held that the rule of succession in the case of the Darbar Sahib or Golden Temple at Amritsar had been that the gaddi nashins had nominated successors who had been installed in each case without objection. In that case almost similar questions arose for decision as in the present case. The plaintiff there claimed to succeed to the gaddi by right of survivorship in preference to Harnam Singh and contested the legality and propriety of the appointment of Harnam Singh as the head granthi after Jawahar Singh. The learned Judges referred to the decision in Nowrung Singh v. Bhagat Singh (2) and held that the office of gaddi nashin was not a descendible inheritance and that the plaintiffs had no right to succeed by right of survivorship. They further held that the plaintiffs having failed to establish their right to succeed they had no locus standi to dispossess Harnam Singh who was the de facto granthi and in possession of the office.

The above facts relating to the succession in the line of granthis, prima facie, do not support the case of the plaintiff that the succession has followed the rule of primogeniture or the office has ever been treated as a descendible inheritance. In the face of the above undeniable facts, the onus to prove that he is entitled to succeed as the son of the deceased Harnam Singh according to the practice prevailing in the institution, lies heavily on the plaintiff. As set forth in the pleadings, the plaintiff, in the first place, claims to succeed merely on the ground of sonship and, in the alternative, he claims to have been initiated as chela and nominated as successor by his deceased father Harnam Singh. Harnam Singh died on the 30th of July 1907 when the plaintiff was only one year old. Harnam Singh is said to have performed the ceremony of initiating the plaintiff as his chela when he was only forty days old. If his right to succeed to the gaddi on the ground of sonship alone is made out by the evidence on the record, the plaintiff no doubt is entitled to a decree, but if, according to the evidence, it is necessary that the candidate should be a chela as well as nominated successor, the age of the plaintiff at the date of his initiation as a chela presents an insurmountable difficulty in his way, as we shall more fully explain hereafter. Independently of his right to succeed to the office of the head granthi, the plaintiff has also claimed the right to challenge the legality of the defendant Fateh Singh's right to occupy the gaddi. Although in our opinion this last point is in no way relevant or material for the decision of this suit in which Indar Singh is the plaintiff, yet it is material for the decision of the suit for possession which is the subject-matter of the connected Appeal No. 3009 of 1916.* We shall, therefore, discuss and dispose of this question also in our judgment in Appeal No. 907 of 1917.

We have referred to three suits which were instituted and disposed of previously relating to the right of succession among the granthis. The judgment and record of those cases form part of the evidence in this case. Some of the documents to be found on the record of these cases are valuable pieces of evidence bearing on the questions raised in this case. We shall, therefore, deal with them in the forefront of our judgment. At page 24 of book A. there are printed two documents, one a petition of plaint of Bhai Jawahar Singh, dated 12th of May 1865, in which he describes himself as the chela gaddi nashin of Jassa Singh. The other a mortgage-deed, dated the 29th of May 1865, in which at the end he calls himself the chela of Bhai Jassa Singh, granthi. At page 29 of the same book there is a power of-attorney, dated the 17th of March 1870, executed by Jawahar Singh in favour of Hira Singh. In this also the executant describes himself as Bhai Jawahar Singh, chela of Bhai Jassa Singh, granthi and gaddi nashin of Sri Darbar Sahib. At page 26 of book A. there is a mortgage-deed, dated the 29th of May 1865, executed by Jawahar Singh in which he describes himself as Bhai Jawahar Singh, chela of Bhai Jassa Singh granthi. At page 31 of the same book there is an order by Pandit Behari Lal, Extra Assistant Commissioner, dated the 1st May 1871 (marked as Exhibit P-1) in which Jawahar Singh is described as the chela of Bhai Jassa Singh. At page 33 is printed an application by Hira Singh (marked as Exhibit P-124) who describes himself as the agent of Bhai Jawahar Singh, granthi. Again, at page 204 there is a robkar of the Court of the Settlement Commissioner in which Jawahar Singh is described as a chela of Jassa Singh. At page 210 there is a judgment of Captain Marshall, Assistant Commissioner, dated the 14th of August 1871, in which also Bhai Jawahar Singh disciple of Bhai Jassa Singh, is mentioned as the plaintiff in the case. The same description of Jawahar Singh is to be found in the grounds of appeal, dated the 21st of July

*See Indar Singh v. Fateh Singh, 59 Ind. Cas. 734.—[Ed.].

1867, printed at page 212. Again, at page 214, in a judgment of an Extra Assistant Commissioner, Amritsar, dated the 25th of August 1865, Jawahar Singh is described as the chela of Jassa Singh. In paragraph 2 of the plaint in this case the plaintiff Indar Singh himself admits that Bhai Jawahar Singh had initiated his real brother Bhai Harnam Singh, father of the plaintiff, as his chela and appointed him as his successor in his lifetime. At the bottom of page 41, in an agreement, dated the 15th of November 1885, executed by Bhai Chet Singh, Bhai Harnam Singh is stated to be the chela of Bhai Jawahar Singh, granthi. At page 48 there is a deed of a gift (marked as Exhibit P-82) executed by Jiwan Singh in which Harnam Singh is described as the chela or disciple of Jawahar Singh, granthi Sri Darbar Sahib. At page 51 there is a kabuliyat dated the 1st of December 1901 (marked as Exhibit P-81) executed by Maula Bakhsh in favour of Harnam Singh in which, at the bottom of the page, Harnam Singh is described as the disciple of Bhai Jawahar Singh, head granthi Sri Darbar Sahib. At page 199 there is a written statement of Bhai Harnam Singh in which, in paragraph 7, the defendant describes himself as real brother and chela of Jawahar Singh. At page 201 there is a copy of the deposition of Harnam Singh in which the witness states that he was made a chela by Jawahar Singh in the Sambat year 1933. At page 245 there is a plaint of Narain Singh, plaintiff, (marked as Exhibit D-1) in which Harnam Singh is described as the chela of Bhai Jawahar Singh. In a mortgage-deed, dated the 4th of December 1906, (marked as Exhibit D-111) at pages 261 and 262 Harnam Singh is described as the head granthi of Sri Darbar Sahib, disciple of Bhai Jawahar Singh.

The documentary evidence, therefore, clearly shows that both Jawahar Singh and Harnam Singh claimed their right to the gaddi on the basis of their being chelas. The plaintiff coming as he does into Court as the legal representative of Harnam Singh can hardly be allowed to assert that his uncle and father succeeded to the gaddi merely because the former was adopted by Jassa Singh as his son and the latter was the brother of Jawahar Singh. We have already referred to the judgment of the Chief Court in Bhai Bhagat Singh v. Harnam Singh (1) in which it was held that the right of Jawahar Singh to succeed to the gaddi was recognised on the ground of his being the chela of Jassa Singh and not on the ground of his being his adopted son. As regards Harnam Singh, although in his first application he had claimed his right of succession on the basis of his relationship to Jawahar Singh, he had rectified the omission in his second application by relying on the fact of his being his chela. We shall show this more clearly when we come to deal with the evidence relating to Harnam Singh's election and appointment. This evidence is consistent with the view we have taken with regard to the intrinsic evidence to be found in the successive appointments of the granthis.

On the 14th of November 1885, Bhai Jawahar Singh having died, the question of the appointment of his successor arose. Bhai Bhagat Singh and Bhai Hira Singh, the two granthis representing the other two branches, approached the Deputy Commissioner and put forward their claim to succeed by right of survivorship and requested that steps should be taken for the protection of the property attached to the Darbar Sahib and left by Jawahar Singh. A copy of the robkar, dated the 1st December 1886, which was drawn up on the occasion has been filed in this case. It is printed at page 42 of book A, which shows that Bhai Bhagat Singh and Hira Singh were temporarily appointed, but in order that they might not set up a permanent right, an undertaking was taken from them and instructions were issued to the darga on duty to the following effect:—

"You should have the services of Guru Granth Sahib done by Bhai Bhagat Singh and Bhai Hira Singh, the two granthis, turn by turn till the appointment of a new granthi and issue of any further order and keep the offerings of the turn of the deceased granthi with you as before. The granthis have been directed accordingly. You should also make them understand that in their rendering the service in the place of Bhai Jawahar Singh, the deceased granthi, no right of theirs would be established, nor will they have any right in the income, and that they are entrusted with this duty, with their own consent for a few days till the appointment of a new granthi." facts leading to the appointment of Harnam Singh as the head granthi. He presented two deeds before the sarbarah certifying that Harnam Singh, real brother of Jawahar Singh, possessed all the necessary qualifications for the office of the head granthi, and that he had been made a chela and nominated as his successor by Jawahar Singh, and that the sadhs, sants and mahants expressed their consent to his being appointed. A number of candidates put forward their claims and presented petitions to the Deputy Commissioner. On the proposal of the Deputy Commissioner a general committee of the Darbar Sahib for the appointment of granthi was held. Six of the candidates were selected, from among whom a suitable candidate was to be elected. After considering the merits of each of the six candidates, the majority expressed their opinion that as the sants, mahants and pujaris of Panth Khalsa had appointed Harnam Singh, real brother and chela of Jawahar Singh, deceased, according to the practice, considering him to be a rightful person and fit for the post of granthi, he should be appointed as the successor of Bhai Jawahar Singh. Harnam Singh was accordingly installed on the gadai as the head granthi. It is evident from this robkar that the appointment of Harnam Singh was made because he was the chela and nominated successor of Jawahar Singh, and that the sants, mahants and pujaris had elected him as the head granthi.

At page 88 of book A. is printed the report (marked as Exhibit P-18) made by Sardar Arur Singh, C. I. E., the sarbarah of Gurdwara of Darbar Sahib, Amritsar, recommending the appointment of Fateh Singh, defendant, as the successor of the deceased Harnam Singh. This report contains a historical survey of the practice of succession among the granthis and refers to certain documentary evidence showing that Fateh Singh had been described as his chela by Harnam Singh himself. It also mentions that in connection with the case relating to the death of Bhai Sundar Singh granthi, Bhai Harnam Singh had stated before the sarbarah on the 21st of March 1905 that Musammat Bhawan, resident of Lora Lai District, had offered her son to him in the Darbar Sahib whom he had initiated as his chela by administering to him amrit and performing the pahul ceremony, and that he had nominated him as his successor. This Sardar Arur Singh is the Manager of the Golden Temple at Amritsar. He is a C. I. E., an Honorary Magistrate, holds an influential position, and is generally respected. He is one of the prominent members of the Sikh community and has, on account of his commanding position, a unique knowledge and experience of the affairs relating to the Temple. He has given evidence in the connected Suit No. 22 of 1913 concerning the practice of succession among the granthis and the qualifications which are necessary for eligibility of a candidate. Due weight should, therefore, be given to his opinion in a matter of this kind. At the close of his examination-in chief he has described the practice relating to the appointment of a person to the office of granthi. According to his evidence, chelaship, nomination, election and installation are necessary for the appointment of a granthi. His oral evidence fully supports the report which he made as to the appointment of Fateh Singh. He was closely cross-examined as to different successions in the other branches of the granthis and with regard to other matters, but his evidence remained unshaken and there is no reason why it should not be believed.

Partap Singh, chela of Hira Singh, was also examined and questioned on the point. His evidence generally supports the statement made by Arur Singh. According to him when there are many candidates for the office, the granthis recommend a candidate to the sarbarah who, in his turn, recommends the nominee to the Deputy Commissioner. The Deputy Commissioner then passes orders for his appointment. Sants and mahants then gather together and the selected candidate is installed on the gaddi. The granthis in this instance recommended the defendant. The sarbarah as well recommended him in accordance with the wishes of the granthis. The Deputy Commissioner passed orders for the appointment of the defendant. Indar Singh, plaintiff, was a mere child at the time.

The documentary evidence, taken along with the evidence of these two witnesses, clearly proves that initiation as a chela is a necessary condition for the appointment of a granthi. The other necessary conditions, which are to follow, are the nomination, election and installation, and this is also proved by the evidence of Arur Singh and Partap Singh.

Now, we have to see whether the evidence given by the plaintiff Indar Singh in this case establishes either that he is entitled to succeed merely on the ground of his being a son or that he was initiated as a chela and nominated as a successor and was, therefore, entitled in any case to succeed. There is practically no documentary evidence in support of this claim. A number of witnesses were called to support his claim to succeed on the ground of sonship and also to prove the fact of his being made chela and nominated as his successor by Harnam Singh. None of these witnesses, however, cite any instance to support their allegation.

Sundar Singh (P. W. No. 1), aged 32 years, described himself as the Manager and lambardar of Gurdwara Akal Bunga, and stated that no granthi could appoint anybody as his chela in the presence of male issue, nor could the chela be an heir and successor of a deceased granthi in the presence of a son, and that, according to the custom obtaining in the Gurdwara, the plaintiff was the heir to gaddi of Harnam Singh. On being questioned as to whether he could cite any instance in support of his statement, he stated that he could not cite any such instance among the granthis. This witness has also stated that when the plaintiff was 1½ years old Bhai Harnam Singh brought him from Tarn Taran and held a great Utsav celebration and then said "I thank the Akal Purkh" (Almighty) "that he has blessed me with a son in my old age. When he grows, I will make over the gaddi to him, and take to the life of a recluse." He further stated that Harnam Singh had told him and his father that he had nominated his son as his successor, but the witness never mentioned this fact to the plaintiff's mother or to any of his next friends. This witness made a remarkable statement that, in order to create a chela, it was necessary to execute a document. This is altogether opposed to the general evidence as to the initiation of a chela. Harnam Singh (P. W. No. 2) also stated that a son's right to succeed as a granthi was superior to that of a chela, but he also was unable to cite any instance.

We do not think it necessary to refer to the evidence of all the plaintiff's witnesses in detail, as they all more or less repeat almost the same story. In our opinion, the oral evidence does not establish that a son merely as a son is entitled to succeed. This conclusion is supported by the two previous decisions already mentioned, namely, Bhai Bhagat Singh v. Harnam Singh (1) and Nowrung Singh v. Bhagat Singh (2), where it was clearly held that the office of granthi was not a descendible inheritance. In our opinion, therefore, the plaintiff is not entitled to succeed on this ground alone.

There is one piece of evidence which we have yet to consider, as Mr. Moti Sagar, Counsel for the appellant, has very strongly relied upon its provisions. It is the dastur-ul-amal of the Golden Temple, dated the 12th of September 1859, and printed at page 271 of the paper book. We shall refer to some of its provisions and shall deal with the argument addressed to us in respect of them. The dastur ul amal purports to lay down certain rules and regulations for the management of the affairs of the Darbar Sahib, Amritsar. The preamble runs thus:—

"With a view to remove disputes among Pujaris, Rababis, etc., and to manage the affairs of the Darbar Sahib at Amritsar in future, etc."

The reason for the promulgation of the regulation is thus stated:—

"It is evident that a misunderstanding having arisen among the Pujaris, Ragis and Kalabis of the Darbar Sahib in respect of the fixed daily allowances (nanwans) there have been disputes on the subject for many years. Now, Mr. Cooper, Deputy Commissioner of Amritsar, having regard to the dignity and honour of the Darbar Sahib, which is a Gurdwara of all the Sikhs, left at our disposal, the decision of the previous disputes and the making of proper arrangement so as to remove disputes in the future, etc., etc."

The framers of the regulations proceed to lay down rules for the guidance of each class of persons doing service at the Gurdwara in the following manner:—

Class I, Granthis.—It is the duty of the granthis to perform services at the Gurdwara of Granth Sahib as usual. Each of them has a jagir granted to him by the Government. They also enjoy the income derived from ardas daily made by the people visiting the Darbar which is distinct from the income derived from the offerings deposited in the Treasury of the Darbar Sahib. But after the death of these granthis who hold jagirs for their lifetime it will be proper that an allowance should be fixed for their successors out of the revenue of the jagirs granted for lifetime, and partly out of the income derived from the offerings made to the Darbar Sahib and kept in the Treasury and partly out of the income of the jagirs granted to the head granthi in perpetuity as usual from olden times.

Class II, Pujaris.—The Pujaris have charge of the safe custody of the offerings and the accounts of receipt and expenditure of the Treasury and of other affairs connected with the Darbar Sahib under the control of the officer in charge. Their right is superior to that of the Ragis and Rababis who have nothing to do with the charge of offerings and of the Treasury, etc. These persons are only Pujaris, and daily allowances are fixed for them from offerings made to the Darbar Sahib and kept in the Treasury, to be enjoyed generation after generation.

Class III, Ragis and Rababis.—And lastly class IV Gharalia Treasurer key keeper and munshi.

It is argued with reference to these provisions that at least with regard to pujaris it is laid down in clear words that they are to enjoy the allowance fixed for them naslan bad naslan (generation after generation) which indicates a hereditary succession. This argument derives some support from the answer given to the first question put to the framers of the rules. Next, it is contended that the granthis are included in the class of pujaris and must be governed by the same rules. In the first place, having regard to the general plan on which the dastur ul amal has been drawn up, it is not easy to accept the suggestion that granthis are not a distinct class from the pujaris. They are dealt with as a separate class and quite a different provision is made in respect of them. In the second place, having regard to the duties to be performed by the two classes of persons and the nature of allowances fixed for them, the same rule could not have been intended to be laid down for both the classes. We are unable to discover anything in the clause relating to the granthis to indicate that it was ever intended to lay down a rule of hereditary succession among them. Mr. Moti Sagar's argument, in our opinion, receives no support from the provisions of the dastur ul amal.

We shall now examine the evidence tendered to prove that, in addition to his being a son, Indar Singh was initiated as a chela and nominated as a successor by Harnam Singh. The witnesses, Sukha Singh, Gurbakhsh Singh of Tarn Taran, Sundar Singh of Tarn Taran, Hukam Singh of Tarn Taran, Nihal Singh of Tarn Taran, depose that the plaintiff was initiated as a chela at the temple of Tarn Taran by the administration of amrit. To the same effect is the evidence of Kirpal Singh and Sucket Singh. Guddu (P. W. No. 12) has simply stated that when he went to offer congratulations to Harnam Singh on the birth of a son he told him that he had offered the plantiff as ardas, and that he would succeed to the gaddi after him. He stated that ardas had been offered at Tarn Taran. To the same effect is the evidence of Nihal Singh (P. W. No. 13).

We consider this class of evidence utterly worthless. We have already referred to the ceremony of the initiation of a chela which makes it incumbent upon the candidate to utter certain mantras and wear the five Ks. It is impossible to believe that a child of 40 days would be able to perform the ceremony and get initiated as a chela. The evidence as to the nomination as a successor is equally unconvincing. P. W. Nos. 1, 3, 12, 13, 15, 20 and 21, who all belong to Amritsar, have undertaken to state that Harnam Singh mentioned to them his wish that his son should be his successor. We entirely agree with the learned Senior Subordinate Judge that if Harnam Singh had really intended to make the plaintiff his chela or to nominate him as his successor he would have taken some more formal proceedings and would have invited men of position to witness the ceremony.

After considering the evidence on the record, we have come to the conclusion that the plaintiff has not succeeded in establishing that he was either formally made a chela or appointed a successor. The mere fact of tasting amrit at the Tarn Taran Temple, to which the witnesses have deposed, even if true could not make him a chela. On this finding the claim of the plaintiff fails and for the purposes of this suit it is not necessary to decide whether the defendant is a duly appointed chela and is rightfully in possession of the gaddi, but we will decide this issue also as it is material for the decision of the connected appeal. Fateh Singh, when a child of two or three years old, was offered by his mother Musammat Bhawan to Harnam Singh and was accepted by him that he was initiated as a chela cannot be doubted. Even some of the witnesses of Indar Singh himself have deposed that amrit was administered to Fateh Singh at the shrine Hazur Sahib at Naudir, Hyderabad, Deccan. It was, however, contended that as the amrit was not administered at the Golden Temple, Amritsar, by Harnam Singh, the boy was not properly constituted his chela. No authority of custom or law has been cited in support of this contention. There is overwhelming documentary evidence besides oral evidence in the case, which goes to show that both in the lifetime of Harnam Singh and after his death Fateh Singh was recognized and accepted as the chela of Harnam Singh by all concerned. In the mortgage-deed, dated the 6th of April 1905, a copy of which (marked as Exhibit P-31) is printed at page 55 of book A. Bhai Fateh Singh is described as the chela of Bhai Harnam Singh, granthi. This mortgage-deed was obtained in the name of the minor Fateh Singh by Harnam Singh himself and this description of the minor mortgagee was given in the deed at his own instance. The document is actually signed by him. In the registration endorsement again "Bhai Harnam Singh, granthi Guru, of the minor mortgagee" is mentioned as being present. To this endorsement also the thumb mark of Harnam Singh is appended. At page 61 of the same book is printed a copy of a lease, dated the 6th of April 1905 (marked as Exhibit P. W. 8) under which the mortgagor, Musammat Ishar Kaur, took the mortgaged house on rent from "Bhai Fateh Singh, chela of Bhai Harnam Singh." At page 120 is printed a petition of objection marked as Exhibit P-94 by Musammat Malan, widow of Harnam Singh, and the mother of the plaintiff Indar Singh, in which in the heading Bhai Fateh Singh is described as the head granthi and in paragraph 3 of the petition the following statement is made by Musammat Malan:—"Bhai Harnam Singh died two years ago. I, with the help of my agents, have been managing the property of Indar Singh, my son, and Fateh Singh, chela of my husband, from that time. There is no necessity to appoint any other guardian." At page 115 is printed a power of-attorney, dated the 19th of June 1903 (marked as Exhibit P-90), executed by Musammat Malan in favour of Bhai Sobha Singh in which Musammat Malan describes herself in these words:—"I, Musammat Malan, widow of Bhai Harnam Singh, granthi of the Darbar Sahib, Amritsar, caste zemindar, resident of Amritsar, Katra Harsa Singh, sirbarah of Fateh Singh, minor, aged about 17 years, chela of Bhai Harnam Singh granthi." At page 114 there is a receipt, Exhibit P-132, on behalf of Bhai Fateh Singh, granthi of Sri Darbar Sahib, chela of Bhai Harnam Singh, deceased, under the guardianship of Musammat Malan. This receipt is thumb marked by Musammat Malan as the guardian of the minor. At page 92 is printed an extract from the day-book of Darbar Sahib in which the following entry is to be found:—"Ardas Fateh Singh, chela of Bhai Harnam Singh, who was appointed to day as gaddi nashin in place of Bhai Harnam Singh," etc.

To the same effect is an entry at page 94 noting the succession of Fateh Singh, chela of Bhai Harnam Singh, to the gaddi of the head granthi. At page 96 is an entry showing the payment of Rs. 5 by Fateh Singh, chela of Bhai Harnam Singh, as ardas on his appointment as granthi. In order to rebut the evidence as to the chelaship of Fateh Singh, evidence was called on behalf of the plaintiff, Indar Singh, to show that the kirya karam (death ceremony) was performed by Arjan Singh, and that Fateh Singh was not present on the occasion, and it was argued that had Fateh Singh been made chela, it would have been his duty and privilege to have performed the kirya karam of his Guru Harnam Singh, but this story is falsified by both oral and documentary evidence. At page 362 is printed the evidence of Prem Singh, a witness in Suit No. 22 of 1912. He was called to prove certain entries in account-books. He states that at leaf No. 83 of the Bahi regarding Baba Atal, under date the 26th Sawan 1964, Rs. 2 are entered on the credit side as income on account of ardas made by Fateh Singh at the time the kirya karam ceremony of Harnam Singh was performed The plaintiff has there been shown as the chela of Harnam Singh. Under the same date an entry of Rs. 10 on account of the price of a doshala and turban given to the plaintiff in connection with the performance of kirya karam ceremony of Harnam Singh, is made. The plaintiff is shown as the chela of Harnam Singh. At page 73 there is an entry showing Rs. 3 on account of parshad (food) given to Fateh Singh to taste after the kirya karam ceremony was over. Another entry at the bottom of the page shows an item of Rs. 43, on account of a turban given to Fateh Singh, on the kirya karam day. At page 84 there is an entry of Rs. 2 on account of the amount received from Bhai Fateh Singh who gave it by way of ardas to Sri Darbar Sahib on the day of kirya karam ceremony to Bhai Harnam Sihgh, granthi. At the next page 85 we find the following entry :—Rs. 12 on account of the price of the shawl and turban given to Bhai Fateh Singh on the occasion of the kirya karam ceremony of Bhai Harnam Singh, granthi of Sri Darbar Sahib.

It must be admitted that the oral evidence on behalf of Fateh Singh in proof of his chelaship and nomination as a successor is not as strong as it might have been, but the direct documentary evidence and other circumstances leave no doubt as to his appointment as a chela and as a successor. The evidence as to Musammat Malan acting as the sarbarah and guardian of Fateh Singh, chela of Harnam Singh, cannot be easily got over. If Fateh Singh was a total stranger and not a chela, what right had he to meddle with the affairs of the gaddi. Musammat Malan, being the mother of Indar Singh, plaintiff, would have been the last person to admit the claim of a stranger to be the chela and successor of her husband. During her guardianship the lady received offerings brought by the defendant. Again, the evidence as to the election of Fateh Singh by the brotherhood, sants, mahants and pujaries is equally convincing. No particular form or procedure has been laid down anywhere as to the election of a granthi. All that appears to be necessary and all that is shown to have been done on such an occasion is that, formally or informally, the opinion of the members of the brotherhood is ascertained, a mahzarnama is invariably prepared bearing the signature of as many mahants, sants and granthis as possible and then the matter is reported for orders of the Deputy Commissoner. If he is satisfied as to the election, a date is fixed inviting the members of the brotherhood to assemble for the purpose of installing the elected candidate on the gaddi. All this is clearly shown to have been done in this case. Arur Singh, a respectable and independent witness, holding the responsible post of the Manager of the Temple, was satisfied as to the wish of the brotherhood by the presentation to him of a mahzarnama in favour of Fateh Singh and made a report to the Deputy Commissioner recommending the appointment of Fateh Singh. This report has been proved by Arur Singh by his evidence given in this case. If we believe the evidence of Arur Singh, given as a witness in the case and the statement contained in his report, we must hold that Fateh Singh had been appointed a chela and nominated successor by Harnam Singh. In the report of Arur Singh, it is clearly stated that, in connection with the case set up after Sunder Singh's death, Harnam Singh on the 21st of March 1915 had clearly stated that, in order to avoid any of the disputes in future, he had nominated Fateh Singh as his successor. The Sardar has, moreover, deposed as a witness in this case that, in his presence, Harnam Singh stated that Fateh Singh would succeed him, see the original statements of which a translation is given on page 371 of paper-book A. In the translation the words "in my presence" are omitted. There is no reason to disbelieve this evidence. There being no clear rule laid down as to the initiation of a chela or as to the nomination of a successor or the election of a granthi, we ought to uphold the appointment of Fateh Singh as the head granthi if we are satisfied that the evidence on the record justifies the finding that he was installed on the gaddi with the general support of the brotherhood and sanction of the Government authorities. We hold that the evidence on the record fully establishes that the sants mahants and pujaris, the relations of Harnman Singh and his widow, Musammat Malan, were quite satisfied and agreeable to the appointment of Fateh Singh as the head granthi. In fact, no objection was taken by Mussammat Malan or by any other person on behalf of Indar Singh, plaintiff, denying the right of Fateh Singh and putting forward the claim of the minor plaintiff. In our opinion, the learned Judge of the Court below arrived at a right conclusion and we entirely agree with him.

In view of the definite conclusions at which we have been able to arrive on the positive evidence produced on behalf of Fateh Singh, we are not prepared to accept the negative evidence tendered on behalf of Indar Singh, defendant. This evidence almost wholly consists of oral depositions of witnesses, some of whom belong to Amritsar and have been examined in Court and others belonging to Naudir (Nizam's Dominions) who have been examined on Commisseon? Very little weight attaches to the evidence of this class.

Amritsar witnesses try to show that there was no nomination or election of Fateh Singh. It is very easy to say so, but can this outweigh the documentary evidence on the record? The mahzarnama which was signed by sants, mahants and pujaris was a very strong piece of evidence proving the sense of the people to which further weight was given by the sanction of the Deputy Commissioner. It is true the mahzarnama has not been produced, but its non-production is not due to any fault on the part of Fateh Singh. It was extracted by some one from the record relating to the appointment of Fateh Singh. The application printed at page 132 of the book A. shows that this fact was brought to the notice of the proper authority. That record has been sent for and from its examination we find that the paper No. 8 on it was the mahzarnama and it has been removed and another paper without any signature on it has been substituted in its place. Secondary evidence as to its contents was, therefore, admissible. Sardar Arur Singh has deposed to its contents and said that it bore the signatures of sants, mahants, etc. The document now found on the record, therefore, cannot be the real mahzarnama as it bears no signatures. We have already held that positive oral evidence, supported by undeniable documentary evidence, proves beyond any reasonable doubt the fact of the election of Fateh Singh by the brotherhood. We, therefore, do not believe the oral testimony of witnesses who have come forward to prove the negative.

The evidence given by the Naudir witnesses is not of much value. They depose that amrit was administered to Fateh Singh at Hazur Temple at Naudir. This evidence has been relied upon as showing that the ceremony of the administration of amrit at Hazur Temple negatives the possibility of Fateh Singh being the chela of Harnam Singh. We fail to see the force of this argument. Admittedly, Harnam Singh himself had taken the boy to Hazur Sahib and was present there on the occasion of the administration of the amrit. It is not suggested or shown that some one else had administered it. These witnesses have also given their opiuion that a son ought to succeed, and that in the presence of a son a chela cannot succeed. They have, however, like the Amritsar witnesses, failed to cite any instance. The whole of the plaintiff's evidence, in our opinion, is valueless and fails to establish the case set up by him.

For the reasons set forth above, we affirm the decision of the Court below and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

LAHORE HIGH COURT.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL No. 3009 OF 1916.

May 15, 1920.

Present:—Mr. Justice Scott-Smith and Mr. Justice Abdul Raoof.

INDAR SINGH, MINOR, THROUGH ARJAN SINGH, AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

FATEH SINGH—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Religious Institution—Golden Temple, Amritsar—Granthi—Succession to property acquired by Granthi—Self-acquisition of Granthi—Judgment, previous, admissibility of.

INDAR SINGH v. FATTEH SINGH.

A person who holds the office of granthi of the Golden Temple at Amritsar is at liberty to spend the income of his office in any manner he pleases, and is not bound to spend any portion of it in charity. If he acquires property out of such income, he is free to dispose of it as he thinks best, and unless such property is dedicated by him to religious purposes, the property descends on his death to his natural heirs according to the usual rule of inheritance. Where, however, a granthi succeeds to property from another granthi to the exclusion of natural heirs, there is a presumption that such property has been dedicated to religious uses, even in the absence of positive evidence of actual dedication.[p 736, col. 2.]

A judgment in a suit holding that the property attached to the office of granthi is wakf and inalienable, is admissible in a subsequent suit for the purpose of showing that at the time it was given the right of the granthi to alienate was called in question. [p. 737, cols. 1 & 2.]

First appeal from the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Amritsar, dated the 10th of October 1916.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. B, Messrs. Santam and Muhammad Rafi, for the Hon'ble Mian Muhammad Shafi, K. B., for the Appellants.

Mr. O. Bevan-Petman, Bakhshi Tek Chand, and Lala Hari Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The properties in dispute in the case out of which the present appeal arises were in the possession of Harnam Singh, head granthi of the Golden Temple, Amritsar, who died on the 29th of July 1907. The plaintiff-respondent, Fateh Singh, who claims to be his chela was duly installed in the office of head granthi in succession to the deceased on the 4th December 1907. The defendant-appellant, Indar Singh, is the son of the deceased Harnam Singh. His age was about one year at the time of his father's death, and he was, therefore, only about 7 years of age when the present suit was instituted in 1913. Fateh Singh was also a minor at the time of Harnam Singh's death, and the widow of Harnam Singh, who is the mother of Indar Singh, was the guardian of both the present parties. No claim was put forward on behalf of Indar Singh to succeed. Harnam Singh as head granthi at the time of the latter's death and Fateh Singh was installed in the office without opposition on the part of any one. About 1909 disputes arose between the parties in respect of the properties left by Harnam Singh, and Fateh Singh instituted the present suit to obtain possession thereof on the 22nd of April 1913. On the 27th of May 1913 a suit was instituted on behalf of Indar Singh to obtain the office of head granthi for himself, and for the dismissal of Fateh Singh therefrom. That suit was dismissed by the lower Court, and Civil Appeal No. 907 of 1917,* which we have heard along with the present appeal, was lodged from that order.

In the suit brought by Fateh Singh a decree was given for the properties in list A., filed with the plaint, and for Rs. 5,940 on account of income of the properties in suit out of Rs. 10,423 actually claimed. The suit for the properties contained in lists C, D. and E. was dismissed. From this order an appeal has been lodged on behalf of Indar Singh, Fateh Singh has not appealed as regards the portion of his claim dismissed nor has he filed cross-objections in the appeal of Indar Singh. Our judgment of to-day's date in Civil Appeal No. 907 of 1917 should be read along with the present judgment and our findings recorded therein, so far as may be necessary, should be taken as findings in the present case also. We have dismissed Indar Singh's appeal in the other case, and in our judgment have held, inter alia:—

(1) that the office of granthi is a religious office;

(2) that a son has no right to succeed his father in this office merely on the ground that he is his son;

(3) that Fateh Singh was the chela of Harnam Singh and was duly appointed as head granthi of the Golden Temple in succession to him, and that he is entitled to hold that office;

(4) that Jawahar Singh, the predecessor-in-office of Harnam Singh, succeeded thereto as the chela of Jassa Singh with the approval of the brotherhood;

(5) that Harnam Singh was the chela of Jawahar Singh and succeeded to the office of granthi as such, and because he was duly appointed thereto, and not because he was the brother of Jawahar Singh.

There are at present three granthis attached to the Golden Temple, whose pedigree is given in the judgment of the lower Court at page 431 of the main paper-book which we call A. It is given more fully in the document relating to the appointment as granthi of Fateh Singh dated the 15th August 1907, marked Exhibit P 18

printed at pages 88, et seq., of the paper book, The two first granthis are not shown in these tables. They were Budha and Gowal Das, respectively, the latter having been succeeded by Chanchal Singh. At first there was only one granthi, but after Atma Singh there were three. The line of the head granthi started with Bhai Sham Singh. In that line the succession has always gone from guru to chela for though Harnam Singh was the brother of Jawahar Singh, it has been found that he succeeded him as his chela and not as his brother. In this line Harnam Singh is the first granthi who has left a son, and this accounts for the dispute between his son and his chela. When Jawahar Singh died, there was a dispute relating to his succession. Harnam Singh's title to succeed was disputed by the other two granthis Hira Singh and Bhagat Singh. In 1887 they instituted a suit against him for a declaration that his succession to the gaddi should be considered unlawful, and that he should be dispossessed of the properties detailed in the lists filed with the plaint and said to be connected with the gaddi, and that the possession of the same should be given to them, the plaintiffs. That suit was eventually decided by a Bench of the Chief Court, the judgment of which is reported as Bhai Bhagat Singh v. Harnam Singh (1). It was there found that "the rule of succession in the case of the Darbar Sahib, or Golden Temple, at Amritsar, has been that the gaddi nashins have nominated successors who have been installed in each case without objection." It was held "that no good grounds existed for applying the doctrine of survivorship to the case of succession to the office of granthi," and that the plaintiffs had failed to prove that they were themselves the rightful successors to Jawahar Singh, or that Harnam Singh's continuance in the office of which he was in actual possession was opposed to any customary rules governing the institution. The result of this decision was that Harnam Singh continued to hold the office of granthi and to remain in possession of the properties previously held by Jawahar Singh. The lower Court has now held that Jawahar Singh was the chela of Jassa Singh and succeeded him as such, and did not get his properties and the gaddi on account of a deed of gift said to have been executed by Jassa Singh in his favour. It has also held that the properties in the hands of Harnam Singh and his predecessor in-office as granthi are wakf and attached to the office, and that Indar Singh merely, as the son of Harnam Singh, has no right to succeed to them. The suit has been dismissed as regards certain properties which were acquired by Harnam Singh himself out of his income and in regard to which it has not been proved that they were dedicated to the office of granthi. It is common ground that a granthi can spend the income of his office in any way he likes; he is not bound to spend any part of it in charity; he can acquire property out of his income, and can dispose of that property in any way he likes. If he acquires property and dies without having dedicated it to religious purposes, there is no reason why it should not descend to his natural heirs according to the usual rule of inheritance. If, however, it is shown that any part of the property has descended from one granthi to another to the exclusion of the natural heirs, then it appears to us that a presumption must arise that such property has been dedicated to religious uses even if there be no positive evidence of actual dedication. In this connection, we have been referred to Ram Singh v. Nehal Singh (2) where, at the bottom of page 470*, the following passage occurs:—

"No one would have any doubt that if a Sadh himself acquires property, and does not devote it to religious purposes (and a Sadh can acquire property), he remains absolute arbiter of the disposal of the property; but if the property has once passed to a chela in virtue of his being chela to the exclusion of natural heirs, it certainly would be only reasonable to hold that the chela must treat the property as religious."

In the case of Har Parshad v. Sadhu (3) a Bench of the Chief Court, in considering the case where a trust had been created by the Nai community for the maintenance of a Smadh, made the following remarks at page 96†:—

'This record is equally consistent with the allegation that Shib Charan Gir held the property as trustee, and does not, in our opinion, mean that he was the private owner thereof. The oral evidence on the point is altogether worthless; but the fact that the succession to the entire property has been admittedly from Guru to chela irresistably points to its being a religious trust."

The first two items in list A. dealt with by the lower Court are some shops in the rice market, and in the wheat market in the city of Amritsar. In connection with these, the lower Court has referred to a judgment of Sardar Shamsher Singh, which was given in a suit contesting the right of the then granthi, Jawahar Singh, to alienate these shops. The judgment in question will be found printed at pages 207-210 of the main paper-book which we will call A. It is dated 21st April 1870. It was held therein that the property was wakf and was attached to the gaddi, and, therefore, could not be treated by the granthi as his private property. The mortgages made by him were, therefore, cancelled. It has been strongly contended before us on behalf of the appellant that this judgment is inadmissible in evidence for the purpose of proving that the property then in dispute is wakf and inalienable. Counsel for the respondent contends that the judgment is admissible under section 13 of the Indian Evidence Act. The admissibility of such judgments is discussed at great length in Amir Ali and Woodroffe's Law of Evidence, 5th Edition, at pages 170, et seq. The learned authors referred to the case of Gujja Lal v. Fatteh Lal (4) in which it was held that such judgments are inadmissible in evidence as "transactions" under section 13 of the Evidence Act or as "facts" under section 11, or under any other section of the Act. The learned authors have gone on to point out that the Madras High Court concurred in the decision in Ramasami v. Appavu (5) The authors also considered various rulings of their Lordships of the Privy Council, and finally came to the conclusion that such judgments are not relevant as decisions on points at issue. The matter was also elaborately discussed by Mr. Justice Beaman in the case reported as Mahamad Amin v. Hasan (6). The learned Judge's conclusion will be found at the bottom of page 157, from which the following passage may be quoted:—

"All the best authorities, I think, agree that a judgment qua judgment and in respect to its contents, certainly is not such a 'transaction' or 'instance,' but it may be the simplest and most convenient proof of the transaction, namely, the litigation, or the instance, namely, the assertion by the plaintiff, and the denial by the defendant of the right. So limited, there would be no great objection or difficulty in the way of admitting the judgment. Its probative effect would then be no more than this, to establish that, at the time it was given, there had been a transaction between the parties to it in which the right in question had been asserted or denied....It being conceded, as I think on a correct reading of the best authorities, it must be conceded, that if judgments of this kind are admissible at all under sections 43 and 13 they are admissible only as the simplest proof of a transaction or an instance within the meaning of the latter section; it follows, of course, that the proof cannot be taken beyond the thing to be proved, and the thing to be proved is no more than that there was an assertion or a denial, not the grounds upon which a Judge held that the assertion or the denial was good or bad in law."

We have no hesitation in agreeing with this interpretation of the law and we, therefore, consider that the judgment of Sardar Shamsher Singh can only be treated as admissible for the purpose of showing that at that time also, the right of the granthi to alienate certain property was called in question. The finding of the Court that the property was wakf and was attached to the gaddi is, in our opinion, not relevant.

At page 279 of paper-book A. is printed a translation of a copy of a copy of a so-called deed of gift which appoints Jawahar Singh in place of Jassa Singh granthi. Now, in regard to this, it has been objected that the deed has not been proved in this case, and Counsel for the appellant has quite failed to show us how it has been proved. But even taking this document at its face value, we do not consider that it shows that Jawahar Singh succeeded to Jassa Singh's office and the property held by him in virtue of a gift. The deed purports to convey not only all Jassa Singh's property but also the gaddi of the Darbar Sahib, i.e, the office of granthi. It purports to be signed by the granthis and mahants of other religious institutions in Amritsar, and in our opinion it should really be looked upon as a deed appointing Jawahar Singh as successor of Jassa Singh. In this connection much stress is laid by Counsel for the respondent upon certain admissions of Jawahar Singh contained in the written pleas filed by him in the case of Bhagat Singh and Diwan Singh versus Jawahar Singh (see pages 212 213, paper book A). In ground No. 3, he states that all kinds of property attached to the gaddi is still held by the appellant, i.e, Jawahar Singh. In ground No. 6 he says it is a fact that the appellant's Guru (Jassa Singh) with the approval of the Raises, the sardars and the sadh sangat made over to the appellant all the property attached to the gaddi including the land in dispute and appointed him a gaddi nashin executing a document to the effect which was also signed by the respondent's Guru This, in our opinion, shows conclusively that Jawahar Singh considered the so called deed of gift to be a deed appointing him to the gaddi, and transferring to him all the property attached thereto. Jawahar Singh was duly installed on the gaddi and, therefore, as a matter of course, obtained possession of all the property attached to the gaddi.

The lower Court has laid stress on the fact that in the 1887 suit Bhagat Singh and Hira Singh, in their plaint referred to the property in dispute as being connected with the gaddi. Harnam Singh, in his written pleas, said that being the real brother and chela of Jawahar Singh he was, by law and custom, the rightful heir to the gaddi, and that according to ancient custom he was appointed gaddi nashin by the sants, the mahants, the pujaris, and the Darbar Committee, and that he could not be dismissed after such appointment. The defendant, in that case never pleaded that, even if he was not entitled to the gaddi, he was entitled to inherit the property of Jawahar Singh because he was his brother nor did he dispute the averment in the plaint that the property in dispute was connected with the gaddi. Bhup Singh, the father of Jawahar Singh, had three sons, viz., Jawahar Singh, Harnam Singh, and Jit Singh. A statement of Bhup Singh made by him in the case of Bhagat Singh versus Jawahar Singh on the 27th April 1876 (Exhibit P.120) is printed at pages 33-34 of paper-book A In that statement he said : "my houses and property are not attached to the gaddi (Darbar Sahib). This property of mine shall not be inherited by Jawahar Singh as he has become a disciple of a panth. I have offered him to the Darbar Sahib. I have got two other sons, and the property shall be inherited by them." Now, Jawahar Singh, actually succeeded to the office of granthi and got all the property held by Jassa Singh during the lifetime of his father Bhup Singh. Jawahar Singh died before his father, and the office of granthi together with the property went to Harnam Singh. Bhup Singh died subsequently, and Jit Singh, his son, admittedly inherited the whole of his property, no part of it going to Harnam Singh. Harnam Singh never claimed a share in it, nor did Jit Singh claim any share in the property of Jawahar Singh. These facts are important as showing that the property of Jassa Singh descended to Jawahar Singh, and from him to Harnam Singh to the exclusion of the natural heirs. Prima facie, the inference to be drawn from this is that the property, which so descended, is attached to the office of granthi, and was dedicated thereto.

It remains for us to consider from whom the property now in dispute has come. The lower Court has satisfied itself by tracing it to Jahawar Singh, and has held that any property which came down from Jawahar Singh to Harnam Singh must be wakf and attached to the gaddi and must now go to the gaddi nashin, i.e., Fatteh Singh. We proceed now to discuss the items seriatim in the same order as the lower Court has done: —

Items Nos. 1 and 2.—These are the shops, six in the rice market, and five in the wheat market, which have already been referred to. It is admitted before us that they are identical with certain shops which were claimed in the suit brought by Bhagat Singh and Hari Singh against Harnam Singh after the death of Jawahar Singh. Their identity is also admitted with those which were the subject of the suit decided by Sardar Shamsher Singh ; but we have already held that the judgment in that suit is inadmissible in evidence. It is argued on behalf of the appellant that there is no proof that these shops were in the possession of any granthi prior to Jawahar Singh. Now in connection with these shops, and other items of property in dispute, Counsel for the respondent has referred us to numerous entries in certain account books said to have been made by Bhai Sujan Singh and Bhai Jassa Singh, the grandfather and father of Jai Ram Singh, P. W. No 24, whose statement will be found printed at pages 355 and 356 and 375 of paper-book A. Jairam Singh was a servant of Bhai Jawahar Singh and Bhai Harnam Singh, granthis, and is now servant of Bhai Fatteh Singh, granthi. He states that his father and grandfather were similarly servants of the granthis of this line. Their duty was to realise money and to keep accounts. He produced two account-books which he says were found from a box in possession of Fatteh Singh. He says that they contain entries in the handwriting of his grandfather and father. He did not see his grandfather and therefore, cannot, of course, identify his handwriting. But the account-books were, in our opinion, produced from proper custody within the meaning of section 90 of the Evidence Act. The entries relied upon are all much more than 30 years old and we therefore, presume that they are in the handwriting of Bhai Sujan Singh and Bhai Jassa Singh as they purport to be. The books appear to be regularly kept account books and in our opinion the entries in them are admissible in evidence. In connection with Items Nos. 1 and 2 of the property in dispute, Counsel has referred us to entries printed at pages 160, 162 and 173-175 of paper-book A. The entry on page 160 is one of Rs. 8 9 6 on account of plastering of the shops situate in kanak mandi, in the handwriting of Sujan Singh, dated 24th Sawan Sambat 1887, corresponding to A. D. 1830. This entry is, therefore at the present time about 80 years old. It is not proved that there is any other shop in the kanak mandi other than those in dispute to which this entry could refer. The entry on page 162 is of Sambat 1895, and is an entry of Re. 1-2-0 on account of earth thrown in front of a shop situate in kanak mandi. The shops in dispute are in kanak mandi, and, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, there is no doubt that this entry refers to these shops. The entries at pages 173-175 also refer to numerous items of expenditure in connection with the shops situate in kanak mandi in the year Sambat 1912. Jassa Singh granthi died in 1913. We agree with Counsel for the respondent that the presence of these entries is quite sufficient to prove that these shops were in the possession of Jassa Singh granthi.

Item No. 3.—Two shops in the Misri Bazar and two shops in Chauk Malla Singh which together constitute one block. On behalf of the appellant it is not admitted that these shops were in dispute in the 1887 suit, but we have carefully compared the plans filed in the present and in the former suits at pages 418 and 187, respectively, of paper-book A., and we have no doubt that they are identical. The situation is the same and we fully agree with the lower Court that the identity has been proved. The old accounts contain numerous entries relating apparently to these shops. The first entry printed at page 160 was one of Re. 1 0-9 on account of reeds for the chhappar of the shop situate in Chauk Malla Singh. On page 161 there is an entry of Rs. 7-15-0 on account of flooring of the shops situate in Chauk Malla Singh bearing date Sambat 1895. The second entry on page 162, Rs. 6 6-0 of Sambat 1895 also refers to shops in Chauk Malla Singh. So does the second entry on page 163 and the second entry on page 164. The accounts on pages 177-180 contain an account of numerous sums spent on shops situate in Chauk Malla Singh under date Maghar Sambat 1906 These entries all relate to the time of Jassa Singh granthi, and, in our opinion, it is clearly proved that these shops were in his possession.

Item No. 4.—These are two shops and a house at the back of them situate in Katra Safaid or Chitta. It is admitted that this property was in the possession of Jawahar Singh, granthi, but it is contended that he himself bought it. At page 235 of paper-book A. will be found a translation of a registered deed of sale, dated the 26th June 1833, executed by Gurdit Singh and Sundar Singh in favour of Jawahar Singh, granthi. This was a deed of sale of two shops together with a roofed sabat situate in Katra Sufaid, city Amritsar. The sale was for a consideration of Rs. 750. Mr. Tek Chand, Vakil, for the respondent, admits that item No. 4 of the property in dispute is the same as was transferred by this deed of sale. He refers, however, to the statement of Arjan Singh, D. W. No. 3, page 392, line 26, paper-book A., where the witness stated that he, i.e., Jawahar Singh, gifted two shops in Katra Sufaid to Bhai Rattan Singh. Rattan Singh got possession of these shops after the gift. He afterwards sold them. The contention is that these are the same shops which Jawahar Singh gifted to Rattan Singh, and which Rattan Singh's sons sold back to Jawahar Singh. Jairam Singh, however, (see page 357, line 6 of paper-book A), stated that Bhai Jawahar Singh did not gift two shops in Katra Sufaid to Rattan Singh. Counsel has referred us to certain entries in the accounts at pages 163 165 which relate to the property in Chitta Katra. It is, however, in our opinion, not shown that Item No. 4 is the same as was in the possession of Jassa Singh. At all events, it is admitted that this property was purchased by Jawahar Singh himself. They are not traced further back than Jawahar Singh.

Items No. 5.—Haveli Hathiwoli, situate in Kucha Sukhdial, Katra Ramgarian, city Amritsar. It is admitted that this property was in dispute in the 1887 suit and, therefore, it came from Jawahar Singh. At page 162 of paper book A. will be found an entry in the accounts of Rs. 0-8-0 on account of earth for the Hathiwali Haveli. In the absence of any evidence to the contrary, we hold that this entry refers to Item No. 5. It is of Jassa Singh, granthi's time. We have no doubt, therefore, that this item of property was in the possession of Jassa Singh.

Item No. 6.—A Tawela in Bazar Mai Sewan. It is admitted that this property was in dispute in the 1887 suit; in other words, that it descended from Jawahar Singh but there is no evidence to show that it was in Jassa Singh's possession.

Item No. 7.—A shop in Kucha Charat Singh. It was not claimed in the 1887 suit, but Counsel for the appellant admits that it came from Jawahar Singh, granthi. It is built on nazool property, and the entries on pages 150 151 of paper book A. are said to refer to it. These entries relate to a shop in Katra Charat Singh and show that Jawahar Singh, granthi, was in possession of the site, the annual rent being Rs. 4. There are numerous entries in the accounts referring to this shop. On page 162 there is an entry relating to the half yearly Municipal tax for the site under the shops situate in Katra Charat Singh, though the amount debited is not entered. On page 163 there is an entry showing that Rs. 5-11 0 were spent on account of plastering shops in Katra Charat Singh. There is another entry on this page of Re. 1 on account of a log of wood to be used in the shop in Katra Charat Singh. At the bottom of page 164 there is an entry of Rs. 3 debited on account of half yearly Municipal tax paid for the site under the shops in Katra Charat Singh. There is another entry relating to it on page 165, and we consider it to be fully proved that this item of the property descended from Jassa Singh, granthi.

Item No. 8.—A burjah with a shop and a room. This property is admittedly wakf. No arguments have been addressed to us in respect of it.

Item No. 9.—A two and a half storied shop in Katra Harsa Singh. It is admitted that this property was in dispute in the 1887 suit and, therefore, descened from Jawahar Singh. On page 24 of paper book A. will be found printed a translation of a plaint, dated the 12th May 1885 filed by Jawahar Singh, granthi, against Nihal Singh in which he asks for possession of this house. The judgment in that suit, which will be found at page 214 of paper book A, refers to this property as attached to the gaddi; but this judgment is inadmissible in evidence. The property is not traced further back than Jawahar Singh.

Item No. 10.—A two storied shop in Chauk Baba Atal together with a smadh and a thara. The smadh is that of Bhai Sham Singh, the predecessor-in office as granthi of Jassa Singh. We have been referred to an entry in the Register of tharas in the Amritsar city at pages 38 39, paper-book A., which shows that Jassa Singh was in possession of a thara with a smadh in 1883-84. It is alleged that this entry relates to the thara which forms part of this item, but the identity is not established, and it is to be noted that Jassa Singh died long before 1883. It is admitted that this property was in the possession of Jawahar Singh, but it is contended that though the smadh may be wakf it does not follow that it and the thara and the shop are attached to the office of head granthi. This property was not claimed in the 1887 suit, and paragraph 3 at page 435 of the judgment of the lower Court shows that the plaintiff's Pleader stated that it was not claimed in the previous suit as it contained the smadh of Sham Singh, granthi, and was not a property attached to the gaddi. If it was not attached to the gaddi at that time we do not quite see how it can be said to have become attached to the gaddi during the incumbency of Harnam Singh, granthi. The shop was built by Harnam Singh and a suit was brought by Narain Singh and others to restrain him from building it, see page 345 of the paper-book. We have no information as to what the result of that suit was, but apparently Harnam Singh was allowed to build the shop, for it is in existence at the present time. As to the smadh of Sham Singh there appears to be force in the contention of the plaintiff's Counsel that it was probably set up in the time of his successor Jassa Singh and it appears probable that Jassa Singh and his successor have been looking after it. We think that the smadh and thara in front of it should be held to be attached to the gaddi but not the shop No. 543.

There certainly is no evidence that Harnam Singh dedicated the latter which he built to religious uses.

Item No. 11.—This consists of a dharamsala and the shops at Tarn Taran, a town some 12 miles from the city of Amritsar. It was admittedly in the possession of Jawahar Singh, but Harnam Singh appears to have purchased and annexed to the original property a strip of ground and to have re-built the whole of the property. There was a baoli or well in this property and there was a dispute about it between the Municipality of Tarn Taran and Harnam Singh, granthi, (see copy of an application by Bhai Harnam Singh marked Exhibit 115, printed at page 50 of paper book A). In this Harnam Singh states: "we have been holding possession of the said baoli from the time of our ancestors, that is to say, for six generations back. We have been holding possession of the baoli from the time it was built by Budha Mal." Budha Mal is the name of the first granthi and it was he to whom Harnam Singh was referring in his application. It has never been contended that this property was in the possession of Harnam Singh's natural family for six generations and when he referred to its having been in the possession of his ancestors for six generations we have no doubt that he meant that it was in the possession of the previous six granthis. It was admittedly in the possession of Jawahar Singh granthi. At pages 6 and 7 of paper-book A. will be found an extract from the Khana shumari papers of Tarn Taran prepared in the Settlement of 1852. This shows that Jassa Singh, chela of Sham Singh, granthi, was in possession of five shops, Nos. 430-434. No. 430 is shown as lying desolate, No. 434 is shown to be a dharamsala, No. 432 is shown to be in possession of Dusandhi, a grain parcher, for the past 12 years; No. 433 is shown as in possession of Hakam, and No. 434 in the possession of Tola Singh, son of Jhanda Singh. Now, in the Khana shumari papers prepared in 1883 84, printed at pages 140-141 of the paper-book, we find Bhai Jawahar Singh, granthi, in possession of five shops or five properties at Tarn Taran, their Nos. being 128 132, No. 128 was shown as occupied by Gurmukh Singh, son of Tola Singh, khatri, and, therefore, it probably corresponds to No. 434 shown in the earlier Khana shumari as in the possession of Tola Singh, khatri. No. 131 was occupied by Amir, son of Sandhi, caste Bharbhunja, grain parcher. We have no doubt that this corresponds to No. 432 in the 1852 list occupied by Dusandhi, parcher of grain. No. 132 is a dharamsala and doubtless corresponds to the dharamsala entered in the 1852 papers. We have been referred to certain entries in the accounts. At page 161 there is an entry of Rs. 1-6-0, on account of a door frame sent to Tarn Taran. At page 163 there is an entry of Rs. 8 on account of wooden planks sent to Tran Taran. There is also on the same page an entry of Rs. 1-2-0 on account of door chains sent to Tarn Taran, also another entry of 8 annas, 6 pies on account of ropes for wells sent to Tarn Taran. All these entries show us that Jassa Singh, granthi, to whose period the entries relate had some property at Tarn Taran. They are not shown to refer to any part of the present dharamsala and the shops connected therewith, but it is not alleged that Jassa Singh had any other property at that place. We have also been referred to an application of Bhai Harnam Singh, Exhibit P.117, in which he states that the baoli and the dharamsala at Tarn Taran have been in possession of his family from generation to generation. Kirpal Singh, a witness for Indar Singh in the connected case, stated that this dharamsala was in existence since the time of Jassa Singh. The dharamsala along with the shops form one block of buildings. The main part has, in our opinion, certainly descended from one granthi to another. Harnam Singh no doubt bought a small strip of ground and on this and on the previous site re built the whole property. The mere fact that he re-built it would, however, not alter its character. If it was formerly attached to the office of granthi, Harnam Singh's re-building it would not make it his private property, and it must be presumed that when he re built it he did so for the benefit of the religious office and that of his successors in-office.

Item No. 12.—This property is admittedly wakf and no discussion about it is necessary.

Item No. 13.—20 kanals, 8 marlas of occupancy land in the village of Sultanwind. Harnam Singh was recorded as occupancy tenant of this land and, under section 59 of the Tenancy Act, Indar Singh, is in the absence of any reason to the contrary, entitled to inherit it. An entry from the muntakhib papers, printed at page 35 of the paper book A., shows that Jassa Singh held the muafi of 16½ kanals of land (orchard with a well) in Sultanwind in 1852. He is not, however, shown as having occupancy rights in the land. An entry given at pages 22 23 paper book A., Exhibit P.21, shows that in 1865 Jawahar Singh, granthi, had occupancy right in 19 kanals, 18 marlas of land described as a garden in Mauza Sultanwind. It is stated in the entry that the garden was planted by Jawahar Singh who had been holding its possession for a long time and that the proprietors had no right to eject him. There is an entry of 1892-93, given at pages 240-241, paper-book A., which shows Harnam Singh as cultivator and describes him as non-occupancy tenant. We were told that this was a wrong translation, but we referred to the original in vernacular and found Harnam Singh entered as ghair dakhilkar. Apparently, occupancy rights in this land were subsequently acquired by or conferred on Harnam Singh. Under the circumstances, we are quite unable to hold that it is connected with the gaddi and, in our opinion, Indar Singh is entitled to succeed to its possession.

Item No. 14 is not in dispute in this appeal.

To sum up, then, we hold that the various items of property in dispute have all descended from Jassa Singh with the exception of Nos. 4, 6, 9, 10 and 13. As to No. 4, it is proved that Jawahar Singh bought this property and we do not find any sufficient proof of dedication by him to the office of granthi. Out of Item No. 10 the shop was built by Harnam Singh, and we do not find it clearly proved that it was built of wakf property. As to Items Nos. 6 and 9, there is no positive proof that they descended from Jassa Singh, but, considering that Jawahar Singh succeeded to the gaddi and to so much of other property held by Jassa Singh and that there is no proof that he got any property from his father Bhup Singh, we are of opinion that the onus was upon the defendant to show that these particular items did not come down from Jassa Singh, and this onus he has not discharged. As regards Item No. 13, we hold that it is not proved that the occupancy rights in this land are attached to the gaddi.

In calculating the mesne profits of the land in dispute, the lower Court found that the land which is to be excluded from the decree is a little less than one-third of the total area claimed. It, therefore deducted Rs. 112 from Rs. 352 which it took to be the annual profits and found Rs. 660 to be the income for 33 months as claimed. Now, we are excluding 20 kanals, 8 marlas of occupancy land also from the land decreed. We find that about 152 kanals of land should be decreed and 92 kanals should be excluded from the decree; in other words, about 5/8ths of the land claimed is being decreed. The total net annual income works out to Rs. 332 and not Rs. 352 as stated by the lower Court. Five-eighths of Rs. 332 is equal to Rs. 207, or, say, Rs. 17 per mensem. The amount, therefore, due to the plaintiff for 33 months on account of mesne profits comes to Rs. 561. From the houses and shops decreed, we are excluding the shops and the house in Katra Sufaid of which according to the local Commissioner (see page 294 of paper-book A.) the monthly rent is Rs. 10-8 0. At page 295 of the report it is also stated that only the baithak out of the property in Item No. 10 is let out at Rs. 1 per mensem and that the shop is lying vacant. Deducting, therefore, Rs. 346-8-0 on account of rent of the property in Katra Sufaid and Rs. 33 on account of rent of Item No. 10 we find Rs. 4,900 8-0 to be the amount due to the plaintiff on account of rent of houses and shops in Amritsar and Tarn Taran. Adding to this, Rs. 561 on account of mesne profits of the land we find the total amount due to the plaintiff to be Rs. 5,461-8-0.

We accordingly accept the appeal, and modifying the lower Court's order, give the plaintiff a decree for the property in list A. attached to the plaint with the exception of Item No. 4, the shops and the house in Katra Chitta, city Amritsar, the shop and the baithak attached to the samadh of Sham Singh (part of Item No. 11 in the plaint) and the occupancy rights in 20 kanals, 8 marlas of land in Sultanwind (Item No. 14 in the plaint) and for Rs. 5,461-8 0 cash.

Taking the values of the various properties in list A. as fixed by the local Commissioner and in lists B., C. and D. we find that approximately 11-13ths of the claim has been decreed and we therefore, think it equitable to order that defendant appellant shall pay 2 3rds plaintiff-respondent's costs in both Courts.

Appeal accepted.

KRISHNADAS GOVARDHANDAS MADIWALE—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 14—Plaint presented in wrong Court on last day of limitation making allowance for vacation—Plaint, return of, for presentation to proper Court—Exclusion of time.

Where limitation for a suit expires during the vacation of a Court and the plaint is presented in that Court on the day on which the Court re-opens, but it is subsequently discovered that the Court has no jurisdiction to entertain the suit and the plaint is directed to be returned for presentation to the proper Court, the suit is within time if the plaint is presented to the proper Court on the same day on which it is actually returned by the wrong Court. In such a case the plaintiff is not only entitled, under section 14 of the Limitation Act, to exclude the period between the first presentation of the plaint and the date on which it is actually returned to him, but is also entitled to take advantage of the fact that the first Court was closed for the vacation when the limitation for the suit expired.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Dharwar, in Appeal No. 71 of 1918, modifying the decree passed by the Additional Subordinate Judge at Haveri, in Suit No. 48 of 1917.

Mr. Nilkant Atmaram, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. Y. Abhyankar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The plaintiff filed this suit to recover a sum of Rs. 866-3-3 alleged to be due on account of cotton dealings with the defendant between 20th May 1913 and 26th June 1913. The suit was filed in the Hubli Court on the 7th June 1916, and admittedly was then within time, because the Court opened after the vacation on the 7th June. The defendant then pleaded that he was an agriculturist, with the result that the suit had to be filed in another Court, and the plaint was ordered, on the 15th January 1917, to be returned for presentation to the proper Court. The plaintiff actually took away his plaint on the 25th January and presented it on the same day in the Haveri Court. Clearly, section 14 of the Indian Limitation Act applies, and the time taken up in the former application from the date on which it was instituted till the date on which the proceedings therein ended, had to be counted. It was first argued that the proceedings ended on the 15th January instead of 25th January when the plaint was returned. Clearly, when a party is ordered to take back his plaint and present it in the proper Court, the proceedings do not end until the party gets back his plaint. But then it is urged that, if we exclude the period from 7th June 1916 to 25th January 1917, and consider whether the suit filed in the Haveri Court was within time, the suit in the Haveri Court will still be four days out of time, the argument being that the period which was allowed to be excluded owing to the Hubli Court being closed for the vacation when the plaint was filed in that Court could no longer be taken advantage of, after the order had been made to take back the plaint and file it in another Court. Reliance was placed on the case of Mira Mohideen Rowther v. Nallaperumal Pillai (1). With all due respect, it seems to me that the result, if that case were followed, would be most inequitable. Bearing in mind that the suit when filed in the first Court was in time, and that the time which was taken up by the proceedings in that Court can be excluded, it would be a most extraordinary result that, when the suit was filed in the proper Court, it should be held to be time-barred. Clearly, the plaintiff is entitled to take advantage of those days during which the first Court was closed for the vacation, and the calculation should be made in the same way as if the second Court had been closed for the vacation. In my opinion, therefore, the decision of the lower Appellate Court was perfectly correct, and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

FAWCETT, J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

BELI RAM—VENDEE—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT
versus
HARI CHAND—PLAINTIFF, AND Musammat KARM BIBI—VENDOR, AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Pre-emption—Vendee having equal right of pre-emption on date of sale—Subsequent loss of vendee's right, effect of—Decree for pre-emption, effect of—Vendee, when divested of property.

Where on the date of a sale the vendee's right of pre-emption is equal to that of a pre-emptor, the vendee does not forfeit his right by subsequently losing the property by virtue of the ownership of which he claimed an equal right of pre-emption. The mere fact that the vendee loses the property under a decree for pre-emption makes no difference. [p. 745, col. 1.]

Bhupa v. Kori Mal, 30 P. R. 1893 (note), Kehr Singh v. Mahman Singh, 25 P. R. 1908; 51 P. W. R. 1908; 128 P. L. R. 1908, dissented from.

A right of pre-emption is a jus ad rem alienam acquirendam and not a jus in re aliena; or, in other words, the pre-emptor can, if he so wishes, by adopting the proper procedure acquire another person's property in preference to third persons, whose rights to such property are inferior to his. But a pre-emptor has no right or interest in such property until his right of pre-emption is duly established by the decree of the Court and he has satisfied the terms of that decree. [p. 746, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Lyallpur, dated the 1st of November 1919, reversing that of the Munsif, First Class, Gujrat, dated the 29th November 1918.

Lala Mool Chand, R. S., for the Appellant.

Mr. Lal Chand Mehra, for the Plaintiff, Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a pre-emption case, in which the point in dispute is whether the plaintiff's right of pre-emption is superior to that of the vendee, Beli Ram.

The house in suit (which may be called house A.) was sold by Karam Bibi to Beli Ram on the 4th April 1917.

The plaintiff, Hari Chand, filed his suit on the 15th May 1917, claiming pre emption on the ground that his house adjoined the house sold. Beli Ram pleaded that his right was equal to that of the plaintiff as he also had a house (which may be called B.) adjoining house A.

Beli Ram had bought house B for Rs. 800 on the 17th April 1916, but on the 14th April 1917 one Sawan Singh brought a suit to pre empt that house. The dispute in that case was only with regard to the price. One Bhag Shah, a witness for the vendee, stated that he was prepared to buy the house for Rs. 1,000. An agreement was then drawn up by which the house was to be sold to Bhag Shah for that amount, of which Rs. 200 were to be paid to Sawan Singh and Rs. 800 to Beli Ram. Sawan Singh denied having entered into the agreement, but the Munsif found that the parties had entered into it. Ultimately, Bhag Shah was impleaded in the case and the Munsif on the 29th November 1918, passed a decree in the terms of the compromise, and this was upheld by the District Judge on appeal. It is stated that Sawan Singh has filed a second appeal which is now pending before a Division Bench of this Court.

In the present case the argument for the plaintiff is that his right is superior to that of the vendee, Beli Ram, because by the decree passed in Sawan Singh's case Beli Ram has ceased to be the owner of house B., the ownership of which was the basis of his assertion that his right to pre-empt house A. was equal to that of the plaintiff.

The Trial Court did not agree with this argument and held that the fact that Beli Ram was the owner of B. at the time when he bought house A. was sufficient to defeat the plaintiff's claim, the subsequent transfer to Bhag Shah being immaterial.

On appeal the District Judge took a different view, holding that as the vendee lost house B. by the decree of the 29th November 1918 he could not be regarded as having had an indefeasible right in that house at the time when he bought house A. He accordingly gave the plaintiff a decree.

Beli Ram has filed a second appeal in this Court, and I think it must succeed.

Thedecree passed in 1918 in Sawan Singh's case was one based on a compromise and was not a decree for pre emption. Bhag Shah's ownership of house B. could not date back to the 17th April 1916, when the sale took place in favour of Beli Ram, but the latter became the owner on that date, was still the owner on the 4th April 1917 when he bought house A., and remained the owner till the decree of 1918 was passed. That being so, the plaintiff's claim fails, as Beli Ram, having been the owner of house B. on the date on which he bought house A., had a right of pre emption equal to the plaintiff's, and does not forfeit his right through having parted with house B. under the decree of 1918 [Muhammad Nawaz Khan v. Musammat Bobo Sahib (1)].

It is, however, contended for the respondent on the authority of Kehr Singh v. Mahman Singh (2) that in the event of Sawan Singh's second appeal in the case relating to house B. being accepted and his getting a decree for that house by right of pre emption the plaintiff in the present case would be entitled to succeed, and it is, therefore, urged that this case should be postponed until Sawan Singh's appeal has been decided.

If Sawan Singh's appeal were successful the decision in the present case would turn on the question whether his right of ownership in house B. dates back to the 17th April 1916, when that house was purchased by Beli Ram.

Kehr Singh v. Mahman Singh (2) is no doubt an authority in the respondent's favour. It was there held by Shah Din, J., that a vendee who, by reason of a prior purchase, had become a land-holder in the village and as such was competent to resist the claim of a pre-emptor with respect to a subsequent purchase could not, if in a pre-emption suit he lost the first bargain, retain the subject-matter of the second bargain. The learned Judge distinguished Muhammad Nawaz Khan v. Musammat Bobo Sahib (1) because the house by virtue of which the vendee in that case had a right of pre-emption was held by him in full ownership under an indefeasible title not liable to be defeated at the instance of a pre-emptor, and the defendant parted with that house voluntarily after the institution of the pre-emptor's suit, so that the title of the transferee dated from the time when the transfer was made to him and not from a date prior to the date of the pre emption suit. He also referred to a judgment appended as a note to Bhupa v. Kori Mal (3) in which it was held by Rivaz, J., that the effect of a pre-emption decree was to vest the proprietary right in the pre-emptor from the date of the sale.

There are, however, other rulings of this Court in which a different view of the law was taken. In Lashkari Mal v. Ishar Singh (4) the learned Judges said : "It is, we think, clear that the pre-emptor's right to or in the property accrues only when he has complied with the condition laid down in the decree and paid the purchase-money into Court, and that it is then, and only then, that the property vests in him and is divested from the vendee." Again, in Darshan Khan v. Sohaura Mal (5) Rattigan, J., said "A right of pre-emption is a jus ad rem alienum acquirendum and not a jus in re aliena, or, in other words, the pre-emptor can, if he so wishes, by adopting the proper procedure acquire another person's property in preference to third persons, whose rights to such property are, in the eye of customary law, as enunciated in the Punjab Laws Act, inferior to his. But a pre-emptor has no right or interest in such property until his right of pre emption is duly established by the decree of the Court and he has satisfied the terms of that decree."

But the matter seems to have been set at rest by the Privy Council in Deonandan Prasad Singh v. Ramdhari Chowdhry (6). The dispute in that case was whether the pre-emptor or the vendee was entitled to the mesne profits of the land in respect to which a decree for pre emption had been passed. The pre-emptor had been given a decree by the Sub ordinate Judge for possession of the land subject to the payment of Rs. 37,000 and he was put into possession in 1900 on payment of that sum. On appeal the High Court dismissed the suit and the original purchaser recovered possession of the land in 1904. Appeals were preferred to the Privy Council, which restored the decree of the Subordinate Judge except as to the pre-emptive price, which was fixed at Rs. 44,-50 and after the additional sum making up that amount had been deposited possession was again given to the pre emptor in 1909. It was held by the Privy Council that the pre-emptor was liable to the vendee for mesne profits from 1900 to 1904, for which period he was in possession without title. On page 685* their Lordships said: "A person claiming an order of pre emption cannot be regarded in the same light as an ordinary purchaser of an estate. His right is, when an estate has been sold, to acquire the property from the purchaser at the price paid. If the necessary formalities are observed, and the purchaser assents to the claim, possession is given by mutual consent and no difficulty arises; but if the claim be disputed and a suit must be brought, the rights of the parties are regulated by the Code of Civil Procedure." After quoting section 214 of the Code of 1882 their Lordships proceeded: "It, therefore, follows that where a suit is brought it is on payment of the purchase-money on the specified date that the plaintiff obtains possession of the property, and, until that time, the original purchaser retains possession and is entitled to the rents and profits. This was so held in the case of Deokinandan v. Sri Ram (7), and there Mr. Justice Mahmud, whose authority is well-recognized by all, stated that it was only when the terms of the decree were fulfilled and enforced that the persons having the right of pre-emption become owners of the property, that such ownership did not vest from the date of sale, notwithstanding success in the suit, and that the actual substitution of the owner of the pre-empted property dates with possession under the decree."

In accordance with that judgment, which followed the judgment of Mr. Justice Mahmud, it must be held that even if Sawan Singh succeeds in his appeal in this Court his ownership of house B. will not date back to the 17th April 1916 when the house was purchased by Bali Ram, but will date only from the time when he fulfils the terms of the decree that he obtains, and that, up to that time, Beli Ram remains the owner. It follows that the plaintiff's right of pre-emption in respect of house A. is not superior to Beli Ram's and the suit must fail.

I accept the appeal, reverse the decree of the lower Appellate Court, and restore that of the first Court The plaintiff will pay the appellant's costs throughout.

GURUNATH BALAJI KALKUNDRI—DECREE-HOLDER—RESPONDENT.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 182 (5)—Execution of decree—Decree passed by Court in Native State transferred to Court in British India—Execution proceedings taken in Court in Native State, whether taken in proper Court—Application barred by time—Objection not taken—Subsequent application, whether barred.

Where a decree passed by a Court in a Native State is transferred for execution to a Court in British India all proceedings taken in the Court which passed the decree must be regarded as having been taken in a "proper Court" within the meaning of clause (5) of Article 182 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act and operate to save limitation. [p. 747, col. 2.]

Where an application for execution is barred by time but no objection is taken to it on that score, and proceedings are taken thereunder, it provides a new starting point for limitation. [p. 748, col. 1.]

First appeal from the decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Belgaum, in Darkhast No. 321 of 1917.

Mr. G. S. Rao, for the Appellant.

Mr. J. G. Kele, for Respondents Nos. 1 and 3.

Mr. S. Y. Abhyankar, for Respondent No. 2.

JUDGMENT.—This is a first appeal from the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge in darkhast No. 321 of 1917. The original suit was decided and a decree was passed in the Sangli Court on the 18th of September 1907. The first darkhast presented to the Sangli Court ended on the 25th of June 1907 without any result as the decree-holder failed to pay process fees. The second darkhast was filed in the same Court on the 11th of November 1907 and on the 14th of that month that Court transferred the proceedings to the Court at Shahapur. The darkhast ended on the 24th of March 1915 after the recovery of Rs. 11,412-3-0. The third darkhast was presented in the Sangli Court on the 9th of August 1915. It proved ineffectual and was disposed of on the 10th of November 1915. The next darkhast was presented in the Belgaum Court (darkhast No. 476 of 1915) and was disposed of without result on the 26th of May 1917. The darkhast under appeal was presented to the Belgaum Court on the 27th of August 1917.

It was contended that the darkhast was barred by limitation but the Court ordered the darkhast to proceed. It is now argued that the period from 1907 to the 10th of November 1915 during which the execution proceedings were pending in the Sangli and Shahapur Courts does not save limitation as those Courts were not proper Courts within the meaning of Article 182, clause (5), of the Indian Limitation Act. 'Proper Court', under Article 182, Explanation II, means the Court whose duty it is to execute a decree or order. It is difficult, then, to see how it can be said that the Sangli and Shahapur Courts were not proper Courts within the meaning of Article 182. I do not see how the ruling cited—Nabibhai Vazirbhai v. Dayabhai Amulakh (1)—would affect the question. That case only decided that when a decree was incapable of execution in British Courts owing to its being barred on account of the British Law of Limitation, it made no difference that a different law was applicable to the Courts from whose jurisdiction the decree had been transferred for execution. Under section 44 of the Code, the Governor-General in Council may by notification in the Gazette of India declare that the decrees of any Civil or Revenue Courts situated in the territory of any Native Prince or State in alliance with his Majesty and not established or continued by the authority of the Governor-General in Council or any class of such decrees may be executed in British India as if they had been passed by the Courts of British India. Therefore, when this decree was transferred for execution to the Belgaum Court, it had to be treated exactly in the same way as if it had been passed by the Court at Belgaum. The period occupied by the execution proceedings in the Sangli and Shahapur Courts must be treated as if the execution proceedings were pending in proper Courts within the meaning of Article 182.

Then it was suggested that limitation began from the time the second darkhast was filed in the Sangli Court, that fresh proceedings had not been instituted within three years of that date, although, as a matter of fact, the darkhast was continued and money was being recovered under it until the 24th of March 1915. If a darkhast is filed and the Court directs instalments to be paid under it and recovers instalments, it cannot be that while the instalments are being recovered any further proceedings are necessary: Bapuchand v. Mugutrao (2). Assuming that the third darkhast presented on the 9th of August 1915 would have been held to be barred by limitation if the point had been taken, the point was not taken, and proceedings continued under that darkhast until it was disposed of on the 10th of November 1915. Then, the next darkhast which was presented in the Belgaum Court and continued until it was disposed of on the 12th of May 1917 was within time. In Desaiappa Khalilappa Desai v. Dundappa Malkappa (3) the same question came up before Mr. Justice Heaton and myself, and, following the decision of the Privy Council in Mungul Pershad Dichit v. Grija Kant Lahiri (4), we decided that if an application be admitted and proceedings taken thereunder, although as a matter of fact they would be barred by limitation if an application were made for the disposal of the application on that ground, they provide a new starting point for limitation. Following that decision, it is clear that this darkhast was within three years from the previous darkhast. Therefore, on that ground the appeal fails.

It may be noted that this question was never raised in the lower Court. The only question argued was whether the Sangli and Shahapur Courts were proper Courts.

The appeal, therefore, must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 85, clause (2)—Landlord and tenant—Sub-lease exceeding nine years, whether admissible in evidence to prove tenancy—Sub-lessee having subsisting tenancy, effect of.

A sub-lease granted by a raiyat after the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act for a term exceeding nine years and registered in contravention of the terms of section 85, clause (2) of the Act is inadmissible in evidence to prove the tenancy of an under-raiyat. Where, however, the sub-lessee has a subsisting tenancy he can defend his possession, or recover possession on being dispossessed on the strength of such subsisting tenancy even though the lease cannot be produced to prove the tenancy. [p. 750, col. 2.]

Letters Patent appeal against the following judgment of Mr. Justice Newbould, dated the 26th of March 1917, in Appeals from Appellate Decrees Nos. 1616 and 2575 of 1917.

NEWBOULD, J.—These two appeals arise out of suits for ejectment with regard to two plots of land. The principal defendants in both suits were the mortgagees, of the tenants under the plaintiffs and they purchased in execution of the decree on their mortgage the interest of the mortgagors. The plaintiffs in the suit which leads to the Second Appeal No. 2575 are the transferees of the interest of the plaintiffs in the suit corresponding to Second Appeal No. 1616. The plaintiffs in that suit granted a lease to Kali Charan De who is the mortgagor of the contesting defendants. By that lease three plots of land were let out. With the first plot we are not concerned. As regards the second plot the lessor's interest is described as raiyati and the lessee's as under-raiyati interest. This is the plot in suit in Appeal No. 1616. In the third plot the lessor's interest is described as a kaimi miras raiyati as well as raiyati, and the lessee's interest is described as kaimi raiyati. The lease purports to grant a permanent lease of all the three plots at a fixed rent. The first Court decreed the suit holding that this lease was void under the provisions of section 85 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and that, therefore, the contesting defendant obtained no right either by his mortgage or by his purchase at the sale in execution of their mortgage-decree. On appeal by these defendants the lower Appellate Court held that the plaintiffs were estopped by the terms of the lease from denying that their lessees had a permanent interest which was consequently a transferable interest.

There can be no doubt that the lease in question is contrary to the provisions of section 85 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. As regards one plot it distinctly purports to create a permanent under-raiyati lease at a fixed rent, and as regards the second of the two plots with which we are now concerned the lessor's interest is described as partly raiyati, and it would appear also that the description of kaimi mirasi raiyati is not equivalent to asserting a right which would give the lessor power to create a permanent subordinate interest. In the case of Meher Ali v. Kolai Khalashi (1) it was held that the use of the word kaimi by the grantor of a lease did not impart fixity of rent but only permanence of occupation of the land.

As regards what is the effect of the lease granted in contravention of the provision of section 85, it is sufficient to refer to what I believe to be the latest reported case on the subject Chandi Charan Nath v. Somla Bibi (2). In that case, sitting alone, I held that the doctrine of estoppal could not be invoked or applied so as to defeat the provisions of the Statute, and on Letters Patent Appeal the decisions of this Court were reviewed by Beachcroft, J., who summed up his conclusion at page 188 as follows :—'The authorities, therefore, point to this that the validity of the lease can be questioned by the grantors.' It is clear, therefore, that the plaintiffs were not estopped from questioning the validity of the lease granted by them in the present case.

It is contended that there was an estoppal because the defendants were not advanced money on the representation that the lease was a permanent heritable one. The lease, on the face of it, could not be valid in respect of the plot in which the lessee's interest is described as an under raiyati interest, and it was obviously the duty of the defendants, before lending money on the mortgage of the interest created by this lease to ascertain whether the plaintiffs had such rights that they could grant a valid lease in respect of the other plots. Further, even as regards the second plot, as I have pointed out, there is no allegation in the lease that the right of the lessors was either that of a tenure holder or a raiyati at fixed rate, in which case alone could they have created a permanent interest subordinate to their own. The learned Additional District Judge is clearly wrong in holding that the plaintiffs were estopped, and no attempt has been made before me to support the decree on any other ground except that of estoppel.

The result, therefore, is that these appeals must be decreed and the decrees of the lower Appellate Court set aside and the decrees of the Munsif restored.

The appellants will get their costs of this Court and of the lower Appellate Court.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak (with him Babu Bepin Chandra Bose), for the Appellant.—The defendant is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit for ejectment. The first Court decreed the suit. The lower Appellate Court dismissed the suit. On appeal to this Court Newbould, J., restored the decree of the first Court. On appeal under section 15 of the Letters Patent the case was remanded for determination of certain issues relating to the nature of the landlord's interest at the time of the lease. The plaintiffs, Nundies, granted a permanent lease to one Kali Charan Dey who mortgaged the properties to defendant and in execution of the mortgage-decree he purchased Kali Charan's interest. Thereafter the present suit was instituted on the allegation that Kali Charan was a raiyat and, therefore, my clients were liable to ejectment as the lease was invalid. The question for determination is, whether a tenant who has granted a permanent lease can subsequently be permitted to question the validity of his grant. I am the party in possession and I am defending my right as under-raiyat. There are many conflicting rulings on the point. Refers to Rashed Kazi v. Pachoo Sardar (3). Further, there have been served no notice to determine the subsisting tenancy in the land. As regards estoppel, one-third was acquired before the grant. As regards the other two-thirds, the doctrine would apply. Supposing that the grantor had no right when he made a permanent grant but subsequently acquired the right, that would I submit surely feed the estoppel. Refers to section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act; Chandi Charan Nath v. Somla Bibi (2). In view of the conflicting decisions, I would ask your Lordships to refer the case to the Full Bench. Refers to Bamandas Bhattacharyya v. Nilmadhab Saha (4).

Babu Jotindra Mohan Ghose, for the Respondents.—The present appellant is a mortgagee in possession. The mortgagor having walked out, the mortgagee is a mere trespasser. That is my case throughout. The defendant purchased the property on 2nd Asar 1320 in execution of the mortgage-decree. Section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act is wholly inapplicable in view of section 3, Transfer of Property Act. Refers to Radha Bai v. Kamod Singh (5). Neither can the doctrine of estoppel apply. The main reason being the transfer is void ab initio. Section 85 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is clear on the point. Refers to Chandi Charan Nath v. Somla Bibi (2), Jarip Khan v. Durfa Bewa (6). There is no conflict of decisions. The tenancy is not subsisting. That differentiates the present case from other cases.

Dr. Basak, in reply.

JUDGMENT.

In No. 92 of 1919.

This case and Appeal No. 93 were remanded for findings on certain points. They relate to the nature of the landlord's interest at the time of the lease to Kali Charan Dey.

It has been found in the other case (Second Appeal No. 2575 of 1917) that the landlord had the right of a permanent tenure holder in one-third of the property, and subsequently acquired a permanent right to two thirds share. In the present case (Second Appeal No. 1616 of 1917) the landlord had only the interest of a ryot. A sub-lease was granted by the landlord and as he had only a ryot's interest, the interest created in favour of the lessee was that of an under ryot. The lease purported to grant a permanent transferable interest. A sub-lease granted by a ryot after the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act for a term exceeding nine years and registered in contravention of the terms of section 85, clause (2) is inadmissible in evidence to prove the tenancy of an under-ryot [Jarip Khan v. Durfa Bewa (6)].

When, however, the sub-lessee has a subsisting tenancy, it has been held that he can defend his possession, or recover possession on being dispossessed, on the strength of such subsisting tenancy even though the lease cannot be produced to prove the tenancy.

In the present case, it was alleged that a notice was served upon the original tenant, Kali Charan, and that a suit based upon that notice resulted in a decree for ejectment under section 49 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It was found at some stage of the litigation that that decree was a collusive one. The finding as to the notice having been served, however, is not clear, but the question is not material in the present case because the person in possession of the property is not the original tenant, or his heirs who might have been entitled to a notice to quit, had they been in possession under a subsisting tenancy. The person in possession, the defendant, in execution of a mortgage decree against the original tenant purchased the property. The under-ryoti interest is not transferable apart from the lease and the lease being inadmissible in evidence, the defendant cannot, we think, rely upon the invalid lease.

MANEKL'L v. BAI AMAA.

We have been asked by the learned Pleader for the appellant to refer the case to a Full Bench, having regard to the difference of judicial opinion upon the question whether the grant of a sub lease in contravention of the provisions of section 85 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act is binding as between the lessor and the lessee.

In a recent case of Rashed Kazi v. Pachoo Sardar (3) Fletcher and Newbould, JJ., in declining to refer the case to a Full Bench, observed as follows:—"We have been asked to refer the case to a Full Bench. But the decision in Jarip Khan v. Durfa Bewa (6) has been followed on more than one occasion and the learned Judges who decided the subsequent cases did not consider that the point required the decision of a Full Bench. The learned Judges, I suppose, who decided these cases came to the conclusion that this point was a new point that had not been before the Court in the earlier cases and that, if it had been, the Court would have arrived at a different conclusion. However, as the other Benches consisting of other learned Judges saw no difficulty in following the case of Jarip Khan v. Durfa Bewa (6) in other cases, I do not think we ought to refer the matter to a Full Bench."

We have been referred to the decision in the case of Bamandas Bhattacharyya v. Nilmadhab Saha (4). But that case may be distinguished on two grounds. The first is, that there was a distinct representation on the part of the lessor that he was a tenure-holder and had, therefore, a right to grant the ryoti lease; and, secondly, that there was a subsisting tenancy under which the sub-lessee was entitled to succeed.

The latest case on the point that has been brought to our notice is that of Bamandas Bhattacharyya v. Nilmadhab Saha (4) cited above, and the learned Judges in that case declined to refer the case to a Full Bench. We also do not think it necessary, for the reasons stated in the judgment in that case, to refer this case to the Full Bench.

In the circumstances, we think the Letters Patent Appeal No. 92 in Second Appeal No. 1616 of 1917 must fail and is dismissed with costs.

IN No. 93 OF 1919.

In this case, as stated above, the landlord had the right of a permanent tenure-holder to one-third share of the property at the time when he granted the lease, and it has been found that, subsequent to the grant of the lease, he acquired a permanent right to the rest of the land. The lease was not described as an under-ryoti lease. In these circumstances, the lease was not invalid and is binding upon the landlord.

This appeal is allowed and the suit dismissed with costs.

Appeal allowed.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 437 OF 1919.

BAI AMBA—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Bombay Land Revenue Code (Act V of 1879), s. 83—Landlord and tenant—Ejectment—Permanent tenancy—Burden of proof.

The presumption is that a tenant is an annual tenant and the onus lies on him to prove that he is something more. If he wishes to prove that he is a permanent tenant he must prove, first of all, if he has not got a document of permanent tenancy, the antiquity of his tenure. If he succeeds in establishing this, then the second paragraph of section 83 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code comes into operation. The landlord has to prove that there is evidence of the intended duration of the tenancy either by agreement or by usage. If he cannot do that, then it is presumed that the tenancy is co-extensive with the duration of the tenure of the andlord. [p. 752, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decision of the Assistant Judge, Surat, in Appeal No. 68 of 1918, reversing the decree passed by the Second Class Subordinate Judge at Olpad, in Civil Suit No. 19 of 1917.

KIRAN CHANDRA v. BONO BEHARI DATTA.

Mr. G. N. Thakor, for the Appellants.

Mr. J. G. Rele, for Mr. R. W. Desai, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs filed this suit in ejectment. The defendant pleaded that she was a permanent tenant. The Trial Court gave the plaintiffs a decree which was reversed in appeal. It is curious that a Judge of the experience of Mr. Bhatt should have considered that the onus lay on the plaintiffs in an ejectment suit to prove that the tenancy was an annual one. The presumption is that the tenant is an annual tenant and the onus lies upon him to prove he is something more. But it is perfectly clear that that initial error of the learned Judge had no effect on the final decision. If we strike out the whole of that paragraph where he considers the case from the point of view of the plaintiffs, and begin with the paragraph where he deals with the defendant's evidence, the decision still remains correct. A defendant who wishes to prove he is a permanent tenant must prove, first of all, if he has not got a document of permanent tenancy, the antiquity of his tenure. The Judge on the evidence of the witnesses came to the conclusion that the antiquity of the tenancy at a uniform rent could not be doubted. Then the second paragraph of section 83 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code comes into operation. The landlord has to prove that there is evidence of the intended duration of the tenancy either by agreement or by usage. If he cannot do that, then it is presumed that the tenancy is co-extensive with the duration of the tenure of the landlord. So we think the decision of the lower Court is right.

The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Res judicata—Rent, rate of, decision as to, in suit for enhancement—Subsequent suit for rent—Previous decision, effect of—Fraud—Pleader, failure of, in duty, whether fraud on part of principal.

In a suit for enhancement of rent the question of the rate of rent is an issue which must necessarily be decided by the Court, and the Court's decision on that point would operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit for rent in which the same question is in issue. [p. 754, col. 1.]

The failure by a Pleader to allow essential points to be overlooked does not amount to fraud on the part of his principal. [p. 754, col. 2.]

Appeals against the decrees of the Subordinate Judge, First Court, Jessore, dated the 20th of December 1917, affirming that of the Munsif, First Court at Jhinidah, dated the 26th of January 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. Jadunath Kanji Lal (with him Babus Pareshnath Mukherjee, Kanaidhon Dutt, Harinath Banerjee, and P. N. Mukherjee), for the Appellants in Nos. 671, 1113 and 1114 of 1918.—These appeals arise out of three rent suits and the question in controversy is the rate of rent payable. The plaintiffs have obtained decrees on the basis of a previous ex parte decree for rent. The defendants are the appellants before your Lordships.

My contentions are three in number,—(1) Having regard to the Full Bench decision in Modhusudun Shaha v. Srae (1), a previous decree for rent cannot operate as res judicata as to the rate of rent. Refers also to Maharaja Jotindra Mohun Tagore v. Shumbhu Chunder Bhuttacharjee (2), Maharani Beni Pershad Koeri v. Raj Kumar Chowbey (3), Kali Roy v. Pratap Narain (4) and Kailash Mondul v. Baroda Sundari Dasi (5).

Secondly, the Courts below ought to have held that the ex parte decrees were vitiated by fraud and were, therefore, not binding upon the defendants. See section 44 of the Evidence Act. The question of fraud is one of mixed law and fact and I am entitled in second appeal to question the conclusion of the Courts below as to whether the ex parte decrees were vitiated by fraud. It was the duty of the Pleader who appeared for the plaintiffs in these ex parte cases to draw the attention of the Court to the actual quantity of land in respect of which the rent was going to be fixed. His failure to do so amounted in law to a fraud on the part of the plaintiffs and had the effect of vitiating the decrees by fraud.

Finally, your Lordship will be pleased to see that in a subsequent suit it was agreed between the parties that the question as to the rate of rent should be left open. The decree in this subsequent suit re opened the whole matter and, therefore, the previous ex parte decrees no longer operated as res judicata as to the rate of rent.

Babu Provash Chandra Mitter (with him Babus Surendra Chandra Sen, Mon Mohan Bose and Surendranath Bose), for the Respondents in Nos. 671, 1113 and 1114 of 1918. —The ex parte decrees which operate as res judicata were obtained in suits for enhancement of rent. On this ground the authorities cited by my learned friend are distinguishable. There is no authority or principle in the argument advanced by my learned friend that the decision in a suit for enhancement of rent does not operate as res judicata as to the rate of rent.

The question of fraud is concluded by the findings of fact which cannot be questioned in second appeal. I do not dispute the general proposition enunciated by my learned friend that it is the duty of a Pleader to put all the facts of a case before the Court, but my submission is that such failure to discharge his duty on the part of a Pleader cannot amount to fraud on the part of the client. If a Pleader fails in his duty in a matter like this, the client ought not to suffer.

Then, as regards the effect of the decrees in suits subsequent to these ex parte decrees, I would draw your Lordship's attention to the arrangement between the parties by which it was agreed that the plaintiffs would not lose any right which they might have acquired under the previous ex parte decrees. The operation of the ex parte decrees, therefore, remained unaffected by express agreement.

JUDGMENT.

IN No. 658 OF 1918.

Four suits were instituted and disposed of in one judgment both by the first Court and by the lower Appellate Court. Three were decreed in full and one was decreed in part and the decrees of the first Court were upheld by the lower Appellate Court. In this second appeal the plaintiff is the appellant and his contention is that he should have obtained a decree for the full amount of his claim. In these four suits there are two sets of plaintiffs, one set are the owners of 13 annas, 4 pies interest and the other set of 2 annas, 8 pies interest. The appellants in this appeal are the owners of the 13 annas, 4 pies interest. They claim rent on the basis of an ex parte decree passed in 1906 in a suit brought by the 16 annas cosharers. Though the lower Court has held that this decree acted as res judicata at a fixed rate of rent, it has given a decree at the lower rate in this case on the finding that, after that decree, the plaintiff accepted rent from the defendants at the lower rate of Rs. 4 instead of the rate claimed, i. e., Rs. 12-8-0. Though the first Court's judgment gives good reasons for this decision the learned Subordinate Judge in upholding this decision has fallen into an error in stating the materials on which his decision

(1) 16 C. 300; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. s.) 197.
(2) 4 C. W. N. 43
(3) 6 C. W. N. 589.
(4) 5 C. L. J. 92.
(5) 24 C. 711; 1 C. W. N. 565; 12 Ind. Dec. (N. s.) 1143.

is based. One of the grounds of his decision is that the plaintiff sued the defendants for rent at the lower rate. It is conceded on the part of the respondents that there was never any suit for rent at the lower rate subsequent to the suit of 1906. The mistaken idea that there had been such a suit must have strongly influenced the learned Subordinate Judge in coming to his decision. It is necessary, therefore that he should re-hear the case and consider whether, on the evidence, it is established that the plaintiff by his conduct subsequent to the decree of 1906 is barred from successfully claiming rent at the rate then decreed. The result is that this appeal is decreed, the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court are set aside and the appeal remanded to the lower Appellate Court for re-hearing and decision on the evidence on the record. Costs will abide the result.

IN Nos. 671, 1113 AND 1114 OF 1918.

These three appeals arise out of three rent suits and the question to be decided is the rate of rent payable by the defendants. The plaintiffs have obtained decrees on the basis of former ex parte decrees for rent and the contention of the appellants is that these ex parte decrees are not binding and do not operate as res judicata.

The first contention is based on the Full Bench ruling in Modhusudun Shaha v. Brae (1) in which it has been held that a previous decree for rent does not necessarily operate as res judicate as to the rate of rent. Several other rulings were cited but none of them, in my opinion, carries the appellant's case any further than the authority of the Full Bench ruling; these cases now under consideration are distinguishable on the ground that the decrees which were obtained were decrees in suits for enhancement of rent. In such a suit the question of the rate of rent was an issue which must necessarily be decided by the Court and the Court's decision on that point would operate as res judicata. In a suit for enhancement of rent the declaration of the rate of rent is part of the substantive relief claimed, and that is sufficient to make the Full Bench ruling inapplicable to the present case.

The next point taken is that these ex parte decrees were vitiated by fraud. Both the lower Courts have held that there was no fraud. It is contended that the existence of fraud is a question of mixed law and fact and that, on the facts found, it should be held that one of these decrees, that of 1906, was obtained by what in law amounted to fraud. It appears that in this suit the defendants filed a written statement and issues were framed. Then, before the case came on for hearing, it was adjourned more than once because there was a talk of compromise. The compromise fell through and finally the suit was decreed ex parte in the absence of the defendants. Previous to this, a local enquiry had been held by the trying Munsif and he had come to the conclusion that the area of the land which was under claim was not $2\frac{1}{2}$ cottas as alleged by the plaintiffs but 2 cottas. It is found that when the Munsif gave judgment he overlooked the actual quantity of the land, and it is suggested that it was the duty of the Pleader who appeared for the plaintiffs in that case to draw the attention of the Munsif to his previous finding and that his failure to do so in law amounted to a fraud on the part of the plaintiffs. The learned Pleader for the respondents in these appeals does not dispute the general proposition that it is the duty of a Pleader to put all the facts of the case before the Court and not to allow essential facts to be overlooked. But I think I must accept his contention that, even if a Pleader fails in his duty, though he may be liable to reprimand or possibly punishment under the Legal Practitioners Act, it cannot be said that such conduct amounts to fraud on the part of his principal his client. So far as any other fraud is alleged, the findings of fact of the lower Appellate Court are conclusive in the plaintiff's favour and I cannot hold there was in these cases such a fraud as would justify me in holding, under section 44 of the Evidence Act, that the previous decree did not operate as res judicata.

The last contention is that the effect of these decrees was nullified by subsequent decrees in suits brought in 1912 in which it was agreed between the parties that the question of the rate of rent should be left open. It is contended that these decrees re-opened the whole matter and the previous decrees no longer operate as res judicata in fixing the rate of rent. But it appears that, in coming to this arrangement, the parties also agreed that "the plaintiffs would not lose any right which they might have acquired in the previous suits between the parties and their position would remain unaffected by the result of these suits;" that is to say, it was expressly agreed that if these decrees of 1906 and 1908 had in law the effect of settling the rent payable by the defendants that right of the plaintiffs would not be lost by the decrees in the suits of 1912. For the above reasons, I hold that the lower Appellate Court was right and that the previous decrees operated as res judicata on the question of the rate of rent payable.

The appeals are accordingly dismissed with costs.

Mr. A. G. Desai, for the Appellant.

Mr. I. N. Mehta (with him Mr. M. B. Dave), for Respondents Nos. 1 and 2.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The plaintiff sued to enforce an award against the defendants. Various issues were raised in the Trial Court. The 4th issues was—Is the suit barred by limitation? The Trial Court held that the suit was barred. It proceeded to find on the remaining issues. The result was that the suit was dismissed.

In appeal the learned Appellate Judge held that the suit itself was not barred by limitation, but that it was barred by the rule of res judicata. It appears that the award was made on the 28th November 1910. The plaintiff then applied to file the award under paragraph 20 of the Second Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code. That application was rejected on the 12th January 1914. The plaintiff could appeal against that order under section 104 of the Civil Procedure Code. The plaintiff did appeal to the District Court, and also applied to the High Court in revision, but in both Courts the lower Court's decision was upheld.

It has now been argued that the question whether the plaintiff is entitled to get a decree on the award is res judicata and this suit was, therefore, barred. It can only be res judicata if the application to file the award can be considered as a suit. No doubt the application under paragraph 20 of the Second Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code is numbered and registered as a suit. But it does now follow that it thereby becomes a suit within the meaning of the word 'suit' in the Code. The procedure followed is not that of a suit, but the procedure regulated by paragraph 21. The Court can only consider whether any ground such as is mentioned or referred to in paragraph 14 or 15 is proved and the Court has power either to order the award to be filed or to refuse to file the award. If it orders the award to be filed, then it must pronounce judgment according to the award, and upon the judgment so pronounced the decree shall follow. Under section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code no Court shall try any suit or issue in which the matter directly and substantially in issue has been directly and substantially in issue in a former suit between the same parties. It cannot be said that the proceedings under paragraphs 20 and 21 of the Second Schedule were proceedings in a suit, though for the purposes of convenience they may be numbered and registered as a suit. Order IV refers to the institution of suits. Rule 1 says that every suit shall be instituted by presenting a plaint to the Court or such officer as it appoints in this behalf. Then the following Orders refer to the issue and service of summons and the proceedings that must follow when a regular suit has been instituted. This question was decided in Kunji Lal v. Durga Prasad (1) in which the Court felt itself bound to follow the series of decisions of its own Court, although the learned Judges seemed to think that there were some expressions in the case of Ghulam Khan v. Muhammad Hasan (2) from which it might be considered that their Lordships of the Privy Council were of opinion that an order made under old section 525 was a decree. No doubt, a decree can be made when the Court pronounces judgment on the award, and there being no appeal against that, the question whether a suit could be filed to enforce the award would never arise. An order refusing to file an award is a different matter. It cannot be considered as a decree. In my opinion, therefore, this suit is not barred by res judicata. It is not barred by limitation, because it seems to be settled now that a suit to enforce an award is a suit not provided for by any other Article of the Limitation Act. Then the time is six years under Article 120. The appeal, therefore, must be allowed and the case remanded to the lower Appellate Court for decision on the remaining issues. The appellant must get his costs of the appeal.

FAWCETT, J.—I agree that the word 'suit' in section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code cannot properly be extended to cover an application under paragraph 20 of the Second Schedule of the Code even though such application is to be registered as a suit. In Gokul Mandar v. Padmanund Singh (3) their Lordships of the Privy Council, with reference to section 13 of the then Civil Procedure Code, corresponding to the present section 11, made the well known remark that the essence of a Code is to be exhaustive on the matters in respect of which it declares the law, and it is not the province of a Judge to disregard or go outside the law and the enactment according to its true construction. Also in Ram Kirpal v. Rup Kuari (4) their Lordships held that judgment in execution proceedings would have a binding force not under this particular section but upon general principles of law. It is upon such general principles that the learned District Judge has apparently gone in holding that the present suit is barred. But the adjudication on an application to file an award under paragraph 20 is restricted, under paragraph 21, to a particular class of questions, and I do not think, in those circumstances, that the general principles of res judicata should be held to be applicable so as to bar the right of suit to a person who has succeeded in obtaining the award. The only authority on the question that has been cited to us is also against any such doctrine.

As regards the question of limitation, it has already been held in this Court in Firdunji v. Jamsedji (5) that a suit on an award to recover a certain sum of money allowed by the arbitrator is not a suit for specific performance, and, therefore, this Court should agree with the decisions which hold that such a suit as the present does not fall under Article 113 of the Indian Limitation Act.

Since the oral delivery of the above judgment, my attention has been drawn to the observations of the Judicial Committee in Muhammad Nawaz Khan v. Alam Khan (6) which [according to the view taken in Ponnusami Mudali v. Mandi Sundara Mudali (7)] clearly imply that any matter which is directly and substantially in issue and is determined in a proceeding under section 525 (corresponding to paragraph 20 of Schedule II of the present Code) would be res judicata in any subsequent litigation between the same parties. With due respect, it seems to me that their Lordships left entirely open the question whether an application under section 525 is a suit such as is contemplated in section 13 (see at p. 419). But, even assuming it was such a suit, they held that the mere refusal to file an award would not constitute a binding judgment against the validity of the award, unless the particular ground on which its validity is assailed was definitely raised and put in issue and made the subject of a trial. In the present case the question of the validity of the award does not appear to have been so tried in the proceedings on the application to file the award; for the application was summarily rejected on the ground that, treated as a suit, it was time-barred.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXII, r. 3—Execution of decree—Judgment-debtor, death of—Legal representative minor—Application to bring legal representative on record—Guardian, appointment of—Procedure.

Where the legal representatives of a deceased judgment-debtor are minors and an application is made to bring their names on to the record under the guardianship of their mother, it is incumbent on the Court, under Order XXXII, rule 3, Civil Procedure Code, before making any order adverse to them, to call upon each minor to show cause against the appointment of his mother as his guardian and to call on the mother to show cause against her appointment, and in the event of her expressing willingness and her being found fit to record an order appointing her guardian and to afford her an opportunity to show cause why the decree should not be executed against the minors [p 7 8, cols 1 & 2.]

Civil revision against the order of the Small Causa Court, Nagpur, in Civil Suit No. 52 of 1919 decided on the 7th May 1919.

Messrs. A. V. Zinjardey and A. P. Sathaye, for the Applicant,

Mr. G. V. Deshmukh, for the Non-Applicants.

JUDGMENT.—The non-applicants in this case obtained a decree for Rs. 240 and Rs. 20 as costs against one Polji Gond on 5th February 1914. On 20th April 1916 the decree holders applied for execution, but on 30th June 1916 they appeared and stated that the judgment-debtor, Polji, was dead and asked to have the names of his three sons and his widow substituted for him in the decree praying that the two younger sons, who were minors, should be impleaded under the guardianship of their mother, Musammat Hasa. An order was passed that notices should issue "to the legal representatives under Order XXI, rule 22, Civil Procedure Code, for 23rd August 1916"; that is to say, with no advertence whatever to the fact that the two of the legal representatives were minors. Notices were issued to Paikia, Ghulia and Adku, the three sons named. Paikia's notice calls on him to show cause why the decree should not be executed against him. The notices addressed to the minors Ghulia and Adku described them as under the guardianship of their mother, Hasa, and called on them to appear for the purpose of having a guardian appointed. Nothing is said about showing cause against the execution of the decree nor about the proposal to appoint Musammat Hasa as guardian. These two notices were served on Musammat Hasa to whom personally no notice appears to have been sent at all. It is possible that a notice of some sort did issue to her at this hearing but it is not now to be found on the record. The order of 23rd August 1916 says it was served. That of 1st November 1916 says it was "misplaced in some other record" and orders fresh notice to issue, and in the margin I find in pencil the three words "notice found out" though it is not now on the record. As the original application did not ask for a notice to go to Musammat Hasa herself it may fairly be assumed, in these circumstances, that none was sent.

The order passed on 23rd August 1916 was as follows:—"Decree holder by agent Sadasheo. Deceased judgment debtor Polji's heirs are his sons Paikia, Ghulia and Adku. The last two are minors. Their guardian Musammat Hasa is served. Paikia is not properly served. Fresh notice to issue to Paikia". At the next hearing Paikia was absent. He was held to be duly served and a fresh notice was ordered to issue to Musammat Hasa as already mentioned. This called on her personally to show cause against the execution of the decree against herself. It contains no mention of the minors. On 2nd December 1916 the following order was passed : "Appellant (D. H.) by agent Sadasheo. Non applicant Paikia absent though served before. Hasa M. G. of the other two non-applicants is absent though served. She refused to take and sign the summons. D. H's affidavit proves that the three non-applicants are the sons and heirs of the deceased J. D. Polji. Let their names be substituted as the legal representatives of the deceased J. D. Costs on non-applicants Rs. 3".

A more complete disregard of the provisions of Order XXXII, rule 3, it would be hard to find. What was required in this case under Order XXXII, and Order XXI in regard to each minor was,—

(1) Service of notice on the minor asking him to show cause against the appointment of Musammat Hasa as his guardian.

(2) Service of notice on Musammat Hasa, the actual and natural and also the proposed guardian, asking her to show cause against her own appointment.

(3) The passing of an order appointing her guardian after she had expressed her willingness and the Court had found her fit.

(4) The granting of an opportunity to Musammat Hasa as guardian to show cause why the decree should not be executed against the minors.

Not a single one of these essentials was complied with. No notice was sent to anybody to show cause against the appointment of Musammat Hasa as guardian. She never agreed to act as such and, indeed, she gave some indication of unwillingness to do so by refusing to accept service of the summons for appearance on 2nd February 1916. She never appeared and the Court never ever began to consider her fitness for the guardianship of the minors and never by the remotest implication appointed her. Finally, the minors have never in any way, either through their mother or directly, been called upon to show cause why the decree should not be executed against them.

After the substitution of names ordered on 2nd December 1916 the decree was transferred to another Court for execution. The attachment of tenancy land was made and on that the minor Adku applied, through his sister's husband Ganpati Gond, as his next friend, to have his name removed from the list of legal representatives of his deceased natural father Polji on the ground that he had been adopted by his father's brother Lakhwa. He was called on to prove this and, after recording evidence, the learned Judge held that he was bound by the previous order of his predecessor in the matter and could not set aside or alter it.

I do not think it necessary to discuss the rights or wrongs of this order, which is the order I am asked to set aside in revision. The proceedings, as far as the two minors are concerned, are hopelessly bad and illegal from the very first mention of their names and even in the interests of the decree-holders themselves these proceedings must be set aside. I, therefore set aside every proceeding or order in this case of the 18th October 1917 or any later date so far as it affects either of the minors Ghulia and Adku. Their names should be entirely removed from the record. All the proceedings affecting their elder brother Paikia and their mother Musammat Hasa personally will, of course, stand. The non applicants will pay all the costs incurred by or on behalf of both the minors in the execution proceedings and those incurred by Adku in these proceedings. The Pleader's fee in this Court will be Rs. 15.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 7, Sch. I, Art. 44—Hindu Law—Joint family—Sale by mother as guardian—Suit by sons to recover property more than three years after eldest has attained majority, whether barred.

Where property belonging to minor Hindu brothers who constitute a joint family is alienated by their mother as their natural guardian a suit by the brothers to recover the property after setting aside the alienation brought more than three years after the eldest of them has attained majority is barred by time. [p. 759, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decision of the Assistant Judge, A. P., at Satara, in Appeal No. 391 of 1918, reversing the decree passed by the Joint Subordinate Judge at Tasgaon, in Civil Suit No. 113 of 1915.

Mr. K. H. Kelkar, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. N. Koyajee, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The plaintiffs sued to recover possession of a moiety of the plaint lands after setting aside the sale-deed passed on 28th July 1905 by their mother during their minority. The three plaintiffs are brothers, members of a joint family, and it is admitted that the third plaintiff was more than 21 years when he filed the suit. Therefore, under Article 44 of the Indian Limitation Act, the suit as against him was clearly barred. The question arises whether section 7 of the Indian Limitation Act is applicable and whether the bar also applies to the first and second plaintiffs who are still minors. They will be barred if the third plaintiff could have given a discharge and acquittance of all claims against the defendants without the concurrence of the first and second plaintiffs as manager of the joint Hindu family. Now, the cause of action which the plaintiffs had owing to the sale-deed executed by their mother being, as they alleged, contrary to their interest, was a joint cause of action, and time would run against them all when one of them became entitled to give a discharge without the concurrence of the others: see Mahableshwar Krishnapa v. Ramchandra Mangesh Kulkarni (1). I agree with the reasoning of the learned Appellate Judge at page 2 of the print, where he says :

"It is not denied that the plaintiff No. 3 is the managing member of the family; hence he had a right, as soon as he attained majority and became such managing member, to bring a suit as such manager for recovery of not only his share of the alienated property, but of the whole of the alienated property, including his minor brothers' shares, treating the whole as family property improperly alienated during the minority of himself and his younger brothers. If he fails to do so within the period allowed by Article 44 of the Limitation Act, the minor brothers cannot be allowed to contend that they had separate causes of action to recover their shares alone, apart from the cause of action of the adult managing member to recover the whole. I, therefore, hold that the whole suit is time-barred."

The test seems to be this: supposing the third plaintiff had brought a suit within three years of attaining majority to set aside the alienation made by his mother, and that suit had been dismissed, would the next brother be allowed to file a suit and also any other brothers there might be, who were minors at the time, as soon as they came of age? It appears to me that the cause of action would be joint amongst them all, the issue being whether the alienation made by their guardian mother was a proper one, and when once that point has been decided in a suit filed by one of the sons who is entitled to be considered as a manager of the joint family, then that decision would be binding on them all. In my opinion, the decision of the learned Appellate Judge was correct and the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

FAWCETT, J.—I agree that the appeal should be dismissed with costs. The main question is, whether the plaintiff No. 3 could have given a discharge as manager of the joint Hindu family consisting of himself and his minor brothers without the concurrence of the latter. On this point it has been laid down by the Privy Council in Kishen Prishad v. Har Narain Singh (2) that the manager of a joint family business has a power of making contracts, giving receipts, and compromising or discharging the claims ordinarily incidental to the business; and, having regard to the extensive powers of a manager of a joint Hindu family, which includes a power to contract debts for the family, it seems clear that he has power to give a discharge without the concurrence of the minor members of the joint family. It was argued for the appellants that he can only do so for the benefit of the family, but this seems to me to be immaterial. Under section 7 of the Indian Limitation Act, we have only to consider whether the manager can give a discharge without the concurrence of the minor members of the family, and the answer clearly is that he can—although, no doubt, if he does not do it for proper purposes, that discharge might be invalid so far as the interests of the minor members of the family are concerned. The ruling in Doraisami Sirumadan v. Nondisami Saluvan (3) is an authority that the suit is barred in such a case as the present, and it seems to me that the reasoning on which that case proceeds is sound. In Ganga Dayal v. Mani Ram (4), no doubt, the contrary view was taken but, with due respect to the learned Judges who decided that case, it seems to me that their conclusions are based on irrelevant considerations. The fact that the manager could not have sued alone but must have joined his minor brother as a co-plaintiff is not one which affects the provisions of section 7 of the Indian Limitation Act, so far as I can see. Then, it is said, in that there was nothing to show that plaintiff No. 3 ever acted as a manager, and that, as a matter of fact, he simply remained quite inactive. That, again, seems to me irrelevant. The only question is, whether he could give a discharge without the concurrence of the minors. The authority of this case is also weakened by Rati Ram v. Nadir (5) where it is said that all cases anterior in date to the passing of Act No. IX of 1908 require to be reconsidered in the light of the words then inserted in section 7 of the said Act. It seems to me that the main object of the Legislature in section 7 is to limit the indulgence which is otherwise given to minors, so that, if there are several minors who can claim the benefit of section 6, that concession does not extend to cover the whole period of time up to the youngest of the minors becoming a major, but can only be availed of by the eldest of them.

Appeal dismissed.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), ss. 105, 109—Application under s. 105, nature of—Dismissal for default, effect of—Jurisdiction of Civil Court to entertain claim made subsequent to application.

An application for enhancement of rent made under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which is withdrawn, or is dismissed for non-prosecution, is an application made within the meaning of section 109 of the Act, and once such an application is made, a Civil Court has no jurisdiction to entertain a claim in respect of a matter which formed the subject of that application. [p. 762, col. 1.]

ABEDA KHATUN v. MAJUBALI CHOWDHURY.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Second Court, Backergunj, dated the 17th of September 1917, modifying the decree of the Munsif, First Court, at Barisal, dated the 12th of July 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment

Babu Suresh Chandra Talukdar, for the Appellants.—The defendant is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit for enhancement of rent and for recovery of rent at the enhanced rate. The former rent was Rs. 106-0 0. The plaintiff's allegations are that the area has increased, the rent payable is below the prevailing rate of rent, the fertility of the soil has increased and that the tenants are making considerable profit out of the property.

The defence was that, as a matter of fact, the present suit is barred, the plaintiff having failed in an application under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Secondly, there was uniform payment of rent for twenty years. Thirdly, there was a kabuliyat. The first Court dismissed the suit for enhancement of rent. On appeal, the suit was decreed at the enhanced rate.

I submit that, under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act, I am liable to pay the original rent. The present suit is not maintainable under section 109 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The plea of the increase in area was taken in section 105 case. So, under section 109 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the present suit does not lie. No leave of the Court was taken to bring a suit under clause (b) of section 39 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. See Chiodith v. Tulsi Singh (1). Leave of the Court to withdraw from the application should have been taken in order to bring a fresh suit. See Kamini Sundari Chowdhurani v. Abdul Halim Moulvi (2). Having made an application under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and failed in that, the plaintiff cannot bring a suit. There was no withdrawal from the application under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The subject matter of the present suit was the subject matter of the application under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Mr. N. Ahmed and Moulvi A. S. M. Akram, for the Respondent.—The application under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was not proceeded with. This case cannot be on principle distinguished from other cases. See Rajah Pudmanunda Singh v. Ghanoshyam Misser (3). The case in Rajah Pudmanunda Singh v. Ghanshyam Misser (3) was before the amendment. Instead of withdrawing from the case, the plaintiff did not prosecute the case. Besides, the point was never raised before the lower Courts.

No reply was called upon.

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, ACTG. C. J.—This is an appeal by the tenants defendants in a suit for enhancement of rent of a tenure and for recovery of rent at the enhanced rate.

The Court of first instance refused the claim for enhancement and made a decree for arrears at the existing rate.

Upon appeal the Subordinate Judge has granted an enhancement and made a decree for arrears at the enhanced rate.

In support of the present appeal, it has been contended that the claim for enhancement was not maintainable, in view of the provisions of section 109 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In our opinion, this contention is well founded.

Section 109 provides as follows, "subject to the provisions of section 109A. (which relates to appeals from decisions of Revenue Officers), a Civil Court shall not entertain any application or suit concerning any matter which is or has already been the subject of an application made, suit instituted or proceedings taken under sections 105 to 108 (both inclusive)." It appears that on the 14th May 1907 the plaintiffs made an application under section 105 for enhancement of the rent of the tenure, on the grounds that the rent payable was lower than the prevailing rate of rent; that the defendants had made considerable profit out of the property; that the fertility of the soil had considerably increased; that the price of the staple food-crops had advanced, and that there was an increase of area. On the 9th June 1909, the agent for the plaintiffs appeared and stated that the plaintiffs did not wish to prosecute the proceeding under section 105. Thereupon, the proceeding was dismissed for non-prosecution. The tenants-appellants contend that the plaintiffs cannot now in view, of the provisions of section 109, put forward a claim for enhancement on the ground of increase of area, which is one of the grounds mentioned in the proceeding under section 105. In our opinion, there is no answer to this contention.

(1) 18 Ind. Cas. 130; 40 C. 428; 17 C. W. N. 167.
(2) 47 Ind. Cas. 420; 28 C. L. J. 254.
(3) 1 C. L. J. 134; 32 C. 336; 9 C. W. N. 610.

On behalf of the respondents reliance, however, has been placed upon the decisions of this Court, in Chiodith v. Tulsi Singh (1), and Kamini Sundari Chowdhurani v. Abdul Halim Moulvi (2). In those cases, applications had been made under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and subsequently withdrawn without liberty reserved to make fresh applications. This Court held that an application made under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act but withdrawn was to be treated as one never made. In our opinion, those cases are clearly distinguishable, even if we assume that they were correctly decided. An application which has been made, whether it is withdrawn or whether it is dismissed for non-prosecution, is nevertheless an application made within the meaning of the provisions of section 109. We are clearly of opinion that the provisions of that section should be strictly enforced and not whittled down, as appears to be the effect of the two decisions mentioned. In any event, so far as the present case is concerned, there can be no doubt that the Civil Court has been invited to entertain a suit concerning a matter, namely, a claim for enhancement of rent on the ground of an increase in area, which was the subject of an application previously made under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Consequently, section 109 is an effective bar to the claim.

The result is, that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the Subordinate Judge set aside, and that of the Court of first instance restored with costs both here and before the Subordinate Judge.

FLETCHER, J.—I agree.

Mortgage—Redemption—Transfer of equity of redemption in favour of mortgagee by one of several co-mortgagors, effect of.

The mere fact that one of several co-mortgagors is the registered occupant of the mortgaged land does not entitle him to transfer the portions of the equity of redemption belonging to his co-mortgagors. Any such transfer in favour of the mortgagee does not operate to extinguish the right of the co-mortgagors to redeem their shares in the mortgaged land. [p. 763, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal from an order passed by the First Class Subordinate Judge, A. P., at Nasik, in Appeal No. 75 of 1917, reversing the decree passed by, and remanding the suit to, the Subordinate Judge at Yeola, in Civil Suit No. 225 of 1915.

Mr. Nadkarni (with him Mr. A. G. Desai), for the Appellant.

Mr. W. B. Pradhan, for Respondents Nos. 1 to 8 and 10 to 14.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The plaintiffs sued for accounts under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act and for redemption of a mortgage. The first nine plaintiffs were the descendants of four brothers who passed the original mortgage in 1869. I do not know why the other plaintiffs were made parties, for the descendants of four other brothers by the same father have no interest whatever in the mortgaged property. In 1879 Mahadu, one of the first set of four brothers, executed a rajinama in his capacity of registered occupant of the mortgaged property in favour of Government, and the mortgagee executed a corresponding kabuliayat. Since then the mortgagee has been in occupation of the mortgaged land. The mortgage-bond was restored to Mahadu with an endorsement that it had been satisfied. The question is, whether the equity of redemption which existed in favour of the remaining three brothers continued and whether it still continues in favour of their descendants. The really important issue is Issue No. 3 in the first appeal: had the mortgagors other than Mahadu consented to and authorized the latter's rajinama? That was found in the negative. The corresponding issue in the Trial Court was, whether the rajinama and kabuliayat were competent to extinguish the right of redemption of the mortgagors and pass title to the defendants. That was found in the affirmative. Accordingly, the Trial Judge dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The argument seemed to be that, because Mahadu, the registered occupant, executed the rajinama, the interest not only of Mahadu but also of his brothers in the land passed. But I think that the learned Appellate Judge looked at the case from the right point of view when he considered whether the interest of the other brothers was conveyed or transferred when Mahadu executed the rajinama, unless it could be shown by positive evidence that they had consented to give up their rights to redeem the mortgage. The learned Judge says: "there is nothing in these documents, that is to say, the rajinama and kabuliayat, to show that the three mortgagors had given up their rights to the land in dispute. There is nothing to show that they had authorised Mahadu to extinguish their rights or that they had consented to his doing so, Exhibit 60 who proved the documents nowhere said anything about the other brothers authorizing Mahadu to do so or consenting to his doing so." In Pandu Lakshman Masu-ekar v. Anpurna (1) it was held that, "in the absence of any act showing that the mortgagee is asserting himself against the owner of the equity of redemption, his possession is not adverse against the latter as regards limitation. The mere assertion of his claim by the mortgagee would not affect the right of the real owner of the equity of redemption where a person having no right in the property pretends to sell the equity of redemption to the mortgagee." Here, no doubt, Mahadu was a co mortgagee with his brothers, but he had no right to sell their interest in the equity of redemption, so far as they were concerned he was in the same position as an outsider. The general rule is that, a mortgagee cannot set up title by adverse possession against the owner so as to defeat his right to redeem. That was decided in Bhagvant Govind v. Kondi (2). We have been referred to the case of Puttappa v. Timmaji (3), where there was a sale of the equity of redemption to an outsider, but though the purchaser from a mortgagee can set up a title by adverse possession to the original mortgagor, that does not affect the principle that the mortgagee himself cannot set up a title against the mortgagor. Since then the mortgagee in 1879 did not take the most ordinary precaution to see that the right to redeem which lay in the parties to the mortgage-deed was extinguished, it follows that he is now in a difficult position when the descendants of those parties assert their right to redeem. The mortgagee cannot prove that their ancestors consented to the right of redemption being extinguished. There is no hardship really in the case, because there has been an inquiry of what is due to the mortgagees for principal and interest and also an account of the improvements made to the property.

The decree, therefore, of the learned Appellate Judge must be confirmed.

The plaintiffs cross-objected on the ground that they ought to have been entitled to redeem the whole. But when Mahadu purported to convey to the mortgagee the right to redeem, as there is no doubt about his having a share in the equity of redemption, that brought about a merger of the mortgage to that extent, and consequently the present plaintiffs can only be allowed to redeem the three-fourths of the land in dispute.

Therefore, the cross-objections are dismissed with costs and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

FAWCETT, J.—I agree. The appellants clearly cannot rely on adverse possession against the right to redeem asserted in this suit, not only because of the rule which bars a mortgagee setting up adverse possession against his mortgagor, but also because, in any case, the period of adverse possession that would suffice to bar the right of suit to redeem under Article 148 of the Indian Limitation Act, viz., 60 years, has not expired. Therefore, under section 28 of the Indian

(1) 21 B. 793; 11 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 534.

(2) 14 B. 279; 7 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 645.
(3) 14 B. 176; 7 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 576.

Limitation Act, the equity of redemption, which is now asserted, would not have been extinguished. It seems to me that the dispute really rests upon the decision on the third issue in the lower Court, viz, had the mortgagors other than Mahadu consented to and authorized the latter's rajinama? This issue has been found by the lower Appellate Court in the negative. And, although there are considerations which may be said to favour the view taken by the Trial Court that there was such consent and authorisation, yet there are other considerations which go the other way. Certainly, to my mind, there is no clear proof of such consent and, in any case, it is purely a question of fact which in second appeal we cannot decide for ourselves. Any presumption that there may be in the appellant's favour under section 135-J of the Bombay Land Revenue Code is, in the circumstances, rebutted. Accordingly, I can see no sufficient reason for interfering with the lower Court's decree.

Mortgage—Redemption—Clog on equity of redemption—Improvements—Condition meant to improve mortgagor out of property, validity of.

Plaintiff's mother acting as his guardian mortgaged a house belonging to the plaintiff to defendant. Under the mortgage agreement the plaintiff made himself liable for the cost of reasonable improvements, also for interest on the sum expended on improvements and for repairs :

Held, (1) that the condition relating to the cost of improvements did not justify the demolition and re-building of the house at a cost equivalent to several times the mortgage-debt ;

(2) that the condition relating to the payment of interest by the plaintiff was most inequitable and unconscionable, inasmuch as it amounted to an agreement by the plaintiff to pay interest to defendant on money spent by defendant on making himself comfortable.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Gurdaspur, dated the 8th May 1916, varying that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Gurdaspur, dated the 24th February 1916, decreeing the claim Lala Mehar Chand Mahajan, for Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Appellant.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff's mother acting as his guardian mortgaged a house to defendant in 1894 for Rs. 350. Plaintiff, now of age, sued to redeem, and the defendant called upon him to pay no less than Rs. 10,282-8 of which Rs. 3,200 were said to be the cost of re building the house, Rs. 500 cost of annual repairs and Rs. 5,760 the interest on the item of Rs. 3,200.

The first Court found the defendant's accounts of expenditure fictitious, his claim prepostrous, and the terms of the mortgage inequitable and not binding on the quondam minor and decreed for plaintiff on payment of Rs. 624 less the costs of the case.

The District Judge rejected defendant's accounts also, but gave him a decree enhancing the sum payble by the plaintiff to Rs. 2 000 on no very clear grounds ; but mainly on conjecture.

Plaintiff has preferred this second appeal and urges that the first Court's decree should be restored and we think that equity points directly to this issue.

From documentary evidence it is quite clear that, as soon as he secured the mortgage, the defendant started demolition and re-building of the house in spite of the protests of plaintiff's mother and he has now led evidence to show that the house was ruinous when he took the mortgage, although the document in no way gives support to that contention.

Under the mortgage agreement, plaintiff was responsible for reasonable improvements (tarraqi munasib), also for interest on the sum expended on improvements, and for repairs.

The first condition did not justify a demolition and re building of the house at a cost equivalent to nine times the mortgage-debt, and the second is clearly inequitable for it amounts to an agreement by the plaintiff to pay interest to defendant on money spent by defendant on making himself comfortable.

Bearing in mind the fact that the plaintiff's mother was a widow and plaintiff an infant, we hold this condition was most inequitable and unconscionable and defendant's action a clear attempt to improve the plaintiff out of his property.

We accordingly accept the appeal and restore the first Court's decree, plaintiff shall have the house on payment into Court of Rs. 624 less his costs in this and the Court below. In the first Court parties shall bear their own costs.

Appeal accepted.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss 58, 67, 68—Mortgage, usufructuary—Possession not delivered to mortgagee—Interest, whether can be recovered.

Where under a usufructuary mortgage the mortgaged property is made security only for the amount borrowed and not for interest, and the mortgagee is to have possession and enjoyment of the profits of the mortgaged property in lieu of interest, which is not made payable otherwise, and the mortgagee does not take any steps to obtain possession of the mortgaged property, he loses his right to interest.

Second appeal from the decision of the Assistant Judge, A. P., at Poona, in Appeal No. 117 of 1919, varying the decree passed by the Second Class Subordinate Judge at Khed, in Civil Suit No. 55 of 1918.

Mr. S. Y. Abhyankar, for the Appellant.

Mr. D. O. Virkar for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The plaintiff sued to recover on a mortgage-bond, dated the 6th of August 1910, Rs. 99-15-0 principal and interest at 12 per cent. from the date of the mortgage to the date of suit. The mortgage is as follows :—

"I took from you to day Rs. 99-15 0 to pay Muleband Jetbabhai. This is without interest. In consideration of this the property of my ownership situated at Wafagaon is mortgaged. The property thus described is mortgaged to you and delivered into your possession. According to the terms I shall pay the amount without interest within one year and shall take back the mortgaged property—my lands—into my possession. The profits of the said land should be enjoyed in lieu of interest. If the amount is not re-paid within the stipulated time, the profits should be enjoyed in lieu of interest according to the aforesaid agreement. If the money be demanded after the expiry of the stipulated period and if I be unable to pay the same the rupees without interest should be realized by the sale of the mortgaged property. If the amount realized is not sufficient, I shall be personally liable for the balance."

The plaintiff never got possession of the property under the terms of the mortgage. The property was sold by the first defendant on the 13th of April 1915 to the 2nd defendant. The Trial Court passed a decree for the sum claimed with further interest at 12 per cent. per annum from date of suit to date of decree on the principal sum, with costs of suit against the 2nd defendant. It was also decreed that, if the defendant No. 2 did not pay the amount decreed into Court within six months, the property should be sold. On the question of interest the learned Judge said: "It is not shown, nor is it defendant No. 2's case, that the plaintiff, the mortgagee, had ever been in the enjoyment of the mortgaged land though the mortgage-deed is possessory in form. As the mortgagor has been in actual possession and the mortgage is merely possessory in form only, plaintiff is entitled to charge interest on the principal sum at a reasonable rate, and the rate of 12 per cent. per annum claimed by him is fair." In appeal this decree was altered substituting the amount of Rs. 99-15-0 for Rs. 188 15 0, by deleting the direction to pay future interest at 12 per cent. per annum from date of suit to date of decree, by deleting the direction to pay furture interest on the principal from date of decree to date of payment and by directing that the costs in the lower Court should be borne in proportion to the success and failure as between respondent and appellant. The learned Judge said that the case appeared to be on all fours with Mahadaji v. Joti (1) and it was the fault of the mortgagee himself if he took no steps to recover possession of the mortgaged property. The terms clearly showed that the mortgaged property was a security only for the amount borrowed and not for interest; that the mortgagee was to have possession and enjoyment of the profits of the mortgaged property, in lieu of interest which was not made payable otherwise; that the amount advanced was recoverable after one year by sale of the property.

It appears to me that it is very difficult to distinguish this case from the case of Mahadaji v. Joti (1). The only difference which can be seen in that case is this, that the mortgage did not contain a power of sale in default of the payment of principal. But it was held that the mortgage was a simple usufructuary mortgage carrying the right to have the property sold in default of payment of the principal sum of Rs. 500. On the question of interest Mr. Justice Candy said: "The claim for interest is bad, for the plaintiff was entitled to possession in lieu of interest, and, if he never took the trouble to obtain possession, he lost his right to interest. The land was security for the principal". That is exactly what has happened in this case. Plaintiff has lost his claim to interest as he never took the trouble to obtain possession. The mortgage-bond is positive on that point. There is a personal covenant to pay back the mortgage amount within one year. There is also a power of sale if the mortgagor does not pay back the rupees without interest. It has been contended that the Transfer of Property Act, which was not in force when the decision of Mahadaji v. Joti (1) was given, made an alteration in law giving a usufructuary mortgagee who does not take possession the right to charge interest. I can see nothing in sections 58, 67 and 68, to which we have been referred, which can enable a mortgagee to make a claim to interest—which is not given to him by the mortgage bond. In my opinion, therefore, the decree of the lower Court as against the second defendant is perfectly correct.

The only difficulty I have in my mind is whether the plaintiff can claim against first defendant, who has not appeared, damages for breach of what may be called a covenant to give possession. That would be a claim entirely of a different nature, it has not been made out in the plaint, and it would require entirely different considerations before it could be determined. No case has been cited to us in which such a claim has ever been put forward. In the case of a usufructuary mortgage, it is the business of the mortgagee to get into possession before he advances the money, and if he does not get into possession, then he is entitled to take steps to get into possession. And, for myself, I should like to say that it would be a very bad precedent if we hold that a usufructuary mortgagee could lie by and not take the trouble to get into possession relying upon his being able afterwards to make a claim before the Court for damages for not having been given possession.

The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

FAWCETT, J.—I agree that the appeal fails. It was argued that the plaintiff-appellant was entitled to recover interest by virtue of the provisions of section 68 of the Transfer of Property Act. But that section can scarcely be applied in the present case, inasmuch as the suit is one for sale of the mortgaged property, falling under section 67. As has been ruled in many cases, sections 67 and 68 provide entirely distinct remedies by a mortgagee, and, though it might be possible to combine them in one suit, yet in the present case clearly no attempt has been made to do so. All that the plaintiff asks for in regard to a personal remedy was, to recover any dificit in the sale proceeds from the defendant. But, quite apart from that, it also seems to me clear that interest could not in this particular case be considered to be a part of the mortgage-money, within the meaning of that expression as defined in section 58. It is there said that the principal money and interest of which payment is secured for the time being are called the mortgage money, that is to say, interest to be part of mortgage-money must be actually secured for the time being under the mortgage in question, and in the present case it is beyond all possible doubt that the interest is not secured by the terms of the mortgege. The only possible basis on which the plaintiff could claim interest is that of damages for breach of the covenant to deliver possession and, in regard to such a claim, I entirely concur with the learned Cheif Justice.

It is absolutely necessary that the determination in a cause should be founded upon a case either to be found in the pleadings or involved in or consistent with the case thereby made. [p 769, col. 1.]

Parties cannot be concluded by inferences of fact which are not only not consistent with the pleadings but actually contradictory of the case therein made. [p. 769, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decree of the Madras High Court, dated 7th September 1914, affirming, with certain variations, a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Kistna.

FACTS are sufficiently stated in their Lordships' judgment. The other litigation therein referred to is reported in Lakshmi Venkayyamma v. Venkatanarasimha (1).

(1) 34 Ind. Cas. 921; 43 I. A. 138; 20 C. W. N. 1054; 14 A. L. J. 797; 31 M. L. J. 59; (1916) 2 M. W. N. 23; 20 M. L. T. 137; 4 L. W. 58; 18 Bom. L. R. 651; 39 M. 509; 24 C. L. J. 279 (P. C.).

In the present case the High Court modified the Sub Judge's decree by awarding to the plaintiff-appellant the value of certain jewels inherited from her mother, but without interest, and also the amount of certain rents, with interest at 4 per cent. from date of suit. Appellant contended she was entitled to interest at 6 per cent. on the jewels from the Rani's death and on the rents from the dates when they were received by the Rani.

Messrs DeGruyther, K. C., Dube and Polut, for Respondents Nos. 1 to 3.

Mr. Parikh, for Respondent No. 4 (the Receiver).

Sir Erle Richards, K. C., for the Appellant, submitted that the gift of the jewels to appellant by the Rani was proved. When the parties are living together manual delivery is not necessary to complete a verbal gift, a declaration that the declarer will hold and is holding the property for the other will suffice.

[VISCOUNT CAVE:—There are concurrent findings that no legal gift was proved].

Yes, but there is the authority of this Board in the previous case that the proof is sufficient. The High Court admit that the Rani probably made a distinct promise to appellant to give him these jewels. The Rani's letters evidence a contract to that effect. The appellant relied on her expressions of intention and continued to live with her; she acted on the Rani's promise; and just as in the case of Repudi village, this constituted a contract which could be enforced in appellant's favour. I sumbit that the promise itself is quite clear and is legally binding. In one of her letters the Rani tells appellant the jewels "are all yours". It is a declaration that she holds them for appellant.

Kenworthy Brown, followed.

Mr. DeGruyther, K. C., for the Respondents Nos. 1 to 3. There are concurrent findings of fact in our favour, that no gift took place. The argument that there was a contract was obviously suggested by this Board's previous decision. Appellant now wants to alter her whole case and set up an inconsistent one which cannot arise on the pleadings and requires fresh evidence. Neither appellant herself nor any of the leading witnesses have deposed to any contract. The suit, as framed, is one for specific property ; this Board is now asked to let them set up a new story and to decide upon it without taking evidence.

Mr. Dube followed, and submitted that the circumstances as to the jewels were different from those in the case of Repudi village.

Sir Erle Richards, K. C., replied.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from a judgment and decree, dated the 7th September 1914, of the High Court at Madras, by which the previous decree of the Subordinate Judge of Kistna at Ellore, of the 29th September 1909, was affirmed with certain variations.

The appellant is the plaintiff, Sri Rajah Malraju Lakshmi Venkayyamma Row Bahadur Zamindarini Garu, and she instituted this suit as far back as the 5th December 1902. By her plaint she prayed that she might be declared entitled to recover "the jewels, vessels, etc, mentioned in the schedule, or their value," and that the defendants should deliver to the plaintiff these jewels, vessels, etc., or pay their value, Rs. 1,65,156-1-3. Relief was also sought as to the income of certain villages with interest.

The jewels were in the possession of Rani Papamma Row at her death. The original defendants Nos. 1 to 3, now represented by the present respondents, were alleged in the plaint to be the heirs to all properties that belonged to Rani Papamma absolutely as stridhanam. They also were the reversionary heirs expectant on the death of Rani Papamma to the estates of her deceased husband, Naraya Appa Row.

The fourth defendant was the Receiver of those estates, appointed in Suit No. 44 of 1899.

The main question for determination in this appeal is, whether the plaintiff has proved her right to the jewels she claims, and in view of the concurrent findings of the Courts, the contest is now limited to the jewels included in the large presents of valuable jewels alleged in the plaint to have been made to her by Rani Papamma, from time to time (paragraph 11).

So far as that claim rests on actual gifts made by Rani Papamma it must fail, for it is negatived by concurrent findings of both the lower Courts, and those findings are, in the circumstances of this case, findings of fact.

In the argument this has been recognised, and an endeavour has been made to escape from this difficulty by basing the claim on an assumed contract by Rani Papamma to give the plaintiff the jewels. To appreciate the origin of this change of front, a brief explanation is necessary.

It is beyond controversy that Rani Papamma was very attached to the plaintiff. She was her great aunt, she had brought her up from infancy, she had borne the expenses of her marriage, she had throughout treated her as her own daughter.

The plaintiff was married to a man of some means and position, but Rani Papamma was anxious that, notwithstanding the marriage, the plaintiff and her husband should continue to reside with her; and it is the plaintiff's case that, as an inducement to this, the Rani agreed that in consideration of their so doing, she "would meet all the private and special expenses of the plaintiff, treat her in every way as her daughter, give her jewels, and make adequate provision for her."

The marriage was in 1886, and the plaintiff and her husband, in compliance with her wishes, resided with the Rani till 1893. Though it has always been the plaintiff's case that large presents of jewels had actually been made to her as a result of this arrangement, she and her husband felt that as the jewels still remained in the Rani's possession, some written record was necessary as evidence of their ownership. And so there was negotiation and correspondence which ultimately led to a letter, Exhibit 'H," written by Rani Papamma to the plaintiff in 1893.

The effect of that Exhibit was considered by this Board in a suit brought by the present plaintiff to establish her claim to a village called Repudi, and it was there held, in view of this Exhibit, the conduct of the parties and the other circumstances of the case disclosed in the evidence that there was a contract as to the village which could be enforced in the plaintiff's favour.

It has been argued on this appeal that this decision is conclusive in the plaintiff's favour as to the jewels. But this argument cannot be sustained.

KRISHNAJI GOVIND v. SITARAM HANMANT.

No doubt Exhibit "H" is a single document, but its treatment of the jewels and Repudi is not the same. It deals with each separately in language not identical in its terms or, necessarily, in its legal consequences. There is, too, a diversity of circumstances. The effect, however, of these dissimilarities need not be discussed, for, apart from this, there has been a difference between the conduct of the earlier suit and the present which is fatal to the plaintiff's present proposal to abandon gift and rely on contract as the foundation of her claim to the jewels.

In the earlier suit the plaintiff's claim to Repudi was rested on contract at the earliest stage of the litigation; contract was alleged in the plaint and was a matter of dispute, discussion and decision in both the Indian Courts.

In the present suit it is not until this appeal that contract has been suggested as a possible cause of action. There is no trace of it in the pleadings, the issues, the evidence, or the judgments, for in India the issue was gift, not contract. Ownership of the jewels was the case made in the plaint; the cause of action was alleged to have arisen when the Receiver took possession of them; and the decree sought was delivery of the jewels or payment of their value conformably to section 20*d* of Code of the Civil Procedure, which deals with a suit for delivery of specific moveables on the ground of property (sic).

The argument now advanced is contradictory of the case thus made, and involves a line of attack that the defendants had no opportunity to meet while the litigation was in the lower Courts, where appropriate evidence could have been adduced. In effect, it invites their Lordships to do that which was censured in Eshenchunder Singh v. Shamachurn Bhutto (2) where Lord Westbury, delivering the judgment of the Board, said:—

"It is impossible to conclude parties by inferences of fact which are not only not consistent with the allegations that are to be found in the plaint, which constitute the case the defendant has to meet, but which are in reality contradictory of the case made by the plaintiff. It will introduce the greatest amount of uncertainty into judicial proceedings if the final determination of causes is to be founded upon inferences at variance with the case that the plaintiff has pleaded, and, by joining issue in the cause, has undertaken to prove."

This is essentially a case where this ruling should be strictly applied in view of the long duration of the suit and the lack of finality in any decree that would at this stage be possible. This change of front, therefore, cannot be permitted, and the plaintiff's contention must fail.

The only other objection taken to the decree was as to the rate and period of interest directed by the High Court. This admits of a short and conclusive answer. There was nothing contrary to law in this direction and what was ordered was within the scope of the Court's discretion. With this exercise of discretion their Lordships decline to interfere.

The result, then, is that this appeal wholly fails, and their Lordships will accordingly humbly advise His Majesty that it should be dismissed with costs to the first three respondents.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 114—Lease —Forfeiture, relief against, rule as to.

RAM CHAND v. JANA.

No hard and fast rule can be laid down as to relief against a forfeiture clause in a lease, but the general principle of equity is, that the court will relieve against forfeiture unless the tenant has done something to forefeit his right to bring himself within the principles of equity.

Second appeal from the decision of the Assistant Judge, A. P., at Satara, in Appeal No. 136 of 1919, varying the decree passed by the Joint Subordinate Judge at Karad, in Civil Suit No. 416 of 1918.

Mr. J. R. Gharpure, for the Appellants.
Mr. P. B. Shingne, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff sued to recover possession of the suit property together with Rs. 55-8 0 as arrears of rent. Admittedly, there had been a default. The learned Judge in the Trial Court said that it would be a hardship if the land which the defendants had been cultivating for so many years should be taken from them for two defaults in payment. He, therefore, passed an order relieving them against forfeiture under section 114 of the Transfer of Property Act provided they paid the arrears of rent with interest and costs within fifteen days. That was a perfectly correct order to make and an order within the powers of the Judge to make. But in appeal the learned Appellate Judge, relying on the decision in Naraina Naika v. Vasudeva Bhatta (1), appeared to think that the forfeiture could not be relieved against. The learned Judge said that "the exercise of the discretion of the Court to relieve against forfeiture might depend upon the circumstance whether the lease allowed a period of grace or not and whether the period of grace was a reasonable period having regard to the nature and terms of the lease." Each case must depend upon its own facts. It may be that if a period of grace is allowed and yet the tenant does not pay rent within that period, the Court will not relieve against forfeiture. There can be no hard and fast rule, and the general principle of equity is, that the Court will relieve against forfeiture unless the tenant has done something to forfeit his right to bring himself within the principles of equity. We do not think this is such a case.

The claim was not disputed by Jumma, but was resisted by his co-sharers. The vendees obtained a decree. They took out execution against Jumma only. On the 15th August 1899 they filed a dakhlnama, and the proceedings ended.

In the present case the plaintiff, who is the representative-in-title of the vendees sue for possession of the land alleging that his predecessors got possession in 1899, and that he was dispossessed four years ago by defendants Nos. 1 to 6, who are co sharers in the well.

The Courts below have concurred in dismissing the suit finding that the plaintiff's predecessors never obtained possession according to law in the execution proceedings in 1899, and that the plaintiff and his predecessors have not been in possession within the period of 12 years prior to the suit.

The plaintiff has filed a second appeal in this Court.

The findings that the plaintiff or his predecessors never got possession are findings of fact which cannot be attacked in second appeal.

It is contended that there was no necessity for the decree holders to obtain symbolical possession in 1899, because in the Code of Civil Procedure then in force there was no provision corresponding to Order XXI, rule 35 (2) in the new Code. Order XXI, rule 35 (2), however, applies only to the case of a decree for joint possession, which was not the decree that the plaintiff's predecessors obtained. Their decree was an ordinary decree for possession of the share which they had bought, and such a decree would be executed in the manner provided in section 264 of the old Code, corresponding to Order XXI, rule 36 of the present Code. It was clearly necessary for the decree-holders to obtain symbolical possession as laid down in section 264 and the finding is that they did not obtain it.

It is argued for the appellant that, even if he did not get possession, he is entitled to succeed on the strength of his being a co-sharer in the well by virtue of the purchase by his predecessors from Jumma, as the possession of the co-sharers must be deemed to be the plaintiff's possession. This argument cannot be accepted for two reasons. In the first place, it sets up an entirely new case for the plaintiff, as the case with which he came into Court was that he got possession and that about four years before suit he was dispossessed. In the second place, the rights created by his predecessor's purchase in 1894 merge in the decree obtained thereon in 1896. As observed by the Courts below, Khub Ram v. Surat (1) is applicable to the present case. The plaintiffs in that case had obtained a decree as mortgagees for possession of the mortgaged land. They brought a suit later on alleging that they had been given possession and had afterwards been dispossessed but they failed to prove their allegations. It was held that they could not then plead that they could sue a second time for possession on the terms of the mortgage, and that, even if that new plea could be entertained, it would be of no avail as the mortgage must be held to have merged in the decree.

The suit has, therefore, been rightly dismissed. Possession not having been obtained under the decree of 1896 the plaintiff loses his remedy [Hafiz Baha-ud-din v. Musammat Fateh Bibi (2)].

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

MOTO DASI v. BEHARI LAL.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued to recover possession of the plaint property and his claim was resisted by the defendants Nos. 3 and 4 who denied that the plaintiff was the owner. In the Trial Court the plaintiff's suit was dismissed. In appeal the plaintiff's claim was allowed and he was held entitled to recover possession of the plaint property with the exception of what was mortgaged to the defendants Nos. 3 and 4. The learned Judge decided in the plaintiff's favour on the ground that defendant No. 1, through whom the plaintiff claims, was a nearer heir to Raghu than the vendors of defendants Nos. 3 and 4, who were the sons of Raghu's mother's sister. The learned Judge says: "It is now settled law that the suggestion in West and Buhler, page 491, as to the postponement of all other bandhus to the nine specially mentioned in the Mitakshara is not correct, and that the only principle governing the order of succession among bandhus is that of propinquity." Unfortunately, the learned Judge has not cited any authority for that opinion which, if correct, would mean this, that the female bandhus are placed in a position of equality with male bandhus. Now the nine bandhus specially mentioned in the Mitakshara are male bandhus, and, although other male bandhus have been held by various decisions entitled to rank with those bandhus, there is not a word said in any of those decisions about female bandhus being placed in equality with the male bandhus. On the other hand, there is a direct decision of the Madras High Court—Rajah Venkata Narasimha Appa Rao Bahadur v. Rajah Surenani Venkata Purushothama Jagannadha Gopala Row Bahadur (1)—that under the Mitakshara a male bandhu is entitled to preference over a female bandhu even though the latter is nearer in degree. In the absence of any authority to the contrary of the opinion expressed by West and Buhler we are of opinion that female bandhus are excluded by the nine classes of bandhus mentioned in the Mitakshara. Mr. Mulla also, in his Work on Hindu Law, cannot point to any authority to support the learned Judge's conclusion. We may take it then as settled law, as far as the present case is concerned, that female bandhus are still excluded from being treated on an equality with male bandhus.

The result is that the appeal is allowed and the plaintiff can only be entitled to the half share of Appa in the plaint property subject to the mortgage of the defendants Nos. 3 and 4.

It is true that he sues for possession, although the properties are in the possession of the mortgagees until the mortgages are paid off. But it is just as well that, in order that there should be no dispute in the future, we should hold him entitled to that half share of Appa subject to his having to pay off the mortgages together with the costs and further charges, if any before he gets possession.

Plaintiff to pay costs throughout.

The cross-objections are dismissed with costs.

Appeal allowed.

MOTO DASI v. BEHARI LAL.

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Hooghly, dated the 19th of July 1918, reversing that of the Munsif, second Court at Amta, dated the 19th of December 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Brojolal Chakravarty (with him Babus Monmothanath Ganguli and Gour Mohan Dutt), for the Appellants.—This appeal arises out of a suit for establishment of title and recovery of possession. The defendants are appellants in this appeal. Plaintiff purchased one third share of the property from a Hindu widow who became unchaste when succession opened after the death of her son. Defendant purchased the entire property of the family to which the said widow belonged and the plaintiff was dispossessed since then. The plaintiff made an application under Order XXI, rule 100, Civil Procedure Code, to recover possession, but it was disallowed on 26th August 1914. The present suit was instituted on 30th November 1916.

My first submission is that, when succession opened after the death of her son, the widow was unchaste and she could not inherit the property and her transfer was invalid.

Secondly, the suit, having been brought after one year from the date of the last application under Order XXI, rule 100, is barred by limitation under Article 11 A.

Thirdly, the lower Court erred in law in shifting the onus to prove unchastity upon the plaintiff. The purchaser of the land from this lady has got to prove that she was chaste and not upon us to prove that.

Babu Lalit Mohan Banerjee, for the Respondents.—So far as the question of chastity is concerned, it is concluded by the finding of fact and my learned friend cannot raise this question in second appeal.

The question of limitation has been raised here for the first time and that point cannot be raised now.

Babu Brojolal Chakrabuty in reply.—It is clear from the plaint that the suit was instituted after the expiration of time. The suit is clearly barred by limitation.

JUDGMENT.—Two questions have been raised on behalf of the defendants, who are appellants in this case. The first relates to the question of onus of proof with respect to the alleged unchastity of Nithar, a Hindu widow, from whom the plaintiff purchased a one-third share of the property which is the subject-matter of dispute in the present case. But we need not go into that question, because the learned District Judge has, upon a consideration of the evidence of both sides, come to a finding that she is not unchaste.

The appeal, however, must succeed on the second contention, namely, that the suit is barred by limitation, having regard to the provisions of Article 11A of Schedule I to the Limitation Act. The plaintiff, as stated above, purchased a one-third share of the property which belonged to Nithar. The defendant No. 1, on the other hand, purchased the entire property belonging to the family of which Nithar was a member and dispossessed the plaintiff from the one-third share purchased by him. The plaintiff thereupon made an application for possession under Order XXI, rule 100. That application was fully gone into and was disallowed on the 26th August 1914. The present suit was instituted on the 30th November 1916.

Now, Article 11A of Schedule I to the Limitation Act lays down that in a suit "by a person against whom an order has been made under the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908..... upon an application by any person dispossessed of such property in the delivery of possession thereof to the decree holder or purchaser, to establish the right which he claims to the present possession of the property comprised in the order," the period is one year from the date of the order.

The order, as stated above, was passed on the 26th August 1914 more than a year before the institution of the suit. It is true that the question was not raised in either of the Courts below, and we would not have allowed this question to be raised here in second appeal, were it not for the fact that the plaintiff himself in his plaint states these facts. In the fifth paragraph he says: "That the plaintiff having purchased the one-third share of the jote, he was obliged to object to the aforesaid granting of possession in execution case No. 47 of 1914, but his objection was rejected in the month of Bhadra 1321. Since then the principal defendant has dispossessed the plaintiff from the said one-third share, which he had purchased from Nitharmoyee Dassi, and the said defendant is holding the same". The order in that case is on the record and shows that the share purchased by the plaintiff was the subject-matter of dispute in that case which is the same as in the present case. The matter was fully gone into in that case and the application of the plaintiff was rejected. The suit, not having been brought within one year from the date of the order, is barred by limitation even upon the facts stated by plaintiff in his plaint.

In these circumstances, the appeal must be allowed and the suit accordingly dismissed. But, as the question was not raised in the Courts below, we direct that each party do bear his own costs in all Courts.

Appeal allowed.

Where property is attached in execution of a decree and a claim preferred to it by an alleged purchaser from the judgment-debtor is dismissed on the ground that the alleged purchase was fraudulent, but the attachment is subsequently withdrawn, the unsuccessful claimant is not bound to bring a suit to contest the order within the special period of limitation provided by Article 13 of Schedule I to the Limitatson Act. A subsequent suit by the purchaser to recover the property from the judgment-debtor will not be barred merely because he failed to bring a suit to contest the order made in claim proceedings. Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge Ahmedabad, in Appeal No. 70 of 1918, reversing the decree passed by the Joint Subordinate Judge at Ahmedabad, in Civil Suit No. 342 of 1917.

Mr. G. N. Thakor, for the Appellant.

Mr. H. V. Divatia, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The plaintiff sued to recover possession of the plaint house and Rs 125 rent due under a registered lease dated the 18th of May 1915. The defendant filed a written statement contending that the sale deed was effected through fraud in order to defraud the creditors, that the lease was inoperative, and that the sale was declared to be ineffective in a miscellaneous application filed by the plaintiff.

It appears that, after the sale-deed had been executed by the defendant in favour of the plaintiff, the property was attached by a creditor of the defendant. The plaintiff took proceedings under Order XXI for removing the attachment. But in summary proceedings the Court came to the conclusion that the sale-deed was inoperative as it was effected to defraud the creditors. Plaintiff then filed Suit No. 86 of 1916 to set aside this order. That suit was withdrawn on the 15th of August 1916, because defendant settled with the judgment creditor and the attachment was withdrawn. This suit was filed on the 25th of May 1917.

The Trial Court dismissed the suit, relying on the decision in the attachment proceedings against the plaintiff. In first appeal the learned District Judge remanded the case for the trial of the issue whether the transfer by sale on the 10th of April conveyed any interest to the plaintiff, and whether the effect of the lease of 18th May 1915 created the relation of landlord and tenant between the parties. He disagreed with the finding of the lower Court that the order in Miscellaneous Proceedings No. 68 of 1915 was conclusive as against the plaintiff in favour of the present defendant, who was not a party to those proceedings. The lower Court found on those issues in the affirmative. Thereupon the District Judge reversed the decree of the lower Court and decreed the plaintiff's suit.

It has been argued in this Court that the plaintiff, not having sued within a year of the order passed in the attachment proceedings, could not now file this suit against the present defendant. But it appears to me that the decision in Gopal Purshotam v. Bai Divali (1) decides the question. It is true, in that case the defendant, who had made an unsuccessful attempt to remove the attachment on the property which she claimed as her own, was in possession. When the plaintiff, who had privately purchased the land which had been attached and consequently withdrew his application for execution, endeavoured to get possession, it was contended by him that, because the defendant had not brought a suit within one year to set aside the order of the Subordinate Judge, he was barred from setting up a claim to the land. That contention was disallowed and Sargent C. J., said: "We agree with the lower Appeal Court that, when the plaintiff withdrew his attachment, the parties were restored to the status quo ante. The object of the claim which was preferred by the defendant was, as contemplated by section 278, Civil Procedure Code, to obtain the removal of the attachment, and when that attachment was removed by the judgment-creditor's own act on the 20th of November 1882, there is no longer an attachment or any other proceedings in execution on which the order could operate to the prejudice of the claimant. Therefore, there was no interest to bring a suit to set aside the order." Applying the reasoning of that case to this case, as soon as the attachment was withdrawn, there was no longer any attachment or any proceedings in execution in which the order against the plaintiff would operate to his prejudice. The defendant, his vendor, was not a party to the claimant's proceedings, and, once the attachment proceedings were withdrawn, the plaintiff purchaser and the defendant vendor were restored to the position which they occupied before the property was attached. No doubt, if the attachment had continued when the property was sold in execution before the claimant filed the suit, then different considerations would apply, and certainly the order would be conclusive against him in favour of the purchaser if the suit was not filed within a year of the date of the order. But if the defendant's argument were to succeed, this result follows that a party entitled to bring an action within a period fixed by the Indian Limitation Act for that particular action would be barred from bringing a suit within a very much lesser period merely because it happened by accident that attachment proceedings had been instituted at the instance of a third party. In my opinion, therefore, the learned District Judge was perfectly correct in disregarding the order in Miscellaneous Proceedings No. 68 of 1915.

Then, it is contended that only Rs. 1,500 consideration has been proved out of Rs. 2,500. Therefore, the defendant has a lien for the remaining Rs. 1,000. The lower Court came to the conclusion that Rs. 2,500 had been paid and, clearly, the defendant had admitted that at a time when it suited him to do so. But the learned District Judge seemed to think that the onus lay on the plaintiff to prove that he had paid the whole of the consideration, and, dealing with the evidence from that point of view, considered that he could not hold it proved that the other thousand rupees had been paid. I think that the onus clearly lay on the defendant, after he had admitted that the whole consideration had been paid, to show that that was incorrect and that he still had a lien on the property for some of the purchase-money. However, that finding made no difference in the decree passed by the learned District Judge. Apparently, no suggestion was made on the part of the defendant that there was a lien for a thousand rupees. I think the probable explanation of that was, that the question, how much of the consideration-money was actually paid, was not properly dealt with in the case. No specific issue was raised. What the defendant contended was that the whole sale was inoperative and was a fraud against creditors. The Court very certainly was satisfied that Rs. 1,500 out of the Rs. 2,500 went to pay the claim of one of the defendant's creditors, and if once that was proved, it is perfectly clear that it could not be held that the sale was inoperative and it was not necessary to consider whether the plaintiff had received the balance of Rs. 1,000 or not.

(1) 18 B. 241; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 669.

In my opinion, therefore, the appeal fails and the decree of the learned District Judge must be confirmed with costs.

FAWCETT, J.—I agree. On the first point I may also refer to the case of Krishna Prosad Roy v. Bipin Behary Roy (2). It was there held, in a case like the present where the attachment was withdrawn, that the plaintiff is not required to institute a suit under section 283 of the previous Code to establish his right to the property in dispute.

Appeal dismissed.

PUNJAB SINGH AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

ARJAN AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Custom—Alienation—Suit to contest alienation—Fictitious item entered in sale-deed, effect of—Court, duty of Fictitious items are very often introduced into conveyances, but it does not follow that they are always introduced for fraudulent purposes. They often are introduced for the purpose of frightening would-be pre-emptors but they might also be introduced by the purchaser in order to enhance the importance of his bargain and, consequently, his status in the eyes of his neighbours. Even if the object of introducing such fictitious items is to scare away pre-emptors, reversioners can derive no advantage from that circumstance. [p. 778, col. 2.]

In such a case the real issue is, what is the contract between the vendor and the vendee? And if it is found that by consent of the vendor and the vendee a fictitious amount was included in the ostensible sale-price the only matter which remains for consideration is whether the real contract is one which should be binding on the collaterals [p. 777, col. 1.]

First appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 13th June 1914.

Dr. Muhammad Iqbal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Badar ud-Din Qureshi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Prem Singh and Hem Singh, two brothers, in June 1908 sold 18 kanals, 3 marlas of ancestral land, and the present appeal arises out of a suit which has been brought by their nephews for possession of their share of the land sold on the ground that the sale was without consideration and necessity. The learned District Judge has found that out of the Rs. 1,500, which purports to be consideration for the sale, Rs. 288 are not proved to have been paid, and he is of opinion that that sum was purely fictitious and was included in the ostensible consideration for the sale probably with the intention of scaring away pre-emptors. He has accordingly given the plaintiffs a decree for possession of one-fourth share in the land sold, to which they are entitled, on the condition that they first pay to the vendee one-fourth of Rs. 1,212, the amount found to be a valid charge.

In appeal before us it has been contended that there is evidence on the record that the item of Rs. 288 rejected by the Court below was paid by the vendee to the vendors; but having heard that evidence, we are unable to differ from the Court below in its conclusion that this sum is not proved to have been paid. The next argument addressed to us on behalf of the appellants is that even if it be held that the item of Rs. 288 is not proved to have been paid, it does not follow that it was included in the sale-price in order to evade suits of pre-emption, and that as the item is only a fraction of the whole sale price, the vendee's failure to prove it should not involve the rescission of the sale.

It is, however, borne in upon us by a long experience that such fictitious items are very often introduced into conveyances, but it does not follow that they are always introduced for fraudulent purposes. They often are introduced for the purpose of frightening would-be pre-emptors, but they might also be introduced by the purchaser in order to enhance the importance of his bargain and, consequently, his status in the eyes of his neighbours. Even, however, if the object of introducing such fictitious items is to scare away pre-emptors, we do not think that reversioners should derive advantage from that circumstance. It is true that in Kesar v. Sundar Singh (1) a somewhat strict view is taken, and it was held that the fact that a portion of the alleged consideration was fictitiously entered with the consent of both parties was no satisfactory ground for relieving the vendee of proving that the whole consideration-money passed for necessity. A contrary view, however, was expressed in another Division Bench ruling of this Court in Civil Appeal No. 210 of 1905, and in that case it was held that the contract in such cases between the parties was that the balance after the exclusion of the fictitious amount formed the real consideration for the sale.

In this case we consider that the real issue is, what was the contract between the vendors and the vendee? And if it is found that by consent of the vendors and the vendee a fictitious amount was included in the ostensible sale-price, the only matter which remains for consideration is, whether the real contract is one which should be binding on the collaterals. On the finding of the Court below, which has not been challenged in appeal by the respondent-plaintiffs, 18 kanals of land paying a revenue of Rs 5 passed from the vendors to the vendee for Rs. 1,212. Rs. 1,212 is a sum equal to 240 times the land revenue payable on the land sold and is itself probably a very inflated price. The other facts found in the case are, that the vendors were very poor men; that they had no sons to help them but that one of them had three daughters of a marriageable age at the time of the sale; that their holding was originally a very small one and at the time of the sale was mortgaged with possession to mortgagees in its entirety. It is quite obvious that these men must have been in a necessitous condition and indeed it was asserted in the Court below—and the assertion was not challenged by the other side—that before selling the land to the defendant-appellants the vendors applied to the Deputy Commissioner for permission to sell their land to a member of a non-agricultural tribe. For six years the plaintiffs took no action and that confirms our impression that the sale was for necessity and for the full market value of the land at the time.

In these circumstances, we do not think that the sale should now be interferred with. We accept the appeal and dismiss the plaintiffs' suit with costs.

Appeal accepted.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7 (iv) d —Suits Valuation Act (VII of 1887), s. 8—Injunction, suit for —Valuation for purposes of Court-fee and jurisdiction.

A suit for an injunction comes within section 7 (iv) (d) of the Court Fees Act and the Court-fee has to be computed according to the amount at which the relief sought is valued in the plaint, which value the plaintiff is entitled to fix himself. In such a case it is wholly unnecessary for the plaintiff to fix any value for the purposes of jurisdiction as, by section 8 of the Suits Valuation Act, the value for the purposes of Court-fee is also the value for the purposes of jurisdiction. [p. 777, col. 2; p. 778, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Sholapur, in Appeal No. 96 of 1919, dismissing an appeal from the decree passed by the Joint Subordinate Judge at Sholapur, in Civil Suit No. 450 of 1918.

Mr. S. R. Gokhale, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. V. Kane, for Respondents Nos. 1 and 2.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The plaintiff sued for an injunction. Such a suit comes within section 7, paragraph (iv), of the Court Fees Act and the Court-fee had to be computed according to the amount at which the relief sought was valued in the plaint, which valuation the plaintiff was etitled to fix himself.

He valued the claim at Rs. 10 but also added another valuation of Rs. 500 for purposes of jurisdiction. The memorandum of appeal was valued in the same way. The District Judge, holding that under section 8 of the Suits Valuation Act there could not be two valuations in a suit of this nature, one for Court-fees and another for jurisdiction, ordered the plaintiff to pay the balance of Court-fees as if the claim had been valued at Rs. 500. On the plaintiff failing to comply with this order, the appeal was rejected.

As the plaintiff was entitled, under section 7 of the Court Fees Act, to value his claim at Rs. 10 it was wholly unnecessary for the plaintiff to fix any value for the purposes of jurisdiction, as, by section 8 of the Suits Valuation Act, the value determinable for the computation of Court-fees and the value for the purposes of jurisdiction shall be the same: Bai Hiragavri v. Gulabdas Jamnadas (1). This principle was approved of by the Privy Council in Sunderbai v. Collector of Belgaum (2).

In Raj Krishna Dey v. Bepin Behary Dey (3) the Court considered that the Legislature never intended that the plaintiff should be at liberty to assign any arbitrary value to the relief claimed and thus be free to choose capriciously the forum of trial or appeal. Whatever the Legislature may have intended, that is the meaning which has been given to section 7 of the Court Fees Act by the Privy Council.

The appeal must be allowed and the District Judge must be directed to take Appeal No. 96 of 1919 in his Court on to his file and dispose of it according to law. The costs of this appeal will be costs in the appeal to the lower Court.

KESHAB LAL GHOSH AND OTHERS—DECREE-HOLDERS—RESPONDENTS.

Execution of decree—Surety for judgment-debtor—Security, forfeiture of—Sum paid by surety, appropriation of.

In execution of a decree a judgment-debtor was arrested and imprisoned, but was released on furnishing security in the sum of Rs. 500, the surety undertaking to produce him in Court in the event of his not applying to be adjudicated insolvent within a month. He did not so apply and the surety failed to produce him and paid the Rs. 500; the question was how this sum was to be appropriated:

Held, that the sum was to be applied in satisfaction of the decree. [p. 779, col. 2.]

Appeal against the order of the Officiating Additional District Judge, Khulna, dated the 10th of September 1919, reversing that of the Additional Subordinate Judge of that District, dated the 21st of December 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Kshitish Chandra Chakraburty (with him Babu Panchanan Ghosal), for the Appellants:—The judgment-debtors are the appellants. The facts of the case are briefly these: The decree-holders obtained a decree against the judgment debtors for Rs. 2,000. In execution of that decree the decree-holder got my client arrested and imprisoned. We then applied to the Court for release on the ground that my client would apply for being declared an insolvent. On this the Court ordered my release on a security of Rs. 500. The surety failed to produce the judgment-debtor in Court as he was directed. As a result of his default, he paid in Rs. 500 for which he stood security. The question for your decision is, whether the amount is to be credited against the judgment debtor. Three points, therefore, would arise for consideration by your Lordships. The first point is that, under section 145 of the Civil Procedure Code, the decree-holder can execute the decree against the surety to the extent to which he has rendered himself personally liable. Therefore, the money realised from the surety should be deducted from the decretal amount.

[TEUNON, J.—Section 145 does not say whether the money realised from the surety should be deducted from the decretal amount?]

My second point is that, upon a proper construction of the surety-bond, the decree-holder is not entitled to get from the surety any amount over and above the decretal amount. The bond merely says that on the surety failing to produce the judgment-debtor under the order of the Court he would be liable to pay a sum of Rs. 500 in accordance with the orders of the Court. My last point is that, in equity the decree-holder is not entitled to get the money from the surety in excess of his decretal dues. The cases in Basanti Lal v. Obed'lu Singh (1) and Shyam

(1) 16 Ind. Cas. 118; 39 C. 1013; 16 C. W. N. 664.

Sundar Lal v. Bajpai Jainarayan (2) relied upon by the lower Courts did not deal with the point now under consideration

Babu Troilakhyanath Ghosh (with him Babu Manmathi Nath Roy), for the Respondents.—The money realised from the surety upon the surety-bond is a penalty. Penalty is a punishment for the breach of law, rule or contract. The case in Basanti Lal v. Oheddu Singh (1) is in my favour.

[TEUNON, J.—The only point decided in that case is whether the money would go to the Government or to the decree-holder].

There are other cases also. Refers to Krishnaaiyar v. Krishnasamy Ayyar (3), Imbichunni Nayar v. Lalji Ram Doss Soit (4) and Koylash Chandra Shaha v. Christophoridi (5).

Babu Kshitish Chandra Chakraburty replied briefly.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is directed against an order of the Additional District Judge of Khulna, dated 10th September 1919. In this case it appears that in execution of a decree aggregating, with interest and costs, a sum of about Rs. 2,000 the judgment-debtor was arrested and imprisoned. He was thereafter released on furnishing security for a sum of Rs. 500; the surety undertaking to produce the judgment debtor in Court in the event of his not applying to be adjudicated an insolvent within a month. The judgment debtor, in fact, did not apply for adjudication as an insolvent and the surety further failed to produce him. It is not disputed on these facts that the conditions of the surety-bond have not been fulfilled and that the sum of Rs. 500 has become payable by the surety. That sum has, in fact, been paid by the surety. The question before us is, whether the Rs. 500 should be appropriated or credited against the decretal amount or should be taken by the decree-holder as a solatium for the delay brought about in the execution of his decree.

The surety-bond runs thus:—"If the aforesaid judgment debtor does not apply to be declared an insolvent within a month from this date, I undertake to produce him under the orders of the Court. If I fail to do so, then I will be liable to pay a sum of Rs. 500 in accordance with the order of the Court." The terms of the bond do not in themselves make it clear whether the payment made by the surety was to be credited against the decree or was to be made available to the decree-holder over and above his decretal amount. But we are of opinion that the intention of the parties and of the Judge who took this bond was that the sum would be credited against the decree. The Subordinate Judge who took the bond has shown by his order, which has been reversed by the learned Additional District Judge, that this was the view he took of the transaction. Possibly, from the language of the bond and more particularly the words "in accordance with the order of the Court," it might be argued that it was for the Judge who took the bond to decide how the sum that ultimately became payable should be appropriated. On the question in controversy we have been referred more particularly to two reported cases, namely, the case reported in Basanti Lal v. Oheddu Singh (1) and the case reported in Koylash Chandra Shaha v. Christophoridi (5). In the first of these cases it was held that in a case such as this the money should not be declared a forfeiture in favour of Government, but must be appropriated for the benefit of the decree-holder whose rights were interfered with. But there, apparently, the question did not arise whether the money should be appropriated towards the satisfaction of the decree or should be given to the decree-holder as a solatium or further benefit over and above the decretal amount. In the second case, the terms of the bond make it clear that any sum paid by the surety, should he fail to comply with the conditions of the bond, was to be applied in satisfaction of the decree, and that, we think, represents the usual course of proceedings in cases of this kind.

For these reasons, we set aside the order of the Additional District Judge and restore the order of the Subordinate Judge with costs in all Courts. We assess the hearing fee in the Court of first instance at rupees ten, in the Court of first appeal rupees sixteen and in this Court at one gold mohur.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 123, 141—Suit to recover share in property left by Muhammadan—Limitation applicable.

Where the members of a Muhammadan family continue to live as tenants-in-common without dividing the estate of a deceased ancestor, limitation for a suit by one of his heirs to recover his share in the estate of the deceased will not run from the time of the latter's death, but from the date when the defendant begins to hold adversely to the plaintiff.

Second appeal from the decision of the Assistant Judge, Ahmedabad, in Appeal No. 78 of 1918, reversing the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge at Borsad, in Civil Suit No. 97 of 1916.

Mr. G. N. Thakor, for the Appellant.

Mr. N. K. Mehta, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The plaintiff sued to recover her share in the property of her grandmother, Gulbai, who died in 1892. It is admitted that she would have been entitled to half her mother's share, and she has been held entitled to one-twelfth of the estate of Gulbai.

It is contended that the suit is barred by limitation and that Article 123 applied. But we decided in Kallangouda v. Bibishaya Shah Mahomed Khan (1) that where the members of a Muhammadan family continued to live as tenants-in common without dividing the estate of a deceased ancestor, limitation will not run from the time of his death. Here, on the findings of fact by the Appellate Court, we cannot say that facts were proved to establish adverse possession against the plaintiff. Therefore, we see no reason to differ from the finding of the learned Judge.

The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

FAWCETT, J.—I agree. The learned Pleader for the appellants has relied upon the Privy Council case of Maung Tun Thi v. Ma Thit (2), where their Lordships refer to Article 123 of the Indian Limitation Act as prescribing the period within which a claim must be made for a share of property on the death of an intestate. It is to be noted with regard to that case that it was one from Burma and, as the report at page 381* shows, there was already a decision of the Chief Court that the period of limitation for the recovery of a share by an eldest son is twelve years from the date of his parent's death under Article 123. The appellant's Counsel also referred to that Article as being the one applicable in such a case. Their Lordships' attention does not appear to have been drawn to the Indian rulings regarding the scope of this particular Article, and it was not a point in issue in the case. The reference to this Article is merely incidental, and there may be special reasons for its applicability to the case of Buddhist Law there under consideration. I do not, therefore, consider that it is a pronouncement of the Privy Council which should necessarily be held to conclude the question, especially as a contrary opinion appears to me to have been expressed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Mahomed Riasat Ali v. Hasin Banu (3). No doubt it is arguable that Article 123 could not apply on the particular facts of that case. But the view there taken seems to be based on proper force being given to the word 'distributive' in this Article 123. We are practically asked by the appellants' Pleader to construe Article 123 as if that word had no force and the Article was meant to cover the case of any claim for a share of the property of an intestate.

BIS RAM v. KEWAL RAM.

This word 'distributive' has always been in this Article, since its enactment in Act IX of 1871, where the Article further inserted the word 'moveable' before the word 'property'. I think the latter fact explains how the word 'distributive' came to be in this particular Article. The word 'distribution' has, under English law, a very particular meaning. In the case of real or immoveable property the term 'descent' was applied to the division of the property among those legally entitled to it, whereas the term 'distribution' was applied to the division of the personal estate of an intestate. And it is also part of the English law that, whereas the title to real estate vests at once in the heirs of the deceased owner, the legal title to his personal property vests in the executor or administrator and is transferred to the persons beneficially interested by the distribution. It has, therefore, a peculiar meaning of distribution of an estate which has vested in an executor or administrator and in several cases the Article has been so construed as limited to such a case. There are strong reasons for that view, and I do not think the Privy Council judgment relied upon gives any sufficient basis for our differing from it.

Petition under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, for revision of the decree of the Judge, Cantonment Small Cause Court, Kasauli, dated the 20th February 1920.

Lala Amar Nath Bhatia, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Des Raj Sawhney, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff sued for recovery of money due on a balance. The Judge of the Small Cause Court held that the defendant had signed the balance sued upon. He further held that the whole account with the plaintiff had been settled by a payment made by the defendant's brother. The Judge stated : "I believe this and it was more than a full settlement too, but unfortunately the law does not make any allowance for fools who sign documents they don't understand, and since defendant on 29th December 1913 signed that he separately owed this money-lender Rs. 316, I am forced to give plaintiff a decree. Plaintiff, in my opinion, has behaved disgracefully by intimidation forcing defendants to sign documents." In spite of this finding, the Judge gave the plaintiff a decree. The defendant has put in an application for revision against this decree.

It is clear that the Judge of the Small Cause Court was labouring under a misapprehension as to the legal effect of the mere signing of documents. Such signatures can be in no way binding when it is found that they were caused by the intimidation of the plaintiff and that the amount acknowledged had been paid off.

I, therefore, accept this petition for revision and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs in all the Courts.

Petition accepted.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, rr. 90, 93—Sale in execution of decree—Payment to decree-holder—Security-bond—Sale set aside and refund ordered—Interest, whether should be allowed.

Where part of the purchase-money upon a sale in execution has been paid out to the decree-holder under a security bond, and the sale is subsequently set aside, the Court has power, under Order XXI, rule 93 of the Civil Procedure Code, to order that interest be paid for the period during which the decree-holder has had the use of the money, even though the security bond does not provide for interest. [p. 783, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decree of the Patna High Court, dated the 4th January 1917, affirming an order of the District Judge, Purnea.

FACTS.—The only question in this appeal was, whether the respondent was entitled to interest and if so against whom?

A Zemindar, who had already sold his Zemindari, obtained a decree against a patnidar for arrears of rent accrued before the sale. Thereafter, he conveyed his whole estate to trustees, and later died, leaving him surviving a son and widow, the appellants.

The trustees applied to sell the patni tenure and respondent, who was a dar-patnidar, sued for a declaration that the decree was not a rent decree within the Bengal Tenancy Act and the patni, therefore, not liable to sale.

In 1908 the Calcutta High Court in appeal dismissed this suit and held that the patni could be sold. It was then sold on the application of the trustees and bought by respondent for Rs. 61,200 which was paid into Court.

On July 4th, 1909 the trustees and the appellants entered into a security bond in the sum of Rs. 40,708 (the amount due under the decree) to be paid in case an appeal then pending in the Privy Council was successful. The bond did not provide for interest. The Rs. 40,708 was thereafter paid out to the first appellant's Pleader.

In 1914 the Privy Council reversed the decree of the Calcutta High Court—vide Arthur Henry Forbes v. Maharaj Bahadur Singh (1).

Meanwhile, in 1908, applications were made by respondent to set aside the sale under sections 311 and 313 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882; the sale was set aside by the District Judge on February 19th, 1911, and his decision was affirmed by the Calcutta High Court in 1914.

On May 27th, 1915, respondent applied for the refund of his money with interest: the appellants and trustees denied their liability to pay interest, but the District Judge allowed it, and an appeal to the Patna High Court was dismissed, the learned Judges (Chapman and Roe, JJ.) holding that the Court had a discretion to allow interest under section 144, even though the bond did not provide for it.

Hence this appeal.

Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and E. B Raikes, for the Appellants.—The order for payment of interest was erroneous. The bond does not provide for it, and there is no statutory authority, contract or equity under which it could be given. Section 144 of the new Code does not apply: there was here no question of a decree being varied or reversed: the only question was whether the sale should stand. The High Court did not rely on Order XXI, rule 93: if they had, a point of limitation would have arisen: the sale was set aside in 1911, but the application for restitution was not made till 1915, and any application under Order XXI, rule 93 was then barred by Article 181 of Schedule I of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908. The appeal to the High Court did not suspend the Statute. Hukum Chand Boid Juscurn Boid v. Pirthichand Lal (2).

Messrs. De Gruyther, K. C. and O'Gorman for the Respondent.—The Court had the power to allow interest under section 144, which corresponds to section 583 of the Code of 1882. These sections merely give effect to the general power of the Court to allow interest when making restitution, laid down in Rodger v. Comptoir d' Escompte de Paris (3).

Although the High Court mention section 144 of the Civil Procedure Code, there was also power to make the order allowing interest under Order XXI, rule 93. The question of limitation was not raised in the lower Courts: it is too late to raise it now.

[VISCOUNT CAVE.—The trustees had the use of the money, but if the whole estate goes to the original decree-holder's creditors what benefit do the appellants get? Why should they be made to pay interest?]

The decree appealed from imposes liability on them merely as representing the estates. We do not suggest we are entitled to interest from them personally.

Mr. Dunne, K. C., replied.

JUDGMENT.

VISCOUNT CAVE.—In their Lordships' opinion there is no ground for this appeal. Proceedings to set aside the sale were taken both under section 311 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, corresponding with Order XXI, rule 90, of the rules scheduled to the Civil Procedure Code of 1908, and under section 313 of the Code of 1882, corresponding with rule 91 of the same Order. The sale was duly set aside; and accordingly Order XXI, rule 93 applied and the Court had power to order interest to be paid on the sum of Rs. 40,708 paid to the trustees. This being so, it is unnecessary to consider whether, as the High Court appears to have held, section 144 of the Code of 1908 also applied. It is true that the bond did not reserve interest, but the effect of this omission was, not that the Court was deprived of its power to order interest to be paid, but only that the security did not extend to interest. It is common ground that the order, so far as it directs the payment of interest, is not intended to be enforced against the appellant personally, but only binds the estate in the hands of the trustees in which the appellant is interested.

An attempt was made to raise a question of limitation, but this question was not raised in the Courts below or in the appellant's case on this appeal, nor are the facts upon which it depends fully before the Board. This plea, therefore, cannot be raised at this stage.

Second appeal from the decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge, A. P., at Satara, in Appeal No. 363 of 1918, reversing the decree passed by the Second Class Subordinate Judge at Islampur, in Civil Suit No. 120 of 1918.

Mr Nilkant Atmaram, for the Appellant.

Mr. J. R. Gharpure, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff filed this suit to recover possession of the suit property, alleging that it originally belonged to his father, Krishna, who had secured it under a gift-deed from his maternal grandfather, Rama. Krishna died in 1907 leaving a widow, Chandra, who disposed of the property in question to the first defendant at the time when she was a minor. The second defendant is the father of Krishna who is joined as a co-defendant for some reason which is not very apparent. He claimed that Krishna died joint with him and, therefore, the adoption by Chandra was not valid. The first Court found that Krishna died separate from his father, the second defendant, but on grounds which do not appeal to us as being correct. The presumption is that Krishna was joint with his father. There is nothing to show that he ever became separate. Admittedly, there was some property belonging to the second defendant though its value may have been very small. The Trial Judge came to the conclusion that, because Krishna lived at Khed where his grandfather lived and not where his own father lived, he had relinquished his right to any share of his father's property. However that may be, that would not amount in law to a separation. I think the learned Appellate Judge was right in holding that Krishna and his father died joint, although no doubt the property which was gifted to Krishna was his self acquired property. Then, the ordinary rule of Hindu Law must apply, that the widow of a co parcener cannot adopt unless she has either the express authority of her husband or the consent of her husband's co-coreeners. An adoption cannot be partly valid and partly invalid, so that the person adopted, although excluded from becoming a member of the joint family, may still be entitled to inherit the self-acquired property of his adoptive father. In this case it seems obvious that the widow adopted the plaintiff in 1915 in order that he might make a claim to the property which had been alienated by her at the time she was a minor. She took, when her husband died, a life-interest in her husband's self-acquired property. No doubt, to that extent her alienation will be good, unless she is able to upset it on the ground that she was not competent to alienate at the time. But it is quite clear that the plaintiff cannot set aside the alienation on the ground that he is an adopted son. The judgment of the lower Court, therefore, must be upheld and the appeal dismissed with costs.

Appeal from the order of the District Judge, Cawnpore, dated the 21st of February 1920.

Messrs. B. E. O'Conor, and Durga Prasad, for the Appellant

Mr. Gulzari Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal and the connected Revision No. 49 of 1920 are brought against an order of the District Judge of Cawnpore, dated the 21st of February 1920.

On the 27th of August 1919 he had stayed a suit upon the ground that the parties had submitted the matter to arbitration in accordance with the terms of the contract between them. In the meanwhile, an arbitrator had been appointed, an award had been made, and a decree passed in pursuance of the award. For some reason or another the present respondents made an application on the 21st of February to remove the stay of the 27th August. The learned Judge obviously felt great difficulty about it and, with considerable reluctance, finally made an order removing the stay which he himself had granted, the effect of which was to revive the suit, although the matter had been disposed of according to law by arbitration. The defendant appeals from that order. In support of the learned Judge's order it is suggested that, in any event, even in a case where the matter in dispute has been referred to arbitration, if a suit has been instituted, it is necessary that there should be a final decree dismissing the suit. If that were the correct view, clearly, the stay would have to be removed before any final decree could be passed. We have come to the conclusion that no final decree is necessary. Without saying that there are no cases in which a stay could possibly be removed, for example, the parties by consent might decide to drop the arbitration and relegate their dispute to the Courts of law; in such a case by the consent of parties, no doubt a stay could be removed, but it is clear that, where the circumstances are the same, as they were in this case, as at the time when the stay was originally imposed, the Judge is functus officio, and cannot reverse his own order.

If the order of the 21st of February had not been made, or if it were now reversed, the original stay order of the 27th of August would remain in force. Ordinarily, a stay is permanent unless the order directing it provides otherwise by imposing some terminus. In the case of Shebabu v. Udit Narain (1), to which we were referred in the course of argument, it was suggested that my brother Piggott had said that the suit in such a case would have to be formally dismissed upon a finding that the matter had been otherwise disposed of. While agreeing with everything which was said in that case, we do not think that it was intended to lay down any definite practice on this particular matter which was not necessary for the decision. We have consulted the learned Judge of the English department, and we have come to the conclusion that a stay order under section 19 of the Arbitration Act, when arbitration has in fact taken place, is sufficient finally to dispose of the suit. The intention of the Legislature was to oust the jurisdiction of the ordinary Courts, and any procedure other than that provided by the Arbitration Act in matters which are referred to arbitration would only create difficulty and confusion. There ought to be no difficulty, so far as the file and records in the lower Court are concerned, in disposing of the suit which has been stayed. We would only further observe that it is satisfactory to note that the dispute arising out of this contract was disposed of by a decree within less than six months from the institution of the suit. The appeal and revision of the defendant against the order of the 21st of February must be allowed with costs and the learned Judge's order set aside. Costs to include fees on the higher scale.

Appeal allowed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sch. II, para. 12 (b), (c)—Arbitration—Award-Court, power of, to correct arithmetical error in award.

The only power a Court has under paragraph 12 (b) and (c) of the Second Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code is either to amend an obvious error in the award which can be amended without affecting the decision, or to rectify a clerical mistake or an error arising from an accidental slip or omission. It has no power to correct an error of calculation or arithmetic and award a sum different from that awarded by the arbitrator. [p 786, col. 2.]

Appeal from an order passed by the First Class Subordinate Judge at Ahmednagar, in Suit No. 824 of 1912.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The matters in dispute in this suit were referred to arbitrators at the request of the parties who agreed to abide by the decision of the arbitrators, who were two in number, on the points on which they agreed, and by the decision of the umpire on point or points on which they differed. The arbitrators agreed on certain points and they filed their award on the 19th of February 1915, and on the points on which they differed the umpire gave his decision on the 9th of August 1918. Both parties filed objections to the arbitrators' award. The Court passed an order on an application made by the parties to amend the award on the ground that there were certain clerical errors made by the arbitrators. The order was: "Notice to arbitrators to rectify the award under rule 12 of the Second Schedule of the Civil Procedure Code, and notice to the plaintiff to show cause why the award should not be amended as proposed by the defendants." On the 28th of July the plaintiffs made an application to the Court pointing out certain clerical errors made by the arbitrators and the Court passed an order forwarding the application to the arbitrators for consideration. The arbitrators considered the objections of the parties, and submitted their opinion regarding the alleged errors on the 31st of August 1915. Notice was then issued to the parties, and an order was passed, after hearing them, appointing two Commissioners to examine the accounts made by the arbitrators with a view to ascertain whether they really involved any arithmetical or clerical error. The Commissioners were directed to examine the accounts and also the parties, if necessary. Thereupon, the Commissioners asked the opinion of the Court on certain points, on which the Court passed the following order: "The Commissioner should confine himself to three items (double entries as stated in the Purshis Exhibit 120 by Mr. Patwardhan). Even if the parties may ask to re-open the whole account, he should not be guided by their views, for the arbitrators' award cannot be challenged except for clerical errors. Mr. Patwardhan has pointed out only three errors and plaintiff has pointed out none." The Commissioner made his report which supported the opinion of the arbitrators. The Court then considered any objections taken by the parties with regard to the three disputed items, apparently the same as those which were referred to the Commissioner by the previous order, and the Court reversed the report of the Commissioner on these three items and directed that the Commissioner already appointed should make calculations in the light of the judgment and find out what amount was really due and by whom to whom. The Commissioner then reported, and eventually a decree was passed in favour of the defendants for Rs. 2,027 10-0.

It appears to us that an absolutely wrong procedure has been followed by the Court from the commencement of these proceedings. The Court professed to act under paragraph 12 of the Second Schedule. All questions of misconduct against the arbitrators had been dropped, and the only suggestions that could be made against the award should have been made under sub-paragraphs (b) and (c) of paragraph 12. But the Court in effect directed the Commissioner to sit in appeal on the award of the arbitrators with regard to the three disputed items, and when the Commissioner supported the decision of the arbitrators, the Court itself sat in appeal on the decision of the Commissioner. But the only powers the Court had under paragraph 12 (b) and (c) were either to amend an obvious error which could be amended without affecting the decision, or to rectify a clerical mistake or an error arising from an accidental slip or omission. It cannot be said that the Court has amended an obvious error which could be amended without affecting such decision, because the decree of the Court was entirely different from the award of the arbitrators. Nor can it be said that the Court has rectified a clerical mistake or an error arising from an accidental slip or omission. The Court went into the merits of the dispute as regards those three items and came to a conclusion of its own, with the result that a very distinct alteration was made in the award. When the parties agreed to have their disputes decided by their arbitrators, they agreed to accept the decision of the arbitrators whether it might be right or wrong, and the Court can only alter the award within the limits laid down by the Second Schedule. There is a recent decision—Shyam Lal v. Parshottam Dass (1)—where it was decided that, "it is not a ground for remitting an award on matter referred to arbitration or for setting aside an award that the arbitrator has made a mistake in arithmetic, and apparently unintentionally has awarded a larger sum of money to be paid by one party to the other than he would have awarded if his attention had been directed to the mistake." This is a stronger case, because the arbitrators' attention was directly drawn to the objections made to their award and they finally decided what their award should be after hearing those objections. In my opinion, therefore the procedure followed by the Trial Court was wrong.

The decree must be set aside and a decree must be passed in terms of the award.

The appellants must have their costs of this appeal.

FAWCETT, J.—I entirely concur. The procedure adopted by the Subordinate Judge in this case is clearly unwarranted by the provisions of the Second Schedule of the SHAHZADI BEGAM v. MUHAMMAD IBRAHIM.

Code of Civil Procedure and he has practically arrogated to himself appellate or revisional jurisdiction which is not conferred upon him. Even if the Subordinate Judge considered he had an inherent power to alter the award for the ends of justice under section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code, this action is against the ruling of this Court in Jethabhai v. Chapsey (2). In that case it was held that where, according to well-established principles, certain questions have been removed from the jurisdiction of the Court, they cannot be brought within the jurisdiction on the plea that the Court has inherent power to do what justice requires for the parties before it.

There is only one other thing I would add. The Subordinate Judge, in paragraph 40 of his judgment, describes these errors as "errors of calculation or omission to take into consideration in calculation or of kindred nature and nothing more"; that is to say, they were arithmetical mistakes. But it is to be noted that under clause (c) of paragraph 12 of the Second Schedule the Court can only correct an award where it contains a clerical mistake, whereas in section 152 of the Code clerical or arithmetical mistakes are mentioned as apparently two separate classes of mistakes. It would be difficult, therefore, to say that the word 'clerical' in clause (c) covers the word 'arithmetical.'

Decree set aside.

Compromise—Parties agreeing to abide by decision of Court—Decision, whether can be questioned as incorrect—Appeal, whether lies.

Where parties to a suit effect a compromise in respect of some of the suit property, and as regards the rest agree to be bound by the decision of the Court to be arrived at after considering certain documentary evidence to be placed before it, it is not open to either of the parties to question the correctness of the Court's decision by appeal. [p. 788, col. 1.]

First appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Cawnpore, dated the 14th September 1917.

Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, for the Appellant.

Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by Musammat Shahzadi Begam for recovery of her legal share in the estate of her deceased father, Baqar Ali. The defendants to the suit were her brother, Muhammad Ibrahim, and her sisters, or legal representatives. The suit was mainly defended by the brother who alleged that part of the property claimed was wakf property; that part was property which exclusively belonged to him, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to obtain any share in the wakf property. A document was produced alleged to have been executed by one Wilayat Ali, who was the ancestor of Baqar Ali, and under which certain property was declared to be wakf. In the course of the trial the parties came to terms and a compromise was filed on the 13th of September 1917. This compromise is printed at page 27 of the paper book. The compromise dealt with all the property in dispute which consisted of house property, shops, some Government securities and money deposited in a Bank and other property of a similar description. As to part of the property which was claimed to be wakf the compromise provided as follows:—"With regard to the remaining properties which defendant No. 1 says in his written statement to be wakf properties, the Court may find with reference to the documentary evidence produced by the parties in this case whether they are wakf properties or not and the parties will be bound by such a finding." The Court, in accordance with the terms of this compromise, came to a finding as to whether some of the property was wakf property or not and accordingly directed a preliminary decree for partition to be prepared. It is against the finding of the Court below as regards some properties claimed by one party to be part of the estate of Baqar Ali and by the other as wakf property that the present appeal has been preferred. A preliminary objection has been taken to the hearing of the appeal on the ground that, under the terms of the compromise as quoted above, the parties undertook to be bound by the finding of the Court and that, consequently, it is not open to the appellant to question the correctness of that finding. In our opinion the objection is well founded. As we have stated above, the parties under the compromise came to an understanding as to all various items of property claimed in the suit. They made arrangements in regard to all the property with the exception of certain properties referred to in the passage which we have quoted above and they agreed that, on the basis of the documentary evidence alone, the Courts should come to a finding and such finding would be binding on the parties. The words which we have italicised above would be meaningless unless we hold that by those words the parties agreed to accept the finding as a correct finding and not to appeal against it. There was a clear implication in the agreement not to appeal against the finding but to be bound by it whatever it might be. As all the terms of the compromise were agreed upon in view of this condition also, the plaintiff, in our opinion, is estopped from disputing the correctness of the finding. We think that this case is similar to the case of Bahir Das Chakravarti v. Nobin Chunder Pal (1). In our opinion, it is not open to the plaintiff to dispute the correctness of the Court's finding and this appeal must fail. We accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs including fees on the higher scale.

Appeal dismissed.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 3rd Court, Hoogbly, dated the 25th of June 1917, affirming that of the Munsif, Amta, dated the 22nd of March 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Jatindranath Sen, for the Appellant :—The defendant is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit for ejectment. Both Courts have decreed the suit. The point of law is that, as between the plaintiff and the defendant, there is an outstanding lease and so long as it lasts there can be no ejectment. The lower Appellate Court found that there was a surrender but that I submit would be of no effect as it was not registered. The land is a homstead land. There was no issue raised as to my status. The whole suit was tried on the basis that the case was governed by the Transfer of Property Act. The land in dispute which was held by lakheraj right was mortgaged in 1292 B. S. to one Kedar Roy, who is plaintiffs' vendor. On 1st Asar 1295 Kedar in execution of the decree purchased the property. On the 16th Asar my client's husband took lease for 1306-12 from Kedar. On 6th Kartic 1312

Kedar mortgaged the property to Prafulla and others. On the 24th Kartic 1312 Kedar granted lease to mortgagees from 1312 20 for Rs. 300. Sometime after Kedar by paying off his share obtained release of his share of the mortgage. In 1319 Kedar sold the same. In 1319 Prafulla executed an istafa in plaintiff's favour. As Prafulla and others were holding under the registered lease it cannot be surrendered by an unregistered instrument under the law. Refers to Sarat Chandra Sinha v. Nritya Gopal (1). Secondly, the notice to quit was bad in law, the tenancy being one from year to year. Thirdly, the forfeiture has been waived by the notice to quit. The tenancy, I submit, should have been held to be governed by the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The surrender of a registered lease is to be made by registered instrument. Refers to Abdullah Khan v. Basharat Hussain (2); section 92 of the Indian Evidence Act. There must be some act of giving up possession. The defendant was all along in possession and paid rents to the intermediate holder who verbally professed to give up possession by surrender. He was not in possession. Refers to Sarat Chandra Sinha v. Nritya Gopal (1). The cases in Bengal Coal Company Limited v. Monoranjan Bagchi (3) and Abiul Majid v. Hari Charan Haldar (4) are very different from the present case There the question was whether a valid surrender under the Transfer of Property Act required a written instrument. The question in issue here is very different from that. The person surrendering was not in possession and I was on the land by virtue of the subsisting lease. I was not an attorned tenant of Prafulla. The tenancy cannot be determined by a 15 days' notice even though I hold over under the terms of the previous lease. Refers to Baijnath Prosad v. Raghunath Rai (5). The case in Troilokya Nath Roy v. Sarat Chandra Banerjee (6) is distinguishable. Refers to Durgi Nikarini v. Goberdhan Bose (7) and Lalit Mohan Ghose v. Gopal Chauk Coal Company Limited (8).

Dr. Dwarkanath Mitter (with him Babu Satindranath Mukerjee), for the Respondent:—It is not necessary that in all cases where the lease is by a registered instrument the surrender must be by a registered instrument also. The case is governed by section 111 (f) of the Transfer of Property Act. The Act contemplates the acts and conduct of the parties. It nowhere suggests that surrender cannot but be by a deed. Reads section 92, Indian Evidence Act. Refers to Subramanian Chettiar v. Arunachalam Chettiar (9), Imambandi Begam v. Ramleswari Pershad (10), Ram Awatar v. Tulsi Prosad Singh (11). The finding of the first Court is clear and it was found that the intention to surrender was actually carried into effect. Refers to Troilokya Nath Roy v. Sarat Chandra Banerjee (6), Sarat Chundra Dutta v. Jadab Chundra Goswami (12). There is also the clear finding of forfeiture. Notice is, therefore, not necessary. Refers to Megh Lal Pandey v. Raj Kumar Thakur (13). The mere fact that a notice was given does not constitute waiver. Farther, this question was not raised below.

Babu Jatindranath Sen, replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—The first contention raised in this appeal is that the oral surrender is invalid because the original tenancy was created by a registered lease. But it is found that the tenant gave up his lease-hold right and that it was accepted and acted upon by the landlord. The tenant has raised no objection. In the circumstances, we do not think that the surrender was invalid.

The next contention is that the tenancy was a yearly tenancy because a yearly rent was paid and that, therefore, the defendant was entitled to six months' notice to quit.

But the fact of an annual rent being reserved, though it may raise a presumption, is not conclusive to show that it was a yearly tenancy and, secondly, the lease having come into existence after the Transfer of Property Act, there could not be a tenancy reserving a yearly rent having regard to the provisions of section 107, without a registered instrument. The lease was not for agricultural or manufacturing purposes. It must, therefore, be deemed to be a tenancy from month to month. Notice to quit given in the case, therefore, was sufficient.

The appeal must accordingly be dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

FAWCETT, J.—The plaintiffs-appellants obtained an award decree on the 5th September 1895 against defendants-respondents. By the terms of that decree, the defendants had to pay off the decretal sum by instalments of Rs. 400. It further provided that, should any one of the instalments remain unpaid, then the whole amount should be payable at once together with interest, and that if this was not paid the plaintiff was to recover the amount by sale of the whole of the immoveable and moveable estate mentioned in the plaint. The defendants were meanwhile debarred from alienating in any way the estate given in mortgage. This decree, as has been held by both the lower Courts, was made absolute in 1898. In 1914, the plaintiffs made an application for its execution. The defendants took the objection that the application was time-barred under section 48 of the Civil Procedure Code, by reason of its having been presented more than twelve years after 1898 when the decree was made absolute. This contention has been upheld by the two lower Courts. In this appeal the learned Pleader for the appellants has not contested the view that the decree was made absolute in 1898, but contends that the lower Courts erred in holding the application to be time-barred under section 48, Civil Procedure Code. This contention is based on the argument that the repeal of the former Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) did not affect the right of the plaintiffs to execute their decree in accordance with the law contained in section 230 of that Code, i. e., without the restriction of twelve years' limitation from the date of decree which applies to it under section 48 of the Code of 1908. In support of this, reliance is placed on the decision of the Allahabad High Court in Konsilla v. Ishri Singh (1). In that case it was held that the right to enforce execution of decree being a substantive right and not a mere matter of procedure, section 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, will not have the effect of barring execution of decrees which were passed prior to the enactment of that Code and were, having regard to the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882 and to the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, alive at the time of its coming into force. The judgment refers to the terms of section 6 of the General Clauses Act, X of 1897, which enacts, inter alia, that unless a different intention appears in the repealing Act, the repeal shall not affect any right, privilege, obligation or liability acquired, accrued or incurred under the enactment repealed, or affect any remedy in respect of any such right. In the case of a mortgage-decree passed before Act V of 1908 came into force, this decree-holder had a substantive right to enforce it till the end of time if he prosecuted his right with legal diligence, and section 48 of the new Code should not be construed to have a retrospective operation affecting that right, unless such a construction appears very clearly in the terms of the Code or arises by necessary and distinct implication. On the other hand, the respondents' Pleader cites Bisseshur Sanamot v. Jasoda Lal Chowdhry (2), where Konsilla v. Ishri Singh (1) was dissented from, and section 48 of the new Code of 1908 was held to govern an application for the execution of a mortgage-decree, even though obtained before that Code came into force. Jenkins, C. J., in the judgment in that case refers to section 154 of the new Code as clearly contemplating a retrospective effect of the Code and an interference with rights acquired under the old Code. He also refers to section 1, clause (2), of the new Code as affording ample opportunity to all persons having rights under the old Code to enforce them before the new Code came into operation. It was accordingly held that, 'a different intention", within the meaning of section 6 of Act X of 1897, did appear in the Code and that an application for execution coming under the Code of 1908 could not be made in disregard of the express conditions of that Code contained in section 48. We have, therefore, to decide which of these two opposing views we should follow.

Now, the provision in section 48, Civil Procedure Code, which is under consideration, is one of limitation. It might, for instance, have been inserted in Article 179 of the Indian Limitation Act, XV of 1877, corresponding to Article 182 of the present Limitation Act except that in form it is a limitation not of an application, but of the right to get a decree executed. Should, then, the general rule that no one has any vested interest in the course of procedure and that a legislative enactment presumably has a retrospective effect when it merely regulates practice and procedure, be applied in such a case? In Reg. v. Dorabji Balabhai (3) it was laid down that, "an Act of Limitation' being a law of procedure, governs all proceedings to which its terms are applicable from the moment of its enactment, except so far as its operation is expressly excluded or postponed". But in Khusalbhai v. Kabhai (4) it was said (page 29) that the proposition was somewhat too broadly stated in that case, and that, "this general rule must admit of the qualification that, when the retrospective application of a Statute of Limitation would destroy vested rights, or inflict such hardship or injustice as could not have been within the contemplation of the Legislature, then the Statute is not, any more than any other law, to be construed retrospectively". In support of that view a reference was made to Delhi and London Bank, Limited v. Orchard (5), in which the Privy Council decided against the literal construction of section 21 of Act XIV of 1859 as giving the Act an operation which would retrospectively deprive the creditor of a right that he had under the previous law, and being contrary to the intention of the Legislature. Similarly, in Gajanan Vinayak v. Waman Shamrao (6), Beaman, J. expresses a doubt "whether it is strictly accurate to say that the law of limitation is always a law of procedure, that is to say, a purely adjective law, for, amongst its other consequences, it certainly has the creation of rights by prescription and if those rights have vested in individuals under one law of limitation" it cannot be "seriously argued that they can be divested by the introduction of a new law of limitation." On the other hand, in Gurupadapa Basapa v. Virbhadrapa Irsangapa (7) it was held that the law of limitation applicable to proceedings in execution is not the law under which the suit was instituted, but the law in force at the date of the application for execution in the absence of a legislative provision to the contrary. West, J., in the judgment of the court, says: "Acts of limitation, like other laws relating to procedure, apply immediately to all steps taken after they have come into force, except when some provision is made to the contrary. The reason of this is that every one seeking the aid of a Court seeks it on the terms from time to time imposed by the Legislature. He has not the privilege of making any application he likes in any way and at any time he likes. Other interests than his are at stake, and the Courts are not to exercise their coercive power at his request over another person, except under such regulations as shall make their action compatible with the general welfare. They, accordingly, are commanded to act only in defined ways on applications which satisfy specified conditions". This decision was followed in Shib Shankar Lal v. Soni Ram (8) where it was said (at page 43*) : "The law of limitation applicable to a suit or proceeding is the law in force at the date of the institution of the suit or proceeding unless there is a distinct provision to the contrary". And this statement of the law was approved by the Privy Council on appeal in Soni Ram v. Kanhaiya Lal (9). The question whether this decision of the Privy Council affected the ruling of the Calcutta High Court, in Manjuri Bibi v. Akel Mahmud (10) was considered in Gopeshwar Pal v. Jiban Chandra (11). The decision of the Full Bench in the latter case was that a special rule of limitation extended to under-raiyats by an amendment in 1908 of the 3rd Article of Schedule III of the Bengal Tenancy Act did not apply where the dispossession was in 1898 and the suit for recovery of possession was instituted on the 25th August 1908. Prior to that amendment, the Article in question applied only to occupancy raiyats. The Full Bench held that the Privy Council judgment in Soni Ram's case (9) did not affect the decision in Manjuri Bibi v. Akkel Mahmud (10) in regard to cases where the application of the amended law makes it impossible to exercise a vested right of suit. In the judgment the Court says that they could only construe the amendment as not applying to cases where its provisions could not be obeyed and that, "there are thus two positions, where in accordance with its provisions a suit could be brought after the passing of the amendment, it may be that the amendment would apply, but where it could not, then the amendment would have no application". If this test of possibility of compliance be applied to the present case, then, I think, section 48 must be held to have a retrospective effect upon the plaintiffs' decree. For, the twelve years laid down by section 48 did not expire till 1910, and the plaintiffs had, therefore, about two years from the passing of the new Code for taking steps to get their decree executed by sale of the immoveable property. And even if the twelve years had expired prior to the 1st January 1909 when the Code came into force, they had the opportunity of taking steps to get the decree executed under the old law, between the date of the passing of the Code—21st March 1908—and its coming into force.

Apart from the above considerations, there are, in my opinion, strong reasons for holding that section 48 was intended to have immediate retrospective effect. In all the three prior Codes, the provisions governing the execution of decree and fixing time limits to applications for execution contained a special provision under which, notwithstanding anything contained in them, an application for execution could be made in accordance with the law previously in force for a period of three years from the passing of the Code. Thus, section 21 of Act XIV of 1859 provided that, "nothing in the preceding section (which lays down what may be called the three years rule as to an application for execution being made within three years of a prior application) shall apply to any judgment, decree or order in force at the time of passing of this Act, but process of execution may be issued, either within the time now limited by law for issuing process of execution thereon, or within three years next after the passing of this Act, whichever shall first expire." It was this section which was construed in Delhi and London Bank, Limited v. Orchard (5) as meaning that, notwithstanding anything in section 20, process of execution might issue either within the time allowed by the law in force when the Act was passed, or within three years next after the passing of the Act, whichever should first expire. When the Code of 1877 was enacted, the three years rule already mentioned was relegated to Article 179 of the Indian Limitation Act (XV of 1877), which came into force on the same date as the Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), and in section 230 of the Code what may be called the twelve years' rule now contained in section 48 was enacted. The last paragraph of section 230 provides: "Notwithstanding anything herein contained, proceedings may be taken to enforce any decree within three years after the passing of this Code, unless when the period prescribed for taking such proceedings by the law in force immediately before the passing of this Code shall have expired before the completion of the said three years". This gave a suspensory period of three years within which a decree, which would otherwise be dead under the twelve years' rule might be executed. In section 230 of the Code of 1882 the twelve years' rule was re-enacted, and the last paragraph of this section contains a provision in precisely the same words as that contained in the last paragraph of section 230 of the previous Code. But section 48 of the present Code contains no corresponding provision, although the provision contained in the previous Codes saving the case of the judgment-debtor by fraud or force preventing the execution of the decree within the period of twelve years, is re-produced with a slight change of language. This, to my mind, clearly shows that the Legislature did intend this section to have a restrospective effect in regard to decrees passed prior to the coming into force of the new Code. It is a case where the intention of the Legislature in this respect may legitimately be gathered from the history of the legislation on the subject: cf. Behari Lal v. Muhammad Muttaki (12) and Administrator-General of Bengal v. Prem Lall Mullick (13). It is not a case where this aid to construction is illegitimate under the observations of Lord Herschell in Bank of England v. Vagliano (14), which were repeated with the approval of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Norendra Nath Sarcar v. Kamalbasini Dasi (15), for we are concerned with the history of the enactment, not for the purpose of departing from its ordinary meaning but for deciding the question whether the Legislature intended the enactment to have retrospective effect. Again, as pointed out in Bisseshur Sanamat v. Jasoda Lal Chowdhry (2) section 154 provides an indication that the new Code contemplated a retrospective effect and interference with rights acquired under the old Code. Sub-section (2), section 89, may also be referred to as a similar indication.

Furthermore, it is, in my opinion, open to considerable question whether the plaintiffs can be said to have had a vested right to get the mortgage-decree executed without the restrictive twelve years' rule contained in section 230 of the Code of 1882. That section, like the corresponding section of the Code of 1877, applies the twelve years' rule to a decree "for the payment of money or delivery of other property". It was held by the Allahabad and Calcutta High Courts that a mortgage-decree did not come under this category: Ram Charan Bhagat v. Sheobaratrai (16) and Fazil Howladar v. Krishna Bundhoo Roy (17). But a different view was taken by the Madras High Court: Abdulla Sahib v. Doctor Oosman Sahib (18). I have not been able to find any reported rulings of the Bombay High Court upon this question, and though, to the best of my belief, the Calcutta view was the one generally adopted, the question was apparently an undecided one. If so, the plaintiffs can scarcely be said to have had a vested right of the kind alleged. In any case, the Legislature in section 48 of the new Code has plainly given effect to the view that a mortgage decree is a decree for the payment of money and has included such decrees in the terms of that section. The amendment of the law is thus little more than declaratory. As stated in Hardcastle on Statutory Law, 3rd Edition, page 363: "Where an Act is in its nature declaratory, the presumption against construing it retrospectively is inapplicable. Acts of this kind, like judgments, decide like cases pending when the judgments are given, but do not re open decided cases". See also Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes, 3rd Edition, page 309. This, in my opinion, affords another reason for holding that section 48 in this respect has a retrospective effect. I think, therefore, we should follow the Calcutta ruling in preference to the Allahabad one. I am of opinion, that the appellants' contention fails and would dismiss the appeal with costs.

MACLEOD, C. J.—I agree. It would have been better if the attention of holders of mortgage-decrees had been drawn to the alteration made by section 48 of the Code of 1908, so that they might have been able to realize that no fresh application for execution could be entertained after the expiry of twelve years from the date of their decrees.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 110, O XLV, r. 4—Privy Council appeal—Connected suits—Value in one below Rs. 10,000—Certificate, whether should be granted.

Where in two connected suits the points raised are identical and the valuation of the subject-matter in one exceeds Rs. 10,000 and in the other is less than that amount, and the former is certified as a fit one for appeal to the Privy Council, the latter should also be similarly certified.

Application under Order XLV, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code.

The Hon'ble Mr. N. P. Asthana, for the Applicant.

Messrs. Gulzari Lal, P. L. Banerjee and U. S. Bajpai, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The valuation of this suit is below Rs. 6,000 and so is the valuation of the appeal to His Majesty in Council, but this Court has set aside the decree of the lower Court. There was another suit on hundis in which the same question was raised between these very parties, namely, Privy Council Appeal No. 9 of 1920. It is true that in the lower Court this suit was decided by a separate judgment but in the appeal in this Court the evidence in the two suits was considered as a whole at the request of the parties who are the same and this Court came to a decision on the whole of the evidence in favour of the respondent. In the connected suit we have already given leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. It is contended that no permission to appeal should be given because there is no question of law involved and the value is below Rs. 10,000 and that Order XLV rule 4 of the Code of Civil Procedure is not applicable. We do not agree with the last contention.

An appeal is, after all, a proceeding in continuation of a suit. The value of the two suits in the Court of first instance as also of the proposed appeal to the Privy Council is above Rs. 10,000 and this Court has reversed the decree of the Court of first instance. The points raised in the two cases are identical, and we think that this is a proper case to which the procedure sanctioned by Order XLV, rule 4, should be applied and the parties given an opportunity of having one decision from the highest Court of Appeal. We, therefore, certify that this case fulfills the requirements of section 110 of the Code of Civil Procedure (read with Order XLV, rule 4) as regards the nature and value of the subject matter of the suit.

Leave granted.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 22 (4)—Appeal rejected as insufficiently stamped—Cross-objections, whether can be heard.

An insufficiently stamped memorandum of appeal is of no validity at all and the rejection of such a memorandum is not a dismissal in default within the meaning of Order XLI, rule 22, (4) of the Civil Procedure Code Unless and until an appeal is properly filed in Court there can be no cross-objections, and if an insufficiently stamped memorandum of appeal is rejected because it is insufficiently stamped, no cross-objections can be entertained or heard.

Petition for revision of the order of the District Judge, Lahore, dated the 18th October 1919, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Lahore, dated the 11th April 1919.

Mr. B. D. Qureshi, for the Petitioner.

Lala Dharm Chand, for the Respondent

JUDGMENT.—The facts are given in the order of Major Nicholas, District Judge, of which revision is sought. Lajpat Rai's appeals having been dismissed because they were insufficiently stamped and because he failed to make up the stamp-duty as ordered by the Court, the question is whether the cross-objections of Lachhman Das, respondent, can be heard. The District Judge has held that they should be heard and he remanded the case to the Subordinate Judge for decision thereof. It is contended by Mr. Qureshi on behalf of the petitioner, firstly, that because the decree was in accordance with the award of arbitrators, no appeal lay and therefore, there can be no cross objections; secondly, that as no appeal was legally filed, no cross-objections lay; and thirdly, the cross-objections were insufficiently stamped. The second objection appears to me to have force. There was no valid appeal before the District Judge until it was properly stamped in accordance with the provisions of the Court Fees Act. Section 28 of the Act says: "No document which ought to bear a stamp under this Act shall be of any validity, unless and until it is properly stamped."

The insufficiently stamped memorandum of appeal put in by Lajpat Rai was, therefore, of no validity at all. Unless and until an appeal was properly filed in Court, there could be no cross objections, and if an insufficiently stamped memorandum of appeal is rejected because it is insufficiently stamped, I do not see how the cross-objections can be heard. Lala Dharam Chand, Vakil for the respondent, refers to Order XLI, rule 22 (4), Civil Procedure Code, which lays down that where, in any case in which any respondent has under this rule filed a memorandum of objection, the original appeal is withdrawn or is dismissed for default the objection so filed may, nevertheless, be heard and determined after such notice to the other parties as the Court thinks fit. He urges that Lajpat Rai's appeals were dismissed for default but, in my opinion, the rejection of an insufficiently stamped memorandum of appeal is not a dismissal for default within the meaning of this section. He cited Sheobaksh Singh v. Thakur Dayal Singh (1). In that case the appellant was ordered to furnish security for costs and on his failure to comply with the order his appeal was rejected and it was held that the rejection amounted to a dismissal for default within the meaning of Order XLI, rule 22 (4), Civil Procedure Code, and that the respondent was entitled to have his cross objections heard and disposed of according to law. That case is clearly distinguishable from the present, because there the appeal was lawfully filed presumably upon a properly stamped memorandum of appeal. I hold that as there was no valid appeal before the Court, the respondent could not ask that his cross-objections should be heard.

I, therefore, allow the revision and set aside the order of the District Judge remanding the case to the Subordinate Judge, Lahore. The parties will bear their own costs of these proceedings.

Revision allowed.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The plaintiff instituted this suit for obtaining specific performance of an agreement to sell the property in suit passed by Janu, the original defendant No. 1, on the 31st of August 1915. Janu died pending the suit. His daughter was substituted in his place as his heir. She admitted the plaintiff's claim, but the 2nd defendant, daughter of Janu's son, contended that at the time of the agreement Janu had become too senile and imbecile to understand the nature of the agreement and that he had bequeathed all his property to her by his Will dated the 25th of June 1911. The Trial Court decided that the 1st defendant, as the heir of Janu, must give the plaintiff a proper conveyance within one month, that the 2nd defendant had no interest in the plaint property and that the consideration to be paid by by the plaintiff should go to the 1st defendant. In appeal this decision was confirmed.

It is not now contended that the agreement to sell should be set aside on the ground that Janu was unable to understand the nature of the agreement. The real question is, what was the effect on the property brought about by the agreement to sell and what is the proper construction of the document executed by Janu on the 25th of June 1911? As regards that document, I think it must be taken as devising specifically to Gangu certain properties including the property in suit and as the document does not contain any residuary bequest, if Janu had disposed of any of the properties mentioned in that document during his lifetime, the sale-proceeds, if they had not been deposited in the house No. 11, would have belonged to the residuary estate and would go to his heir. We have in this case an agreement by a testator to sell a house specifically devised by his Will, and the testator dying before the agreement to sell had been executed. Section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act says that a contract for the sale of immoveable property does not create any interest or charge on such property, but it gives a right to the purchaser to get a conveyance for payment of the purchase money. Under section 27 of the Specific Relief Act such a contract may be enforced by a purchaser against a person entitled to the estate of the deceased. The only question then would be whether the purchaser in this case should claim a conveyance from the heir or from the specific devisee. But for the contract of sale this house would have gone to Gangu absolutely. It appears to me that it goes to her with the obligation to fulfil the contract of the testator and to pass a conveyance of the house to the purchaser on receipt of the purchase-money. The case of Farrar v. Winterton (1) has been cited, but there the decision turned on an important difference between the English and Indian law, viz., that the testatrix, having entered into a contract to sell, parted with her beneficial interest in the land so contracted to be sold. That decision, therefore, cannot apply in this case, as the contract to sell created no interest in the purchaser of the property and the beneficial interest remained with Janu. It might be argued that the contract to sell the property specifically devised amounted to a revocation of the specific devise. But that would only result if the contract had been carried into execution. The entry into the contract may have shown an intention to revoke the legacy, but it would amount to nothing more.

Therefore, in my opinion, the plaintiff is entitled to succeed. The decree of the Trial Court must be amended by stating that the 2nd defendant must give the plaintiff a proper conveyance within one month from the date the papers are returned to the lower Court. The consideration will be paid by the plaintiff to the 2nd defendant.

Plaintiff will deduct all his costs throughout from the purchase-money, and the other parties will bear their own costs.

FAWCETT, J.—It has been ruled by the Privy Council in Maung Shwe Goh v. Maung Inn (2) that section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act prevents the purchaser under an inchoate contract, which remains unperformed, being treated in India as the owner in equity of the estate as he would be treated in England, and, therefore, the case of Farrar v. Winterton (1), relied on by respondent No. 2's Counsel, cannot apply to this case.

I would add also that the principle of redemption of legacies, which is reproduced in section 139 of the Indian Succession Act, would not apply to this case, because that depends upon the property specifically bequeathed having been converted into property of a different kind, and it has been ruled—if authority is necessary on such a point—that a direction to sell not carried out till after the testator's death will not affect a redemption: Harrison v. Asher (3).

I concur, therefore, in the order proposed by the learned Chief Justice.

Decree amended.

JUDGMENT.

KANHAIYA LAL, J.—The question for consideration in this appeal is, whether a certain mortgage-bond executed by Gokla, the father of the defendant-appellant, for Rs. 550 was executed for legal necessity. The Court of first instance found that no legal necessity had been established. The lower Appellate Court, however, came to the conclusion that out of the sum of Rs. 550 secured by the mortgage there was a legal necessity to the extent of Rs. 325 which had been paid to a prior creditor named Raghunandan. In the mortgage bond in suit it is recited that Rs. 325 were left with the mortgagee for payment to Raghunandan on account of four prior usufructuary mortgage-deeds. These mortgage-deeds were produced but not proved. The learned Counsel for the defendant-appellant contends that, if Rs. 325, for which a legal necessity has been found by the Court below to have been established, were paid in satisfaction of those prior usufructuary mortgage-deeds, that payment cannot be taken to be a payment made in satisfaction of an antecedent debt within the meaning of the decision of their Lordships of the Privy YOOSOF OOSMAN BROS. & CO. v. WIN NE YA.

Council in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1) as interpreted in the later decisions of this Court in Brij Narain Rai v. Mangla Prasad (2) and Ram Singh v. Chet Ram (3). It does not appear, however, necessary to go into the question, because none of the mortgage deeds were proved. If the mortgages existed and the family property was saved by the payment of the mortgage money to the prior mortgagee, the family was presumably benefited by the restoration of the family property, which might otherwise have been lost to the enjoyment of the family. If those mortgage bonds did not exist, then the debts must be taken to have been simple debts binding on the defendant-appellant by reason of the pious obligation attaching to him to pay the debts of his father, if not tainted with immorality. There is no allegation in this case that the debts were so tainted. In either event, the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

PIGGOTT, J.—I am certainly not prepared to dissent. My feeling in the matter is that, if we felt compelled to bring this particular case within the purview of the decisions of this Court to which reference has been made, which decisions personally I am prepared to treat as correctly interpreting the view of the law laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1), unless and until the entire question is reconsidered by a Full Bench of this Court, it would be incumbent upon us to direct further enquiry to be made upon such a variety of points that we should be virtually directing a new trial upon issues never definitely fixed in the Courts below. I feel that the necessity for doing this should be avoided in the interests of the parties themselves, if we can do so without committing ourselves to any clearly erroneous proposition of law. Taking a broad view of the equties of the case, I see no reason whatever to doubt that the appellant Lachhmi Narain is making a good bargain for himself, in that he has secured the reduction of his liability under the mortgage in suit to the sum of Rs. 325 which actually went in satisfaction of a debt incurred by his father with another creditor. I concur in the order proposed dismissing this appeal with costs.

BY THE COURT.—We dismiss this appeal with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act of 1908), O. XLI, rr. 20, 33—Appeal, second—Appellate Court, power of, to add respondents, after expiry of limitation.

An Appellate Court has power, in second appeal, to add as respondents to the appeal persons who were parties to the suit in the original Court but were not impleaded as respondents in the lower Appellate Court, although the time within which an appeal might have been preferred as against them has expired. [p. 799, col. 2.]

Mr. Keith, for Respondents Nos. 1 and 2.

Mr. May Oung, for Respondents Nos, 3 and 4.

JUDGMENT.—A promissory-note was executed by one Sein Nyee Ma in favour of the plaintiff-firm for the price of goods supplied. Sein Nyee Ma is now dead and the plaintiffs brought a suit against defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 as his heirs and legal representatives to recover the amount due on the promissory-note. Defendants pleaded ignorance of the note and put plaintiffs to proof of execution. They further pleaded that the note, if executed, was executed on behalf of a partnership in which he was a member. Thereupon, plaintiffs obtained leave to amend their plaint by adding the surviving partners. They deny that the goods were purchased for or on behalf of the partnership. The real question, therefore, in the case was, the note being proved, whether defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 or defendants Nos. 4 and 5 or both were liable to the plaintiffs. The first Court held that the debt was a partnership debt and dismissed the suit as against the heirs and legal representatives. Defendants Nos. 4 and 5 then filed an appeal. The learned Divisional Judge, after pointing out what was the real issue in the case, held that as neither side has appealed against the judgment and decree dismissing the suit against defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 he need not consider whether they were not liable. In this he was clearly wrong; he had power under Order XLI, rule 20, to have made these defendants parties to the appeal and he clearly should have done so. He held that the debt was not a partnership debt and allowed the appeal. An appeal was then filed to this Court by the plaintiffs and their prayer was that the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court be set aside and that of the Trial Court be restored or, in the alternative, that the case be remanded to the lower Appellate Court with directions to make defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 parties and to re hear the appeal and decide which of the two sets of defendants was liable to the plaintiffs. My brother Maung Kin issued notice after hearing the Counsel for the appellants and defendants Nos. 4 and 5 to defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 to show cause why they should not be made parties to this appeal. After hearing them he directed the defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 be made parties (respondents) to this appeal, but he did not write any order recording his reasons for so doing. It is perfectly clear that this Court has power under Order XLI, rule 33, to add them as respondents. There had been under the old Code some difference of opinion between the High Courts as to this power, but it is not necessary to consider the authorities, which are all referred to in my brother Maung Kin's first order, because, in the present Code, a new rule has been added making the matter perfectly clear. That this power exists has been very recently pointed out in the case of Jogesh Chandra v. Sarada Kumar (1) and also in the case of Kidar Singh v. Ganesh (2). This is not contested by the Counsel for the respondents and the question that I have now to decide is which of the parties (respondents) are liable for this debt. The execution of the promissory-note by the deceased is now admitted and it is clear that defendants Nos 1, 2 and 3 would be liable, if it was a partnership debt, to the extent of the share in the partnership which has come to their hands, and if it was a private debt to the extent of the estate that they have received. As to whether it is a partnership debt or not the following facts seem to render the matter perfectly clear: The promissory-note was executed by the deceased in his own name, not in the name of the firm and not on behalf of the firm. It has been proved that when the firm purchased goods of this character they invariably purchased them for cash and not on credit. The evidence, so far as it goes, is to the effect that no such goods were received by the firm and it is further proved that deceased's wife had also a shop in which such goods were sold and the goods not having been received by the firm they were possibly bought for his wife's shop. As against this, there is no evidence whatever and I agree with the learned Divisional Judge in holding that the debt was not a partnership debt. The appeal, therefore, as against defendants Nos. 4 and 5 must stand dismissed.

As regards defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 it is not now denied that they would be liable, but it is urged that the suit as against them having been dismissed by the Trial Court and no appeal having been preferred the decree has become final and that the appeal is barred by limitation. That it is not so is also not seriously contested. The Court has power to add parties as respondents in an appeal though the time within which the appeal might have been preferred as against them has expired. This was held by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Bindeshri Naik v. Ganga Saran Sahu (3).

The same view was taken in Girish Chander Lahiri v. Sasi Sekhareswar Roy (4). There will, therefore, be a decree in favour of the plaintiffs-appellants against defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 as heirs and legal representatives of Sain Nyee Ma for the amount claimed and costs in this and the original Court. The appellants must pay the costs of the defendants Nos. 4 and 5 in this and the lower Court.

Hindu Law—Adoption—Shudra—Widow, unchaste, whether can adopt.

An adoption made by an unchaste shudra widow is not invalid by reason of the widow's unchastity. [p. 800, col. 2.]

In the Bombay Presidency a widow has implied authority to adopt from the date of her husband's death unless it can be shown that the husband had either expressly or impliedly revoked such authority. Therefore, any conduct of the widow after the husband's death cannot affect the authority which she acquired at the time of his death. [p. 800, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Belgaum, in Appeal No. 106 of 1919, confirming that of the Assistant Judge, Belgaum, in Civil Suit No. 410 of 1917.

Mr. D. R. Manerikar, for the Appellant.

Mr. J. G. Rele, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff is the adopted son of Kallappa having been adopted after his death by his widow, Dyamawa. He claims the suit property as the sole heir of Kallappa. The defendants originally were the widow, Dyamawa, the minor daughter, Baswant, the brother of Kallappa and the natural father of Dyamawa. The first two died during the suit and it was alleged that the lands in suit were in the possession of Baswant and the cattle with Shankargowda, the fourth defendant. The defendants disputed the adoption. They also alleged that if the adoption had actually taken place it was invalid, because the widow Dyamawa was pregnant and in a polluted state at the time of the adoption. The Trial Judge found that the adoption had taken place and he also held that the unchastity of the widow did not invalidate the adoption. The defendants relied on the authority of Sayamalal Dutt v. Saudamani Dasi (1) in which an adoption was declared void by reason of the unchastity of the giver, but the ground of that decision was that the widow could not perform the necessary religious ceremonies. The parties in this case are shudras and, therefore, that argument does not apply.

In first appeal the only point argued was, whether or not the plaintiff proved his adoption. The District Judge agreed with the decision of the Trial Court that the adoption had been proved. It was not argued that the adoption having taken place it was invalid on the ground of the widow's unchastity and we are told that as the District Judge threatened the defendants with prosecution for perjury, that legal argument was dropped. However that may be, it has been argued now that the unchastity of the widow invalidated the adoption. Apparently, the argument is that if the husband could have known in his lifetime that his widow would not behave properly after his death, he would have expressly revoked the authority to adopt. But in this Presidency the widow has implied authority to adopt from the date of her husband's death unless it can be shown that her husband had either expressly or impliedly revoked such authority. Therefore, any conduct of the widow after the husband's death cannot affect the authority which she acquired at the time of his death. The facts in the case of Dnyanoba v. Radhabai (2) to which we have been referred, were entirely different. The widow had been deserted by her husband for thirty years on the ground that she had misconducted herself and her husband had taken to himself another wife. It was, therefore, quite open for the Court in that case to come to the conclusion that the husband had revoked expressly any authority his wife would otherwise have to adopt after his death. In my opinion, therefore, the decision of the Court below was right and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Arbitration, reference to—Acquiescence—Award—Jurisdiction, want of, objection as to, whether can be taken.

The parties by an agreement submitted matters in dispute between them to arbitration, but owing to their conduct the arbitrators were unable to proceed. One of the parties then instituted a suit in the Court of the Munsif in respect of certain matters included in the submission, as the Munsif had no jurisdiction to deal with the entire subject-matter of the submission, but the suit was dismissed on the ground that it was not maintainable in view of the agreement to refer to arbitration which still subsisted. On appeal, the dismissal was set aside and the case remanded to the Munsif to take action under paragraph 18 of the Second Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code; the Munsif accordingly stayed the suit, and formally referred the matter to the arbitrators and umpire requesting them to proceed with the arbitration: the parties acquiesced in this decision, appeared before the arbitrators and the matter was fully litigated before this Tribunal: the arbitrators made their award, and an application to make the award a decree of Court was allowed by the Subordinate Judge notwithstanding the objection of the opposite party to the jurisdiction of the arbitration Tribunal to deal with the matter, and an appeal against this order proving unsuccessful, the matter came before the High Court in revision:

Held, that the applicants for revision having accepted the decision of the Munsif, and submitted themselves to the decision of the Arbitration Court, it was not open to them to seek a reversal of the award on the ground of want of jurisdiction. [p. 804, col. 1.]

Civil revision against the order of the District Judge, Saharanpur, dated the 6th May 1919.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Applicants.

Mr. S. A. Haidar, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision by two persons, Sukhnath Rai and Chandu Lal, who may hereafter be conveniently spoken of as the applicants. They were parties to a properly drawn up submission to arbitration, dated the 3rd of November 1915, under which certain matters in dispute between them and the opposite party were referred for decision to two named arbitrators and a named umpire. It seems that violent disputes broke out between the parties shortly afterwards and that a considerable period of time elapsed during which no action was taken by the arbitrators. The question who is to blame, or who is most to blame, for this state of things is not really before us. The applicants finally addressed a letter to the arbitrator and received from him a reply which they have sought to interpret as a withdrawal on his part from the arbitration, or to put it more strictly, a refusal to act any longer as umpire under the submission. Following upon this, the applicants instituted a suit in the Court of the Munsif. It is one of the minor complications in the case that this suit related to a portion only of the matters covered by the submission, so that the suit itself was within the pecuniary jurisdiction of a Munsif, whereas the submission related to subject-matters of greater value in respect of which a suit, if instituted, would have had to be brought in the Court of a Subordinate Judge. In reply to this suit, the opposite party pleaded the submission to arbitration. It then became the duty of the Court to proceed under paragraph 8 of the Second Schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure. It was incumbent upon it to enquire whether the parties were still bound by the submission and it was within its discretion to consider, further, whether, under the circumstances, it would elect to proceed with the trial of the suit in spite of the submission to arbitration. How far the learned Munsif went into these questions is really not a matter which we are called upon to consider at this stage. He undoubtedly fell into one mistake. He overlooked the provisions of paragraph 22 of the Second Schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure and, having come to the conclusion that the parties were still bound by the terms of the submission, held that under section 21 of the Specific Relief Act he had no option but to dismiss the suit. Against this decree the present applicants very properly appealed and the appeal was heard by the Additional Subordinate Judge. That Court contented itself with pointing out the error into which the Munsif had fallen. It set aside the decree dismissing the suit and remanded the case to the Court of the Munsif, with directions that he should take proper action according to law under paragraph 18 aforesaid. On this the learned Munsif passed an order staying the suit. This he undoubtedly had jurisdiction to do and, the matter not having been contested any further in appeal, his order to this extent is undoubtedly binding on the parties, with all that is implied in the passing of such an order. The Munsif went on to take a step the propriety of which is, perhaps, more doubtful. He formally referred the matter to the arbitrators and the umpire, requesting them to proceed with the arbitration. The difficulty about this order is that the submission to arbitration related to other matters besides that in issue in the Court of the Munsif and, as already pointed out, the subject-matter of the submission would have been beyond the jurisdiction of the Munsif's Court in the event of a regular suit having been brought in respect of the same. However, the arbitrators and the umpire proceeded to take action in accordance with the Munsif's direction. The applicants behaved as if they were prepared to acquiesce in the decision of the Munsif, which they certainly made no attempt to contest before any higher Court. They appeared before the arbitrators, litigated their case before this tribunal which had been chosen by the parties themselves and took their chance of a favourable decision. Being now dissatisfied with the award, they have, by means of the application now before us, disclosed the fact that they were all the time keeping in reserve an objection to the jurisdiction of the arbitration Tribunal to deal with the matter at all. Apart from any question of law the equities of the case are clearly against allowing such a course of procedure to prevail.

We may at once note that an application to have the award made a decree of Court was subsequently allowed by the proper Tribunal, namely, by that of the Subordinate Judge, and that an appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge has been dismissed by the proper Appellate Court, the Court of the District Judge. The application in revision before us is against the order of the District Judge refusing to reverse the order of the Subordinate Judge by which the award was directed to be filed.

Two different points have been made before us in support of the application. It is suggested that, in consequence of the correspondence which took place between the arbitrators and the umpire, and the letter written by the umpire the jurisdiction of the arbitration Tribunal had come to an end, because the arbitrator had in effect refused to continue to act. We doubt whether there is much to be said in support of this contention on the terms of the correspondence, but we have really not felt called upon to go into the matter. Directly the present applicants filed their suit in the Munsif's Court it became a matter for judicial enquiry, in the Tribunal chosen by these applicants themselves, whether or not the parties were still bound by the submission to arbitration. It may or may not be the case that in dealing with this matter the learned Munsif in the first instance, the Subordinate Judge in appeal and the learned Munsif again when the case came back to him, failed adequately to appreciate the nature of the objection or to deal with it in a complete and satisfactory manner. In substance, however, the point was determined against these applicants when the Munsif passed his order staying the suit. An order of stay under paragraph 18 of the Second Schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure suspends the trial of the suit, pending proper action by the arbitration Tribunal. It involves, if it does not directly proceed upon, a finding that there is in existence a submission to arbitration still binding upon the parties. This point has, in our opinion, been judicially determined against the applicants and that decision is not now open to our interference in revision.

The other point taken is based upon the wording of paragraphs 17 and 18 of the Second Schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure and purports to rest upon a decision of the Madras High Court in the case of Appavu Rowther v. Seeni Rowther (1), which decision, again, is founded upon an English case therein referred to and upon a decision of this Court in Sheo Babu v. Udit Narain (2). The objection may fairly be stated as follows: For the sake of simplicity let us suppose that A. and B. are parties to a submission to arbitration. After a certain interval of time B. has become dissatisfied with the submission and believes, rightly or wrongly, that he is no longer bound by its terms, or, at any rate, desires that the matter should be taken out of the hands of the arbitration Tribunal and litigated in the ordinary course. On the other hand, A. desires that the arbitration should proceed in accordance with the submission. Paragraphs 17 and 18 of the Second Schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure provide alternative remedies to meet the case of A. and that of B. It is open to A. to come before any competent Court with an application under paragraph 17 to obtain an adjudication from that Court whether or not, in the interests of justice, the submission to arbitration should now be enforced. On the other hand, it is open to B. to bring the same question to an issue by instituting a suit in respect of the whole or any part of the matter covered by the submission to arbitration. On the institution of a suit by B., and on objection being taken by A. the Court is required to satisfy itself that there is no sufficient reason why the matter should not be referred in accordance with the submission. The English case referred to by the learned Judges of the Madras High Court is based upon a provision of the English Statute substantially similar to that of paragraph 18 aforesaid. It is authority for the following proposition of law, as applied to the case we have been stating. From the moment when B's suit has been instituted it is not competent to the arbitrators to proceed to a decision under the terms of the submission. They are bound to wait until the Court in which the suit has been instituted determines whether it will proceed with the suit itself or will stay its proceedings and refer the parties to their own chosen Tribunal, namely, the arbitrators. In an earlier part of this judgment we have assumed that it would be within the discretion of the Court judicially exercised for adequate reasons, to hold that the interests of justice would be better served by its proceeding with the trial of the suit and superseding the arbitration. So far as the Second Schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure goes, this point is perhaps arguable and we ought not to be regarded as being committed to a final decision on this point. It is conceivable, however, that there may be cases in which, by reason of long delay, particularly if that delay is found by the Court to be clearly attributable to the conduct of the party which now desires to enforce the submission, that the Court might elect to proceed with the trial of the suit simply on this ground. Ordinarily, at any rate, the question for determination will simply be whether or not the parties are still bound by the terms of their own submission. The point sought to be raised before us is as to the procedure which ought to be followed when the Court has come to the conclusion that there is no sufficient reason why the matter should not be referred to arbitration in accordance with the submission and has made an order staying the suit for the purpose of allowing the arbitration to proceed. The contention before us is that, in spite of such an order, the arbitration will not be proceeded with unless and until the party desiring it to proceed makes a further application to a competent Court under paragraph 17. Now, one thing is perfectly clear to us, that neither the Madras case nor the cases upon which that decision is founded can be quoted as authority for any such proposition. As a matter of fact, there is an obiter dictum of the Madras Judges which is absolutely against the applicant's contention. The learned Judges assumed that, in any given cases, if the Court decides that the trial should be stayed, it may ask the arbitrator or arbitrators to proceed to a decision themselves, which is what the learned Munsif did in the present case. If it were not for the difficulties raised about the jurisdiction of the Munsif to deal with the entire subject matter of the submission, we should not be disposed to say anything more about the question. It seems to us, however, that, in any case, whatever difficulty may be raised about the jurisdiction of the Munsif, is completely removed by the conduct of the present applicants in accepting the Munsif's decision and submitting themselves to the decision of the arbitration Court The question whether the parties were still bound by the submission had been in substance decided against these applicants. The very utmost they could say would be that this decision had been given by a Court not competent to deal with the entire subject matter of the award. If that was their only difficulty it could have been met in more ways than one. It may be that they could have brought the matter to an issue by filing another suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge in respect of the entire subject-matter of the submission At any rate, when there is a dispute between the parties to a submission as to whether or not the terms of that submission are still binding on them, that dispute can be decided, like all other disputes, in one of the two ways by the verdict of a competent Court or by agreement between the parties, that is to say, by the party which has raised the objection determining not to press the same. In this case the Munsif had given a certain decision. If he was wrong, the matter could have been carried before a higher Tribunal. These applicants accepted that decision and went before the arbitrators. We think there is no authority whatever for the proposition that, in these circumstances, the arbitrators had jurisdiction to proceed with the matter. On this view of the case, we dismiss this application with costs, including fees on the higher scale.

Application dismissed.

Muhammadan Law—Marriage—Agreement by husband not to contract second marriage, validity of—Divorce, grounds for—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 23, 27.

An ante-nuptial agreement by a Muhammadan husband not to contract a second marriage is legal and is not invalid as being immoral, or opposed to public policy or in restraint of marriage. [p. 804, col. 2; p. 805, col. 1.]

A Court has power to grant a divorce to a Muhammadan wife not only on the ground of habitual ill-treatment by the husband or non-fulfilment by him of ante-nuptial engagements, but for other reasons also, e. g., desertion or neglect. [p. 805, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Thayetmyo, confirming the decree of the Township Judge, Minhla.

Mr. Ba U, for the Appellant.

Mr. Thein Maung, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for a divorce brought by a Muhammadan wife and has been decreed by both the Original Court and the Court of Appeal. The facts are that an ante-nuptial agreement was executed by the husband in which, amongst other stipulations, he gave his wife the power of divorcing him by saying talak three times under certain conditions and also undertook that he would not marry any other woman or keep a mistress. He lived with his wife in her parents' house for about six months and then left her for six months but returned and again lived with her for six months. After that he went away and has provided her with no maintenance. He never returned to her and he has married two other wives in breach of his agreement. It has been held also by both Courts that he was guilty of cruelty and the plaintiff seeks divorce on the grounds of cruelty and desertion and for breach of the condition that he would not take another wife and failure to support her. It has been argued that the ante-nuptial bond is invalid as being immoral and opposed to public policy, and void as being in restraint of marriage. Reliance is placed also on section 72 of Sir Roland Wilson's work in which he specified the only grounds on which a Muhammadan marriage may be dissolved by judicial decree. It has repeatedly been held that such conditions as appeared in this contract are neither immoral nor opposed to public policy and it has further been held that the condition to take no other wife is not void under section 26 of the Contract Act. No authority is given for the dictum in section 72 of Sir Roland Wilson's work. In Syed Ameer Ali's work on Muhammadan Law, 4th Edition, at page 359, it is pointed out that a condition in an ante nuptial agreement that the husband should not contract a second marriage is legal and reference is made to the case of Poonoo Bibee v. Fyez Buksh (1), where this view was upheld. At page 581 of the same work it is laid down that when the husband is guilty of conduct which makes the matrimonial life intolerable to the wife, when he neglects to perform the duties which the law imposes on him as obligations resulting from marriage, or when he fails to fulfil the engagements voluntarily entered into at the time of the matrimonial contract, she has the right of preferring a complaint before the Kazi or Judge and demanding a divorce from the Court. The Judge has the power of granting a divorce not only for habitual ill treatment, for non-fulfilment of ante-nuptial engagements but for other reasons also. And the learned Author proceeds to give various grounds on which divorce may be granted and amongst them are the following :—

When the husband leaves her without any means of subsistence.

When he quits without making any provision on her behalf.

When he persistently neglects to visit her.

When he treats her habitually in a cruel manner.

All these grounds have been held to exist in the present case It is also urged that by the ante-nuptial agreement power is given to her to divorce him by talak and that she should have adopted that remedy instead of coming to the Court. But I can find no authority for this, and the plaintiff cannot be deprived of her ordinary legal right to come to the Court and to obtain a decree if she establishes grounds justifying it.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Second appeal from the decision of the Assistant Judge, A. P., at Satara, in Appeal No 259 of 1918, varying the decree passed by the Joint Subordinate Judge at Satara, in Civil Suit No. 795 of 1915.

Mr. H. G. Kulkarni, for the Appellant.

Mr. J. R. Gharpure, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued to recover possession of certain land. His suit was rejected in the Trial Court, but the learned Appellate Judge gave him a decree for possession of the lands comprised in Group No. 1 including the strips enclosed in a red line (Exhibits 77) consisting of the Survey Numbers set out at page 2 of the print. This land originally belonged to Laxman and Vithal. Laxman died in 1895 and Vithal in 1903. But before Vithal died one Chinto got possession in execution by mistake of the plaint lands as far back as 1893. After Vithal's death Bhagirthibai, his sister, was put on the record to continue the proceedings and eventually an order was passed that she should be put in possession of the plaint property, and, on the 14th of October 1903, she actually got possession. This suit was filed on the 11th of October 1915 and as it is admitted that the plaintiff was the nearer heir to Vithal than Bhagirthibai, from whom the defendant claims, there can be no doubt that he proved his title to the plaint property, and with regard to the properties in Group No. 1, which got into Bhagirthibai's possession on the 14th of October 1903, defendants have not been able to prove adverse possession for twelve years, nor can they tack on the possession of Chinto as they did not claim through him. I think the learned Judge is correct when he says that Bhagirthibai, the latter of two trespassers, cannot be allowed to add to the period of her hostile possession the period of possession of a former trespasser, Chinto, from whom she did not derive title in any way. It might have been different if the plaintiff himself had been dispossessed and was suing for possession under Article 142. He might then have to prove that he had been in possession within twelve years before suit. This suit comes under Article 144. Time begins to run when the possession of the defendant, or anybody through whom he claims, becomes adverse to the plaintiff.

The decision of the learned Judge in the Court below is right and the appeal will be dismissed with costs.

The cross-objections are also dismissed with costs.

Appeal against the judgment of Robinson, J., on the Original Side.

Mr. Das (with him Mr. Campagnac), for the Appellant.

Mr. N. N. Burjorjee, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from a decision of Robinson, J., on the Original Side dismissing a suit by a beneficiary to compel her trustees to carry out a trust.

The trustees were her father and uncle; the trust sum was a fund of Rs. 11,000 held under a marriage settlement.

The terms of this settlement were (i) income to the wife for life, (ii) income at her death to the husband for life, (iii) at his death to apply the income for the maintenance, education and support of the children till the youngest attained majority and then to divide the fund equally between all the children. The alleged breach was the payment of Rs. 5,000 to one of the children.

It was alleged by the trustees that this was done by consent of all the beneficiaries.

The circumstances which it is alleged caused the consent were that the youngest daughter had reached marriageable age and the father was desirous of seeing her married.

It was, therefore, necessary to provide her with a dower.

The father, whose circumstances had become straitened, could not do so, so he says, and the trustees plead that the beneficiaries agreed that if the father would give up his life-interest, and divide Rs. 6,000 amongst them forthwith, they would on their part consent that the balance Rs. 5,000 of the fund should be paid to the daughter for her dower.

The girl admittedly became engaged, but the match was broken off. Then another suitor came forward and the proposal for dowering her out of the trust fund was again mooted. The father and three sons say that the plaintiff, Esther Cohen, consented. She denies it: she admittedly never signed the deed of consent. The onus is clearly upon the trustees to prove her consent.

The trustees and the three beneficiaries who support them are, to a certain extent, interested and possibly on this account it was alleged in the written statement that she had admitted in the presence of one E. J. Moses that she agreed to and accepted the proposal.

Both the trustees in evidence also stated that Moses had told them this but he is not called and no reason is given for the omission. He is the son-in law of the uncle trustee who says he meets him two or three times a day.

It seems incredible that both should have misunderstood him. The only inference to be drawn from the unexplained omission to call him is that his evidence would not be in their favour.

Seeing that they thought his evidence so important that they specifically relied upon it in their written statement, the omission to call him without assigning any reason precludes us from holding they have proved their case. Moreover, the probabilities of the case are on the plaintiff's side. When she was asked to sign, her husband was absent in Calcutta and she was admittedly unwilling to execute the instrument of release in her husband's absence. The defendants say that she promised to do so on his return, but it is far more likely that she would decline to bind herself without consulting her husband. Mr. Beale's evidence, on which stress is laid by the learned Judge, does not show that when the plaintiff's husband returned from Calcutta she actually agreed to sign. He told Mr. Beale, "that he would bring his wife to do so (i.e., to sign) a few days later on." But this may well mean that the plaintiff and her husband were considering the matter. It is far from an admission of consent. Plaintiff and her husband were not on good terms with the 1st defendant. There had been litigation between them concerning the plaintiff's dower and in 1915 the plaintiff had demanded her full share of the Rs. 11,000 trust money. On the whole, it appears unlikely that the plaintiff gave her consent.

The result is that there has been a breach of trust which the trustees must repair.

The plaintiff says the whole sum of Rs. 11,000 must be restored because if her brothers and sisters predeceased their father she would be entitled to the whole.

This, however assumes that her brothers and sisters had no vested interests.

The mother is dead: the class therefore cannot be enlarged. In marriage settlements the presumption is that a child's portion vests at marriage in the case of a daughter and at majority in the case of a son unless there is anything in the deed to the contrary. Thus in Swallow v. Binns (1), cited at page 469 of Lewin on Trusts, 12th Edition, Vice-Chancellor Wood stated that, upon instruments of this nature (such as settlements and Wills of parents) there is an implication of law arising upon the instrument itself subject, of course, to any expressions to the contrary, that it is the intention of any person who places himself in loco parentis to provide portions for children or grand children as the case may be, at the period when those portions will be wanted, namely upon their attaining the age of 21 years or (as is usually provided in the case of daughters) upon their attaining 21 or marriage: and that such portions shall then vest whether the children do or do not survive their parents, and Mr. Lewin cites it as a general rule that where a parent or person in loco parentis provides portions for children the strong presumption is that he means to provide portions for all children as may live to require them, i.e, for sons who may attain 21 and daughters who attain 21 or marry. If, therefore, the language of the instrument be uncertain but is capable of the construction that sons at 21 and daughters at 21 or marriage shall take a vested interest the Court will so decide it by force of the presumption.

There is nothing in the instrument in our opinion, to prevent the application of this presumption, and as all the children have attained 21 we consider that all their shares have vested. The period of division if the parents were dead as provided by the deed is when the youngest child attains 21 and there is nothing to prevent the father surrendering his life-interest and the trustees dividing the fund amongst the children if the father so desires.

The father so desires in the case of those children who are willing in return to contribute to their sister's dower. The other children are willing, the plaintiff is not. What she wants is her whole one-eighth or Rs. 1,375, vide her lawyer's letters of 1st March 1918 and 11th March 1918.

This the trustees cannot be compelled or even allowed to give her unless with the father's consent. Unless he consents to surrender his life-interest in this portion and give it to his daughter, he is entitled to enjoy its income during his life and she is entitled to nothing until he dies.

The trustees still have the Rs. 750 in hand and must make good the Rs. 625, and will then either hold the Rs. 1,375 in trust or give it to the plaintiff, as the father may decide.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed, but we consider that as the suit was really brought by the plaintiff to obtain Rs. 1,375 immediately, it is not a case in which she should have costs, and we leave each party to bear their own here and below.

Appeal allowed.

JUDGMENT.—The village of Sultanpur Dibbar, in the Province of Delhi, is divided into two Panas, Pana Khetwan and Pana Kalian. The former Pana is sub divided into three Thullas, Thulla Dowlata, Thulla Gulab and Thulla Har Sahai. One Har Sahai, a Jat, was the sole proprietor of the whole of the Thulla Har Sahai, and it is his estate which has given rise to considerable litigation. It appears that Har Sahai died in 1886 leaving him surviving his son, Ammi Lal, and a widow, Musammat Nanhi. The son Ammi Lal died a year after, and on his death the estate which he had inherited from his father seems to have been mutated in favour of his widow and his mother, Musammat Nanhi.

Upon the record there is no evidence to show what happened to Ammi Lal's widow, but this much is certain that in 1888 Musammat Nanhi, alleging the adoption of one Jit Singh by her to her deceased husband, made a gift of a moiety of the estate in favour of the alleged adopted son, and got a mutation effected in pursuance of the gift. Thereupon, the proprietors of Thulla Dowlata denying the factum and the validity of the adoption brought an action against both Musammat Nanhi and Jit Singh impeaching the alienation, and obtained, on the 21st January 1889, a declaration that, "Jit Singh is not the adopted son or appointed heir of Har Sahai, and that the gift of half the land of Har Sahai made to him by Har Sahai's widow is void as against the plaintiffs as reversionary heirs, and that on the death or re-marriage of the widow Jit Singh must restore the land to plaintiffs."

Musammat Nanhi has again made a gift, and this time to Jit Singh's brother Indraj by means of a deed executed by her on the 7th August 1915. The proprietors of Thulla Dowlata have consequently brought the present action for a declaratory decree that the alienation shall not affect their reversionary rights after the death of Musammat Nanhi.

The plaintiffs' allegation as to their being collaterals of Har Sahai is challenged by the defendants, and the crucial question for determination is whether the finding on the issue of relationship recorded by the District Judge in 1889 operates as res judicata. Now, it is not disputed that some of the plaintiffs in the present suit were also plaintiffs in the previous suit, and the rest being the descendants of the plaintiffs in the former suit must be treated as their representatives-in-interest. Further, it is admitted that the fact that Indraj was not a party to the previous litigation does not make any difference, as he derives his title from Musammat Nanhi, and there can be no doubt that if the latter is bound by the finding in the aforesaid case, her donee, who claims under her, is equally bound. The matter in controversy is consequently reduced to this. Does the decision in the former suit on the question of the plaintiffs' relationship with Har Sahai operate as res judicata as against Musammat Nanhi? Now, upon a perusal of that judgment we consider that it being admittedly inter partes should prevent Musammat Nanhi and those claiming under her from re agitating the question of relationship in this suit.

The learned Vakil for the appellant, however, contends that no relief was claimed against Musammat Nanhi in that suit, and that she was consequently only a pro forma defendant. Now, we are not concerned with the question whether a plaint could or could not have been framed without impleading her as a defendant; the fact remains that the action as brought by the plaintiffs in 1888 did challenge her right to make an adoption and to alienate the property which she held as a widow's estate. To that action she was impleaded as a defendant. It appears that the plaintiffs' relationship was denied and consequently the issue as to the relationship became a matter of controversy between the plaintiffs on the one side and the defendants on the other side. That issue was tried and finally determined by the Court with the result that the plaintiffs were held to be collaterals of Har Sahai and the defendants were defeated. It is to be observed that from the judgment and the decree passed in that case Musammat Nanhi could have preferred an appeal and impeached the correctness of the decision on the question of relationship arrived at by the Trial Court against her. It cannot, therefore, be urged that she had no right of appeal and that the decision should not operate as res judicata. We accordingly hold that the plaintiffs' relationship is res judicata; and though they are remote collaterals they are entitled to impeach the alienation made by the widow.

Mr. Mehr Chand for the appellant contends that, even if the plaintiffs are collaterals, they have no right to inherit the property in the presence of Indraj, who is Har Sahai's sister's son. Now, as pointed out above, Har Sahai left a son Ammi Lal who succeeded him, and Indraj must, therefore, be viewed as the last male owner's father's sister's son. Now, the parties are Jats residing in a village, and it is a matter of common knowledge that under the Customary Law, by which they are presumably governed, a father's sister's son has no right of succession in the presence of even remote collaterals.

These are the only two points argued by the learned Vakil for the appellant, and upon both of them our opinion is against him. We accordingly affirm the decree of the Subordinate Judge and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42, proviso, scope of—Declaration, suit for—Consequential relief not asked—Procedure—Amendment of plaint.

A suit should not be dismissed by an Appellate Court on the ground of its being one asking merely for a declaratory decree and no consequential relief where that objection has never been taken by the defendants to the suit. The plaintiff should in such a case be allowed an opportunity of amending his plaint. [p. 811, col. 1.]

Section 42 of the Specific Relief Act does not require a plaintiff to include in his prayer every relief or every claim that he can make against every and any person but it only requires that he should ask for such reliefs as against the particular defendant in the suit. [p. 811, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decision of the Divisional Judge, Hanthawaddy, confirming that of the Sub-Divisional Judge, Insein.

Mr. Lambert, for the Appellant.

Mr. Chari, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff, being the owner of a certain house, mortgaged it to the firm of C. P. L. K. N., who got a mortgage decree against him. The mortgagee tried to sell the property in execution but no sale was carried through. He then transferred his decree to the present appellant firm of S. T. K. S. T. K. brought the house to sale and bought it themselves. They obtained a sale certificate in 1911. The plaintiff now seeks a declaration that the sale-certificate granted is void on the grounds that no notice of the assignment of the decree had been given to him, and that no notice of the intended sale was given to him. He claims to be in possession at the time of suit. In 1915 the S. T. K. firm applied for possession but their application was dismissed as barred by limitation. In 1915 one Desai was in occupation of the house and is so still, he says, as the tenant of S. T. K. The plaintiff filed a suit against Desai as his tenant and the matter came up to this Court but it was held that no tenancy was proved. Plaintiff then sued Desai for use and occupation but he again lost his suit it being held that he was not the owner of the property. Plaintiff now files the present suit and it was decided in his favour in the first Court. When the plaint was instituted on the 2nd December 1918 the Court held that the suit was in effect one for cancellation of a document and that it must be stamped to the full value of the property. Plaintiff paid the deficient stamp-duty. The decree of the first Court was based on the two grounds of want of notices mentioned above and the decree given was that the Court sale at which S. T. K. had bought the property was void and it was set aside and the sale-certificate issued was declared to be void. The only point that is now argued in this appeal is that the plaint was one for declaration merely and that there was no prayer for the specific relief of possession and that the suit, therefore, should have been dismissed. It is admitted that this point was raised specifically for the first time in the Divisional Court. But Mr. Lambert argues with some ingenuity that in the written statement S. T. K. denied that plaintiff was in possession and explains the failure to plead that the suit should be dismissed for want of a prayer for consequential relief on the ground that plaintiff was at that time claiming to be in possession, and that that plea could not, therefore, be properly raised until the question of possession had been decided. He says that he urged that the issues were insufficient and asked that a further issue as to possession should be drawn. But he admitted he did not suggest any issue as to the suit failing for want of a prayer for consequential relief. He says he dealt with this omission in his argument. He admits that he cannot now argue as to want of notice.

It must be taken that the present point was taken for the first time properly in first appeal. In the case of Bombay Burmah Trading Corporation Limited v. F. Yorke Smith (1) Mr. Justice Farran pointed out that the plaint did not ask for consequential relief but that no objection had been taken by the defendants on that ground under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act and that as no fiscal regulation was contravened by the omission, he saw no reason why the Court should raise the objection of its own motion. The point was raised in argument in appeal and in dealing with it the learned Chief Justice stated: "It is also to be remarked that this objection has been taken for the first time on appeal—a circumstance which by itself is, in our opinion, fatal to it." The reason for this appears to me is to be found in the case of Kunj Bihari v. Keshavlal Hiralal (2) where Sir Lawrence Jenkins points out, in quoting section 42 of the Specific Relief Act: "Nothing is said here about dismissing his suit: all that is enacted is that no Court shall make a declaration where the plaintiff, being able to seek further relief, omits to do so." The Court, therefore, cannot dismiss the suit. It can only refuse to make a declaration unless and until the defect is remedied. The result of such a defect and the proper method of dealing with it is pointed out in the case of Limba v. Rama (3) where it was held that a suit should not be dismissed by an Appellate Court on the ground of its being one asking merely for a declaratory decree and no consequential relief where that objection has never been taken by the defendants to the suit. The plaintiffs should in such a case be allowed an opportunity of amending their plaint. Had, therefore, this objection been specifically raised in the first Court it would have been open to plaintiff to apply to amend his plaint or he could have maintained his position that he was in possession when if he failed to prove it the suit might possibly have been dismissed, and even if the Divisional Judge had entertained the objection his proper course would have been to have remanded the case so that plaintiff might have an opportunity, if he chose, to avail himself of it of amending his plaint. But it is unnecessary to deal with the matter further here for various reasons. In the first place, the effect of the Court's order in demanding stamp-fees to the full value of the property was to convert the suit from one for a mere declaration into one for cancellation of the sale at which S. T. K. bought. He should, no doubt, have insisted on the amending of the plaint but, unfortunately, that was not done. However, even if the suit be treated as one for a bare declaration it is clear that any consequential relief the plaintiff should ask for would be relief consequent on the main prayer of his suit. The appropriate consequential relief necessary to support the suit as laid would be the relief cancelling the sale and not one for possession. S. T. K. was apparently not in possession. He endeavoured to obtain possession and the Court had held that he was not entitled to possession as his claim thereto was barred by time. Desai was the person who was in actual possession and he was not a party to this suit and no decree for possession, therefore, would have been effectual as against Desai and plaintiff would still have had to bring another suit to obtain possession. That necessity would not have been done away with by the consequential relief even if it had been granted in the present case, and, therefore, the object of section 42 in requiring that the plaintiff shall ask for consequential relief where it is open to him would not have been satisfied. Section 42 does not require a plaintiff to include in his prayer every relief or every claim that he can make against every and any person but it only requires that he should ask for such reliefs as against the particular defendant in the suit. In my opinion, therefore, there is no force in the particular point that has been pressed in this appeal, and that, even if it could have been allowed it would not have effected more than to allow the plaintiff an opportunity of amending his plaint. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

(1) 17 B. 197; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 129.
(2) 28 B. 567; 6 Bom. L. R. 475.

Appeal dismissed.

petitioner complains of is that the Court pronounced judgment according to the award on the day the award was filed, and did not wait the ten days prescribed by Schedule II, paragraph 16 (1), of the Code and Article 158 of Schedule I of the Indian Limitation Act. No doubt, it was held in Najm-ud-din Ahmad v. Albert Puech (2) that where a judgment is pronounced before the time has expired an appeal will lie. With all due respect, I cannot see how an appeal will lie in such a case, because it is not suggested that there is any defect in the award. It may be that the award is a nullity or illegal ab initio. Then, as laid down by Sir Lawrence Jenkins in the case I have referred to, there may be an appeal. But where the learned Judge has not followed the procedure laid down by the Second Schedule of the Code and does not allow a party the time which the law allows him to make objection, but proceeds to pass at once a decree in accordance with the award, then it cannot be said that there is any defect in the award itself, and under sub-paragraph (2) of paragraph 16 of the Second Schedule it appears to be plain that no appeal would lie, but we think it is a case in which we should exercise our discretion under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code, and, therefore, we set aside the decree and the case must go back to the lower Court to enable the petitioner to file his objection which he must do within ten days after he has notice of the proceedings having reached the lower Court.

Decree, construction of—Mortgage, suit on—Compromise—Decree permitting redemption within a certain time, effect of—Fresh mortgage, whether created—Decree based on nullity, whether can be challenged.

A decree once granted cannot be challenged on the ground that it is based on a nullity; a decree based on a void contract is good until it is set aside in appeal, and a decree based on a void mortgage contract cannot be otherwise regarded. [p. 813, col. 2.]

In a suit for foreclosure of a mortgage the parties arrived at a compromise and a decree was passed awarding possession to the mortgagee with the provision that the defendant could redeem one-half or the whole of the mortgage within one year, and so avoid wholly or in part the execution of the decree. The mortgagor failed to redeem, and the mortgagee obtained possession of the property as owner in execution of his decree. Subsequently, the mortgagor sued to redeem the mortgage :

JUDGMENT.—On 21st March 1898 the father of the plaintiffs in this case mortgaged land without possession to one Sheo Ram, now represented by defendant No. 1. The mortgage was to be for four years and the contract included a stipulation of conditional sale.

The mortgage-debt was not paid by due date and foreclosure notice issued. The year of grace expired on 10th July 1903 and in December 1903 Sheo Ram sued as full owner for possession. On 9th January 1914 the parties came into Court with a compromise, on which the Court was prayed to issue a decree.

Thereupon the Court decreed possession to plaintiff with the proviso that the defendant could redeem one-half or the whole of the mortgage within one year and so avoid either wholly or in part, the execution of the decree.

In June 1906 the decree was executed and Sheo Ram obtained possession as owner.

In 1919 the present suit by the mortgagor's sons was instituted, and the prayer was for redemption on the ground that the decree of 1904 created a fresh mortgage which still subsisted.

The Courts below held, following Debi Sahai v. Ramji Lal (1), that the mortgage still subsisted and decreed for the plaintiffs.

On second appeal to this Court, the Division Bench, doubting the correctness of Debi Sahai v. Ramji Lal (1), referred this and three other cases to a Full Bench.

In our opinion this appeal should succeed.

In Debi Sahai v. Ramji Lal (1) the precise terms of the first Court's decree on the compromise are not reproduced but it would appear that the decree was a decree for possession as owner subject to certain conditions, by fulfilment of which the mortgagor might avoid execution. After full consideration, we regret, with all deference, that we are unable to accept the view that such a decree created a fresh mortgage.

Debi Sahai v. Ramji Lal (1) is a somewhat lengthy judgment, but it decided in reality only one point, viz., that, in the circumstances described, the decree of the Court creates a fresh mortgage between the parties.

The learned Judge's reasoning, however, is hard to follow, for in the body of their judgment, they find that the decree of the Court on the compromise is not wholly illegal and cannot be treated as a nullity; it is only the condition which is intended to operate by way of conditional sale and which is embodied in a decree...that must be treated by the Courts, under the imperative provisions of section 10 of the Punjab Alienation Act, as wholly null and void.

(1) 46 Ind. Cas. 460; 56 P. R. 1918; 127 P. W. R. 1918.

Even if this view be accepted, and the offending portion of the decree be excised, the remainder gives the decree holder possession as full owner not as mortgagee, and that fact would preclude all subsequent redemption.

A decree once granted cannot be challenged on the ground that it is based on a nullity; a decree based on a void contract is good until it is set aside in appeal, and a decree based on a void mortgage contract cannot be otherwise regarded.

If then it is only the provision which provides for conditional sale which is void we are left with that portion of the agreement and decree, which gives the plaintiff a right of entry as owner which again leads us to absurdity.

But we are left with the question whether a compromise, as above described, does amount to a fresh mortgage.

Now, it is quite conceivable that the parties by compromise should create a fresh mortgage by which the terms of the original mortgage are extended or modified and the compromise and decree might involve even a transfer of possession to the mortgagee as mortgagee. But where neither on the mortgage covenant, nor on the compromise, is the mortgagee as such entitled to possession, a decree awarding him possession, if he ever gets it, as full owner, cannot be regarded as creating a fresh mortgage. On the contrary, such a decree determines the mortgage either by redemption or by foreclosure. Judged by the intention of the parties, the transaction was not in the nature of a fresh mortgage, for their intention was that, after a further period of grace, the mortgage should be determined. Judged by the decree, the same result is arrived at, for the mortgagee is given a period of grace to avoid foreclosure, but on his failure to avail himself of the period of grace, the mortgagor secures an absolute title with possession.

It is instructive to compare a decree in an ordinary suit for foreclosure with that in this case. A reference to Order XXXIV, rule 2 of the Code shows that the Court must pass a preliminary decree declaring the amount due and giving the mortgagor a period of grace not exceeding six months wherein to pay that amount into Court.

It would be idle to argue that this decree creates a fresh mortgage merely because the amount payable is determined and a period of grace not contemplated by the original mortgage is conceded.

In this case, the Court decreed possession but suspended execution for one year during which the mortgagor could avoid execution in whole or in part.

We hold that no fresh mortgage was created.

The mortgagee took possession as full owner (he was entitled to possession in no other capacity) and has been holding as full owner adversely ever since. We accordingly accept the appeal and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout.

Appeal accepted.

The onus of proof lies in every case upon the party propounding a Will, and he must satisfy the conscience of the Court that the instrument so propounded is the last Will of a free and capable testator, and this burden is, in general, discharged by proof of capacity and the fact of execution. [p. 816, col. 2.]

A hostile witness is one who from the manner in which he gives his evidence shows that he is not desirous of telling the truth, and when such a witness is treated as hostile and examined by the party calling him, this must be done to discredit the witness altogether and not merely to get rid of part of his testemony. [p. 819, col. 1.]

Although, in order to prove due execution of an instrument requiring attestation, it is, in general sufficient, where several witnesses have subscribed, to call one of them, but in the case of a Will, it is desirable that all capable of being called should be examined to remove all suspicion of fraud. The mere fact, however, that one attesting witness to a Will is not called would not invalidate the Will provided there were two attesting witnesses as required by law. [p. 821, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where unattested alterations occur in a Will, the presumption of law is that such alterations were made after the execution of the Will, but this presumption may be rebutted (1) by direct evidence showing that the alterations accord with the obvious intention of the testator, and (2) by internal evidence and by inferences drawn from the condition of the Will [p. 822, col. 2; p. 823, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, J.—This appeal is directed against the grant of Letters of Administration, with a copy of the Will annexed, to the estate of one Raj Krishna Khan who died on the 20th November 1917. He was born in 1897 and in 1914 was married to a girl twelve years old. At the time of his death, he left him surviving his mother, his minor widow and an infant brother. He was a member of the well-known family of Khans of Mankundu of the District of Hooghly and possessed properties of considerable value. He had taken to evil ways very early and was addicted to wine and women; for six or seven years before his death, he had kept a woman of the name of Sosilabala whom he did not abandon even after his marriage. On the 4th November 1917, he went to Puri for a change; the party consisted of five persons besides himself, namely, his manager, Bibhuti Bhusan Mukerjee, his mistress, Susila, another woman of the name of Puti, who apparently cooked for them, a hanger-on of the name of Binod and a servant Bipatram Kahar, who had been in his employ for about a year and a half. Raj Krishna had been to Puri in the year previous and had stayed in the house of one Krishna Chandra Guchika, a Panda of the temple of Jagannath. On the occasion of the second visit also, he took up his residence in a house of the Panda near the gate of the temple. On the 15th November Raj Krishna was taken ill at Puri, and it is said that as his condition did not improve he executed the disputed Will on the forenoon of the 18th November 1917. He died the afternoon of the 20th November 1917. The party returned to Calcutta on the morning of the 22nd November. On the 23rd March 1918, Rani Dasi, the mother of the testator, applied for Letters of Administration with copy of the Will annexed, for the use and benefit of her infant son, Bankim Chandra Khan. The estate was valued at Rs. 3,09,708. The application was supported by the affidavits of two of the attesting witnesses. A caveat had been already lodged on the 27th November 1917, by Surendra Krishna Mondal, the father of Bhramarbala Dasi, the widow of the deceased. After a protracted trial, Mr. Justice Chanduri came to the conclusion that the Will was genuine and had been duly made and attested. This conclusion has been strenuously assailed on behalf of the appellant and the judgment under appeal has been subjected to a searching criticism.

The Will, as already stated, is alleged to have been executed on the forenoon of the 19th November 1917. There is practically no evidence as to what happened to the testator during the first ten days of his stay at Puri; but we know this much that his manager, Bibhuti Bhusan Mookerjee, who had accompained him from Calcutta on the 4th November, left Puri the very next day and returned to Calcutta. On the 15th November, Bipatram telegraphed to Bhibuti as follows: "Babu sick; moneyless; wire money; otherwise come". Bibhuti, on receipt of this message, forwarded Rs. 25 by money order, and next morning (16th November) wired back: "Sent Rs. 25 by money order yesterday." The case attempted to be made out in the evidence is that the illness of Raj Krishna did not take a favourable term, and he was attended, from the 16th November, by a medical practitioner named Haris Chandra Rao. On the evening of the 18th November, while Raj Krishna was apparently in considerable distress, he expressed an apprehension that he might not survive. On this Susila began to cry. Thereupon Raj Krishna promised to make provision for her and asked Bipatram to procure one or two demi papers so that he might make his Will. Early next morning, Susila, Puti and Binod went to take a bath in the holy tank of Markanda. Bipatram, during their absence, procured the demi paper. Raj Krishna dictated and Bipatram took down on slips of paper what Raj Krishna said. Bipatram, it must be mentioned here, did not know how to write Bengali and was probably very imperfectly acquainted with the Bengali language. He accordingly wrote down in Kaithi character what was said by his master and the result was a jargon of an extraordinary and unprecedented character. The draft was read out and was altered in one respect, namely, as regards the amount of maintenance for the wife of the testator, which was raised from Rs. 40 to Rs. 50. Bipatram then copied the contents of the pencil draft on the demi paper in ink and read out the document. His master thereafter asked him to make an addition, which was written out by Bipatram on the left hand margin of the document. Bipatram then signed his name by order of his master, and made over to him the pencil draft and the demi paper. Raj Krishna tore off the draft, kept the demi paper under the pillow and asked Bipatram to go and fetch the Panda and the Doctor. On the way, he met the Charidar (an officer of the Panda) and requested him to send the Panda. He then went to the Doctor who promised to call at 11 o'clock. He next went to the Telegraph office and sent a message to the manager at Calcutta in the following terms: "Babu seriously ill; moneyless; come immediately." This telegram, as appears on the face of the message, was handed in at 11·30 A. M. and reached Calcutta 12·34 P. M. Bipatram has sworn, however, that he made over the paper to the Telegraph clerk actually much earlier than the time noted on the message. He then returned to the house. The Panda, the Charidar and the Doctor arrived at about 11 o'clock. Raj Krishna took out the document from under the pillow. After some conversation, the document was, at the request of Raj Krishna, read out by Bipatram, Raj Krishna then executed it, affixing his signature in two places, once under the main writing, and again under the marginal note. The document was next attested by the Panda Krishna Chundra Guchika, the Charidar Hari Bandhu Mahanti, and the Doctor Haris Chandra Rao, it was then placed inside a portmanteau. Next morning Bibhuti arrived from Calcutta. There has been some controversy as to whether Bibhuti was at Puri on the 19th November, when the Will is said to have been executed. There is no room for doubt that the Doctor is mistaken on this point, and the evidence shows conclusively that on receipt of the telegram sent on the 19th November Bibhuti started from Calcutta in the evening and arrived at Puri the next morning. When Bibhuti arrived Raj Krishna made over the Will to him. On that day a telegram was sent by Bibhuti to Calcutta in the following terms: "Raj Krishna better; we start to morrow; send Gari". This message was, as noted on the telegraph form, handed in at 3-5 P. M. and reached Calcutta at 4-5 P. M. The evidence shows that Raj Krishna died that afternoon, and there has been much speculation as to why this false message was sent; it is sufficient to say that the point has not been satisfactorily cleared up. Bibhuti and other members of the party left Puri on the 21st and arrived at Calcutta the next morning. On that very day the Will was taken to the Solicitor for the propounder. Such in outline is the story of the events which are alleged to have taken place at Puri between the 15th and 20th November 1917, and we have to determine whether this version is substantially true.

There has been some discussion at the Bar to the burden of proof in this class of cases where a Will is set up as executed under unusual circumstances. It is sufficient to recall, in this connection, the observations of Baron Parke in Baker v. Batt (1):

"If the party upon whom the burden of the proof of any fact lies either upon his own case, where there is no conflicting testimony, or upon the balance of evidence where there is, fails to satisfy the Tribunal which is to decide of the truth of the proposition which he has to maintain, he must fail in his suit. And thus in a Court of Probate where the onus probandi most undoubtedly lies upon the party propounding the Will, if the conscience of the Judge, upon a careful and accurate consideration of all the evidence on both sides, is not judicially satisfied that the paper in question does contain the last Will and testament of the deceased, it is bound to pronounce its opinion that the instrument is not entitled to Probate. And it may frequently happen that this may be the result of an inquiry, in cases of doubtful competence in particular, without the imputation of wilful perjury on either sides, or it may be; the Judge may not be satisfied on which side the perjury is committed, or whether it certainly exits."

To the same effect are the observations of Lord Brougham in Panton v. Williams (2):

"There is no duty cast upon the Court to strain after Probate, and to grant it where grave doubts remain wholly unremoved, and great difficulties oppose themselves to our progress, which we are quite unable to surmount. It may suffice to say that the proof eminently lies on him who sets up a Will, and further that it is more fatal than to his adversary if he leaves difficulties entirely without explanations. It is much less material that those who seek to impeach a testamentary instrument should be unable to explain certain things in their case and should be forced to admit that their argument is not in every point consistent with all the facts, than that they who seek to establish the Will should give no rational, consistent or intelligible solution of those difficulties which encumber their suppositions and obstruct the path towards the conclusion they would have us arrive at."

We have, consequently, the firmly established rule that the onus probandi lies in every case upon the party propounding a Will, and, in the words of Baron Parke in Barry v. Butlin (3), he must satisfy the conscience of the Court that the instrument so propounded is the last Will of a free and capable testator. The burden of proof thus cast upon the propounder is, in general, discharged by proof of capacity and the fact of execution and when these have been proved, the Court will, under ordinary circumstances, assume from them the knowledge of and assent to the contents of the instrument by the deceased, and, without requiring further evidence, will pronounce for the Will.

Now, in the case before us, the Will was challenged by the caveator on two distinct grounds, namely, first, that the Will was not genuine and that what purported to be the signatures of the deceased on the document had been forged ; and, secondly, that the testator had from the 18th November to a few hours before his death given himself up to a bout of continuous drinking and was not in a fit condition physically on the 19th November to execute the document. As regards the first of these grounds, no serious attempt was made in the Court below on the side of the caveator to assist the Court to arrive at a decision. On the other hand, the propounder produced various signatures of the deceased whose genuineness could not possibly be called in question. There is a striking resemblance between the two sets of signatures, but not that absolute identity which in many instances may furnish indications of deliberate imitation by the careful forger. Mr. Justice Chaudhri, on this part of the case, placed reliance upon the testimony of Babu Sailendra Nath Ghosh, a Solicitor of this Court, and Babu Surendranath Kundu, a Pleader of the Alipore Court, both of whom had ample opportunities of forming an opinion as regards the handwriting of Raj Krishna, and from their knowledge of his signature, stated their belief that the signatures on the Will were made by the deceased. In this Court no attempt has been made to impeach the validity of this conclusion and we accept the finding that the signatures are genuine.

We have next to consider the question of testamentary capacity, that is, whether the testator had, at the time, sound mind within the meaning of section 46 of the Indian Succession Act. The requirements of the law on the subject are beyond dispute.

Mere ability to sign one's name does not necessarily imply the possession of the full mental powers requisite for a valid disposition of property. Nor is it sufficient to show that the testator was conscious when he executed the instrument. As Cresswell, J., said in Sefton v. Hopwood (4), "it is not sufficient in order to make a Will that a man should be able to maintain an ordinary conversation and to answer familiar and easy questions. He must have more mind than suffices for that. He must have, what the old lawyers called, 'a disposing mind', he must be able to dispose of his property with understanding and reason. This does not mean that he should make what other people may think a sensible Will or a reasonable Will or a kind Will....But he must be able to understand his position ; he must be able to appreciate his property, to form a judgment with respect to the parties whom he chose to benefit by it after death, and if he has capacity for that it suffices." Sir John Nicholl observed in Marsh v. Tyrell (5): "It is a great but not an uncommon error to suppose that, because a person can understand a question put to him and can give a rational answer to such question, he is of perfect sound mind and is capable of making a Will for any purpose whatever, whereas the rule of law, and it is the rule of common sense, is far otherwise." As Redfield, J., said in Converse v. Converse (6), "in order to execute a valid Will, one must have sufficient active memory to recall his family and his property and to form a rational judgment in regard to the deserts of the one, and the disposition of the other with reference to such deserts." This was emphasised by Hannen, J., in Burdett v. Thompson (7), where he modified his previous observation in Boughton v. Knight (8) :—

"Whatever is the highest degree of soundness of mind, is required to make a Will. From the character of the act, it requires the consideration of a larger variety of circumstances than is required in other acts, for it involves reflection upon the claims of the several persons who, by nature or through other circumstances, may be supposed to have claims on the testator's bounty, and the power of considering these several claims and of determining in what proportions the property shall be divided amongst the claimants." To the same effect are the observations of Erskine, J., in Harwood v. Baker (9): "A testator must not only be able to understand that he is by his Will giving the whole of his property to one object of his regard; but that he must also have capacity to comprehend the extent of his property, and the nature of the claims of others, whom, by his Will, he is excluding from all participation in that property; and that the protection of the law is in no cases more needed, than it is in those where the mind has been too much enfeebled to comprehend more objects than one:" Woomesh Chunder Biswas v. Rashmohini Dasi (10) affirmed by the Judicial Committee in Rash Mohini Dasi v. Umesh Chunder (11), Susil Kumar Banerjee v. Apsari Debi (12). This is not a novel rule but is dictated by plain common sense and has been recognised for over three centuries; Marquess of Winchester's case (13), Combe's case (14). This does not imply, however, that the testator must possess these qualities of the mind in the highest degree possible, or that he must possess them in as large a measure as he may formerly have done though the mind may have been in some degree debilitated and the memory may have become in some degree enfeebled, it is sufficient that there is enough left to enable the testator clearly to discern and discreetly to judge of all those things and all those circumstances which enter into the nature of a rational, fair and just testament. [Per Cockburn, C. J. in Banks v. Goodfellow (15) citing with approval Den v. Vancleve (16)]. Now, in the present case, the caveator specifically alleged that Raj Krishna was, from the effects of drink, in such a condition on the morning of the 19th November that he was really not competent to make a testamentary disposition. The evidence negatives this theory and points to the conclusion that even if he was not wholly free from the exciting influence of drink at the time when the Will was executed the excitement, if it existed at that time, did not exist in such a degree as to prevent the testator from appreciating and understanding the testamentary act in all its bearings. This would clearly not invalidate the Will. Ayrey v. Hill (17). and Banks v. Goodfellow (15).

The truth is that there was no serious attempt to make out the case alleged in the caveat. The cross examination of the witnesses was rather directed to show that the condition of the testator, due to illness, was such that he must have lost testamentary capacity. From this standpoint, the case is not wholly free from difficulty by reason, principally, of the mode of examination-in-chief and cross-examination of the two important witnesses who were examined on commission at Puri. Under Order XVI, rule 19, Civil Procedure Code, the Panda and the Doctor, who resided at Puri, more than 200 miles distant from Calcutta, could not be summoned to attend in person and give evidence in Court, consequently, a commission had to be issued for their examination. We regret to observe that the examination-in-chief, as also the cross-examination, were conducted in a manner open to grave objection. Not only were the proceedings unduly prolonged, sometimes by an attempt to shake the credit of a witness by introduction of evidence to contradict him in violation of the provisions of section 153 of the Indian Evidence Act, but leading questions were put in examination in chief in contravention of other provisions of the law. It has been maintained before us that as the propounder was obliged under section 68 of the Indian Evidence Act to call the attesting witness to the Will, such witness should be treated as a witness called by the Court and liable to be cross-examined, as a matter of right, by the party citing him. In our opinion, this contention cannot be upheld. Section 154 of the Indian Evidence Act provides that the Court may, in its discretion, permit the person who calls a witness to put any questions to him which might be put in cross-examination by the adverse party. There is, in this respect, no distinction on principle between an attesting witness whom a party is obliged to call and any other witness whom he may cite of his own choice. But the Court may, in the exercise of its discretion, be more easily persuaded in the former case than the latter. In view of the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act, it is thus plain that there is no room for application, in this country, of the view taken in the cases of Bowman v. Bowman (18), Jackson v. Thomason (19) and Coles v. Coles (20), that a necessary witness, that is, one whom a party is compelled to call and who may, therefore, be considered rather the witness of the Court than of the party, as an attesting witness to a Will, [Gill v. Gill (21) can be discredited as of right by his own side. It is, indeed, doubtful whether the principle recognised in these cases, though recently affirmed in Jones v. Jones (22), is still good law in England. Price v. Manning (23), Phillips v. Davis (24). Per Deane, J. But two important points must be borne in mind; first, that a witness is considered adverse when, in the opinion of the Judge, he bears a hostile animus to the party calling him and not merely when his testimony contradicts his proof; in other words, as Wilde, J., remarked in Coles v. Coles (20), a hostile witness is one who, from the manner in which he gives his evidence, shows that he is not desirous of telling the truth; and, secondly, as Lord Campbell, C. J., observed in Faulkner v. Brine (25), when a witness is treated as hostile and cross-examined by the party calling him this must be done to discredit the witness altogether and not merely to get rid of part of his testimony. These principles have all been disregarded in the examination-in-chief and cross-examination of the Panda and the Doctor. The Commissioner could not exercise the discretion vested in the Court under section 154 of the Indian Evidence Act, and the mischief due to improper cross-examination could not be remedied in the Trial Court. Consequently, very little reliance can be placed upon the assertions of the Panda and the Doctor, and this was the view adopted by Mr. Justice Chaudhuri. We are fortified in this opinion by the suspicious alteration in the affidavits sworn by these two persons; apparently, according to the affidavit as originally drawn up, they were prepared to declare that the Will was written at the dictation of the testator; these words were subsequently crossed out for some unexplained reason. Notwithstanding this conclusion, there is, however, a substantial residue of evidence adduced by the propounder, and we cannot decline to estimate its value and effect.

Bipatram Kahar, the servant who acted as scribe, and Susilabala, the mistress, were both examined in Court. Mr. Justice Chaudhuri has accepted both of them as witnesses of truth, though some of the statements of the servant relating to what happened after the return of the party to Calcutta may be open to doubt. There can be no question that, if their testimony is accepted as substantially correct, the case for the propounder is fully established. The respondent has, as might be expected, earnestly pressed upon us that a Court of Appeal should be extremely slow to disagree with the primary Court on a question of appreciation of oral evidence, and we are not unmindful that it is always difficult for Judges who have not seen and heard the witnesses to refuse to adopt the conclusion of fact of those who have. Reference may, in this connection, be made to the observations of Sir Richard Couch in Shama Charan Kundu v. Khettromoni Dasi (26), and of Lord Collins in Shunmugaroya Mudaliar v. Manika Mudaliar (27), where he quotes with approval the words of Lindley, M. R., in Coghlan v. Cumberland (28); see also the graphic description given by Sir

SURENDRA KRISHNA MONDAL v. RANEE DASSI.

John Coleridge, of the difficulty of appreciating the value of oral testimony from the written record ; Reg. v. Bertrand (29). No useful purpose would be observed by an attempt to formulate a general principle applicable to all such cases where appreciation of oral testimony is concerned. The decisions reviewed in Lallbee Mahomed v. Dadabhai Jivanji Guzdar (30) show that two conflicting view points have to be reconciled, namely, on the one hand the undoubted duty of the Court of Appeal to review the recorded evidence and to draw its own inferences and conclusions, and, on the other hand, the unquestionable weight which might be attached to the opinion of the Judge of the primary Court who had the advantage of seeing the witnesses and noticing their look and manner. In the present case we have carefully scrutinised the testimony of Bipatram and Susila in the light of the searching criticisms made by Mr. Chaudhuri. We have not overlooked the position in life of the two witnesses ; but, clearly, it cannot be affirmed as a general rule that a person is not trustworthy because he is in receipt of a small salary, or that a woman is not reliable as a witness because she is deficient in virtue. The statements of these two persons, so far as an opinion may be formed from the written record, have on the whole the ring of truth. Bipatram takes no benefit under the Will ; Susila no doubt receives an annuity of Rs. 40 a month and there is a direction for payment of all her debts. The circumstance that she is a legatee under the Will and was with the testator on the day the Will was prepared, must no doubt, on well established principles excite to some extent the suspicion of the Court and call upon it to be vigilant and jealous in examining the evidence in suppport of the instrument, Barry v. Butlin (3), Baker v. Batt (1), Tyrrell v. Painton (31), Gopeesur Dutt v. Bissessur Dutt (32) But it cannot be overlooked that she was not present in the house when the Will was prepared under the direction of the testator. She was not in the room when the Will was executed ; she has not propounded the Will and apparently has not interested herself in these proceedings ; and, finally, the amount of the annuity granted to her is practically insignificant in relation to the value of the estate left by her paramour. The descriptions given by the servant and the mistress are substantially in agreement, and the minor discrepancies pressed upon our attention only tend to show that they are not tutored witnesses. On their testimony, the Court may justly base the conclusion that Raj Krishna had testamentary capacity when the Will was prepared and executed. No doubt, the evidence shows that he was very ill and possibly his suffering was acute. But the manner in which he gave directions for the preparation of the Will shows that his mental faculties were unimpaired.

Mr. Chaudhuri, who has argued this appeal with great care and earnestness, has, however, very properly emphasised what he called improbabilities and suspicious circumstances and has pressed us to reject as untrustworthy the evidence adduced in support of the execution of the Will by a testator of sound disposing mind. The respondent on the other hand, has contended that the Court should not allow its decision to be affected by consideration of probabilities, when there is direct positive testimony to support the case for the propounder ; and has in this connection relied upon the decisions of the Judicial Committee in Bombay Cotton Manufacturing Co. v. Motilal (33), and Chotey Narain Singh v. Ratan Koer (34). In the first case, Sir George Farwell, said :

"The Appellate Court refused to accept as conclusive the judgment of the lower Court as to the veracity of the witnesses. It is doubtless true that on appeal the whole case, including the facts, is within the jurisdiction of the Appeal Court. But, generally speaking, it is undesirable to interfere with the findings of fact of the Trial Judge who sees and hears the witnesses and has an opportunity of noting their demeanour, especially in cases where the issue is simple and depends on the credit which attaches to one or other of conflicting witnesses. Nor should his pronouncement with respect to their credibility be put aside on a mere calculation of probabilities by the Court of Appeal. In making these observations, their Lordships have no desire to restrict the discretion of the Appellate Courts in India in the consideration of evidence. They only wish to point out that, where the issue is simple and straightforward, and the only question is which set of witnesses is to be believed, the verdict of a Judge trying the case should not be lightly disregarded."

In the second case, Lord Watson, said: "The theory of improbability remains to be considered; and the first observation which their Lordships have to make is that, in order to prevail against such evidence as has been adduced by the respondent in this case, an improbability must be clear and cogent; it must approach very nearly to, if it does not altogether constitute, an impossibility.'

We shall, consequently, refer to the chief circumstances which, according to the appellant, make the case for the propounder so improbable and suspicious as to justify the rejection of the positive evidence as concocted and unreliable.

As regards the surrounding circumstances, it is urged that as the testator might easily have secured the services of a competent lawyer at Puri (where there is a District Bar) he could not have relied upon a servant on small pay who was ignorant alike of the language and of the script used by Bengalis. This, no doubt, is a matter for legitimate comment. But to assert that what is alleged to have been done was impossible, is a proposition which verges too closely on the absurd to be seriously entertained. On the other hand, it would not be surprising if Rajkrishna, who had gone to a strange place with a mistress, felt reluctant to call in the aid of a respectable Pleader or Mukhtear. As regards the witnesses, the persons who are alleged to have attested, are precisely the men who might be expected to do so—the Panda, under whose protection, as it were, the testator had taken up his residence, the Charidar, an officer of the Panda, the Doctor who attended him, and his own trusted servant. The omission to examine the Charidar has been justly commented upon. For, although where an instrument requiring attestation is subscribed by several witnesses, it is in general sufficient to call only one of them (Indian Evidence Act, section 68), in the case of Wills it is desirable that all capable of being called should be examined to remove all suspicion of fraud: [Macgregor v. Topham (35), Andrew v. Motley (36), Hindson v. Kersey (37)]. It has, indeed, been suggested that the Charidar has been kept back, because he did not attest the Will at the time of execution, but only affixed his signature later. This, if true, is not of much moment; the validity of the Will is not affected thereby, provided it is established that there were two attesting witnesses as required by law. Nor can importance be attached to the failure to examine the cook and the hanger-on. Further, we are not prepared to attach any weight to the suggestion that the Will was prepared on the 20th November, after the arrival of the manager, Bibhuti Bhusan Mukerjee, from Calcutta. This rests on a very slender basis, namely, the statement of the Doctor, made with considerable hesitation, that Bibhuti was present at the time when he attested the Will. We cannot ignore the fact that this hypothesis was not put forward in the caveat, which was filed after the legal advisers of both parties had visited Puri, as they did shortly after the Will had become known in Calcutta. The attestation clause signed by the Doctor states expressly that the document was signed by the testator at 11 30 A. M. on the 19th November. Consequently, there is no room for possible contention that the Will was manufactured by Bibhuti after his arrival from Calcutta, and either after the death of the testator or so soon before his death that he must have lost all testamentary capacity by that time. We must hold, then, that the Will was prepared, executed, and attested on the forenoon of the 19th November and could not have been inspired by Bibhuti.

As regards the contents of the Will, we have to examine the argument that the disposition is so improbable that it could not have been made by a person in the position of the testator. The disposition may be summarised as follows:—(1) an annuity of Rs. 50 a month to the wife of the testator;

(35) (1850) 3 H. L. C. 132 at p. 155; 10 E. R. 51.

(37) (1765) 4 Burn. Ecc. L. 116 at pp. 119, 120.

2) an annuity of Rs. 40 a month to his mistress and payment of all her debts, and (3) an annuity of Rs. 125 a month to his manager, Bibhuti Bhusan Mukerjee, who is, in addition, released from liability to account in respect of certain expenses incurred, and (4) bequest of the residue to his infant brother. It may be conceded that, in view of the income of the estate, the amount of the allowance fixed for the wife does look inadequate But it must be remembered that the unhappy girl was not much of a wedded wife to the depraved young man, who, from before his marriage, had led a life of debauchery and habitually indulged in wine and women. Further, there was no one present at Puri who had the remotest interest in reducing the allowance of the wife. The annuity for the mistress as also the provision for discharge of her debts do not seem to be over liberal, when we remember the deep attachment the testator felt towards her and the length of time they had lived together; there is, at any rate, no indication that she exercised any undue influence on the young man in this matter. The provisions made for the manager as also his release from liability to account, have naturally formed the subject of strong comment, and are unquestionably calculated to rouse suspicion. But it is plain that the manager was not at Puri when the Will was prepared and had no opportunity to influence the judgment of his master at that time. On the other hand, the evidence shows that he was a valued and trusted officer who had secured for his master the enjoyment of his share of a valuable estate after it had been freed from every incumbrance. It is not for the Court to place itself in the position of the testator and to determine whether the master had set an inordinate value on the services of his officer; much less should we determine the amount of the sums which passed through his hands, as a question may hereafter arise as to the extent to which he has been absolved from liability. We only hold that the disposition in his favour was not so improbable as to verge towards impossibility. We have, finally, the residuary devise in favour of the brother It is not suggested that there was any body present at Puri who could have moved the testator in favour of his minor brother. This disposition, at any rate, must have been the act of the testator, influenced by obvious considerations of the ultimate preservation of the family estate, which would otherwise pass into the hands of the minor childless widow, liable to act under the guidance of her paternal relations. We cannot also overlook the significant fact that there was not even a small legacy in favour of the trusted servant Bipatram. Upon an examination of all the provisions of the Will, it is impossible for us to hold that they are so unnatural and unreasonable that they could not possibly have been made by a person with a sound disposing mind in the position of the testator.

There remains one objection which, though it looked formidable at one stage, does not require elaborate consideration. Attention was drawn to the fact that the word "Sthabar" (immoveable property) in the Will, looked like an interpolation, and specific evidence, it was said, must be adduced to show that the interpolation was made before execution and attestation. The alteration is admittedly not initialled as contemplated by section 58 of the Indian Succession Act. Now it is well settled that where unattested alterations occur in a Will, the presumption of law is that such alterations were made after the execution of the Will, and, in the absence of evidence rebutting the presumption, Probate will be granted of the Will in the original state, omitting the alterations. This rule has been affirmed by the Judicial Committee, Cooper v. Bockett (38), Greville v. Tylee (39) and has been subsequently followed, Sykes, In the goods of (40), Adamson, In the goods of (41) and Pandurang Hari Vaidya v. Vinayak (42). The present case, however, is free from difficulty; there is positive evidence that the Will, as it now stands, was read over in its entirety before the testator executed it. The presumption mentioned is, consequently, rebutted by direct proof, and this accords with the obvious intention of the testator, who wished to make a disposition of his entire estate and not die intestate in respect of the most valuable portion thereof. It may be added that the presumption may be rebutted not merely by direct proof, but also by internal evidence and by inferences drawn from the condition of the Will, Hindmarch, In the goods of (43), Cadge, In the goods of (44), Tonge, In the goods of (45). As regards the marginal note also, there is no real difficulty; it was signed by the testator, and on the evidence, had been written out before execution and attestation.

Finally, Mr. Chaudhuri has made almost a grievance that the manner in which the learned Trial Judge intervened with questions during the examination and cross-examination of witnesses, misled him and left him under the impression that the Court was not prepared to accept the statements made by the witnesses concerned. This is obviously not a matter which can be set right on appeal, unless, indeed, it is established that the intervention of the learned Judge with questions with a view to clear up obscurities to fill up lacunæ, to supplement deficiencies, and generally to elicit the truth, exceeded the bounds of even the comprehensive provisions of section 165 of the Indian Evidence Act and so impeded the legitimate work of Counsel engaged in the cause as to amount to a mis-trial, leading to failure of justice. This has not been, and, on the record as it stands, cannot be, urged. But it is manifest that during the progress of the trial, it is not wise for Counsel to anticipate the final opinion of the Judge even as to the veracity of a witness which may have to be jugded, not solely from his individual statements, but from his testimony taken in conjunction with all the other facts brought out in the Court of litigation.

After the most anxious consideration we have been able to give to this case, we have arrived at the conclusion that Mr. Justice Chanduri has rightly pronounced in favour of the Will and that the appeal must consequently be dismissed.

As regards the costs of the appeal, we direct that the costs of both the parties be paid out of the estate. The case is by no means free from difficulty and, in view of the course which the trial took in the Court below, we cannot hold that the appeal was not justified

LOWER BURMA CHIEF COURT.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL No. 124 OF 1919.

February 11, 1920.

Present:—Sir Daniel Twomey, KT., Chief Judge, and Mr. Justice Young.

THE RANGOON MUNICIPAL COMMITTEE—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

THE BURMA RAILWAYS COMPANY, LIMITED AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Burma Municipal Act (III of 1898), s. 98—Duty of Municipality to remove and dispose of night soil, whether imperative—Nuisance committed by Municipality—Injunction to restrain nuisance.

Per Twomey, C. J.—Section 98 of the Burma Municipal Act does not impose an imperative duty upon a Municipality to remove and dispose of night soil. [p. 836, cols. 1 & 2.]

Per Young, J.—Section 98 of the Burma Municipal Act imposes upon a Municipality the duty both of removing and disposing of night soil. [p. 839, col. 2.]

Per Curiam.—The Legislature did not contemplate a nuisance as the necessary result of a Municipal Committee exercising the powers conferred upon it by section 98 of the Burma Municipal Act. Therefore, if a nuisance is committed by a Municipal Committee in removing or disposing of night soil under that section, it is liable to be restrained by injunction. [p. 840, col. 1.]

Appeal against the following judgment of Robinson, J., in Civil Regulation No. 322 of 1918, dated the 19th June 1919, on the Original Side.

ROBINSON, J.—The defendant Committee have since 1890 occupied a plot of land in the angle between Strand Road and First Street and in 1891 they established thereon a night soil depôt. The plaintiff Railway Company occupy a plot of land the other side of First Street to this depôt, and they have erected thereon Jamadars' and clerks' quarters for occupation by members of their staff. The 2nd and 3rd plaintiffs are goods clerks in the employ of the Railway Company living in these quarters which abut on First Street. The quarters were erected some two years after the night soil depôt was brought into operation.

Early in 1908, the Railway Company began to complain of the smell from the depôt and, on the 3rd February 1908, wrote to the Health Officer saying that the smell had been actually getting worse and had latterly increased to such an extent that the clerks had vacated their quarters and men could not be induced to live there. It was asked if anything could be done to abate the nuisance. On the 11th February the Health Officer replied that there is bound to be a certain amount of nuisance in connection with a night soil depôt; he admittd that the nuisance had been worse on two or three occasions recently because of blockages having occurred but said his department was doing its very best to diminish the nuisance complained of. On the 29th May 1909 the Railway Company again wrote to him that the stench was reported to be unbearable when the night soil carts were being emptied as the prevailing wind blows from the receiver towards the quarters; that it had also been reported that during the last year or so there had been a considerable increase of sickness, especially bowel complaints in this area which was put down to the smell. It was stated that the Chief Medical Officer of the Railway was of opinion that the present state of affairs was not merely a nuisance, but dangerous to the health of the surrounding community, and it was asked that the Municipality should take active measures to abate the nuisance. On the 8th June the Health Officer replied that the problem of disposing of the night soil of a very large area with the least possible amount of nuisance was obviously a difficult one, and that its solution was likely to be expensive. He said the Engineer was preparing plans and estimates for such a reconstruction of the depôt as would probably greatly diminish the nuisance complained of.

There the matter seems to have rested for the time being, but on the 12th December 1910 the Railway Company wrote forwarding a letter from their Chief Medical Officer and asking that active measures to abate the nuisance complained of might be taken at an early date. The Chief Medical Officer who stated that he had visited the depôt while operations were being carried on expressed the opinion that it amounted to a nuisance which rendered the quarters uninhabitable; that the nuisance has not in any way diminshed, and that if the night soil depôt continues to be used that portion of the railway land should not be used for railway quarters. The Health Officer replied on the 23rd December 1910 that from their nature it was impossible to render night soil depôts entirely free from offence but that the Chief Engineer had recommended alterations which it was hoped would be shortly carried out and should considerably minimise the nuisance. There again the matter was allowed to rest, but on the 23rd March 1914 the Railway Company wrote to the President of the Municipality calling his attention to the previous correspondence by which they had been endeavouring to get something done to improve the state of affairs and saying that each time they had been put off with promises. They stated that their Chief Medical Officer had again reported that nothing whatever had been done to do away with the nuisance which was a very serious one and rendered the quarters uninhabitable, and asked what the Committee proposed to do in the matter. On the 4th April the Secretary of the Municipality replied that the Municipality had made several costly experiments at another depôt with the object of mitigating the nuisance but that the results had so far disappointed expectations; that further experiments are being tried; that if they proved successful they will be introduced at the depôt at Keighley Street; that, in the meantime, very strict supervision was kept over the work carried out at the depôt, and that everything that could be done to reduce the nuisance was being done. On the 8th May the Railway Company again wrote that the matter seemed to be no nearer solution than when it was first raised and reiterated that the depôt was a nuisance and rendered the quarters uninhabitable, and that if the nuisance cannot be mitigated within three months it would be necessary to appeal to higher authorities against further use of the site as a depôt for dumping the night soil. On the 3rd December 1914 the Railway Company forwarded another report from their Chief Medical Officer and asked if the Committee wished to make any remarks on the subject before the matter was placed in the hands of their lawyers. On the 7th December the Committee replied that they could not admit that the conditions at the depot were as bad as represented or that it was indifferent with regard to effecting any reasonable improvement that may be suggested. It was said that it had been decided to repave the depôt with stone setts which would result in a considerable abatement of the nuisance and that until some practical alternative to night soil depôt is suggested the Municipality was not in a position to dispense with them. On the 16th March 1918 the Railway wrote giving notice of suit under section 42 of the Burma Municipal Act for an injunction to restrain the nuisance and for damages by way of compensation.

The plaint sets out the existence of this night soil depôt for the purpose of transferring night soil from carts in which it is collected to one of the Municipal drains. It alleges that such transfer takes place every night and gives rise to an intolerable stench and noxious vapours which spread themselves over the lands occupied by the plaintiffs corrupting the air and rendering the quarters unfit for human habitation. It alleges that the cause of action is a continuing cause and prays for an injunction restraining the defendant Committee from so maintaining and conducting such depôt as to constitute a nuisance ; such further and other relief as on the premises shall seem just and for the costs of the suit. The Municipal Committee in their written statement deny the allegations of fact as to the stench and noxious vapours ; deny entirely that the quarters are rendered unfit for human habitation ; allege that every care is taken that no unreasonable smell shall arise. They admit that the Railway Company had called upon them to abate the nuisance and they plead that the plaintiffs are not entitled to succeed by reason of their acquiesence and delay in taking action and by the fact that they are barred by limitation. They plead that plaintiffs are not entitled to an injunction as the balance of public convenience requires that the operations complained of shall be carried out and by reason of the fact that no more suitable place exists in Rangoon for transfer of sewage from the night soil carts to the sewer. They plead that no cause of action lies against them by reason of statutory authority given for the provision of the said site for disposal of sewage. Lastly, they plead that the operations have been carried out lawfully, in good faith and with due care and attention and that, therefore, no suit is maintainable.

I framed issues as to whether a nuisance was committed ; as to whether the defendant Committee were exempted by statutory authority from being sued ; as to the alleged acquiescence and delay ; as to the question of the balance of public convenience, and as to whether section 42A of the Act justified the plea that no suit was maintainable.

I will first deal with the question of statutory authority as given by the Burma Municipal Act and whether the defendant Committee is, therefore, not liable to be sued for an injunction. The defendant Committee claims that the Act imperatively requires them to provide for the disposal of offensive matter ; that to do so is not possible without creating some nuisance and that this must have been realized by the Legislature which, therefore, when enacting this provision, must have contemplated interference with private rights. It urges that its operations are not for gain but solely for the public benefit and that in respect of night soil their duty is so obviously imperative that the rights of individuals must be subordinated to the advantage of the community as a whole. The general principle on which this claim to exemption rests is well recognized and has frequently received judicial expression. In respect of acts giving powers to construct a railway it is pointed out by Lord Halsbury, Lord Chancellor, at the end of his judgment in London and Brighton and South Railway Company v. Truman (1) that they "were assumed to establish the proposition that the railway might be made and used whether a nuisance were created or not." And this is so although the Railway Company works for the gain of its share-holders as a commercial adventure. There is next the cases where powers are given to Companies, such as, Gas and Electric Lighting Companies. In respect to them no such assumption can be made. It is true their operations may result in great convenience to the public at large but they are carried out primarily for the pecuniary advantage of the share-holders and it is for them to prove affirmatively the exception they may claim. Lastly, we have the cases of Corporations and public bodies not working for private gain but primarily for the public good. In the case of the last class, amongst which a Municipal Committee is included, no right to create a nuisance or to interfere with private rights is to be assumed and it must be proved that they are entitled to exemption from an action to restrain them. The onus of proving this is on them, and it cannot be claimed that they come without proof within the rule allowed in the case of Railway Acts. To establish this it is sufficient to refer to passages in the judgments in the Metropolitan Asylum District v. Hill (2) where Lord Blackburn says: "It is clear that the burden lies on those who seek to establish that the Legislature intended to take away the private rights of individuals, to shew that by express words, or by necessary implication, such an intention appears," and Lord Watson says: "The onus of proving that the creation of a nuisance will be the inevitable result of carrying out the directions of the Legislature, lies upon the persons seeking to justify the nuisance." As to the law applicable to the claim to exemption, that is made it is set out clearly in this authority and I need not refer to the other cases in which it has also been laid down. Lord Selborne, Lord Chancellor, deals with the Act then under consideration and he says: "If express words,' or necessary implication and intendment, must be shown, in order to authorize the Poor Law Board, or any managers of an asylum, to create a nuisance, in the exercise of the discretionary powers given to them, I can find none in this Statute.

"The result is: (1) That this Act does not necessarily require anything to be done under it which might not be done without causing a nuisance; (2) That as to those things which may or may not be done under it, there is no evidence on the face of the Act that the Legislature supposed it to be impossible for any of them to be done (if they were done at all) somewhere and under some circumstances, without creating a nuisance; and (3) That the Legislature has manifested no intention that any of these optional powers, as to asylums, should be exercised at the expense of, or so as to interfere with, any man's private rights," and again: "If the Legislature had authorized some compulsory interference with private rights of property, within local limits which it might have thought fit to define for the purpose of establishing this asylum to be used for the reception of patients suffering from small-pox or other infectious disorders, and had provided for compensation to those who might be thereby injuriously affected (in such cases and under such conditions as it might have prescribed) the present case might have been like Rex v. Pease (3) and the Hammersmith and City Railway v. Brand (4). No person outside the statutory line of compensation even if the use of the asylum in the manner authorized by the Statute had been productive of serious damage to him, could then have obtained any relief or remedy, upon the footing that what the Statute authorized was a legal nuisance to himself, or, in itself an actionable wrong. But the case is different, when (as here) no interference at all with any private rights is authorized, and no place, or limit of space, is defined within which the establishment of such an asylum is made lawful". Lord Blackburn says: "I think that the case of the Hammersmith and City Railway v. Brand (4) in your Lordships' House, settles, beyond controversy that where the Legislature directs that a thing shall at all events be done, the doing of which, if not authorized by the Legislature, would entitle any one to an action, the right of action is taken away.

". . . The Legislature has very often interfered with the rights of private persons, but in modern times it has generally given compensation to those injured; and if no compensation is given it affords a reason, though not a conclusive one, for thinking that the intention of the Legislature was, not that the thing should be done at all events, but only that it should be done... without injury to others. What was the intention of the Legislature in any particular Act is a question of the construction of the Act." Lord Watson, after pointing out that it was not asserted that express power of authority to that effect had been given by the Act but that the contention was that, having regard to the nature of the public duties laid upon the appellants, and the necessities of the case, it must, on a fair construction of the Act, be held that the Legislature did intend them to exercise, and authorize them to exercise, such powers, says: "I see no reason to doubt that, wherever it can be shown to be matter of plain and necessary implication from the language of a Statute, that the Legislature did intend to confer the specific powers above referred to the result in law will be precisely the same as if these powers had been given in express terms. And I am disposed to hold that if the Legislature, without specifying either plan or site, were to prescribe by Statute that a public body shall, within certain defined limits, provide hospital accommodation for a class or classes of persons labouring under infectious disease, no injunction could issue against the use of an hospital established in pursuance of the Act, provided that it were either apparent or proved to the satisfaction of the Court that the directions of the Act could not be complied with at all, without creating a nuisance. In that case, the necessary result of that which they have directed to be done must presumably have been in the view of the Legislature at the time when the Act was passed.

"On the other hand, I do not think that the Legislature can be held to have sanctioned that which is a nuisance at Common Law, except in the case where it has authorized a certain use of a specific building in a specified position, which cannot be so used without occasioning nuisance, or in the case where the particular plan or locality not being prescribed, it has imperatively directed that a building shall be provided within a certain area and so used, it being an obvious or established fact that nuisance must be the result." Then, after dealing with the question of onus which lies upon the person claiming to justify the nuisance, he continues: "Their justification depends upon their making good these two propositions—in the first place, that such are the imperative orders of the Legislature; and, in the second place, that they cannot possibly obey those orders without infringing private rights."

I will next consider the provisions of the Burma Municipal Act to see whether they are such as justify the claim of the defendant Committee in the light of these expositions of the law applicable. Section 98 of the Act provides for special conservancy in certain towns and lays down that the Committee of any Municipality to which the Local Government may apply the provisions of the section shall provide for the cleansing of all street drains and public places within the limits of the Municipality, and the removal therefrom of all refuse and rubbish and shall provide for the removal of all house refuse. Sub-section (2) enacts—"The Committee shall provide within the limits of the Municipality sites and places for the collection, deposit, or disposal of all refuse, rubbish, and offensive matter: provided that the Local Government may require the said Committee in lieu of, or in addition to, such sites and places, to provide sites and places for such deposit and disposal beyond such limits." Sub-section (3) empowers the Committee to require owners or occupiers of premises to provide proper receptacles for collecting and keeping refuse rubbish and offensive matter prior to removal. This section was applied to the Municipality of Rangoon on the 1st July 1898. Sub-section (2) is clearly imperative in its terms and the Committee is left no option. It has to provide sites and places for the disposal of offensive matter. A discretion is given to the Committee as to the exact location of such sites and places but they must be within the limits of the Municipality. The proviso shows that it was recognized that it might become necessary to require the Committee to provide such sites and places beyond Municipal limits in lieu of one or more of those provided within those limits.

Mr. Giles argues that this section does not deal with night soil at all; that it and section 97 are joined under the one sub-heading "Deposit of offensive matter," and that both sections refer to refuse and rubbish from streets and houses. He argues that night soil is not dealt with as offensive matter but as sewage and is provided for in section 112.

"Sewage" is defined in section 2 (9) as meaning "night soil and other proper contents of water-closets, etc.," and the expression offensive matter is not used in the definition.

"Sewerage-connection" is defined in section 2 (11) as including "(a) any sewer between any water closet, etc, on the one hand, and any sewer set apart by a Committee for sewage and other offensive matter, on the other hand. Section 150 speaks of "the water of any sink, sewer or cesspool or any other offensive matter" and section 151 speaks of "night soil or filth or any noxious or offensive matter." It is not used in these sections as something different from night soil and the like, but as a general term ex majori cautela to cover possible omissions. It is urged that there are many provisions relating to sewage latrines, cesspools, night soil and the like, and that to include it here with house refuse and rubbish which might become offensive is at least strange. It may be that the drafting of the Act is open to criticism, in fact it has been criticized by both sides in this case, but I see no reason to doubt that in this section, which would not apply to all Municipalities, it was used as a general term to cover all offensive matter and that it does cover night soil. It is said that it is already provided for in section 112 but that section is permissive and deals with removal from buildings, lands or receptacles and is intended to provide a right of entry for this purpose. It does not deal with the disposal of the matter removed. Before a Committee can impose a scavenging-tax, it has to make provision for removal and disposal but it may remove without imposing a tax.

I must therefore, hold that section 93 (2) does apply to the matter in dispute and it imposes an imperative duty on the Committee to provide sites and places for the disposal of night soil.

The Act clearly does not permit a nuisance to be committed in the disposal of night soil in express terms and the next question is whether the nuisance was so certain a consequence that it must be assumed that the Legislature realized when passing the Act that the imperative duty imposed could not be performed without creating a nuisance, that is, without interfering with private rights. Lord Blackburn said in the Metropolitan Asylum District v. Hill (2): "If it be the fact that such an asylum must be a nuisance, unless on a site so extensive as to keep all habitations at a considerable distance, it may be that such a site cannot be obtained at all in the neighbourhood of the metropolis, or only at a cost so enormous as to make it practically impossible. If that is the case it might be for the consideration of the Legislature whether the certain danger of infection, from leaving the infectious sick paupers where they fell ill, exceeded that which would arise from a well regulated hospital erected in another place, to such an extent that it was for the public benefit that this latter risk should be run, and whether the rights of owners of property there should stand in the way of such a public benefit, or should be made to give way, with or without compensation." And so, in this case, if it is established or can be held that the depôt cannot be used without causing a nuisance it may well be that the Legislature held that the public advantage so far exceeded the injury to private individuals that the latter must give way.

For the defendant Committee it is argued that the imperative duty imposed is to dispose of offensive matter, that is, matter which remains, of necessity, offensive, and therefore a potential source of nuisance until finally disposed of; that the evidence and especially the experiments made show that it cannot be disposed of by any known method and the exercise of every care and precaution without causing a nuisance; that there is no provision, such as there is in many Acts, that no nuisance shall be caused; that the Legislature must have contemplated the extension of the town, and that it has provided for compulsory compensation in cases where the person injured is not in default.

It is not lightly to be assumed that the Legislature intended to take away private rights even in the case of a body acting solely for the benefit of the community as a whole. It is to be noted that section 98 (2) requires the provision of "sites and places" for the disposal of this offensive matter and, therefore, it is no doubt the case that some such method of removal and disposal as is in use was contemplated and not a disposal by a sewer system. Even in the area dealt with by this depôt there is a portion that is within the sewered area of Rangoon, but in that portion no less than 580 latrines exist, the contents of which are disposed of at this depôt. It is no doubt right to assume that the possibility of the extension of the residential area of the town was present to the mind of the Legislature and that depôts so situated when first fixed as not be a nuisance might later become a source of nuisance, but there I think the argument must stop. It cannot be carried further to show that, therefore, the probability of a nuisance was such that it must be assumed that it was the intention to take away the right of action. The proviso to section 98 (2), in my opinion, establishes the contrary inference, for it retains a power in the Local Government, when the necessity arises, to require the Committee to fix a site or place outside Municipal limits in lieu of one or more of such depôts. This makes it all the more essential for the Committee to establish affirmatively that private rights were deliberately taken away.

As to compensation, section 146 is relied on. It provides that the Committee may make compensation out of the Municipal fund to any person sustaining any damage by reason of the exercise of any of its powers and that it shall make such compensation where the person sustaining the damage was not himself in default. It goes on to provide that any dispute as to the amount of any compensation shall be settled in such manner as the parties may agree upon, or in default of agreement in the manner provided by the Land Acquisition Act so far as the provisions of that Act can be made applicable.

Mr. Giles urges that this section is only intended to enact the fund out of which compensation, allowed by the Act in various other sections, is to be paid. He refers to sections 91, 94, 118, 119, 120, 123 and 132, and argues that any other interpretation makes it superfluous. I do not think the argument can be accepted. General provisions for compensation are not unusual and there is no such necessity for specifying the fund out of which it is to be paid as to account for its enactment for that purpose alone. There is no doubt a mandatory provision for payment of compensation where the person injured is not in default and it would cover the present case, but it is not enacted particularly for this matter. Provision for the payment of compensation is undoubtedly an important factor to be weighed in deciding the question now under consideration. It has frequently been held that the absence of a provision for compensation would make it most difficult to establish the proposition contended for. But it has never been held that the presence of such a provision ipso facto establishes the intention to take away private rights. It is said that the provision for acquiring the land shows that the Legislature contemplated a nuisance. The provision is a general one intended to apply to many and varied instances and cannot therefore, I think, be so used. The result of acquiring the railway land would only dispose of one out of many possible claimants and might well result in the Committee having to acquire at great cost lands it did not require, under penalty of closing the depôt, moving the Local Government and then acquiring sites outside the Municipality.

We have, then, an imperative duty and a general provision for compensation which does not carry as much weight as a special provision to meet the particular case.

Next, there is the allegation that these depôts cannot be carried on without creating a nuisance. It is said that every effort has been made to abate the nuisance but that no method has been found or is known to exist by which a nuisance can be avoided. The method employed is as follows: Night soil is collected and removed to the depôt in carts. At the depôt there is an alley-way running due east and west from First Street on the one side to Strand Road on the other. The alley-way has walls about 4 feet high on each side and in the middle, and about 25 feet from First Street, there is a manhole connecting with the end of one of the main disposal sewers of Rangoon. The walls at this manhole are raised 11 feet and are surmounted by a water tank to which are attached two hoses. Over the manhole is a horizontal grid with narrow parallel bars and lower down there are two more and nearly vertical grids. The carts come up the alley-way and stand over the first grid, the top is opened and a hose-pipe inserted which carries water into the cart to wash the contents out through an opening in the bottom of the cart. The second hose-plays on the matter falling on the grid to wash it down through the grid without delay. Carts coming from native bastis contain various extraneous matter besides night soil, such as sticks, broken stones, grass and broken bottles, which cannot be allowed into the sewer and the grids are intended to hold them up. To separate them from the night soil they are played on by a strong current of water. When cleansed they are removed to an ordinary day conservancy cart standing outside the wall. The cart is then thoroughly washed down and an antiseptic used and then passes on.

The shaking up of the night soil in the carts on their way to the depôt generates a quantity of noxious gas which is released when the lid is opened. This is blown by the wind and is said to cause a very foul smell which is an intolerable nuisance to those residing to windward of the depôt. It is also said that the procedure described causes a vast quantity of bacteria to be wafted into the air which are carried about and are a source of grave potential danger to the health of the neighbourhood. To remedy this nuisance experiments have been made. A telescopic tube was provided which could be connected with the opening at the bottom of the cart so that the contents might be carried underground before being released. This method was abandoned because the extraneous matter often blocked the opening in the cart and had to be forced through by bamboos. It also blocked the pipe and could not be moved without opening the lid or disconnecting the pipe so that the smells were let loose. It does not seem that these difficulties should have been insurmountable.

The next experiment was an enclosed chamber with a tall chimney and a fan to create an indraught. It had doors at each end, 10 feet by 8 feet for the ingress and egress of the carts and were opened only for that purpose. It was found that when the doors were opened the noxious vapour got out and the smell was as bad as ever. The failure was due to the indraught not being strong enough and to the doors being too large apparently. It was tried for four months. Here, again, it would seem as if there was not sufficient cause to abandon the experiment without further effort.

It is claimed that every effort has been made to avoid a nuisance but that it is impossible. However, the question is whether it was so clearly impossible that it must be assumed that the Legislature was aware of this and nevertheless imposed the imperative duty. It may be taken that it was known that carts would be used, but these carts need not be a nuisance. If the lids are properly fixed down the only smell from the cart would be from matter carelessly spilt when filling the cart. As to the disposal at the depôt it is clear that no method was laid down and that the matter was left entirely to the Committee. I cannot hold it has been established that the Legislature intended to sanction the method then in use or to control the Committee in any way. Nor can I find any sufficient ground for holding that the disposal by carts at a depôt was so certain to result in a nuisance that it must have been in the contemplation of the Legislature. Lord Hatherley, L. C., in Attorney-General v. Leeds Corporation (5) in dealing with the case of a sewer said: "Yet the Legislature may have thought that the thing could be done (and, for aught I know, it is not impossible it can be done) without creating a nuisance." In my opinion, that is exactly the position here. In Jordeson v. Sutton Southcoates and Drypool Gas Company (6) North, J., held—"To make out their case the Company must show that they cannot, without interference with the plaintiff's rights, do something they are bound to do." They have not shown that in this case and I must, therefore, hold that this suit will lie against them.

Before leaving this matter I think I ought to refer to the case of Muhammad Mohidin Sait v. Municipal Commissioners for the City of Madras (7) which was strongly relied on by the defendant Committee. It dealt with the use of a burial and burning ground. By their act the Commissioners were under a statutory obligation to open burning grounds and provision was made for compensation. A power to acquire compulsorily land for such burning grounds was also provided. It was held that no suit would lie and that the case was governed by the principle enunciated in Truman's case. The fact which distinguishes that case from the present one, in my opinion, is that no allegation was made of any negligence whatever in the manner of using the burning ground and, further, the method in which the imperative duty was to be performed was not open to question but was settled by long established custom and the habits and feelings of the community.

I will next deal with the other issues relating to the maintainability of this suit.

It is said that by long acquiescence and delay plaintiffs are barred. I do not think there is any proof of either on the part of plaintiffs. Objection was taken as long ago as 1908 and the Committee promised an abatement of the nuisance. This was repeated from time to time. The nuisance, if it is a nuisance, is a continuing nuisance and recurs every night. In Attorney-General v. Leeds Corporation (5) it was held that though the sewer had been completed and in operation sixteen years before proceedings were taken, the Court would interfere at the suit of the landowners and that was partly based on the fact that it was a continually increasing evil. Again, in Ogston v. Aberdeen District Tramways Company (8) the nuisance began in 1880, it got acute in 1886, and proceedings were not taken till 1895.

As regards the argument based on the balance of public convenience, that is not of itself any ground on which to hold that a suit would not lie. It is a matter which, under certain circumstances, might possibly be taken into consideration, in dealing with the intention to be attributed to the Legislature and this I have already pointed out and have dealt with it.

As to section 42A of the Act, that section bars a suit in connection with acts lawfully done in good faith and with due care and attention. If the defendant Committee was authorized to do what is complained of in the manner they have done the suit fails, but if they have been and are committing a nuisance not legalized the section is clearly no bar.

I have then to decided whether they have committed a nuisance.

The nuisance alleged is two-fold :

(1) by reason of the unbearable smell, and

(2) on the ground of the potential danger to the health of those residing in the quarters.

(8) (1897) App. Cas. 111; 66 L. J. P. C. 1; 75 L. T. 638; 91 J. P. 436.

As to the former, it is not denied that at certain seasons of the year and when the wind is in the direction of the quarters there is a bad smell. But it is said the resulting nuisance is very much exaggerated and that such nuisance as there may be is only occasional and does not amount to a nuisance at law. The evidence is strangely divergent. The Chief Engineer and Dr. Blake, the officer-in charge of the conservancy, cannot deny that in the hot weather and when the wind is in the south-west the smell is very bad. Any resident of Rangoon who has had the misfortune to meet one of the night-soil carts knows the almost overpowering stench that emanates from them. Dr Blake admits that one must become aware of it long before you meet the cart and remain aware of it for something like twenty yards after the cart has passed By the churning up of the contents a large quantity of noxious gas is evolved, and this when let loose at the depôt must give rise to an intolerable stench. It may be that it is somewhat less in the cold season but that in Rangoon is a very short period. Dr. Spence paid a visit at the end of December to the depôt and says there was no smell to speak of. In fact, he implies that even to windward of the dump you had to seek for it to become aware of it. But he went once only and under the most favourable circumstances. He and all the other witnesses agreed that they would not live there by reason of the smell. On the other side we have the raiterated opinion of the Chief Medical Officer that the smell was unbearable and made the quarters unfit for human habitation. Major Whitmore and Dr. Hayne describe it as "overpowering" and 'horrible." They went there in May and June, which are said to be the worst months. The second plaintiff deposed that he had to shut his windows to try and keep the smell out and that it was so bad as to cause him and his family at times to vomit. It is a very great hardship to have shut out the breeze on hot weather nights and in the rains. Major Whitmore's evidence shows that when the wind is towards the quarters there is an overpowering smell in First Street on which they abut when it is from the north-east or away from them there is not much smell in First Street. He expresses the opinion that the smell alone must interfere with the comfort of those living in the quarters, and was a great nuisance to them. Dr. Hayne's evidence shows the smell was very bad and at times horrible and it varied in intensity on different occasions. He considers that at night the depôt made comfort impossible for the inhabitants of the quarters. He also considers that the area available there is far too small to avoid causing a nuisance.

In reply to this, Dr. Blake says the smell gets less the farther you go from the grid and there is no smell in the day time. The smell is worst when the lid is first opened and decreases and is less in wet weather. If the wind is from the north-east there would be no smell at the quarters. He has to admit that the smell is a nuisance when the wind is towards the quarters. He admits the smell from a passing cart is often sickening. If so what must it be when at its worst when the lid is first opened? Carts waiting their turn would wait in the road, and those approaching from the First Street side would stand practically outside the quarters and that would be unpleasant for those in the quarters. Even in the cold weather he admits there is sometimes a smell at the quarters.

The evidence establishes, in my opinion that there is an unbearable smell from the depôt and when the wind is towards, or even partially towards the quarters, the smell must be a substantial and, indeed, a grievous interference with the comfort of those living in the quarters. A smell which can properly only be described as sickening or unbearable or overpowering or horrible is not a matter which can be allowed to be a nuisance at one time and not at another. It cannot be argued that the disposal must so certainly result in a nuisance, that the fact must have been in the contemplation of the Legislature for the purposes of the statutory exemption but is not one in fact. The fact that there may be and possibly are days or seasons of the year when by reason of the direction of the wind little smell is perceptible at the quarters and that there is no smell in the day time is not sufficient, and I hold that the depôt is, by reason of the smell complained of, a nuisance in law to the inhabitants of the quarters.

I do not propose to go deeply into the second ground pleaded. The experts differ. Major Whitmore, while admitting that a large number of experiments would be preferable, holds that those he made justify an inference as to the likelihood of the dump causing bacterial infection. He considers it established that there is a material increase in the number of bacteria in the air owing to the dump. Colonel Pearse, on the other hand, considers there are not sufficient data to form any opinion and he is not prepared to admit that the increase of the bacteria can be said to be caused by the dump and not come from anywhere else. It may be that the most obviously probable source is the dump and that there are more bacteria to be found to windward of the dump than upwind from the dump. Major Whitmore considers that the dump is a source of potential danger to the health of the persons living in the quarters. It may be so, but I can come, on the evidence before me, to no definite conclusion. If it is such a source of danger it is all the more a nuisance, but even if that be held not established it is still a nuisance.

Plaintiffs seek an injunction restraining the Committee from committing this nuisance. The Committee strenuously opposes the granting of an injunction and mainly on the ground that it would result in such serious consequences to the community in general. It does not deny liability to compensate in damages, indeed it refers to the express provision that damages shall be paid where the person injured is not in default. That provision is, however, a general one and not enacted for this particular matter. Plaintiffs have not asked for damages and cannot be compelled to accept them in lieu of an injunction if they have established their right to an injunction. In the case of Attorney-General v. Leeds Corporation (5), to which I have already referred, an injunction was granted restraining the use of a sewer unless and until it was not a nuisance. The same argument as to the public necessity was used but was rejected and Sir W. M. James, V. C., said: "I am not much impressed, as several of my predecessors were not, by the danger to the health of the inhabitants of the town if I interfere with their sewage. I believe they will find means of removing the sewage without the danger to health which has been suggested; but at all events, I think, the people below the town have a right to say that a nuisance must not be created for them."

In Shelfer v. City of London Electric Lighting Company (9) the question whether an injunction should be granted was fully considered. Their Lordships concurred in the dictum of Lord Kingsdown in Imperial Gas Light and Oake Co. v. Broadbent (10), "but when he has established his right at law, I apprehend that, unless there be something special in the case, he is entitled as of course to an injunction to prevent the recurrence of the violation."

It was said by Lord Lindley, L. J.: "The Court has always protested against the notion that it ought to allow a wrong to continue simply because the wrong doer is able and willing to pay for the injury he may inflict. Neither has the circumstance that the wrong doer is in some sense a public benefactor (e. g., a gas or water Company or a sewer authority) ever been considered a sufficient reason for refusing to protect by injunction an individual whose rights are being persistently infringed." Lord Justice A. L. Smith in this case laid it down as a good working rule that—

"(1) if the injury to the plaintiff's legal rights is small;

(2) and is one which is capable of being estimated in money;

(3) and is one which can be adequately compensated by a small money payment;

(4) and the case is one in which it would be oppressive to the defendant to grant an injunction:—

then damages in substitution for an injunction may be given."

Moreover, it has never been allowed to a wrong-doer to force a neighbour to sell by persisting in continuing the wrong.

This case does not fall under the rule enunciated by Lord Justice A. L. Smith, nor does it present any such special circumstances as would justify the refusal of the injunction to which the plaintiffs have established their right.

At the same time, I am not unmindful of the possibility nor do I desire to minimise the fact that to prohibit the depôt may result in serious inconvenience to the public at large and I trust that the order I propose to pass may render it possible, while supporting the plaintiff's rights, to permit of a solution of the difficulty. If time is granted, it may be that the plaintiff Company may come to an arrangement whereby its land may be acquired without loss, or the defendant Committee may be able to provide that the depôt be worked without causing the nuisance complained of or obtain legislation legalizing the nuisance, or, if none of these be possible, that time will enable the orders of the Local Government to be obtained and the depôt to be removed to some place outside Municipal limits without interference with the needs of the public.

I grant a decree that an injunction do issue prohibiting the defendant Committee from so using this depôt as to cause a nuisance to the plaintiff Company and those dwelling on its land; and, further, that the said injunction be suspended for a term of six months from this date with liberty to the defendant Committee to apply for an extension of the said term for good and sufficient cause for such further period as to the Court may seem just.

The defendant Committee will pay the costs of the plaintiff Company, and, in view of the complexity of the case, I fix Advocates' fees at 10 gold mohurs a day for seven days.

Lastly, I desire to record my appreciation of the care and skill that Counsel have devoted to this important case and to thank them for the great assistance they have given me. As to experts' fees, I am not prepared to sanction them at present, as I believe the rules do not permit of their being given in the case of Government officials, but I will reserve the point and hear Counsel, both as to whether they can be and as to whether they should be allowed in this case.

(July 3rd, 1919.) I have now heard Counsel. There is no objection to the grant of expert fees to Major Whitmore as part of the costs.

Mr. Giles asks for Rs. 600. Counsel for defendants leaves the matter to the Court

Major Whitmore went four times to the depôt in the middle of the night. He conducted experiments which required previous preparation and subsequent examination of a laborious and technical character, and I consider this amount reasonable. I allow Rs. 600 as expert fees.

JUDGMENT.

TWOMEY, C. J.—The Burma Railways Company (plaintiffs-respondents) occupying a plot of land adjoining one of the Rangoon Municipal night soil depôts sued for an injunction restraining the Municipal Committee (defendants-appellants) from maintaining and continuing the depot so as to constitute a nuisance. The transfer of night soil from carts to the Municipal drains was alleged to give rise to an intolerable stench and noxious vapours which render the plaintiffs' quarters unfit for habitation. The Municipal Committee denied the allegations as to stench and noxious vapours and alleged that every care is taken to prevent any "unreasonable" smell from arising at the depôt. But the principal defence was that no cause of action lies as the Committee have statutory authority under section 98 of the Burma Municipal Act for providing the site in question for the disposal of sewage. They also pleaded, under section 42A, that the operations have been carried out lawfully in good faith and with due care and attention. There were further pleas as to limitation and as to delay and acquiescence on the part of the plaintiffs, but we are not concerned with these pleas now.

The learned Judge on the Original Side has found that an imperative duty is laid on the Committee by section 98 of the Municipal Act to provide depôts for the disposal of night soil. But he has also found that section 98 is not sufficient to cover the Municipal Committee's actual operations at the night soil depôt because (a) the depôt is in fact a nuisance, (b) the Act does not expressly or by necessary implication permit a nuisance to be committed in the disposal of night soil, and (c) the Legislature cannot have contemplated the nuisance as an inevitable result of carrying out the provisions of section 98.

The Judge was further of opinion that the Committee could claim immunity under section 42A only if they could show that they were legally authorized to commit the nuisance complained of, i.e., that it was lawfully done. In short, they would have to show that what they did is covered by section 98 before they could shelter themselves under section 42A, and they had not shown this. The memorandum of appeal does not refer to section 42A at all, and it may be taken that the Committee do not seriously dispute the Judge's finding as to that section.

It is also not disputed now that the method of disposal at the night soil depôt does in fact constitute a nuisance to the plaintiffs.

To succeed in this appeal the Municipal Committee have to satisfy us, first, that the Trial Judge's construction of section 98 as imposing an imperative obligation is correct and, secondly, that he has erred in his application of the section, i.e., in not holding that the section protects the Committee even though their operations do in fact constitute a nuisance.

The Municipal Committee's case, with reference to section 98, is that sub-section (2) imperatively requires them to provide depôts for the disposal of night soil within the Municipal limits leaving it to the Local Government, if it thinks fit, to require the depôts to be outside the Municipal limits. The section does not mention night soil at all; but it is contended that the term "offensive matter" in sub-section (2) includes night soil. For the respondent Company it is argued that the section must, for two reasons, be regarded as permissive and not mandatory.

First, an option is left to the Local Government whether the section is to be applied or not to any particular Municipality. It has been applied by the Local Government to Rangoon; but, it is argued, the very fact that the Legislature did not directly apply it but left it to the Local Government to say whether it should be applied or not deprives the section of the mandatory character which it might otherwise bear. This view receives some support from the opinion expressed by Lord Watson in Metropolitan Asylum District v. Hill (2). In that case the Act authorized the Poor Law Board to form districts in the metropolitan area as they might think fit and to direct that for each district so formed there shall be an asylum or asylums. It was held that as the Board was not bound to form a district they were under no statutory compulsion to establish an asylum. Partly on this ground it was held that the managers were not performing an imperative duty imposed by Statute in establishing a small pox hospital in a certain district. The compulsion, if any, was that of the Poor Law Board and not of the Legislature. Similarly, in the present case it is argued that any compulsion would come from the Local Government and not from the Legislature which has left to the Local Government the option of applying section 98 or not. I am doubtful whether this argument can be accepted. It seems to me that it would carry us too far. For, if a section which is prima facie mandatory is to lose its mandatory character merely because the Local Government has the option of applying it or not, it would follow that none of the provisions of the Act can preserve a mandatory character in view of sections 3 and 4, which leave it to the Local Government to decide whether the Act shall or shall not apply at all to a particular local area.

The second reason is more substantial, namely, that the Municipal Act has no compulsory provision for the removal of night soil from latrines, privies, etc., but confers only permissive authority under section 112. If the Committee choose not to exercise this permissive authority to remove, there would be no night soil for disposal at the depôts. It would follow that the Committee are not bound to undertake the diposal of nightsoil. Sub-section (1) of section 98 lays on the Committee the duty of removing "house refuse" of any kind from premises within the Municipal limits. But it was not contended at the trial of the suit nor is it urged in the memorandum of appeal that night soil is included in the term "house refuse" in sub section (1). The contention all through has been that night soil comes under sub section (2) by reason of its being "offensive matter," not by reason of its being "house refuse." Mr. McDonnell has now brought to our notice an English Municipal Enactment, Public Health (London) Act, 189[illegible], section 141, under which "night soil" is included in "house refuse" for the special purposes of that enactment. But we have to consider whether the term has this meaning in section 98 of the Municipal Act, and we must be guided by the provisions of the Act itself. "House refuse" is not defined in the Act. But "sewage" is defined in section 2, clause (9), as meaning night soil and other proper contents of watercloseta, latrines, etc. And the permissive section 112 expressly refers to the removal of "sewage." In my opinion, if it was the intention of the Legislature that section 98 should cover the disposal of night soil, it is unlikely that we should find in the section no express reference to night soil, or sewage as in section 112 which deals with the same subject. The provisions of section 98 point, I think, to such house refuse as, house and compound sweepings, garbage, rags and bones, waste paper and the debris of house keeping rather than to night soil.

There is no imperative obligation to remove "offensive matter" as such, and, therefore, no imperative obligation to dispose of it at depôts or otherwise. But in view of the Municipal Committee's contention in the Trial Court and in the memorandum of appeal that, "offensive matter" in section 98 includes night soil, I note that this contention appears to be untenable. The words "offensive matter" by themselves would of course include nightsoil. But we have to construe them here with reference to the context and especially with reference to the associated words "refuse and rubbish." The term "offensive matter" is used in association with the same words in section 143. The term "offensive matter" is also used in section 150 but in association with other words. From the terms of these sections and the side notes thereto it would appear that the words "offensive matter" in section 150 do include night soil while in section 148 they do not. In each of these sections the general words "offensive matter" are controlled and restricted by the particular words which precede them. The particular words in section 150 show that night soil is included while the particular words in section 148 indicate that it is not. If we construe the term "offensive matter" in section 148 as including night soil, the absurd result would follow that people could be fined for depositing night soil in drains specially set apart for the purpose of carrying off sewage, i. e., sewers. For such special drains are expressly excepted from the operation of section 150, but not from the operation of section 148.

Now, if night soil is not included in "offensive matter" in section 14-, we can hardly hold that it is included in "offensive matter" in section 98, the associate words, viz., "refuse and rubbish," being the same in both sections.

"Rubbish," it may be pointed out, is clearly used as something distinct from sewage (and, therefore from night soil) in sections 50 and 112. "Refuse," in its ordinary meaning, does not include night soil. It is given in the Century Dictionary as a synonym for rubbish.

To sum up this part of the case it is, to say the least, very doubtful whether section 98 applies to night soil at all, and even if it does apply the section imposes no imperative duty to remove the night soil and, therefore, no imperative duty to dispose of it. It may be argued that if the Legislature ordains that sites shall be provided for the disposal of night soil the Legislature must be supposed to have contemplated as an imperative duty the actual removal of night soil to these sites for disposal there. But we are met by the difficulty that in section 98 (1) where the Legislature provides for the removal of refuse and rubbish, the Legislature expressly directs that it shall be done and does not leave it be inferred.

On the above grounds, I would hold that the power to remove and dispose of night soil is not proved to be mandatory, and if this view is correct there can be no doubt that the Committee are bound to exercise the power with due regard to the private rights of others. It would follow that the plaintiff Company are entitled to an injunction to restrain the Committee from infringing their rights by committing the nuisance complained of.

Turning now to the second part of the case, we will assume that the views expressed above are erroneous. Let us concede, as the learned Judge did, that section 98 does impose an imperative duty on the Committee to provide sites and places for the disposal of night soil, and, presumably, also to dispose of night soil at those places. We have to consider whether this would be a sufficient defence to the suit.

For the Committee it is contended that the Legislature having imposed upon them these imperative duties with reference to night soil, it must be taken that the Legislature also gave them full discretion to choose sites for the night soil depôts. In support of this contention we are referred to the rulings of the English Courts in the interpretation of Railway Acts, and especially to the case of the London and Brighton Railway Company v. Truman (1). It is clear from that case that a Railway Company, acting under its statutory authority, has an absolute discretion in selecting sites for additional stations yards and other conveniences in the vicinity of the railway. Lord Blackburn held that the Railway Company were not bound to prove the impossibility of erecting cattle yards and pens anywhere else within the defined limits without being a nuisance to anyone. It is urged that the Municipal Committee similarly are not bound to prove the impossibility of establishing their night soil depôts any where else without being a nuisance to the neighbouring occupiers. But it is clear from the judgments in Truman's case (1) that the principle of construction applied to Railway Acts is not of general application. The reason for the special construction given to Railway Acts is explained in the following passage of the judgment of Lord Selborne: "Although no exact site or local limits may be prescribed by the terms of the authority for the acquisition of that land, yet being directly subsidiary to the general traffic of the line, it follows from the very nature of the purposes authorized that it must be land contiguous to the railway or some of its stations, the local situation of the whole line of railway being within certain limits of deviation defined by the Act." It does not appear that the same principle has ever been applied in construing the powers of a sanitary authority for the disposal of sewage. Reference may be made to the following cases of this nature: Attorney-General v. Leeds Corporation (5), Price's Patent Candle Co., Ltd. v. London

County Council (11), Attorney-General v. Council of the Borough of Birmingham (12). In all these cases the sanitary authority was restrained from committing a nuisance in the disposal of sewage. It is true that in English Municipal Legislation there is a general provision requiring the powers of the sanitary authority to be exercised so as not to cause a nuisance. But these cases are instructive as showing the intention of the Legislature, at any rate in England, that such operations as the disposal of sewage must be carried out in such a way as not to cause a nuisance. There is no special clause in the Burma Municipal Act requiring the Committee to exercise its powers so as not to cause a nuisance. But neither is there any clause expressly excusing a nuisance. It is clear that the burden lies on the Municipal Committee to establish that the Legislature intended to take away the private rights of individuals. They must show that such an intention appears either by express words or by necessary implication. In dealing with this part of the case the learned Trial Judge points out that the methods of removal and disposal are left entirely to the Committee. The Act gives no direction about removal by carts or as to the methods to be followed at the night soil depôts. It may be, as the respondents now in fact contend, that these methods cannot be practised without committing a nuisance, but it is by no means established that they are the only praticable methods of dealing with the night soil, and the Judge was no doubt right in holding it not established that the Legislature must have had these very methods or some such methods in view. But it appears that even the present method of disposal can be practised without causing a nuisance, if it is carried out at a sufficient distance from dwellings. The plaintiff Company's buildings are within 50 feet of the depôt. Dr. Hayne gave his opinion that there is not a sufficient area at the depôt to deal with night soil business. He suggested that the area set apart for the purpose should be extensive enough to have a free space of 50 yards separating the actual depôt from neighbouring buildings. It seems probable that if the Municipal Committee had taken up a sufficient area of land for this purpose at the outset, no question of nuisance from this particular method of disposal would have arisen. Adopting the language of Lord Selborne in the Metropolitan Asylum District v. Hill (2), I would hold that there is no evidence on the face of the Municipal Act that the Legislature supposed it to be impossible for the effectual disposal of night soil to be carried out somewhere and under some circumstances without creating a nuisance.

No stress is now laid upon the fact that the night soil depôt was established some years before the plaintiff Company occupied a plot of land adjacent thereto and built quarters thereon for the members of their staff. In Truman's case (1) Lord Halsbury observed that the old notion of people losing their rights of complaint because they come to a nuisance has long since been exploded. Further authorities on that point are cited in Kerr on Injunctions, 5th Edition page 207.

In paragraph 5 of the memorandum of appeal reference is made to the provisions of section 146 of the Municipal Act, providing for the payment of compensation to persons sustaining damage by reason of the exercise of any of the powers vested in the Municipal Committee. This section was relied upon before the Trial Judge as going to show that the Legislature intended to take away private rights. But, as the learned Judge points out, the provision is in very general terms and has no special relation to the powers for removal and disposal of sewage. In my opinion, it would certainly be going too far to infer from this section that the Legislature contemplated the causing of a nuisance in the disposal of sewage.

I have not discussed the question whether the Municipal Committee acted negligently in carrying out the night soil disposal operations. There is evidence showing that more might have been done to mitigate the nuisance. But the point seems immaterial, in view of the finding which I think we must come to, viz., that the Committee are not authorized expressly or by necessary implication to commit a nuisance and that the Legislature cannot be supposed to have contemplated the nuisance as a necessary result of exercising the powers conferred on the Committee by section 98.

For these reasons, I would dismiss the appeal with costs, Advocate's fees 10 gold mohurs a day for three days.

YOUNG, J.—Having had the advantage of reading the judgment of the Chief Judge, with the conclusion of which I agree, I need only add a very few words. Mr. McDonnell having candidly admitted that he did not think he could contend that the smell was not a nuisance, our task is considerably lessened and is confined to the questions, (i) whether the disposal of night soil by the Municipality is imperatively required by the Legislature, and (ii) whether a nuisance is the practically inevitable result.

The first question depends on the construction of the Burma Municipal Act, and I agree with the Chief Judge in thinking that section 98, if otherwise imperative, does not cease to be so from the fact that the section only becomes operative at the discretion of the Local Government. Under section 3 (1) the whole Act only becomes operative from the date on which the Local Government chooses to appoint, and whatever may have been the effect of the delegation of powers to the Local Government Board under the Metropolitan Poor Act, 1867, which caused Lord Watson in the Metropolitan Asylum District v. Hill (2) to hold that the compulsion was not that of the Legislature, I cannot think that in the Burma Municipalities Act the delegation by the Legislature to the Government itself of the power to apply the section makes the compulsion—if it otherwise exists—that of the Government and not that of the Legislature.

I am unable, however, to agree with the Chief Judge in thinking that the terms "refuse," "rubbish" and "offensive matter" in section 98 do not include sewage Prima facie it is admitted that they clearly may: it, therefore, follows that good reason must be shown for excluding the meaning.

It is urged that in section 112 the Legislature expressly mentions sewage and an inference is drawn from the omission to mention it in section 98.

In my opinion, section 98 (1) is the compulsory counter-part of the optional section 112 (1).

Section 112 permits a Municipality to remove sewage and rubbish from any building or land within its limits. Section 98 compels it to remove refuse and rubbish of every kind from the same places. I think, the meaning is the same, and cannot think that the Legislature intended to leave the removal of sewage optional. Sub-clause (2) of section 98 provides the next step and requires the Municipality after it has removed this refuse and rubbish of every kind to provide sites and places on which it may be collected, deposited and disposed of. It adds the still more comprehensive term, "and all offensive matter."

I cannot think that any distinction is intended to be drawn or that any thing is intended to be collected, deposited and disposed of under sub-clause (2) which was not intended to be removed under sub-clause (1), and I consider offensive matter merely hyphened rubbish or refuse.

Then, it is further argued that the terms "refuse," "rubbish" or "offensive matter" do not always include night soil in the Act and reliance is placed on section 148.

This section penalises anyone who, without the permission of the Committee, deposits earth, refuse, rubbish or offensive matter in any public drain or drain communicating therewith, and it is argued that if these terms include night soil anyone would be liable to be fined for throwing it into a drain even though it were specially constructed for the purpose. The argument seems to me to lose sight of the governing words "without the permission of the Committee."

The Committee is especially careful to see to the provision of latrines and such like, and numerous sections give them wide powers to see that these are built in sufficient numbers and properly kept.

To argue that refuse cannot include night soil because the use of such places for their proper purposes would then be punishable under the section would to me seem only possible if the words "without the permission of the Committee" were absent. The Committee must be assumed to permit the proper use of the places which it has ordered to be built for the very purpose.

Section 150 penalises the improper use of drains not set aside for the purpose: the term "offensive matter" is used and is admitted to include night soil. If the term includes it in one place, it probably includes it everywhere unless there are strong reasons to the contrary. It is urged that if night soil is included under the terms "refuse" or "offensive matter" in section 148, this section and section 150 overlap.

It may be so, but if so I would prefer to assume the fact rather than to hold the Legislature intended to include night soil under the term "offensive matter" in one section and exclude it in the preceding section.

I incline, however, to think that in the one section the draftsman had chiefly in mind solid matter and in the other liquid. In section 148 he speaks of "earth" and "offensive matter," in section 150 of "water" and "offensive matter."

As a matter of fact, the Legislature seems to me to be sometimes more timorous than at others. In section 98 it is bold and speaks of refuse and rubbish only. In section 151, determined to leave nothing to chance, it speaks of any carcase, dirt, dung, bones, ashes, night soil or filth or any noxious or offensive matter, and imposes a fine on any owner or occupier who does not put any such matter into a proper receptacle. Section 98 (3) authorizes the Committee to require owners and occupiers to provide such receptacles and I should regret to think it necessary to hold that any of these things had to be placed in "the proper receptacles" by owners and occupiers under section 151 but that the Municipality was not bound to remove them under section 98.

It may be said that we are concerned not to speculate as to the intentions of the Legislature but to construe its language.

This is true, but I am of opinion that "refuse," which primarily means anything refused or rejected, is amply wide enough to include night soil, and I cannot regard the fact that the Legislature speaks expressly of sewage in section 112 and of night soil in section 151 as any sufficient reason for supposing it did not intend to include it in the term "refuse" or "offensive matter" in section 98.

It is admitted that the Local Government has applied section 98 to the Municipality of Rangoon and I think under sub-clause (1) the terms "refuse" "rubbish" and "house refuse" include night soil and that the Committee is bound by law to remove it.

I think that under clause (2) the Committee is bound to provide places and sites for the collection, deposit and disposal of what it is bound to remove under clause 1, and that under clause (3) it is entitled to call upon owners and occupiers to provide proper receptacles for the reception of all such things, till the Municipal servants can remove them.

There is no express provision that it is to be the Municipality that is to dispose of the refuse, rubbish and offensive matter: all that it is expressly required to do is, to provide sites where such offensive matter may be collected, deposited and disposed of. It is not expressly required either to collect, deposit or dispose of such things.

If it has, as I think, to remove such offensive matter it would naturally have to deposit it in the places which it is bound to provide for the purpose, and if so I think it may be held that it is bound to dispose of it.

I think, therefore, that section 98 imposes on the Municipality the duty both of removing and disposing of the night soil.

We are not now concerned with any nuisance arising or alleged to arise from the removal of the night soil from premises —or its transport through the streets— but only with one that arises from its disposal at this particular site and place. The question is whether this enforced disposal of the night soil inevitably causes a nuisance. If it does, the Municipality is excused; if it does not, the Municipality is not.

Dr. Blake, the Municipal Veterinary Officer, in whose charge the various depôts lie, tells us that during the cold weather no smell from this particular depôt reaches across the street; that in May, which he says is the worst month, there would be a bad smell, but not beyond the width of the street, and he, therefore, naturally admits that the larger the area of the depôt, the less the nuisance will be to outside people.

Dr. Hayne, the then Chief Medical Officer for the Railway, states that he thinks it would tend to check the smell to a great degree if the area were properly enclosed, but he does not think it large enough, and suggests that a depôt should be 100 yards square, so that the transfer of the night soil should take place 50 yards from any inhabited place.

Now this transfer operation which causes the nuisance complained of does not take place in the centre of the depôt but at the extreme end, and that end is the one nearest to the plaintiff's quarters.

These lie on the other side of First Street, if the width of the road, which Exhibit 1 shews to be only 30 feet makes, as Dr. Blake thinks, so much difference, the distance caused by the removal of the place of transfer further inside the depôt might prevent the nuisance altogether. There is no evidence that experiments have ever been made to settle the range of the smell.

The depôt has been in existence 30 years; if its existing area is insufficient, there is no evidence that more land might not have been taken up in the first instance: if the Municipality took up too small an area, that is their fault as well as their misfortune.

Lord Blackburn, in the Metropolitan Asylum District v. Hill (2) at page 208* of the Report, seems to have been doubtful as to the position if it were shown that the thing enjoined and done must create a nuisance unless it was done on a site so extensive that it could not be obtained at all or only at a cost so enormous as to make it practically impossible. In that case it was held that the act complained of was not imperatively enjoined by Statute. In the present case I think it is enjoined but nothing in the Act has been brought to our notice to shew that the Legislature thought it impossible to carry out the work without causing a nuisance: on the contrary, the Legislature in section 98 seems to have contemplated isolated areas being selected in the first instance, a growth of population attended possibly by a nuisance in the future, and if so a compulsory transference of the depôts to more remote sites, outside Municipal limits.

These words seem to me rather to negative the idea that the Legislature regarded the nuisance as inevitable or contemplated authorizing one.

It foresaw the possibility and provided for it. It gave the Municipality a wide area of selection in the first instance and provided for a subsequent compulsory change of site, if a nuisance arose. The nuisance arises from the transfer of the night soil and the transfer takes place by night. The land of this particular depôt is surrounded by roads and there is no complaint from passers by: the other buildings in the vicinity are stated to be warehouses occupied only by day and the omission of the defendants to insist that if it is a nuisance at all, it is a public one, seems to indicate that they only fear the plaintiffs and it would not seem difficult, or at any rate impossible, to safeguard the plaintiffs; or, in the last instance, if they wish to maintain the depôt to acquire their property, which has only buildings of the value of Rs. 2,000—Rs. 3,000 upon it. There are, it is true, provisions in the Act for compensation but I see no reason to suppose from this fact that the Legislature contemplated this nuisance being inevitable or that it is so in fact.

I therefore, agree with the Chief Judge in dismissing the appeal. I also agree in the order as to costs.

Appeal dismissed.

settling boundary dispute, effect of—Suit to recover possession of lands dealt with by order—Limitation—Boundary pillars, failure to set up, effect of—Presumption—Burden of proof.

An order under section 41 of the Bengal Survey Act has the force of a Civil Court decree, and the party in whose favour the order is passed should be considered to be in actual possession at the date of the order, and a person wishing to upset the order must bring a suit within 12 years from the date of the order. [p. 841, col. 2; p. 842, col. 1.]

An order settling a boundary dispute under section 41 of the Bengal Survey Act is not void if, after the decision is come to, boundary pillars are not set up. The placing of boundary pillars is a part of the procedure which is performed by the officers of the Survey Department after a boundary dispute is decided. It is to be presumed that the boundaries were duly laid down and the burden of proving the contrary lies on the party alleging it. [p. 842, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Monghyr, dated the 27th May 1918, reversing a decision of the Officiating Additional Subordinate Judge, Monghyr, dated the 18th June 1917.

FACTS.—The finding of the lower Appellate Court was as follows :—

"There was a boundary dispute in 1902 and it was decided by the Settlement Authorities in favour of the defendants. The learned Munsif dismissed the present case as having been instituted more than 12 years after the decision of that boundary dispute. The decision of this appeal rests mainly on the question whether the provisions of section 41 of the Bengal Survey Act have been complied with. That section requires that the boundary shall be determined according to actual possession and the boundary is to be secured by boundary marks.....The Court below, it appears, has presumed that as there was a decision about boundary under section 41 there must have been ballabandi. The appellant's Pleader urges that it was not proper to so presume. He, as stated above, relies on the cases* mentioned above, which lay down that where under an Act certain things are required to be done before any liability attaches to any person in respect of any right or obligation, it is for the person who alleges that the liability has been incurred to prove that the things prescribed in the Act have been actually done and that if an official act is proved to have been done it will be presumed to have been regularly done, but it does not raise any presumption that an act was done, of which there is no evidence and the proof of which is essential. The learned Pleader also relies on the case reported as Deputy Legal Remembrancer v. Mir Sarwar Jan (1). It has not been proved that any Assistant Survey Officer went to the spot for putting any boundary marks, nor does it appear that he did any act in connection therewith from which it could be inferred that boundary marks were put.....as required by section 41. Rejecting the worthless oral evidence on the point there are no materials from which it could be legitimately presumed that boundary marks were put..... We...find that no bonndary marks were put as required by the said section."

Messrs. Syed Mohammad Tahir and P. Banerji, for the Appellants.

Mr. Jagannath Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

ADAMI, J.—The plaintiffs in the suit out of which this appeal arises sought for recovery of possession of certain lands between their Mauza Pipra and Mauza Tiloch which belongs to the defendants.

It appears that though title was found to be with the plaintiff in respect of the disputed land as shown by the Revenue Survey Maps, yet in 1902 a dispute having arisen between the owners of the two Mauzas a survey was made and it was found by the Survey Officers that the disputed land lies within Mauza Tiloch, and, therefore, the possession thereof was with the defendants. This decision was made under the provisions of the Bengal Survey Act on the 15th March 1902. The plaintiff instituted this suit on the 1st October 1915.

Under section 41 of the Bengal Survey Act the decision of the Survey Officer had the force of a decree of a Civil Court. The learned District Judge seems to have been mistaken as to the law in the case. It is quite clear that the decision having been under section 41 of the Bengal Survey Act possession was found to be with the defendants, and if the plaintiff wished to upset that decision it was incumbent upon him to institute Ashanullah Khan Bahadur v. Trilochan Bagchi, 13 C. 197; 6 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 630 and Narendra Lal Khan v. Jogi Hari, 32 C. 1107; 2 C. L. J. 107.

(1) 6 C. W. N. 845.

his suit within 12 years. This he has not done.

The learned District Judge in decreeing the appeal acted on the assumption that it was incumbent on the defendants to prove that the Survey Officers laid down boundary pillars, and as they failed to give satifactory proof of such laying down of pillars their defence must fail. The placing of pillars on the boundary, which has been fixed after enquiry, is a part of the procedure which is performed by the officers of the Survey Department after a boundary dispute has been decided and it is nowhere provided that an order settling a boundary dispute is void if, after the decision is come to, boundary pillars are not set up. In any case, the decision having been come to under section 41, we must presume that the boundaries were duly laid down. The learned District Judge found that the oral evidence on both sides as to the boundary marks was unreliable, and because the report of the Survey Officer did not state that boundary marks had been laid down, held that the defendants had failed to show that the provisions of section 41 had been complied with and so decreed the appeals. The burden of proof to show no boundary was demarcated lay on the plaintiffs.

I would allow this appeal and set aside the order of the lower Appellate Court and restore the decree of the Court of first instance with costs throughout.

DAS J.—I agree.

Appeal allowed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXII, r. 4—Minor, certificated guardian of—Suit against minor—Another guardian appointed for suit—Appointment, legality of.

Where there is a certificated guardian of a minor, the appointment of another guardian for the purposes of a suit against the minor is illegal, and a decree obtained in such suit by the plaintiff is liable to be set aside on the ground of there being no legal representation of the minor in the suit. [p. 843, col. 2; p. 844, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Bellary, in Appeal Suit No. 136 of 1918, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Hospet, in Original Suit No. 484 of 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. P. R. Ganapathy Aiyar, for the Appellant.—Order XXXII, rule 4, Civil Procedure Code, absolutely prohibits the appointment of a person other than a certificated guardian as guardian ad litem for a minor defendant in a suit. In the absence of the certificated guardian on the record, the minor cannot be said to have been properly represented. There is a legal disability attaching to such person to act. The Court's ignorance of the existence of the certificated guardian does not affect the question. See Hanuman Prasad v. Muhammad Ishaq (1), Roshid-un nissa v. Muhammad Ismail Khan (2), Khiarajmal v. Daim (3).

Mr. K. Rajah Aiyar, for the Respondents.—The decree against the minor is not altogether void. It is only an irregularity, see Dammar Singh v. Firbhu Singh (4) and the cases wherein it is followed, Jogeshwar Narain v. Lala Moorlidhar (5), Midnapore Zemindari Company Limited v. Gobinda Mahto (6). In Maruthamalai v. Palani Gounden (7) failure to give notice to a person in charge of a minor was held not to render void the appointment of third person as guardian ad litem. In Rambrichh Ram v. Tarak Tewari (8) it was held that where the

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The plaintiff, represented by his certificated guardian (appointed by the District Court), is the appellant before us. He sued to set aside the decree passed against him in a suit brought by the present 1st defendant as plaintiff on a mortgage-bond executed by the plaintiff's mother. The short question for decision is, whether the plaintiff was properly and legally represented in that suit. An officer of the Court was appointed in that suit at the instance of the then plaintiff (present 1st defendant) as guardian (for the suit) of the minor defendant (present plaintiff). If there was no proper representation, if the representation by that officer was not merely irregular but also illegal, there can be no doubt that this suit to set aside the decree and the other proceedings in the former suit is sustainable. The lower Courts held that, because the Court and the present 1st defendant (the then plaintiff) were not aware that a guardian had been appointed by the District Court for the minor, the appointment of an officer of the Court as the guardian for the former suit was neither illegal nor irregular and, therefore, the decree in the former suit should not be set aside. I am unable to agree with the conclusions of the lower Courts. Order XXXII, rule 4 (2), so far as it relates to a minor (defendant), is as follows :—

"Where a minor has a guardian appointed or declared by competent authority, no person other than such guardian shall be appointed his guardian for the suit," (that is, in the case where a minor is a defendant) "unless the Court considers, for reasons to be recorded, that it is for the minor's welfare that another person be appointed." The old section 457, Civil Procedure Code, prohibited a married woman being appointed as guardian for the suit for a minor defendant and thus created a legal disability in her to act as such. Now Order XXXIV, rule 4 (2), in the case where a minor is a defendant, similarly prohibits any person other than the guardian appointed or declared by competent authority to act as guardian for the suit of a minor defendant. The Legislature clearly made this provision because it was strongly of opinion that it was not for the minor's welfare that anybody else except such certificated guardian, where one exists, should act for a minor defendant. Where there is such a clear prohibition by the Legislature the Court's ignorance of the existence of a certificated guardian cannot be taken into consideration in deciding the question whether there has been a proper representation of a minor in the suit, any more than the ignorance of a Court under the old provision that a woman appointed by it as a guardian was a married woman could affect the decision of the question whether the minor was properly represented by such a woman. I think the decision in Hanuman Prasad v. Muhammad Ishaq (1), confirmed in Rashid-ud-nissa v. Muhammad Ismail Khan (2), is almost conclusive on this point. On behalf of the respondents, we have been referred to the decision in Dammar Singh v. Pirbhu Singh (4) in which the question is very meagrely discussed and it was decided before the Privy Council's decision above referred to. The obiter dicta in Jogeshwar Narain v. Lala Moorlidhar (5) and Midnapore Zemindari Company Limited v. Gobinda Mahto (6) approving the decision in Dammar Singh v. Pirbhu Singh (4), do not carry us much further. The case in Maruthamalai v. Palani Gounden (7) was not a case decided on the rule which we are now considering, but the decision turned upon the question whether failure to give notice to a person alleged to be then in charge of the minor wholly vitiated the appointment of a third person by the Court as a minor's guardian, that is, whether non-compliance with the provisions of Order XXXII, rule 3 (4) made the appointment wholly illegal or whether it was only an irregularity. I do not think that a prohibition to any body else to act enacted in Order XXXII, rule 4 (2) can be put on the same footing as the direction to give notice to the person in whose care the minor is before making the appointment of a proper guardian. On the whole, I think that there was no legal representation of the minor plaintiff in the former suit. I hope that plaintiffs will hereafter take care when they implead a minor as a party defendant and when they apply to the Court for appointing a guardian for the suit to enquire whether a certificated guardian has been already appointed for the minor defendant. I would also add that there are observations in the case Narsingh Narain v. Sheikh Jahi Mistry (9) which doubt the soundness of the decision in Dammar Singh v. Pirbhu Singh (4). I would decree the suit setting aside the decrees of the lower Courts. As allegations of fraud and collusion made in paragraphs 8 (b) and 8 (c) of the plaint were not proved according to the findings of both Courts and as the illegality of the appointment of the Court Officer under the provisions of the Code was not expressly set up in the plaint, I would direct the next friend to bear personally the costs of this litigation incurred on the plaintiff's behalf. The defendants will, of course, bear their own costs.

SPENCER, J.—I agree. I think that, when there is a definite prohibition of law in such words as those in Order XXXII, rule 4, Civil Procedure Code "no person other than such guardian shall act as the next friend of the minor, or be appointed guardian for the suit unless, etc.," a decree obtained against a minor represented by some other person is an illegal decree, void against the minor and not a decree obtained by a mere irregularity. I would follow in this matter the Privy Council's decision in Rashid-un nissa v. Muhammad Ismail Khan (2) and another case of the Privy Council in Khiaraj mal v. Daim (3) where it was held that a decree obtained against a person who was not properly represented on the record was void and without jurisdiction against such person. I agree with my learned brother that Dammar Singh v. Pirhhu Singh (4) is not a case which we can follow without hesitation. There was another case in Rambrichh Ram v. Tarak Tewari (8) quoted by the respondents' Pleader. In that case, the minors belonged to an undivided Hindu family and the manager of that family was a party and fully contested the suit. There was, therefore, no necessity to appoint a guardian at all and a decree obtained against the minors on whose behalf a guardian not properly representative of their interests was appointed was not on that account an invalid decree. The appeal will have to be allowed, the directions as to costs being as mentioned in my learned brother's order.

Mr. Burjorjee, for the Appellant.

Mr. Davies, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—Ma Waing sued her husband, Maung Shwe Tha, for divorce and partition of property. On the 22nd March 1915 Maung Shwe Tha was appointed Receiver of most of the joint property to collect the rents and profits thereof. On the 22nd May 1915 he and the present appellants executed a bond in favour of the District Judge of Hanthawaddy his successors and assings. The condition of the bond was that if Maung Shwe Tha should duly account for all the joint property and for every sum and sums of money he should so receive on account of the rents and mesne profits of the properties at such periods as the Court shall appoint and should duly pay the balances as may be certified to be due from him as the Court "hath directed or shall hereafter direct" then the obligation shall be void otherwise it should remain in full force. The bond was in the sum of Rs. 20,000.

Mr. Chari was appointed Commissioner to take the accounts inter alia in respect of what was due by Shwe Tha as Receiver. He made a report in respect of the period up to the end of 1918 that Rs. 38,529 8 0 was due. Subsequently, he reported that Rs. 11,008 was due for three months of 1919. On the 4th April 1919 Shwe Tha was removed from the Receivership and Mr. Chari was appointed Receiver.

Mr. Chari, when Shwe Tha did not pay up the amounts held by the Court to be due by him, applied that the sureties should be called upon to pay the Rs. 20,000 for which they had executed the bond.

The sureties appeared and the Court passed an order, dated the 11th May 1919. It was directed that, as a matter of grace and in order not to put the sureties to any avoidable loss, Mr. Chari should sell such portions of Shwe Tha's share in the estate as are readily marketable and after deducting Shwe Tha's share of the joint debts credit 75 per cent. of the balance to Shwe Tha as Receiver, 25 per cent. being held in suspense for contingencies. It was then ordered that if, after this credit, there remained any sum still due from Shwe Tha as Receiver the proceedings against the sureties may be pressed.

This order was carried out and after the deductions had been made a sum of Rs. 17,022 5 2 was still due from Shwe Tha. This he has failded to make good. Then the Court was moved to call upon the sureties and, on the 12th September 1919, notice was issued to them to show cause why they should not pay up the amount. They obtained a week's adjournment to file objections. On the date fixed they appeared and wanted a further adjournment for a fortnight to file their objections. This was refused and, on the 31st October, an order was passed that they must pay up the amount within one week. Later in the day, Mr. Burjorjee appeared and asked to be heard on a legal point. A date was fixed for this and notice issued to Mr. Chari. On the date fixed Mr. Dantra appeared and asked for an adjournment as Mr. Burjorjee was out of Rangoon. This was very naturally refused. An order was then passed that, as the sureties had failed to pay the amount, Mr. Chari can take any steps he may think proper.

Mr. Chari then took out execution against the property of the sureties and this appeal was then filed. It is said to be an appeal against the order of the 31st October 1919 by which it was ordered that the sureties must pay up within one week.

That order, it is said, is ultra vires, as, on the failure of the sureties, the only action open was to apply to the Court to assign the bond on which being done the assignee could bring a suit on the bond.

If the order was passed under section 145 of the Code of Civil Procedure an appeal will undoubtedly lie and the question, therefore, is whether such an order could be made under that section. It is urged that section 145 only applies when the surety has given his bond for a party to the suit. Here the bond is given for Shwe Tha qua Receiver, and not as being a party.

Under the previous Code of 1882 the corresponding section applied only to decrees and where a person became liable as surety for the performance of the decree or any part thereof. In the present Code the scope of the section has been much enlarged by the addition of clauses (b) and (c) and by the inclusion in it of orders in addition to decrees. Clause (c) applies where any person has become liable as surety for the payment of any money under an order of the Court in any suit and the section provides that the order to pay may be executed against him to the extent to which he has rendered himself personally liable in the manner provided for the execution of decrees.

The language is very wide and there is nothing to indicate that it is or was intended to be limited to sureties for parties to the suit in their capacity as parties. It is, no doubt, true that one method of proceeding against a surety is to obtain an assignment of the bond and bring a suit on it. The section does not prevent this course being adopted but provides a summary and more expeditious course. Had it been intended to limit its application it would have been clearly indicated. Instead of this, we find the scope of the section is extended and it is no longer confined to decrees and their performance but covers orders also. An order appointed him Receiver and called upon him to give security and the sureties undertook their liability if he failed to pay at any time he might be ordered to do so.

It is further urged that the sureties have had no opportunity to contest the correctness of the amount for which Shwe Tha as Receiver has been held liable, and that if a suit was brought on the bond they would be able to raise this defence. They received notice to show cause why they should not be called upon to pay but chose to file no objections. They were twice given adjournments to enable them to do so but still omitted to do so. We do not think they can be heard to do so now.

It is said that the Commissioner charged commission after agreeing not to do so, but that is purely a matter of the terms of his appointment.

Again, it is urged that the 25 per cent. should not have been held back. Should this amount be afterwards available towards Shwe Tha's liability they can recover any excess they may have had to pay. They bound themselves to make good any sum Shwe Tha might be ordered to pay at any time and here again they have failed to make out any case.

We must, therefore, hold that the order to pay was one falling within the scope of section 145 and that it may be enforced in execution.

So far as the possibility of the sum for which Shwe Tha is liable being reduced on appeal, their remedy lies by way of a stay of execution.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

U. P Electoral Rules, r. 11 (2)—Declaration oppointing Election Agent not signed in presence of Attesting Officer, whether renders nomination invalid—Election petition, maintainability of, against order of Returning Officer—Objector, liability of, for costs.

The mere fact that a declaration made under rule 11 (2) of the U. P Electoral Rules by a candidate appointing himself his Election Agent is not signed by him in the presence of the Attesting Officer, does not render the nomination of such candidate invalid. When the declaration has been filed by a candidate, the presumption is that that candidate asserts that the signature on the declaration is his own, and the Attesting Officer will accept this position until some person interested has made an objection. [p. 847, col. 2.]

An election petition is maintainable against the order of a Returning Officer declaring the nomination of a candidate invalid [p 488, col. 1.]

Where an objection is filed to the nomination of a candidate, and such nomination is declared invalid, the objector is liable for costs upon an election petition against such declaration, in the event of the petition being decided against him. [p. 848, col. 2.]

Report of the Commissioners appointed under the United Provinces Eletetoral Rules to try the election petition of Mr. Shakir Ali, Barrister-at-Law, Gorakhpur, against the election of M. Abdul Hakim, Vakil, Basti, to the Basti District Muhammadan Rural Constituency in the United Provinces Legislative Council.

REPORT.—Mr. Shakir Ali, Barrister-at-Law of Gorakhpur, presented an election petition under rules 30 and 42 (1) (c) of the United Provinces Electoral Rules before His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of the United Provinces. His Honour appointed the undersigned as Commissioners to enquire into the petition. Enquiry has been made and the report is now forwarded.

The petitioner on October the 18th last presented Exhibit 1 before the Attesting Officer of Basti. It purports to be a declaration appointing himself as his Election Agent for the Muhammadan Rural Constituency of Basti.

On October the 30th Munshi Abdul Hakim, the rival candidate, presented an objection to the effect that the declaration, Exhibit 1, had not been made and signed by the petitioner in the presence of the Attesting Officer. On the same date, October the 30th, the Returning Officer passed an order, Exhibit 2, in which he found that the declaration, Exhibit 1, made by the petitioner was invalid and, therefore, he declared that the nomination of the petitioner was invalid. On the same date, by his order, Exhibit 4, the Returning Officer declared that Munshi Abdul Hakim, the respondent, being the only candidate was duly elected, as by the decision of the objection of Munshi Abdul Hakim the nomination of the petitioner had been declared invalid, leaving Munshi Abdul Hakim as the only candidate.

Against this decision of the Returning Officer the petitioner presented his petition before His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor.

Mr. Abdul Hakim, respondent, has stated before this Court that he admits that the signature on the declaration, Exhibit 1, is in the handwriting of the petitioner.

On the pleadings of the parties the following issues have been framed :—

1. Is it necessary that the signature should be made in the presence of the Attesting Officer in order to make the declaration, Exhibit 1, valid? Proof on respondent.

2. Does not an election petition lie against the order of the Returning Officer, Exhibit 2? Proof on respondent.

3. Is not respondent liable for costs, if the petition is decided against him? Proof on respondent.

With reference to Issue No. 1 the respondent argues that the wording of rule 11, clause (2) of the Electoral Rules, should be considered. The word "declaration" according to the respondent means that there must be some one to receive the declaration. A declaration presupposes two persons: one person making the declaration and another person receiving it, and, therefore, a declaration must be made in the presence of some one. It follows, therefore, that both the signature on the declaration and the writing of the declaration should have been made in the presence of the Attesting Officer. It is further argued that unless this is done, the declarant cannot be held liable. It is possible that the signature may be repudiated subsequently, and the Returning Officer or Attesting Officer can only be satisfied when the signature has been actually made in his presence.

We do not agree with this reasoning or with the interpretation of rule 11, clause (2), suggested by the respondent. That rule requires a candidate to make in writing and sign a declaration. Exhibit 1 is in writing and it is admittedly signed by the petitioner and in that writing the petitioner makes a declaration as to the appointment of an Election Agent. The rule says nothing at all as to any necessity for the declaration to be signed in the presence of any one. If this had been considered necessary, the rule would undoubtedly have said so explicitly. In the absence of any such requirement in the rule, the petitioner cannot be held bound to have made his signature in the presence of the Attesting Officer.

There appears to be no force in the argument that, unless the signature is made in the presence of the Attesting Officer, the candidate cannot be legally bound by the document. If the candidate has presented a declaration purporting to be signed by himself, which, as a matter of fact, is found subsequently not to have been so signed, the candidate will undoubtedly be liable to punishment under the Criminal Law. It is untrue, therefore, to say that the candidate will not be bound by a declaration written and signed otherwise than in the presence of the Attesting Officer.

It is also untrue to say that the Attesting Officer can only be satisfied of the genuineness of the signature if it has been made in his presence. When the declaration has been filed by a candidate the presumption is that that candidate asserts that the signature on the declaration is his own and the Attesting Officer will accept this position until some person interested has made an objection. It may be noted that in the present case the objector admits that the signature on the declaration, Exhibit 1, is the genuine signature of the petitioner.

For the abve reasons, Issue No. 1 is decided against the respondent and in favour of the petitioner.

The second issue is: "Does not an election petition lie against the order of the Returning Officer, Exhibit 2?"

Rule 42, clause (c), has been referred to by the respondent. It is, however, admitted by him that the Electoral Rules are rules made under the Act referred to in rule 42, clause (c). In the present case the petitioner alleges that rule 11, clause (2) of the Electoral Rules, has not been properly complied with. It is admitted by the respondent that if Exhibit 1 were a valid declaration, its non-acceptance by the Returning Officer was a non-compliance with the rules. In the face of this admission, it is not possible for the respondent to press his argument in regard to this issue. We decide Issue No. 2 against the respondent and in favour of the petitioner.

The third issue deals with costs.

According to the respondent, the order of the Returning Officer, Exhibit 2, was passed by that Officer irrespective of the objection filed by the respondent, Exhibit 3. The respondent says that the Returning Officer held in his order that the signature on the declaration, Exhibit 1, could have been verified by the petitioner had he been present at the time before the Returning Officer. Because of his absence, the Returning Officer disallowed the declaration and set aside the nomination.

According to the respondent, the Returning Officer would have passed the declaration as valid if the petitioner had been present before him to verify his signature and, therefore, the respondent argues that the Returning Officer's orders, Exhibit 2, has nothing to do with his objection, Exhibit 3, and, therefore, he, the respondent, should not be burdened with costs even in case the present petition is decided against him.

We find that the contention of the respondent is not borne out by the facts. The respondent admitted, before issues were framed, that the order of the Returning Officer, Exhibit 2, was passed with reference to this application, Exhibit 3. He further admits that his arguments were heard by the Returning Officer before that Officer passed the order, Exhibit 2. He further admits that the decision referred to in the Returning Officer's order of October the 30th, Exhibit 4, refers to the decision of the same date, Exhibit 2. Exhibit 4 is as follows:—

"As by the the decision of the objection of M. Abdul Hakim the nomination of Mr. Shakir Ali has been declared invalid, leaving M. Abdul Hakim as the only candidate, I, therefore, according to D. O. No. 931-R/III—1 (5), declare M. Abdul Hakim to be duly elected." Exhibit 4 shows distinctly that the decision that Exhibit 1 was an invalid declaration was made on the objection of M. Abdul Hakim, respondent.

In the body of the order, Exhibit 2, it is said:—

"It has been urged and with some force that Mr. Shakir Ali might in case of malpractice wriggle out of his legal responsibility by denying this signature. It is possible, and though it seems to me that he would thereby become liable to prosecution for using a forged document as genuine, this is not an answer to the objection." It is clear that the respondent placed his arguments before the Returning Officer in support of his objection and the Returning Officer made his decision with reference to that objection. The proceedings were initiated by the objection of the respondent and not by the Returning Officer himself. We decide, therefore, this issue against the respondent and in favour of the petitioner.

We find that the declaration, Exhibit 1, was duly made and that the order of the Returning Officer, Exhibit 2, disallowing the declaration and proclaiming the nomination of the petitioner invalid was unjustified. We find that the declaration and the nomination were duly made. We find, therefore, that the election of M. Abdul Hakim is void.

The petition is decided in favour of the petitioner and against the respondent. The respondent will pay Rs. 200 as costs to the petitioner. Rupees 40 represents printing charges and the remainder legal advice and any other expenses.

The petitioner has filed a memo. of his costs (Exhibit 5), and swears to the accuracy of the details. The total comes to Rs. 447-6-0. Having regard to the points raised and the circumstances of the case, we consider Rs. 200 to be fair and reasonable costs payable to the petitoner by the respondent.

The Government promissory note for Rs. 1,000 received with the petition, which was deposited by the petitioner, is herewith returned.

Petition accepted.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 260—Summary trial—Large number of accused and witnesses—Procedure—Warrant, execution of, by person other than the one to whom it is addressed, legality of.

Where a large number of witnesses and accused are involved in a case, the case should not be tried summarily. [p. 850, col. 1.]

Where a warrant addressed to the bailiff of the Court was executed by a Naib Nazir and process-servers without any endorsement by the bailiff:

Held, that the service of the warrant was illegal. [p. 850, col. 1.]

Case reported by the Sessions Judge, Hissar with his No. 460-J., dated the 23rd June 1920.

FACTS.—In execution of a decree of the High Court of Calcutta a warrant for arrest of Mutsaddi Lal, one of the judgment-debtors, was issued by the Senior Subordinate Judge of Gurgaon. Ram Chand, Naib Nazir, and three process-servers arrested Mutsaddi Lal twice on the 12th July 1919 but he was rescued by his friends. Fifteen persons were challaned by the Police under section 225B, Indian Penal Code. The Magistrate tried the case summarily and convicted seven of the accused, sentencing three to a fine of Rs. 200 each or in default to four months' rigorous imprisonment and four to a fine of Rs. 100 each or in default to two months' imprisonment. Mohan Lal, of the first lot, and Ghasita Mal, Anant Ram and Kesri Mal, of the second lot, have filed applications for revision.

GROUNDS.—The number of accused was very large, being fifteen, and in all seventeen witnesses were examined. The trial lasted about two months. It was, therefore, not a fit case to be tried summarily Dina Nath v. Emperor (1).]

2. The first arrest was made at Cheddi Lal's shop at about 4 P. M. The second at about 10 P. M. at night on the Railway Station. Twelve men are said to have been concerned in the first occurrence and only five in the other. Of these latter Anant Ram and Banwari Lal were not concerned in the first occurrence. The two occurrences being separate transactions and the persons involved being not all the same the two cases could not be tried together. Joint trial under these circumstances was illegal (section 239, Criminal Procedure Code).

3. The warrant was addressed to the bailiff. The persons who tried to execute it were the Naib Nazir and process-servers. There was no endorsement on the back making it over to the Naib Nazir by name or to any of the bailiffs. It is questionable, therefore, if the Naib Nazir or the process-servers could legally execute it [Muhammad Bakhsh v. Emperor (2)] (paragraph 9 on page 124 of Rules and Orders of the Chief Court, Volume III).

4. The warrant was dated 6th August 1919. It was a clerical mistake for 6th July 1919, but as the date stood in the warrant it could not be executed on 12th July 1919.

5. The Magistrate sentenced three of the accused to four months' imprisonment in default of payment of fine. Section 262 (2) of the Criminal Procedure Code, read with section 33 of the same Code, shows that this part of the sentence was illegal.

6. The sentences of four months and two months in default of payment of fine were illegal in the case of all seven accused, because under section 65 the maximum limit of imprisonment in default of fine is one and half months for an offence under section 225 B.

For the above reasons it is submitted that the convictions and sentences should be set aside. If the objections mentioned in paragraphs 3 and 4 are valid, no fresh trial is necessary. But if it is considered that the warrant was not vitiated by the clerical mistakes mentioned and the Naib Nazir was competent to execute the warrant, then a fresh trial in the ordinary way may be ordered.

Fine has been realised.

ORDER.—In this case seven persons have been convicted by a Magistrate in his summary jurisdiction of offences under section 225 B, Indian Penal Code, and have been sentenced some to fines of Rs. 200 and some to fines of Rs. 100 and the former to the illegal term of four months' imprisonment in default. The Sessions Judge has forwarded the proceedings under section 438, Criminal Procedure Code, with a recommendation that the convictions and sentences be set aside on account of many irregularities and illegalities.

In the first place, it is obvious that the case was not one which should have been tried summarily. The number of accused was large and the number of witnesses even greater. In the second place, two totally different offences were tried together. Thirdly, the warrant was addressed to "the bailiff of the Court", whoever that official may be, and was executed by a Naib Nazir and process servers without any endorsement by the bailiff. Such service of the warrant was illegal [see Muhammad Bakhsh v. Emperor (2)]. For all these reasons, I agree with the Sessions Judge that the convictions cannot be upheld.

I, therefore, accept the petitions and set aside the convictions and sentences of all the seven convicts and refrain from ordering a re-trial owing to the service of the warrant having been effected by persons not legally entitled to effect it.

Petitions accepted;
Convictions set aside.

EMPEROR, THROUGH Pt. BHAGWATI PRASAD—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), Ch XXI, provisions of, contravention of, effect of—Offence triable as warrant case, trial of, as summons case after commencement of trial, legality of.

Where an offence complained of is triable exclusively as a warrant case, and the trial has actually begun, and the statements of the complainant and some of his witnesses recorded, it is illegal to split the offence into two component parts, and to proceed to try it as a summons case. [p. 852, col. 2.]

A Magistrate when trying a warrant case is not justified in recording the statement of the accused immediately after the examination of the complainant and before he is cross-examined and the evidence for the prosecution recorded: such a procedure is not only prejudicial to the accused in his defence, it contravenes the provisions of Chapter XXI of the Criminal Procedure Code, and entirely vitiates the trial. [p. 852, col. 2.]

Criminal revision against the order of the Sessions Judge, Meerut, dated the 3rd of August 1920.

Messrs. S. C. Mukerji and Kamuda Prasad, for the Applicants.

Mr. G. W. Dillon, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application to revise an order of conviction under sections 426, 447 and 352 of the Indian Penal Code. The sentence imposed is that of a fine of Rs. 51 against each of the applicants, and the applicants have been further bound in the sum of Rs. 500 each for a term of one year. It appears that Ganga Saran, accused, is the President of a Goshala Committee. Adjoining the Goshala premises there is a compound of Pandit Bhagwati Prasad the land of which is let out to certain tenants for building purposes. Pandit Bhagwati Prasad intends to build a grain market on that plot of land. In August 1919 Pandit Bhagwati Prasad wanted to build a compound wall. The building was opposed by the accused as the wall would interfere with their abchak. Because of this opposition, the wall was not built. On the 27th of October 1919 it seems that Bhagwati Prasad made a fresh attempt to build a compound wall. It is alleged that the masons came, built a part of the wall and then the six accused came there remonstated with Pandit Bhagwati Prasad and ultimately removed the bricks of the wall and put them in another place in the compound of Pandit Bhagwati Prasad. Pandit Bhagwati Prasad thereon lodged a complaint of mischief, criminal trespass and assault against the accused. As I have said above, they have all been convicted by the Magistrate under various sections. This conviction has been upheld on appeal. The applicants came up in revision and their contentions are,—

(1) that a single sentence for three separate offences is not warranted by law and is illegal;

(2) (a) that the dispute was really of a purely civil nature, and, even if all the evidence for the prosecution were taken to be correct, the conviction under section 447 of the Indian Penal Code was bad inasmuch as all that the accused did was to go to assert a civil right and not to commit mischief. A civil suit has already been filed for the determination of the rights of the parties;

(2) (b) that Bhagwati Prasad had no right to institute a complaint under section 447 of the Indian Penal Code, because all the land had been let out to tenants on permanent leases. These leases are subsisting and, therefore, he was not entitled to possession.

The cases, Gobind Prasad, In the matter of the petition of (1), and Kunji Lal v. Emperor (2), are relied on in support of this proposition;

(3) that the order under section 106 of the Criminal Procedure Code was not justified;

(4) the complaint as filed was under sections 452, 147 and 427 of the Indian Penal Code. All these cases were warrant cases and the trial should have been in the manner prescribed for the trial of such cases and the trying Magistrate's action in trying the case as a summons case was illegal and has seriously prejudiced the accused;

(5) because of certain arbitration proceedings the complainant was prevented from proceeding against the applicants in the Criminal Courts.

The parties to these proceedings are respectable gentlemen of Meerut and it has taken the learned gentleman appearing on either side almost three days to argue the case and the case has been fought tooth and nail before me.

I shall take up the fourth point first. It appears that this complaint was filed on the 4th of November 1919 and the complainant was examined the same day and the 20th of November was fixed for the examination of witnesses in support of the complaint and the case was sent to the present Deputy Magistrate, Mr. Nathu Ram, for disposal. It appears that up to the 20th of November 1919 the complainant had not put in Court the necessary diet money, etc., for issue of notices to witnesses and the case was adjourned to the 2nd of December 1919 for disposal. On the 2nd of December 1919 some witnesses were examined and others were exempted and the Court adjourned the case for the inspection of the locality. The learned Deputy Magistrate inspected the locality on the 20th of December 1919 and, having been given to understand that there was a chance of compromise, he adjourned the case to the 5th of January 1920. On that date the case was again adjourned and the Court granted adjournments from time to time and, ultimately, on the 7th of April 1920, directed notices to be issued to the accused under sections 452, 147 and 427 of the Indian Penal Code, fixing the 19th of April 1920 provided the complainant put in the necessary talbana for the issue of summons. The case came on for hearing on the 19th of April 1920 in the presence of the complainant and of all the accused except Chaudhri Ganga Saran who was allowed to be represented by a Pleader. On that date the complainant was examined, the statements of the accused taken and certain witnesses on behalf of the prosecution were examined and then a curious order was passed to the effect that, as it appeared from the statements of the witnesses for the complainant that the offences committed were of summons cases, therefore, it is not necessary to frame charges, and as the complainant wants to produce further evidence, therefore, it is ordered that 30th April 1920 be fixed for the hearing of the case. It is not very easy to understand how a very experienced Magistrate like Mr. Nathu Ram should have committed this mistake. The complaint was of offences triable as warrant cases and the heading of the commencement of the judgment shows that the accused were being tried for those offences. The examination of the accused immediately following the examination of the complainant was not justified by the procedure laid down in Chapter XXI of the Code of Criminal Procedure. However, to proceed further, the case was again adjourned to the 22nd of May 1920 at the request of the complainant. On that date it was found that, out of the witnesses who had been summoned on behalf of the complainant, Pandit Nand Kishore, Inspector, Babu Ghasi Ram and Ghansham Das, Patwari, were examined and the case was fixed for the 1st of June to enable the accused to cross-examine the witnesses for the prosecution and to produce the defence evidence. On that date an application for adjournment on behalf of the accused on the ground that their Counsel was engaged in some other Court was refused and as all the accused were not present an order was passed for warrants to issue against the absent accused. Later on, before the warrants could be issued, the accused appeared and cross-examined the witnesses for the prosecution. It will appear from the above resume of what actually happened that the whole procedure of the learned trying Magistrate was decidedly irregular if not absolutely illegal. Having commenced the trial of the case as a warrant case, regard being had to the nature of the offences complained of, the learned Magistrate was not justified in taking down the statements of the accused immediately after he had taken down the statement of the complainant who had not even been cross-examined till then. He ought to have proceeded in the regular way, heard out the evidence for the prosecution, allowed the accused to cross-examine, if they so chose, and then framed a charge whether of the offences about which the complaint had been made or of minor offences, if only those were proved, and then charged the accused of having committed such offences as, in the opinion of the Court, might have been proper. In that case the accused would have had, if they so wished, a further opportunity to re call and cross-examine the witnesses for the prosecution and show that they were not worthy of credit. All this opportunity of double cross-examination has been lost to the accused. They could not guess from the vague order of the Deputy Magistrate what offences they were called upon to answer and there can be no doubt that they have been seriously prejudiced in their defence. It has further been argued on behalf of the applicants that the examination of the accused before the whole evidence for the prosecution was before the Court prejudiced the defense case very seriously. Another point urged on behalf of the defence is that, although the learned Deputy Magistrate has convicted the accused under sections 447 and 352 of the Indian Penal Code, the conviction is really one under section 452 of the Indian Penal Code which could not have been tried as a summons case because the elements constituting an offence under section 447 plus the elements constituting an offence under section 352 of the Indian Penal Code go to make up the offence made punishable under section 452 of the Indian Penal Code. This procedure of splitting up an offence triable exclusively as a warrant case into two component parts of the said offence in order to enable a Magistrate to try it as a summons case is in my opinion, not only a mere irregularity but an illegality and a Magistrate is not justified in breaking up an offence into its component parts and trying it in a manner not warranted by law. In my opinion, the trial of this case is wholly vitiated by the above proceedings. The provisions of Chapter XXI of the Code of Criminal Procedure are mandatory and have to be followed. It is not the conviction under any particular section of the Indian Penal Code which decides the question whether a particular case is to be tried as a warrant case or as a summons case. It is the complaint and the notices issued to the accused and also the commencement of a case by a Magistrate under certain sections which decide the question whether it is to be tried as a warrant case or a summons case I am afraid that in the present case the mode of trial is vitiated because of the illegalities, that is to say, going in the teeth of the mandatory provisions of Chapter XXI of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The complaint, the summons first issued to the accused, the heading of the first sheet of the proceedings go to show that the trial was commenced under the sections which were purely triable as warrant cases. See in this connection Empress v. Jadu (3), Queen-Empress v. Lalja Ram (4) and Subrahmania Ayyar v. King Emperor (5). Under these circumstances, it is not necessary for me to enter into the other points raised in this revision. I, therefore, set aside the convictions and sentences. The order under section 106 of the Criminal Procedure Code falls with the setting aside of the conviction in the present case. Having regard to the fact that both the parties are respectable Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 488—Maintenance proceedings—Husband willing to keep wife in his house, whether ground for escaping liability.

(1) 2 A. 465 at p. 467; 1 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 863.
(2) 21 Ind. Cas. 681; 12 A. L. J. 151; 14 Cr. L. J. 633.

Where in proceedings under section 488 of the Criminal Procedure Code it appears that the husband had turned his wife out of his house, he cannot escape liability for giving maintenance to her merely by saying in Court that he will keep her in his house, a promise which he might break as soon as he gets home.

Case reported by the Sessions Judge, Jullundur, with his No. 156-J. of 10th September 1920.

FACTS.—Musammat Aishan is the wife of Sher Muhammad. She brought this complaint under section 488, Criminal Procedure Code, for her maintenance The accused was summoned for 23rd April 1920. He came and gave his statement that he was willing to take the woman home. The Court then examined the complainant. She stated that she was willing to go, but should be allowed suitable maintenance and that the accused did not care to keep her and whenever she went to him he turned her out.

The lower Court without recording any further evidence dismissed the complaint.

GROUNDS.—The Magistrate has committed material irregularity in not recording the evidence of the parties. In a section 488-case the parties always raise such pleas. The husband comes to Court and, to escape the order of maintenance, offers to take the woman home. The woman, to save appearances, offers to go if suitable maintenance, were awarded. If the complaints were dismissed merely on these pleas the object of the law would be forfeited. I think the lower Court should have taken evidence and decided on merits which party is telling the truth.

I, therefore, beg to refer the case to High Court recommending that the order of dismissal be set aside and the case remanded for proper enquiry and decision according to law.

Sheikh Niaz Muhammad, for the Petitoner.

ORDER.—There has been no inquiry in this case, no evidence having been taken although Musammat Aishan said she had evidence. Her allegation is that her husband turned her out of the house. If the allegation is correct, the husband cannot escape liability for giving maintenance to his wife merely by saying in Court that he will keep her in his house, a promise which he might break as soon as he got home. His wife distinctly stated before the Magistrate that she was willing to go to her husband's house only if he gave her maintenance. What has to be determined is whether the husband has neglected or refused to maintain his wife.

I set aside the Magistrate's order and direct him to pass a fresh order after proper inquiry.

Order set aside.

Workman's Breach of Contract Act (XIII of 1859), s. 2—Proviso (a) to clause (1), scope of—Order directing performance—Failure to perform contract—Application for arrest—Limitation.

EMPEROR v. RAB NAWAZ.

Proviso (a) to clause (1) of section 2 of the Workman's Breach of Contract Act merely provides that an order directing re-payment of the advance or performance of the contract shall not be made unless the employer moves the Court within three months of the breach of the contract.

The proviso has no application to a case where a complainant has already obtained an order under section 2, sub-section (1), and is applying for an order of imprisonment under clause (2) for failure to obey the order under clause (1).

Reference made under section 438, Criminal Procedure Code, by the District Magistrate, Rangoon, for review of the order passed by the First Additional Magistrate, Rangoon.

JUDGMENT.—The respondent entered into a contract with complainant to work under him as a tailor. He received an advance of Rs. 140 and he says he was to work until he had discharged the advance by working it off. He took the money but did no work and complainant applied under Act XIII of 1859. Respondent appeared and admitted the facts and expressed his willingness to work off the advance. Thereupon an order was passed directing him to perform the contract. This was on the 29th April 1919.

He failed to do any work and on 25th June 1919 complainant applied for his arrest. A warrant was issued but was returned unexecuted and on the 15th July 1919 complainant asked that the case be closed for the present. This was because respondent could not be found.

On the 12th April 1920 complainant having discovered the whereabouts of the respondent applied for his arrest, and on the 19th April the Magistrate passed the following order: "The complaint is not maintainable under proviso (a) to section 2 (1) as it was not filed within three months from date of order passed in Criminal Miscellaneous No. 250 of 1919 of this Court. The date of the order was 29th April 1919. (2) Case is dismissed."

Act XIII of 1859 has been amended by Act XII of 1920 which came into force on 12th March 1920. Even assuming that its provisions would have to be applied to pending cases the order of the Magistrate is wrong. The Act, as amended, allows the employer to complain to a Magistrate and section 2, sub-section (1), allows the Magistrate to pass an order directing re-payment of the advance or performance of the contract. The proviso referred to enacts that no such order shall be made unless the employer moves the Court within three months of the breach of the contract.

In the present case complainant has already obtained an order under section 2, sub-section (1), and was not applying for such an order. He was applying under section 2 (2) for an order of imprisonment for failure to obey an order under sub section (1) and the proviso referred to does not apply to the case at all. He already possessed an order to perform and he wanted that order enforced by punishment. The order of 29th April 1919 was still in force and though the previous application for arrest had been infructuous that did not affect the original order to perform.

I, therefore, set aside the order of the Magistrate and return the case for him to continue it and pass orders according to law.

Order set aside.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 562, applicability of—"Cheating," whether includes aggravated forms.

Section 562 of the Criminal Procedure Code applies only to a case of simple cheating falling under section 417, Indian Penal Code, and not to aggravated forms of cheating under sections 418 to 420, Indian Penal Code. [p. 855, col. 1.]

Case reported by the District Magistrate Mianwali, with his No. X of 1920.

FACTS.—The accused, a resident of Mianwali Tahsil, went to the house of the complainant in Bhakkar Tahsil on the evening of 8th November 1919, and remained there for the night. The next morning he requested the complainant to lend him his horse to ride on to Jandanwala. The complainant agreed and gave him the horse and also sent his man with him to bring the horse back. The accused went on horse back far from Jandanwala and never returned it as promised. He took the horse to Dera Ismail Khan District and sold it there for Rs. 30 and the saddle for Rs. 6. The accused absconded after the occurrence, but was arrested on 21st May 1920 in Multan City.

The accused, on conviction by Khan Bahadur Muhammad Zaffar Khan, exercising the powers of a Magistrate of the First Class in the Mianwali District, under section 420 of the Indian Penal Code, was directed that he be released on his executing a bond of Rs. 500 with one surety of the same amount for one year, and during such period to appear and receive sentence when called upon and in the meantime to keep the peace and be of good behaviour under section 562, Criminal Procedure Code.

GROUNDS.—Under the law, the sentence of section 562, Criminal Procedure Code, for an offence under section 420, Indian Penal Code is quite illegal. The word "cheating" mentioned in the same section can mean only simple cheating under section 417, Indian Penal Code, and cannot include the aggravated form of it under section 420, Indian Penal Code, vide Crown v. Neki Ram (1).

The files of the case are submitted herewith. The judgment of the lower Court being in vernacular is translated into English for the convenience of the Hon'ble Judges of the High Court.

Mr. H. A. Herbert, Government Advocate, for the Petitioner.

ORDER.—In this case Rab Nawaz pleaded guilty to an offence under section 420, Indian Penal Code. He had gone to the house of one Hak Nawaz and induced him to lend him a horse for riding to Jandanwala. He then took the horse to a place in the Dera Ismail Khan District and sold it and the saddle.

The Magistrate, instead of sentencing Rab Niwaz to imprisonment, has passed an order against him under section 562, Criminal Procedure Code. The order is illegal, as section 562 applies only to a case of simple cheating, falling under section 417, Indian Penal Code, and not to aggravated forms of cheating falling under sections 418 to 420. See Crown v. Neki Ram (1).

(1) 23 P. W. R. 1908 Cr.; 8 Cr. L. J. 455.

I set aside the order and in lieu thereof I sentence Rab Nawaz to six months' rigorous imprisonment and to a fine of Rs. 50, or to a further period of three months' rigorous imprisonment in default of payment.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 195, 439, 476—Sanction to prosecute, when to be granted—Delay in making application or malice—Revision—High Court, interference by.

The main principle which should guide a Court in taking action under section 195 or section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code is, that no prosecution should be allowed to be instituted unless there is a reasonable probability of conviction. The mere fact that there has been delay in applying for sanction, or that the applicant is actuated by malice or vindictiveness, is no ground for refusing to grant sanction, where there is a probability of securing a conviction. [p. 857, col. 2.]

Inasmuch as an order under section 195 is appealable, the High Court will not interfere in revision, but it will do so in respect of an order under section 476, if that order is shown to be perverse. [p. 856, col. 2.]

Revision against the order of the Additional District Judge, Nagpur, M. J. C. No. 32 of 1919, dated the 22nd January 1920.

Mr. M. B. Niyogi, for the Applicant.

Mr. M. R. Bolde, for the Non-Applicant.

ORDER.—As was explained in Shioshankarpuri v. Emperor (1), the main principle which should guide Courts in taking action under section 195 or section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code is that no prosecution should be allowed or instituted unless there is a reasonable probability of conviction. This in fact might almost be said to be the only matter that requires serious consideration in such a case. I can see no objection whatever to the prosecution being conducted by a person who is actuated by malice or vindictive feeling against the accused. Indeed, it is not impossible that such a feeling would result in the prosecution being more thorough than it might otherwise be. Nor can I see that delay in applying for sanction is any reason for refusing it, except that evidence is liable to weaken or disappear in the course of time. Here we have an application for sanction to prosecute one Sitaram for the production of two forged documents in a civil suit. With that slovenliness which, for some unknown reason, is very common in all matters connected with prosecutions for forgery and perjury, the productions of the two documents are treated as one offence though they are entirely distinct, and even in this Court neither the applicant nor his Pleader had at first any clear idea as to what evidence would be put forward in the case. Matters are, however, to some extent simplified by the admission that it would be impossible to prove one of the two documents, that known as Exhibit P-36, to be a forgery to the knowledge of the non-applicant. It purports to be a deed of gift executed in Fasli 1211 or A. D. 1801 and the only reason for supposing it not to be genuine is that there are holes in the paper and the writing avoids them. They may possibly prove it to be a forgery but cannot prove that the non-applicant knew that it was a forgery. It may have been forged at any time up to 100 years before he came into possession of it.

The case in regard to the document called Exhibit P-20 is much stronger. It was produced by Sitaram, the non-applicant, in his suit as a letter signed by the defendant in that suit, who is the applicant here. It is practically certain that it is a letter written by some one other than the applicant, Krishna Rao, on a piece of paper which was one of several similar pieces which he had signed both in English and Marathi when he was about to start on a pilgrimage, for the purpose of pasting them on the locks of his boxes. The badness of the handwriting, grammar and spelling, the double signatures and the exact resemblance of the paper to others actually used as labels, and the appearance of the contents of which the greater part is on the opposite side to the signatures with two lines squeezed in above the upper signature indicate fairly clearly that the paper is a forged document. That Sitaram produced it in his suit is also capable of easy proof. The question remains whether there is a reasonable probability of proving that he knew or must have known it to be forged. The facts indicating that are,—

(1) That if genuine, it would have given very great support indeed to his case and yet he failed to produce it for two years after the suit began.

(2) That the grammar, spelling and handwriting and the double signatures would make it clear to him, even if he had received it innocently that, it was not written by Krishna Rao.

(3) That the papers with the double signatures on them were left in the possession of his son-in-law, Govinda.

(4) That it is most unlikely that anybody else would commit the forgery and send the document to him in the way he alleges without his full knowledge.

As against the second of these considerations, we have the fact that he did produce the document in Court and maintained that it was genuine. This, at least, indicates that he thought it sufficiently like a genuine letter from Krishna Rao to be accepted by the Court, and might indicate that he did so accept it himself. Another point in his favour is that, his case was quite strong enough to succeed and did in fact succeed all through without the aid of this false document.

On the whole, however, I am of opinion that there is a reasonable probability of the conviction being had in respect of this document known as Exhibit P-20. The rulings in Abdul Husen v. Emperor (2) and Shioshankarpuri v. Emperor (1) are quoted as showing that this Court ought not to interfere with the decision of the lower Courts unless they can be shown to be perverse. These rulings are in respect of orders passed under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and that the same considerations do not apply to an order made under section 195, is very clearly shown by the fact that an appeal is allowed against it. The refusal of the learned Additional District Judge to sanction the prosecution is based mainly on the presence of malice in the mind of the applicant, the delay in making the application and the improbability of securing a conviction in respect of the document known as Exhibit P-36. Malice and delay are no ground for refusing sanction as I have explained above, and the matter of Exhibit P-20 has never been properly considered, as the other documents was all along allowed to cloud the issues. I, therefore, sanction the prosecution of Sita Ram, son of Dajiba Pande Gurao, of Nagpur, by Krishna Rao, son of Ramchandra Naik, of Nagpur, under sections 465 and 471 or section 193 or section 196 of the Indian Penal Code in respect of his production in Civil Suit No. 28 of 1913 in the Court of the Senior Munsif of Nagpur on the 9th of February 1915 of the document known in that suit as Exhibit P-20. The costs incurred in connection with this application by the applicant in all three Courts will be paid by the non applicant. In this Court ten rupees will be allowed as Pleader's fee.

Application allowed.

Factories Act (XII of 1911), ss. 28, 29, 31, 41 (a) General Clauses Act (X of 1897), s. 21—Approval of system of working factory, whether can be cancelled—Appeal against order of cancellation—Prosecution during pendency of appeal, desirability of.

Where an Inspector of Factories approves a system of working a particular factory, he has power, under section 21 of the General Clauses Act, to cancel the approval. [p. 858, col. 2.]

Where, however, an appeal is pending from the order of cancellation, it is not desirable to institute a criminal prosecution in respect of the factory having been worked in contravention of the order of cancellation, during the pendency of the appeal. [p. 858, col. 2.]

Petition, under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of the order of the Sessions Judge, Delhi, dated the 2nd June 1920, affirming that of the Additional District Magistrate, Delhi, dated the 22nd April 1920.

Kanwar Dalip Singh, for the Petitioner.

Mr. D. C. Ralli, for the Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner is the Secretary of the Delhi Cloth and General Mills Company, Limited, Delhi. He has been convicted under section 41 (a) of the Indian Factories Act, XII of 1911, for having worked the factory against the provisions of sections 28, 29 and 31, and has been sentenced to a fine of Rs. 10. Against his conviction he applied for revision to the Sessions Court, but his application was rejected by the learned Sessions Judge. He has accordingly come up in revision to this Court. The facts which are material for the decision of this petition for revision are as follows:—

On the 12th August 1919 an application was made to the Inspector of Factories asking him to approve the working of the factory with a system of shifts. The Deputy Commissioner, as an Inspector of Factories, expressed his approval of the scheme proposed by a letter dated the 5th of September 1919. On the 25th of November 1919, however, the Deputy Commissioner wrote to the Manager of the Factory withdrawing or cancelling the approval of the 5th September 1919, with effect from December 1st 1919, suggesting that an application might be made for approving the system of shifts to the Inspector of Factories, Punjab, Delhi, etc., as he had returned to duty. The Company replied to the letter of the Deputy Commissioner taking exception to the order of revocation upon several grounds, one of which being that an approval once made could not be revoked. A similar letter was addressed to the Inspector of Factories, Punjab, on the 4th December 1919 by the Manager of the RAGHUNANDAN KOERI v. EMPEROR.

Factory. After a good deal of correspondence the Inspector of Factories, Punjab, on the 17th December 1919, drew the attention of the occupier of the Delhi Cloth and General Mills Company, Limited, to the provisions of sections 28, 29 and 31 of the Indian Factories Act telling him that he was mistaken in thinking that the approval by the Deputy Commissioner could not be cancelled. He further drew the attention of the occupier to the provisions of section 21 of the General Clauses Act. In reply to the letter of the 3rd December 1919 the Deputy Commissioner of Delhi stated that his order cancelling the approval was quite legal and that if the Secretary of the Company was dissatisfied with it an appeal was open to him under section 50 of the Act. An appeal was accordingly preferred to the Chief Commissioner, Delhi, and exception was taken to the order of the 28th November 1919 and that of the 17th December 1919.

Two questions arise for the decision of this revision, namely :—

(i) Whether the approval of the 5th September 1919 could have legally been cancelled by the order of the 28th November 1919, and (ii) whether pending the appeal the petitioner should have been convicted.

After considering the question carefully I am inclined to agree with the Court below that the Deputy Commissioner had power to rescind his order of the 5th September 1919 by his subsequent order, dated the 28th November 1919 according to section 21 of the General Clauses Act, which provides that:

"Where, by any Act of the Governor-General in Council or Regulation, a power to make orders, rules or bye laws is conferred, then that power includes a power, exercisable in the like manner and subject to the like sanction and conditions (if any), to add to, amend, vary or rescind any orders, rules or bye laws so made."

I, therefore, hold that the revocation, instead of being opposed to law, is permitted by section 21 of the General Clauses Act.

As regards the second question, I am clearly of opinion that, having regard to the fact that an appeal had been preferred at the suggestion of the Deputy Commissioner, the Magistrate would have acted more reasonably if he had held the proceedings before him in abeyance pending the decision of the appeal before the Local Government. Though I have not been able to find any direct authority for this proposition under the Factories Act, yet there are many cases to be found in various Law Reports laying down this rule with regard to sanction granted under section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code in relation to perjury or forgery committed in a civil suit. In Shri Nana Maharaj, In re (1) a Division Bench of the Bombay High Court held that :

"Criminal proceedings for perjury or forgery arising out of a civil litigation should not, as a rule, go on during the pendency of the litigation."

In the case of Mahant Kirpalban v. Musammat Ram Dei (2), Karamat Hussain, J., held that :—

"It is highly undesirable that sanction should be granted while an appeal is pending to this Court."

The reasonableness of the rule laid down in the above cases is fully illustrated by what has happened in this case. The appeal has been allowed by the Local Government and the order approving the scheme for the working of the factory by a system of shifts has been restored. The ground for the prosecution of the petitioner has, therefore, ceased to exist. I accordingly set aside the conviction and order the refund of the fine if it has already been realised.

Conviction set aside.

The fundamental rule by which circumstantial evidence is estimated, is that in order to justify the inference of guilt, the inculpatory facts must be incompatible with the innocence of the accused and incapable of explanation upon any reasonable hypothesis other than that of his guilt. Although it cannot be laid down as a proposition of law that quantum or value of evidence must depend upon the enormity of the crime, yet it is safer to follow the established rule that "the fouler the crime is the clearer and the plainer the proof ought to be." [p. 863, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

SULTAN AHMED, J.—The prisoner was charged under section 302 of the Indian Penal Code with the murder of one Musammat Bissundeyi, his younger brother's widow, also of her son, Ram Sakal, aged eight-nine years, on the 22nd April about midnight. He was also charged for having committed arson in the house where Bissundeyi was living on the same occasion. The trial was with the aid of two Assessors, one of whom was of opinion that the evidence did not prove the case against the accused on any of the counts, while the second Assessor was of opinion that the evidence supported both the charges of murder and arson against the prisoner. The learned Sessions Judge, agreeing with one of the Assessors and disagreeing with the other, convicted the accused under sections 302 and 436 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced him to death. This sentence has now come up to this Court for confirmation under section 374 of the Criminal Procedure Code and the accused has also filed an appeal from jail.

The prosecution story is briefly as follows. The prisoner, who is a widower, become a Sanyasi some time ago, and used to pass his days as a Sadhu. On the death of his younger brother, Jeo Nandan, about six or seven years ago, the prisoner became a secularist again and began to live in his house jointly with his son, Sakaldeep, and his brother's widow, the deceased Bissundeyi, and her son, Ram Sakal. His elder brother's widow, Musammat Tetri, with her son used to live separately from them, but in the same house. As time went on, people began to suspect the prisoner of his having an intrigue with Musammat Bissundeyi and about $2\frac{1}{2}$ years ago his caste-men excommunicated him and his family. Sakaldeep, shortly before the occurrence, convened a panchayati for the revision of the order of excommunication passed by the panches in order to prepare the way for his marriage. The panches decided that Raghunandan, the prisoner, and the deceased woman, Musammat Bissundeyi, should be turned out of the house. This order of the panches was carried into effect at once, and both the prisoner and Bissundeyi left the house two or three days after, the woman came to see her young son, Ram Sakal, who seems to have been crying for his mother, and the caste-men allowed her to live in the house for the sake of the boy, but on the strict condition that she must abandon the accused. While the woman was living in the house, the prisoner used to go to visit her, but she used to reject his proposals and used to abuse him. On the evening of the night of the occurrence, Sakaldeep and Ram Sakal took their usual meal. Bissundeyi went to grind her satoo. Tetri also went to grind grains and the boy, Ram Sakal, went to his mother, Bissundeyi: Sakaldeep and Tetri's son slept in the sehan outside the house, keeping the sudder door of the house open for the absent inmates, Tetri and Bissundeyi. Bissundeyi is said to have returned to the house some time later and Tetri returned home shortly before midnight. When she tried to open the entrance door, she found that closed from inside. She called "Sakal, Sakal" but there was no reply. Sakaldeep, who was sleeping in the sehan, waked up on Tetri's call and asked Tetri not to bother but to sleep for the night in the outer osara. Tetri did so. After a while, Tetri was roused up by the sound of the latch (killi). She saw the prisoner coming out of the house by the entrance door and proceed west and then north. Sakaldeep also saw his father going away from south to north but did not see him come out of the house. He called out to him "Babu, Babu," but the accused did not listen to his call and went away northward. Immediately after this, Sakaldeep noticed that the inner osara was on fire and shouted out "fire, fire." The neighbours came up and extinguished the fire, and, while the fire was being extinguished, it was found that the boy Ram Sakal was dead with his throat cut. Bissundeyi was also found lying dead in the adjoining kothri. Constable Ram Sagar came in immediately while the fire was being extinguished, and he saw the boy's corpse lying down. He then hastened to the nearest out-post. After this Santo Singh, Jamadar in charge of the out-post, came together with constables Ram Pach, Chedi Mian and Ram Sagar. The Jamadar then sent Ram Sagar with one Sheo Deni to the Thana to lodge the first information and he sent Chedi and Ram Pach with one Radhey Mahto to find out the prisoner, who was reported by the people there to be the murderer. The prisoner was found lying in the house of one Foujdar Ahir, where he had taken his lodging after having been turned out of the house under the orders of the panches. Then the first information was lodged at the Thana by Ram Sagar about 2 o'clock. Sheo Deni, who had accompanied Ram Sagar to the Thana, was also examined at the same time. The Sub-Inspector arrived at the place of occurrence at about 3-30 A. M. There he examined the Jamadar, Santo Singh, and the three constables and then examined Sakaldeep and Kabir, Manjoor Radhey and Deni. Kabal was examined at 8 o'clock the next morning and Musammat Tetri was examined on the 24th at 10 A. M. Santo Singh and the Sub-Inspector of Police, who visited the place of occurrence later, found blood marks on the floor and on the osara wall close to the Khatia. He also found a garashee smeared with fresh blood and some cloth soaked in blood in Bissundeyi's room. He also found some scratch marks on the accused person. The accused was wearing a dhoti and a chadar at the time of the arrest, which were subsequently sent to the Chemical Examiner for analysis and report. The accused was, on these facts, sent up for trial and convicted and sentenced, as I have stated above.

There is no eye-witness to the occurrence. The case rests entirely upon circumstantial evidence; and I now propose to consider in detail the evidence which has been adduced on behalf of the prosecution, and see if this evidence satisfactorily establishes the guilt of the accused.

The evidence mainly consists of (1) Tetri and Sakaldeep's statements.

(2) The evidence of prosecution witnesses Nos. 12, 14, 18 that the prisoner had been turned out of the house by the decision of the punches due to there having been an intrigue between them.

(3) The evidence to show that one evening the accused followed her, and being exasperated on account of her refusals to allow him to have anything to do with her, prepared to throw her into a well where she had gone to draw water.

(4) Scratches on his person found after his arrest by the Police.

It will be observed that if the statements of Tetri and Sakaldeep are not accepted the conviction of the accused, in spite of the other evidence, which I have summarised above, will be an impossibility.

The learned Government Advocate, however, has argued with great emphasis that the evidence of Tetri and Sakaldeep must be accepted. I, therefore, firstly proceed to consider the evidence of Musammat Tetri. Her evidence, in short, in her own language, so far as the occurrence is concerned, is as follows:—

"After taking my meal that evening I went to Ram Kissen's house to grind wheat as labourer. I fed my son, Ram Asray, and advised him to sleep on the khatia, which I had stretched for him in the outside, until I came back. I also told him that Sakaldeep, his cousin, will sleep by his side. Bissundeyi and her son were in the house when I left for Ram Kissen's house. I returned home that night at about 10 P. M. I found the sudder darwaja bolted from inside, I called out Ram Sakal. None responded from inside. I, therefore, asked Sakaldeep what to do. He said like this, "do not bother, sleep for this night in the osara lying to the east of the door." An hour after, I heard the sound of the unbolting of the door. I got up then I saw Raghunandan, the accused."

The first question that arises for consideration is, whether Tetri did, as a matter of fact, go out of the house that evening, and whether she, on her return, finding the door bolted from inside, slept outside in the osara and then saw the accused come out of the house. It is remarkable that the prosecution have not examined Ram Kissen, in whose house she is said to have gone to grind the grains, and no explanation has been given why this important piece of evidence to corroborate Tetri has not been placed before the Court. It is next to be observed that when Ram Sagar and Santo Singh, the Jamadar, arrived at the place of the occurrence, Tetri was not found by them. If she had been there, it is difficult to conceive that Tetri would not have made the statement to them that she had seen the accused run out of the house. It is again remarkable that Sakaldeep, who was examined by the Police that night, does not mention of them, nor indeed does say even in the Court of the Committing Magistrate that Tetri was there and had seen the accused come out of the house. It is only reserved for Sakaldeep to say for the first time in the Court of Sessions that Tetri slept outside in the osara, not having gained entrance into the house, and that she saw the accused come out of that house. There is evidence, however, of prosecution witnesses Nos. 12, 14, 16, 18 and 20, who say in Court that they met Tetri immediately after the alarm was raised by Sakaldeep and that Tetri told them that she had seen the accused come out of the house and run from south to north. This evidence, however, is unworthy of credit, inasmuch as it appears from the evidence of the Sub Inspector, the Investigating Officer, that when he examined these witnesses on the night of the occurrence soon after, they did not state to him that Tetri had told them that she had seen the accused come out of the house and run towards the north. Under these circumstances, it is impossible to believe Tetri's story. The story that Tetri saw the accused coming out of the house, saw the light of day for the first time on the 24th, when she was examined by the Police. It is, therefore, impossible, under these circumstances, to accept her story, and her evidence must be rejected as extremely suspicious and unreliable.

I now proceed to consider the other evidence, that is, of Sakaldeep. His evidence is as follows:—

"While I went to sleep in the schan I shut the outer door, i. e., sudder darwaja, but without chaining or bolting it. Tetri came before midnight. Tetri shouted out from outside, calling out Ram Sakal to open the sudder darwaja. None responded. The door was not opened. I woke up when she was shouting. She said to me that the door was not being opened. I told her to sleep at the door. She slept there. About one hour after this I saw my father coming from the south in haste. I did not see him coming out of the house. I called out "Babu, Babu." He did not respond. When I first saw him he was about 3 cubits south of me. He went about $2\frac{1}{2}$ cubits off from my khatia towards its west. The night was andharia but cloudless. I distinctly saw his face as it was star-lit night. I sat up as soon as I saw my father coming and passing by."

In cross-examination he said that,

"Tetri never slept before in the outer osara.....I had not had sound sleep after Tetri's hulla.....My half sleep was broken after the sound of father's footsteps..... ...I do not recollect whether I saw my father's face distinctly by the light of the stars".

To begin with, if the presence of Tetri is not believed, as I have held it cannot be believed, much of what Sakaldeep says must be discounted. If Tetri was not there at all, how would he be roused by any hulla? There is no doubt, however, that he mentioned to the witnesses, who came to the place of the occurrence after he raised the alarm that he had seen his father run from south to north. But considering that it was a dark night and that he was sleeping immediately before, I am not fully satisfied that he actully recognised the person who passed by. Even assuming that this evidence is accepted, I consider that it would not be safe to act upon this single circumstance to convict the accused. In this connection I may quote a passage from Best's Theory of Presumptive Proof, pages 58 and 59, reproduced in his Law of Evidence, paragraph 470:—

"In dealing with judicial evidence of all kinds ignorance dogmatises, science theorises, sense judges. The right application of presumptive, as of other species of evidence depends on the intelligence, the honesty and the firmness of the tribunals. To convict, (at least, in the capital cases), on the strength of a single circumstance is always dangerous; and it has been justly observed, that where the criminative facts of a presumptive nature are more numerous most of the erroneous convictions which have taken place, have arisen from relying too much on general appearances, where no inchoate act approaching the crime, has been proved against the accused."

Is the fact that the accused ran from south to north a sufficient circumstantial evidence to prove the guilt of the accused? Evidence of previous disputes may prove motive, but, in my opinion, that evidence does not very much improve the circumstantial evidence given by Sakaldeep. Lord Coleridge, in his remarkable summing up to the Jury in the trial of Dickman, dealing with circumstantial evidence, observed as follows:—

"Now, circumstantial evidence varies infinitely in its strength in proportion to the character and variety, the cogency, the independence, one from another, of the circumstances. I think one might describe it as a network of facts cast round the accused man. That network may be a mere gossamer thread as light and unsubstantial as the very air itself. It may vanish at a touch. It may be that, as strong as it is in part, it leaves great gaps and holes through which the accused is entitled to pass in safety. It may be so close, so stringent, so coherent in its structure that no efforts on the part of the accused can break through. It may come to nothing. On the other hand, it may be absolutely convincing. If we find a variety of circumstances all pointing in the same direction convincing in proportion to the number and variety of those circumstances, and they are independent of one another although each separate piece of evidence as standing by itself may admit of an innocent interpretation, yet the cumulating effect of such evidence may be, I do not say that it is, overwhelming proof of guilt."

Here, far from being a variety of circumstances one independent of another, there is only this evidence that the accused was seen running from south to north. It has not even been suggested, much less proved, that the instrument with which the murder was committed and which was found in the room of Bissundeyi, belonged to the accused. Far more important than the flimsy evidence of Sakaldeep is the conclusive fact that the accused was found sleeping in his own house when he was arrested and the clothes that he was wearing, having been examined by the Chemical Examiner, were not found to have any blood marks. I will deal with this point once again later.

I now proceed to consider some of the other evidence in the case and see if they, in any way, furnish materials on which we, as reasonable and prudent men, could uphold the conviction of the accused. Evidence has been given to prove that the Punches had outcasted both the accused and Bissundeyi. There is no sufficient reason to doubt this evidence. There is also evidence to show that when the deceased Bissundeyi came to live in the house with her son, the accused wanted to continue his amorous visits. There is also some evidence, which may be accepted, that the woman did not encourage him in his visits. All this evidence may furnish some motive for the crime, though, in my opinion, this evidence does not prove adequate motive for the double murder. Evidence has also been given to prove that about 15 or 16 days before the occurrence the accused wanted to push the woman into a well. Details of this incident are not given and the evidence on the point is only of Kabir Imam, which is not quite clear. The prosecution also relied upon the scratches found on the person of the accused after his arrest, presumably to show that there was some struggle between him and the deceased woman Bissundeyi when she was attacked. The medical evidence shows that the injuries found on his person were four slight scratch marks on the thigh and waist. The Doctor says that they may have been caused by friction with hard substance or by nail. This evidence, however, is most inconclusive and does not, in the least, advance the case of the prosecution and any inference drawn from it is convincingly negatived by the fact that no blood marks were found on his person or on the clothes that he was wearing. If there had been a struggle, as we are asked to hold upon these scratches, surely there would have been marks of blood found on his person and on his clothes. It has not even been suggested that there was time enough for the accused to change his clothes. Further, nothing incriminating was found where the accused was lying when he was arrested. Giving my very best and anxious consideration to the evidence in the case, I am of opinion that the case has not been satisfactorily established against the accused. The fundamental rule by which circumstantial evidence is estimated, is that in order to justify the inference of guilt the inculpatory facts must be incompatible with the innocence of the accused and incapable of explanation upon any reasonable hypothesis, other than that of his guilt; and, while I do not hold as a proposition of law that quantum or value of evidence must depend upon the enormity of crime, yet I am inclined to follow distinguished and eminent Judges like Sir Mathew Hale, Lord Cockburn, Lord Chancellor Nottingham and Mr. Baron Legge, who held that "the fouler the crime was the clearer and the plainer the proof ought to be."

There is no doubt that a double murder has been committed, but, as has been rightly pointed out by Baron Park in Regina v. Tawell (1), that justice never requires the sacrifice of a victim and an erroneous sentence "may produce incalculable and irreparable mischief and destroy all integrity of tribunals and introduce a train of social evils as the inevitable result."

In conclusion, I am distinctly of opinion, that the evidence of Sakaldeep that he saw his father run from south to north in the dark night, while he had just got up from sleep, is not such as inspires confidence, and upon which we should act to convict the accused. Further, I am of opinion that, even if that evidence is accepted, it is a circumstance which stands by itself uncorroborated and from which no inference that the accused committed the murder inside the house can be legally drawn. The present case is fully covered by the case given by Best in his "Law of Evidence," paragraph 301. He says:

> "A. B. is found murdered; and C. D., a man of bad character, is thought to have had an interest in his death; this might give rise to a conjecture that he was the murderer and if, in addition to this, he had, a short time before the murder, been seen near the spot where the body was found, the feeling in favour of his guilt might amount to suspicion."

This, at the very highest, is a case of suspicion, and I would, therefore, acquit the accused of the charges of murder and arson, for which he has been convicted, and direct that he be released forthwith.

MUHAMMAD SHER ALI KHAN—PETITIONERS

versus

GHASI RAM AND OTHERS—OPPOSITE PARTIES.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 499—Petition defamatory—Dismissal after inquiry—Defamation, action for, maintainability of—Witness, how far protected.

Nine persons presented a petition, the character of which was generally defamatory, to the District Magistrate complaining of various acts of oppression against the mukhia of a village. An inquiry was held and certain persons were examined as witnesses with the result that the petition was dismissed. The mukhia then filed a complaint under section 500, Penal Code, against sixteen persons, including those who had signed the petition, but the complaint was dismissed under section 202 of the Criminal Procedure Code on the ground that the parties complained against having made statements in answer to questions they could not be prosecuted:

Held, that the complaint being not only against such persons as were called and examined, but against all the signatories to the petition to the District Magistrate, the order dismissing the complaint could not be sustained.

A witness has no greater protection against a charge of defamation than any other person.

A witness in order to be protected from a statement prima facie defamatory made by him must bring himself within one or more Exceptions to section 499.

Criminal revision against the order of the District Magistrate, Bulandshahr, dated the 14th October 1920.

Mr. J. M. Banerji, for the Applicant.

Messrs. M. L. Agarwala and A. P. Dube, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.—On the 8th of March 1920 nine persons put in a petition before the District Magistrate of Bulandshahr, in which they asserted that Sher Ali Khan, the mukhia of the village of Mangalpur, had been guilty of various acts of oppression and was of a character generally defamatory of him. That application was enquired into by a Tahsildar under the orders of the District Magistrate and in the course of enquiry certain persons were called as witnesses and gave their evidence on oath. The result of that enquiry was on the whole favourable to Sher Ali Khan with the result that he was not removed from the mukhiaship as obviously was desired by the petitioners. Sher Ali Khan asked for sanction to prosecute two of the witnesses for statements made by them which he said were deliberately false. That application was dismissed by both the Courts below and I have refused to interfere in it to-day. This case, however, is on a different matter. In this case Sher Ali Khan filed a complaint under section 500 of the Indian Penal Code against 16 men in the Court of a Magistrate of the First Class. That Magistrate proceeded under section 202 of the Criminal Procedure Code and examined Sher Ali Khan. Having done so, he passed the following order:—

"I have looked into the statements taken by the Tahsildar. They were recorded in connection with an enquiry about the mukhia. The enquiry was not public and I think no action can be taken against the persons making them. The public has no access to these statements. I cannot proceed against the persons accused under section 500 of the Indian Penal Code. I dismiss the complaint under section 203 of the Criminal Procedure Code." The learned Magistrate has quite overlooked the fact that the complaint is made not only against such persons as were called and examined before the Tahsildar but also against all the signatories of the original complaint against Sher Ali Khan and six other persons. On revision from this order the learned District Magistrate said:—

"I entirely agree with the decision of the lower Court. The statements complained of were made by parties summoned for examination by the Tahsildar and in answer to his questions. No case under section 500 can lie in respect of them. Application disallowed." Here, again, the learned District Magistrate has fallen into the same error. The offence of defamation is defined in section 499 of the Criminal Procedure Code. It has been held by this Court that a witness has no greater protection against a charge of defamation than any other person and that a witness in order to be protected from a statement prima facie defamatory made by him must bring himself within one or more Exceptions to section 499. I think both Courts below have misdirected themselves as to the precise matters that they should have enquired into. I, therefore, set aside the orders of the Courts below and send the record back to the Magistrate with directions to hold a proper enquiry under section 202 of the Criminal Procedure Code and, having regard to the provisions of section 499 and the exemptions thereto, to dispose of the complaint according to law. I have come to no sort of conclusion on the merits of the case.

Order set aside.

Muhammadan Law—Dower—Gift in lieu of dower, nature of—Presumption—Widow in possession—Adverse possession.

There is no presumption that a gift made by a Muhammadan husband to his wife in lieu of dower is an absolute gift, or that in such a case the wife is only to remain in possession of the property so long as her claim is not satisfied out of the profits of the property. [p. 867, col. 1.]

Where, however, the widow is in possession to satisfy herself out of the proceeds of the property for arrears of dower, her position is that of a usufructuary mortgagee, and she cannot by any act of her own so alter the nature of her possession as to make the Statute of Limitation run against those who are entitled to the equity of redemption. [p. 867, col. 2.]

Letters Patent appeal against the judgment of Mr. Justice Das, dated the 8th May 1919, in Second Appeal No. 1167 of 1917, reversing a decree of the Subordinate Judge, First Court, Saran, dated the 14th August 1917, affirming a decree of the Munsif, Chapra, dated the 1st July 1916.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER C. J.—This is an appeal from a decision of a learned Judge of this Court, under clause 10 of the Letters Patent.

The defendant No. 1, Ram Lagan Sab, is the appellant. The plaintiffs and the remaining defendants are the heirs of one Teg Ali who held during his lifetime the four bighas of land which forms the subject of the present suit. Sheikh Teg Ali died in the year 1886 and it is not now disputed that before his death he made over this property to his widow in lieu of dower. The question which formed the main dispute in the suit was, whether this was an absolute gift out and out, thereby discharging the liability for dower entirely, or whether it was, what there is reason to believe is more usual amongst Muhammadans, a mere putting the wife in possession for the purpose of satisfying herself for the arrears of her dower out of the proceeds of the property, in which case she would be entitled to remain in possession so long, and so long only, as the arrears of dower were not satisfied from the proceeds of the property.

The appellant, the defendant No. 1, in the year 1909, long after the death of Teg Ali, purchased from his widow the property in dispute. Subsequently, in 1913, a suit was decided in which one of the defendants (defendant No. 2) and the defendant No. 1, the present appellant, were parties in which it was found that Musammat Maniran, the widow of Teg Ali, had an absolute interest in the property in suit. The other parties to the present suit are, of course, not bound by anything which was decided in that case. Either in, or sometime before, the year 1915 Musammat Maniran died and in that year the present suit was instituted by the plaintiffs claiming possession jointly with the other defendants than the appellant of the property in question. The defence put forward by the appellant was that Musammat Maniran was the absolute owner of the property and, therefore, entitled to convey it to him as she did in the year 1909. Secondly, he pleaded that the suit was barred by limitation because, more than 12 years before the institution of the suit, namely, in the year 1895, Musammat Maniran had got her name recorded as kashtkar of the property in question in the Record of Rights and that that was an open assertion of title and from that moment her possession became hostile to the heirs or any body else claiming under Teg Ali.

When the matter came before the learned Munsif there was evidence by both parties as to what happened on the occasion when the property was, to use a neutral word, made over to Musammat Maniran, the plaintiffs contending that she was merely put in possession in order to satisfy the arrears due to her in respect of her dower, the defendants, on the other hand, endeavouring to make out that there had been an absolute gift. The learned Munsif considered, having regard to the fact that the Musammat's name had been recorded as the kashtkar in the Record of Rights, that the strong probabilities were that the defendants' case was the true one and he considered that the evidence adduced by the plaintiffs to prove that the disputed property was not given to Maniran absolutely was extremely inadequate and did not rebut the presumption arising from the entry in the Record of Rights, and found that the disputed property belonged absolutely to Maniran and that the plaintiffs had no title.

On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge unfortunately made use of some expressions which have given rise to considerable difficulty in this appeal. He said, after dealing with the case put forward by the parties: "It is an admitted fact that Teg Ali died more than 30 years ago and it is common ground that he gave the land to his wife in lieu of dower before his death." If the learned Judge meant by that that it was common ground that there was an absolute gift to the wife then, clearly, that is not justified by the facts of the case; but he cannot have meant more than that it was common ground that the land was transferred into the control and possession of the wife because the next sentence goes on as follows: "The only question is whether Teg Ali gave the land absolutely to his wife or only allowed her to remain in possession until the dower was paid up." That really was the question in dispute between the parties. Then he goes on and says: "There is no evidence worth the name on either side to prove their respective allegations." By that the learned Judge, I think, clearly was referring to the oral evidence which was given by the parties relating to the incidents which took place shortly before Teg Ali's death. He then goes on: "The facts can be gleaned from the subsequent events only. Where a husband gives land to his wife during his lifetime in lieu of dower it is usually an absolute right that is given. The subsequent circumstances in the present case also point to the same conclusion." The learned Judge then dealt with the circumstances and came to the conclusion that the widow had an absolute right in the property even before her husband's death and, therefore, that the suit against the defendant No. 1 must fail.

When the matter came before the learned Judge of this Court on appeal from that decision much was made of the fact that the learned Subordinate Judge had stated that, where a husband gives land to his wife during his lifetime in lieu of dower, it is usually an absolute right that is given and it was argued that that could only mean, in the mind of the learned Judge, that where a wife had been put in possession of property in lieu of dower there was a presumption that the transaction was an absolute gift and not merely a putting of the wife in possession for the purpose of satisfying her dower out of the proceeds. There was clearly no evidence on the record to support that view of the learned Judge which, if it means anything, means that he thought there was a presumption in favour of a gift, and it was argued that his decision on the question of fact must have been considerably influenced by assuming that such a presumption in such a case arose, and, therefore, his judgment could not stand. It was contended, in addition, that so far from there being any such presumption the presumption was in fact the other way and a passage in Mr. Tyabji's well-known book on Muhammadan Law was referred to and is quoted in the judgment of the learned Judge of this Court from whose decision this appeal is brought. The passage appears at page 124 of the first edition of that book. It is says, "Where a Mussalman widow is in possession of property of her deceased husband in lieu of her dower:—

"(1) she is under the liability to account to the heirs of the deceased for the profits received by her; and

"(2) she is herself entitled to charge interest on the dower due to her and to set it off against the said profits."

The learned Judge having quoted that passage came to the conclusion that, in all cases where a Muhammadan widow is found in possession of property in lieu of dower after her husband's death, her position is that of a usufructuary mortgagee and that she is entitled to remain in possession merely as a mortgagee in order that her claim for dower might be satisfied out of the rents and profits and that she is in no case entitled to any larger interest. He came to the conclusion that, if her position was that of a mortgagee in possession, she was clearly not entitled to execute a conveyance in respect of the property in favour of the defendant No. 1, and that, having regard to what her actual position was, namely, that of a mortgagee in possession she could not acquire a title by adverse possession by having her name recorded as a kashtkar in the Record of Rights, and that no act on her part could bar the right of the heirs of Teg Ali to sue for possession of the property as against the widow or her transferees on the ground that her claim for dower had been satisfied and that, therefore, they were entitled to the equity of redemption in the property. With great respect to the learned Judge, I think that he was not justified in assuming from the passage which he quoted from Mr. Tyabji's work on Muhammadan Law that in no case could an absolute gift of property be made to a Muhammadan wife in lieu of her dower. I can see no reason in law why the husband should not during his lifetime satisfy his liability to pay his wife's dower just as much out of real property as out of personal property, such as money. The dower can be paid off at any time during the joint lifetime of the husband and wife. It can certainly be paid in money, although it may not be usual to do so, and I can see no reason why a conveyance of landed property should not be made to the wife as an out and out transfer of onwership for the purpose of satisfying the dower. In fact, in another passage in the work of the learned author to which reference has already been made, at page 318 of the First Edition, it is clearly stated that a gift by a husband to a wife during his lifetime by way of payment of her dower is a gift for which there is a good consideration and may be treated as a hiba-bil-iwaz. In these circumstances, it seems to me, although I agree with the learned Judge of this Court that the decision of the Subordinate Judge cannot stand because he assumed a presumption to exist which, in my opinion, has no legal foundation, nevertheless, the matter is not concluded and ought to go back again to the Subordinate Judge for further consideration for him to determine upon the evidence already given and upon the surrounding circumstances of the case whether in fact the transaction which took place shortly before the death of Teg Ali was an out and out gift to his wife or was merely a transaction whereby she was put in possession of the property to satisfy herself for her arrears of dower out of the rents and profits of that property.

It was contended on behalf of the appellant that it was not necessary to send the case back because, in any view of the facts, he and his predecessor in-title, the widow, had acquired by adverse possession an absolute title to the property the adverse possession being evidenced by the fact that the Record of Rights recorded the widow as the kashtkar of the property. That point, of course, only arises upon the hypothesis that the widow was in possession to satisfy herself out of the proceeds for arrears of dower, in other words, that she was in possession as a usufructuary mortgagee because that is practically the position with regard to the property in such a case. It seems to be well settled, as the learned Judge has pointed out, that in such a case the act of the mortgagee cannot alter the nature of the possession as to make the Statute of Limitation run against those who are entitled to the equity of redemption. If that be so, and I see no reason to differ from the learned Judge on that part of the case, it follows that no question of limitation can arise in this case out of the facts which have been either proved or admitted. At the same time, these facts, namely, that the widow has been recorded in the Record of Rights as the kashtkar and the fact that nothing has been done by those who are now claiming to recover the property may have a material bearing on the mind of the learned Subordinate Judge when he comes to decide the real question in the case and he is entitled to take these facts into consideration in endeavouring to arrive at the truth. With these directions, I think that the case should be remanded to the Subordinate Judge to arrive at a conclusion of fact upon the main question in the case without giving any weight to the consideration which influenced him in the first instance where he found that in such a case as this it is usually an absolute right which is given. There is no such presumption that it is usually an absolute right and therefore, that matter must be left out of consideration by the Subordinate Judge and must not be allowed to influence his judgment in any way. The costs of this appeal and of the appeal to the learned Judge of this Court will abide the ultimate result of the suit.

ROSS, J.—I agree.

B held a mortgage of an occupancy holding and on 4th February 1912 obtained a decree upon the mortgage, in execution of which he, on 19th November 1913, purchased the holding. On the 19th March 1912, however, the landlord, in execution of a decree for arrears of rent against the tenant, purchased the holding and obtained formal possession on 7th June 1912. On 18th May 1914 he brought the present suit for possession, and B. was subsequently joined as defendant, and after he had been so joined a notice was served upon him, under section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, on the 5th May 1915:

Held, that, inasumch as the sale in execution of the mortgage-decree took place after the sale in execution of the rent-decree it had not the effect of extinguishing the mortgage encumbrance at the date of the sale in execution of the rent-decree and that at that date the mortgagee had a subsisting encumbrance: that the purchaser at the sale in execution of the rent-decree took subject to that encumbrance, and was, therefore, bound to annul the encumbrance within the time limited by section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and not having done so, the encumbrance still subsisted; but that his position was that of a purchaser of the equity of redemption, and as he was no party to the mortgage-decree or to the sale in execution of which B. purchased the mortgaged property, it was open to him to redeem the mortgage. JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit by an auction-purchaser of a holding, at a sale for arrears of rent to recover possession of the lands comprised in the holding, from the defendant who had subsequently purchased the same at a sale in execution of a decree upon a mortgage executed by the tenant.

It appears that the tenant had mortgaged the holding to the defendant, Bidhumukhi, in 1901. A suit was brought upon the mortgage in 1911 and was decreed by the Court of first instance on the 6th February 1912, and Bidhumukhi purchased the holding in execution of her mortgage-decree on the 19th November 1913.

In the meantime, the landlord obtained a decree for arrears of rent against the tenant, and in execution of that decree the holding was purchased by the decree-holder (the plaintiff) on 19th March 1912. He obtained formal delivery of possession on the 17th June 1912, and on the 31st August 1912, served notices under section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act upon the defendants (other than Bidhumukhi) who held the lands as under-raiyats under her.

On the 2nd April 1913, an application was made by Bidhumukhi for setting aside the sale, which, however, was dismissed on the 15th December 1913. The present suit for possession was instituted on the 18th May 1914 originally against the other defendants, and Bidhumukhi was subsequently joined as a defendant. A notice was served upon her under section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act on the 15th May 1915 after she had been joined as party to the suit.

The Court of first instance held that the incumbrance held by Bidhumukhi had not been annulled within one year from the date of plaintiff's knowledge of the incumbrance and accordingly dismissed the suit. On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge, relying upon the case of Gopi Nath v. Kashi Nath (1), held that the plaintiffs' purchase would prevail over that of the defendant and that the question of notice upon her did not, therefore, arise and accordingly decreed the suit. The defendants have appealed to this Court.

Now, the plaintiff as the purchaser of the holding purchased it with power to annul all incumbrances. At the date of the sale, viz, on the 19th March 1912, the defendant Bidhumukhi had an incumbrance (a mortgage) on the holding. She had obtained a decree upon her mortgage on the 6th February 1912, but we do not think that the mortgage was extinguished by the decree passed upon it. It is true that in the case of Akhoy Kumar Soor v. Bejoy Chand Mohatap (2) it was observed by Hill and Brett, JJ., that when a mortgagee of a tenure had enforced his lien and obtained a decree it would no longer remain an incumbrance on the tenure which could be avoided under the provisions of section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It appears, however, that three contentions were raised in that case, viz., first, that the sale was not under the Bengal Tenancy Act; secondly, that the notice under section 167 was not legal, and the application for service of notice having been made more than one year after the date of the sale or the date on which the purchaser had first notice of the incumbrance, was barred by limitation, and thirdly, that after the applicant had sued on his mortgage and had obtained a decree the mortgage lien had been extinguished and had become a judgment debt which could not be annulled under the provisions of section 167. The learned Judges observed that it was not necessary to go at length into the first and third contentions, as they considered that the appeal must succeed on the ground of limitation, the application under section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act having been made more than one year after the date on which the purchaser had notice of the incumbrance. There is, however, the observation which runs as follows:—

"After, as in this case, the mortgagee had enforced his lien and obtained his decree, it seems difficult to hold that the decree would remain as an incumbrance on the tenure which could be avoided under the provisions of section 167 of the Tenancy Act." But if there was no incumbrance after a decree was obtained upon the mortgage, there was nothing to annul and no question of limitation of one year under section 167 could arise, and yet the case was decided upon the question of limitation. The observation quoted above, therefore, was inconsistent with the decision as, has been pointed out in the case of Banbihari Kapur v. Khetra Pal Singh Roy (3). The case of Akhoy Kumar Soor v. Bejoy Chand Mohatap (2) was referred to by Harington and Brett, JJ., in Gopi Nath v. Kashi Nath (1), but the decision in the latter case turned upon the question of priorities which we will deal with later.

It is well established that a mortgage lien is not extinguished on the passing of a decree upon it. The security is not extinguished till the sale takes place in execution of the mortgage-decree and the sale proceeds are distributed in satisfaction of the mortgage-debt. See Bibiian Bibi v. Sachi Bewah (4), Surjiram Marwari v. Barhamdeo Persad (5), Jog Narain Singh v. Badri Das (6) and Basant Kumar v. Khulna Loan Company (7).

The learned Pleader for the respondent, however, contends that the security became extinguished when the sale took place in execution of the mortgage decree and there was no longer any incumbrance which the plaintiff was required to annul. In the case of Banbihari Kapur v. Khetra Pal Singh Roy (3), the learned Judges held that, where a mortgagee of a tenure gets a decree and purchases the mortgaged tenure at a sale in execution of his mortgage-decree, and the tenure is subsequently sold again in execution of a rent-decree against the original tenant, it is open to the mortgagor to fall back on his mortgage as a shield against the purchaser under the rent sale when that sale is not free from incumbrances. The learned Judges relied upon the case of Bhawani Koer v. Mathura Prasad (8).

In that case the mortgagee of certain shares in four out of seventy-one villages comprised in a revenue paying estate obtained a decree on his mortgage, and at the sale held in execution of the decree purchased the properties mortgaged on the 19th March 1900. On the 20th March 1900 an instalment of Government revenue on the seventy one villages fell into arrears, and a share of the whole estate, including the four villages purchased by the mortgagee, was notified for sale. The purchaser did not pay the revenue, and on the 23rd April obtained a certificate confirming the sale held on the 19th March. On the 6th June 1900, the villages were sold for arrears of revenue, and the purchaser at that sale sued the purchaser at the mortgage sale for possession of the share purchased by the latter. The learned Judges, Brett and Mookerjee, JJ., were of opinion that, although the purchase at the mortgage sale was confirmed before the revenue sale, yet as it was confirmed after default and without any knowledge on the part of the purchaser at the mortgage sale that default had been made, the latter was entitled to rely upon his mortgage and use it as a shield for his protection against the purchaser at the revenue sale. It was accordingly held that the purchaser at the revenue sale purchased the share subject to the incumbrance under section 54 of Act XI of 1859. That decision, however, was set aside on appeal by the Judicial Committee : [See Bhawani Kumar v. Mathura Prasad Singh (9)]. Their Lordships held that the property mortgaged passed to the mortgagee on the 19th March 1900 when the sale took place, that he became the owner of the property and liable for the revenue which fell due after the date, and that he could not maintain as against himself or as against third parties unconnected with the mortgage transactions upon the property, the position that his mortgage still remained an incumbrance thereon.

In that case, however, the mortgage sale took place and the mortgagee became owner of the property before the revenue sale took place. His incumbrance upon the property had, therefore, become "extinct and lost in the mortgagee's overriding right when he became the complete owner of the lands." In the present case the sale in execution of the mortgage decree did not take place until after the sale in execution of the rent-decree. The defendant, therefore, had not become the owner of the mortgaged property at the date of the sale held in execution of the rent-decree. But reliance is placed upon certain observations of their Lordships which run as follows:—

"Furthermore, if the properties, which were the subject of sale, were liable to attachment for sums due from the lands as revenue, and falling into arrear subsequent to the actual date of sale, namely, the 19th March 1900, it was not within the legal right of the mortgagee on the one hand to claim as against the mortgagor that the ownership of the property had been transferred, and, at the same time, to claim against the Government, or in respect of third parties unconnected with either mortgagor or mortgagee, that the mortgagor had not transferred the rights of ownership to the mortgagee, but himself remained in the position of owner. For the mortgagee to be permitted to say to the mortgagor that the ownership had been transferred, and to say to an outsider, like the Collector of revenue, that the ownership had not been transferred, is a conclusion not supported by good sense and, in the opinion of their Lordships, they are not forced to it by any canon or rule of law," and again : "In their Lordships' opinion it is clearly unsafe to apply considerations as to the rights of prior and succeeding mortgagees to questions like the present. For, in the present case, no question arises as between a first and succeeding mortgagee, and no right or duty emerges with regard to the avoidance of an inequitable priority alleged to arise inferentially by acquisition of the estate." Their Lordships, however, in the next sentence observed: "On the 19th March 1900, the crucial date in question, there were no interests of any kind to enter into account or consideration so as to impede the full and complete transfer of ownership of the estate as such. In these circumstances, when the 29th March 1900 was reached, the property which fell then into arrear of revenue and became liable to subsequent sale was the property in fact and in law of no one but the purchaser, namely, the mortgagee."

The decision of the Judicial Committee was based upon the ground that the ownership of the property mortgaged had passed completely to the mortgagee before the arrears of revenue fell due and, consequently, before the sale which took place for those arrears; and the observations of their Lordships must be taken in connection with the facts of that case. In the present case, on the other hand, the mortgagee had a subsisting encumbrance at the date of the sale which was held in execution of the rent decree. The case of Bhawani Kumar v. Mathura Prasad Singh (9), therefore, is distinguishable from the present.

The lower Appellate Court relied upon the case of Gopi Nath v. Kashi Nath (1). In that case, it appears that after a mortgagee had obtained a decree for sale on his mortgage, the landlord of the jote, the subject of the mortgage, brought a suit for rent and sold the jote in execution of a decree obtained therein. Later on, the property was sold in execution of the mortgage-decree and purchased by the mortgagee who took possession. In a suit for possession brought by the purchaser at the rent sale after service of notice on the mortgagee under section 167 purporting to annul the mortgage, it was held by Harington and Brett, JJ., that the question was really one of priorities, and the purchaser at the rent sale had priority over the purchaser in execution of the mortgage-decree. Harington, J., observed that by section 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Act the arrears of rent are made a first charge on the holding, that the mortgagee of the holding when he sold the holding in execution of his mortgage decree was in the position of a second mortgagee, the property having been already sold in execution by the landlord, who was qua his decree for arrears of rent in a position very similar to that of a first mortgagee. Brett, J., also was of opinion that the purchaser in execution of a rent-decree has priority over the purchaser in execution of a mortgage-decree. The decision was followed by Brett and Sharf-uddin, JJ., in Taibatannessa Chowdhurani v. Pravabati Dasi (10).

No doubt, section 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Act lays down that "rent shall be a first charge." But the analogy does not go further than that. In the first place, in ordinary mortgage transactions, a prior mortgagee must make the puisne mortgagees parties to a suit on the mortgage in order that the sale held in execution of the decree might be binding upon them, but a mortgagee on a holding or tenure is not made a party to a suit for rent by the landlord, and he is not bound to do so, although the rent is a first charge; and the mortgagee cannot bring a suit for redemption or otherwise exercise his right of redemption after the rent sale, on the ground that he was not a party to the rent decree and was not bound by the sale. In the next place, the learned Judges in the two cases cited above do not appear to have considered the provision of Chapter XIV of the Bengal Tenancy Act in determining the rights of a purchaser at a sale for arrears of rent and those of a mortgagee, respectively. Section 159 provides that where a tenure or holding is sold in execution of a decree for arrears due in respect thereof the purchaser shall take subject to the interests defined in the Chapter as "protected interest", but with power to annul the interests defined in that Chapter as "incumbrances" provided (among other things) that the power to annul shall be exercisable only in the manner directed by the Chapter. Section 161 lays down that, for the purposes of Chapter XIV, the term "incumbrances", used with reference to a tenancy, means (among other things) any 'lien' created by the tenant on his tenure or holding, and section 167 prescribes that a purchaser desirous of annulling an incumbrance must present an application to the Collector within one year from the date of the sale or the date on which he first has notice of the incumbrance for service of notice on the incumbrancer. So that, notwithstanding that section 65 provides that "rent shall be a first charge" on a tenure or holding, the purchaser must take steps as laid down in section 167 for annulling the mortgage. If he does not do so within the time specified in section 167, the mortgage remains an incumbrance even though the purchaser at the rent sale may be in the position of a first mortgagee.

It is clear, therefore, that if there is a mortgage on the holding which is not annulled by the purchaser within the time limited by section 167, the tenure or holding continues to be liable for such mortgage and the analogy of first and subsequent inencumbrances will not avail the purchaser at the rent sale.

(10) 4 Ind. Cas. 750; 10 C. L. J. 640.

As stated above, the incumbrance held by Bidhumukhi (the mortgagee) subsisted at the date of the rent sale. The plaintiff as the purchaser at the rent sale took the property subject to that incumbrance. The fact that the mortgagee enforced her mortgage after the date of the rent sale could not affect the incumbrance subject to which the plaintiff purchased at the rent sale. The question whether the incumbrance was extinguished or was subsisting has to be considered, we think, with reference to the date of the rent sale. The plaintiff was, therefore, bound to annul that incumbrance within the time limited by section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and, not having done so, the incumbrance still subsists. We do not think, however, that the mortgagee (Bidhumukhi) can claim the right of owenership of the property (by virtue of her purchase) as against the plaintiff. The position of the plaintiff was that of a purchaser of the equity of redemption and he was no party to the mortgage-decree or the sale in execution of which the mortgaged property was purchased by Bidhumukhi. It is open, therefore, to the plaintiff to redeem the mortgage and we think that he may be allowed that relief in the present case. We accordingly direct that, upon the plaintiff's paying off Bidhumukhi, the amount for which the mortgaged propety was sold, within two months of the arrival of this order in the Court below the plaintiff will get possession of the property. The defendant will not be entitled to get any interest on the decretal amount and the plaintiffs will not be entitled to get any wasilat. The defendants other than Bidhumukhi claim title under her, and if the plaintiff gets possession against Bidhumukhi he will get possession against the other defendants also. If the said amount is not paid within the period specified above, the decree of the lower Appellate Court will be set aside and the plaintiffs' suit dismissed. The parties to bear their own costs in all the Courts. This order will govern the other Appeal No. 1027 of 1917

Order accordingly.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Partition, suit for—Death of co-parcener after preliminary decree, effect of—Jurisdiction of Court passing final decree to consider effect of death on shares of other co-parceners.

Although, ordinarily, the rights of the parties to a suit ought to be determined as at the date of the institution of the suit, a suit for partition under the Hindu Law is treated as an exception, and, in order to save costs and to prevent multiplicity of proceedings, the Courts are entitled, and even bound, to take into consideration matters subsequent to the commencement of the suit. [p. 873, col. 1.]

In point of law, a partition action does not come to an end with the preliminary decree, but continues till the final decree is made, and the shares to be decreed to the parties must be those to which they are entitled on the date of the final decree. Therefore, where a co-parcener dies after the passing of the preliminary decree, the Court passing the final decree is competent to consider the effect of the death on the shares of the remaining co-parceners. JUDGMENT.

DAS, J.—I have considered the matter very carefully and I am of opinion that the learned District Judge had complete jurisdiction to pass the order which we have been asked to revise in these proceedings. The point made before us is, that the learned District Judge has in effect amended the decree of this Court. It is true that the preliminary decree in the partition action was passed by this Court* and that this Court remitted the case to the Court below in order to enable that Court to make the distribution according to the directions contained in the decree of this Court. But I cannot regard the order passed by the learned District Judge as an order of amendment of the decree of the High Court. An event occurred after the passing of the preliminary decree, namely, the death of a co-parcener entitled to a share on partition, which it was essentially necessary for the Court to take note of in making the distribution; and the order complained of was an order rendered necessary by an event which occurred subsequent to the preliminary decree. Although, ordinarily, the rights of the parties ought to be determined as at the date of the institution of the suit, a suit for partition under the Hindu Law is treated as an exception and, in order to save costs and to prevent multiplicity of proceedings, the Courts are entitled, and even bound, to take into consideration matters subsequent to the commencement of such a suit. I am of opinion, therefore, that the order of the learned District Judge cannot be regarded as an order of amendment of the decree, but that it was an order rendered necessary by an event which occurred subsequent to the preliminary decree.

It was next argued on behalf of the petitioners that the foundation of allotment is the preliminary decree, and that the only Court which can take note of subsequent events is the Court which passed the preliminary decree. I confess that this argument considerably impressed me at the time when it was advanced, but having considered the matter very fully, I have come to the conclusion that it does not deserve success. Much could be said in favour of the argument if the proceedings in connection with the final decree were proceedings in execution of the preliminary decree or if the shares to be decreed to the parties were those to which they were entitled on the date of the preliminary decree. But in point of law, the partition action does not come to an end with the preliminary decree, but continues till the final decree is made, and it has been held that the shares to be decreed to the parties must be those to which they are entitled on the date of the final decree. If proceedings in connection with the final decree be proceedings in the partition action, then the Court of the District Judge was the only Court which was in seisin of the partition proceedings. The High Court having passed the preliminary decree and remitted the case to the Court of the District Judge, ceased to exercise any dominion over the action; and I cannot think how the application which resulted in the order sought to be revised, which it must be remembered, was an application in the action, could possibly have been made to the High Court when the Court of the District Judge was in seisin of the action. In the next place, if the proposition be correct that the shares to be decreed to the parties must be those to which they are entitled on the date of the final decree, then it seems to me that the Court which has to pass the final decree is the only Court which can determine to what shares the parties are finally entitled. My only doubt is whether the order of the learned District Judge is not a decree within the meaning of section 2 (2) of the Code and as such appealable under the Code. But that question does not arise in this application which is an application to set aside the order of the learned District Judge on the ground that he had no jurisdiction to make it. I hold that he had complete jurisdiction to make the order, and must refuse this application with costs. Hearing fee two gold mohurs.

Second appeal against the decision of the District Judge, Allahabad, dated the 31st July 1917.

The Hon'ble Dr. T. B. Sapru, for the Appellant.

Kailas Nath Katju for The Hon'ble Pt. Moti Lal Nehru, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The parties to this litigation are Pragwals, that is to say, members of a certain class of priests, whose occupation it is to receive pilgrims at the sacred confluence of the waters at Allahabad and to assist them in the due performance of the ceremonies attendant on their bathing in these sacred waters, more particularly on the occasion of certain festivals generally revered. The findings of the Courts below are in substance as follows:—One Sri Krishen was a Pragwal carrying on this particular business. He used a flag with a certain emblem, which flag was fixed at the spot where at any particular time he had taken up his post on the river bank as a means of identification for the benefit of the illiterate pilgrims a sort of notice that if they came to the spot indicated by that flag they would find there Sri Kishen Pragwal, the descendant and successor by inheritance to the rights of a line of Pragwals with whom it had been customary for any particular pilgrim and his family for generations past to deal on the occasion of their visits to the sacred confluence. Sri Kishen died many years ago and his rights, whatever they were, passed to his widow Musammat Kesar. The defendant, Beni Madho, was a confidential servant or attendant of Sri Kishen and continued to serve the widow in the same capacity. His position was so far changed by the death of Sri Kishen that Musammat Kesar, being unable personally to minister to the wants of the pilgrims, he was in a position to undertake that duty; but according to the finding which we must accept in second appeal, he did so as her agent and representative. Musammat Kesar died in 1915 and the plaintiff, Hira Lal, is the nearest reversioner under Hindu Law to the estate of Sri Kishen, whatever that estate may be. The plaintiff claims the right to take over, if we may so express it, the business which had been carried on by Beni Madho as the agent of Musammat Kesar. He complains that his efforts to do so have been obstructed by the defendant. There has been a previous litigation, we may remark, in connection with an attempt made by Musammat Kesar to transfer certain houses to Beni Madho by way of gift. The essential fact upon which this suit is based is that, when the plaintiff takes his seat beside the waters in the neighbourhood of the confluence and sets up the flag which was used by Sri Kishen as his emblem, he finds the defendant Beni Madho also seated somewhere in the neighbourhood using a similar flag. There is a plea in the memorandum of appeal before us against the finding of the Courts below that the flag used by Beni Madho is a colourable imitation of that used by Hira Lal, but we must accept the clear finding of the lower Appellate Court on this point. We must take it that the flag set up by Beni Madho is calculated to mislead pilgrims into the belief that he, and not Hira Lal, is the successor and representative of Sri Kishen. The one substantial point which has been argued before us is, whether, upon these facts, the plaintiff has a cause of action against Beni Madho. The right in virtue of which the plaintiff brings this suit is one of a kind generally described by the expression 'birt jajmani.' It would be easy to cite cases in which a right so described to receive offerings from pilgrims visiting a particular shrine has been recognised by the Courts in this Province and by this Court, as of the nature of property as being enforceable by suit, as being generally heritable and sometimes as being transferable. We have to consider what the particular right of birt jajmani means in connection with the ceremonial bathing at the confluence of the rivers at Allahabad. Obviously, no particular pilgrim can be compelled to seek the ministrations of any particular priest. It has been suggested also that no suit would lie by any particular priest against a pilgrim who had accepted his ministrations for the recovery of any particular fee. This latter argument, whether well founded or not, is of no practical consequence. As a matter of established custom, the pilgrims who accept the ministrations of a particular priest in connection with their ceremonial bathing do pay him some remuneration for his services. Probably they would be too much afraid of the possibility of his calling down upon them the divine displeasure if they refused payment of whatever the customary fee may be. Now, it is beyond question, that is to say, it is apparent from the evidence on this record, it does not seem to have been seriously denied in the pleadings, and it would not be difficult to quote decisions of this Court which proceed on the assumption that particular pilgrims are in the habit of seeking out particular priests, or the descendants or representatives of some particular priest with whom they know that their family has dealt for generations. It may be that a pilgrim has greater faith in the due performance of all necessary ceremonies, and, therefore, in the religious benefit derivable from the ceremonial bathing, if he knows that it has been performed under the guidance and with the help of the prayers and ministrations of the representative of the priest with whom his family has been in the habit of dealing. The question then is, simply, whether the plaintiff is entitled to restrain Beni Madho from making use of an emblem, when such use in effect serves as a notice to the illiterate pilgrims that Beni Madho is the representative and successor of Sri Kishen, whereas such representative capacity belongs in law to the plaintiff, Hira Lal. The nearest case to the present, that of Ganesh v. Babu Ram (1) decided by a Bench of this Court of which one of us was a member, proceeds on the assumption that the birt jajmani right of Pragwals at the sacred confluence of the rivers at Allahabad is a right both heritable and enforceable at law. It is quite true that this point was not specifically argued in that case but the decision proceeds on the assumption that this was so. We have been referred to two other cases, one to be found in Husain Ali v. Matukman (2) and one in Municipal Board of Cawnpore v. Lallu (3), in which the question in issue was as to the right of certain priests to make use of a particular parcel of land to the exclusion of all other persons. In the former case the right was claimed as against a lessee of the Municipal Board of Benares and in the latter case as against the Municipal Board of Cawnpore. The decision of this Court in each case was that the plaintiff had failed to establish any right in the soil. No question arises in the present case as to the right of the plaintiff or of any other Pragwal to occupy any particular parcel of land. Indeed, as thus stated, the question could never arise in view of the notorious fact that the rivers are continually shifting their course, that the whole appearance of the sacred confluence may be altered and its locality shifted very considerably between one year and another. We are not concerned in this case with any question that may arise as to the relative rights of Pragwals to establish themselves nearer to the sacred confluence itself on any particular festival, or on any other occasion. Such a question can be dealt with if and when it arises. In the present case the question is, simply, whether the plaintiff has or has not a right to carry on a certain business in or about a particular locality, and whether the defendant has or has not given him a cause of action by unlawful interference with his conduct of that business. We think that these questions must be answered in the affirmative. This appeal, therefore, fails and we dismiss it with costs.

Road Cess Return—Bhaoli land not mentioned—Rent, whether can be recovered.

The fact that bhaoli is not mentioned with respect to any land in the Road Cess Return would not debar the landlord from claiming produce rent for the same. [p. 876, col. 1.]

NAND LAL SINGH v. RAMPHAL SINGH.

Appeal from a decision of the Sessions Judge, Muzafferpore.

Mr. Ganesh Dutt Singh, for the Appellants.

Mr. H. N Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a rent suit. There is no dispute as to the area comprised in the holding of the defendant, namely, 14 bighas odd. The plaintiff claimed cash rent at the rate of Rs. 51-12 6 with respect to 10 bighas, 6 kathas, 2 dhurs of the holding and bhaoli, bataí rate with respect to 4 bighas 6 kathas, 16 dhurs. The defendants' chief contention was that the entire holding was nakdi and that no portion of it was bhaoli bataí. The Courts below have concurrently overruled this contention and have given a decree to the plaintiff as claimed by him. The defendants have come to this Court in second appeal and dispute the correctness of the view taken by the Courts below.

The main contention of the learned Vakil on behalf of the appellants is, that the Courts below have not appreciated the documentary evidence filed on behalf of the defendants and have thereby vitiated the findings. The documents relied upon by the defendants are, (1) the Road Cess Return of 1902 (1309) Exhibit G, (2) plaint of a suit of 1904 (Exhibit 1), and (3) rent receipts for the years 1312 to 1318 (1905-1911). In the first of these documents, i. e, the Road Cess Return, the defendants' holding is shown to consist of 15 bighas odd with a rental of Rs. 55 odd. The contention is that section 20 of the Road Cess Act (IX of 1880) bars the right of the plaintiff to claim bhaoli rent with respect to a portion of the holding on the ground that the same was not entered in the Return. This contention is untenable. There is no provision in the Act for showing the bhaoli lands or the rent thereof in kind. Such lands have to be shown with the cash rent, ascertained upon the average of three years' share of the landlord in the produce of the land : vide section 14, read with section 4, of the Act. A bar under section 20 (b) does not apply to bhaoli lands. The fact that bhaoli is not mentioned with respect to any land in the Return would not, therefore, debar the landlord from claiming produce rent for the same. The form prescribed for the Return leads to the same conclusion. This view is supported by the authority of this Court in the case of Upendra Lal Misra v. Moti Thakur (1), the case precisely on the point. Therefore, that document is no evidence for the purposes contended for by Mr. G. D. Singh.

The next document is the plaint (Exhibit I) in the suit brought by the part proprietors of the estate against the defendants in 1904. No doubt, that plaint shows that the claim was made at a nakli rental and there is no mention of any portion of the land being bhaoli. We do not know what became of that suit. The written statement, the judgment and the decree have not been placed on the record. That document, at best, can only be a kind of admission by some of the proprietors of the estate.

The third class of document consists of rent receipts. The first Court suspected their genuineness. There is no precise finding of the lower Appellate Court on the point, nor has the finding of the Munsif been clearly displaced though there is a passage refuting the suggestion of the respondents that all the receipts were written by the same ink. These receipts are only of a few years back. Shortly after these receipts were granted, the estate passed to the plaintiff by sale. The subsequent conduct of the parties in connection with the land in dispute shows great suspicion as to the receipts and the contents of the plaint, and, at any rate depreciates their value. The plaintiff purchased the interest in the estate in the year 1319 and shortly after he instituted a suit for the realisation of rent from the defendants for the years 1318 to 1320, as back rents were also assigned to him. In that case, as is apparent from the decree, the claim was for nakdi rent at the rate of Rs. 51 with respect to 10 bighas only, as is claimed in the present case. The decree was made after contest as the judgment (Exhibit 3) shows, but no plea as to the entire holding being nakdi appears to have been raised in that case. The judgment may not operate as res judicata, but certainly is a piece of evidence under section 13 of the Evidence Act, as showing that the plaintiff asserted his right to nakdi only in respect of a portion of the holding. The Court below was right in using the judgment as corroborative of the entry in the Survey Record of Rights. That record clearly shows Plot No. 169, with the area 3.79 acres, equal to 4 bighas. The Record of Rights is in favour of the plaintiffs. The defendants have to rebut the presumption of its correctness. The Court below was perfectly justified in holding that the defendants failed to do so when the Record of Rights finds great support from an inter party decree of a more recent date than any of the defendants' documents. There is no error in law in this case and the judgment of the Court below must therefore, be upheld.

Mr. Ganesh Dutt Singh also disputed the amount of the decree passed by the Courts below for the bhaoli rent. This point does not appear to have been urged before the learned District Judge and it is not open to urge it in this Court.

The result is that the appeal is dismissed with costs.

The learned Vakil on behalf of the plaintiff filed a cross-objection in respect of the damages disallowed by the Courts below. I, however, agree with the reasons given by the learned Sessions Judge for disallowing the damages. The cross objection also is, therefore, disallowed.

Appeal dismissed.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 303 OF 1920.

THE FIRM SURJAN MAL-KISHEN CHAND, THROUGH KISHEN CHAND—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

THE FIRM GIAN CHAND-CHIRANJI LAL, THROUGH GIAN CHAND—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Sale of goods—Goods ordered despatched to buyer—Refusal to take delivery—Suit to recover price, whether maintainable.

In a case where damages are claimed for breach of a contract they become due on the date when the contract is broken, and must be calculated with reference to the rates prevailing on that date, but where the suit is for the recovery of the price of goods sold, this consideration does not apply. Where ascertained goods are sold and are despatched to the buyer, but the latter refuses to take delivery of the goods, the seller is entitled to sue him for the price of the goods. [p. 879, cols. 1 & 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Sialkot, dated the 3rd November 1919, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Sialkot, dated the 25th June 1919.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Appellant.

Dr. Gokal Chand Narang, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The firm of Gian Chand-Charanji Lal of Sialkot instituted the case giving rise to this appeal against the firm of Surjan Mal-Kishen Chand of Lahore and one Gulab Rai, agent of the defendant firm. The plaintiff firm claimed recovery from the defendant firm of a sum of Rs. 685. It was alleged that on the 1st October 1918 Gulab Rai, as agent of the firm of Surjan Mal-Kishen Chand, purchased from the plaintiff firm four bales of Sawadeshi Yarn No. 5 at the rate of Rs. 8-8-0 a bundle there being 40 bundles in each bale. This purchase was made at Sialkot and it was agreed that, as soon as it was possible, the yarn should be sent by rail to Ghakkar, where the defendant firm has a factory, and the railway receipt for the said yarn was to be sent to the defendant firm at Lahore through the Punjab National Bank. It is said that on the 3rd October 1918 the plaintiff firm despatched the yarn to Ghakkar and sent the railway receipt to the Punjab National Bank at Lahore for delivery to the defendant firm on payment of Rs. 1,361 as the price of the yarn. On the 4th October 1918 the defendant firm was asked to take the railway receipt from the Punjab National Bank on payment of Rs. 1361 but the defendant firm refused to pay the money and take the railway receipt. This fact was notified to the plaintiff firm by the Bank and two further efforts were made by the plaintiff firm to induce the defendant firm to take the railway receipt but both efforts were in vain. Notice was also given by the plaintiff firm calling on the defendant firm to take delivery. Finally, as the defendants had not taken delivery of the railway receipt, the plaintiff firm sold the goods on the 21st November 1918 at the rate of Rs. 4-8-0 per bundle and thus realised Rs. 720. The plaintiff firm, therefore, brought this suit for the difference Rs. 641, plus Rs. 44, made up as follows : —

	Rs.	A.	P.
On account of railway freight ...	5	14	0
Bank charges ...	4	2	0
Demurrage ...	10	0	0
On account of interest from 1st October 1918 to 24th November 1918 ...	24	0	0
thus, making a total of	685	0	0

The defendant firm denied that Gulab Rai was ever their agent and that any purchase had been made by him on their behalf, and alleged that they had refused to take delivery of the railway receipt because of the fact that Gulab Rai was not their agent. The Trial Court held that Gulab Rai had been proved to be the agent of the defendant firm and that he had made the purchase as alleged by the plaintiff firm. Further, it was found that the goods had been despatched in accordance with the arrangement arrived at and that the defendant firm had no right to refuse the railway receip'. A decree was passed for Rs. 672-8-0 in favour of the plaintiff firm against the defendant firm, the interest being reduced to 6 per cent. per annum. The defendant firm then preferred an appeal to the District Judge who, however, dismissed it and the defendant firm have come up on second appeal to this Court through Bakhshi Tek Chand and I have heard Dr. G. C. Narang on behalf of the plaintiff firm, respondent.

Mr. Tek Chand contended that his clients were not liable in any way as it had not been proved that the price of the yarn on the 4th October had depreciated, and he further contended that the date for the purposes of calculating damages, if any, could only be the date on which the contract was broken, i.e., when his clients refused to take delivery of the railway receipt, which was on the 4th of October. He pointed out that subsequent negotiations made no difference to the question of time at which the contract was broken. In this connection he cited section 120 of the Contract Act and Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume XXV, page 268, paragraph 467. No doubt, in a case where damages are claimed for the breach of contract they become due on the date when the contract is broken, and in the present case it seems to me that the contract was broken on the 4th of October when the defendants refused to take delivery of the railway receipt. The learned Vakil then contended that section 107 of the Contract Act had no bearing on the present case, inasmuch as that section requires that before a re-sale is effected notice should be given to the buyer of the intention to sell. Dr. Gokal Chand Narang objected to the point being raised in the Court inasmuch as the want of notice of intention to sell was not pleaded in the Courts below. Jowala Singh v. Kala Singh (1), Allah Din v. Fateh Din (2) and Radha Shyam Basak v. Secretary of State for India (3) relied on by Mr. Tek Chand are, however, in point and as the matter is one which is patent on the record, I think this point can and ought to be taken into consideration even at this stage.

Next Mr. Tek Chand contended that before section 107 of the Contract Act could be invoked it was necessary that the property in the goods should have passed to the vendee, and that in the present case the goods being unascertained such property had not passed to his clients and in this connection he referred me to section 82 of the Contract Act. On this point Dr. Gokal Chand Narang contended that the goods were ascertained. A large amount of yarn was lying in the plaintiff's godown of the same description as sold to the defendant firm under the contract, it was left to the plaintiffs to appropriate four bales and despatch them to Ghakkar. This appropriation was made by the plaintiff firm on the 3rd October when they despatched the goods by rail to Ghakkar. Section 84 of the Contract Act, therefore, he contended, was applicable and the goods became ascertained on the 3rd of October 1918. Yule & Co. v. Mahomed Hossain (4) and Jamal v. Mcolla Dawood, Sons & Co. (5) cited by Mr. Tek Chand are not, in my opinior, against Dr. Gokal Chand's contention which I consider has force. In Yule & Co. v. Mahomed Hossain (4) the goods had to be tendered to the buyers on appropriation. This was done and the buyers refused delivery. In the present case the appropriation of the four bales was followed by delivery to the railway for conveyance to Ghakkar and the goods thus became ascertained. In Jamal v. Moolla Dawood, Sons & Co., (5) the contract referred to shares and the delivery of these shares could not be made without certain acts being done which were not done. I think, therefore, that in the present case it must be held that the goods were ascertained.

If the suit is to be regarded as one for damages, the date on which the damages are to be calculated must, I think, be the 4th October 1918 as the plaintiffs were not entitled to extend the time. In this view I am supported by Muthaya Manigaran v. Lakku Reddiar (6) Dr. Gokal Chand Narang, however, contended that the suit was not a suit for damages but for the price of goods supplied and not paid for, and an examination of the plaint supports this contention for nowhere is the claim for damages, as such, specified. On the other hand, the facts are stated as given above. The goods were purchased by the defendant firm through their agent Gulab Rai.

Briefly put, Dr. Gokal Chand states his case as under :—

We sold certain goods to the defendants, which if not ascertained at the precise moment of the sale, became subsequently ascertained by virtue of section 84 of the Contract Act, and that delivery of these goods was made to the agent of the defendant firm, the agent being the railway, and that, therefore, they had the lien of an unpaid vendor on the goods within the meaning of section 95 of the Contract Act.

As I have said, the claim is one for the balance of the price of goods. The goods I consider had been ascertained within the meaning of the term as used in section 84 of the Contract Act. It is a little difficult, however, to hold that the delivery to the railway was a delivery on behalf of the defendant firm. It was a delivery on behalf of the consignee; in this case, admittedly, the consignee is the plaintiff firm itself. The railway receipt issued by the Railway Department was one in the name of the plaintiff firm and this railway receipt was endorsed in favour of the defendant firm and then despatched to the Bank at Lahore to be made over to the defendant firm against a payment of Rs. 1,361. Whether section 95 of the Contract Act applies or not, Dr. Narang contended that finding the goods in their possession the plaintiffs were perfectly justified in selling the goods and suing for any deficit that might have arisen from the sale. The matter is not free from doubt, but it seems to me that there is some force in this contention. Ascertained goods had been sold; they had been despatched to Ghakkar, where the defendant firm carries on business, and the goods could have been taken over by defendant firm by receiving the railway receipt from the Bank at Lahore. This they failed to do and, therefore the contract being a completed one the plaintiff firm would have been entitled to sue for the money due, viz., Rs. 1,361. As, however, the goods were still under their control they were, I think, entitled to sell the same and, giving credit for any sum realised, to sue for the balance which is what has been done. In this view of the case, the 4th October 1918 is a date which has no importance as the sale has been held to have been made within a reasonable time, which is a question of fact, vide Pollock, page 421.

In these circumstances, the decision of the Courts below appears to be correct and I, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

RAJA OF RAMNAD v. VELUSAMI TEVAR.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

APPEAL FROM THE MADRAS HIGH COURT.

December 13, 1920.

Present :—Lord Dunedin, Lord Moulton and Mr. Ameer Ali.

Raja RAJESWARA SETHUPATI AVERGAL, RAJA OF RAMNAD —APPELLANT

VELUSAMI TEVAR AND OTHERS— RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—Res judicata—Assignment of decree—Leave to assignee to execute decree, whether involves decision that execution is not barred by limitation.

The appellant as assignee of a decree applied to be brought on the record as such, and to have the decree executed against the respondents. The latter resisted the application on the ground (inter alia) that execution was barred by limitation. The application was granted, but the question of limitation was not expressly dealt with. Subsquently, on appellant proceeding to execute the decree, the plea of limitation was again raised and the Court gave effect to it :

Held, that the order allowing appellant to execute the decree involved legally the rejection of the plea that execution was barred by limitation and that such plea could not be raised in subsequent preceedings. [p. 881, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decree of the Madras High Court (Mr. Justice Oldfield and Mr. Justice Bakewell), dated the 7th March 1918, affirming a judgment of the Subordinate Judge, Ramnad.

FACTS of the case are stated in their Lordships' judgment. The judgment of the Subordinate Judge dismissed an application for attachment made by appellant on March 2nd, 1916. The respondents pleaded limitation, to which appellant re-joined that the order of December 13th, 1915, was an adjudication that there was no legal impediment to execution. The Subordinate Judge held that the question of limitation had not arisen in the previous application, and was not res judicata. He allowed the plea and his decision was affirmed in appeal by Oldfield and Bakewell, JJ., who observed as follows:—

"In that order (viz., the order of 13th December 1915) the lower Court no doubt said, 'The transfer of the decree in favour of petitioner is recognised and petitioner is allowed to execute the decree.' But we agree with the lower Court that the last eight words cannot be read as an adjudication on all respondents' objections to his doing so, including that regarding limitation which they had undoubtedly made. Firstly, these words are used in connection with the reference to recognition and there is nothing regarding limitation either before or after them, although the argument on it deserved at least mention. Secondly, the conclusion of the order is not the grant of execution as prayed, but a statement that petitioner may put in a fresh petition ; and there is no valid reason for assuming that only the identity of the property to be attached as assets of the deceased judgment-debtor was to be considered when he did so".

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C, and Kenworthy Brown, for the Appellant, submitted that the question of limitation was res judicata having regard to the order of December 13th, 1915. The matter of limitation was directly in issue on the former application, and the question was in fact distinctly raised. Reference was made to the Code of Civil Procedure, Act V of 1908, section 11 and to Mungel Pershad Dichit v. Grija Kant Lahiri (1), Krishna Behari Roy v. Bunwari Lall Roy (2), Ram Kirpal v. Rup Kuari (3), Murlidhar Shukal v. Narsingh Das (4).

The respondents did not appear.

JUDGMENT.

LORD MOULTON.—In this appeal the appellant is the assignee of a decree against the defendants (some of whom are minors and are represented by their guardian) which was passed on the 26th September 1907. The amount of the decree was Rs. 35,063 and interest. The decree was in favour of the plaintiffs in the suit and went on to order that the plaintiffs should at once draw out the money in Court, which was a sum of about Rs. 3,000, and that the first and second defendants should re pay the balance within three months with interest and costs, and in default of such payment that the plaintiffs should recover the same by the sale of the entire cowle right possessed by them including the interest, if any, of the third defendant also, and if the sale-proceeds were not sufficient for the purpose, the plaintiff should recover the deficiency from the first and second defendants.

The judgment-debtors made no payment and accordingly in January 1909, the decree-holder put in his application for execution by sale and realized Rs. 27,000, and in December, 1909 the sale was confirmed and possession delivered. An appeal was brought by the judgment-debtors to the High Court, but this was dismissed on the 8th April 1911.

By the actual sale of the village, the further amount recoverable from the first and second defendants under the decree became definitely ascertained, and, on the 9th March 1914, the then plaintiffs proceeded with the execution of the decree.

While these proceedings were in progress, the present appellant purchased the decree from the then plaintiffs, and, on the 20th November 1914, made his application to be brought on to the record as assignee of the decree, and to have the decree executed. This was resisted by the present respondents or their predecessors in title on several grounds. They put the present appellant to the proof of his assignment, they alleged that the right to execute the decree was barred by limitation, and they raised questions as to the liability of certain of the properties to attachment.

The matter came on for hearing before the Subordinate Judge, who delivered judgment thereon on the 13th December 1915. The material portion of his judgment reads as follows:—

"The transfer of the decree in favour of the petitioner is recognized and petitioner allowed to execute the decree . . . petitioner may file a fresh application for attachment."

One of the defendants applied for a review of this decision on the ground that the application was barred by limitation. On the 24th August 1916, judgment was given dismissing this petition. The actual ground of dismissal was that it was out of time, but the order made by the Court is of importance in that the learned Judge points out that the order of the 13th December, 1915, above referred to, does not reserve any question of limitation for future determination. It is clear, therefore, not only that the issue of the execution of the decree being barred by limitation was in fact before the Court (as is shown also by the pleadings) on that occasion, but that the Judge at the time was aware of it, and that his decision included (as legally must have been the case) the rejection of this plea.

The present appellant proceeded to obtain the attachment of such properties of the respondents as were available to him in execution, and during the year 1916 various claims to the property were put forward by him and adjudicated upon by the Subordinate Judge, and, finally, the matter came before the Subordinate Judge and he dealt with it by an order on the 31st March 1917.

In these final proceedings he permitted the defendants to raise again the plea that the above order of December 1915 did not preclude the defendants from raising the plea that the defendants were barred by limitation. Their Lordships are of opinion that it was not open to the learned Judge to admit this plea. The order of the 13th December 1915 is a positive order that the present respondent should be allowed to execute the decree. To that order the plea of limitation, if pleaded, would, according to the respondents' case, have been a complete answer, and, therefore, it must be taken that a decision was given against the respondents on the plea No appeal was brought against that order, and, therefore, it stands as binding between the parties. Their Lordships are of opinion that it is not necessary for them to decide whether or not the plea would have succeeded. It was not only competent to the present respondents to bring the plea forward on that occasion, but it was incumbent on them to do so if they proposed to rely on it, and, moreover, it was in fact brought forward and decided upon. No appeal was brought from the order then made, and, therefore, it was not competent for the Subordinate Judge to admit the plea on subsequent proceedings, or to consider it in his order of the 31st March 1917, and the same remark applies to the judgment of the High Court on the 17th March 1918 from which this appeal is brought.

Their Lordships are, therefore of opinion that the order of the Subordinate Judge of the 31st March 1917, and of the High Court of the 7th March 1918, should be set aside, and that the prayer of the appellant for the recovery of the decree amount by attachment and sale of the defendants' immoveable properties referred to in the application should be granted, and that the appellant should receive from the respondents his costs in the Court below and of this appeal, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Order set aside.

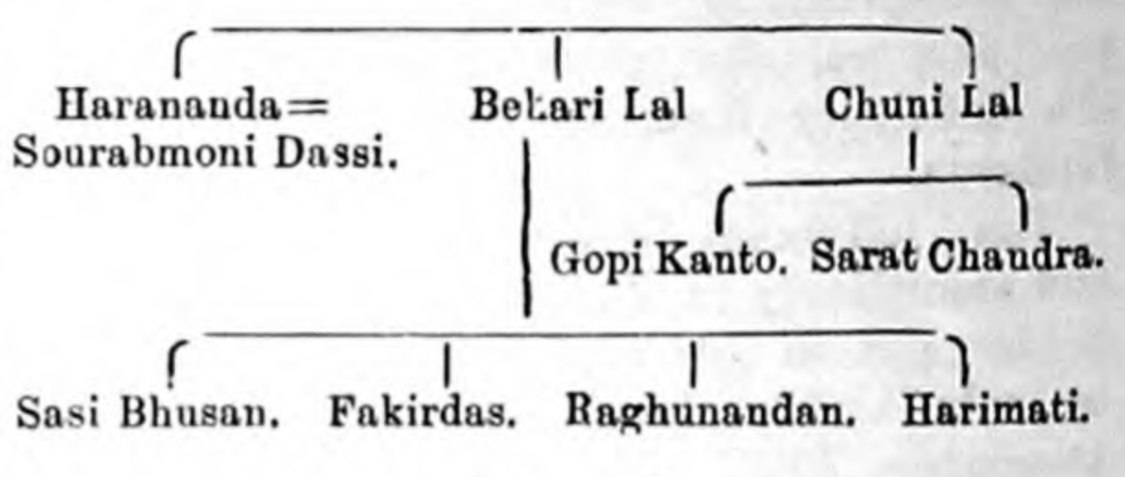
JUDGMENT.—This is an application by one Benode Behary Audhikary for grant of Letters of Administration in respect of the property and credits of one Sourabmoni Dassi who is said to have died on the 3rd June 1908. The application is based upon the allegation that the applicant was the husband of the deceased, having married her about 15 or 16 years ago in the Kanti form prevalent amongst Vaishnabs. The application is opposed by five persons whose names are Shashi Bhushan Bhur, Sarat Chander Bhur, Gopi Kant Bhur, Fakirdas Bhur and Raghunandan Bhur. Their relationship to the deceased will be apparent from the following genealogical table :—



It appears that the deceased was, before her alleged marriage with the applicant, the widow of one Harananda Bhur who died some time in 1898. After the death of Harananda she instituted a suit in this Court, being Suit No. 799 of 1899, against her husband's relations for partition and accounts. As a result of that suit she obtained, among other property, a sum of Rs. 8,000 for her absolute use ; with a portion of this money she is said to have purchased premises No. 162 Musjid Bari Street in the Town of Calcutta. The applicant alleges that he came to know her shortly before or about the time of the suit referred to above and that he looked after her interests in the course of that litigation. He says that he belongs to the Baul sect of the Vaishnabs and that, shortly before he married the deceased in the Kanti form prevalent among Vaishnabs, the deceased had become a Vaishnab, and that the marriage in question took place in the presence of a large number of people. Among the people who were present at the marriage, he has examined before me two persons, namely, Natober Goswami and Ram Kumar Chatterjee. The following issues were settled between the parties :—

1. Whether the marriage of the applicant with the deceased in the Kanti form took place as alleged by the applicant ?
2. If the marriage did, in fact, take place, whether the applicant is entitled to Letters of Administration ?

The applicant has given evidence before me, and in support of his case he has examined the persons whose names I have mentioned, Natober Goswami and Ram Kumar Chatterjee. The defendants have not examined any witnesses save and except their Solicitor, Babu Ganendra Nath Dutt. I have carefully examined the evidence adduced before me and I have come to the conclusion that, having regard to the mode of life apparently led by the deceased after the death of Harananda Bhur, there is nothing inherently improbable in the story told by the applicant and his witnesses. Indeed, on the question before me, namely, as to whether or not the marriage referred to by the applicant took place the evidence is all one sided and it is not necessary to discuss the evidence in detail. Although it is perfectly true that in the petition filed in this Court for grant of Probate to the Will of the deceased propounded by the applicant in 1909, it was not stated that the applicant had married the deceased in the Kanti form, he did mention the fact of such marriage in the course of his deposition in the Probate proceedings. I am satisfied on the evidence that both the deceased and the applicant were Vaishnabs and that the applicant had been married to the deceased by what is known as the Kantibadal ceremony. Such a marriage is undoubtedly valid among Vaishnabs (See Bannerjee's Marriage and Stridhan, page 269 and Risley's Tribes and Castes of India, Volum II, page 341). There is no reason why the testimony of the applicant should not be accepted, and, although it is particularly necessary in these cases to scrutinise the evidence of the applicant and his witnesses minutely, I think, on the whole, the applicant must be held to have discharged the onus that lay on him. I, therefore, answer the first issue in favour of the applicant, and, that being so, the second issue must also be answered in favour of the applicant. I direct, therefore, that Letters of Administration of the property and credits of the deceased be granted to the applicant. The caveat will be discharged and the caveators will pay the costs of the applicant on Scale No. II.

Order accordingly.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 5—Stay of proceedings—Registrar, whether has jurisdiction to stay proceedings—Inherent power of Court, when to be exercised.

Proceedings held in pursuance of a preliminary decree are proceedings in the suit and not in execution. [p. 884, col. 1.]

The Registrar of the Patna High Court has power to receive and dispose of applications under Order XLI, rule 5 of the Civil Procedure Code, but the only application and the only order contemplated by that rule are an application and an order for stay of execution. The Registrar, therefore, has no power to direct a stay of proceedings in a suit pending the disposal of an appeal. [p. 884, col. 1.]

An Appellate Court has jurisdiction to order stay of proceedings pending the disposal of an appeal, but it does so, not by virtue of statutory power under Order XLI, rule 5, but in the exercise of its inherent power for the ends of justice. [p. 884, col. 1.]

If the proceedings are bound to be protracted, and the expense involved in the taking of accounts is likely to be great, the Appellate Court will exercise a proper discretion in staying proceedings: otherwise, in the event of the decree being reversed on appeal, such expense would be wholly thrown away. If the proceedings, however, are not likely to be of any length, as, for instance, proceedings to ascertain the market value of certain stocks and shares there is no object to be gained by stay of proceedings, and the Appellate Court will refuse to stay proceedings. [p. 884, col. 2.]

Appeal from an order of the Registrar of the Patna High Court, under Order XLI, rule 5.

Mr. S. C. Mittra, for the Appellants.

Mr. Parmeshwardyal for Mr. L. N. Singh, for the Respondents.

ORDER.—This is an appeal from the order of the Registrar of this Court disposing of an application under Order XLI rule 5 of the Code. It is unnecessary to deal with the facts of the case, but it will be useful to remember that the appeal has arisen out of a suit for partition between two brothers, and that the main question between the parties is, whether they are entitled to the joint family properties in equal shares, as the plaintiff asserts, or whether the defendant's share in the joint family properties is twelve annas, as the defendant asserts. The defendant relies upon an ekrarnamah executed by the plaintiff in his favour in support of his case, and there can be no doubt that, whether he succeeds or not, he has a case to present to this Court. The learned Subordinate Judge has found that they are entitled to equal shares in the joint family properties, and as each of them has been in separate possession of distinct portions of the joint family properties, he has directed mutual accounts to be taken as from the year 1313 on the footing that they are entitled to the joint family properties in equal shares. The defendant has appealed, and he applied before the Registrar for stay of proceedings pending the disposal of the appeal.

We ought to state at once that the Registrar had no jurisdiction to deal with an application for stay of proceedings. No doubt, the appellant purported to make the application under Order XLI, rule 5, and described his application as an application for stay of execution of the decree and of further proceedings in the suit. But it is obvious that, until the final decree is passed in the action, there is no decree to execute and that the proceedings held in pursuance of a preliminary decree are proceedings in the suit and not in execution. Under the rules of this Court, the Registrar has power, amongst other things, "to receive and dispose of an application under Order XLI, rules 5, 6 and 10" (Chapter II, rule 13, sub-rule 9). No doubt, Order XLI, rule 5 is headed "Stay of proceedings and of execution;" but that is inevitable, because in the first paragraph of the rule, the Legislature is laying down the broad proposition that "an appeal shall not operate as a stay of proceedings under a decree or order appealed from except so far as the Appellate Court may order." It will be noticed that, not only is express power given in the first paragraph of the rule to the Appellate Court for sufficient cause to order stay of execution of a decree, but the limits of the power are clearly recognized and carefully guarded in the third paragraph of the rule. But the rule, though it recognizes and preserves the inherent power of the Appellate Court to order stay of proceedings, has not given an express power to the Appellate Court to order stay of proceedings under a decree. The only application contemplated by Order XLI, rule 5 is an application for stay of execution and the only order contemplated by Order XLI, rule 5, is an order for stay of execution. The Court has, of course, complete jurisdiction to order stay of proceedings pending the disposal of an appeal, but it does so, not by virtue of statutory power under Order XLI, rule 5, but in the exercise of its inherent power for the ends of justice. As the exercise of this power has not been delegated to the Registrar, I am of opinion that the Registrar had no jurisdiction to deal with this application.

As, however, the question has been argued before us, and all the materials are in the record to enable us to form our opinion, we think it right to deal with the application as an original application made to this Court. And the first question is, ought the proceedings under the decree to be stayed pending the disposal of the appeal? The policy of the Legislature, as expressed in Order XLI, rule 5, is, that the proceedings under a decree ought not to be stayed, but the same rule recognizes the inherent power of the Appellate Court to order stay of proceedings. Now, what are the limits of the exercise of the discretion vested in the Appellate Court? Now, it seems to me that if no object is to be gained by stay of proceedings, the proceedings ought not to be stayed, even though the decree may be reversed on appeal. But if the proceedings are bound to be protracted, and the expense involved in the taking of accounts is likely to be great, the Appellate Court will exercise a proper discretion in staying proceedings; otherwise, in the event of the decree being reversed on appeal, such expense would be wholly thrown away. If the proceedings, however, are not likely to be of any length, as, for instance, proceedings to ascertain the market-value of certain stocks and shares there is no object to be gained by stay of proceedings, and the Appellate Court will refuse to stay proceedings. The question which the Appellate Court must put to itself in each case is, are the proceedings likely to be protracted and the expense great? If the answer is in the affirmative, there ought to be stay of proceedings; if, in the negative, there ought not to be. I may refer to Shaw v. Holland (1) as authority for the principle which I have enunciated, upon which the English Courts invariably act.

In the case before us the defendant has been directed to render accounts of the twelve-anna share of the joint family properties of which he has admittedly been in possession as from 1313. His case is that there was a private partition between the plaintiff on the one hand and the defendant and his two deceased brothers on the other hand, as a result of which, four-annas share of the properties went to the plaintiff, and twelve-annas share of the properties went to the defendant and his two deceased brothers jointly, and that the shares to which his deceased brothers would be entitled have devolved on him by survivorship on the death of these brothers. It is obvious that the proceedings in taking the accounts from 1313 are bound to be protracted, and much expense would be unnecessarily thrown away if the decree is reversed by this Court. Acting on the principle which I have ventured to deduce from the English cases, I think that the proceedings ought to be stayed in this case, and we order accordingly.

Next comes the question of the terms which we ought to impose on the appellants as a condition for stay. One inevitable result of the stay order will be that no final decree can be passed until the appeal pending in this Court is disposed of, and that there will be no decree to execute for a long time to come. Meanwhile, the appellant will continue to enjoy the rents, issues and profits of the twelve-annas share of the joint family properties, although under the decree he has only eight annas share therein. It is obvious that the interest of the respondents under the decree ought to be protected in some way.

I am of opinion that the learned Registrar erred in calling upon the appellant to furnish security for the value of his share. It seems to us that land is its own security and that the appellant ought not to be called upon to give security for the value of the land. He ought, however, to be called upon to give security for the income of the disputed share that is likely to come into his hand from the date of the decree to the date of the disposal of the appeal by this Court. Now, the disputed share in this case is four-annas, for, as to the remaining eight-annas his title has been declared. As to the period from the date of the decree up to the date of the disposal of the appeal, I think that, as a matter of practice, we ought to fix it at two years, leaving it open to the decree-holder to move this Court, if the appeal is not disposed of within two years.

The order which we make in this case is that, upon the applicant giving security to the satisfaction of the lower Court for two years' income for four-annas out of twelve-annas share of the joint family properties in his hands and for the full value of the moveable properties in his hands, there will be an order for stay of proceedings in this case.

Let this order be brought to the notice of the learned Registrar.

Order accordingly.

Appeal, second—Finding of fact—Suit, whether collusive and fraudulent—High Court, interference by.

A High Court is not entitled, in second appeal, to go behind the findings of fact arrived at by the District Judge which do not result from the misconstruction of a document or the misapplication of law or procedure. [p. 886, col. 2.]

Where the question is whether a suit is collusive, the High Court is bound by the finding arrived at by the first Appellate Court on that point. [p. 886, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Hissar, dated the 1st March 1920, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Hissar, dated the 7th August 1919.

Mr. D. C. Ralli, for Mr. Manohar Lal for the Appellants.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for Respondent No. 1, and Lala Jagan Nath, for Respondent No. 3.

JUDGMENT.—On the 8th October 1918 one Basal, son of Amin Chand, of Bhiwani Lohar, sold 9 bighas, 3 biswas of land to one Maru Singh for Rs. 1,200 and executed a deed of sale in his favour.

Sarju and Sispal thereupon instituted a suit claiming that they had a right to pre-empt this land. About three months after the institution of this suit, Budha, son of Basal, the vendor, instituted a second suit claiming that he was entitled to the land by pre-emption and that his claims to pre-empt were superior to those of Sarju and Sispal. The Trial Court held that the suit instituted by Budha was a collusive one and intended to benefit one Dwarka Das, and Budha's suit was accordingly dismissed while that of Sarju and Sispal was decreed. Budha thereupon appealed in his own case as also in the case decided in favour of Sarju and Sispal, while Maru Singh, the vendee, also appealed in the latter case. The learned District Judge dismissed the appeal by Maru Singh but accepted the appeals by Budha and granted him a decree. Against this decree Sarju and Sispal have preferred a second appeal to this Court, and on their behalf I have heard Mr. Ralli, while Mr. Tek Chand has addressed me on behalf of Budha. Lala Jagan Nath who appeared for Maru Singh, respondent, adopted Mr. Tek Chand's arguments.

In coming to the conclusion that the suit by Budha was a collusive one and for the benefit of Dwarka Das, the Trial Court was influenced by seven considerations :

(1) That Budha was the son of the vendor and was living with him and that he knew of the sale but did not bring his suit till Sarju and Sispal had filed theirs.

(2) That two witnesses alleged that Budha was present at the time of the sale and consented to it.

(3) That Budha had produced three Mahajans as his witnesses.

(4) That Budha held no land in his own name.

(5) That Budha had not sufficient money to institute the suit and that his father had raised the money from one Dwarka Das.

(6) That a letter was written by Dwarka Das to a third person in which Dwarka Das expressed himself as the owner of the land in suit; and

(7) That the original deed of sale was attested by a munim of Dwarka Das.

Now, these are questions of fact and each one of them was considered in detail as well as collectively by the learned District Judge who came to the conclusion that, although they might create a suspicion and a strong suspicion of collusion, they did not amount to proof, and did not warrant the finding arrived at by the first Court. He held specifically that the mere fact that a pre-emptor was instigated to bring his claim by another who supplied him with the necessary funds was not sufficient to show that the pre emptor was acting benami and did not debar him from suing. Further he held that Budha had not given his consent to the sale and that it had not been proved that he was suing for the benefit of Dwarka Das. Mr. Ralli referred me to Brij Nath v. Jita (1) where Bullock, J, held that a pre emptive right was a personal one exercisable only by the pre-emptor for his own benefit and that the pre-emptor's suit must fail if it be established that, in suing, he was seeking the benefit of it not for himself but for another; and on the authority of this it was contended that the conclusion arrived at on the facts found by the learned District Judge were wrong and that these conclusions could be examined in second appeal on the authority of Ramgopal v. Shamskhaton (2). Their Lordships of the Privy Council in that case held at page 99 that the soundness of the conclusions from findings of fact was a matter of law. As against this, however, my attention was drawn by Mr Tek Chand to Midnapur Zemindary Co. Ltd. v. Uma Charan Mondal (3), in which case their Lordships of the Privy Council held that a High Court was not entitled to go behind the findings of fact by the District Judge which did not result from the misconstruction of a document or the misapplication of law or procedure. In that case the question was whether a certain transaction was collusive and fraudulent and it was held by the Judicial Committee that the High Court was bound by the finding arrived at by the first Appellate Court on that point. It seems to me, therefore that in the present case, even assuming that I should be justified in coming to a different conclusion from that arrived at by the learned District Judge on the facts found, I am precluded from examining them in detail by the dictum of the Judicial Committee in Midnapur Zemindary Co., Ltd. v. Uma Charan Mondal (3), it having been definitely held in the present case that the suit by Budha was not a collusive one. Farther, it seems to me that Brij Nath v. Jita (1) scarcely represents the true state of the law on this point, for in Mahmud Bakhsh v Hassan Bakhsh (4) and Sheru v. Jawahir Singh (5) a somewhat opposite view was taken, while in Neki v. Ohajju Ram (6) the finding of Bullock, J., was held to be an obiter dictum and was disagreed with. It having been found that Budha did not give his consent to the sale, and that he was not suing for Dwarka Das, this appeal must fail and is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 33—Restitution of conjugal rights, decree for—Form of decree.

Where a suit for restitution of conjugal rights is decreed not only against the plaintiff's wife but also against other defendants in the suit who are proved to have prevented the wife from going to the husband, the decree should not direct that the husband is entitled to recover possession of the wife, but, after declaring the husband's right, should add a direction that the defendants other than the wife do refrain from preventing the plaintiff's wife from returning to him. [p. 889, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Manbhum.

Mr. Abani Bhushan Mukherjee, for the Appellants.

Mr. Sishir Kumar Mitra, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The suit was first decreed ex parte and upon the application of the defendants was restored and re-heard.

The plaintiff adduced both oral and documentary evidence. The defendants failed to do so, and the suit was, therefore, decided upon the evidence of the plaintiff and was decreed in his favour by the Courts below.

The first ground taken against the decision of the lower Appellate Court is, that it did not consider the evidence offered by the plaintiff but simply devoted its attention to the failure of the defendants to prove their case.

It, however, appears from the judgment of the Court below that the principal point urged before it was, that the defendants were not given an opportunity to prove their case and their application dated the 30th October 1918, for time and for issuing a warrant on their witnesses should have been granted by the Munsif. The learned Judge conclusively proved from the proceedings on the record from the beginning that the defendants were dilatory both before the suit was decreed ex parte and also after it was restored and re-heard, and that the Munsif was right in not showing any more indulgence to them. This point is now abandoned in this Court, and if it were seriously urged it would not have been difficult to show that the decision of the District Judge on that point was perfectly correct. No doubt, in the memorandum of grounds of appeal before that Court the findings of the Munsif on all the issues were attacked. This, however, did not by itself entitle the appellant to have all those points dealt with and disposed of by the lower Appellate Court unless the grounds urged in the memorandum of appeal were actually pressed before the Court at the time of the hearing, and the fact that they were pressed must, in the first place, have appeared from the judgment of the lower Appellate Court, or it must have been satisfactorily proved that, though pressed, the Judge ignored them. The latter ground has to be substantiated by clear proof in the shape of an affidavit either by the Pleader in the Court below or by some other person in whom the Court might place confidence in a matter like this. Mr. Mukherjee for the appellant frankly admits that he has no instruction on the point as to whether the points were actually urged before the lower Appellate Court or not. In the circumstances, the Court was perfectly right, after disposing of the only points urged before it, to affirm the decree of the Court of first instance, for the onus of proof that the decree was wrong was upon the appellants.

It is then contended that the decree of the first Court is not in accordance with law, inasmuch as it has not given its decisions separately upon the issues framed in the case. The Munsif clearly says that the defendants produced no proof in supprot of their case and that the plaintiff satisfactorily proved his claim by the evidence of his witnesses. He also referred to the written statement of the defendants in a Small Cause Court Suit No. 117 of 1914 in which the marriage of the plaintiff with defendant No. 3 was admitted. It is not denied that there was evidence on the record on all the issues involving in the case, and hence the learned Vakil is not in a position to dispute the correctness of the decision of the Munsif and when the Munsif says that, "I decide these issues in plaintiff's favour and decree the suit" he clearly had his attention upon the issues framed in the case and the evidence adduced by the plaintiff. I have looked into that evidence and the plaintiff has proved in toto the allegations made in the plaint upon which the suit was founded. The onus of proving Issues Nos. 3 and 4 as to the marriage between the plaintiff and the defendant No. 3 and as to the relationship of husband and wife subsisting between them, was upon him. The plaintiff, the priest who performed the marriage, and the other persons also who took part in the ceremony of the marriage, were examined in this case. It was further proved that the relationship continued. The plaintiff, therefore, discharged the onus upon him of proving the aforesaid issues. The onus of Issues Nos. 2 and 3 relating to the defect of party and as to the suit having been barred by lapse of time, was obviously upon the defendant, but, as observed above, he failed to adduce any evidence to substantiate them. Prima facie, upon the pleadings and upon the evidence in the case, the plaintiff's claim was within time. The cause of action arose on the 16th April 1917 and the suit was instituted on the 21st April, only four days after. Therefore it was for the defendants to prove that the suit was barred by time and they failed to do so.

There was, therefore, ample evidence upon the record to support the decision of the Munsif and in a case decided ex parte he could not do more than what he has done in the case, holding clearly that the plaintiff's case was satisfactorily proved and the defendants failed to prove the case set up by them. There is, therefore, no defect either in law or in the procedure in the disposal of the case by the Munsif.

The last straw in the argument of the learned Vakil for the appellants is that the decree framed in this case is not in accordance with law. The plaintiff prayed for the restitution of conjugal rights and for a decree to recover possession of his wife, defendant No. 3, from her parents, defendants Nos. 1 and 2. The decree declares the conjugal rights of the plaintiff and directs the plaintiff to be entitled to recover possession of his wife, defendant No. 3, and orders her parents, defendants Nos. 1, and 2, to send defendant No. 3 to the plaintiff. Reliance has been placed upon the case of Koobur Khansama v. Jan Khansama (1) and Chotun Bebee v. Ameer Chund (2). In those cases the decrees passed were for possession of the "person of the wife" and it was held that such a decree was objectionable, for a wife cannot be looked upon as property and the decree was varied and a modified decree was prepared in the following terms: "That it be declared, that the plaintiff husband is entitled to conjugal rights and the wife defendant be ordered to return to his protection." Cases of this kind are very few, as observed in the aforesaid case in Chotun Bebee v. Ameer Chund (2), and Seton-Karr, J., in that judgment very rightly observed that the case is one of nicety and difficulty, and there was nothing to show that section 200 (now Order XXI, rule 33) of the Code of Civil Procedure did not empower the husband to take possession of his wife. The plaintiff in this case claimed relief against the parents of his wife, defendants Nos. 1 and 2, as having actually prevented him from taking his wife to his house and also proved it by his evidence in Court. The written statements of the defendants clearly show that the parents are instrumental in the plaintiff's way of exercising his conjugal rights. The decree, therefore, had directed them to send back the wife to the plaintiff husband as prayed for by the latter. As a positive direction that may not be an accurate and proper direction in a decree of this kind, but certainly they can be properly directed to refrain from preventing the plaintiff's wife to return to her husband. This was the form of decree prepared in the case of Ajnasi Kuar v. Suraj Prasad (3). This direction appears to me to be necessary in order to enable the plaintiff to execute the decree properly under Order XXI, rule 33, and to effectively obtain the benefit of the decree for the restitution of his conjugal rights.

(1) 5 W. R. 467.
(2) 6 W. R. 105; 1 Ind Jur. (N. S.) 317.

Therefore, taking into consideration all the aforesaid authorities and Order XXI, rule 33, I would, instead of the decree of the Court below, substitute a decree in the terms recommended in the aforesaid cases of the Weekly Reporters and the Allahabad High Court and add to it a direction "that the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 do refrain from preventing the plaintiff's wife, defendant No. 3, from returning to him."

The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs, the decree being modified as indicated above.

Appeal dismissed.

Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908), ss. 124, 131—Sale for arrears of rent, application to set aside—Notice to auction-purchaser whether necessary—Auction-purchaser, right of, to be heard.

The purchaser at an auction sale held for arrears of rent has a right to notice of an application by the defaulting ryot to set aside the sale and is entitled to be heard before an order to his prejudice is passed. [p. 890, col. 1.]

Petition under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code and section 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Collector, South Arcot, dated the 1st November 1919, D. Dis. No. 3081 Cor. of 1918, on petition, dated the 12th September 1918, preferred against the order of the Court of the Revenue Divisional Officer, Cuddalore, dated the 1st May 1918, on petition dated the 19th November 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. S. Rangaswami Aiyangar, for the Petitioner.—The petitioner, as the purchaser at the auction sale, has a very substantial interest in the matter of setting aside the sale. He is entitled to show that the applicant had not complied with the requirements of section 133 of the Madras Estates Land Act and was not entitled to relief. The lower Courts erred in refusing him audience on the ground that there was no specific section in the Act providing for the issue of notice to the auction-purchaser. On general principles of equity and natural justice he is entitled to be heard.

Mr. N. K. Mohanrangam Pillai, for the Respondent, relied on the absence of a provision in the Act rendering it compulsory that notice should be issued to the auction-purchaser. If the Court was satisfied that the defaulting ryot had complied with the requirements of section 131 it could cancel the sale.

JUDGMENT.—Both the Collector and the Divisional Officer are wrong in saying that the petitioner herein was not entitled to be heard. He became the purchaser at an auction sale for arrears of rent. Prima facie he is entitled to hold the property as his and to demand the issue of the certificate under section 124 in his favour unless the defaulting ryot had strictly complied with the requirements of section 131 of the Estates Land Act which enables him, on obeying these conditions, to move for setting aside the sale.

It is conceded that when the application for setting aside the sale was made no notice was given to the auction-purchaser. The Divisional Officer says that there is no section providing for giving notice to the purchaser. The Collector says that he has no locus standi. I am unable to agree with either of them. It is a primary rule of jurisprudence that every body whose interests are affected should be given notice before an order to his prejudice is passed. The petitioner who has purchased the property at a valid sale has certainly a locus standi. The fact that no provision is specially made for giving notice may be due to the view of the Legislature that Courts, in setting aside a sale, would have recourse to the principles of natural justice, which demand that before a man's property is taken away from him he should be heard. If he had notice, he could show that the conditions laid down in section 131 have not been complied with. No one has more right to a hearing on this question than the purchaser. Under these circumstances, I am unable to agree with the conclusion come to by both the lower Courts. I express no opinion upon the contention raised before me that the requirements of section 131 have not been complied with. It would be for the Divisional Officer, after giving notice to the auction purchaser, to decide, whether in making the deposit, the defaulting ryot has complied with all the requirements of the law.

The decisions of both the lower Courts are reversed and the case remanded to the Divisional Officer for disposal in the light of the above observations. Costs will abide.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, rr. 2, 4—Death of one of several defendants—Legal representatives not brought on record—Joint tenants—Defendants jointly and severally liable—Suit, whether abates.

Where the defendants in a suit are jointly and severally liable to the plaintiff, the suit does not abate merely because one of the defendants has died and his legal representatives have not been brought upon the record. [p. 891, col. 2.]

Joint holders of land are jointly and severally liable to the landlord for the rent of the holding. [p. 891, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the Judicial Commissioner, Ranchi, dated the 11th March 1918, reversing that of the Munsif, dated the 3rd January 1917.

Messrs. Kulwant Sahai and Rai Gurusaran Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. N. Palit, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of the decision of the Judicial Commissioner of Ranchi, dated the 11th March 1918, reversing that of the Munsif, dated the 3rd January 1917.

The plaintiff is the appellant. He instituted the suit for a declaration that he was entitled to the rent of Kusum trees in possession of the defendants at the rate of Rs. 2 per tree. The claim was with respect to 40 trees said to be standing on the majruha and the gair majruha lands. The Khata number, plot number and the numbers of the trees were specified in Schedule A to the plaint.

The defendants stated in their written statement that they were in possession of the trees from time immemorial and that they do not pay rent for the same. They took a number of other pleas which have all been set at rest by the decision of the Munsif and have not since arisen.

Upon the pleas, two issues were framed by the Munsif: "(1) Is there any custom of paying rent for Kusum lac bearing trees? (Issue No. 9) and (2) Has the plaintiff any right to claim rent for the disputed trees?" (Issue No. 10).

The Munsif decided both the issues in favour of the plaintiff. He based his decision upon the village note (Exhibit 3) in the Survey Record of Rights and the other evidence on the record.

The learned Judicial Commissioner set aside the decision of the Munsif and dismissed the suit. As to point No. 2, (Issue No. 10) he accepted the case of the defendants that the trees were part and parcel of the original holdings and that the rent of the holdings covered that for the trees. He has based his decision upon the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, dated the 8th July 1912, (Exhibit B) in a previous suit brought by the defendant to have the ex parte rent decrees and sales of their holdings in execution thereof set aside. That judgment does not and could not decide as to whether any rent was payable for the trees or not. It was not an issue between the parties in that case. As to point No. 1 (Issue No. 9) the learned Judicial Commissioner has not referred to any other evidence in support of his finding. He has not displaced the finding of the Munsif as to the custom of paying rent for lac bearing trees. His judgment is incomplete and does not dispose of the appeal before him. It is too meagre for a judgment of a first Appellate Court reversing that of a Trial Court and must be set aside.

It may be noted that the learned Vakil on behalf of the appellant has referred to the evidence of defendant Kopeya Munda to show that he admitted that only 17 trees appertained to the holding and that the remaining trees were on the gair majruha of the plaintiff with which the defendants had no concern. This is a question of evidence which should have been dealt with by the lower Appellate Court.

The learned Vakil on behalf of the respondents urged that the present appeal abated on account of the death of Kopeya Munda, respondent No. 1, who died more than six months ago and no substitution was made in his place. No doubt, the appeal abated so far as Kopeya Munda is concerned, but as Kopeya Munda and Mangal Munda, the other defendant, were joint holders of the lands in suit they were both jointly and severally liable for the claim of the plaintiff, and the death of one of them would not affect the claim of the plaintiff as against the other upon the principle of section 43 of the Contract Act. The principle was applied in the case of Joy Gobind Laha v. Monmotha Nath Banerji (1) and Beradar Singh v. Bacha Mahto (Raghunandan Mahton) (2). In my opinion, after the death of one of the joint tenants, the landlord is entitled to proceed against the surviving recorded tenant and his suit cannot be dismissed simply because he does not bring the heirs of the other tenants on the record. I do not decide in this case as to whether the decree in such a case will be a rent decree or a money decree.

The case is accordingly remanded to the Judicial Commissioner for re-hearing the appeal and disposing of it in accordance with law. The costs will abide the result.

Case remanded.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 142—Suit for possession of waste land—Defendant in adverse possession—Limitation applicable—Burden of proof.

The proposition that in the case of waste land possession follows title and that in suits for such land it is for the defendant to prove adverse possession, does not apply to cases where the land, according to the plaintiff's own statement, has been occupied adversely by the defendant [p 892, col. 2.]

Plaintiff sued for possession of ten marlas of waste land of which it was alleged the defendant had taken unlawful possession three years before the suit:

MAHMUD v. UDE BHAN.

Held, that Article 142 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act was applicable to the case, and that the initial onus was on the plaintiff to prove what he asserted, viz, that the defendant had been in adverse possession for only three years. [p. 892, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the Additional Judge, Muzaffargah, at Dera Ghazi Khan, dated the 29th January 1920, reversing that of the Munsif, First Class, Leiah, District Muzaffargarh, dated the 27th February 1919.

Mr. Abdul Rashid, for the Appellant.

Lala Hargopal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiffs sued for possession of ten marlas of land of which the defendants had taken unlawful possession three years before the suit. The land is waste and lies between the houses of the parties and defendant No. 1 has put up an oven on a portion of it. The defendants pleaded adverse possession for the last 22 years. The first Court held that the plaintiffs had not proved their possession and dispossession within 12 years, and that defendants had proved adverse possession. The judgment of the lower Appellate Court is heard to summarise. The learned Judge apparently considered that the defendants had only proved possession over $1\frac{1}{2}$ marlas of land and that as, prima facie, possession follows title and as the plaintiffs had proved their title, it was for the defendants to prove adverse possession and that they had failed to do so. He accordingly decreed the suit, and the defendants have preferred a second appeal to this Court.

The main ground argued is, that Article 142 of the Limitation Act applies to a case of this description and that the decision of the Munsif was, therefore, correct. The plaintiffs themselves stated that the defendants had taken unlawful possession of the site three years before the suit, and it is urged that it was for them to substantiate this plea. Reliance is placed upon the Privy Council judgment, Mohima Chunder v. Mohesh Chunder (1), and numerous other judgments in which this decision has been followed. On the other hand, Counsel for the respondents relies upon Muhammad Yar v. Ghulam (2), Ramzan Ali v. Basharat Ali (3) and Kaman v. Umra (4), as authorities that in the case of waste land possession follows title and that in suits for such land it is for the defendant to prove adverse possession. In cases in which the property sued for has been lying waste throughout, this proposition is generally correct, but it does not apply in cases where the land, according to the plaintiffs' own statement, has been occupied adversely by the defendant. The judgments cited, moreover, so far from assisting the plaintiffs respondents, appear to support the argument of the Counsel for the appellant. In Muhammad Yar v. Ghulam (2) authorities are approved of that it is for the plaintiff to show that his suit is brought within 12 years from the time when the possession of the defendant becomes adverse. In Ramzan Ali v. Basharat Ali (3) the facts were somewhat different as it was held that the vacant site had remained waste and unoccupied up to a short time before the suit, and in such a case the learned Judges held that (on the above presumption) plaintiffs had only to prove prima facie title not extinguished by limitation. In Kaman v. Umra (4) the learned Judge held that the Article prima facie applicable to the suit was Article 142, but he held that the suit was within time. After perusing, therefore, this and other judgments, I have no hesitation in holding that the Article applicable to the form of suit as brought by the plaintiffs is Article 142 and that the initial onus was on them to prove what they asserted, viz, that the defendant had been in adverse possession for only three years. On this point they were unable to bring any proof before the first Court, and it is not suggested before me that, if the onus had been fixed otherwise, they would have been able to substantiate their case.

Counsel for the respondents refers also to a finding of the lower Appellate Court that the defendant has only occupied $1\frac{1}{2}$ marlas out of ten malas sued for. The finding is against plaintiffs' own claim which was that defendant had taken illegal possession of the whole of the ten marlas. This opinion, therefore, of the lower Appellate Court on this point can be disregarded as it is opposed to the claim of the plaintiffs themselves.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 106, 107—Service tenure—Refusal to perform service—Ejectment—Notice to quit, whether necessary—Lease for life—Registration, whether necessary.

On failure to perform the service, a service tenure-holder becomes a trespasser, and is not entitled to a notice to quit before ejectment. [p. 894, col. 1.]

A lease for life can only be granted by a registered instrument under section 107 of the Transfer of Property Act. [p. 893, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Patna.

Mr. A. B. Mukherjee for Mr. L. N. Singh, for the Appellant,

Mr. B. C. Sinha, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit in ejectment. It relates to two kathas of land bearing Survey Plot No. 961. The entry in the Record of Rights shows the land as gair mazruha of the maliks with a Kutchehri in the possession of the plaintiff, Ram Prasad Lal. The Kutchehri consists of a house with an enclosure called khand. The khand is in dispute in the present case.

The finding of the Courts below is that the defendant took settlement of the khand in question on payment of Rs. 25 as salami to Ram Prasad Lal. The defendant claimed the land on the basis of a verbal settlement for life made with him by the plaintiff on behalf of all the landlords. There is no deed of settlement; far less is there any registered document. The terms of this settlement are stated by him in the following words:—

"It was settled that I would continue to be on the land, and after that the land would come into the possession of the maliks."

The defendant's witness No. 4 stated that the settlement was for ever. The Court below accordingly held that the settlement was invalid under section 107 of the Transfer of Property Act, which requires that a settlement for a term exceeding one year can only be made by a registered instrument. This view of the learned Judge is assailed by the defendant-appellant and it is contended that the lease could be made by delivery of possession and for that reference has been made to section 17 of the Indian Registration Act of 1908. No doubt, section 4 of the Transfer of Property Act has indicated that section 107, amongst others, of the Transfer of Property Act shall be read as supplemental to the Indian Registration Act, but the law as to registration is the same under the latter Act as well; vide clause (d) of section 17. Therefore, the lease for life set up by the defendant was invalid on account of its not having been made by means of a registered document. The view of the Court below is, therefore, correct and I accordingly overrule the contention of the learned Vakil on behalf of the appellant.

The learned Judge has further held that the settlement was conditioned upon the defendant rendering service to the plaintiff and that, as admittedly he refused to render the service demanded of him, he became a mere licensee or a tenant-at-will and was capable of being ejected at the will of the landlord. This view is also contested, and it is said that the defendant was at least a tenant under the Transfer of Property Act though without a proper and valid document of title, and that he would not be ejected without proper notice under section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act. There is no doubt that the defendant was not a trespasser at the time when he was brought on to the land, but his tenure was a service tenure only according to the finding of the District Judge which I have no reason, upon the evidence in the case, to differ from, and, as a matter of fact, no argument has been addressed to me to show that the finding of the Judge was in any way improper or incorrect. The lease of a service tenure expires when the service ceases. In the present case, upon the admission of the defendant, he refused to render the service demanded of him by the plaintiff. A service tenure-holder is not entitled to any notice for, after his failure to fulfil the condition upon which he held the land, he becomes a mere trespasser. This view is supported by the case in Athakutti v. Govinda (1) the facts of which case are similar to those of the present case, vide also Budh Singh v. Parbati (2) and Sanchiram De Behari v. Hara Priya Thakurani (3). As against these authorities Mr. Mukherjee quotes the case of Jyotish Chandra Mukerjee v. Ramanath Bhadra (4). That case is distinguishable. In that case it was held that the defendant was holding the house on rent which was to be remitted in lieu of the professional service rendered by him as a Doctor to the plaintiffs. It was rightly held that the settlement amounted to a monthly lease under section 105 of the Transfer of Property Act that it required 15 days' notice for ejecting the defendant. On the other hand, the case of Gobinda Ghandra Ghose Biswas v. Nandadulal Sut (5) supports the view taken by the learned Judge that the defendant was, at the utmost, a tenant-at-will or by sufferance and as such he was not entitled to any notice. The ruling in Athakutti v. Govinda (1) is based upon the earlier authorities of that Court and is consistent with principle. The defendant was, therefore, not entitled to any notice. As a matter of fact, this ground was not taken in the written statement; no issue was raised upon it and, consequently, the points were never raised in the Courts below. I do not think that it is open for Mr. Mukherjee to raise the point for the first time in second appeal and even if he was entitled to do so, I have shown above that there is no substance in it. This obviates the necessity of going into the authorities cited by Mr. Mukherjee to show that the title of the defendant was not necessarily invalidated for want of having a registered deed when he was in actual possession of the land in suit.

The next contention is that the plaintiff being a part proprietor is not entitled to eject the defendant. The learned District Judge has clearly shown that, according to the case of the defendant himself, the plaintiff was exclusively managing the entire property and that he was in possession of the same and that he representing the 16-annas proprietor granted to him the lease to occupy the land. The name of the plaintiff, Ram Prasad Lal, alone is recorded as being in exclusive possession of the plot in question in the Survey Record of Rights. The other co-proprietors of the village had obviously allowed the plaintiff to hold the property exclusively and the appellant accepted him as the sole owner thereof and competent to deal with and settle the land with him. The plaintiff is, therefore, entitled to eject the defendants, who, as held above, were mere trespassers on the land after they refused to render service to the plaintiff. It is immaterial that summonses were not served upon some of the pro forma defendants as alleged by the appellant. The plaintiff was alone entitled to bring the suit to eject the defendants.

The result is that the appeal is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

NAPIER, J.—Appeal against Order No. 255 of 1919 is an appeal against the order passed in the District Court of Chingleput on a petition under Order XXI, rule 98, Civil Procedure Code. There is no dispute about the facts. The petitioner was the purchaser at a sale in a mortgage suit.

The 4th respondent purchased the property under a money decree in a suit filed after the decree in the mortgage suit. The lower Court held that the respondent was a person who came within the mischief of rule 98 of Order XXI and was not protected by the language of rule 99. He based his decision on a certain ruling of this Court to the effect that a person in the position of the 4th respondent was really a representative of the judgment-debtor and that, therefore, his rights should properly be adjudicated on in execution proceedings.

This was before the decision of the Full Bench in Veyindramuthu Pillai v. Maya Nadan (1), which case came before my learned brother as Officiating Chief Justice and two other learned Judges. It was held by the Full Bench in that case that, in circumstances exactly similar to these, the proceedings were properly taken under section 47 and that the auction-purchaser is a representative of the judgment-debtor. It is now argued before us that, although the Full Bench have held that he is a representative, the Full Bench had not before them for decision the construction of the language of rules 98 and 99 of Order XXI, Civil Procedure Code. That is so. But if we must hold that rules 98 and 99 do not apply to persons in this position, the result would be to make the decision of the Full Bench entirely infructuous. We must, therefore, see if it is not possible to give such a meaning to the language in rules 98 and 99 as will reconcile them with the rights arising out of section 47. It seems to me that this can be done by the application of section 146 of the Code. That section says that, "save as otherwise provided by this Code or by any law for the time being in force, where any proceeding may be taken or application made by or against any person, then the proceeding may be taken or the application may be made by or against any person claiming under him." There cannot be the slightest doubt that words "claiming under him" are wide enough to cover the position of this auction purchaser. The decision of the Full Bench and the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council as far back as Prosunno Kumar Sanyal v. Kali Das Sanyal (2) are sufficient to establish this proposition. If, therefore, we read these words "claiming under him" with the operative rules 98 and 99 we get a perfectly clear position, namely, that when the judgment-debtor or other person claiming under him or a person acting at his instigation causes obstruction, he may be removed and, conversely, where the Court is satisfied that the resistance or obstruction was occasioned by any person other than the judgment-debtor or any person claiming under him in good faith to be in possession on his own account, that is, a stranger who based his title on a title entirely outside the proceedings, he cannot be removed. This is, I think, the correct view. I would, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Civil Revision Petition No. 566 of 1919 is dismissed with costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 182 (2) —Execution of decree—Appeal, dismissal of, for default—Limitation, commencement of.

Where there has been an appeal from a decree and that appeal has been properly presented and is within time, any order of the Appellate Court dismissing the appeal or putting an end to the appeal in any way is either a decree or order within the meaning of clause (2) of Article 182 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act, and limitation for the execution of the decree begins to run from the date of the decree or order of the Appellate Court, even where the order of the Appellate Court is not capable of execution and the decree to be executed is the decree of the Original Court. Letters Patent appeal against the judgment of Mr. Justice Das, dated the 4th July 1919.

Messrs. Fakhruddin and S. Dayal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Rai Gurusaran Prasad for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—This is an appeal under the Letters Patent from a decision of a Single Judge of this Court, dated the 4th July 1917.

On the 27th June 1914 the appellants obtained judgment in a suit instituted against them by the respondents in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Patna. The decree which dismissed the suit awarded costs to the appellants. The respondents subsequently appealed to the High Court from that decision but failed to pay the printing costs, although several extensions of time were granted for the purpose. Finally, on the 6th November 1917, the matter was placed before a Division Bench of the Court and the appeal was dismissed for want of prosecution. Up to that time the appellants had taken no steps by way of execution to enforce their decree for costs made in their favour by the Subordinate Judge on the 27th June 1914 but had awaited the decision of the High Court in the pending appeal. On the 21st March 1913 the appellants applied for execution but were met by the objection that the application was barred by Article 182 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, more than three years having elapsed since the date of the decree. In answer to this objection the appellants contended that, as there had been an appeal, the period of limitation was extended to three years from the date of the final decree or order of the Appellate Court under the provisions of clause (2) of Article 182 of the Limitation Act. The learned Subordinate Judge who heard the objection came to the conclusion that the period of limitation was three years from the order of dismissal of the appeal passed by the High Court on the 6th November 1917 and that the application for execution was not time-barred. He accordingly made an order dismissing the objection.

The respondents appealed from that order to the High Court. The appeal was heard by a Single Judge of the Court. The learned Judge considered that the case was governed by the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Abdul Majid v. Jawahir Lal (1). He accordingly allowed the appeal, overruling the decision of the Subordinate Judge, and dismissed the application for execution.

From that decision the appellants have preferred this appeal. So far as the 182nd Article of the Limitation Act is concerned, there appears to me, with great respect to the learned Judge, to be little doubt as to what the exact interpretation of that Article ought to be. The period for execution of a decree or order is primarily three years from the date of the decree or order which it is sought to execute. By clause (2), however, in the third column of the Article where there has been an appeal the date from which the three years limitation runs is said to be the date of the final decree or order of the Appellate Court or the withdrawal of the appeal. Now, giving their natural interpretation to the words in sub-clause (2)

I should say that where an appeal has been instituted then the period of limitation is extended to three years from the date of the final decree or order in that appeal. In the present case it is not disputed that there has been an appeal and that the presentation of that appeal was within time. It can hardly be disputed that there has been a final order in that appeal because the appeal was dismissed by a Division Bench of this Court after considering the question of whether any further indulgence should be granted to the appellants who had failed to comply with the procedure requiring them to deposit certain printing costs. That that order is final I think there can be no doubt, because it finally disposed, so far as that appeal was concerned, of the rights of the parties. The learned Judge, however, considered that the case was governed by the decision of the Judicial Committee in Abdul Majid v Jawahir Lal (1) (ubi sup). It is necessary, therefore, to consider what the effect of that decision was. Two points arose for decision in that case. The first was whether an application, which was barred by Article 179 of the Limitation Act then in force at the expiry of three years from the date of the decree, could be revived by the operation of the Civil Procedure Code which came into force at a later date. We are not concerned with the decision on that point but the chief matter for argument in that appeal concerned the question not as to the construction of what is now Article 182 of the Limitation Act but the construction of Article 180 of the previous Act which corresponds to Article 183 of the present Act. It is only necessary to look at Article 183 to see that there is a considerable difference between that Article and Article 182. Article 183 provides for a limitation period of 12 years in the case of an application to enforce an order of His Majesty in Council and the period of 12 years begins to run from the time when a present right to enforce the judgment, decree or order accrues to some person capable of releasing the right and the question to be determined in that case was not whether sub-clause (2) of the present Article 182 came into operation but whether what is now Article 183 came into operation in the circumstances of that case. What happened there was that there had been granted by the High Court leave to appeal from a decree of the High Court to the Privy Council. On the 13th May 1901 the appeal before the Privy Council had been dismissed automatically because of the failure on the part of the appellant to prosecute his appeal and the question for determination there was, whether that automatic dismissal of the appeal for want of prosecution was an order of His Majesty in Council within the meaning of Article 180 of the previous Act. Their Lordships came to the conclusion that it was not and that, therefore, there was no order of the Privy Council which could be enforced at all. It was a mere automatic dismissal of the appeal to His Majesty in Council and was not such an order in Council as could be enforced under Article 180 of the former Act. Therefore, that Article did not apply and the limitation period was not 12 years as therein provided but was three years from the date of the only decree that they could execute and that was the decree of the High Court made considerably more than three years before the application for execution. But when we turn to the Article upon the interpretation of which the present appeal depends, it seems to me that it is quite clear that, where there has been an appeal and where that appeal has been properly presented and is within time, any order of the High Court dismissing the appeal or putting an end to the appeal in any way is either a decree or order within the meaning of the present Article 182, clause (2), and I think that, although it may be that in many cases such an order is not an order of which execution could be sought, this is not necessary under the wording of the Article itself. Even assuming that the decree which it is sought to execute is in the present case the decree of the Subordinate Judge, nevertheless, in my opinion, under Article 182 the three years limitation for presenting an application for execution of that decree does not begin to run until the final order of the High Court which puts an end to the appeal, and this view seems to me to be borne out by the fact that it is not only a decree or order of the High Court which is contemplated by sub-clause (2) but even the withdrawal of the appeal would be sufficient within the terms of that clause to revive the period of limitation. It would be a strange thing if the period of limitation were to be revived where the appellant withdraws his appeal and yet it were not to be revived in cases where the appellant, instead of withdrawing his appeal, allows the appeal to be dismissed by default. I cannot believe that this was the intention of the Legislature. The wording of the clause appears to me clearly to be wide enough to cover the circumstances of the present case and, with great respect to the learned Judge, I think that he has not sufficiently realised in dealing with the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case referred to that that was not really a decision upon the Article in question at all but dealt solely with the question of whether there had been an order in Council under Article 183 which could be executed so that the period of limitation was 12 years within that Article.

Another decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council was also relied upon in which the question of the interpretation of Article 182 was raised. That was the case of Batuk Nath v. Munni Dei (2). That case appears to me to carry the argument no further. It was a case where a petition of appeal was presented to His Majesty in Council and it was not properly lodged by the appellant. The Registrar accordingly dismissed the appeal for non-prosecution under rule 5 of the Standing Order in Council of the 13th June 1853 then in force and the question for determination there was, whether such a proceeding was within the meaning of Article 182 a final decree or order of His Majesty in Council so as to come within the words of Article 182, clause (2), which refers to a final decree or order of the Appellate Court. Their Lordships came to the conclusion that there was in fact in the circumstances which I have mentioned no order of His Majesty in Council dismissing the appeal nor was it necessary that any such order should be made in the appeal and Sir John Edge who delivered the judgment of their Lordships' referred to rule 5 of the Order in Council of the 13th June 1853 and observed that under that rule the appellant or his agent not having taken effectual steps for the prosecution of the appeal the appeal stood dismissed without any further order. Now, the ground upon which that decision was come to cannot possibly apply in the case of an order made by the High Court in an appeal of this nature for the simple reason that an appeal presented to the High Court is not automatically dismissed and cannot in fact be dismissed without an order made by the High Court itself, when the matter is considered not necessarily upon the merits of the case but is considered and dealt with. The decision which I have just referred to appears to me to be no authority for the proposition that an order made in circumstances in which the order was made in the present case is not an order within the meaning of Article 182, clause (2) of the Limitation Act. In my opinion this appeal should be allowed and the decision of the learned Judge should be overruled and the order of the Subordinate Judge should be restored. The appellants are entitled to their costs. Hearing fee before Mr. Justice Das and in this appeal should be assessed at two gold mohurs in each case.

ARUMUGA CHETTIAR—DEFENDANT No. 1 —PETITIONER

RAMANADAN, MINOR BY GUARDIAN THENUKODI ATHAL—PLAINTIFF —RESPONDENT.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 19—Acknowledgment —Letter expressing willingness to pay amount due on comparison of account.

A statement contained in a letter that if upon a comparison of accounts any amount is found due by the writer of the letter he is prepared to pay it, is an admission that he had dealings with the person addressed and implies a promise to pay, and is consequently a sufficient acknowledgment of liability under section 19 of the Limitation Act. [p. 899, col. 2.]

BAIDYANATH MAHTO v. SHYAM MAHTO.

Petition, under section 25 of Act (IX of 1887), praying the High Court to revise the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Negapatam, in Small Cause Suit No. 182 of 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. R. Srinivasa Aiyangar, for the Petitioner.—The acknowledgment of liability is at least only conditional on accounts being immediately compared. There is a repudiation of liability when it is stated that the amount mentioned in plaintiff's notice was not due by the defendant. The defendant offers to pay only if a comparison of the accounts discloses a balance against him. See Narayanaswamy Mudali v. Gangadhara Mudali (1), Ballapragada Ramamurthi v. Thammanna Gopayya (2) and Andiappa Chetty v. Devarajulu Naidoo (3).

Mr. N. M. Malim Sahib, for the Respondent. The case is covered by the principle of the Full Bench ruling in Maniram Seth v. Seth Rupchand (4). There is an admission that there are dealings between the plaintiff and defendant, coupled with a promise to pay whatever may be found due on a scrutiny of the accounts. That is sufficient acknowledgment to save limitation under section 19 of the Limitation Act.

JUDGMENT.—The point for determination is, whether the letter, Exhibit B., sent by the defendant's Pleader to the plaintiff's Pleader constituted a sufficient acknowledgment of liability under section 19 of the Indian Limitation Act, to save the suit from being barred.

The following sentences are relied on by the respondent as containing the acknowledgment of liability :—

"In case the account is compared now, and if any amount is found due, my client is prepared to pay it. The amount mentioned in your notice is not due as per your account.

"As my client is not aware of certain amounts contained in the kaichitas given to the aforesaid person it is not possible to set right the account of my client. I am, therefore, instructed by my client that your client should be made to give forthwih the kaichitas and accounts and on getting them compared should receive the amount found to be due."

The question is, I think, covered by the Privy Council ruling in Maniram Seth v. Seth Rupchand (4). The statement in the letter contained an admission that the defendant had dealings with the plaintiff and implied a promise to pay, if he should be found to be indebted on the account being gone into. An acknowledgment of liability, should the balance turn out to be against the person making it, is a sufficient acknowledgment under section 19 of the Limitation Act.

The cases cited by the learned Vakil for the petitioner, Narayanaswamy Mudali v. Gangadhara Mudali (1), Ballapragada Ramamurthi v. Thammanna Gopayya (2) and Andiappa Chetty v. Devarajulu Naidoo (3), are clearly distinguishable from the present case, as the acknowledgment was conditional.

I cannot accept the contention that the acknowledgment of liablility in the Vakil's letter was conditional on the account being at once compared, which was in fact not done. No objection was apparently taken to the correctness of the plaintiff's accounts which were filed in the lower Court. There is no force, I think, in the contention that the Vakil had no authority to send the letter on behalf of his client, and this question was not raised in the lower Court. The petition is dismissed with costs.

Digwari tenure—Digwar, whether can grant permanent lease or acquire interest in waste land.

BAIDYANATH MAHTO v. SHYAM MAHTO.

A digwar cannot either transfer the lands comprised in the digwari grant to another so as to create an interest in them by permanent lease, nor can he himself acquire any interest in the uncultivated land, such as jungle or waste land which is comprised within the Mauza. [p. 900, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Manbhum, dated the 4th October 1915.

Mr. S. C. Mittra, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—This is an appeal by one of the defendants in the suit against a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Manbhum, dated the 4th October 1915. The case has taken a long time to come on for hearing because there have been various substitutions owing to the death of some of the parties. The plaintiff, who was the son of one of four brothers, instituted the suit claiming partition against the descendants of his uncle, Baishnab Charan, and against the widow of another uncle, Sridhar, and against a third uncle, Bholanath, himself, his own father's name being Lakshmi Charan. The claim was for partition of certain properties alleged to belong to the family jointly. The eldest of the four brothers, Baishnab Charan, was during his lifetime the Digwar of Mauza Chargali. He left three sons Mahendra, Upendra and Makunda who are the defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 and on his death Mahendra was appointed Digwar of the same property in place of his father. Mahendra died after the suit was instituted and his son, Baidyanath, thereupon became the Digwar in his turn. He also has died since that time and is now represented by his mother.

The properties in suit are comprised within five Mauzas, viz., Chargali, of which Baishnab and after him his descendants were the Digwars, Barasini, Agaya, Lakhanpur and Ketankiyari. The plaintiff's case was that certain areas within these Mauzas had been acquired by different members of the family and were the joint property of them all and he claimed a fourth share of these properties as being a descendant of one of the four brothers to whom they belonged. The defendants, other than those descended from Baishnab, offered no opposition to the present suit, and claimed, just as the plaintiff did, that these properties were the proper subject of partition and they claimed to be entitled to their proper share. I have already mentioned that, so far as the properties in Chargali are concerned, they were situated within a Digwari village of which, after Baishnab, Mahendra was the Digwar at the institution of the suit. With regard to Barasini, Agaya and Lakhanpur it appears that these were in the possession of the defendant Bholanath, the plaintiff's uncle, who at that time exercised the office of Sardar Digwar over these Mauzas. Before Bholanath's time his family and that of the plaintiff had apparently no interest in either Barasini or Agaya or Lakhanpur. The fifth village in which it is claimed there are certain portions of land belonging to the family is Ketankyari but, so far as this is concerned, the learned Subordinate Judge has dismissed the claim and there is no appeal with regard to that portion of the case. In addition to the land which is claimed as the subject of partition certain moveables, such as bullocks and carts and farm implements at these various villages, are also claimed as the subject of partition by the plaintiff and there is also a certain quantity of grain which was held for the purposes of a paddy mahajani business and if the plaintiff is entitled to partition at all it is proved that the family was a joint family at the time when the suit was instituted and it has been found by the learned Judge that the paddy mahajani business was in fact carried on for the benefit of the joint family. Unless, therefore, it can be shown by the appellant, who was the Digwar at the time the suit was instituted and whose successor has been appointed in his place and is now the Digwar, that the paddy-lending business was not a joint family affair but a separate business carried on by Baishnab and afterwards by Mahendra and his branch of the family it follows that the plaintiff must succeed as to that portion of his claim.

The learned Judge found as a fact that the family was a joint family and that these properties claimed had been acquired by one or other of the members of the family at the time when they were joint in estate and that they could be partitioned in the present suit, that is to say, all except those within Mouza Ketankiyari.

From that decision the appellant who represents Baishnab's branch of the family as the Digwar of Chargali has appealed and his main objection is that the properties in question form part and parcel of a Digwari grant and they could not, at all events so far as Chargali is concerned, be either transferred by the Digwar to other members of the family so as to make them joint family property either as cultivating tenants or under any larger interest such as a permanent lease, because this would be entirely contrary to the conditions under which such a grant is made to a Digwar. That this proposition as a general proposition of law is accurate I do not think can be denied. There is authority for it in the case of Grant v. Bangsi Deo (1) where it was distinctly laid down that a ghatwal (which for this purpose may be regarded as the same as a Digwar) is not competent to grant a lease in perpetuity and his successors are not bound to recognise such an incumbrance, That case, which was decided in 1871, was referred to with approval in 1901 in the High Court at Calcutta in the case of Narain Mullick v. Badi Roy (2). The head-note, which alone it is necessary to refer to, says that as a general principle a ghatwal is not competent to grant a lease in perpetuity and that his successor is not bound to recognise such an incumbrance. A lease granted in perpetuity to the plaintiff in that suit by the defendant No. 7 who was a ghatwal jointly with the predecessors of the other ghatwal defendants was held to be inoperative even as against the defendant No. 7. As the Digwar holds his property by virtue of his office and cannot bind his successors by granting any permanent leases without the consent of the Government for that purpose it follows that, in so far as the properties in suit may be claimed by reason of any permanent lease granted to any of the members of the family, that lease is not binding upon the successor of the Digwar who granted the lease and, in so far as the property comprised in Chargali is concerned, it seems to me also to follow that the Digwar himself cannot grant a tenancy to the members of the joint family including himself because he, being the proprietor for the time being of the property, cannot grant himself a lease of that property as a cultivating tenant. It is impossible, from the plaint in this case and it is not easy from the evidence, to discover exactly the nature of the interest in the property claimed in Mauza Chargali by the plaintiff; that is to say, whether it was a mere cultivating right or whether it was something larger in the nature of a permanent lease or tenure, but in any case it seems to me that the plaintiff, by setting up that his family have acquired any co-parcenery rights in the Digwari property by grant from the Digwar himself, must fail. The Digwari grant is not a matter which in itself cannot be the subject of a co-parcenary. One of the points for consideration in the case was whether the properties which were claimed in Chargali were the self-acquired properties of Baishnab or whether they had been acquired by him during his term as Digwar as his own self-acquired properties, and not on behalf of the joint family, but, whichever way the case is looked at, it seems to me equally clear that if these properties were acquired by Baishnab during the term of his office as Digwar such an acquisition cannot for a moment be allowed to stand. It is quite clear from the documentary evidence that what was granted to Baishnab as his Digwari property was the whole of Mauza Chargali, and he, being in as Digwar cannot acquire in that property any other interest either by clearing and cultivating the jungle land or in any other manner, because we find, on turning to the appointment of his son Mahendra and the document may be taken as in the same terms as the grant made to his father, that he is appointed Digwar of the village of ghatwali upon the terms of rendering Government service faithfully and honestly; and it is provided that he should not be able to transfer by mortgage or sale or in any other way any portion of the ghatwali lands and if it be necessary to settle any land he shall not be able to do so without the order of the Deputy Commissioner; that he should not be able to hold possession of any lands in excess of the ghatwali lands mentioned alleging the same to be ghatwali; that he shall properly look after the jungle in the said Mauza and shall not cut or sell any wood from the jungle or settle the said jungle with any one without the permission of the Deputy Commissioner. There is a further prohibition against settling the sub-soil of the Mauza with any one and his term of office is restricted in this way, "You will possess and enjoy the said ghatwali lands as long as you will hold the office of ghatwal and fulfil your duties properly, and regularly pay the rent. And if for any reason you are dismissed from the said office then you will have no claim to the said lands." The lands there given to Mahendra as Digwari or ghatwali are described as the Mauza known as Chargali in Pargana Obharra; and what the land comprised is shown from a certified copy of the list of names of Digwars and ghatwals within the jurisdiction of the town of Purulia for the year 1859. There the land is described, under the heading whether the Sardar gets a salary or holds a jagir, thus "the Mauza Chargali forms a Digwari" which means that it belongs to the Digwar and there is no Sardar Digwar who gets a salary. It is clear, therefore, that the whole of Mauza Chargali was comprised in the Digwari grant. In these circumstances, it seems to me that there cannot be any doubt that the Digwar himself cannot either transfer this land to another so as to create an interest in it by any permanent lease nor could he himself acquire any interest in the uncultivated land such as jungle or waste land which is comprised within the Mauza; and, therefore, whether the interest which is now claimed by the plaintiff was what had originally been jungle land but had been brought under cultivation by the Digwar Baishnab, or whether it was some land of which a permanent lease was granted to the other members of the family, in either case it cannot form any joint family property to which the members of the family could have a valid claim. So far, therefore, as the property in Chargali is concerned, I think that the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge must be set aside.

(1) 15 W. R. 58; 6 B. L. R. 652.
(2) 6 C. W. N. 94; 29 C. 227.

With regard to the rest of the property which it was decreed should be partitioned that is situated in Barasini, Agaya and Lakkhanpur. With regard to that in Agaya and Lakkhanpur as well as that in Barasini it appears that that is held or was held at the time the suit was instituted by Bholanath, defendant No. 4, as the Sardar Digwar and it is contended by the plaintiff that certain portions of the land comprised in these Mauzas had been acquired also by Baishnab during his lifetime and that they were treated as joint family property. How these lands came to be acquired there is on the record no very clear evidence to show, but it is clear that if they were acquired by Baishnab they were not acquired by a person who was at that time himself the Digwar of the property. It has been suggested that these Mauzas of Barasini, Agaya and Lakkhanpur were appurtenant in some way to Chargali but it does not appear from the documentary evidence that they are included in the description of Mauza Chargali and it is admitted that the Sardar of Agaya and Lakkhanpur as well as of Barasini did not pay any rent or render any tribute or service to the Digwar of Chargali and so far as the evidence goes there is nothing to shew that the Digwar of Chargali had any real interest by virtue of his office in any of these Mauzas. It may well be, therefore, that some interest was acquired in some portion of these properties by the father of defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 either by adverse possession or in some other legitimate way. We cannot tell, but at all events it has been found by the learned Judge that these properties were acquired and treated as joint family property all along. The defence, therefore, of the appellant does dot apply in the same way to these Mauzas, because he has failed to make out that the acquisition of these properties, whenever it took place, was contrary to the terms under which the property was held by the person at that time entitled to it as Digwar. I think, therefore that the appellant has failed to satisfy us that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in so far as he ordered a partition of the properties comprised within these three Mauzas. Barasini, Agaya and Lakkhanpur and to that extent I would dismiss this appeal. I may add that Bholanath who was the Sardar ghatwal of these properties has raised no objection to the present suit for partition.

The only other matter to be determined is as to the moveable properties in the suit. So far as the moveable properties in Chargali are concerned, I think the plaintiff has failed to make out any case. He has failed to show that these properties were joint family properties and it is quite clear that the moveables at Chargali are moveables which are being used in connection with the cultivation of the whole of the Mauza in so far as it is in the khas possession of the Digwar himself and possibly in connection with his office as Digwar in collecting the rents and so on. With regard to the moveables in the possession of the other defendants, there is no dispute that these should form the subject of partition and, therefore, we see no reason to differ from the conclusion arrived at by the learned Judge with regard to them. With regard to the paddy mahajani business the learned Judge has found that at the date of this suit that business existed and the family was joint and that that business was carried on for the benefit of the joint family. Again, the appellant has failed to satisfy us that he was wrong in arriving at the conclusion that the paddy-lending business formed a legitimate subject of partition in the present suit.

The result is, that the decree of the learned Subordintae Judge will be affirmed in a modified form and it will be ordered that a preliminary decree for partition be passed in the plaintiff's favour and that the extent of his share in the family property be declared to be four annas; that a Commissioner be appointed to effect a partition of the plaintiff's four annas share in the khas possession of the family (excluding the tenanted portion) in Mauzas Barasini, Agaya and Lakkhanpur. Then the decree will read "and also a partition of the plaintiff's four annas share in the moveable properties admittedly in the possession of the defendants respectively other than the defenants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 and those who have been substituted in place of any of them." The moveables which form the subject of the paddy lending business wherever found shall also be partitioned the plaintiff receiving his four-annas share.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

APPLICATION IN SECOND APPEAL No. 653 OF 1918.

April 21, 1920.

Present:—Mr. Justice Walsh.

LACHMI NARAIN—PETITIONER

versus

MUHAMMAD YUSUF AND OTHERS—OPPOSITE PARTIES.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, r. 9—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 5—Appeal, abatement of, owing to death of appellant—Application for substitution of names, nature of—Court, power of, to set aside order of abatement—Sufficient cause.

Owing to the legal representatives of a deceased appellant not having been brought on to the record, an appeal automatically abated, but no formal order carrying the abatement into effect was drawn up. More than six months after the death of the appellant an application was made to bring his legal representatives on to the record and to continue the appeal:

Held, (1) that the application was, in substance, an application to set aside the abatement under Order XXII, rule 9, of the Civil Procedure Code, and that the absence of a formal order of abatement was no obstacle thereto; [p. 904, col. 1.]

(2) that the Court had power to entertain the application and decide whether the applicant was prevented by sufficient cause from continuing the appeal, under sub-rule (2) of rule 9, independently of sub-rule 3). [p. 904, col. 2.]

The provision in sub-rule (3) of rule 9 of Order XXII of the Civil Procedure Code does not confine the sufficient cause mentioned in sub-rule (2) to the circumstances given in section 5 of the Limitation Act. [p. 904, col. 2.]

Application for substitution of names.

Dr. S. N. Sen and Mr. Durga Prasad for the Applicant.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala and Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in form to bring on record the names of two persons, Gomti Prasad and Kaleshar Prasad, collateral relatives of the deceased appellant, Lachmi Narain. Lachmi Narain died on the 2nd July 1919 and the time for substitution of names, namely, six months, therefore, expired on the 2nd of January 1920. An application was made to this Court, ex parte, on the 5th of February, a month and three days beyond time. The learned Judge, who happened to be myself, issued notice to the other side to show cause why in spite of the expiration of time, leave should not be given. Mr. M. L. Agarwala for the plaintiff appears to show cause, and he has raised certain objections which it is necessary for me to deal with,

In the first place he says that there is no order of abatement, and that the application is one to bring certain names on the record and not to set aside any order of abatement. I agree that that is an accurate description of the technical position but for some reason or another, which I have never been able to understand, we have no system in this Court by which, if an appeal abates or is dismissed automatically for breach of some condition precedent, or for failure to comply with some order such as giving security for costs, an order is automatically drawn up in the ministerial side of the office recording that the appeal stands dismissed or abated, as the case may be. What happens is, that it is put up amidst a lot of other applications of a similar kind before an unfortunate Judge who has to deal with them with some rapidity in the half hour allowed for petitions and the usual order is made, namely, "put up in the ordinary course". I have in my experience known of more than one such case which has been put up in the ordinary course because it was found that the appeal had abated, and afterwards an adjudication in Court took place, whereas in fact, the appeal abates automatically on the expiration of six months The absence of any formal order by this Court carrying the abatement into effect, cannot serve as an obstacle to any body who wants to put himself right, or to correct some bona fide mistake which has occurred. Therefore, I agree with Mr. Durga Prasad for the applicant that in substance this is an application to set aside the abatement under Order XXII, rule 9 and to allow the names to be substituted and the appeal to proceed, in spite of the fact that the six months have expired and the right of appeal abated automtically by law. I hold that I have the right to consider this matter and to decide whether, in my opinion, the applicant was prevented by any sufficient cause from continuing the appeal, and, if I am satisfied on that ground, to set aside the abatement and allow the appeal to be continued on such terms as I think right. Order XXII, rule 9, is made to apply to appeals by rule 11.

Then, Mr. Agarwala says that the circumstances of the case do not bring the application within section 5 of the Limitation Act. Without deciding whether they do or whether they do not, I think I have a duty, under rule 9, sub rule (2), to decide whether there was sufficient cause independently altogether of sub rule (3). Sub-rule (3) merely provides that the provisions of section 5 of the Limitation Act shall apply to such applications, so that if the case is one clearly within section 5 of the Limitation Act the Court may rule that that is sufficient cause. But I do not think that that provision confines the sufficient cause mentioned in sub-rule (2) to the circumstances given in section 5 of the Limitation Act.

Thirdly, Mr. Agarwala objects that there is a serious question as to whether the persons applying before me are or are not the legal representatives of the deceased appellant. He says that Musammat Sitabo has an interest. There is an affidavit by her before me to the effect that she disclaims any interest and support this application. Mr. Agarwala asks me to refer that question so that it may be determined by the Court. I propose to do that but I refer that question with the affidavits relating to it to the decision of the Court hearing this appeal. In this case the evidence before me, which I believe, goes to show that one of the applicants was ill for a very long time and unable to attend to this matter. The affidavit is not very specific on the point. On the contrary, it does not say when and for how long, nor does it say when the applicant first heard of the pendency of this appeal. But I think I can remove any possible injustice to anybody by making it part of the terms on which I allow this application that the applicant shall deposit in cash in this Court the sum of Rs. 60, being the amount of costs incurred in the lower Appellate Court, as security for the costs of this appeal. If this is done within a month, I extend the time for bringing the names of Gomti Prasad and Kaulesbwar Prasad on the record to that date whenever it may be, that is to say, to the date of the deposit of the security within a month from to-day. If they fail to do it within a month, this application will stand dismissed. Costs of this application will be costs in the appeal.

Application allowed.

JUDGMENT.

DAS, J.—I am of opinion that the plaint discloses no cause of action. It is admitted that the defendant caused the name of the plaintiff to be entered in class C of the surveillance register. The plaintiff complained of this entry and his case is that the entry was malicious and illegal and that he has suffered damages in consequence. He has in this action claimed to recover Rs. 2,500 from the defendant.

Now, I may say at once that, in my opinion, there was no justification at all for the defendant to enter the name of the plaintiff in the surveillance register. The rules empower the Superintendent of Police to enter the name of a person in the surveillance register only when a person has been convicted under some law. It is true that the plaintiff was bound down to keep the peace in a proceeding under section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code but, in my opinion, an order binding down a person in a proceeding under section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code is not an order convicting a person under any law that I know of. At the same time, I must point out that the drafting of the rules leaves much to be desired and may mislead an inexperienced officer. We can only hope that the matter will receive the careful attention of the authorities concerned.

But the question which we have to determine is not whether the action of the defendant is wrongful but whether it is legally wrongful: in other words, has the act of the defendant prejudicially affected the plaintiff in any of his legal rights? That is the question which we have to determine. It is impossible to give an adequate definition of the legal rights to which a person is entitled, but, speaking broadly, we may say that these legal rights are, first, the right of personal liberty and security; secondly, the right of reputation: and thirdly, the right of property. It is not suggested in this case that there has been an infringement of any right of propepty. We are, therefore, left to consider whether the act complained of is an invasion of the right of personal liberty and security, or the right of reputation. In my view it has not been shown that the act complained of is an invasion of the plaintiff's right of personal liberty and security. It is not suggested that any restraint has been placed on the plaintiff by reason of the act complained of. If, indeed, his liberty was in any way curtailed or his movements hampered, there would, in my view, have been a cause of action for the plaintiff. But that is not the suggestion here, although it is suggested that the Police have from time to time paid visits to the plaintiff and have annoyed him and harrassed him in various ways. If, indeed, there was an unjustifiable intrusion on the part of the Police on plaintiff's property, an action for trespass would lie against them. If the Police have been guilty of any offences under the Penal Code, it was open to the plaintiff to take such action against them as he thought that he was entitled to take; but, I do not know of any law which prevents persons from paying visits to another person so long as in paying those visits they do not intrude upon the property of another person.

Nor do I think that there has been an infringement of the plaintiff's right of reputation. It is true that the defendant has posted the name of the plaintiff in the surveillance register but that is a document which is kept by the department for the use of the department.

The learned Vakil for the respondent contended that the authorities have framed these rules under section 12 of the Police Act. Section 12 of the Police Act provides as follows:—

"The Inspector-General of Police may, from time to time, subject to the approval of the Local Government, frame such orders and rules as he shall deem expedient relative to the organization, classification, and distribution of the Police force, the places at which the members of the force shall reside, and the particular services to be performed by them; their inspection, the description of arms, accoutrements and other necessaries to be furnished to them; the collecting and communicating by them of intelligence and information; and all such other orders and rules relative to the Police force as the Inspector General shall, from time to time, deem expedient for preventing abuse or neglect of duty, and for rendering such force efficient in the discharge of its duties."

In my view these rules do not relate to the organization, classification and distribution of the Police force, and, therefore, are not contemplated by section 12 of the Act at all. The rules are, in my opinion, purely departmental rules for the guidance of the department and kept by the department. There is no publication at all, nor is it alleged in the plaint that there was any communication of what is alleged to be defamatory matter to any person other than the plaintiff. It is, in my view, much to be regretted that the defendant acted somewhat hastily in the matter: but the question before us is, whether in acting as he did he infringed any of the legal rights of the plaintiff. I am of opinion that he has not. I must, therefore, allow this appeal, set aside the judgment and decree of the Court below, and dismiss the plaintiff's action with costs throughout.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XX, r. 4 (1)—Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), s. 25—Judgment of Small Cause Court, contents of—Brief reasons for decision, statement of.

The judgment of a Judge of a Small Cause Court should contain a brief statement of the reasons for the decision which would satisfy the High Court that the Judge had applied his mind to the materials placed before him. A judgment in a Small Cause suit as follows:—'Point: Is the plaint claim true? I find the plaint claim true', is not a judgment in conformity with the law. [p. 907, cols. 1 & 2; p. 908, col. 2.]

Protap Chandra Dutt v. Abhimanini Surini, 43 Ind. Cas. 752, dissented from.

Malik Rahmat v. Shiva Prasad, 13 A. 533; A. W. N. (1891) 172; 7 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 337 and Bai Jasoda v. Bamansha, 23 B. 331; 12 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 222, considered.

Petition under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Cuddalore, in S. C. S. No. 113 of 1919.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. M. S. Vaidyanatha Aiyar, for the Petitioner.—Though a Small Cause Court is not bound to write an elaborate judgment, it should record even concisely its reasons for its decision. There are no materials in the present judgment on which the High Court could say whether the Judge applied his mind to the evidence before him. The High Court cannot be expected to scrutinise all the evidence itself to see if the judgment is correct.

Mr. S. T. Srinivasagopala Chariar, for the Respondent, relied on the language of Order XX, rule 4 (1) and (2) Civil Procedure Code and Protap Chandra Dutt v. Abhimanini Surini (1) for the position that the Small Cause Court is not bound to give reasons for its decision.

JUDGMENT.—The judgment of the District Munsif under revision is in these terms, "Point; Is the plaint claim true? I find the plaint claim true." The question for consideration is, whether this is a judgment which should be accepted by this Court. Mr. Srinivasagopala Chariar, who appeared for the respondent, has drawn my attention to the language of Order XX, rule 4 clauses (1) and (2) of the Civil Procedure Code and contended that, in a Small Cause suit, the Judge is not bound to give reasons for his decision. He is supported by the Calcutta High Court in Protap Chandra Dutt v. Abhimanini Surini (1). On the other hand, in Malik Rahmat v. Shiva Prasad (2) Mr. Justice Mahmood and in Bai Jasoda v. Bamansha (3) one of the Judges of the Bench examined the materials placed before them to find out whether the Small Cause Judge had applied his mind to the consideration of the evidence adduced before him. I may at once say, with reference to the observations contained in the judgment of Farran, C. J., in Bai Jasoda v. Bamansha (3), that I am not prepared to act upon the suggestion. The learned Chief Justice says: "In a case where there is nothing to excite suspicion, and where the plaintiff has given such proof of her claim as the law requires, the plaintiff is entitled, and this Court is entitled, to have some indication from the Judge of the point upon which he dismisses the suit, to show that he is not acting from mere caprice or in ignorance of the rules of law which regulate the proof requisite to establish a plaintiff's claim." The learned Judge prefaces this with a remark by saying, "In many cases the point for determination which forms the basis for dismissing the suit, is obvious upon the face of the proceedings." With all deference, this seems to me to necessitate an enquiry on the part of the High Court whether the case is one in which, upon the face of it, the unsatisfactory judgment of the lower Court should be accepted or is one which should be further examined notwithstanding the unsatisfactory and uninforming nature of the judgment under revision. Now this would cast more work upon the High Court than section 25 of the Small Cause Courts Act requires. In a given case, whether a judgment should be looked upon with suspicion or whether it is one where, despite the meagre judgment given by the lower Court, the High Court should see whether the parties have not been injured will not be an easy process and I am not, therefore, prepared to make the distinction suggested. Once the Court is compelled to embark upon an enquiry as to whether a particular judgment should be scrutinized or not, it would be tantamount to the Court examining for itself the materials which were available to the lower Court and judging for itself whether the decision has been properly arrived at by the lower Court. I am free to admit that the interpretation sought to be placed upon Order XX, rule 4, would appeal to Judges in different ways. Speaking for myself, I have been under the impression while at the Bar that in this Court it had always been insisted upon that the Judge of the Small Cause Court should give some reasons which would satisfy the High Court that he had applied his mind to the materials placed before him. Brought up in that tradition, while sitting in the Admission Court, I have always insisted upon the lower Court exercising Small Cause jurisdiction giving some indication as to what was in its mind, so that I may be in a position to say whether its conclusion is right or not. There are three reasons for this attitude of mind. First of all, the High Court, in exercising its powers of revision under section 25, is really supervising the work of the lower Court, in order to enable it effectually to do its work, the lower Court must give us some materials upon which we can say that it has done its duty properly. Otherwise, we will have to go into the whole record to see whether the work has been properly done. That is from the point of view of the Judge of the High Court revising the work of the Small Cause Judge. Secondly, a party who has adduced evidence—it may be one or two witnesses in a case or half a dozen witnesses in another—must have some satisfaction that the Judge has really come to the conclusion whether his witnesses should be believed or not and whether his documents should be accepted as genuine or not. If, after the examination of all the witnesses and documents, a particular point is decided in a particular manner, the party will be able to see whether what he did has the approval of the Judge or not. Thirdly, what is most important is, that the High Court should not encourage this habit of mind in the lower Court. Once we allow the lower Court to be slack in the discharge of its duty by not giving reasons which induced it in coming to a certain conclusion, I am not quite sure whether this habit of mind would not ultimately have a serious effect upon the temperament of the Judge and upon the rights of the parties, in more important cases. It would not be a mere waste of time on the part of the Small Cause Judge to say simply whether it believed certain witnesses and whether the documents produced before it in the case are to be relied on or not. While it may not be absolutely necessary that it should go into the details regarding the conclusion it has come to, I think that this Court is entitled to have some glimpse into the inner working of the mind of the Small Cause Judge to see whether the work has been done properly or not. For these reasons, I am of opinion that the judgment before me under revision is not one which I can accept. Fortunately, there are not many such judgments coming up for revision. In most cases the Judges elaborately give their reasons for the conclusions they come to. I think this learned District Munsif should be called upon to give his reasons for the decision he has come to. I must, therefore, reverse the judgment and send the case back to him for disposal in the light of the above observations. Costs will abide the result.

(1) 43 Ind. Cas. 752.

(2) 13 A. 632; A. W. N. (1891) 172; 7 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 337.

(3) 23 B. 334; 12 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 222.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 87—Abandonment, proof of.

In order to succeed under section 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, a plaintiff must establish, first, that the rayait voluntarily abandoned his residence without notice to his landlord, secondly, that he did so abandon his land without arranging for payment of his rent as it fell due, and, thirdly, that he ceased to cultivate his holding either by himself or by some other person. [p. 909, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the Officiating District Judge, Darbhanga, dated the 5th March 1919, reversing that of the Munsif, First Court, Darbhanga, dated the 10th May 1918.

Messrs. P. N. Sinha and Murari Prasad, for the Appellants.

Mr. Ganesh Dutta Singh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

DAS, J.—This was an action by the plaintiffs-respondents for recovery of possession of certain lands which are specified in the plaint. The suit was resisted mainly by the appellants before us on the ground that they have taken a kabala of the major portion of the lands in suit. It is necessary to state that the defendants, who are the appellants before us, have taken the conveyance from one Behari Missir whose heirs were cited in the action as defendants third party.

The plaintiffs brought the action on the allegation that the defendants second party were their tenants; that the defendants second party having abandoned the land they were entitled to recover khas possession of the land.

The case of the defendants is, that the defendants second party had nothing whatever to do with the land; that one Behari Missir was the tenant in respect of this land, and that the contesting defendants, who are the appellants before us, have taken a conveyance of the major portion of the lands from the heirs of Behari Missir.

The lower Appellate Court has found that Behari Missir was the benamidar of the defendants second party; that it was the defendants second party who were the tenants in respect of this land; that the defendants second party were in possession of the land until the 17th December 1915 when they executed a ladavi deed in favour of Behari Missir, and that since the 17th December 1915 the defendants first party are admittedly in possession of the major portion of the holding. But the conveyance in favour of the defendants first party did not include 16 kathas of land which was admittedly a portion of the holding and with reference to this 16 kathas the learned Judge has said as follows :—

"It is of no concern to us to ascertain as to who is in possession of the 16 kathas and odd out of the disputed holding when the defendants second party cut off his connection with the whole of the holding by executing the ladavi deed."

It seems to me that a case under section 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is not established by the findings arrived at by the lower Appellate Court. Its finding that the defendants second party cut off their connection with the whole of the holding was a finding based not on the evidence in the case but on its view of the ladavi deed. If it was based on the evidence in the case, it would have been in a position to record a finding that the defendants second party were not in possession of the 16 kathas of land. Now, it is perfectly clear that, in order to succeed under section 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the plaintiff must establish, first, that the raiyat voluntarily abandoned his residence without notice to his landlord, secondly, that he did so abandon his land without arranging for payment of his rent as it fell due ; and, thirdly, that he ceased to cultivate his holding either by himself or by some other person. The learned Judge has not considered any of these three points at all, and it is essentially necessary that, before he gives any reliefs to the plaintiff, he must consider the evidence in the case with reference to section 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

I must allow this appeal, set aside the judgment and decree of the Court below and remand the case to the lower Appellate Court for a decision according to law. The appellants are entitled to the costs of this appeal ; the costs incurred in the Court below will abide the result and will be disposed of by the lower Appellate Court.

Hindu Law—Guardian—Testamentary appointment of guardian, validity of—Suit to remove guardian, maintainability of.

Under the Hindu Law the testamentary appointment by a father of a guardian of his son is valid, and, in the absence of an act of misfeasance or bad management, the mother, acting as the next friend of the minor, is not entitled to an order removing such guardian from his office. [p. 910, col. 1.]

Civil Miscellaneous Reference by the Local Government under Rule 17 of the Rules and Orders relating to the Kumaun Division.

Mr. Damodar Das, for the Petitioner.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Opposite Party

JUDGMENT.—This is a reference by the Local Government under rule 17 of the Rules and Orders relating to the Kumaun Division. The facts are clearly set forth in the letter of reference.

The plaintiff Anandmani was the minor son of one Chandramani and formed a joint Hindu family with him. Chandramani, by a written Will, appointed the defendant, Deba Nand, his nephew, a guardian of the plaintiff's person and property. On Chandramani's death the testamentary guardian in 1910 took over the management of the estate. In 1918 Musammat Parbati, the widow of Chandramani, acting as the next friend of her minor son Anandmani, brought the suit, out of which this reference has arisen, for rendition of accounts, damages and for the removal of Deba Nand from the managership of the property. The case for the plaintiff was that no valid Will had been made by the deceased, nor had he any authority to appoint a guardian of his minor son by Will, and that the defendant had been guilty of mismanagement. The defendant pleaded that the Will was a valid one and was binding on the plaintiff, and denied the allegations of mismanagement. The Court of first instance decreed the suit. On appeal, the District Judge found that the Will had been validly executed by Chandramani, who had been of sound disposing mind, and that no mala fides or lack of prudence, due diligence or care on the part of the defendant had been established. On these findings he set aside the decree of the first Court and dismissed the suit. The learned Commissioner in second appeal accepted all the findings of fact, but, holding that the plaintiff's father had no power to appoint a guardian of the minor's property by Will, restored the decree of the Court of first instance decreeing the suit.

The main question for our consideration is, whether a Hindu father has under the Hindu Law power to appoint by Will a guardian of the property of his minor son. The difficulty is caused by the circumstance, as Mr. Mayne says, that "little is to be found on the subject of guardianship in works on Hindu Law." There can, however, be no doubt that the father is the natural guardian of his minor son and, ordinarily, is the best person to judge under whose care and protection his son should be brought up and by whom his property should be managed during his minority. The power to appoint a testmentary guardian would be quite consonant with the parental authority which a Hindu father has a right to exercise over his son. At least, there seem to be no provisions of Hindu Law opposed to the exercise of such a power. As early as 1866 it was laid down in the case of Soobah Pirthee Lal Jha v. Soobah Doorgah Lal Jha (1) that, "no doubt the mother is the natural guardian of her child; and were any person to attempt to deprive her of this right without authority, her right would, under ordinary circumstances, be supported; but we are not aware of any provisions of the Hindu Law, nor have any such been shown us in support of the principal Sudder Amin's view which prohibit a father from appointing by writing or by word any other person than the mother to be the guardian of his minor children." The facts of that case are certainly distinguishable from those of the present case, but the statement of the law contained therein has not, so far as we are aware, been ever doubted. In fact, the case has been accepted by several eminent commentators as an authority for the propcsition that a Hindu father can by word or writing nominate a guardian for his children, the nomination taking effect after his death, and that he is unrestricted in the choice of a guardian and may exclude even the mother from the guardianship, vide Trevelyan's Law of Minors, Chapter IX, page 62, 5th Edition; Ghosh's Hindu Law, page 1013, 3rd Edition, and Dr. Gour's Hindu Code, paragraph 59, page 401.

In the case of Albrecht v. Bathey Jellamma (2) the rule that a Hindu father has power to appoint a testamentary guardian for his minor son, as enunciated in the case of Soobah Pirthee Lal Jha v. Soobah Doorgah Lal Jha (1) was quoted with approval. The learned Judges, however, thought that the wishes of the father were not conclusive and that, in a case under the Guardians and Wards Act, the paramount consideration would be the welfare of the minor, and that if it would be injurious to the minor to give effect to the father's wishes the Court will interfere even in the father's lifetime.

The case before us is not one arising under the Guardians and Wards Act where the District Judge may have very wide powers of interference. Here the suit in substance is one by the mother of the minor brought as his next friend, and is directed against the defendant who had been duly appointed guardian by the minor's father under a Will. No act of misfeasance or bad management has been proved against him. We are of opinion that the mother, acting as the next friend of the minor, is not under the circumstances of this case entitled to an order removing the defendant from the guardianship of the property of the minor, as, on the authorities, the power of a Hindu father to appoint a testamentary guardian of the property of his minor son seems to be well recognised. If the defendant is not a fit and proper person to remain a guardian of the minor's property, it may still be open to persons interested in his welfare to seek redress under the Guardians and Wards Act.

Having regard to the fact that all the allegations as to the invalidity of the Will and the bad faith, negligence and bad management of the defendant have been found against the plaintiff, the suit cannot be said to have been for the benefit of the minor. The proper person liable for the costs of the defendant is Musammat Parbati, the next friend herself.

Our answer to the questions referred to us are, therefore, as follows :—

(1) The learned Commissioner was not right in holding that in this case the deceased father had no power to appoint a guardian to the property by Will and in decreeing the suit on this ground.

(2) The costs of litigation, including the costs of this reference, should be borne by Musammat Parbati, the next friend of the minor.

Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 375, 462, 464 —Bengal Court of Wards Act (IX of 1879), ss 14, 15, 51*—Compromise of suit—Minor defendants—Guardian appointed by Court of Wards, whether requires leave of Court for compromise.*

A guardian appointed under the Bengal Court of Wards Act, 1879, on behalf of infants has power to compromise proceedings in the Civil Court to which those infants are defendants, without obtaining the leave of the Court under section 462 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882. Upon such a guardian consenting to an agreement for compromise, that agreement is necessarily recorded by the Court under section 375 of the Code, without the examination of its terms required in the case of ordinary guardians. [p. 912, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decree of the Calcutta High Court, dated the 17th January 1917, reported as 37 Ind. Cas. 971, affirming a decree of the District Judge of Darjeeling.

FACTS.—On the death of one Reshuk in 1899 a dispute arose between his widow Nakimo (first appellant) and his cousin Phurbu with regard to a certain estate. In 1905 the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal declared Nakimo to be a disqualified proprietor under the Court of Wards Act, 1879, and ordered that the estate in question should be managed by the Court of Wards. The Court of Wards subsequently declared Nakimo's daughters (second and third appellants) to be minors under section 6 (b) of the Act and took charge of their properties. In 1907 Phurbu's son, Jerung, brought a suit against Nakimo and her daughters claiming the estate. A compromise was arrived at and accepted by the Board of Revenue and Jerung and the manager under the Court of Wards thereupon presented a joint petition to the District Judge before whom the suit was pending, for an immediate preliminary decree in terms of the compromise. The District Judge made such a decree in 1907 and it was made absolute in 1908.

In 1910 Nakimo brought the present suit for a declaration that these decrees were inoperative against her on the ground, inter alia, that the compromise was made without the leave of the District Judge. Later on, Nakimo's daughters were added as plaintiffs and Jerung having died, the first three respondents were impleaded as defendants in his place, the 4th respondent being also joined as defendant as representing the Court of Wards.

The District Judge dismissed the suit. He held that, under section 18 of the Court of Wards Act, the Court of Wards had the same powers over the properties of its wards when those properties were the subject of a suit as in any other circumstances, and that the minor wards were properly represented under section 51 of the Act. In his opinion section 464 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, governed this case, and section 462 did not apply. This decision was affirmed on appeal by the High Court (Fletcher and Richardson, JJ.)

Hence this appeal.

Mr. Kentorthy Brown, for the Appellants.—Under section 51 of the Court of Wards Act the manager has no authority to enter into any compromise of a suit in which he acts as guardian ad litem without obtaining the leave of the Court in which such suit is pending under section 462. It is contended that section 464 excludes section 462 but if so the manager's powers would depend on what his powers were before 1882. The general powers of management given by section 18 of the Court of Wards Act, 1879, do not include the power to compromise: that view is supported by Ganesha Row v. Tulja Ram Row (1). The manager under the Court of Wards is in exactly the same position as any other guardian in requiring the leave of the Court to a compromise. The position of the widow, the first appellant, is different from that of the minors, but if this compromise is set aside as regards the minor defendants it cannot be binding upon her (Reference was made to Trevelyan's Law Relating to Minors, 3rd Edition, 1906, p. 319).

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C., and Parikh, for the Respondents, were not called on.

JUDGMENT.

LORD BUCKMASTER.—The sole question in this appeal is, whether a guardian appointed by the Court of Wards on behalf of infants has power to compromise proceedings in the Civil Court, to which those infants are defendants. It is alleged on behalf of the appellants that such a compromise cannot take place unless the agreement for compromise has been examined by the Civil Court and the Civil Court has assented to its terms. Section 375 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 provides that if a suit is wholly or in part compromised by any lawful agreement, such agreement shall be recorded "and the Court shall pass a decree in accordance therewith so far as it relates to the suit, and such decree shall be final." That section received qualification by section 462, which enacted that "no next friend or guardian for the suit shall, without the leave of the Court, enter into any agreement or compromise on behalf of a minor;" but by the Code, as it was originally passed, it was expressly enacted that section 462 shall not apply to any minor for whose person or property a guardian or manager has been appointed by the Court of Wards or by the Civil Court under any local law.

The position, therefore, under the Code was this:—By section 375 the Court was compelled to register the agreement that had been come to for the compromise of the suit, and the necessity for the examination of the terms of the compromise on behalf of the infant did not arise where the infant was represented by a guardian or manager who had been appointed by the Court of Wards or by the Civil Court under any local law.

Alterations were made in that Code in 1883 and 1890, and, instead of excluding in terms sections 400 to 462, as provided in the earlier Code, section 464 extended it by providing that:—

"Nothing in this Chapter applies to a Sovereign Prince or Ruling Chief suing or being sued in the name of his State or being sued by direction of the Governor-General in Council or a Local Government in the name of an agent or in any other name, or shall be construed to affect, or in any way derogate from, the provisions of any local law for the time being in force relating to suits by or against minors or by or against lunatics or other persons of unsound mind."

The Court of Wards Act of Bengal is admittedly a local law within the meaning of that section, and, as already pointed out by the provisions of that law before the passing of the Codes of 1888 and 1890, the guardian so appointed was the only person who could assent to the agreement for the compromise of the litigation, and that agreement, when assented to, was necessarily recorded under section 375, and there is nothing in the later provisions to take away this power.

For these reasons, in their Lordships' opinion, this appeal fails and should be dismissed with costs, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Appeal dismissed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 250—Compensation, order for, without examining all complainant's witnesses, legality of.

Before making an order against a complainant under section 250 of the Criminal Procedure Code awarding compensation to the accused, notice should be given to the complainant and he should be permitted to adduce evidence It is illegal to make such an order before concluding the examination of all the witnesses of the complainant.

Case referred for the orders of the High Court, under section 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code, by the Sessions Judge, Vizagapatam Division, in his Letter No. 456 of 1920, dated the 19th February 1920.

Mr. E. L. Ethiraj, for the Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

Mr. B. Satyanarayana, for the Accused.

ORDER.—Reading sections 250 and 253 of the Code of Criminal Procedure together, we cannot say that the order for compensation made in spite of the complainant's request for the examination of his remaining witnesses is illegal. But, in our opinion, it is not one that should be made except in very exceptional cases. Directly the Magistrate informs a complainant that he is considering making an order against him under section 250 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the complainant's position is changed and he comes within the mischief of the Criminal Procedure Code and is on his defence, though not actually accused. The Code provides for a record of his objection and it seems to us that his position is made by the words of the Code stronger than that of a complainant against whom sanction for prosecution for an offence under section 182 or 211, Indian Penal Code, is sought, and in such cases this Court has always required that notice and opportunity to meet should be given and the party permitted to adduce evidence, though section 195 has no such provision. We think that he should be allowed to call his witnesses for, until the Magistrate has heard them, he cannot say whether their evidence will not help him to decide, first, the propriety of such an order and, secondly, the extent of the culpability of the complainant to be expressed in the amount of the compensation. The case of Queen-Empress v. Chiragh Ali (1) relied on by Mr. Satyanarayana, who appears for the person who received compensation, was a case where the accused was acquitted and such acquittal in a summons case could only be after all the evidence for the prosecution was taken, and in a warrant case after charge framed. We, therefore, set aside the order for compensation.

Order set aside.

Criminal appeal from the order of the Sessions Judge, Amritsar, dated the 23rd July 1920.

Mr. Saunders and Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Appellant.

The Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—On the evening of the 5th of April 1920, the corpse of a boy, aged about 14 years, was found floating in a well situate within the boundaries of the village of Jagdeo in the Amritsar District. The body was taken out of the water, and after being photographed was sent to the Assistant Surgeon who conducted the post mortem examination. The evidence of the medical witness shows that he did not find any wounds or other injuries on the body which could account for the death, and that he expressed his opinion that the boy's death was due to drowning. The Sessions Judge has found that the boy was thrown into the well on the night of the 4 5th April 1920; and has convicted two persons, viz., Narain Singh and Kehr Singh, in connection with the murder, and sentenced them to death each.

We may clear the ground by stating at once that there is ample evidence on the record to establish the fact that the body recovered from the well was that of a boy, Wassan, who was living a short time before the murder with his mother, Musammat Bhagwani, in the village of Bhalapind, which is not far from Jagdeo. The mother and several other witnesses have deposed to the fact that the photograph shown to them is a likeness of boy Wassan, and there is absolutely no reason for disbelieving them. We have seen the photograph ourselves, and find that the features are quite distinct and could be easily recognised by the relatives of the victim. We must, therefore, take it that the identification of the body has been fully established.

Before narrating the circumstances which led to the commission of the crime, we may briefly refer to the love affairs of Musammat Bahgwani. This lady was originally married to a person called Kharak Singh, by whom she had one son, viz., the boy Wassan. Kharak Singh died about ten years ago, and a year after his death the widow married Ishar Singh, a resident of the village of Ghampur, by whom she had two daughters. The convict Narain Singh is the son of Ishar Singh's maternal uncle, while Kehr Singh is a collateral of Wassan. Narain Singh is a resident of Dhariwal but came to Ghampur about a year ago to render assistance to Ishar Singh in cultivating his land, and stayed with him in his house. It appears that Musammat Bhagwani contracted a liaison with Narain Singh, with the result that the injured husband turned Narain Singh out of the house. He, however, continued to live in the village, and subsequently arranged with the help of Kehr Singh to abduct Musammat Bhagwani. On or about the 26th of March the two convicts took Musammat Bhagwani with her children, namely, Wassan and the two daughters, to the house of one Naraini, a resident of Bhalapind, who was acquainted with Kehr Singh and Musammat Bhagwani. The exact date on which she arrived at Musammat Naraini's house cannot be ascertained with any reasonable certainty; but we agree with the learned Sessions Judge in holding that it was on the 4th of April that the two convicts asked Musammat Bhagwani to allow Wassan to accompany them to attend a marriage. There is ample evidence upon the record that the boy left his mother and went away with the convicts, and was not seen by her again. She, after making an infructuous search for the boy, returned to her husband's village Ghampur where she was informed by a Policeman of the recovery of the body from the well.

Now, the story for the prosecution is that Kehr Singh coveted the land of the boy Wassan, and the pedigree table prepared by the patwari shows that he and Jawahar Singh, a sonless old man of about 80 years of age, are the only collaterals of Wassan. It is alleged that Kehr Singh wanted to get rid of the boy, and in order to carry out his object he hired Narain Singh to commit the murder. That Narain Singh was employed as a hired assassin and was given some money as an inducement to commit the deed rests upon the confession which he made before the Magistrate but retracted before the Sessions Judge. Whatever the exact motive may be, there can be no doubt that, on the 4th of April the boy left in the company of Narain Singh and Kehr Singh. As to what happened afterwards we must turn to the evidence of two persons Hari Das (P. W. No. 12) and Mahandu (P. W. No. 13), and to the confession of Narain Singh. Hari Das is a garanthi of a shrine situate at a distance of about half a mile from the well from which the body was recovered, and Mahandu is a singer at that shrine. Both these witnesses depose to the visit of the accused Narain Singh and Wassan to the shrine in the evening where they were given food and bedding. They got up, however, about midnight, and then left the temple.

The circumstances immediately preceding the commission of the crime are disclosed in the confession of Narain Singh. This accused was produced before the Magistrate on the 19th of April 1920, when he made a clean breast of the whole affair and narrated a long and circumstantial story of all the incidents in connection with the crime. According to him, it was Kehr Singh from whom the suggestion to kill the boy emanated, to which suggestion Narain Singh at first demurred, Kehr Singh, however, gave him liquor at a shop at Amritsar, and eventually induced him to agree to kill Wassan in return for Rs. 400, out of which Rs. 200 were paid in advance. Kehr Singh then asked Musammat Bhagwani to allow him to take Wassan away on the pretext that he and his companion, Narain Singh, were going to attend a marriage and that they wanted to take Wassan to his prospective father-in-law whose daughter might be betrothed to him. Musammat Bhagwani at first refused but subsequently consented on learning that her paramour, Narain Singh, was also going. The convicts then brought the boy to the temple near the village of Jagdeo shortly before sunset. Kehr Singh himself did not appear at the temple but concealed himself somewhere in a garden, and it was Narain Singh and Wassan who went to the shrine and, after partaking of their food there, went to sleep. They were awakened at midnight by Kehr Singh, and the three then proceeded to the well where, at the bidding of Kehr Singh, Narain Singh held the victim, while the former tied a piece of cloth round the boy's neck and after knocking him down tied his arms and legs with his pagri and threw him into the well.

This confession was adhered to by Narain Singh when he was examined by the Committing Magistrate on the 9th of May 1920 but was retracted before the Sessions Judge. Now, so far as Narain Singh is concerned, we have not only his confession, but also the fact that he, along with Kehr Singh, took the boy from his mother, and the important circumstance that he was seen with the victim afterwards in the vicinity of the well from which the corpse, was recovered. His guilt does not, therefore, admit of any doubt, and his conviction under section 302, Indian Penal Code, is fully justified.

Coming now to the case against Kehr Singh, the learned Sessions Judge has relied upon the following evidence:—

(1) the retracted confession of the co-accused, Narain Singh;

(2) the fact that Kehr Singh, by making a false statement to the mother, induced her to let the boy go with both the convicts, and that the boy actually left the mother in their company and was not seen alive afterwards;

(3) Kehr Singh had a strong motive for doing away with the boy.

Now, the confession shows that Kehr Singh took a leading part in planning and committing the crime, and that it was he who threw the boy into the well. There is, however, a well established rule of practice that the confession of a co-prisoner cannot per se sustain a conviction, and that it must be corroborated aliunde by independent evidence in some material circumstance. The learned Sessions Judge, while holding that there is no independent evidence to connect Kehr Singh with the actual murder, finds that there is adequate proof upon the record that this convict abetted the commission of the murder. It is beyond doubt that Narain Singh had no grudge whatsoever against the victim or his mother, and had no personal object other than that which he himself gives, namely, a bribe from Kehr Singh, for the removal of Wassan. Indeed, so far as he was concerned, he would be most reluctant to do anything which would displease the boy's mother, Musammat Bhagwani, with whom he was carrying on a love intrigue. Further, this lady was enjoying the income of the boy's landed estate, and the boy's death would probably deprive her of that income and thereby indirectly affect her paramour. It is perfectly clear that Narain Singh, if left alone, would rather like the boy to live than bring about his death.

On the other hand, Kehr Singh had a very strong motive for wishing to get rid of Wassan. If Wassan died, Kehr Singh would immediately succeed to a moiety of his estate, and only the life of a childless old man of 80 years of age stood between him and the other half. So far as we can see, Kehr Singh was the only person who was vitally interested in getting rid of the boy; and we, therefore, accept the statement of Narain Singh that he was induced by Kehr Singh to accept the bribe and to participate in the commission of the crime. The motive on the part of Kehr Singh constitutes a very strong corroboration of the confession of the co-accused.

Further, there can be no manner of doubt that it was at the instance of Kehr Singh that Musammat Bhagwani was induced to allow Wassan to leave Bhalapind, and that the reason given by Kehr Singh for taking Wassan with him was absolutely false. It is obvious that the boy did go with Kehr Singh and Narain Singh, and that he was murdered very shortly afterwards, apparently on the night following the day on which he left his mother.

Kehr Singh's subsequent conduct also lends support to the theory that he was implicated in the commission of the crime. It appears that the mother, after making an infructuous search for the boy, came back to her own village, Ghamupur, and that Kehr Singh, though he was living in that village, did not offer any explanation of the disappearance of the boy, nor did he give any imformation as to the scene of the marriage to which he had intended to take him, or as to the prospective parents of the girl to whom the boy was to be married. Indeed, he has all along maintained a complete silence as to his movements since he left Bhalapind, and has not told us as to what happened to the boy who undoubtedly left his mother in his company.

There is ample evidence upon the record that a pair of shoes belonging to Wassan was recovered from a well, known an Malu-wana, which is situated at a short distance from the well from which the body was recovered. This discovery was made in pursuance of information supplied by Kehr Singh, and prima facie there is no reason to doubt the veracity of the story relating to the discovery. The learned Sessions Judge, however, thinks that it would not be safe to hold that the clue to the discovery of the shoes was solely furnished by Kehr Singh and he has, consequently, excluded from consideration the evidence as to this discovery which would have connected Kehr Singh with the commission of the murder itself.

Whatever doubt there may be as to the source of the information with respect to the discovery of the shoes, we are of opinion that the learned Sessions Judge was not right in saying that Kehr Singh "was not present at the time" when the murder was committed. What he might have found was that Kehr Singh's presence at the time of the murder had not been established, not that his absence had been proved. It is, however, unnecessary to dwell on this subject, because the evidence and the circumstances referred to above leave no doubt in our minds that Kehr Singh was guilty at least of the abetment of murder.

The learned Counsel for Kehr Singh impeaches the conviction of his client on the ground that the latter was charged only with the commission of the principal offence and that he could not, therefore, be convicted of the abetment of murder in respect of which no charge was preferred against him. In support of his contention he places his reliance upon two cases, namely, Reg. v. Chand Nur (1) and Padmanabha Panikannaya v. Emperor (2). The learned Judges who decided the latter case did not intend to lay down any universal rule that in no case can a conviction for abetment be possible where the charge relates only to the principal offence. The principle laid down in the Bombay case has our entire approval, though its applicability must depend upon the peculiar facts of each case. The learned Judges, while dealing with the provisions of section 457 of the old Code of Criminal Procedure, which corresponds to section 238 of the present Code, say :—

(1) 11 B. H. C. R. 240.

(2) 5 Ind. Cas. 145; 33 M. 264; 7 M. L. T. 79; 11 Cr. L. J. 49; 20 M. L. J. 84.

ABDUS SAMAD v. YUSUF.

"That section applies to cases in which the charge is of an offence which consists of several particulars, a combination of some only of which constitutes a complete minor offence. The graver charge in such a case gives to the accused notice of all the circumstances going to constitute the minor one of which he may be convicted. The latter is arrived at by mere substraction from the former. But when this is not the case, where the circumstances embodied in the major charge, do not necessarily, and according to the definition of the offence imputed by that charge, constitute the minor offence also, the principle no longer applies, because notice of the former does not necessarily involve notice of all that constitutes the latter. The section is not intended to apply to a collateral offence."

The provisions of the law applicable to a case of this kind are to be found in section 237, Criminal Procedure Code, which runs as follows: —

"If, in the case mentioned in section 236, the accused is charged with one offence, and it appears in evidence that he committed a different offence for which he might have been charged under the provisions of that section, he may be convicted of the offence which he is shown to have committed, although he was not charged with it."

The question is then reduced to this:— Whether on the facts in this case the accused could have been charged not only with the commission of the principal offence but also with the abetment thereof. The answer to this question must, in our opinion, be in the affirmative. Then, by virtue of the provisions of the aforesaid section, the accused may be convicted of the offence of abetment though he was not charged separately with the commission thereof. This is exactly the rule which is laid down in the Madras judgment reported as Yeditha Subbaya v. Emperor (3). In the case before us the facts urged by the prosecution in connection with the charge of the principal offence included all the facts which are now relied upon to support the conviction for the abetment of murder. The only thing which the Sessions Judge was unable to find against Kehr Singh was that he was present at the time of the commission of the murder; and it was in consequence of inadequate proof to substantiate that fact that the convict's offence was reduced from murder to the abetment thereof. He had notice of all the facts which constituted the offence of abetment, and the conviction does not, therefore, contravene the principle enunciated above.

The murder was undoubtedly a coldblooded and atrocious one, and there is absolutely no extenuating circumstance which would warrant the infliction of the alternative punishment. We accordingly uphold the conviction of both the appellants, and confirming the sentences of the death dismiss their appeals.

Appeals dismissed.

Workman's Breach of Contract Act (XIII of 1859), s. 2—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 4 (o), 260—Punishment—Offence—Summary trial legality of.

Inasmuch as the Legislature in the Workman's Breach of Contract Act has described the order which a Magistrate is authorised to make against a workman in a case proved as "punishment", the act if proved amounts to an "offence" punishable by law within the meaning of section 4 (o) of the Criminal Procedure Code, consequently a Magistrate of the First Class has jurisdiction under section 260 to deal with the case summarily. [p 918, col. 1.]

Criminal reference made by the Sessions Judge, Benares.

Mr. Janki Prasad, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the complainant, a master, made a complaint before a Magistrate of the First Class against a young workman under section 2 of Act No. XIII of 1859, alleging that he had been guilty of a breach of contract inasmuch as he had failed to continue to work although payment for his labour had been made under the contract in advance by the master. The Magistrate of the First Class dealt with the case summarily and dismissed it on the merits. The matter came up before the Sessions Judge who raised the question whether the proceeding was a proper one, on the ground that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to try the case summarily. The learned Sessions Judge has set out his view in a closely reasoned statement referring to the authorities, and the Magistrate who tried the case has submitted his explanation in an equally clear statement, maintaining his original view that he had jurisdiction to dispose of the case summarily. The question turns upon the interpretation to be given to section 260 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. A Magistrate of the First Class has jurisdiction to try in a summary way offences not punishable with imprisonment for a term exceeding six months. The question which we have to decide is, whether this is a punishable offence within the meaning of that section. In the ordinary colloquial sense of the term it certinly is not, but when reference is made to the definition of offence provided by section 4 (o) of the same Code, it is found to mean any act made punishable by any law for the time being in force. The Act under which this complaint was brought authorises a Magistrate to pass certain orders if a breach of contract is proved, and in the preamble, which does not conflict in any way with the enacting portion of the Act, it is provided that it is just and proper that persons guilty of such breach of contract shall be subject to punishment. Inasmuch as the Legislature has described the order which a Magistrate is authorised to make against a workman, in a case proved as "punishment" we find it impossible to say that the act, if proved, is not an offence punishable by law within the meaning of section 4 (o) and, therefore, within the meaning of section 260. It is unfortunate that we should find ourselves in conflict on this point with both ancient and modern authorities of other High Courts. The Madras High Court in the case of Pollard v. Mothial (1) took another view but, as pointed out in the case of Queen Empress v. Ratnayan (2), the definition in the Criminal Procedure Code on which we base our decision is subsequent in date to that authority. As regards Bombay, there is a quite recent authority following a previous authority both of which are to be found in the same volume, namely, Emperor v. Dhondu (3) and Emperor v. Balu Saluji (4) in which the Bombay High Court, following an English authority which dealt with the question of a penalty, has emphatically taken the other view without, however, noticing the use of the word "punishment" in Act No. XIII of of 1859. On the other hand, there is a clear dictum by a Judge of this Court reported in the case of Queen-Empress v. Indarjit (5) which has never been questioned and which must be taken to have been for all these years the guiding principle in this Province. We have come to the conclusion that we are compelled by the force of language to follow this ruling and we hold that this offence is triable summarily by a Magistrate of the First Class. Let the record be returned.

JUDGMENT.

SCOTT SMITH, J.—(December 11, 1920).—Hazara Singh, Sohan Singh, Jwala Singh and Harnam Singh were chalaned by the Police under section 304, Indian Penal Code, for causing the death of one Jagat Singh. The Magistrate who tried the case convicted Jawala Singh and Harnam Singh under section 304, Indian Penal Code, and Hazara Singh and Sohan Singh under section 325. They appealed to the Sessions Judge who held that it was not proved which of the accused had actually struck the blow which caused the death of Jagat Singh and altered the conviction of all of them to one under section 323. Hazara Singh and Sohan Singh filed an application for revision which came before a Single Judge of this Court, who, holding that there was no good ground for disagreeing from the finding of the Sessions Judge, dismissed the petition on its merits. There was also, however, an additional ground of revision to the effect that, as the Appellate Court held that only an offence under section 323 had been committed, and as the person injured had died, the proceedings abated and the accused should have been acquitted. Rama Nand v. Emperor (1) and Labhu v. Emperor (2) were cited as authorities in support of this proposition. The Single Judge referred the point to a Division Bench for consideration as to whether there was any essential distinction between a section 323 case brought by a complainant who dies during the course of the trial, and a Police chalan instituted after the injured person's death. An application for revision has also now been put in on behalf of Jawala Singh and Harnam Singh which has not yet been before a Single Judge.

It should be noted that the hurt for the causing of which the petitioners have been convicted did not cause the death of Jagat Singh. The actual hurt which caused his death was a fracture of the skull, but the Court has not found which of the petitioners caused this particular hurt. The contention on behalf of the petitioners is that, the person to whom the hurt was caused having died, and the offence held to be proved being a compoundable one, no cause of action survives, and the proceedings against the petitioners must be held to have terminated by the death of Jagat Singh. Section 89 of the Probate and Administration Act V of 1881, is relied upon as also the three rulings of the Punjab Chief Court reported as Ishar Das v. Emperor (3), Rama Nand v. Emperor (1) and Labhu v. Emperor (2). Section 89 of the Probate and Administration Act runs as follows:—

"All demands whatsoever, and all rights to prosecute or defend any suit or other proceeding, existing in favour of or against a person at the time of this decease, survive to and against his executors or administrators, except causes of action for defamation, assault as defined in the Indian Penal Code, or other personal injuries not causing the death of the party, and except also cases where, after the death of the party, the relief sought could not be enjoyed, or granting it would be nugatory."

This section was considered in Krishna Behari Sen v. Corporation of Calcutta (4) in which it was held that, "a suit for malicious prosecution falls within the general words of section 89 of the Probate and Administration Act and not within any of the exceptions," and that the cause of action of the deceased plaintiff survived to his administrators. In Ishar Das v. Emperor (3) it was held that the death of the complainant terminated a prosecution for defamation, which, being essentially a personal action, could not be continued or carried on by the legal representatives of the deceased petitioner. It was pointed out in that case that the offence of defamation is compoundable without permission of the Court before conviction, and that under section 198, Criminal Procedure Code, no Criminal Court can take cognizance of the offence except upon the complaint of a person aggrieved; also that prosecution for defamation is essentially a personal action, and the institution of proceedings depends on the temperament of the person defamed. The Judges were of the opinion that the principle underlying the rule laid down in section 89 of the Act was applicable to a criminal prosecution for defamation, having regard to the narrowness of the line between a prosecution and a suit for damages.

In the case reported as Rama Nand v. Emperor (1), Broadway, J., held that an action under section 323, Indian Penal Code, is a personal one and comes to an end on complainant's death. He referred to Ishar Das v. Emperor (3) and said that in his opinion the principle therein enunciated applied equally to an offence under section 323, Indian Penal Code. He said that, just as a prosecution for defamation is essentially a personal one so, in his opinion, was one under section 323, Indian Penal Code. There is, however, a distinction between a prosecution for defamation and one for causing hurt. A prosecution for defamation can only be lodged by a person aggrieved, but there is no such restriction in the case of one for causing hurt under section 323. In Labhu v. Emperor (2) Rattigan, Chief Justice, following Rama Nand v. Emperor (1) held, that a complaint under section 323 abated upon the death of the complainant. It will be noticed that in all these cases the Court took cognizance upon the complaint of a private person and not, as in the present case, upon a Police report of the facts. Now, with all due deference to the Judges who decided the cases above referred to, I am clearly of opinion that section 89 of the Probate and Administration Act has no application whatever to a criminal prosecution. It applies, as its wording shows, to all "demands" whatsoever and, "all rights to prosecute or defend any suit or other proceedings, existing in favour of, or against a person at the time of his decease." Now, the word "demands" clearly means demands of a civil nature, and the words "suit or other proceeding" must be interpreted as suit or other proceeding of a similar nature, the rule of ejusdem generis applying. The word "suit" obviously means a civil suit and "other proceeding" must mean other proceeding of a nature similar to a suit. If the section extended to criminal proceedings it would give a cause of action against the executors or administrators of a deceased offender, because the section applies not only to rights existing in favour of a person, but also to rights existing against a person, at the time of his decease. Even if the section could apply to private complaints, I do not see how it could apply to a case like the present in which the Court has taken cognizance upon a Police report of the facts under section 190 (b), Criminal Procedure Code. In all criminal proceedings the first important point to see is, whether the Court is properly seized of the case. A Court may take cognizance of an offence in any of the ways specified in section 190, Criminal Procedure Code, and once it has lawfully taken cognizance of an offence it must try it in one of the ways laid down for the trial of cases in the Code. There are certain cases in which the absence of the complainant terminates the proceedings. Thus under section 247, Criminal Procedure Code, the non-appearance of the complainant in a summons case, if the summons has been issued on complaint, causes the proceedings to terminate and the Magistrate shall acquit the accused unless for some reason he thinks proper to adjourn the hearing of the case to some other day. Again, in a warrant case, section 259 of the Code lays down that when the proceedings have been instituted upon complaint and upon any day fixed for the hearing of the case the complainant is absent, and the offence may be lawfully compounded, the Magistrate may, in his discretion, at any time before the charge has been framed discharge the accused. These sections would, of course, apply if the complainant died during the proceedings and was, therefore, necessarily absent upon the day fixed for the hearing of the case.

Again, there are certain cases in which the complainant or the person injured or aggrieved himself puts a stop to the proceedings by compounding the offence. The offences which can be compounded are specified in section 345 of the Code. There is nothing in the Criminal Procedure Code in support of the proposition that the death of the person injured or of the complainant of itself causes the proceedings to abate. With the exception of the three Punjab rulings cited above, I can find no other authority for holding that a criminal proceeding once properly lodged against an accused person abates or comes to an end, and there is no authority at all that such a result occurs through death in a case of which the Court has taken cognizance under section 190 (b), Criminal Procedure Code. The decisions in the Chief Court cases appear to me to involve an assumption that the complainant would, if he had lived, have compounded the offence committed by the accused. This appears to me to be an unwarrantable assumption, because when a person makes a complaint, the presumption is that he desires that the person complained against should be punished for the offence which he alleges he has committed.

I think it is a mistake to speak of an offence as a purely personal one. In Volume IX of Halsbury's Laws of England, at page 232, a crime is said to be "an unlawful act or default which is an offence against the public, and renders the person guilty of the act or default liable to legal punishment. While a crime is often also an injury to a private person, who has a remedy in a civil action, it is as an act or default contrary to the order, peace and well being of society that a crime is punishable by the State." The offence under section 323, Indian Penal Code, is one which causes injury to a private person and it is as well an offence against the public, and once a Court has legally commenced criminal proceedings against a person accused of an offence, the proceedings must go on unless and until they came to an end in one of the ways detailed above by discharge, acquittal or conviction of the accused.

Mr. Herbert points out that it is the practice of this Court in hearing appeals from convictions under sections 302 and 304, Indian Penal Code, when it is of opinion that a lesser offence has been committed to alter the conviction to one under section 325, or even in some cases to one under section 322, Indian Penal Code. He has also referred to the case reported as Emperor v. Sultan Singh (5) where three persons were assaulted by three others with the result that one of the persons assaulted died.

The survivors compounded the offence which was held to be one under section 323, Indian Penal Code, with their assailants, but it was held that it was not competent to the survivors to compound the case in respect of the injury caused to the deceased person, even if the offence committed amounted to one under section 323, Indian Penal Code, and a re-trial was ordered. In other words, the Judges held that even if an offence under section 323 had been committed as regards the deceased person the offence could not be compounded and that the accused were liable to punishment. I would, therefore, hold that criminal proceedings once legally instituted, whether upon a complaint or otherwise, do not terminate or abate merely by the death of the complainant or the person injured, and would reject the petition of Hazara Singh and Sohan Singh.

CHEVIS, J., (December 16, 1920.)—I concur and have nothing to add. The petition of Hazara Singh and Sohan Singh is rejected.

Petition rejected.

PATNA HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 426 OF 1920.

November 1, 1920.

Present :—Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad.

DEODHARI MAHTO—PETITIONER

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 417—Cheating, what constitutes—Money paid to creditor—Creditor, refusal of, to return bond—Offence.

DEODHARI MAHTO v. EMPEROR.

In order to constitute the offence of cheating it is essential, in the first place, that the person who delivers property should have been deceived before he makes delivery and, in the second place, that he should have been induced to do so fraudulently or dishonestly. The deception may be by words or by conduct. [p. 922, col. 2.]

Accused lent a sum of money to the complainant and got the latter to execute a bond. He also gave the complainant a kamiati parcha in respect of his homestead land. After some years, the complainant paid the money back to accused, but the latter refused to return the bond until the kamiati parcha was returned to him :

Held, that the accused could not be convicted of the offence of cheating under section 417 of the Penal Code. [p. 924, col. 1.]

Criminal revision against the order of the Deputy Commissioner, Palamau, dated the 24th August 1920, confirming in appeal the conviction and sentence of the Deputy Magistrate (with second Class powers) of Palamau, dated the 24th July 1920.

Mr. S. N. Datta, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner has been convicted under section 417 of the Indian Penal Code by the Magistrate of Palamau, exercising second class powers. The conviction has been upheld by the Deputy Commissioner.

The complainant had executed a kamiati bond on a stamp paper, eight or nine years ago, for an advance of Rs. 15. On the 10th of June 1920 the complainant paid the petitioner Rs. 22, the amount of the bond with interest. The complainant naturally expected that the bond would be returned to him and the accused after taking money went inside his house to fetch the bond. The bond was, however, not returned and the complainant was told by the accused that the kamiati parcha of his homestead must also be returned before he could get the bond. While accepting the services of the accused under the kamiati bond in question, the complainant had got settlement of the homestead land out of the accused's holding.

The complainant forthwith went to the Magistrate and lodged his complaint the next day.

On the 20th June a warrant of arrest of the accused was sent for execution to the Sub-Inspector of Police. The bond was returned by the accused to the complainant on the 21st and the accused appeared in Court on the 22rd,

The accused pleaded not guilty, but admitted receipt of the money and explained his failure to return the bond on account of his son being away who had with him key of the basket containing the bond. He also pleaded premature return of the money in Asadh, whereas according to the stipulation in the bond the money was to be paid back in the month of Magh, and that the complainant's giving up services in the month of Asadh when agricultural operations commence, was inconvenient to the accused.

The Magistrate held that the accused in refusing to return the bond after receipt of the money was actuated by a motive to retaliate for the inconvenience caused to him by the complainant returning the money before its due date and giving up services in Asadh, and was, therefore, guilty of having practised deception and having a fraudulent intention, and accordingly convicted him of cheating under section 417, Indian Penal Code.

The learned Deputy Commissioner took the same view He replied to the argument on behalf of the accused that the facts proved did not constitute an offence of cheating, by holding that the accused by consenting to receive the money did in fact induce the complainant to believe that he would return the bond and that it was clearly under this belief that the complainant paid the money, and that it was not necessary that the inducement should have been by express words.

The question for determination is, whether the facts found in this case constitute an offence of cheating. According to the definition of the term given in section 415 of the Indian Penal Code, it is essential, in the first place, that the person who delivers property should have been deceived before he makes delivery and, in the second place, that he should have been induced to do so fraudulently or dishonestly. The deception may be by words or by conduct vide Khoda Bux v. Bakeya Mundari (1) and Ramanath Kalapahar v. King Emperor (2). In this view the learned Deputy Commissioner is perfectly right. As to what is sufficient to constitute deception must be decided in each case on its merits, as held by Woodroffe, J., in the latter case.

In the former case, the accused after receiving the mortgage-money handed over to an illiterate messenger of the complainant a bogus unstamped bond instead of the real zarpeshgi deed, and it was held that there was a clear misrepresentation and fraudulent intention.

In the latter, the case of the prosecution was that the accused after receipt of the money returned a forged unregistered bond saying that it was the real bond. Rampini and Mookerji, JJ., differed in their views as to whether this would constitute cheating. The case was referred to Woodroffe, J., who agreed with Rampini, J., and held that the facts, if established, would constitute cheating, but on merits he held that the facts were not established.

These cases do not approach in any way to the facts of the present case. Later on, in the case of Kumeda Charan Ghose v. Emperor (3), Holmwood and Sharfuddin, JJ., in the circumstances very nearly similar to the present case, held that the offence of cheating was not established. In that case the complainant who was a tenant on bad terms with the accused, his landlord, was sent for by the landlord and was asked to pay rent, and accordingly the rent was paid. The complainant left for home to fetch money requesting the accused and his gomashta to have in the meantime his dues worked out and dakhlas (receipts) written. He returned soon with Rs. 90 and paid the same to the accused who drove him away refusing to give dakhals or return the money until Rs. 25 more was paid by him to make the sum of Rs. 90, the said amount of Rs. 25 having been taken towards swadeshi subscription. It was held that there was no subsequent misrepresentation but only an illegal demand and that the case did not come within the purview of the criminal law. The case of Khoda Bux v. Bakeya Mundari (1) was observed by their Lordships to have gone so far as the law could possibly be taken in the direction of misrepresentation by conduct and was further distinguished on the ground that there was a positive conduct to show fraudulent intention, namely, the return of a bogus unstamped bond to an illiterate messenger. We have only to substitute the words "kamiati bond" for the word "dakhlas" and the words "homestead parcha" for the words "Rs. 25" and it would at once be obvious that the facts of the case of Kumeda Charan Ghose v. Emperor (3) quoted above are exactly similar to the present one. Here the accused took the money inducing the complainant to believe that his kamiati bond would be returned, but instead of returning the same he demanded the homestead parcha which the complainant had obtained from the Settlement Department.

As held by the Magistrate, this "homestead" was settled with the complainant out of the accused's holding while accepting the services of the accused. Thus the homestead land originally belonged to the accused and was carved out and settled with the complainant as a part of the agreement entered into by the complainant and as set forth in the kamiati bond for and in consideration of the services of a kamia to be rendered by the complainant to the accused. The complainant paid the money and wanted back the bond in order to dissolve the agreement, which was the object of the transaction which is the subject of the trial in the present case. Although it may not have been stated at the time of negotiation for the return of money and the bond, the return of the homestead land was a natural concomitant of the cessation of the relationship between the parties. The accused could very well demand return of the parcha with respect to the homestead granted by the Settlement Department, on the basis of which the complainant wanted to hold on despite the accused. As held by the Magistrate, the giving of the parcha would certainly have meant a transfer of the land covered by it back to the accused. The fact that the parcha showed that the complainant was recorded as a raiyat in respect of the homestead direct under the malik would not affect the right of the accused to demand the land back which was given to the complainant in lieu of and as a consideration for the services to be rendered as a kamia. In any case, the accused could bona fide believe that he was entitled to have the homestead land and the parcha back from the complainant. In this view the demand for the parcha was not illegal and was at least under a bona fide belief. There is no question of dishonesty in the matter, for the accused received the money and retained it as legally being due under the bond. There was no wrongful gain to himself or wrongful loss to the complainant. There could also be no fraudulent conduct on his part in demanding the parcha from the complainant. He must have known his position with respect to the homestead and the terms upon which he got the land from the accused. He could not possibly have been deceived by the demand of the parcha by the accused when he wanted to sever his connection of eight or nine years with the accused once for all. The complainant was not in any way, deceived by any previous inducement to him by the subsequent demand of the parcha which may not have been told to him at the time that he understood that the money was to be paid and the bond was to be returned, for, as observed above, the return of the parcha, or at least the demand of it, was a necessary sequence of the severance of the connection between the parties. This puts the case much higher than the case of Kumeda Charan Ghose v. Emperor (3). The two necessary elements constituting cheating under section 415 of the Code and as set forth at the outset of this judgment are wanting in the present case. The Courts below have not considered the case from this aspect. To my mind, judging the case on its own merits and circumstances, the accused is not guilty of cheating of which he has been convicted. Far less is he guilty under section 403, Indian Penal Code, of misappropriation of the money or of the receipt, inasmuch as it was his just due without any tinge of dishonesty in it. Still less would the accused be guilty under section 383, Indian Penal Code of extortion, for the money was paid by the complainant not in consequence of his having been put in fear of any injury. There was no threat by the accused to dishonestly induce the complainant to return the parcha for the homestead land. I do not agree with the view taken by the learned Deputy Commissioner that if the accused was not guilty of cheating under section 417 he was at least guilty of misappropriation under section 403, Indian Penal Code, or extortion under section 383, Indian Penal Code, I do not also agree with him that the accused could be straight away convicted without any charge under those sections in case the charge of cheating which he was called upon to meet, failed.

I have given my best consideration to the case and its circumstances, and I do not think, in the concluding words of Holmwood, J., in the case of Kumeda Charan Ghose v. Emperor (3), that the accused comes within the purview of the criminal law.

The result is that the conviction of and the sentence passed on the accused are set aside and the petitioner is set at liberty.

Conviction set aside.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 417—Appeal from acquittal—Trial Court, finding of, value of—Appellate Court, interference by, when justified.

If in an appeal from an acquittal the evidence is all oral and its credibility is a mere matter of opinion without involving other considerations, the opinion of the Court which heard the witnesses must be treated as almost conclusive. [p. 926, col. 1.]

The indications of mistake must be obvious, or the evidence too strong to be rejected, before the Appellate Court will interfere. [p. 926, col. 2.]

Criminal appeal from the order of the Sessions Judge, Jhelum, dated the 11th March 1920.

Sardar Mehtab Singh, S. B., Public Prosecutor, for the Appellant.

Mr. Morton, for Respondents Nos. 3 to 8.

JUDGMENT.—The Sessions Judge of Jhelum, concurring in the unanimous opinion of the Assessors, has acquitted eight persons who were charged with the murder of one Malak, an Awan of mauza Ransial, in the Jhelum District. Against the order of acquittal the Local Government has preferred an appeal under section 417, Criminal Procedure Code, and we have heard the case agrued at length by the Public Prosecutor for the Crown and Mr. Morton for the respondents.

It appears that the village of Ransial is populated by turbulent people, and that the Awans residing there are divided into factions. It is common ground that there was considerable bitterness between the deceased and the witness Mian Khan on one side, and all the accused or, at any rate, the majority of the accused, on the other. This enmity is a double-edged sword which cuts both ways. While it is put forward by the prosecution as an adequate motive for the crime, it is relied upon by the defence as furnishing the reason for falsely implicating the accused. A perusal of the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge makes it clear that the dominant idea in his mind was that the relatives and friends of the deceased had spread their net much too wide, and had tried to fasten the charge upon their enemies irrespective of the question whether they actually participated in the assault on the deceased.

There can be no doubt that the deceased Malak was subjected to a brutal assault on the 5th January 1920, a short time before sunset, just when he was entering the village abadi after paying a visit to his daughter in a neighbouring village. The medical evidence shows that the victim received a very large number of incised wounds, and that his skull was fractured.

It is beyond dispute that he succumbed to the injuries within an hour.

Now, eight persons were named as the perpetrators of the crime, and their names were disclosed in the report which was made to the Sub Inspector within a few hours of the occurrence. The prosecution have persisted in the version that all the eight persons were acting in concert and participated in the fatal assault. In support of their case they have relied upon the evidence of five persons who profess to have witnessed the assault, and of four other persons who state that the victim, when questioned as to his assailants, repeated in their presence the names of all the eight accused.

We consider it unnecessary to enter into a lengthy discussion of the evidence and the various points urged by the learned Counsel on both sides in support of their respective contentions. Suffice it to say, that some of the reasons assigned by the learned Sessions Judge for distrusting the evidence for the prosecution do not appear to be altogether justified, but there can be little doubt that the alleged eye-witnesses have repeated in almost identical terms all the material facts in connection with the assault. A perusal of their evidence gives one an impression that they were deposing to a pre-arranged story. We are not prepared to say that the suspicion engendered in the mind of the Sessions Judge as to their being unreliable winesses was unjustified, more especially when we find that they are not men of any status or respectability whose word could be implicitly relied upon. It is possible, nay probable, that some of the witnesses were present at or near the scene when the assault took place, but they did not impress the Sessions Judge favourably, and it is very doubtful whether their evidence as to the culpability of all the eight persons can be accepted at its face value.

With regard to the evidence relating to dying declaration of the victim, it must be remembered that he had received so many severe injuries that it is doubtful whether he was in a fit condition to mention the names of all the assailants. It may be that he did not lose consciousness at once, but it is impossible to believe the story related by Azim Khan, Sarbarah lambardar, that the deceased repeated the process of mentioning the names of all the eight assailants several times, and satisfied the curiosity of every person who happened to come to him and make an enquiry as to the names of the perpetrators of the crime. This feat of memory, which cannot be easily performed by an illiterate person in his normal condition, was beyond the capacity of a man who was in the agony of death and who admittedly expired within an hour. It is clear that the witnesses have tried to prove too much.

The probability is that some of the accused took part in the assault, but the prosecution have spoiled their case by implicating all the persons against whom the relatives of the deceased had some sort of grudge. Indeed, the Police diaries show that several persons informed the investigating officer that only five men were concerned in the assault and that the remaining three were innocent. It must be remembered that it is by no means a rare phenomenon to find that a person taking advantage of the commission of a crime makes an attempt to implicate all his enemies irrespective of the question whether they are innocent or guilty, but such an attempt often ends in a dismal failure. So far as the judicial record is concerned, the case for the prosecution against all the accused stands exactly on the same footing, and there is really nothing to justify any discrimination. As we are not prepared to dissent from the view of the learned Sessions Judge that it has not been proved that all the persons participated in the assault, we have no alternative but to accept the conclusion reached by him in favour of the accused.

As laid down in Emperor v. Chattar Singh (1), the Court of first instance which has the witnesses before it, has a great advantage over the Court of Appeal which deals with the evidence second hand. Great regard is, therefore, as a rule, paid to the opinion of the first Court on the oral evidence, and a Court of Appeal is ordinarily reluctant to differ from its opinion, unless for cogent reasons. These considerations apply with greater force to an appeal from an acquittal, and naturally the Court is chary of disturbing a finding of the first Court rejecting the evidence against the accused as unreliable and declaring his innocence. The same judgment further lays down the salutary rule that "the findings of fact of a Court which has the evidence before itself, is ordinarily entitled to great weight and should be set aside by the Court of Appeal only when the indications of mistake are clear, and this is specially true in cases where the finding is in favour of the accused's innocence. If in such a case the evidence is all oral and its credibility is a mere matter of opinion without involving other considerations, the opinion of the Court which heard the witnesses must be treated as almost conclusive. Again, if the evidence is such that opinions may reasonably vary as to its worth the Court of Appeal will hardly adopt the view adverse to the accused and believe the evidence as to his guilt, which the lower Court has disbelieved, and take upon itself to set aside the verdict of acquittal. The indications of mistake must be obvious, or the evidence too strong to be rejected, before the Court will interfere." Here we have got not only the opinion of the Assessors but also the considered conclusion of an experienced Sessions Judge, and the mere fact that some of the reasons assigned by him are couched in faulty language, or not fully justified, does not, in our opinion, constitute an adequate ground for setting aside the order of acquittal. We are not prepared to hold that the indications of error in the order of acquittal are clear and unmistakable, and after bestowing our careful and anxious consideration upon the entire material before us we hold that the present case does not fulfil the test laid down in the above ruling.

We accordingly dismiss the appeal and direct that the respondents, who were arrested under section 427, Criminal Procedure Code, pending the decision of the appeal, be released forthwith.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 59, 304—Culpable homicide not amounting to murder—Punishment—Transportation for fourteen years, sentence of, legality of—Appeal to Privy Council—Procedure.

Where an offence is punishable with transportation for life or imprisonment for a term of years, section 59 of the Penal Code does not authorise a sentence of transportation for a term of years exceeding the maximum term of imprisonment to which the offender is liable [p. 928, col 1.]

The appellants were convicted by a Sessions Judge of culpable homicide not amounting to murder under section 304 (1) of the Penal Code and sentenced to three years' rigorous imprisonment. On an application for enhancement of sentence, the High Court enhanced the sentence to transportation for 14 years :

Held, that ten years being the maximum term (short of life) for which the appellants could be sentenced to transportation, the case should be remitted to the High Court with instructions to pass sentence according to law. [p. 928, col 2.]

Consolidated appeals by special leave from a judgment of the Madras High Court, dated the 2nd December 1919, affirming the conviction of the appellants under section 304 of the Indian Penal Code by the Sessions Judge, Vizagapatam, and enhancing the sentences passed upon them from three years' rigorous imprisonment to transportation for 14 years.

FACTS of the case sufficiently appear from their Lordships' judgment and from the foregoing headnote. The learned Judges of the Madras High Court (Bakewell and Phillips, JJ.) expressed the view "that a charge under section 302 of the Indian Penal Code should have been framed".

On this appeal

Messrs. Dunne, K. C and Narasimham, for the Appellants, submitted that the High Court had no jurisdiction to pass the sentences which they had passed. Except under sections 121A and 124A there was no power under the Indian Penal Code to pass a sentence of transportation short of life, except under section 59. On the true construction of section 59, unless the sentence is for life the period of transportation can not exceed the maximum term of imprisonment to which the offender can be sentenced. This has been repeatedly laid down in India:

Queen v. Rughoo (1), Queen v. Joseph Meriam (2), Queen v. Naiada (3).

The maximum term of imprisonment for offenses under section 304, Indian Penal Code, is fixed by that section at 10 years. The present sentence (14 years) is illegal and should be set aside. We submit that the matter cannot be remitted to the High Court, since that Court is functus officio, and there is no statutory provision giving that Court or the Sessions Court further jurisdiction. (As to the revisional powers of the High Court, reference was made to the Code of Criminal Procedure, Act V of 1898, sections 419, 423, 439).

Sir Erle Richards, K. C., and Mr. Kenworthy Brown, for the Respondent.—It is admitted that the High Court could have transported appellants for life, and they expressed the view that the charge should have been under section 302 (murder) for which transportation for life is the minimum penalty. Even, therefore, if the sentences passed were irregular, there was no such substantial or grave injustice as to make the case one in which the Board could advise His Majesty's interference, Dillet, In re (4).

[Their Lordships' referred to Dal Singh v. Emperor (5) and Ibrahim v. Emperor (6)].

But, further, the Indian cases cited are not binding on this Board, and we submit that when transportation for life is allowed, a sentence for a shorter period is admissible. Section 511, Indian Penal Code, provides for having the terms of transportation in the case of attempts, and section 57 provides for calculating fractions of a life sentence.

If the Board think the appeal should be allowed, it is an impossible result that appellants should go free. There are three alternatives :—

(1) The order made on revision can be set aside, leaving as they stand the affirmed conviction and the sentence passed by the Sessions Judge.

(2) The Board can remit the case to the High Court, indicating their view of the law. This is a course frequently taken in civil matters. In an analogous case, arising out of the jurisdiction of the House of Lords in That case was stronger than here, because by writ of error the whole conviction and sentence there could have been set aside.

(3) Or the Board can itself advise His Majesty to reduce the sentence to ten years.

Mr. Dunne, K. C., in reply.—This being a matter of want of jurisdiction, it is no answer to say that there is no substantial injustice done.

JUDGMENT.

VISCOUNT CAVE.—The appellants were convicted under section 304 (1) of the Indian Penal Code of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, and were sentenced by the Sessions Judge of Vizagapatam to rigorous imprisonment for three years. On appeal to the High Court of Judicature at Madras, that Court affirmed the conviction and, on the application of the Public Prosecutor for revision of the sentences, enhanced the sentences to transportation for fourteen years. Leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council having been obtained, it was contended on behalf of the appellants that the High Court had no jurisdiction to impose a sentence of transportation for fourteen years.

Section 304 (1) of the Penal Code authorises a sentence of "transportation for life or imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years"; and section 59, which applies to every case where an offender is punishable with imprisonment for a term of seven years or upwards authorises the Court which sentences such offender, instead of awarding sentence of imprisonment, to sentence the offender to transportation for a term not less than seven years and not exceeding the term for which by the Code he is liable to imprisonment. These provisions have been considered in several cases in India, and it has been uniformly held that, while they authorise a sentence of transportation for life, they do not empower a Court to impose a sentence of transportation for a term of years exceeding the maximum term for which a sentence of imprisonment can be imposed, namely, ten years. Their Lordships agree with these decisions, and it remains for them to consider what advice they should tender to His Majesty in the present case.

Their Lordships were invited by Counsel for the Crown to apply the rule which has been repeatedly laid down by the Board that, "His Majesty will not be advised to review or interfere with the course of criminal proceedings unless it is shown that by a disregard of the forms of legal process or by some violation of the principles of natural justice or otherwise substantial and grave injustice has been done" [Dillot, In re (4)] and to say that, as the offence in this case was grave, and the appellants might justly have been sentenced to transportation for life, the sentence of transportation for fourteen years, though irregular, should be allowed to stand. But it appears to their Lordships that as in this case the sentence is found not to be authorised by law they must hold that there has been substantial injustice, for the sentence may involve the incarceration of the appellants during many years without legal authority. Although the crime committed was, no doubt, of a very grave character, and it may be that the High Court, if the legal objection to a sentence of transportation for fourteen years had been brought to their notice, would have passed a life sentence, their Lordships cannot assume that this would have been done, and it is no part of their duty to consider whether a higher sentence than that actually passed should or might justly have been inflicted.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the case be remitted to the High Court of Judicature at Madras with instructions to pass a sentence according to law.

Case remitted.

PATNA HIGH COURT.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 965 OF 1918.

November 15, 1920.

Present:—Mr. Justice Das and Mr Justice Adami.

Babu RAM KRIPAL SINGH—DEFENDANT No. 1—APPELLANT

versus

HANUMAN SINGH AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS AND PANDIT SINGH AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS RESPONDENTS.

Riparian owners, rights of—Natural and artificial streams, difference between—Water spreading itself along fields and again running in definite channel, whether stream.

The rights of riparian owners to natural streams are somewhat different from their rights to water flowing through artificial water courses. The natural rights do not depend upon a grant or upon the ownership of the soil of the stream, but are jure naturæ incident to the ownership of the soil of the land abutting upon the stream. The rights to water flowing through artificial water courses are rights of easement, and must rest on some grant or arrangement, either proved or presumed from, or with the owners of the lands from which the water is artificially brought, or on some other legal origin. [p. 9 9, col. 2; p. 930, col. 1.]

The proper inference from the user of the water of a natural stream though flowing in an artificial channel is that the artificial channel had been originally constructed upon the terms that all the proprietors of lands situated on the artificial channel should have the same rights in regard to the use of the water as they would have had if the stream had been a natural one. [p. 940, col. 2.]

Where the channel of a stream continues as a definite water course up to a certain point, and then spreads along certain fields, but on emerging from those fields it again runs as a definite water course, the identity of the water is not destroyed and it remains the subject of riparian rights. [p. 930, col. 2; p. 931, col 1.]

JUDGMENT.

DAS, J.—The plaintiffs claim the right to irrigate their lands in Mouza Barunda Rampur by means of a natural water channel issuing out of a hill and running into the plaintiffs' Pokhar No. 1643, and seek to restrain the defendants from erecting bundhs at the places marked in the sketch map filed [with] the plaint so as to deprive the plaintiffs of the advantage of the flow of the water in their own lands. The Courts below have concurrently come to the conclusion that there is a defined water channel from the hill up to the Pokhar, except in two blocks of paddy fields referred to in the judgments of the Courts below, and have granted the plaintiffs a decree substantially as claimed by them. Upon this, two arguments have been advanced before us on behalf of the appellant: first, that the stream emptying itself in the plaintiffs' Pokhar is, on the allegations of the plaintiffs made in the plaint, only an artificial stream and that the plaintiffs have no right to the water in the natural stream which terminates in the defendants' lands, and does not flow by the plaintiffs' lands and, secondly, that the rights of riparian owners cannot be claimed by the plaintiffs since, on the findings of the Courts below, there is no defined water channel in the two blocks of paddy fields mentioned in the judgments.

I will deal with these objections in their order. The first objection is based on the allegations in the plaint. These allegations are, that there is a natural stream from the hill up to the Bundh No. 327, which, it may be stated, is situated in the defendants' lands; that the Bundh No. 327 was constructed at a time beyond living memory when the ownership of the lands, now belonging to the plaintiffs and the defendants, was in the same proprietors, and it was constructed so as to divert the water into a Pyne No. 322, that flowing into the Pyne No. 322, the stream passes through plots Nos. 253, 314, 305 and 306, when it is again diverted by Bundh No 301; that, being diverted by means of Bundh No. 301, it flows into Pyne No. 302 and, passing through plots Nos. 1702, 1634, and 1639, it empties itself in plaintiffs' Pokhar No. 1643. These are the allegations in the plaint, and the defendants argue that the plaintiffs cannot claim the natural rights of riparian owner in respect of the natural stream which came to an end at Bundh No. 327 and never passed the plaintiffs' lands. Now, it may be conceded at once that the rights of riparian owners to natural streams are somewhat different from their rights to water flowing through artificial water courses. The natural rights do not depend upon a grant or upon the ownership of the soil of the stream, but are jure naturæ incident to the ownership of the soil of the land abutting upon the stream. The rights to water flowing through artificial water courses are rights of easements, and must rest on some grant or arrangement, either proved or presumed, from, or with the owners of the lands from which the water is artificially brought, or on some other legal origin. The defendants say as follows to the plaintiffs: "On your own allegation in the plaint we are the owners of the lands abutting on the natural stream and you are not. It may be that you have acquired some right by easement to the use of such water as flows in the artificial stream running into your Pokhur, but how can you restrict us in the use of the water in the natural stream as to which you have no sort of right?"

Now, it seems to me that the fallacy in the whole argument is in assuming that the stream passing through the plaintiffs' land has a different entity from the stream up to the Bundh No. 327. The natural stream does not come to an end at Bundh No. 327, but is merely diverted to another direction by human agency. The stream may be and probably is an artificial stream as it empties itself in the plaintiffs' Pokhur, but the problem can only be solved, not by assigning a particular name to the stream, but by asking ourselves the question, what is the character of a stream, which in its inception is a natural stream and is afterwards diverted in a particular direction by artificial means? Does a natural stream, when it is diverted by the operation of man into an artificial channel, retain or change its original character? If it does retain its old character, then the plaintiffs must succeed in the action. If it changes its character, then, so far as the important relief in this action is concerned, they must fail.

Fortunately for me, the point is concluded by authorities. Sutcliffe v. Booth (1) seems to be the leading case on the subject. That was an action by one riparian proprietor against another for the pollution and diversion of a water course. The water course in question was undoubtedly artificial as it passed the plaintiffs' land, but it was in its origin a stream and probably a natural stream. On motion for new trial, it was held that it was a misdirection to tell the Jury that if the stream was artificial and made by the hand of man, the plaintiff had no cause of action. In Nuttall v. Bracewell (2) Channell, B., in dealing with the rights of the parties as regards a stream which was natural in its origin, but had been diverted by the hand of man into an artificial channel, said as follows:—

"I see no reason why the law applicable to ordinary running streams should not be applicable to such a stream as this, for it is a natural stream or flow of water, though flowing in an artificial channel. It may be that the case of an entirely artificial stream, as one flowing from a mine for instance, would be different; but that an artificial stream may be on the same footing as a natural one as regards the rights of riparian proprietors is held in Sutcliffe v. Booth (1)." To the same effect are Holker v. Positt (3) and Baily & Co. v. Clark (4) The law that I deduce from all these cases is that the proper inference from the user of the water of a natural stream though flowing in an artificial channel is that the artificial channel had been originally constructed upon the terms that all the proprietors of lands situated on the artificial channel should have the same rights in regard to the use of the water as they would have had if the stream had been a natural one. If that be so, then the plaintiffs, as riparian proprietors, have an undoubted right to have the water come to them without obstruction in its ordinary and accustomed course, undiminished in flow, quantity and quality. I would accordingly overrule the first objection urged on behalf of the appellants.

The second objection is equally without substance. Now, in order to dispose of this objection, it is necessary to remember that, on the facts found by the Courts below, the channel continued as a definite water course up to the paddy fields in question, that it spread itself along the fields, and that, emerging from the fields, it ran again as a definite water course until it emptied itself in the plaintiffs' Pokhur. It is not suggested that the stream exhausted itself as a stream in entering the paddy fields in question. It is not suggested that the water dispersed itself over the fields without a definite water course so as to be regarded as drainage and surface water. If, indeed, the water had no definite course after it emerged from the fields and its supply, so far as the plaintiffs are concerned, was merely casual, the defendants would be entitled to get rid of it in any way they chose. But that is not the case here. In my judgment, the identity of the water was not destroyed because it spread itself over the fields, but must be held to have been preserved on proof that on emerging from the fields, it ran in a definite course up to the plaintiffs' Pokhur That seems to be the effect of the decisions which were all considered in the learned judgment of the Madras High Court in Villuri Adinarayana v. Polimera Kimudu (5). In accordance with the decision of the Madras High Court in the case just cited, with which I entirely agree, I must overrule the contention advanced on behalf of the appellants.

I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT.

ORDINARY ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION

MATRIMONIAL SUIT No. 2927 OF 1919.

March 2, 1920.

Present:—Mr. Justice Marten.

DAISY AMELIA BORGONHA—PETITIONER

versus

WILFRED CHURCHILL BORGONHA—RESPONDENT.

Divorce Act (IV of 1869), s 3 (1)—Divorce, proceedings for—Parties residing within jurisdiction separately—Court, whether has jurisdiction to hear petition.

If both parties to a petition for divorce are resident within the jurisdiction of the Court at the time of the presentation of the petition, the Court has jurisdiction, under section 3 (1) of the Divorce Act, to hear the petition, notwithstanding that the parties are residing separately from each other. [p. 935, col. 1.]

Mr. Campbell, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—This is a wife's petition for divorce on the ground of her husband's adultery, cruelty and desertion.

The case is undefended but raises a question of some importance, viz, whether this Court has jurisdiction to hear a petition where the parties last resided together outside the jurisdiction, but at the date of the petition are residing within the jurisdiction separately and not together. This depends on the directions given in section 3 (1) of the Indian Divorce Act, No. IV of 1869, as to which High Court petitions under that Act are to be presented.

The point was not raised until after the bulk of the evidence had been taken. I will accordingly deal with the matter in the same order, and state the facts first.

The parties are domiciled Anglo Indian Christians of the Protestant faith. They were married at Agra on the 31st of October 1898. They resided at various places after their marriage and finally at Muttra, which was the last place where the parties resided together. That place is outside the jurisdiction of this Court under the Indian Divorce Act. There is one child of the marriage—a daughter now aged 13, and she is and has for many years past been maintained by the petitioner.

The respondent deserted the petitioner about 1907, and thereupon the petitioner went to live at Agra with her parents taking the child with her. For a time she lost all trace of her husband. In 1911 she took legal advice at Lucknow, and also asked the Police to trace her husband's whereabouts. In the course of that year she received information that he was at Mysore, and later on, that he had left Mysore and gone to Madras. In 1913 the petitioner met her husband at Lucknow. He then requested her to return to him and promised to reform certain habits of his. The petitioner replied that he had so often broken his promises that she could not rely on his word, but that if he did come and reform she would consider the proposal. He did not, however, come to Lucknow and she heard nothing more of him till 1918.

BORGONHA v. BORGONHA.

In June 1919, the petitioner obtained employment in Bombay and took up her residence there, which she has continued up to the present date. She then ascertained that her husband had found employment in Bombay since 1915, first at the Military Hospital, Colaba, and subsequently on the R. I. M. SS. Investigator. The copy official records of the Indian Subordinate Medical Department (Exhibits J-1 and J 2) to which the respondent belongs, show that though in 1907 the respondent admitted the existence of his wife and child, he suppressed that fact in 1916 and posed as a single man. This is quite in keeping with what he appears to have done in 1911 judging from the letter, Exhibit E, which the petitioner received, viz, pretending his wife was dead and paying attentions to a girl in Madras on the footing that he was free to marry. As the result of enquiries at the R. I. M. Dockyard, the petitioner found that her husband had gone on leave to Bangalore to stay with his mother. She accordingly went there after him in August 1919, and had an interview with him. At that interview the husband lost his temper and struck the petitioner and also abused her. Police Court proceedings followed in which the charge of assault was compounded, the husband apologized and an order for maintenance was made. In fact, the husband only paid one sum of Rs. 75 for maintenance and has paid nothing since.

Later on, the petitioner obtained certain imformation as to her husband's adultery and on that information this petition was filed on the 25th September 1919. Subsequently, on further information, the petition was amended and re-sworn on the 20th October 1919. The original petition was served on the respondent on the 4th October 1919 on board the Investigator in Bombay Harbour. The amendments in the petition were served on the respondent on the 22nd October 1919 in Esplanade Road, Bombay.

As regards the charges of adultery on Board the Investigator while in Dry Dock in Bombay in August 1917, and also on shore at Karachi in 1918, I am quite satisfied that both these charges are made out. It is unnecessary for me to go into any details, but as regards the latter charge, I think, it reasonably clear that the Madrassi woman, Maryammal, staying with the respondent at Karachi is the same person as Maryammal, the writer of the Tamil post card (Exhibit H), dated the 15th August 1919, and addressed to the respondent at the Government Dockyard, Bombay, which the petitioner saw on making enquiries there. I am also of opinion that the charge of desertion is made out. Farther, I think that the evidence is sufficient to establish the charge of cruelty.

The delay in taking the proceedings is, I think, explained, and I am satisfied that there is nothing before me to lead one to suppose that there is anything in the nature of connivance or collusion in the case.

As regards the evidence, I may state generally that the petitioner impressed me favourably on both occasions when she was in the witness-box, and that I see no reason to doubt her evidence or that of the other witnesses.

That brings me to the point of jurisdiction which I have referred to. That depends on the true construction of the following words in section 3, viz, (1), "In this Act, unless there be something repugnant in the subject or context . . . . . In the case of any petition under this Act, 'High Court' is that one of the aforesaid Courts within the local limits of whose ordinary appellate jurisdiction, or of whose jurisdiction under this Act, the husband and wife reside or last resided together."

What then is the meaning of the concluding sentence? Does the word 'together" govern the word "reside" as well as the words "last resided," or does it only govern the words "last resided?" If, for instance, the concluding sentence was written out in full, ought it to run "..... within... ...whose jurisdiction.....the husband and wife reside together or last resided together" or should it run ".....within.....whose .....jurisdiction,.....the husband and wife reside, or the husband and wife last resided together."

Now, I think one very cogent reason for not making the word "together" govern the word "reside" is that one can hardly imagine any case in which the husband and wife would be residing together at the date of the presentation of a divorce petition. For one thing, to do so would almost inevitably raise the strongest suspicion of collusion or connivance, and lead to the petition being dismissed. For instance, a wife's petition must depend on adultery plus either desertion or cruelty. Obviously, in no petition founded on desertion could the parties be living together at the date of the petition. And it is difficult to imagine any case in which a wife who is charging her husband with adultery and cruelty, would still be residing with him. On the other hand, it would be quite natural, I think, for the Legislature to found a jurisdiction on the presence within the jurisdiction of both parties at the date of the presentation of the petition. Prima facie, this would be the most convenient forum to try the case.

It is true that an alternative is given. But one can well understand the Legislature giving a petitioner the alternative of bringing the suit within the jurisdiction of the last matrimonial residence, and that the Legislature should in effect select this as the sole jurisdiction in cases where at the date of the petition both parties were not residing within the same jurisdiction.

Looking at the sentence from a purely grammatical point of view, I think it by no means follows that the word "together" governs "reside." If the printer had put a comma after the word "reside," it would, I take it, be clear that "together" would not govern "reside." But whether or no there is a comma in the original Act, I do not propose to let my decision depend on the punctuation which the printer thought fit to adopt.

The authorities on the point seem very meagre. Despite an adjournment, Counsel has only been able to produce two cases really in point. These cases differ in their conclusions and are decisions not on section 3 (1), but on similar directions in section 3 (3) with reference to District Courts.

The first is Nush Durand Rebecca v. Durand (1), a decision in 1870 by a Bench of three Judges in Calcutta, confirming a decree of the Recorder of Rangoon, which dissolved a marriage on the husband's petition. As the Act then stood the Recorder of Rangoon was the "District Judge" in Pegu within the meaning of section 3 (2) and (3). There, at the date of the petition, the husband and wife were both living in Pegu, but in different parts of Pegu. There is nothing whatever in the report to show that the parties last resided together within the jurisdiction of the Rangoon Court. On the contrary, the only matrimonial residence mentioned in the report is Madras. The judgment states at the outset the separate residences in Pegu at the date of the petition, and next states that the case is a very clear one. Then, after setting out certain other facts, the learned Judges say that the jurisdiction is clear from the record, but the Recorder ought to have stated in his judgment the facts on which that jurisdiction was founded. The learned Judges do not specifically mention the point I have to decide, but it is clear that their attention was expressly drawn to the question of jurisdiction, and that they thought the Court had jurisdiction in that case. This decision must, I think, have been based on the separate residences within the jurisdiction at the date of petition. Otherwise, the learned Judges would have committed the very fault which they attributed to the Recorder, viz., not stating the facts on which the jurisdiction rested. In my opinion, the case is an authority in favour of the present petitioner.

The other case is one in 1892 on the appellate side of this Court where, by a majority of two to one, the Court held that the word "together" governs the word "reside" in section 3 (3). They accordingly reversed a decree for dissolution of a marriage which had been passed by a Mofussil Court. The case is Sarah Xavier v. Samuel Francis Xavier (2). There Mr. Justice Birdwood and Mr. Justice Telang held that there was no jurisdiction to hear the petition, but Mr. Justice Jardine thought there was. The facts were that at the date of the petition the husband was in jail at Nagpur, and the parties last cohabited at Bhusawal, which is outside the jurisdiction of the Nagpur Court. Curiously enough, Mr. Justice Telang is the only Judge who mentions the extreme improbability of the parties residing together at the date of the petition, and even he only refers to the case of desertion. He says: "But the living together seems to me to be the important matter. I presume the words about 'last residence' were introduced to meet such cases, for instance, as where the husband, having deserted the wife, there is no jurisdiction possible based on a present residence together; while it may be assumed that husband and wife must have lived together somewhere after marriage, and the jurisdiction would in such a case, therefore, go under the word 'last resided' to the Court of the place where such living took place. I think this is what was intended, and I do not see any such serious inconvenience resulting from this construction as to lead one to suppose that it cannot have been intended."

(1) 14 W. R. 416.

If it had been really present to the minds of the learned Judges that the Legislature could never have contemplated the parties living together at the date of the petition, I do not think Mr. Justice Telang and Mr. Justice Birdwood would have arrived at the conclusion they did. It may be that the Court did not have the advantage of any argument from Counsel, or had only an imperfect argument: and this would seem to be borne out by the fact that Nash Durand v. Rebecca Durand (1) was not mentioned by the Court, while, on the other hand, the case of Wingrove v. Wingrove (3) on the next page was relied on by Mr. Justice Jardine. Wingrove v. Wingrove (3) is, however, clearly distinguishable, for, as is pointed out by Mr. Justice Birdwood, one of the parties there was living outside the jurisdiction at the date of the petition. The only jurisdiction available, therefore, was that of the "last residence together."

As regards the question of inconvenience referred to by Mr. Justice Telang, if the Bombay jurisdiction is not available in the present case, the parties and their witnesses would have to travel over 800 miles from Bombay to get their suit decided.

There are two other cases from Calcutta which have been cited to me. Both of these are decisions of Mr. Justice Fletcher, viz., Fright v. Bright (4) and Francesco Giordano v. Flora Giordano (5). Neither case deals expressly with the point before me, and the actual decisions are irrelevant. The latter case would, however, be relevant, if Shillong in Assam was outside the jurisdiction of the Calcutta High Court at the date of the presentation of the petition in 1912. There the parties last cohabited at Shillong but at the date of the petition were living in Calcutta in separate residences. The report does not show on which particular branch of section 3 the Court was relying for its jurisdiction, and as Shillong appears to be in a Native State, I do not think it would be safe to rely on this case without further enquiry as to the facts and jurisdiction. If, however, Shillong was then outside the jurisdiction, then the case would be an additional authority in favour of the petitioner.

As regards the practice of this Court, I have made enquiries from my brother Kajiji, who was Prothonotary for many years, and also from the present Prothonotary, Mr. Malabari. They are both of opinion that the practice of this Court has been to accept as sufficient foundation for the jurisdiction a residence of both parties within the jurisdiction at the time of the filing of the petition. They have further been good enough to assist me by looking up the records of recent matrimonial cases in this Court. These records certainly tend to show that in some petitions the draftsmen were relying for the jurisdiction on present separate residences within the jurisdiction. But for the moment, no case clearly on all fours with the present one has been found. I may, however, add that the present petition was admitted by the then Acting Prothonotary, Mr. Patel, and that an order for alimony under it was made by my brother Pratt on the 14th November 1919, and that the experienced Counsel who settled the petition and appeared at the hearing was evidently of opinion that the jurisdiction was clear.

I have considered whether it would not be proper for me either to report the case to my Lord, the Chief Justice, under rule 63 of our High Court Rules for hearing by a Bench of two or more Judges, or, alternatively, to dismiss the petition having regard to Sarah Xavier v. Samuel Francis Xavier (2), so that the question of jurisdiction might be determined by an Appellate Court. But as there is a conflict of authority, I think, I am entitled, with very great respect to the learned Judges in Sarah Xavier v. Samuel Francis Xavier (2), to act on my own opinion of the Act, and none the less so because the parties can hardly be in a financial position to stand the expense of further litigation.

The conclusion, therefore, which I have arrived at is that if both parties are resident within the jurisdiction at the time of the presentation of the petition, this Court has jurisdiction to hear it under the Indian Divorce Act notwithstanding that the parties were then residing separately from each other.

That brings me to the last question of fact, viz., whether the parties were then resident within the jurisdiction. It is clear that the petitioner was so resident. She was then engaged in a business establishment in this City and had been so for several months. Her residence, therefore, was "bona fide" and not casual or as "a traveller" [See Nusserwanji Pestonji Wadia v. Eleonora Wadia (6)].

As regards the respondent, his case requires more consideration. But I think I may fairly hold on the evidence that his residence also was in Bombay. It appears that during 1917-1919 he was lent by the War Hospital authorities at Colaba to the R. I. M. SS. Investigator which was engaged in mine sweeping during part of that time, and that the home port of the Investigator was Bombay. It appears also that on the 4th October 1919, when the petition was served on him, he wrote to the Prothonotary giving the address "SS. 'Investigator,' Bombay." (See Exhibit K.). The post card from the Madrassee woman (Exhibit H.) is also addressed to him at Bombay. The amendments in the petition were served on him in the streets of Bombay and the official statement (Exhibit L) shows that on the very next day he reverted to his military service at Colaba. The petitioner saw him at Colaba Hospital on duty there only a few days ago, and I think the fair inference is that he has been there ever since October 1919. For these reasons, I think I may hold, as I do, that he was residing in Bombay within the jurisdiction of this Court at the date of the petition and the amendment thereof.

Mr. Campbell did submit an alternative argument to me based on certain observations of Sir Basil Scott in Nusserwanji Pestonji Wadia v. Eleconora Wadia (6), which I confess, I have some difficulty in understanding. The argument was that the High Court preserved its divorce jurisdiction under section 35 of the Letters Patent, quite irrespective of the Divorce Act, and that, therefore, I was in a position to deal with this matter under the Letters Patent irrespective of the Divorce Act. I, however, pointed out to Counsel that this argument appeared to be in flat contradiction of section 4 of the Divorce Act, which provides that, "the jurisdiction now exercised by the High Courts in respect of divorce a mensa et toro, and in all other causes, suits and matters matrimonial, shall be exercised by such Courts and by the District Courts subject to the provisions in this Act contained, and not otherwise." Further, section 45 of the Divorce Act, which embodies the Civil Procedure Code, is expressly made "subject to the provisions herein contained." One cannot, therefore, rely on section 20 (formerly section 17) of the Civil Procedure Code as if section 3 of the Divorce Act did not apply here. Under these circumstances, Counsel did not pursue this line of argument. Under section 3 the parties here could clearly go to the Court having jurisdiction where the parties last resided together. I have not, therefore, a case to deal with where there never was any matrimonial residence, e.g., if the parties had separated at the Church door and never lived together. I say nothing as to the jurisdiction in any exceptional case such as that.

In the result, I pronounce a decree nisi for dissolution of the marriage. I give the custody of the child to the petitioner and direct the respondent to pay the costs of the petitioner. Any application for alimony may be left to be dealt with in Chambers.

I wish to add that I think it would be convenient if all divorce petitions contained a definite statement as to the jurisdiction relied on. This is very frequently done already, but it was omitted in the present case.

Decree accordingly.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXII, rr. 3, 4—Guardian ad litem, appointment of—Notice to minor, failure to give, effect of—Minor, wishes of, how far to be regarded—Mother and grandmother, right of.

An order appointing a guardian ad litem of a minor defendant without giving notice to the minor as required by clause 4) of rule 3 of Order XXXII, of the Civil Procedure Code is without jurisdiction and is liable to be set aside. [p 936, col 2.]

In appointing a guardian ad litem for a minor defendant it is desirable, if possible, that the Court should consider the wishes of the minor as to the person who should be appointed. Unless there is any valid reason for refusing to appoint either the mother or the grandmother of a minor defendant as his guardian ad litem, the mere fact that she is a parda-nashin lady is not in itself a sufficient ground for rejecting her claims [p. 937, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Gaya, dated the 19th March 1920.

Mr. N. K. Prasad, II, for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—This is an application in revision against an order of the Subordinate Judge of Gaya, dated the 19th March 1920, appointing Babu Gobind Prasad, a Pleader, as guardian ad litem of the minor defendandts Nos. 5 and 6 in the suit. The petition is filed on behalf of defendants Nos. 5 and 6, who were originally represented by their mother as guardian, but subsequently to the institution of the suit their mother died and they now complain that the appointment of Babu Gobind Prasad made on the 19th March was without jurisdiction on the ground that no notice of the application for the appointment of the guardian was served upon them in accordance with the provisions of Order XXXII, rule 3, clause (4) of the Civil Procedure Code. It appears that Babu Gobind Prasad was appointed by the learned Subordinate Judge upon an application made by the plaintiff and no notice of that application was served upon the minors or upon the guardian whom it was proposed to appoint. Subsequently, a petition was filed on behalf of the minor defendants asking for the appointment of their grandmother as guardian ad litem and objecting to the appointment of Babu Gobind Prasad which had been made without any notice being served upon them. The learned Subordinate Judge after hearing that objection refused it and the main reason apparently for his refusal was that he was not in favour of appointing a parda nashin lady. Before the Civil Procedure Code of 1908 came into force there was no provision corresponding to that which now appears as Order XXXII, rule 3, clause (4), and that rule was no doubt introduced into the Code of 1908 largely in consequence of the decision of the Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Suresh Chunder Wum Chowdhry v. Jagut Chunder Deb (1), in which two of the learned Judges who composed the Court on that occasion expressed the opinion that no order appointing a guardain ad litem for an infant defendant on the application of the plaintiff should be made ex parte and that no such order should be made until the Court is satisfied that the infant has been duly served and there has been an opportunity for making an application on behalf of the infant. Although the order appointing a guardian was not set aside in that case, still at that time there was no express provision of law in the Civil Procedure Code requiring that notice of such an application should served upon a minor. Under the present law, however, matters stand differently and by the express provision of Order XXXII, rule 3, clause (4), both the minor and his guardian must be served with notice before any order can be made on an application under that rule. It seems to me that in the present case the order made by the learned Judge was without jurisdiction and that his order, dated the 19th March, should be set aside as the minor was not served with notice and had no opportunity of appearing through a Pleader or that court in order to express his views and wishes as to the apppointment of a guardian.

We have been asked to say that the reasons given by the learned subordinate Judge for refusing to appoint the grand-mother of the minors as their guardian when an application was subsequently made by them on the 23rd March are not valid reasons but the order made on that occasion is not at present the subject of revision before the Court. At the same time, we think it desirable to point out to the learned Judge that, in appointing a guardian for a minor, it is desirable if possible that he should consider the wishes of the minor as to the person who should be appointed. It was stated by Mr Justice Straight in the case of Jwala Dei v. Pirbhu (2) that in his opinion in a proceeding of this kind the Court having to deal with it would be bound by the wish expressed by a minor unless it saw that the guardian he asked to be appointed was an undesirable and unsuitable person, I wish to guard myself from saying that in all cases the wishes of the minor should be taken as conclusive by the Court which has to decide the appointment of a guardian but, at the same time, it is obvious that the wishes of the minor, if it can be shown that the guardian whom he wishes to have appointed is a suitable person, is a matter which ought to carry considerable weight in the mind of the Court. I may further point out that the objection of the learned Subordinate Judge to appoint the paternal grand mother of the minor merely on the ground that she was a parda-noshin lady is hardly one which can be supported having regard to the usual practice in this country. It is well known that the mother of the minor is more frequently than not, in the absence of any more suitable person, appointed a guardian and the paternal grand-mother has also a strong claim in the absence of a mother to be so appointed. Indeed, in the case of Maharanee Ram Buntee Koonwaree v. Maharanee Soobh Koonwaree (3) it was pointed out by the Court that the paternal grand-mother with the assent of the nearest male kinsman on the father's side has (in preference to the step-mother) the right to dispose of a minor in marriage and that, according to Hindu Law, a paternal grand mother has a preferential right over a step-mother to the guardianship of the minor. That case, it is true, was a case dealing with the guardianship of the person of the minor but unless there is any valid reason for refusing to appoint either the mother or the grand-mother it seems to me that the mere fact that she is a parda nashin lady is not in itself a sufficient ground for rejecting entirely her claims. We set aside the order of the 19th March 1920 appointing Babu Goband Prasad, with the result that it will be necessary for the plaintiff again to make an application for the appointment of a guardian ad litem for the infant defendants and before any appointment can be made notice of that application must be served upon the minors so that they may appear and state their desires in the matter and argue the matter if necessary before the learned Subordinate Judge. The costs of this application will be costs in the suit. We assess the hearing fee at one gold mohur.

Ross, J.—I agree.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 5—Sufficient cause—Mistake of Counsel's clerk—Letters Patent Appeal—Court, power of, to go behind order of Judge

Owing to a bona fide mistake by Counsel's clerk in calculating the time within which to file a second appeal, the appeal was filed four days out of time and was rejected as time-barred. In Letters Patent Appeal against the order of rejection:

Held, that the mistake amounted to sufficient cause within the meaning of section 5 of the Limitation Act, and that the Court had power to go behind the order of rejection and extend the period of limitation.

Appeal under section 10 of the Letters Patent from a judgment of Mr. Justice Tudball, dated the 8th August 1917.

The Hon'ble Mr. M. Nehru, for the Appellants.

Mr. G. P. Gupta, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of the following circumstances. A suit for pre-emption was brought in the Court of the Munsif of Bansi on the allegations that, (1) the custom of pre-emption prevailed in the village, and (2) the consideration had been exaggerated. The defence was that there was no such custom and that the consideration was as given in the sale-deed. The learned Munsif found for the plaintiff and gave him a decree on the basis that the consideration for sale was Rs. 1,181-4-0. From this judgment and decree there were two appeals, one by the vendee in which he contested the issue of custom and the other, a cross appeal by the plaintiff as to the real amount of consideration. The learned Subordinate Judge dismissed the vendee's appeal but held that the consideration which passed was really Rs. 800. The defendant appealed to this Court, and as two decrees had been passed by the learned Subordinate Judge he had to file two appeals in this Court. Appeal No. 1102 of 1917 was from the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge in which he held that the custom of pre emption had been proved, namely, Appeal No. 162. Along with that appeal was filed another appeal against the decree of the Court below in Appeal No. 191 on the same date. In that appeal the issue raised was the amount of consideration. A learned Judge of this Court admitted Appeal No. 1102 from the Appellate Court's decree in Appeal No. 162 of 1917, it being within time but he held that the other appeal against the appellate decree in Appeal No. 191 of 19 7 was beyond time, and that there was nothing in the affidavit filed along with the memorandum of appeal which disclosed any ground for admitting it out of time, and he consequently rejected that appeal. We have read the affidavit which has been filed in the case and it satisfies us that the clerk of the learned Advocate who was engaged to file these appeals made a mistake in calculating the time within which he had to file the appeal. The mistake arose from the fact that, in the first instance, he was provided only with one certified copy of the judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge. He not unreasonably assumed that the time required for obtaining one copy would be the same as that required for obtaining the second copy. However, on the 7th of August 1917, on checking the second certified copy he found that four days less had been required for obtaining that copy than the first. The consequence was that the second appeal was four days beyond time. This was no fault of the appellant. It seems to us that we have the power to go behind the order of the learned Judge of this Court if we think, on the whole, that it would be reasonable to do so. The case of Kura Mal v. Ram Nath (1) is precisely in point. We may add that our action will only result in saving possible future litigation because we find, as a matter of fact, that Second Appeal No. 1102 of 1917 of this Court has been decreed and it was held in that appeal that the custom of pre emption did not prevail in the village with the result that the plaintiff's suit stood dismissed with costs. If this order stands, we have this anomalous position that there is still outstanding a judgment of the Subordinate Judge which decrees the plaintiff's suit for pre-emption on payment of Rs. 800. On the whole we think we are justified in holding that there was sufficient cause to extend the period of limitation under section 5 of the Indian Limitation Act. We, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the order of the learned Judge of this Court, and direct that the appeal be admitted, and notice will go returnable before the Special Bench dealing with pre emption cases. We make no order as to costs as this appeal has been heard ex parte.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, rr. 1, 3—Abatement of suit—Suit, whether can abate after decree—Personal right, suit based on, effect of.

A suit which has terminated in a decree cannot abate by reason of the death of the plaintiff after the passing of the decree.

Even in cases of personal right, such as a claim for damages, the maxim actio personalis moritur cum persona does not apply after a decree is passed, inasmuch as a decree is property capable of inheritance as any other property.

Appeal from a decision of the Additional Sub-Judge, Mozuffarpore, dated the 12th July 1919, setting aside the decision of the Second Munsif.

Messrs. Kulwant Sahay and Harnarayan Prasad, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Parmeshwar Dayal and Bhagwan Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The appeal must be decreed. The Court below decreed the appeal and dismissed the suit upon the ground that the plaintiff died before the appeal was filed. The plaintiff obtained a decree from the Munsif on the 3rd October 19 8 for a declaration that the kobala executed by his father, defendant No. 4, in favour of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in the name of defendant No. 3, was invalid and not binding upon him, and for confirmation of possession. The decree of the Munsif confirmed the possession of the plaintiff along with his father, defendant No. 4.

The defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3, therefore, appealed, and as the plaintiff had died before the appeal was filed, the defendant No. 4, his legal representative, was made respondent. The learned Additional Judge decreed the appeal simply upon the ground that the suit had abated. The ground stated by him is that the right to sue was personal to the deceased plaintiff, Babu Ram Sahu, and upon his death there was no one to continue the suit. In this he is clearly wrong. The suit related to property and the father of the deceased plaintiff was his legal representative.

In the second place, the suit having terminated in a decree could not abate. Order XXII, relating to abatement, applies only before the suit terminates in a decree. The case relied upon by the learned Judge: Padarath Singh v. Raja Ram (1) was overruled by a Full Bench of the same Court in Muhammad Husain v. Khushalo (2). On the same point may be referred the cases of Gopal Ganesh Abhyankar v Ramchandra Sadashiv (3), Paramen Chetty v. Sundararaja Naick (4) and Josiam Thiruvengadachariar v. Sowmi Iyengar (5).

Even in cases of personal right, such as claim for damages, the principle actio personalis moritur cum persona does not apply after the decree is passed inasmuch as, in my view, the decree is a valuable property and is capable of inheritance as any other property.

The judgment of the Court below is set aside. The case is sent back to the learned Judge for deciding the appeal on merits. The appellant is entitled to costs.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Rawalpindi, dated the 26th February 1920, reversing that of the Extra Junior Subordinate Judge, Rawalpindi, dated the 1st June 1918.

Messrs. Dev Raj Sawhney and M. S. Bhagat, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sheo Narain, R. B., and Mr. Labh Singh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this appeal arises was one for pre-emption of a house sold to Sain Ditta by Musammat Nur Bano and Karim Bakhsh on the 15th January 1917. Atma Singh, plaintiff appellant, sued for pre-emption on the ground that his house was contiguous to the property sold and also that he was a co-sharer in it under section 16, (fifthly) and (sixthly) of the Punjab Pre emption Act. One day prior to the institution of the suit the vendee re sold the house to Hem Raj, the contesting defendant respondent, who claimed to be a co sharer in another house which was contiguous to the one sold and who also claimed that he had a right under section 16, (fifthly) of the Punjab Pre emption Act. The first Court found that the plaintiff had a right of pre-emption under section 16, (sixthly), but not under section 16 (fifthly). It also held that Hem Raj was not a co-sharer in the other contiguous house in which he claimed to have a share and that, therefore, he had no right of pre-emption. It accordingly decreed the plaintiff's claim. The lower Appellate Court remanded the case for further enquiry into the following points :—

1. "Is Hem Raj, the vendee, an owner in the house contiguous to the one in suit? O. P. on defendant-vendee, Hem Raj.

2. "Have the owners of the house alleged to be the property of the vendee an easement by prescription or grant as regards the wall separating their house from the house in suit? O. P. on defendant-vendee, Hem Raj."

The Tial Court's findings on these issues were, (1) that Hem Raj had no share in the house in question, and (2) that the rafters of that house were on the wall of the house in dispute and that the owner of the house had an easement. The lower Appellate Court, differing from the Trial Court, held that Hem Raj was a co-sharer in the adjacent house and that neither of the claimants had any right under section 16 (fifthly) of the Punjab Pre-emption Act. On these findings he dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The plaintiff has filed a second appeal in this Court. Hem Raj is one of four brothers who, according to him, constitute a joint Hindu family. Hari Shah, in whose name the house in which Hem Raj claims to be a co-sharer was bought, has died and has been succeeded by his sons. The first point urged on behalf of the appellant is that, though the lower Appellate Court laid the onus of proof upon Hem Raj, it appears, however, when writing its judgment, to have considered that the onus was really upon the other side. The onus was certainly laid by the Court upon Hem Raj, but it appears to me that it considered that the onus was shifted by the evidence of the other members of the family who had admitted that Hem Raj had a share in the house. It is also pointed out by Counsel for the appellant that the learned District Judge has not come to a clear finding as to whether Hem Raj is a co-sharer in the house or not. The finding certainly is not a very clear one, because what the Judge says is that there is a probability that Hem Raj is a co-sharer in the house and that the presumption should be against Hari Shah's separate ownership. At the same time, it is quite clear from his decision that he considered it proved that Hem Raj was a co-sharer in the house, because if he had not been of this opinion he would have maintained the decree in favour of the plaintiff. It is an undoubted fact that upon Hari Shah's death the proprietary land together with the mortgagee's rights in land standing in his name were mutated in favour of his surviving brothers and his own sons in equal shares. That would in itself have been very strong evidence in support of the contention that the family was a joint and undivided one. Having regard to this mutation, there is also a strong presumption that the house which Hari Shah purchased in his own name was purchased on behalf of the joint family and that all the members thereof are co sharers in it. The finding of the District Judge that Hem Raj is a co sharer in the house is one of fact which is borne out by the evidence on the record and which cannot be contested in second appeal.

As regards easement, the plaintiff claimed various kinds of easement all of which are set forth in detail in the judgment of the Trial Court. The only one dealt with in the lower Appellate Court's judgment is the easement founded upon the fact that the house has a joint wall with the house sold. The existence of a joint wall is not, however, an easement. In the grounds of appeal to this Court there is no specific allegation to the effect that the plaintiff has a superior right under section 16 (fifthly) of the Pre-emption Act, but Counsel for the appellant refers to ground No 6 in which it is stated that the lower Appellate Court has not disposed of all the objections raised by the plaintiff appellant to the report of the Subordinate Judge. In this connection he refers to the third objection, viz., that the lower Court did not mention in its judgment the various easements as to the joint staircase, the joint wall and rafters and the discharge of water which the house in dispute and the plaintiff's house had on each other. There was no issue remanded by the lower Appellate Court in regard to these easements and there was nothing about them in the report of the Trial Court, and this objection was, therefore, quite irrelevant and there was no necessity for the lower Appellate Court to dispose of it. Besides, it is clear that the owners of the house having a joint wall can use that joint wall in any reasonable manner and by such user they do not acquire any right of easement therein.

In my opinion it cannot be said that the decision of the lower Appellate Court is in any way contrary to law and I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Benares, dated the 16th of July 1917.

Messrs M. L. Agarwala and H. K. Mukerjee, for the Appellants.

Mr Nehal Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The circumstances under which the present appeal has arisen are as follows:—The plaintiff is the proprietor of a firm of bone dealers in Benares called Abdul Hamid and Sons. The defendants carry on a business in bones which goes by the name of Bengal Bone Mills in Calcutta. It appears that there had been dealings between the parties for some years; and in January 1913, according to the plaintiff, Rs. 1,654 were due to the plaintiff from the defendants' firm. The defendants had also dealings in bone with the Muslim Bone Company, Limited, of Benares. The plaintiff's father was the Manager of this Company and after his death the plaintiff was elected the Manager of the Company. The plaintiff's allegation is that his firm, Abdul Hamid and Sons, had nothing whatever to do with the Muslim Bone Company, Limited, yet the defendants debited the plaintiff with a sum of Rs. 1,497-7-6 alleged to have been due to the defendants from the aforesaid Company and deducting the amount from Rs. 1,654 due to the plaintiff, sent him Rs. 156-8 6 in payment of his claim on the 17th of January 1913. The defendants had no justification for doing so and hence the plaintiff's claim for Rs. 1,497-7-6 with interest by way of damages. The present suit was instituted on the 14th of January 1916. The only pleas in defence with which we are concerned in this appeal are, (1) that the plaintiff was only an agent of the Muslim Bone Company and supplied their goods to the appellants and, therefore, nothing was due to him, and (2) that the suit was barred by limitation. The first Court came to the conclusion that the bones were really sent by the plaintiff as the Manager of the Muslim Bone Company and not as a representative of a distinct firm known by the name of Abdul Hamid and Sons and consequently the defendants very rightly debited the plaintiff with the amount due to them from the Company. On the second plea it came to the conclusion that the items claimed are up to the 13th January 1913, that "no payment had been made by the defendants acknowledging their liability to the plaintiff within the period of three years under section 19 of Act IX of 1908, the suit is barred by the three years' limitation."

It further held that the payment of Rs. 156-8-6 did not amount to an acknowledgment under section 19 of Act IX of 1908 and, therefore, the suit was barred by time. It accordingly dismissed the suit. On appeal, by the plaintiff, the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court came to the conclusion that the two firms Abdul Hamid and Sons and the Muslim Bone Company, Limited, were separate and "the defendants had no power to dictate to Abdul Hamid and Sons and tell them that they were the same thing as Muslim Bone Company, Limited." He does not seem to have considered the question of limitation of any importance. In the result he decreed the plaintiff's claim. The defendants come here in second appeal. The question of agency was not seriously pressed and in fact could not be so pressed having regard to the distinct finding of the lower Appellate Court mentioned above. The point of limitation, however, has been strenuously argued by the learned Counsel and the learned Vakil respectively who appeared on behalf of the parties. It was contended that the letter of the 17th January 1913 forwarding Rs. 156 8 6 to the plaintiff in full satisfaction of the amount due to them did not amount either to an acknowledgment of a right under section 19 of the Limitation Act, nor did it amount to a part-payment of the principal within the meaning of section 20 of the said Act and could not, therefore, operate to give a fresh start to the period of limitation which had, at the latest, commenced to run on the 13th of January 1913 when the last item was received. If this contention of the defendants is correct, it is quite clear that the present suit is barred by limitation.

We have examined the letter sent by the defendants to the plaintiff and the memorandum of account enclosed therein, and we find that the account clearly shows that on the 17th of January 1913, Rs. 1,654 were, as a matter of fact, due to the plaintiff on that date, and the defendants squared the account on that date by debiting the plaintiff's account with the sum of Rs. 1,497-7 6 due to the defendants from the Muslim Bone Company, Limited and remitting the balance of Rs. 156 8-6 to the defendants. It is not disputed that the letter and the accounts were signed by the defendants and sent to the plaintiff. It is true that the defendants do not in express terms admit that they are liable to pay any further amount to the plaintiff; but nonethe-less the account clearly shows that on that particular date, namely, 17th January 1913, Rs. 1,654 were due to the plaintiff. The mere fact that the defendants in the same account say that they have on that day appropriated a part of the amount due towards satisfaction of a claim due to them from a third party and have remitted the balance to the plaintiff, does not alter the fact that on that day Rs. 1,654 were, as a matter of fact, due to the plaintiff before the alleged appropriation was made. This is, in our opinion, an acknowledgment of right within the meaning of section 19 of the Limitation Act. From another point of view also this suit is clearly within time. Rs. 156 8 6 were sent to the plaintiff by the defendants on that day under the covering letter mentioned above. No interest was payable to the plaintiff from the defendants on that day so that no question of any payment of interest arises in this connection. The payment of Rs. 156 8-6 aforesaid could be and was, as a matter of fact, in payment of the principal sum due. It has, however, been contended on behalf of the defendants-appellants that the endorsement of part-payment of principal must appear in the handwriting of the debtor under section 20 of the Limitation Act, that is to say, that the writing must show that the payment is made in part payment of the principal or to it, in other words, the same conditions attach to the part-payment of principal which have been expressly laid down in case of payment of interest. To put it in short, the words "as such" should be read into the latter portion of sub-section (1) of the section. In our opinion this contention is not sound. What the section provides is that "in the case of part-payment of the principal of a debt the fact of the payment appears in the handwriting of the person making the same." The law does not require that the entry should contain the words "part-payment of the principal." It is "the fact of the payment" which should appear in the handwriting of the person making the same. This is so in the present case, as a reference to the letter, dated the 17th of January 1913 and the account sent along with it would show. This view of ours is supported by the case of Ambrose Summers, In the matter of (1) with which we are in full accord. See also the case of Sakharam Manchand v. Keval Padamsi (2). We are, therefore, of opinion that from no point of view the present suit is barred by time. The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale. Nothing has been said to us on any of the remaining grounds taken in appeal nor have the respondents addressed any arguments to us in support of their cross-objection. We, therefore, dismiss it with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), ss. 4, 15, 16—Amending Act of 1914—Promissory-note executed before Amending Act to payees in alternative, validity of—Acknowledgment of payment under promissory-note signed by one payee—Endorsement—Transfer of actionable claim—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 130.

A promissory-note executed before the passing of Act V of 1914 and made payable to payees in the alternative is not a negotiable instrument within the meaning of section 4 of the Negotiable Instruments Act of 1881. [p. 944, col. 2.]

A mere written acknowledgment of receipt of money due under a promissory-note does not fall within the provisions of sections 15 and 16 of the Negotiable Instruments Act. [p. 944, col. 2.]

Nor is it a transfer of an actionable claim within the meaning of section 130 of the Transfer of Property Act. [p. 945, col. 1.]

Muthar Sahib Maraikar v. Kadir Sahib Maraikar, 28 M. 544; 15 M. L. J. 384, distinguished.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the District Judge, North Malabar, in Appeal Suit No. 800 of 1917, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Tellicherry, in Original Suit No. 75 of 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. Mir Zynuddin, for the Appellant.—Exhibit A is a negotiable instrument. The provision for payment to joint payees is valid. Muhammad Khumarali v. Ranga Rao (1). There is nothing to imply that payment to alternative payees is invalid. The preamble to Act V of 1914 only declares the expediency of removing doubts that were felt in regard to the making and endorsement of promissory-notes in certain forms. The Amending Act should be deemed to declare the pre-existing law that instruments drawn in favour of joint or alternative payees is valid.

The written acknowledgment by payee amounts to an endorsement. At any rate, it falls under section 130 of the Transfer of

(1) 24 M. 654.

Property Act as an assignment of an actionable claim. See Muthar Sahib Maraikar v. Kadir Sahib Maraikar (2).

Mr. O. Madhavan Nair, for the Respondent.—Exhibit A, the pro note, is not a negotiable instrument within Act XXVI of 1881. It was executed before the Amending Act V of 1914. Under Act XXVI of 1881 negotiable instrument drawn in favour of joint or alternative payees is not valid. It was so under the English Law. Act V of 1914 did not declare what was the pre-existing law. It is an amending enactment. Section 4 of the Negotiable Instruments Act defining 'promissory-note' followed the English Law. The provisions of section 7 of the English Statute, 45 & 46 Vic., C. 61 providing for a bill being made payable to alternative was introduced in India only by the Act of 1914.

The so called endorsement, Exhibit A-2, is not an endorsement either in full or in blank within section 16 of the Negotiable Instruments Act as there is no direction to pay to a specified person and it does not consist only of the signature of the indorsee's name.

It cannot be brought within section 130 of the Transfer of Property Act as there are no operative words of transfer.

JUDGMENT.

SPENCER, J.—I feel no hesitation in holding that there was no valid endorsement contained in Exhibit A-2.

This purports to be an acknowledgment of the payment of Rs. 631 and odd and is signed by Ampu who is one of the three alternative payees under Exhibit A.

This is not either an endorsement in full or an endorsement in blank as defined in section 16 of the Negotiable Instruments Act. It is not the former as there is no direction to pay the amount in the instrument to a specified person and it is not the latter as it does not consist only of the signature of the indorsee's name.

The District Judge dismissed the suit for another reason also. He held that Exhibit A was not a negotiable instrument as it was executed before the passing of the Act V of 1914. That Act in its preamble declared that it was expedient to amend the Act of 1881 so as to remove doubts as to the validity of the making and endorsing of negotiable instruments in certain forms. These words might lead to the supposition that the law was really the same before the Act was passed and that all that was needed was to remove uncertainty as to the validity of negotiable instruments drawn in favour of joint payees or alternative payees.

But in fact it does not appear that negotiable instruments drawn in favour of alternative payees would have been treated as valid if a case of one of them had come before an Indian Court before 1914 and an authoritative ruling obtained.

In England it was held so long ago as 1809 that a note whereby the maker promised to pay a specified sum to A or to B and J was not a valid promissory-note under the Statute of Anne See Blanckenhagen v. Blundell (3).

It was not till the Bill of Exchange Act of 1882 was introduced that a bill was allowed to be made payable in the alternative to one of two or one or some of several payees. Chalmers in his commentary on section 7 (2) of that Act observes that this sub section materially altered the previous law. Thus, when the Negotiable Instruments Act of 1881 was passed in India the English Law did not recognize alternative payees.

When the Indian Act was enacted it may be taken to have embodied the law prevailing in England at the time, when it defined in section 4 a "promissory-note" as an instrument in writing containing an unconditional undertaking to pay a certain sum of money only to or to the order of a certain person or to the bearer of an instrument.

The omission to include a provision resembling section 7 (2) of the English Act was not rectified till 1914.

Joint payees were recognised even before the amendment of the Negotiable Instruments Act of 1881. [See section 51 of that Act and Muhammad Khumarali v. Ranga Rao (1)] but not payees in the alternative. I consider, therefore, that the District Judge was justified in his refusal to treat Exhibit A as a negotiable instrument.

The appellant's Counsel relies on Muthar Sahib Maraikar v. Kadir Sahib Maraikar (2) and argues that the endorsement Exhibit

(3) (1819) 106 E. R. 418; 2 B. & Ald. 417.

A-2 may be upheld as effecting an assignment of an actionable claim under section 130 of the Transfer of Property Act. The objection to so doing is the complete absence of operative words of transfer.

The second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

ODGERS, J.—Mr. Madhavan Nair, Counsel for the respondent, contends that the Act of 1914 (V of 1914) is not retrospective and, therefore, that if the date of execution of the promissory note in question is subsequent to the Act (which is admitted) it must fall within the previously existing law. Now the Negotiable Instruments Act came into force on 1st March 1882 and the English Statute (45 and 46, ic, Ch. 61) of 1882 came into force on 18th August 1882. The latter contains, in section 7 (2), a provision that a bill may be made payable to two or more payees jointly or it may be made payable in the alternative to one of two or one or some of several payees. But this provision was not incorporated by the Legislature into the Indian Law till the Act of 1914 and there seems no authority for saying that it was incorporated into the Indian Law by any judicial decision between 1882 and 1914. There is no doubt that the Act of 1914 is an Amending Act. It distinctly says that it is (section 1) and does not say that it is only declaratory of the existing law. Now section 4 of the Negotiable Instruments Act defines a promissory note and states that it contains an unconditional undertaking to pay a certain sum of money only to or to the order of a certain person—a certain person is an ascertained person and it was held as long ago as 1811, in the leading case of Blanckenhagen v. Blundell (3), that a note wherein the maker promised to pay to A. or to B. and C. is not a promissory note within the Statute of Anne and that an action could not be maintained upon it.

It, therefore, seems to me that the document sued on is not a negotiable instrument within the Negotiable Instruments Act 1881, as it was made before 1914 I am inclined to think that Mr. Madhavan Nair is also right in his second contention, i. e., that the so called endorsement (Exhibit A-(2) does not fall within the provisions of section 16 of the Negotiable Instruments Act. Section 15 of the Act defines endorsement as, "when the maker or holder of a negotiable instrument signs the same, otherwise than as such maker for the purpose of negotiation on the back or face thereof, etc"

Section 16 sets out the different sorts of endorsements, e. g., "in blank" and "in full." Here, in Exhibit A-2, all we have is an acknowledgment of the receipt of Rs. 631-6-5 "being the principal and interest under this pro note" signed by one of the alternative payees of the suit note. There is nothing to show that the money was not received on account of the maker; at any rate, it appears clearly not to be such an endorsement as would fall within section 15 and section 16 of the Act. This is quite apart from the question as to whether one of several alternative payees under the Act of 1914 could validly endorse—a question which, in the face of my finding as to the invalidity of Exhibit A as a promissory-note, does not arise in the present case.

On the point as to whether Exhibit A-2 can be a transfer of an actionable claim under section 130 of the Transfer of Property Act several cases have been referred to. It is clear that Exhibit A-2 contains no words of assignment as such. In Muhammad Kumarali v. Ranga Rao (1) it was held that, though there could not be endorsement by one joint payee to another, yet the endorsement might be relied on as evidence of an assignment by way of release in favour of the endorsee. In that case it was expressly stated (page 653) that the suit was maintainable "by reason of the other joint payee having transferred his interest therein to him." It further would appear that in this case the endorsement was in the shape of an order or request to the maker to pay the amount of the note to the endorsee though this is not clear from the report. In any case, it seems no authority for the present case which is that of a receipt by one of the payees and signed by him.

As laid down in Muthar Sahib Maraikar v. Kadir Sahib Maraikar (2), endorsement is not the only mode by which negotiable instruments may be assigned; but the difficulty in the present case is that there are no words of assignment or any expression of intention to transfer the rights of Ampu to the plaintiff. A direction in writing to pay the amount due on an instrument endorsed on such instrument by the payee thereof, coupled with delivery of the instrument so endorsed to the person to whom the payment is directed, is an assignment within section 130 of the Transfer of Property Act. This was laid down in Rama Iyen v. Venkatachellam Patter (4). There is no such direction to pay here. These are the cases relied on by Mr. Mir Zynuddin, Counsel for the appellant, and, as already stated, they do not, in my opinion, bear upon this case. I, therefore, agree with the learned District Judge that Exhibit A-2 does not constitute a valid assignment under section 130 of the Transfer of Property Act.

I agree with my learned brother and would dismiss this second appeal with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—Res judicata—Alienation—Suit to contest alienation, dismissal of—Suit for possession, whether maintainable.

Plaintiffs brought a suit for a declaration that a gift made by R. in favour of N. shall not affect their reversionary rights. The suit was dismissed on the ground that on R's death her grand-daughter J. would have a right to succeed to her, and that the plaintiffs' interest was too remote. After R's death, plaintiffs brought a suit against N. for possession of her estate :

Held, that J.'s right to succeed to R being res judicata, and J being alive the plaintiffs' suit was not maintainable.

Miscellaneous second appeal from the order of the District Judge, Amritsar, dated the 21st February 1920, reversing that of the Munsif, Second Class, Amritsar, dated the 5th August 919.

Dr. Shuja ud din, for the Appellants.

Mr. Devi Dayal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The genealogical tree is to be found in the judgment of the learned District Judge. The plaintiffs, nephew of Imami, sue for possession of six kanals of land and a house which Imami's daughter-in-law, Musammat Rajji, gifted to her son-in-law, Nawab. Musammat Rajji is now dead and plaintiffs claim that succession has opened out to them. The gift was made in 1912 and in the same year the plaintiffs brought a suit for a declaration that the gift should not affect their reversionary rights after the death of Musammat Rajji. This suit was dismissed and the plaintiffs' appeal was dismissed by the Divisional Judge on the ground that, although the plaintiffs were entitled to contest an alienation made by a female, the daughter, Musammat Karam Bibi, and the grand daughter, Musammat Jhando, of Musammat Rajji, would succeed to the property on her death in preference to the plaintiffs and, therefore, the suit was so speculative that no declaratory decree should be given. Against this decision plaintiffs might have filed a further appeal to this Court but they did not do so. Musammat Karam Bibi is now dead as well as her mother Musammat Rajji, but Musammat Jhando, the grand daughter of Musammat Rajji, still survives and the plea of the donee defendant is that the suit is barred by the rule of res judicata, it having been decided in the former suit that Musammat Jhando is entitled to succeed in preference to the plaintiffs and the plaintiffs being, therefore, debarred from getting a decree for possession in the presence of Musammat Jhando. The first Court held this contention to be correct and dismissed the suit, but the learned District Judge on appeal holds that the former decision does not operate as res judicata, as in the former case there was no express issue as to, whether Musammat Jhando would succeed to the property. It is true that no issue as to Musammat Jhando's right to succeed was framed by the first Court, but still the question of her succession became a matter of controversy between the parties when the District Judge based his dismissal of the appeal on a finding that Musammat Jhando was entitled to succeed.

This finding might have been attacked by a further appeal to this Court, but it was not attacked and, therefore, became final.

I have no hesitation in holding that Musammat Jhando's right to succeed is a matter which is res judicata, and that in her presence the plaintiffs cannot obtain a decree for possession. The appeal is accepted and the suit is dismissed with costs in all Courts.

Appeal accepted.

This second appeal coming on for hearing on the 27th and 28th January 1920, and having stood over for consideration till the 5th February 1920, the Court (Sadasiva Aiyar and Spencer, JJ.), made the following

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH:—

SPENCER, J.—The plaintiff claims the suit properties by virtue of a gift in his favour, dated 19th November 1914. The second defendant is a creditor of the donor, the first defendant, who obtained a decree and attached the properties in execution. The plaintiff made a claim under Order XXI, rule 58, Civil Procedure Code. It was dismissed and this suit is brought to set aside the summary order and to obtain a declaration that the property is not liable to be attached.

The trial of the plaintiff's suit raised the question of law, whether it is open to an attaching decree-holder to plead in defence, against the alienee's suit, that the alienation is a fraudulent one intended to defeat or delay the alienor's creditors. This question was answered in the negative in Subramania Ayyar v. Muthia Chettiar (1), which is a Full Bench decision. We have decided to refer the same question of law once more to a Full Bench. It need hardly be said that we should not have ventured to take this extreme course if we were not fully convinced that the law, as laid down by that Full Bench, seriously requires reconsideration.

In order to justify this reference it is necessary that I should, as briefly as possible, enumerate the reasons which have impelled us to make it:—

1. There appears to be an increasing sense of hesitation in the minds of both Bench and Bar in regarding Subramania Ayyar v. Muthia Chettiar (1) as representing sound law;

2. Other High Courts have put a different construction on section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act;

(1) 43 Ind. Cas. 651; 41 M. 612; 6 L. W. 760; 33 M. L. J. 705.

3. In a case that has since come before the Privy Council a plea of this description was allowed to be raised in defence of the suit ;

4. There are no words in section 53 which make it imperative that a person defrauded, defeated or delayed should put forward his claim to have the transfer avoided in a regular suit and not otherwise, and

5. There are independent reasons for doubting the correctness of the conclusion of the learned Judges who decided Palaniandi Chetti v. Appavu Chettiar (2) upon which the Full Bench case in Subramania Ayyar v. Muthia Chettiar (1) was based.

I will now proceed to amplify the above reasons. On the first point I will merely refer to the opinions expressed by Abdur Rahim, J., in Cheruthazhath Abdulla Haji v. Cheriyandi Ibrayan Kutti (3) ; by Krishnan, J., in Kottarathil Puthiyapurayil Pokker v. Balathil Parkum Chandrankandi Kunhamad (4) and by Sadasiva Aiyar and Napier, JJ., in their reference to the Full Bench on the former occasion at page 613* of Subramania Ayyar v. Muthia Chettiar (1). I will only add that I share in the doubts expressed by the above-named learned Judges.

Next, Abdul Kader v. Ali Meah (5) is a direct decision to the contrary on the point that a creditor who has obtained a decree and taken out execution is competent to raise a plea under section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act that the alienation made by his debtor is voidable and should be avoided, and the learned Judges quote the English case of Clough v. London and North Western Railway Co. (6) and two other decisions of the same Court in support of this proposition. The case of Clough v. London and North Western Railway Co. (6) is an authority for allowing a voidable transaction to be avoided on the ground of fraud by any unequivocal act including a statement in a plea by defendants in an action. This Calcutta case was considered in the Full Bench case in Subramania Ayyar v. Muthia Chettiar (1) and dissented from without full discussion of the reasons which influenced the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court in coming to their conclusion.

In Baroda Prosad Banerji v. Gajendra Nath Banerji (7) it was held that when a transaction is voidable it was open to the injured party to declare his Will to rescind the transaction by way of defence to an action brought to enforce the transaction against him. In Bhikabhai Mulibhai v. Panachand Olhavji (8) the defendant was allowed to set up the defence that a mortgage transaction was intended to defeat and delay creditors upon a suit brought by the mortgagor for a declaration that the defendant was not entitled to attach the properties.

Again, in Ghunsham Das v. Uma Pershad (9), the Privy Council confirmed the decree of the Judicial Commissioner of the Central Provinces in a suit in which certain creditors who had attached before judgment their debtor's property raised in defence a plea that the plaintiff's mortgage was executed collusively as a device to defeat creditors. If there had been such an easy way of obtaining a reversal of the Judicial Commissioner's decision as that of objecting to the plea being raised as a defence to the suit, it is likely that that ground would have been argued before the Judicial Committee.

In Lakshmi Doss v. Roop Laul (10), a case of a voidable deed the defendant was allowed by a Full Bench of this Court to set up as defence that the deed was invalid even at a time when a suit to declare its invalidity would have been time-barred. And in Thathu Naik v. Kondu Reddi (11), two Judges out of three composing the Full Bench held that it was open to the defendants to have a sale set aside by way of answer to the plaintiff's claim on the strength of the sale to recover possession of the mortgage property which he had bought in auction in execution of his mortgage-decree.

As to the two reported cases, about the correctness of which we feel doubt, I may say at once that I do not wish to attempt to challenge the other principle established by Palaniandi Chetti v. Appavu Chettiar (2), viz., that if a regular suit is brought by a creditor to declare a conveyance made by his debtor to be invalid, the decree obtained by him would enure for the benefit of all other creditors, and it follows from this that such suits should ordinarily be brought in a representative character on behalf of all the creditors in order to avoid the same question being raised again and again by different creditors of the same debtor, although I prefer the opinion of Krishnan, J., in Kottarathil Puthiyapurayil Pokker v. Balathil Parkum Chandrankandi Kunhinal (1), that it should be a matter within the discretion of the Court to direct, at the instance of the defendant, that a suit by a single creditor should be amended so as to make it a suit on behalf of all creditors, and not that all suits should be dismissed if not brought in a representative character. It seems to me that, even if this principle of representation be accepted in its fullest significance, it does not follow as a necessary corollary that a creditor, who is not already bound by a decision of the same question in a prior suit, should be debarred from setting up the invalidity of the transfer when he is made a defendant in a suit brought by the alienee just because he is a defendant.

In Palaniandi Chetti v. Appavu Chettiar (2) one of the learned Judges, Coutts Trotter, J., did not go beyond what was decided in Ishvar Timappa Hegde v. Devar Venkappa Shanbog (12), which is an authority for the proposition that if a creditor sues he should do so in a representative capacity. The other learned Judge, Seshagiri Aiyar, J., reluctantly allowed the validity of the objection that an assignment by a debtor is good and valid until it is set aside in a proper proceeding. He quoted Vyse v. Brown (13) and Glegg v. Bromley (14), as authorities for this, but he did not define a proper proceeding as confined in meaning to a regular suit, nor did he lay down that the person desiring to avoid the assignment must occupy the rule of plaintiff in such a suit. The above two cases are not, as I understand them, authorities for such a proposition. He relied, further, on a case decided by the Privy Council in Phul Kumari v. Ghanshyam Misra (15) which decided a question of Court-fees and incidentally seems to have decided that the effect of the successful suit under section 283, Civil Procedure Code, (now Order XXI, rule 63) to set aside a summary order passed on a claim petition was to place the parties in the same position as they had occupied before such order was made. The learned Judge did not notice that if the theory advanced in Palaniandi Chetti v. Appavu Chettiar (2) was accepted a counter petitioner who succeeded in defeating the claim would be in a worse position than if he failed, because he would have no right to appeal in the form of a suit under Order XXI, rule 63, against an order passed in his favour and if the claimant appealed in that form he could not set up in defence a plea based on section 53, Transfer of Property Act. In Muthukumara Chetty v. Anthony Udiyan (16) my learned brother pointed out that a party who was entitled to avoid a transaction might do so by other means than by getting a decree of Court. For instance, he might do so by an unequivocal act of repudiating the transaction—See page 877*. The decision of the Full Bench in Subramania Ayyar v. Muthia Chettiar (1) did not result in any reasons being added to strengthen the view taken by the two learned Judges who decided Palaniandi Chetti v. Appavu Chettiar (2). As this is a point of law which is constantly recurring, I think it advisable that another Full Bench should finally pronounce on the point whether we should follow the view taken in Palaniandi Chetti v. Appavu Chettiar (2) and in Subramania Ayyar v. Muthia Chettiar (1).

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—I agree with the proposal of my learned brother to refer the question again to a Full Bench. I may be permitted to add a word of explanation. During the course of the arguments, I expressed rather strongly my reluctance to again refer the question to a Full Bench as I was a party with Napier, J., to the reference on which Subramania Ayyar v. Muthia Chettiar (1) was decided and I had, since the date of the Full Bench decision, loyally followed it surrendering as I was bound to do my view on the question. But as my learned brother thought that, even the English procedure and practice on which the decision in Polaniandi Chetti v. Appavu Chettiar (2) was based, seemed not to support the view taken in that case, (I am myself very diffident to express any opinion on what the practice and procedure of English Courts is or has been on any matter) and as, in a later Privy Council decision, no objection to the plea of voidability on the ground of fraud raised by the defendants (creditors) seems to have been taken by the fraudulent alienee based on the ground that the creditors were not legally entitled to put forward such a plea in defence and could only have the alienation set aside in a suit brought by them as plaintiffs. I got over my reluctance to join in this reference. According to Kottarathil Puthiyapurayil Pokker v. Balathil Parkum Chandrankandi Kunhamad (4) read with Subramania Ayyar v. Muthia Chettiar (1) the decree-holder who was able at once to defeat the claim petition of a fraudulent alienee gets a mere barren victory which could be at once turned into a defeat if the alienee brings his suit to set aside the order on the claim petition on the ground that the alienation has not been set aside in a regular suit and so the merits of the alienation should not be gone into, while if the decree-holder was unsuccessful in the claim proceedings he has the statutory right under Order XXI, rule 63, (admitted by Sir W. B. Ayling, J., and Krishnan, J, in his favour in Kottarathil Puthiyapurayil Pokker v. Balathil Parkum Chandrankandi Kunhamad (4) to bring his suit against the claim order and could have the merits of the fraudulent alienation gone into and decided in that suit. This anomaly is also a ground for re-consideration of Subramania Ayyar v. Muthia Chettiar (1). No doubt, on questions of procedure it is undesirable to unsettle precedents but as no titles to property are likely to be disturbed and as the result of overruling Subramania Ayyar v. Muthia Chettiar (1) would only be to defeat what is almost wholly a technical plea, to simplify procedure, to shorten litigation, and to favour creditors sought to be defrauded (honest creditors and decree-holders being favourites of the law), I do not think that the objection is a serious one.

This second appeal came on for hearing on the 6th and 7th April 1920, in pursuance of the Order of Reference to a Full Bench upon perusing the grounds of appeal, the judgments and decrees of the lower Courts and the record in the case and the said Order of Reference.

Messrs. K. Bhashyam Iyengar and V. K. Srinivasa Iyengar, for the Appellant.—The Full Bench decision in Subramania Ayyar v. Muthia Chettiar (1) needs to be revised. That has been followed in succeeding cases by the Judges with much reluctance and hesitancy. See Cheruthazhath Abdulla Haji v. Cheriyandi Ibrayan Kutti (3), Kottarathil Puthiyapurayil Pokker v. Balathil Parkum Chandrankandi Kunhamad (4). The Calcutta High Court has held the contrary view in Abdul Kader v. Ali Meah (5). Where the creditor has, by an unequivocal act, expressed his intention to avoid, there is no reason why he should be restricted to a suit to do so. A plea to an action by the unsuccessful claimant is enough. See also Baroda Prosad Banerji v. Gajendra Nath Banerji (7) and Bhikabhai Muljibhai v. Panachand Odhavji (8). In Ghunsham Das v. Uma Pershad (9) the Privy Council has tacitly approved of the maintainability of such a plea because they confirmed the lower Court's decree which was based on such a plea. Under Order XXI, rule 63 the scope of the suit is to determine the title of the parties. If the transfer by the judgment-debtor is held to be a fraudulent transaction, the transferee has no right under his transfer and cannot claim to free the property from the trammels in execution. Then the decision must be in favour of the creditor what is necessary is only that the creditor should have exercised his option to treat the transfer as void. Section 53, Transfer of Property Act, does not expressly say that a suit is his only remedy.

Mr. A. Krishnaswamy Aiyar, (with him Messrs. C. S. Chedambaram Pillai and Marthandam Pillai) for the Respondent.—There is no reason to disturb the considered ruling of the Full Bench in Subramania Ayyar v. Muthia Chettiar (1)

The non-recognition of a separate suit as the only remedy of the creditor to avoid a fraudulent transfer will lead to several hardships. In cases where the transfer is valid as to part of the consideration, the decree in a suit under Order XXI, rule 63 cannot adequately protect the claimant's interest, while it recognises the rights of the creditor. There will be no means of dealing with any equities in favour of the claimant in any decree than might be passed.

The scope of the suit under rule 63 is not more extended than that the enquiry under rules 59 and 63. In both alike the question of possessing will be considered. And in the suit no plea can be allowed as to the binding nature of the transfer to the claimant until the creditor established that it was not binding on him in a suit of his own.

A suit under rule 63 is virtually related to the order or the claim petition. In Phul Kumari v. Ghanshyam Misra (15) the Privy Council treat it as a form of appeal related to a prior decree. Therefore, the creditor's remedy is in an independent suit where all aspects of the question could be fully considered and determined.

Under section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act the creditor cannot rely on the exercise of his option in defence until he has succeeded in a suit.

As the attachment of immoveables is by a prohibitory order issued to the judgment-debtor, there can be no valid attachment of property fraudulently transferred Unless the prohibition is directed to the transferee the usual attachment form would be futile.

OPINION.

WALLIS, C. J.—The decision of the Full Bench in Subramania Ayyar v. Muthia Chettiar (1) affirmed the decision in Palaniandi Chetti v. Appavu Chettiar (2), that a conveyance offending against the provisions of section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act can only be avoided in a suit properly instituted for that purpose, and that, consequently, in a suit by an unsuccessful claimant under Order XXI, rule 63 of the Civil Procedure Code it is not open to the attaching decree-holder to plead that the transfer by the judgment-debtor to the claimant was fraudulent. This ruling has since been questioned in two cases in this Court, Cheruthazh th Abdulla Haji v Cheriyandi Ibrayan Kutti (3), and Kottarathil Puthiyapurayil Pokker v. Kolathil Parkum Chandrankandi Kunhamad (4), as observed in the Referring Order of Spencer, J., where many of the Indian decisions are cited. The question has now been very fully argued before a Bench of five Judges, and after carefully considering all the arguments addressed to us I have come to the conclusion that the view taken by the two learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court in Abdul Kader v. Ali Meah (5) is right, and that there is nothing to prevent a creditor who has been defrauded, defeated or delayed from exercising the option given him by section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act of avoiding the conveyance otherwise than by the institution of a suit for that purpose. If the framers of the Transfer of Property Act, who were, of course, thoroughly familiar with the English decisions on the subject, had intended that the creditor should only exercise this option by instituting a suit, I make no doubt that, in a measure which was intended to be self-contained and to be administered in many places where English decisions are not readily available, they would have said so expressly. As they have not done so, we are, in my opinion, bound to apply the law that voidable transactions may be avoided by any open or unequivocal declaration of an intention to avoid them as laid down by the House of Lords in Oakes v. Turquand (17), and in numerous other cases.

I prefer to rest my opinion on the language of the section which we have to administer, but at the same time, I do not think that the English decisions, when properly understood, afford any support to the contrary view. The practice of requiring a creditor suing in Chancery to set aside a deed of fraudulent transfer to sue on behalf of all the creditors was, in my opinion, only another application of the well-known maxim that he who seeks equity must do equity. As observed by Mr. Kerly in his History of Equity, at page 145, even after the two Statutes of Elizabeth extended the powers of the Common Law Court to defeat fraudulent conveyances, recourse continued to be had to Chancery to set aside settlements in fraud of creditors Naylor v. Baldeon (18). This was no doubt owing to the superior facilities then possessed by the Court of Chancery for eliciting the truth in such cases owing to its power to examine the defendant and to grant discovery, which the Common Law Courts would not do. It is unnecessary to consider whether the Court of Chancery invariably required a judgment-creditor as a condition of obtaining relief to sue on behalf of all the creditors. In so far as it did so, it was merely an application of the well known equitable rule which was also applied in the more recent case of Reese River Silver Mining Co. v. Atwell (19). It was there argued that there was no case in which a creditor had been allowed to bring such a suit when the debtor was still alive without first obtaining a judgment against him, but this contention was overruled, and a creditor who had not obtained judgment was allowed to sue, but, at the same time, leave was given to amend the bill (or plaint) by making it on behalf of all the creditors" a decision followed by Jenkins, C. J., in a similar case Ishvar Timappa Hegde v. Devar Venappa Shanbag (12). That is not the question before us, as the suit with which we are concerned is the statutory suit under order XXI, rule 63.

This and the other Chancery cases cited in Palaniandi Chetti v. Appavu Chettiar (2), in my opinion, throw no light on the question whether under the Statutes of Elizabeth it is not open to a creditor to avoid a fraudulent conveyance without suit or action if he can do so effectively and is prepared to face the risk of having to pay damages should the conveyance ultimately be found not to have been fraudulent. That he can do so appears from two decisions cited by Sterling, J., in Mouat, In re, Kingston Cotton Mill Co. v. Mouat (20) where the creditor's rights at law and in equity are distinguished. In the very early case of Bethell v. Stanhope Co. (21) where the testator shortly before his death had made a fraudulent gift of his goods to his daughter but had remained in possession of them, it was held that they were assets in the hands of his administrator, and that when the donee afterwards took them it was a trespass against the administrator, and in Shears v. Rogers (22) Littledale, J., observed, "creditors had a right to the property which the deed purported to convey, and might enforce that right at law. The assignment was void as soon as the creditors elaimed to treat it as such, though not until then."

The judgment-creditor's right to take in execution goods which have been made the subject of a conveyance offending against the Statute of Elizabeth without bringing a suit to set aside the conveyance has also been recognised in a number of cases begnining with the early case of Turvil v. Tipper (23) where it was held that an alienee from the judgment-debtor under a fraudulent conveyance could not maintain an action of trespass against the Bailiff of a Manor Court for seizing the goods, which were the subject of the conveyance, in execution against the judgment-debtor Later cases, went further, and held that the Sheriff or Bailiff was not only entitled to seize in execution goods which had been fraudulently transferred by the judgment debtor but was bound to do so. In Lovick v. Crowder (24) Lord Tenderden said: "Now, if a party be in possession of the goods apparently the property of the debtor, the Sheriff, who has a fieri facias to execute, is bound to inquire whether the party who is in possession is so bona fide; and if he find the possession is held under a fraudulent bill of sale, he is bound to treat it as null and void, and levy under the writ" The same rule was laid down by Baron Parke in Imray v. Magnay (25) in which a fraudulent judgment had been suffered by the debtor: "The judgment is by the Statute (13 Eliz.) made void against creditors, but by implication it is void against a Sheriff, who acts in right of a creditor; as a deed is, which is fraudulent, against creditors: Turvil v. Tipper (23). And it is now of frequent occurrence, that the Sheriff is bound to take goods which have been fraudulently conveyed or assigned to defeat creditors.

and is responsible in an action for a false return at the suit of the creditor ; and the Statute seems to us to put both (the judgment and the conveyance) on the same footing." In Bennett v. Lawrence (26) doubts were expressed as to how far the Sheriff was bound to take notice that a judgment or conveyance was fraudulent but Imray v. Magnay (25) was subsequently affirmed in Christopherson v. Burton (27). It is unnecessary to pursue the question of the Sheriff's liability. What is material is that the decisions of these eminent Judges proceeded on the view that the Sheriff in execution may do what the creditor could do himself, viz, avoid the fraudulent conveyance without a suit. As regards Vyse v. Brown (13) all that was decided was that the defendant, who was the executor under a Will by which the judgment-debtor became entitled to a legacy which he was said to have fraudulently alienated, could not be said to be a debtor to the judgment-debtor in the amount of the legacy so as to entitle a creditor of the judgment-debtor to take garnishee proceedings. In Glegg v. Bromley (14) it was held that the assignment there in question was not in contravention of the Statute of Elizabeth, and no question as to how such settlements could be avoided appears to have arisen. These decisions appear to have no bearing on the present question.

It is the less necessary to import restrictions into section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act because the Legislature in India has made what it considers sufficient provision for the rights of the other creditors in the provisions of the Code relating to the realization and distribution of assets in execution by allowing judgment creditors who come in before the realization of the assets to share in them.

The actual question referred to us is, whether it is open to an attaching decree holder to plead in defence to a suit by the alienee whose claim has been rejected that the transfer to him was fraudulent under section 53. For the reasons already given, I am of opinion that it is open to the judgment-creditor by virtue of section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act to attach as the property of the judgment-debtor property which has been fraudulently transferred to the claimant with intent to defeat or delay creditors. If he knows of the transfer when he applies for attachment, the application is sufficient evidence of his intention to avoid it ; if he only hears of the transfer when a claim petition is preferred under Order XXI, rule 58, and still maintains his right to attach, that again is a sufficient exercise of his option to avoid and entitles him to succeed in the subsequent suit under rule 63 which has next to be considered.

When the claim is preferred, it becomes the duty of the executing Court to investigate it unless of opinion that it was designedly or unnecessarily delayed. What is to be investigated at this stage is provided by rules 60 and 61 and is not the creditor's right to attach, but the question whether the judgment-debtor was in possession (as defined in the rule) of the attached property at the date of the attachment. If he was, the attachment is to continue and execution to proceed, subject to the result of the suit which the claimant may institute within one year to establish his right ; and according to the decision of the Full Bench in Mochi Raju Venkataratnam v. Vadrevu Ranganayakamma (28) the result is the same under the present Code when the claim is rejected on the ground that it was designedly or unnecessarily delayed. On the other hand, if the judgment-debtor is found not to have been in possession as defined in the rule, the attachment is to be raised and execution against the attached property suspended until the judgment-creditor has established his right to attach in a suit under rule 63. If the provisions of rules 60 and 61 be pursued, the question whether the claim should be allowed or disallowed in the first instance will depend on whether the judgment-debtor or the transferee was in possession as defined in rule 60 at the date of the attachment. I am not satisfied that it was intended to lay down a different rule in Ramu Aiyar v. Palaniappa Chetty (29), but if it was I am unable, with great respect, to follow that decision.

The resulting suit under rule 63 is by the unsuccessful party to the claim petition "to establish the right which he claims to the property in dispute." Whether this suit be instituted by the attaching decree-holder or by the transferee claimant, it must equally be decided in favour of the former, if the transfer is shown to have been fraudulent because, in consequence of the fraudulent character of the transfer and its avoidance by the judgment creditor, the result is that the transferee has not the right which he claims to hold the property free from attachment in execution by the judgment creditor. This view is entirely in accordance with the policy of these provisions of the Code, as explained by the Privy Council in Sardhari Lal v. Ambika Pershad (30), which is to secure the speedy settlemant of questions of title raised at execution sales. We have, however, been referred to the later decision of the Privy Council in Phul Kumari v. Ghanshyam Misra (15). All that was decided in that case was that a suit by the unsuccessful party to establish his right under section 283, now Order XXI, rule 63, of the Code of Civil Procedure was, "a suit to alter or set aside the summary decision or order of any of the Civil Courts not established by Letters Patent or of any Revenue Court" within the meaning of Article 17 of Schedule II of the Court Fees Act. Their Lordships proceeded on the ground that a suit under section 283, rule 63, was not only the appropriate but the only means of setting aside the order passed on the claim petition and held that this was sufficient to bring the suit within the terms of the Article. They, no doubt, referred in one place to the suit under section 283 to establish the right of the unsuccessful party to the claim petition as an "action of appeal" and to the plaint in such a suit as "a plaint for review of a summary decision," but this language must be read with reference to the question before them. The effect of the judgment in a suit under section 283, now rule 63, as stated by the Privy Council in Sardhari Lal v. Ambika Pershad (30) and as appears from the provisions of the Code which I have examined, is to settle, as between the attaching decree holder and the claimant the question of title arising in execution, with the result that the order on the claim petition (which in the judgment of Phul Kumari v. Ghanshyam Misra (15) is referred to as a decree) is either set aside or confirmed. All that their Lordships decided in the later case was that this latter result was enough to bring the suit within the operation of Article 17 of Schedule II of the Court Fees Act.

On the whole, I have come to the conclusion that, on the language of section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, the question referred to us must be answered in the affirmative, and I am confirmed in this view by the conclusion to which I have come that the law is the same in England with regard to transfers offending against the Statute of Elizabeth.

OLDFIELD, J.—The cases we have to consider are those in which the claimant, having failed to obtain an order under Order XXI, rule 60, Civil Procedure Code, brings the suit authorised by rule 63 "to establish the right which he claims to the property in dispute." We are asked to decide whether the attaching creditor, defendant in such a suit, can plead that the transfer on which the claimant relies offends against section 53, Transfer of Property Act, or whether he must reserve that plea for separate proceedings to be instituted by him for its avoidance.

Of the arguments, by which the latter alternative is supported, that based on the alleged difficulty of combining in the decree in a suit under rule 63 a recognition of the creditor's right with the protection, to which the claimant's interest is entitled, can be dealt with shortly. For, firstly such a decree will not declare generally that the transfer is void, but only, what section 53 permits, that it is not binding as between the creditor and the claimant; and, next, there will be nothing to prevent recognition of such right as the latter may establish by showing that, as regards a portion of the consideration, the transfer to him was valid. The Court can meet either contingency as it would in a suit by the creditor, the one by a direction regarding the disposal of the balance of the sale-proceeds after the creditor's decree has been discharged, and the other by allowing him to proceed against the property only after he has paid any amount to which the claimant is legitimately entitled. I turn to the two more substantial contentions relied on, that the scope of the suit under rule 63 being no greater than that of the investigation under rules 59 and 60, only the possession which would be decisive in the latter, can be considered in the former and that no plea regarding the character of the claimant's transfer as binding on the creditor can be considered, until or unless the latter has negatived that character by obtaining a decree.

The first of these contentions is involved in some confusion, because it is no doubt true that Subordinate Courts in fact are not dealing with claims only with reference to possession and are erroneously considering the character of the title on which the claimant relies; and they are supported in doing so by the head-note to Ramu Aiyar v. Palaniappa Chetty (29). If that were really the result of that decision, I should with, all deference, doubt its correctness. But, in fact, it decided only that the rejection of a claim by an order, which was based on a finding as to possession and which was not attacked within a year by a suit, was final as against the claimant's right, even as based on his title; and if there are some observations in the judgment arising from the reference in that order to title as well as and in connection with possession, it does not follow from them that the learned Judges meant more than that the adjudication as to the latter became final by implication also as to the former. More certainly would have been inconsistent with the marked distinction between the references to possession in rules, 59, 60 and 61 in connection with the preliminary order under the two last mentioned, and the reference in rule 63 to the establishment in the subsequent suit of the right claimed by the plaintiff But as the investigation is restricted to the question of possession, that distinction is sufficient to negative the applicability of a similar restriction to the last stage of the proceedings; nor can any support for such application be found, as Mr. Krishnasami Ayyar contends, in the reference by the Judicial Committee in Phul Kumari v. Ghanshyam Misra (15) to the suit under rule 63 (or the provision previously corresponding therewith) as simply "a form of appeal related to a prior decree," which constituted the cause of action. For their Lordships were not dealing in that case with any question of the substantive rights of the parties or the contentions open to either of them, but only with a question of Court-fees, in connection with which the character of the relief asked for by the plaintiff would be decisive.

This failing, there remains the more substantial contention that the defendant-creditor cannot rely on any exercise of his option under section 53, Transfer of Property Act, in defence or unless he has brought and succeeded in a suit. On this point, I respectfully accept the statement of the English law in the judgment just delivered and turn to the Indian authorities. There is no doubt that, generally, the exercise of the option to avoid a contract can be pleaded by the person entitled to exercise it in defence as, for instance, in cases under sections 19 and 20, Indian Contract Act. Vide Orr v. Sundra Pandia (31), Lakshmi Dass v. Roop Laul (10), Raja Rajeswara Dorai v. Arunachellam Chettiar (32) and Rangnath Sakharam v. Govind Narasiva (33), and it has not been shown to be material that the person concerned under section 53, Transfer of Property Act, is not the executant of the contract, or that his plea involves his right to avoid it, not absolutely, but only as between him and the party to it, who has claimed. There is, therefore, nothing contrary to principle in the authorities relied on by Spencer, J., in the order of reference; and Rajani Kumar Dass v. Gaur Kishore Shaha (34) may also be mentioned in connection with another argument already referred to as an instance of a case in which partial effect was allowed to the plaintiff's transfer. Most of these decisions were no doubt given, not in connection with the claim procedure, but in ordinary suits brought on a transfer without a previous order rejecting a claim by the plaintiff. But that cannot affect their weight in the present discussion, in view of the very comprehensive scope of the special remedy allowed in rule 63 and the description of its purpose by the Judicial Committee in Sardhari Lal v. Ambika Pershad (30) as the speedy settlement of questions of title arising at execution sales. It is, as these decisions show, essential only that the attaching creditor, pleading section 53, Transfer of Property Act, in defence, shall have exercised his option in some unequivocal way; and that he will have done, if not in all cases by his attachment, at least when he afterwards opposes the transferee's claim with full knowledge of it in the proceedings under rule 59. In these circumstances, I agree with the answer proposed by the learned Chief Justice.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—Whenever English decisions are quoted before us, I, no doubt, receive much instruction and guidance when the decisions deal with questions of general jurisprudence, with the common law rights of the Crown and the subjects, and with the application of universal maxims of justice, equity and good conscience to a given state of facts. But when such English decisions are quoted as deal mainly with forms of action, with the practice as to the impleading of particular parties in particular actions, with procedure in execution, with the distinctions between actions at common law and at equity, I have always felt myself going beyond my depths, even when acute and able lawyers like Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar handle such case with confidence, and I am free to confess that I am often inclined to exhibit signs of impatience when I so feel myself unable to appreciate the relevancy of arguments based on such cases.

In the present case, I am glad that I need feel no anxiety that my imperfect knowledge of English procedure and precedents might have led me into serious error, as my Lord the Chief Justice has fully dealt with the English decisions quoted before us and has shown that they lend little or no support to the respondent's contention.

On the question of the interpretation to be placed on the language of the provisions contained in Order XXI, rules 58, 59, 60 and 63, the matter has been dealt with fully by Krishnan, J., in Kottarathil Puthiyapurayil v. Balathil Parkum Chandrankandi Kunhamad (4) by Spencer, J., in his referring order and by my Lord in the judgment now pronounced by him; and I have nothing to add except to say that, with the greatest respect, I dissent from the observations found in Ramu Aiyar v. Palaniappa Chetty (29) as regards the scope of Order XXI, rules 59 and 60. That when inquiring in summary proceedings held in accordance with certain statutory provisions intended for speedy disposal of (what I may call) "emergent" disputes, the Court may be prohibited from going into complicated questions of title or investigating complicated questions like fraud, trust and so on, while giving the party defeated in the summary inquiry the right to have the whole matter and all the questions which are in dispute fully investigated in an ordinary regular suit, is not at all a strange or uncommon provision of the Statute law. (See section 9 of the Specific Relief Act, the possession chapter of the Criminal Procedure Code, and the analogous provisions in the Succession Certificate Act, the Estates Land Act, etc.)

I am, therefore, clear that the Court is bound to order the release of an attached property if it finds possession in the claimant on his own account, even if there is title and disposing power remaining in the judgment-debtor. Such a release is, however, not an adjudication that the decree-holder had not got the right under section 60, Civil Procedure Code, to attach or that he could not successfully nullify the release orders in a suit brought under Order XXI, rule 63. Under section 60, of the Civil Procedure Code, the property liable to attachment need not be in the possession of the judgment debtor, because all saleable property, moveable or immoveable, belonging to the judgment debtor or over which or the profits of which he has a disposing power which he may exercise for his own benefit, whether the same be held in the name of the judgment-debtor or by any other person in trust for him or in his behalf, can be attached. Order XXI, rules 59 and 60, however, seem to make it clear that even if a trespasser is in actual possession of such property (the evidence to prove and the character of such actual possession varying, of course, with the nature of the property attached), the Court is bound to release the property to the extent of such possession subject to the right to attach being established in a suit under Order XXI, rule 63. In such a suit, the plaintiff decree holder, might, of course, prove that the claimant was really not in possession notwithstanding that the Court which inquired into the claim petition held the contrary (and, therefore, the summary order releasing the attachment was wrong) but he can also prove that the judgment-debtor, notwithstanding the trespass by the claimant, had not lost his rights and that the property could, therefore, be attached under section 60.

Mr. Krishnasawami Aiyar, as I understood him, did not dispute the proposition that a third person against whom a transaction is voidable can avoid it by an unequivocal declaration, or by unequivocal conduct disclosing that he knew of the transaction and had treated it as avoided by him [see Bijoy Gopal Mukerji v. Krishna Mahishi Debi (35)]. If, when a person is bound to avoid it by bringing a suit in a Court to set it (transaction) aside (owing to a statutory law expressly or impliedly prescribing such a course as the only means of avoiding it or by his having been himself a party to the transaction sought to be avoided), and he does not do so within the time allowed by law for such a suit, he could after the expiry of such a period, plead the voidability by way of defence, is a moot question on which I prefer to reserve my opinion, notwithstanding the decision in Lakshmi Dass v. Roop Laul (10). But no such question arises in this case.

A rather far-fetched argument was based on the decision of the Privy Council in Phul Kumari v. Ghanshyam Misra (15) that, for purposes of the Court-fees, a suit under Order XXI, rule 63, should be held to be a suit to set aside the order on the claim petition, as it is of the nature of an appeal in the form of a suit. That argument has been adequately dealt with (if I may be respectfully permitted to do so) by my Lord and I need say no more on that point.

Two other arguments which Mr. Krishnasami Iyer put forward with his usual resourcefulness might be shortly noticed. On the language of Order XXI, rule 54, which says that the attachment of immovables in execution should be made by an order prohibiting the judgment-debtor from transferring or charging the property in any way, etc., he argued that the Legislature impliedly intended that no valid attachment could be made of property which had been fraudulently (but not nominally) transferred as the prohibition by the attachment order addressed to the judgment-debtor alone who had no power to make a further transfer would be futile in such a state of facts and the form of the order prescribed for such a case would have been a probibition to the fraudulent transferee from making any further transfer by himself. This ingenious argument is based on the assumption that the Legislature, whilst enacting a general provision as to the form in which an order of attachment should be issued for the purpose of securing due publicity, intended that the general form should take into account and contain appropriate words to cover all possible contingencies and all possible complications of facts which may arise, such as the case of the creditor being entitled to avoid the transfer (by the judgment-debtor) to a fraudulent transferee under section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act and the consequent result that, so far as the creditor's remedies are concerned against the transferred property, the transfer is void though the judgment-debtor would himself be unable to transfer it again whether an attachment order is or is not issued prohibiting him from doing so.

A general and single form of order for proclamation to the public was provided which would be applicable to the facts of most cases and the Legislature enacted that when an order is passed in such a form it shall constitute a valid attachment of the property in execution in all cases and under all circumstances after the order is proclaimed in the prescribed manner.

The other argument was that the Civil Procedure Code contained no special provisions which would place a fraudulent transferee (whose transfer was avoided by a decree-holder acting under section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act) in the position of the judgment-debtor himself, so that notices of attachment, notices for settlement of sale proclamations, etc., may be issued to the fraudulent transferee instead of to the judgment debtor, or in addition to the judgment-debtor, and so that the balance of of sale proceeds remain after the sale of the attached property might be paid to the fraudulent transferee instead of to the judgment debtor and so that he might get the benefit of sections 310 and 310A of the Civil Procedure Code as to setting aside sales by payment within 30 days and so on. There is also no provision made for the fraudulent transferee when another decree-holder applies for rateable distribution under section 73 to intervene and prove to the Court that that particular creditor was estopped by his conduct from treating the transfer as voidable by him also and as entitling him to rateable distribution. I am wholly unable to appreciate the argument that the failure of the Legislature to carefully look after the interests of the fraudulent transferee is a reason for holding that the decree-holder sought to be defrauded by him cannot avoid fraudulent transfer except by a suit in which he is the plaintiff or cannot bring a suit except in a repre sentative capacity, or except in such a manner as to enable the Court to convert it into a creditor's administration suit, or cannot set up in defence to a suit by a fraudulent transferee that the decree-holder had avoided the fraudulent transfer by an unequivocal act or declaration ; though the plain words of the Statute law and the principle of general jurisprudence give him such rights. I must admit that I was not at all moved by the tale of the alleged hardships and inconveniences (which would result according to Mr. Krishnaswamy Aiyar) to the fraudulent transferee by the absence of such express provision in the Civil Procedure Code. On the other hand, my sympathies are with the honest creditors and decree-holders who are the favourites of the law.

It must be admitted that it was unquestionably assumed in this High Court and in all the Mofussil Courts before the decision in Palaniandi Chetti v. Appavu Chettiar (2) (as pointed out in that decision itself) that the decree holder, when he is the defendant in a suit brought under Order XXI, rule 63 could in defence plead that he had avoided the fraudulent transfer either under section 53 of the Transfer of the Property Act or under general principles of jurisprudence embodied in the Statute of Elizabeth and that hence plaintiff's suit should be dismissed. Much inconvenience and hardship would result to the decree-holder if the law allowed a fraudulent transferee plaintiff to successfully raise a purely technical demurrer to such a plea of the decree-holder defendant.

The cases in which the judgment-debtor's transferee who failed in his claim petition and came in as the plaintiff in a suit under Order XXI, rule 63, may be classified as follows :

(a) Where the transferee is a mere nominal transferee :

(b) Where he is a fraudulent transferee in possession :

(c) Where he is a fraudulent transferee not in possession.

A creditor decree-holder who is in most cases a stranger cannot reasonably be expected to know of his own knowledge whether a transfer by his judgment-debtor is only fraudulent or is wholly nominal or partly nominal and partly fraudulent and whether the transferee is in possession, and, if in possession, whether he is so for himself or for the judgment debtor. He would, therefore, usually both in the claim petition and in the suit which afterwards arises out of the order against the claimant be obliged to raise and be justified in raising alternatively all the pleas open to him, and the Court which decided the claim against the claimant might, in its conclusion on each of the three points, be either right or wrong. In the suit also, the Court of first instance may decide in favour of the plaintiff transferee or against him and may decide these three points rightly or wrongly (the right decision being, of course, assumed to be that he was merely a fraudulent transferee and not a more nominal transferee) and there might be appeals and second appeals before the questions are finally decided rightly. That the decree-holder who bona fide pleads that the transfer is a nominal one in the alternative and who cannot be sure whether and when the defeated claimant would bring his suit and whether there would be appeals and second appeals if the transferee fails in the first stages of the suit, that he should finally, after a great delay, be obliged to set aside the transfer by obtaining a formal decree of Court in a suit of his own before he could proceed with his execution by attachment and sale of the fraudulently conveyed property would, in my opinion, be a much more serious hardship on the decree holder for no fault of his than the minor hardships and inconveniences to the fradulent transferee mentioned by the respondent's learned Vakil. As shown in one of the later decisions, he would be in a much worse position for his success in the summary claim proceedings than if he had lost in those proceedings.

Finally, I agree both with the answer proposed by my Lord to the question referred to the Full Bench, and with the propositions of law laid down in support of that answer in his judgment.

SPENCER, J.—As the judgments of my Lord and of the two other learned Judges which have just been delivered are in favour of the view that I took in my Order of Reference, I have nothing to add beyond expressing my concurrence with them.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—Ever since the decision in Palaniandi Chetti v. Appavu Chettiar (2) was pronounced, there has been a growing feeling in the profession that it should be re-considered. Almost every one of my learned colleagues felt great disinclination to accept it as good law. It certainly has upset the practice which has hitherto obtained in such matter. I myself said in the decision that my conclusion was reluctantly come to. In the last paragraph of that judgment, I referred to the judgment of the Judicial Committee in Phul Kumari v. Ghanshyam Misra (15), as compelling me to take the view I did. In these circumstances, I am not unwilling to re-consider my decision.

I still hold that the judgment of the Judicial Committee, if it is regarded as a considered pronouncement, fully justifies my view. Their Lordships say distinctly that a wrong idea about the nature of the suit under Order XXI, rule 63, is prevalent and that that idea is responsible for the view taken regarding the amount of Court-fee in such suit. They then point out what, in their view, is the true scope of suits of this description. The majority of the Full Bench have come to the conclusion that this decision should be confined to matters relating to Court-fees and should not be further extended. I have felt doubts whether it is permissible for us to read a judgmen of the Judicial Committee in the way suggested. But there have been precedents in this Court, wherein the dicta of the Judicial Committee have been restricted to the real matter in controversy in litigation. There is also the classic pronouncement of Lord Halsbury that a judgment of the highest Tribunal is only authority for the point actually decided and that the decision should not be divorced from the facts on which it was based. For all these reasons, I do not feel it necessary to adhere to the view which I took in Palaniandi Chetti v. Appavu Chettiar (2). Upon one matter I feel little doubt after hearing the full argument addressed to us now, and that is that the scope of Order XXI, rules 58 to 63, should be restricted to an enquiry into the question of possession and should not be relied on for investigating titles to property. I feel considerable doubt, however, upon the interpretation to be placed on the language of rule 63. Even supposing that we do not accept the letter of the ruling of the Judicial Committee in Phul Kumari v. Ghanshyam Misra (15), it seems to me that a suit instituted by a party against whom an adverse order has been passed in a claim proceeding should be confined to litigating the title as between himself and the successful claimant. I am not, as at present advised, prepared to hold that the limitation placed upon the summary enquiry should be wholly ignored in dealing with the suit following the enquiry. The view that the result of the summary enquiry only furnishes an opportunity for ventilating every possible right in respect of the claims of parties to the enquiry seems to go further than is warranted by the language of the rules.

Even taking this view, the question still remains whether the language of section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act should be read as contemplating suits by the person who alleges that the alienation is in fraud of his rights.

Mr. Krishnasami Ayyar did not dispute the proposition that a party who is entitled to come to Court as a plaintiff to impeach a voidable transaction is ordinarily entitled to put it forward as a defence when he is attacked. The observations in Oakes v. Turquand (17) that an open and unequivocal declaration of intention to avoid will have as good an effect as an attack by way of suit is as applicable to India as to England. In that view, is there any reason for construing the words 'that every transfer of immoveable property * * * * * is voidable at the option of any person so defrauded, defeated or delayed', as compelling the defrauded to institute a suit? I see no sufficient reason for insisting on this view. As I said before, the only real difficulty is in interpreting the decision of the Judicial Committee in Phul Kumari v. Ghanshyam Misra (15). If the result of the suit under Order XXI, rule 63, is to place the parties in status quo ante by removing the fetters placed on execution during the claim proceedings, then it stands to reason to hold that as on the date of the removal of the impediment, the transaction between the vendor and the vendee was valid inter se; there was no interest of the judgment-debtor available for attachment on that date and none came into existence by virtue of the decision in the suit, but if the other view that the suit under rule 63, although based upon the result of the claim proceedings, is an independent action which is not restricted in any way by the previous enquiry is to prevail, the decisions in Palaniandi Chetti v. Appavu Chettiar (2) and Subramania Ayyar v. Muthia Chettiar (1) cannot be supported.

This is my answer to the reference.

UPPER BURMA JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

CIVIL MISCELLANEOUS CASE NO. 11 OF 1920.

April 26, 1920.

Present :—Mr. Heald, A. J. C.

THE BURMA OIL CO., LTD.—APPLICANTS

BAIJNATH SINGH AND ANOTHER—RESPONDENTS.

Interpretation of Statutes—Act depriving subject of right of recourse to ordinary Courts—Words occurring in same context in different places—Upper Burma Land and Revenue Regulation (III of 1889), ss. 24 (2), 53 (2) (ii)—"Claims" in s. 53 (2) ii), meaning of—Disputes between private individuals, whether within section.

The language of Acts which deprive the subject of the right of recourse to the ordinary Civil Courts must not be extended beyond its least onerous meaning unless clear words are used to justify such extension [p. 960, col. 2; p. 96 , col. 1.]

When the same word is used in the same context in two sections of the same enactment, it is reasonable to suppose that it is used in the same sense in both [p. 96 , col. .]

The word "claims" in section 53 (2) (ii) of the Upper Burma Land and Revenue Regulation means, claims as against the State and does not include disputes between private individuals. The claims referred to in this section are neither more nor less than the claims mentioned in section 24 (2) of the Regulation [p. 962, col. .]

Section 53 (2) (ii) of the Upper Burma Land and Revenue Regulation, therefore, does not bar the jurisdiction of the ordinary Civil Courts over disputes between private persons regarding the ownership or possession of State land or any lien upon or other interest in such land or the rents, profits, or produce thereof. [p. 962, col. 2.]

Messrs. Lentaigne and Swinhoe, for the Applicants.

Mr. Higginbotham, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Petitioners' learned Advocate says that on this application he desires to raise two questions only,—

(1) whether the word "claims" in section 53 (2) (ii) of the Upper Burma Land and Revenue Regulation (III of 1889) can be read as including disputes between private individuals or must (as he contends) be interpreted as excluding such disputes and as meaning only 'claims as against the state,' and

(2) whether the enactment of section 53 (2) (ii) of the Regulation was ultra vires of the Legislature.

He admits that if the first of these two questions be decided in his favour the second will not arise in this case because the present litigation involves only a dispute between private persons, and such a dispute will not be excluded from the cognizance of the ordinary Civil Courts unless the word "claims" in section 53 (2) (ii) is to be interpreted as including such disputes.

It is a well recognised principle of judicial interpretation that the language of Acts which deprive the subject of the right of recourse to the ordinary Civil Courts must not be extended beyond its least onerous meaning unless clear words are used to justify such extension, and this principle must be borne in mind in deciding what meaning must be attached to the word "claims" in the section under consideration since that section expressly limits the right of recourse to the ordinary Civil Courts.

The relevant parts of the section are as follows:—"Except as otherwise provided by this Regulation—

'(1) A Civil Court shall not have jurisdiction in any matter which * * * * a Revenue Officer is empowered by or under this Regulation to dispose of * * * * and in particular

"(2) A Civil Court shall not exercise jurisdiction over any of the following matters, which shall be cognisable exclusively by Revenue Officers, namely,—

* * * * * *

"(ii) any claims to the ownership or possession of any State land or to hold such land free of land revenue or at a favourable rate of land revenue or to establish any lien upon, or other interest in, such land, or the rents, profits, or produce thereof."

That section was adapted from section 158 (2) of the Punjab Land Revenue Act (1887) and somewhat similar provisions occur in section 56 of the Lower Burma Land and Revenue Act (1876) and in section 41 of the Lower Burma Town and Village Lands Act, 1898.

Both the Lower Burma Land and Revenue Act, and the Upper Burma Regulation have been differently interpreted by the Courts at different times, but a Full Bench of the Chief Court of Lower Burma has recently decided [Maung Nau v. Ma Shwe Hmat (1)] that the word "claims" as used in section 56 of the Lower Burma Act means, claims against Government and not disputes between private persons.

It does not, of course, follow that because "claims" is so interpreted in the Lower Burma Act it must be similarly interpreted in the Regulation, since the wording of the two enactments is different, and some of the arguments on which the interpretation in the Lower Burma case was based do not apply to the Upper Burma Regulation. It is necessary, therefore, to consider the matter independently.

In the earliest reported cases in this Court in which the question was raised [Maung Tha Zin v. Ma In (2), Maung Aung Byi v. Maung Yan Byo (3)], it was held, on general grounds, that the Civil Courts have jurisdiction to decide disputes between private individuals relating to State lands, but the particular wording of section 53 (2) (ii) was not considered.

In several cases in 1897-98 [Maung Tha Aung v. Maung San Ke (4), Maung Nut v. Ma Mi (5), Maung Ke v. Maung Po Ni (6)] it was held that where one private person claimed possession of, or an interest in, State land as against another, section 53 (2) (ii) barred the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts.

It was probably on the strength of those rulings that the Financial Commissioner amended his Notification No. 384 of 1914 (Page 83, Upper Burma Land and Revenue Manual, 1911,) so as to include "claims between private individuals" as well as "claims against the State."

The same interpretation of section 53 (2) (ii) of the Regulation was adopted by this Court in all the reported cases [Ma Lok v. Maung San Ya Tha (7), Maung Nyun v. Maung Kywe (8), Mi Ma Gyi v. Ngu Shwe Zin (9), Mi Min Dwe v. Ma Mu Kin Kyimyin (10)], up to 1916, but in that year the learned Judicial Commissioner came to the conclusion [Sonilal Sheoshankar v. Delawar (11)], that that section does not bar the jurisdiction of Civil Courts except as regards claims made under section 24 (2) of the Regulation. He based that conclusion on a consideration of the wording of section 53 itself, but he also suggested that it was probable that the claims referred to in section 24 were claims against the State and not disputes between private individuals. It seems to me that that suggestion gives the clue to the solution of the whole difficulty. It is obvious that section 53 (2) (ii) relates back to section 24 (2). Section 24 gives Revenue Officers power to dispose of certain "claims", and section 53 (2), in summarising the matters which Revenue Officers are empowered by or under the Regulation to dispose of, naturally includes the claims mentioned in section 24. The words used in describing the claims in the two sections are identical except that section 24 described the lands to which the claims referred as land "declared" and "deemed to be" State, while section 53 (2) (ii) called the land merely "State land." The wording of section 53 (2) (ii) was undoubtedly taken direct from section 24 (2) and when the same word was used in the same context in two sections of the same enactment, it seems reasonable to suppose that it was used in the same sense in both. But the word "claims" as used in section 24 must clearly be restricted to "claims as against the State" since the claims mentioned in that section are claims contesting declarations by the State that the land is State land, and the period of limitation provided by that section would be entirely inappropriate to disputes between private individuals. I have no doubt, therefore, that the word "claims" in section 53 (2) (ii) also means "claims as against the State" and does not include disputes between private individuals and that the "claims" referred to in section 53 (2) (ii) are neither more nor less than the claims mentioned in section 24 (2). The wider interpretation which has been put on section 53 (2) (ii) has, I think, been due partly to reading that section alone, without considering its relation to section 24 (2), and partly to the interpolation of the words "which shall be cognisable exclusively by Revenue Officers" in section 53 (2). Those words, which do not occur in the corresponding section of the Punjab Act, do not, in my opinion, add anything to the meaning of the section and if the Regulation had been carefully drafted would have been unnecessary. They were, I think, obviously added by a diffident draughtsman ex abundanti cautela to guard against possible omissions to state expressly elsewhere in the Regulation or Rules that Revenue Officers were empowered to dispose of each and every one of the matters mentioned in the section as particular instances of matters which Revenue Officers were empowered by or under the Regulation to dispose of.

It would appear, therefore, from a consideration of sections 24 and 53 (2) (ii) together that the word "claims" in those sections must be interpreted as meaning only "claims as against the State," and not as including disputes between private persons, and this conclusion is corroborated by the fact that in section 30 of the Regulation where the contest is between private persons the word used is not "claim" but "dispute," that in the Lower Burma Land and Revenue Act the same distinction between "claims" and "disputes" is made in a similar context, and that in the Lower Burma Town and Village Lands Act it is expressly stated that the "claims" excluded from the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts are "claims as against the Government."

Although, therefore, at first sight, it might appear that the word "claims" in sections 53 (2) (ii) of the Regulation was wide enough to include claims arising between private individuals as well as claims against the State, nevertheless I am constrained to hold that it cannot bear that meaning and that it must be restricted to claims against the State.

I hold, accordingly, that section 53 (2) (ii) does not bar the jurisdiction of the ordinary Civil Courts over disputes between private persons regarding the ownership or possession of State land or any lien upon or other interest in such land or the rents, profits, or produce thereof.

On this finding the question whether the enactment of section 53 (2) (ii) of the Regulation was ultra vires of the Legislature does not arise so far as the present litigation is concerned, but I may perhaps note, with reference to the arguments on the subject in this Court, that what their Lordships of the Privy Council said in the Secretary of State v. Moment (12), which is always cited in this connection, was that the effect of section 56 of the Government of India Act of 1858 "was to debar the Government of India from passing any Act which could prevent a subject from suing the Secretary of State in Council in a Civil Court in any case in which he could have similarly sued the East India Company," and that, although their Lordships seem to have gone beyond the previous decisions in holding that a subject could sue the Secretary of State for damage done by Government not as a private Corporation succeeding to the rights and liabilities of the East India Company but as representing the Crown, they have not decided that it is beyond the powers of the Government of India or the Local Government to bar the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts provided that provision is made, as it is made in the Upper Burma Land and Revenue Regulation, for recourse to Revenue Courts or Officers as a substitute for recourse to the ordinary Civil Courts.

Order accordingly.

Judgment, contents of—Evidence, oral, omission to make special reference to, whether vitiates judgment— Butwara map and chitta, admissibility of—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 35—Bengal Estates Partition Act (VIII of 1876), s. 54.

The omission in a judgment to make any special reference to the oral evidence adduced by the parties to a case is not in itself sufficient to show that, as a matter of fact, the Court did not consider the evidence of the witnesses who were examined in the case. [p. 964, col. 2.]

The batwara maps and chittas prepared under section 54 of the Bengal Estates Partition Act, VIII of 1876, are admissible in evidence independently of section 35 of the Evidence Act where some evidence introducing the maps and chittas is given; and if thereafter they are admitted without objection from either of the parties to a case, it is not open to the parties, in second appeal, to say that they have not been sufficiently proved. [p. 964, col. 2.]

Appeals against the decrees of the Officiating Subordinate Judge, Mymensingh, dated the 4th of July 1917, modifying that of the Munsif, Second Court at Bajitpur, dated the 8th of August 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babus Dwarka Nath Chackerbutty (with him Mr. A. K. Fazlul Haque, Babu Atindranath Mooherjee, M. Choudhuri Muhammad Isa), for the Appellants.—These two appeals arise out of two suits for recovery of khas possession and declaration of title. The subject-matter of these two suits consist of four plots of land. The lower Appellate Court has found that the suit was barred by limitation in so far as plots Nos. 1 and 4 are concerned; and it has further found that there has been adverse possession from the year 1306 so far as other plots are concerned. The lower Court coming to this finding has relied upon the Collectorate partition maps and chittas.

My first submission would be that the Collectorate partition maps and chittas are inadmissible in evidence under section 35, Indian Evidence Act.

Refers to Perma Roy v. Kishen Roy (1), Nanda Lal Pathak v. Chanurpat Das (2).

The learned Subordinate Judge has not taken into consideration the oral evidence adduced by the parties. I submit there has not been adverse possession at all.

Babu Jogesh Chandra Rai (with him Babus Ramani Mohon Chetterjee and Gopal Chandra Das), for the Respondents.—I submit that the objection raised here is not tenable in law.

In neither of the Courts below the objection was raised against the chittas. It is being raised here for the first time. No ground has been taken in the grounds of appeal on this point. Moreover, these chittas are all old documents according to JUDGMENT.—These two appeals arise out of two suits brought by the plaintiffs for recovery of khas possession of certain parcels of land on declaration of their title thereto. The two suits bore Nos. 2284 and 2490 of 1913. In each suit the subject-matter consisted of four plots or parcels of land. Both the Courts below have found that in Suit No. 2490 plots Nos. 2 to 4 and part of plot No. 1 and in Suit No. 2284 plots Nos. 2 and 4 and parts of plots Nos. 1 and 3 appertain to plaintiff's state Dighirpar. That is a finding of fact which has not been challenged before us.

The next question that arose in the suits was the question of limitation. In the Court of first instance it was held that, in respect of the plots over which the plaintiffs' title had been established, there was no bar of limitation, the finding of the Court of first instance being that the adverse possession of the defendants had begun in the 1309. In the Court of first appeal the learned Subordinate Judge has found that the plaintiffs' suit was barred by limitation except as regards part of plot No. 1 in Suit No. 2490 and plot No. 4 in Suit No. 2284. As regards the other plots the Subordinate Judge has found that the defendants have been in adverse possession from the year 1306. In coming to his finding on this question of adverse possession the learned Subordinate Judge relied on the batwara map and chittas prepared under section 54 of the Estates Partition, Act VIII of 1876, when the estate of the defendants was under partition by the Revenue Authorities, first in 1879 and again in 1893. He also relied upon the collection papers of the Zemindar defendants which show that the tenant defendants were tenants under Hem Chandra Chowdury, the owner of the estate, contiguous to Digbirpar—from at least 1298. He has also relied upon two Kabuliyats, Exhibits F and G, and a conveyance, Exhibit H.

The contentions before us are, first, that the Collectorate partition maps and chittas are not admissible in evidence and, secondly, that the learned Subordinate Judge has failed to take into consideration the oral evidence adduced by the parties.

With regard to the oral evidence it seems the case that no special reference has been made to it, but the omission to make such special reference is not in itself sufficient to show that, as a matter of fact, the Subordinate Judge did not consider the evidence of the witnesses who were examined in the cases. We have no reason to suppose that he did not consider that evidence.

With regard to the Collectorate partition chittas, we have been referred to the cases reported as Perma Roy v. Krishen Roy (1) and Nanda Lal Pathak v. Chanurpat Das (2). In those cases it has been held that such measurement papers are not admissible in evidence under the provisions of section 35 of the Evidence Act. But in the present cases some evidence introducing the maps and chittas was given, so that the present cases are rather analogous to the cases reported in Bhola Roy v. Jung Bahadur Singh (3) and Dinanath Chanda v. Nawabali (4). As a matter of fact, of the chittas and the measurements introductory evidence, as we have said, was given, and thereafter they were admitted without objection on either side. It is not open to the defendants now to say that they have not been sufficiently proved. If they had taken the objection at the time, then it would have been open to the plaintiffs to give such further evidence as might be required. In fact, the judgments of both the Courts below indicate that the defendants as well as the plaintiffs both relied upon these measurement papers and maps and no objection as to their admissibility is to be found in the grounds of appeal preferred to this Court. We think, therefore, that in relying upon the statements found in those batwara papers indicating that certain plots were cultivated and certain other plots were lying waste the learned Subordinate Judge was within his rights.

For these reasons, we dismiss the appeals with costs, the hearing fee being divided half Limitation Act (IX of 1908), ss. 5, 12—Appeal, limitation for filing—Time spent in obtaining translation of judgment, whether can be excluded—Delay caused by applying for translation, whether sufficient cause for extension of limitation.

The time spent in obtaining a copy of the translation of the judgment appealed against cannot be excluded in computing the period of limitation for an appeal under section 12 of the Limitation Act.

The delay caused in filing an appeal by applying for a translation of the judgment appealed against due to ignorance or to carelessness cannot be excused under section 5 of the Limitation Act, as an appellant guilty of such delay cannot be said to have acted bona fide, i. e., with due care and attention.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Karnal, dated the 28th January 1920, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Rohtak, dated the 31st October 1919.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Nanak Chand for Mr. Gullu Ram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.- The appeal in this case to the lower Appellate Court was time-barred and even at the date of the judgment of the lower Appellate Court no copy of the original judgment had been put in. The only excuse of the appellant was that he had applied by mistake for a translation of the judgment and that the delay was due to the preparation of this translation. The lower Appellate Court rightly held that the time occupied in preparing the translation could not be deducted under section 12 of the Limitation Act. The appeal was, therefore, dismissed.

Against this decision a second appeal has been preferred and it is firstly urged that the lower Appellate Court did not consider the exercise of the discretion which it possessed under section 5 of the Limitation Act. It is true that there is no specific mention of section 5 or of any suggestion that a concession should be made thereunder to the appellant. The omission, however, of such mention does not of itself raise a presumption that the provisions of the section were not considered. The appellant was represented by Counsel and it is most probable that this Counsel asked for indulgence under section 5. If the lower Appellate Court considered the point, there is admittedly no ground for a second appeal. Counsel urges that the case should be remanded for a consideration of this matter, but even if it were granted that the question was not considered, I do not think that a remand is necessary as, the matter being a legal one, it can be disposed of by this Court.

The only question on the merits is, whether the delay caused by applying for a translation of the judgment due possibly to ignorance or possibly to carelessness, is a sufficient cause within the meaning of section 5. In my opinion, an appellant guilty of such delay cannot be said to have acted bona fide, i. e., with due care and attention.

I, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

agent—Agent acting for undisclosed principal—Suit against both agent and principal, whether maintainable.

A person contracting with an agent for an undisclosed principal is at liberty to sue either the agent or the principal or both under the contract. [p. 967, col. 1.]

Exception 1 to section 108 of the Contract Act applies practically to any sale of any moveable property by any person in any kind of possession, so long as that possession is by consent of the owner and the transferee acts in good faith. [p. 970, col. 1.]

Plaintiff purchased in good faith a diamond ring from defendant's agent which the defendant had entrusted to the latter and paid the price to the agent. The agent was subsequently convicted of breach of trust in respect of the ring at the instance of the defendant. Plaintiff sued defendant for delivery of the ring or for its price :

Held, that the case was covered by the First Exception to section 108 of the Contract Act and that the plaintiff had obtained a good title to the ring and her suit must succeed. [p. 971, col. 1.]

Mr. A. C. Mukerjee, for the Appellants.

Mr. H. M. Lutter, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The respondent, Ma Win, sued the appellant, Dulabdass, to recover a diamond ring or its value, Rs. 2,673. Her case was that on the 13th of October 1914 she bought the ring for Rs. 2,673 from one Ma Chon whom she believed to be owner of the ring and who delivered possession of it to her, giving her a receipt for the price ; that in November 1914, the Police, while investigating a criminal charge against Ma Chor, took possession of the ring and sent it to the Criminal Court as an exhibit ; that the Magistrate convicted Ma Chon and delivered the ring to Dulabdass, and that she, being owner of the ring, was entitled to recover it or its value from Dulabdass.

Dulabdass in his written statement said that Ma Chon was a mere broker of his who had no right to sell the ring ; that she was convicted of criminal breach of trust in respect of the ring so that respondent's transaction with Ma Chon gave her no title to the ring ; that although he entrusted the ring to Ma Chon and received it back from the Criminal Court, he was not owner but was only an agent of the owner with limited authority ; that he had returned the ring to the owner, and that the respondent could not recover either the ring or its value from him.

The respondent then amended her plaint so as to implead the second appellant, Magnanlal Pranjivan and Company, to whom the ring was said to have been delivered by Dulabdass.

The second appellant filed a written statement alleging that he, too, was merely an agent of the real owner of the ring ; that he had delivered the ring to the real owner, and that respondent could not recover either the ring or its value from him. He also, like the first appellant, alleged that Ma Chon had no right to sell the ring and that respondent acquired no title to it by her transaction with Ma Chon.

The Trial Court, after hearing the evidence, came to the conclusion that respondent bought the ring from Ma Chon in good faith believing that Ma Chon had power to sell it, that Ma Chon was an agent of the owner of the ring and was in possession of the ring by the consent of the owner, and that, therefore, the respondent acquired a good title to the ring by her transaction with Ma Chon and was entitled to recover either the ring or its value from both the appellants.

Appellants file a joint appeal on the following grounds, namely :—

(1) that respondent had no cause of action against them because they were not owners of the ring and were not in possession of it but were only agents of the owner, to whom they had returned the ring ;

(2) that in any case they could not be jointly liable ;

(3) that Ma Chon's possession of the ring was not such as to enable her to give respondent a good title to it ;

(4) that it was not proved that the respondent acted in good faith in her transaction with Ma Chon ;

(5) that the lower Court failed to frame proper issues ;

(6) that the lower Court failed to give due weight to their evidence ;

(7) that the lower Court ought not to have referred to the record of the proceedings of the Criminal Court ;

(8) that the lower Court was influenced by the decisions in other cases concerning articles disposed of by Ma Chon, and

(9) that the decision of the lower Court was contrary to law and to the weight of evidence and the probabilities.

I have read the record and heard the learned Advocates on both sides at considerable length.

The first and second grounds of appeal are met by a consideration of the principles embodied in sections 230 and 231 of the Contract Act. Respondent bought the ring from Ma Chon believing her to be a principal; but, according to the appellants, Ma Chon was merely an agent with limited powers. But if she was an agent, she was agent of an undisclosed principal and when respondent had paid the money and failed to get back the ring, she was entitled to sue either Ma Chon or the first appellant or both. Similarly, since the first appellant again claims to have been the agent of an undisclosed principal, namely, the second appellant, respondent instead of suing the first appellant alone was entitled to sue both the first and the second appellants and that is what she did. The fact that the second appellant claims to be agent of still another undisclosed principal does not affect respondent's right of suit as against him. It merely gives her a right to sue his principal also if she chooses and she has chosen not to exercise that right. She undoubtedly had a right to sue both the appellants, and, if they have to pay, they may have their remedy against their principal, but that remedy does not concern respondent.

I hold, therefore, that there is nothing in the first two grounds of appeal.

The third ground is admittedly based on the Madras case of Seshappier v. Subramania Chettiar (1) which has already been considered both by my learned predecessor and by the Judicial Commissioner himself in connection with other transactions of Ma Chon's. In Civil Appeal No. 146 of 1916 my learned predecessor distinguished that case on the grounds (1) that it dealt with pawning and not with sale and that the language of section 178 of the Contract Act is different from that of section 10; (2) that in that case it was clear that the person who pawned the jewel got possession of it by means of an offence, and (3) that in that case it was not clear whether or not the transaction on which the suit was based was effected in good faith. The learned Judicial Commissioner before whom the case came in review went further and said that it appeared to him that the Judge who decided the Madras case went beyond the provisions of the law contained in sections 10[2] and 178 of the Contract Act in holding that in such cases the purchaser must prove that by some act or omission the true owner has forfeited his right to recover possession.

A number of cases have been cited before me as showing that the learned Judicial Commissioner was wrong and that the word "possession" is used in sections 108 and 178 of the Contract Act in a special sense.

The earliest of these cases is Greenwood v. Holquette (2), in which it was held that the possession of the hirers of a piano on a hire purchase agreement was not such possession as would validate a sale of the piano by the hirers to an innocent purchaser. The learned Judges who decided that case said that the words "notwithstanding any instructions of the owner to the contrary" in Exception 1 to section 108 of the Contract Act, "appear to show that the possession, which is meant by the first part of the Exception, is a possession which is unqualified, and not to be restricted otherwise than by the owner giving instructions to the person who has it. It is the kind of possession which a factor or an agent has, where the owner of the goods, although he has parted with the possession, may give instructions to the person in possession what to do with the goods..... It is such possession as an owner has, and in such a case it seems to have been intended that the person selling contrary to his instructions should give a title to the buyer, if the buyer acted in good faith. We think the Exception does not apply where there is only a qualified possession, such as a hirer of goods has, or where the possession is for a specific purpose. In such a case the owner has no right to give instructions. The nature of the possession and the powers of the person having it are determined by ..... the contract under which possession was taken."

The next case cited is that of Shankar Murlidhar v. Mohan Lal Jaduram (3) in which a person entrusted with the custody of cattle sold them and the owner was allowed to recover them from an innocent purchaser. In that case the learned Judge said that, "though the general rule of a person's not being able to transfer a right not belonging to him is qualified by Exception I to section 108.....yet it is plain that 'possession by consent of the owner' in that section is far from extending to every case of detention of chattels with the owner's consent. The Exception has particular relation to the cases of persons allowed by owners to have the indicia of property or possession under such circumstances as may naturally induce others to regard them as owners and constituting some degree of negligence or defect of precaution imputable to the true owners."

The next case is that of Seeger v. Hukma Keesa (4), in which a husband was held entitled to recover jewellery belonging to him but kept in the possession of his wife and pledged by her without his knowledge. In that case the learned Chief Justice said that, 'to create a pledge under section 178 of the Indian Contract Act the pledger must be in juridical possession.....that mere custody will not suffice," and that the words of the section "mark a clear distinction between possession and custody."

In the case of Naganada Davay v. Bappu Chettiar (5), the owner was allowed to recover an article of jewellery which he had hired out and which the hirer had pledged. In that case one of the learned Judges said: "The word 'possession' in the section (178) is clearly not intended to cover all cases in which the goods, etc., are in the physical control of the pledger, because the 'possession,' in the first part of the section, is distinguished from the custody of them in the last paragraph of the same section."

The case of Seshappier v. Subramania Chettiar (1), has already been mentioned. In that case, the owner of an article of jewellery gave it to a person to find a purchaser for it on an understanding that the sale was to be made by the owner himself and not by the agent. The person who took the jewel pledged it and the owner was allowed to recover it, the learned Judge remarking "that sections 108 and 178 of the Contract Act.....proceed on the principle that prima facie the rights of the legal owner should be protected unless he has done something to induce innocent purchasers or pledgees into the belief that the intermediate possessor is the true owner: mere bona fides on the part of the purchaser or pledgee is not enough, he will have to prove that by some act or omission the true owner has forfeited his right to recover possession."

The next case is that of Roop Chand Jankidas v. National Bank of India (6), in which certain share certificates with blank transfer deeds which belonged to the Bank and were in the custody of their Head Clerk were sold by him and were held to be recoverable by the Bank from an innocent purchaser on the ground that the word "possession" in Exception I to section 108 of the Contract Act did not include dishonest possession, such as the Clerk's was when he sold the certificates.

After going through all these cases carefully, I agree with the learned Judicial Commissioner that the interpretation which they put on sections 108 and 178 of the Contract Act strains the plain meaning of those sections.

Taking the cases seriatim I note as follows: —

I do not agree with the learned Judges who decided Greenwood v. Holquette (2) that the use of the words 'notwithstanding any instructions of the owner to the contrary" suggest any inference that, in every case covered by the Exception, the possession must be such that the owner is in a position to give instructions. No such inference can possibly arise on any logical method of interpretation.

Similarly, the distinction drawn in Shankar Murlidhar v. Mohan Lal Jadurum (3) between possession and custody in respect of the indicia of property is unreal. Every person who has detention of a chattel has the "indicia of property" in that chattel and although, by reason of extraneous circumstances, such as the fact that he is not a person who is likely to be owner of such a chattel, the inference arising from his having those "indicia of property" may be weakened or destroyed, nevertheless, so far as the chattel itself is concerned, he has all the "indicia of property" which possession of any sort can confer. Further, there is, in my opinion, no foundation whatever in the section itself for the learned Judge's suggestion that, before the Exception can come into operation, there must be any degree of negligence or defect of precaution imputable to the true owners beyond that involved in their consent to another person's possession.

Coming to the case of Seaper v. Hukma Kessa (4), I am entirely unable to see that the fact that the word "custody" as used in the second proviso to section 178 suggests any inference that the word "possession" as used in the earlier part of the section means anything different from what possession ordinarily means. It might, however, be held that a wife's custody of her husband's property, while it is in his house, is not her possession but his, and this is probably what is meant in this particular case by saying that the wife's possession was not "juridical," it being regarded as analogous to the possession of a tenant or a borrower in Roman Law.

Similar remarks apply to the case of Naganada Dovay v. Bappu Chettiar (5), but in that case I am entirely unable to grasp the distinction which is sought to be made between possession and juridical possession. It seems to me clear that in English Law the hirer of an article has "possession" and not that bare custody which a wife may be regarded as having in respect of her husband's goods or which the Clerk of a Bank has in securities which are in the possession of the Bank but are in his care.

The remarks made above on the case of Shankar Murlidhar v. Mohan Lal Jaduram (3) apply with equal force to the case of Seshappier v. Subramania Chettiar (1). I do not think that there is any foundation in the section itself the view that the purchaser has to prove anything beyond the owner's consent to the intermediate possession and his own bona fides, including, of course, the absence of circumstances raising a presumption that the person in possession had no right to sell.

Regarding the case of Roop Chand Jankidas v. National Bank of India (6), all that need be said is that the Clerk in that case was clearly not by the consent of the owner in the particular possession, which enabled him to dispose of the securities and, therefore, the case did not fall within the purview of Exception I to section 108 of the Contract Act.

The decisions in nearly all these cases seem to me to be unconvincing attempts to show that sections 108 and 178 of the Contract Act do not really mean what they say, and that the word "possession" was used in them in a restricted sense. It is common knowledge that the section does not exactly reproduce the provisions of the English Law and that it was the subject of much controversy at the time when the Contract Act was passed. The Commissioners, who originally drafted the section, said, "with regard to goods sold by a person who has no right to sell, the general rule of English Law is, that the owner of the goods retains the ownership notwithstanding his having lost the possession of them and their having been sold to a third person. But from this rule there is an exception in the case of goods sold in open market . . . . It cannot be denied that the subject is difficult. We have to consider, on the one hand, the hardship suffered by an innocent person who loses in this way his right to recover what was his undoubted property. But, on the other hand, still greater weight appears to us to be due to the hardship which a bona fide purchaser would suffer were he to be deprived of what he bought. The former is very often justly chargeable with remissness or negligence in the custody of the property. The conduct of the latter has been blameless. The balance of equitable consideration is, therefore, on the side of a rule favourable to the purchaser; and we think that sound policy with respect to the interest of commerce points to the same conclusion. We have, therefore, provided that the ownership of goods may be acquired by buying them from any person who is in possession of them, if the buyer acts in good faith and under circumstances which are not such as to raise a reasonable presumption that the person in possession has no right to sell them." That was clearly a very wide extension of the English Law and it did not commend itself to the Select Committee who, therefore, omitted the reference to "goods" in Exception I and thus confined the operation of the Exception to the case of goods transferred by certain mercantile documents, the transfer of which had, by mercantile usage, come to be regarded as effecting a transfer of the goods to which the documents referred and was so recognised in English Law. If that amendment had been accepted the provisions of the section would have corresponded with those of the English Law with the omission of the exception in favour of goods sold in open market and of goods sold by a former owner who had remained in possession. But the learned Legislators who passed the Act did not approve of the omission and, therefore, re-inserted the word "goods" in the Exception. The collocation of that word, with the list of mercantile documents which immediately follows it in the Exception, possibly diverted attention from the extremely wide definition of "goods" which had been given in section 76 of the Act and may have led the Legislature to imagine that they were doing little more than giving effect to the Exceptions which were already recognised in English Law, and to overlook the fact that, as passed, the First Exception to section 108 applied practically to any sale of any moveable property by any person in any kind of possession so long as that possession was by consent of the owner and the transferee acted in good faith. It seems inconceivable that the Legislature intended to enact a provision from which it would follow that, if I hand over my bicycle to a friend's servant to be taken to my friend or to the keeper of a bicycle shop to be repaired, I should not be able to recover it in case the servant or shop-keeper subsequently proved dishonest and sold the machine, and, therefore, ever since the Act was passed, the Courts have found it necessary to devise pretexts for excluding from the scope of the Exception cases which were covered by its express terms but which, they assumed, could not possibly have been contemplated as falling within its application. The line which the Courts have taken has been to impose various restrictions on the meaning of the word "possession." In this they have followed the lead given in the case of Greenwood v. Holquette (2) which has come to be regarded as a leading case on the subject. It is, I think, unfortunate that that case was not argued by Counsel. If it had been, I think that the whole course of the subsequent decisions would have been different. It would, in my opinion, have been better if the Courts instead of trying to strain the meaning of the words so as to exclude cases which presumably were not intended to come within the scope of the sections had expressly recognised the fact that the wording of the sections was wider than could possibly have been intended and had pointed out the difficulties which arise with a view to their being amended by legislation. It is to be noted that the Chief Court of the Punjab has not followed the other High Courts in explaining away the meaning of the word "possession" in these sections. In the case of Framjee v. McGregor (7) it held that Exception I of section 108 applied to a case where an owner of horses left the horses in the possession of the person from whom he bought them and that person sold them again to an innocent third party and, although Sir Frederick Pollock in his Commentary on the Contract Act characterised that decision as "too absurd for discussion", it must be remembered that that learned Commentator was an English Lawyer and that the provisions of section 25 (1) of the English Sale of Goods Act specifically provide that where a person, having sold goods, continues in possession of the goods the delivery or transfer by that person to any person receiving the same in good faith and without notice of the previous sale, shall have the same effect as if the person making the delivery or transfer were expressly authorised by the owner of the goods to make the same. To a lawyer, familiar with that enactment and imbued with the principles of law on which that section was based, the decision of the Punjab Court might well appear absurd, but to any one reading section 108 of the Contract Act as it stands and giving its ordinary meaning to the word "possession" I do not think that the absurdity would be apparent. The same Court also held in the case of Abdul Hassan Khan v. Rangi

Lal (8) that a pledge may by the hire-purchaser of a bicycle who had not completed payment of the instalments was valid and, although Pollock clearly disagrees with that decision also, he is constrained to admit that in such a case the hire-purchaser has "juridical possession," and that the terms of the Contract Act, whatever its framer may have intended, support the decision.

Reverting to the present case, I have no hesitation in holding that it is one which, on any view of the law, would fall within the provisions of Exception I to section 108.

Ma Chon admittedly bought and sold diamonds on her own account and also sold larger stones for various diamond merchants on commission sale. It is admitted that, so long as the fixed price was obtained, she had power to conclude the sale of stones sold on commission. She was undoubtedly in possession of the stones in suit by consent of the owner through his various agents and sub-agents, it being the ordinary course of business in that particular trade that agents employ sub-agents. Further, the price paid for the stones in dispute in this case was above the fixed price and, therefore, the sale by her transferred title apart from the provisions of section 108 since she was an agent with full powers so far as this particular transaction was concerned. It is clear, therefore, that there is no basis whatever for the 3rd ground of appeal.

As for the 4th ground, I entirely agree with the lower Court that respondent acted in good faith. Ma Chon was a woman in a good position, being the wife of a responsible Municipal Officer. She had dealt in diamonds for many years and was admittedly trusted by the diamond merchants themselves. The full price was paid for these particular stones and there is nothing whatever to indicate collusion of any sort between respondent and Ma Chon or any want of entire good faith on respondent's part.

As for the 5th ground, I see no reason to believe that the appellants were prejudiced by the form of the issues framed or that they had not full notice of the case they had to meet.

The 6th ground is entirely without foundation and has not been argued in this Court.

As for the 7th ground, all that need be said is that both the appellants in their written statements craved leave to refer to the proceedings of the criminal case, and that if the Court did refer to those proceedings it did so at their express request.

The 8th ground is entirely baseless. The lower Court had an undoubted right to refer to and follow earlier decisions of this Court so far as the circumstances of the cases were similar and there can be no doubt that the circumstances of other sales of stones by Ma Chon were in many respects similar to those of the present sale.

The 9th ground is the usual omnibus ground which means nothing in particular and need not be discussed.

Taking the case as a whole, I am satisfied that the decision of the lower Court was correct and, therefore, I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

AGHA MUHAMMAD KHALIL SHIRAZI, OF MADRAS—DEFENDANT RESPONDENT.

Sale of goods—Principal and agent—Goods sent in excess of quantity ordered—Goods sent of inferior quality—Agent, whether can recover price of goods—Principal, whether bound to accept part performance.

An agent on general grounds is entitled to re-imbursement and indemnity by his principal, but only on the condition that he has acted within the scope of his directions. [p. 973, col. 1.]

SHAMS DIN-MEHR BAKHSH v. AGHA MUHAMMAD KHALIL.

A promisee is not bound to accept part performance of a contract. [p. 973, col. 1.]

Defendant sent an order for 25,000 hides of a particular quality to plaintiff, his agent. Plaintiff sent 37,000 hides of different qualities, of which only a small number corresponded with the quality ordered. Defendant refused to take delivery of the consignment:

Held, (1) that the plaintiff had not substantially complied with defendant's order; [p. 973, col. 1.]

(2) that the defendant was not bound to accept that portion of the consignment the quality of which corresponded with the quality ordered; [p. 973, cols. 1 & 2.]

(3) that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover anything from defendant. [p. , col. .]

First appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Amritsar, dated the 15th May 1916.

The Hon'ble Mr. Fazl-i-Hussain and Mr. Muhammad Rafi, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Abdul Qadir, Abdul Razaq and Duni Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff-appellant, a firm of Amritsar, sued the defendant-respondent, a firm of Madras, for Rs. 19,497-8 being charges and costs of 149 bundles of sheep skins purchased at Amritsar by the plaintiff acting as commission agent for defendant and despatched to Madras where defendant took delivery but subsequently refused to accept the goods on the ground that they were substantially divergent in quality and quantity from the goods ordered.

The District Judge has dismissed the suit holding that the plaintiff firm was not acting as commission agent for the defendant firm; that 37,000 skins despatched by the plaintiff were greatly in excess of the number ordered, and that the skins sent were of inferior quality.

The plaintiff firm has appealed to this Court.

That the plaintiff was acting throughout not as principal but as agent for the defendant is perfectly clear from the correspondence between the parties which preceded and followed the despatch of the goods, but we see no necessity for dealing with this evidence in detail, for it is quite clear from the plaint and pleas that that position was accepted by the parties, and the lower Court's finding that there was no agency is quite unjustified. The defendant did not deny it and in his pleas impliedly admitted it and consequently no issue was struck on the point.

The only questions for decision that remain are whether the plaintiff, in regard to the quantity or quality of the goods, was negligent or guilty of fraud, and if so, to what relief, if any, he is entitled.

The order sent by the defendant to the plaintiff was for one waggon load of mixed sheep skins, free of hair, or in the alternative, one-half waggon of the above quality and one-half waggon of good No. 2, but each denomination was to possess a certain property, namely, 100 skins were to weigh, $1\frac{1}{4}$ maunds; but a margin of two seers on either side was allowed.

It is clear that "mixed sheep skins," free of hair, "weighing $1\frac{1}{2}$ maunds per 100 skins" is a well-known quality in the trade which includes skins of four sizes, but no defective skins and that "good No. 2" is a second quality consisting of the same classes of skins as the former, except that skins of the biggest size are absent and skins of one class lower, but free from holes and cuts, are included.

As to quantity, it is clear from the only other similar transaction between the parties, which preceded that in dispute by only a few weeks, that the parties by one waggon load meant about 25,000 skins (vide letter from plaintiff to defendant, Exhibit D 17, on page 17 of the paper-book) and even on the 16th of September 1912 plaintiff wires to defendant that he is despatching on the morrow some 26,000 odd skins (vide telegram D-5, on page 19).

In Exhibit D-1 (page 16) referring to the despatch of 25,000 skins in one waggon plaintiff asks defendant to order another waggon load and that is how the order in dispute was elicited.

From the foregoing it is clear that the defendant expected to receive, and plaintiff knew his expectation, approximately 25,000 skins. What did plaintiff send? He sent 123 bundles of skins in one full waggon and subsequently 26 other bundles in two separate consignments, i.e., over 37,000 skins.

What was the quality of those consignments? 105 of the bundles weighed not $1\frac{1}{4}$ maunds as ordered but only $1\frac{1}{8}$ maunds, whilst 44 of the bundles weighed only 35 seers each.

Inasmuch as the weight of each bundle of 100 skins determines the average size of those skins, it is obvious that the failure of the plaintiff to fulfil the order of the defendant in the matter of weight involved his failure to fulfil the order in the matter of the average size of the skins. With regard to the 45 bundles which weighed only 35 seers, it is obvious that no attempt at all was made to comply with the terms of defendant's order.

With regard to the quality of the skins irrespective of the element of size, the evidence on the record which seems to be perfectly reliable is to the effect that the bundles one and all contained a high proportion of defective and totally worthless skins and that, in spite of the fact, that in giving his order the defendant had informed the plaintiff that he required only good class medium skins, not for sale in the Madras market, but for tanning purposes in defendant's own tannery.

In these circumstances, we have to decide whether the plaintiff's fulfilment of defendant's order was fraudulent, or if not fraudulent, whether it amounted to a substantial compliance with the terms of that order.

Having regard to the fact that the plaintiff is not merely a commission agent in skins but also deals very extensively in them on his own account and, as his own correspondence shows, keeps a large stock of them, we have great difficulty in avoiding the conclusion that his despatch of the goods above described to defendant was tainted with fraud, but it is unnecessary for us to go so far, for we are clearly of opinion that his action does not amount to anything approaching a substantial compliance with the terms of the order.

In these circumstances, to what relief, if any, is plaintiff entitled? An agent on general grounds is entitled to reimbursement and indemnity by his principal, but only on the condition that he has acted within the scope of his directions. We have considered whether the plaintiff is entitled to any portion of the sum in suit and whether the defendant, who on receipt of the goods immediately telegraphed his disapproval and repudiated the transaction, was bound to accept that portion of the consignment which complied with the conditions of his order and to pay for that portion only. Inasmuch, however, as a promisee is not bound to accept part performance of a contract and as, also, acceptance by the defendant of a portion of the consignment would have led to trouble and complications, and as also, the plaintiff had his own agent in Madras who might have disposed of the goods on his behalf, we do not see that the defendant was in any way bound to accept any portion of the consignment. On the other hand, it is in evidence that plaintiff had been in the habit of selling goods in Madras either through the defendant or through his own agent and had plaintiff taken delivery of the goods as soon as they were repudiated by the defendant and sold them either on his own or on the defendant's account, he would not have lost anything more than he deserved to lose.

For these reasons, we concur in the conclusion of the Court below and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Malicious prosecution—Damages, suit for, maintainability of, against informer—Burden of proof, wrong allocation of, by Trial Court—Correct appreciation of evidence in appeal—Appeal, second—Finding of fact, whether binding.

A suit for damages is maintainable against a person who supplied the information on which a prosecution was launched, though he may not have himself figured as the complainant in the Criminal Court. [p. 975, col. 1.]

Where a Trial Court misdirects itself as to the burden of proof, but the Appellate Court appreciates the evidence from a correct standpoint, the finding of fact arrived at by the Appellate Court must be accepted in second appeal. [p. 975, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary, Subordinate Judge, Cuddalore, in Appeal Suit No. 124 of 1917 (Appeal Suit No. 13) of 1917, on the file of the District Court, South Arcot), preferred against the decree of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Villupuram, in Original Suit No. 25 of 1916 (Original Suit No. 617 of 1915, on the file of the Court of he District Munsif, Tindivanam.

FACTS.—Suit to recover Rs. 500, being the damages sustained by the plaintiff by reason of a malicious prosecution against him by the defendant. The allegations in the plaint were that defendant, falsely and maliciously and without reasonable and probable cause, sent a petition to the District Magistrate, as the result of which security proceedings were started against the plaintiff under section 110 E, Criminal Procedure Code, for habitually committing offences involving breach of the peace, the virtual prosecutor being the defendant himself and the proceedings terminated in the discharge of the plaintiff. The defendant pleaded that the allegations in his petition to the District Magistrate were true, and that he had reasonable and probable cause for apprehending injury by the plaintiff. He further pleaded that, besides sending the petition, he had no hand in the Police investigation and, therefore, not being the actual prosecutor, he was not liable for damages. The District Munsif found that the defendant had reasonable and probable cause in presenting the complaint (petition) and it was not done out of malice or spite; and that "the plaintiff on whom the burden lay heavily of proving that he was innocent and the criminal proceedings were instituted against him out of malice and without reasonable and probable cause has not satisfactorily proved the existence of these ingredients which are essential in a suit of this nature." On the defendant's plea that he was not the prosecutor the District Munsif's finding was as follows:—"The evidence adduced by the plaintiff that defendant was taking an active part in the prosecution of the security case is very meagre and unreliable. The burden lay on the plaintiff to show that the defendant, although the charge-sheet was laid by the Police, actually prosecuted the case by taking an active part in it. In my opinion, the plaintiff has not discharged the burden. It is admitted that defendant did not engage a Pleader for prosecuting the case and, apart from the testimony of plaintiff, there is no evidence that defendant actually instructed the Police Sub-Inspector who conducted the prosecution. From the evidence on record I am inclined to think that the defendant did not take active part in the proceedings that took place subsequent to his complaint. Defendant preferred the complaint to the District Magistrate and the matter must have been referred to the Police for inquiry and the Police, after enquiry, laid charge-sheet before the Joint Magistrate of Tindivanam. In these circumstances, I consider that defendant was not the actual prosecutor and is not liable for damages. I, therefore, find that the proceedings against plaintiff were not instituted by the defendant maliciously and without reasonable and probable cause and the defendant is not liable for damages." On appeal, the Subordinate Judge of Cuddalore confirmed the lower Court's finding on all the above points. After finding that defendant did not act maliciously or without reasonable and probable cause in forwarding the petition to the District Magistrate, the Subordinate Judge observed: "I have to observe that, in the light of the recent ruling in Gopalakrishna Kudva v. Bangle Narayana Kamthy (1), the plaintiff must be considered to have given prima facie proof of his innocence by showing that the prosecution ended in his discharge by the Magistrate who tried the security case." On the plea that the defendant was not the actual prosecutor, the Subordinate Judge remarked, "I hold that, beyond sending the petition (Exhibit A) to the District Magistrate praying therein that proceedings under sections 107 and 110, Criminal Procedure Code, may be taken against the plaintiff and eight others, the defendant did not subsequently take any part in the proceedings or assume the conduct of the case . . . . . I think, that the contention of the respondent's Pleader that a distinction should be made between a complaint or information laid for an offence being brought home to an accused for his conviction and a petition for an investigation and taking of proceedings under the security sections of the Criminal Procedure Code has some force in it. . . . . The question in each case will be whether the defendant really initiated the prosecution or, even though he may not have initiated it, whether he, subsequent to the initiation took an active part in the prosecution or assumed the conduct of it. Following the principle of the rulings in Kandasami Asari v. Subramania Pillai (2) and Narasinga Row v. Muthaya Pillai (3), I hold that, in the present case the defendant did not really initiate the prosecution but that the Police initiated it." The Subordinate Judge, therefore, held that plaintiff had no cause of action and dismissed his suit with costs. The plaintiff preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

Mr. R. Kuppaswami Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. V. K. Venkatarama Aiyar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The lower Courts were wrong in relying on Narasinga Row v. Muthaya Pillai (3) for their conclusion that the defendant was not the prosecutor in the criminal case and hence not liable as such. [See Periya Goundan v. Kuppa Goundan (4).]

But they have concurrently found that there was reasonable and probable cause for the prosecution. The District Munsif might have misdirected himself on the question of burden of proof as regards one of the points involved (namely, that plaintiff was innocent of the charge of being liable to be called upon to furnish security) but the Subordinate Judge points out that error of the Munsif, quoting Gopalakrishna Kudva v. Bangle Narayana Kamthy (1), and has considered the evidence from his own correct standpoint and concurred in the Munsif's finding.

We must accept the finding of the lower Appellate Court on this point. So accepting, we dismiss the second appeal with costs.

Messrs. Khurshaid Husnain and Ray T. N. Sahai, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Fakhruddin and Sambhu Saran, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit between two cousins who formerly belonged to a joint family. A partition took place in 1885 and 1886 by which the family residence was divided; the plaintiff-respondent was given a portion of the house, to the west of which lay some land which was left joint. On a part of this land the defendant, apparently with the consent of the co-sharers, built his house, the remainder lying waste and unoccupied. This waste land is described in the map annexed to the plaint as "Sehan and flat". To the east of this, and on the west of the plaintiff's house, were two privies belonging to the plaintiff; and, according to the plaintiff's case, the sweeper had access to these privies over this waste land. A screen wall was erected to the west of the privies by the plaintiff in the middle of which an opening was left. The defendant has now built a verandah on the west side of this open land and has closed the opening in the screen wall and has built another screen wall between two privies of his own lying to the south-west of the premises, the result of which is that access to the plaintiff's privies through the open land has been completely cut off.

The plaintiff brought this suit for the removal of these obstructions. The Munsif passed a decree ordering the defendant to remove the screen wall which he had erected and to make an opening in the plaintiff's screen wall sufficient to admit of access by that way. On appeal to the District Judge the decree of the Munsif was upheld.

Two points were urged in this appeal. It was contended, in the first place, that the case in the plaint is a case of easement and that no easement has been proved. On behalf of the respondent it was admitted that the plaint was not artistically drawn, that the word easement which there occurs ought not to have been used, and that the case is not a case of easement at all. In the second place, it was argued for the appellant that if the case is treated, as it has been treated, as a case of user of joint land the plaintiff is not entitled to a decree, because he is seeking to establish a user of joint land which is not for the purposes of the joint land but for the purposes of his exclusive land on the east thereof, and that, if it is repugnant to the feelings of the plaintiff that the sweeper should go through his inner appartments, it is repugnant to the feelings of the defendant that the sweeper should pass through his house, and that consequently the reason which has been advanced in support of the decree can equally be urged against it. The latter portion of the argument has no force. The land was undoubtedly used by the plaintiff's sweeper as a means of access to the plaintiff's privies before it was enclosed by the defendant, and the defendant, well-knowing that practice, enclosed the land and if, in doing so, he infringed the plaintiff's rights, he cannot plead any inconvenience to himself if the original state of things is restored.

The real question in the case is, whether the plaintiff's rights have been infringed. The appellant relies most strongly on the decision in Anant Ramrav v. Gopal Balvant (1) where, after observing that the exercise of the Courts' jurisdiction to grant relief by way of injunction in disputes between members of a Hindu family must be attended with very great difficulty, Sargent, C. J., said that he did not think that there would be any practical objection to doing so in those particular cases in which, as between tenants in common, the Courts grant that form of relief; and that, following the practice of the Courts of Equity, that would be confined to acts of waste, illegitimate use of the family property and acts amounting to ouster. Reference was also made to the case of Dwijendra Narain Roy v. Purnendu Narain Roy (2), where it was laid down that the test is whether the defendant has made use of the joint property in a way consistent with the continuance of joint ownership and possession. The respondent contends that this is a case of ouster and that his access to the joint land has been completely cut off. It is true that this view of the case is not set forth with any great clearness in the plaint. The suit is not expressly framed as a suit arising out of the ouster of the plaintiff, but placing a benevolent construction on the pleadings I think it may be taken that this is what was meant. The plaintiff exercised his undoubted rights of ownership and possession over this piece of waste land by using it for the purposes of the access of the sweeper to the privies in his house and in so doing he exercised ownership in a manner which was innocent and inoffensive, until the defendant altered the condition of the land. As the result of the defendant's building on it, the land has ceased to be available to the plaintiff for this purpose. In the case of Lloyd v. Musammat Bibee Sogra (3) it was laid down, "that it is impossible to contend, with any semblance of reason or justice, that any one co sharer in an undivided property has a right to possess himself of any portion of it to the exclusion and without the authority of his co sharers and to deal with it.....as he will, without their sanction". And, similarly, in Sheo Pershad Singh v. Leelah Singh (4) it was

(1) 19 B. 269; 10 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 182.
(2) 5 Ind. Cas. 171; 11 C. L. J. 189.
(3) 25 W. R. 313.

held that a co-sharer cannot materially alter the condition of the property without obtaining the sanction of his co-sharers. This is what the defendant has done and his act amounts to ouster of the plaintiff from the land in the sense that he is no longer able to use it in the only way in which it is of any use to him.

In my judgment, therefore, the decrees of the Munsif and of the District Judge are right and should be maintained. The appeal is dismissed with costs. The cross appeal was not pressed and is dismissed.

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), s. 37, object of—Companies Act (VII of 1913), s. 231—Fraudulent preference by company - Person who is not creditor, whether can impeach transfer.

The object of section 37 of the Provincial Insolvency Act is to protect the interests of the whole body of creditors over whom an undue preference has been given in favour of other creditors. [p. 978, col.]

The same principle applies to a transaction which is sought to be impeached under section 231 of the Companies Act, so that a disposition of a company's property cannot be impeached on the ground of fraudulent preference except on behalf of the general body of the creditors [p. 978, col .]

Therefore, a person who is not a creditor of a company, but is a debtor, cannot impeach a transfer made by the company on the ground of undue preference. [p. 978, col. 2.]

First appeal from the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, First Class, Ludhiana, dated the 18th June 1917.

Mr. Manohar Lal, for the Appellant.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The defendant in this case, Lala Bir Bhan, had dealings with the Industrial Bank of Ludhiana and executed two promissory notes in their favour, one for Rs. 3,055, dated the 28th August 1913, and one for Rs. 2,964-9-5, dated the 17th September 1913. In these pro-notes he promised to pay to the Industrial Bank or their order within their office at Ludhiana. The first pro-note provided for interest at the rate of 9 per cent. and the second one for interest at the rate of $8\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. per annum.

It appears that the Bank was in financial difficulties and had several creditors, one of whom was the present plaintiff, Lala Jagat Ram, and in part payment of his claim the Bank through their Managing Director, sold both the pro-notes to him. The plaintiff now sues the defendant, claiming the principal sums due under the pro-notes and interest at the rates given in them. The Bank was made a pro forma defendant but the name of the Bank was afterwards struck off at the request of the plaintiff. The lower Court has decreed the principal amount due and interest at the contracted rates up to the date of institution of the suit and interest at 6 per cent. per annum from the date of institution till the date of jndgment. The defendant appeals, pleading that the suit should be dismissed, and the plaintiff has put in cross-objections asking for interest at the contracted rates till the date of realisation. Several grounds of appeal have been given up in this Court, Mr. Manohar Lal admitting that he cannot support the pleas that the defendant made payment towards the pro notes, that the rate of interest agreed upon was only 0-8-0 per cent. per month, or that the Managing Director had no power to transfer the pro-notes to the plaintiff. In fact, the only point that has been argued is that as the Bank went into liquidation within three months of the execution of the pro-notes, the transfer in favour of the plaintiff should be regarded as a transfer made with a view to giving the plaintiff preference over the other creditors of the Bank and that the transaction is, therefore, invalid and should be disregarded by the Court. Section 231 of the Indian Companies Act lays down that any transfer which would, if made by an individual, be deemed in his insolvency a fraudulent preference, shall, if made by a company, be deemed, in the event of its being wound-up, a fraudulent preference of its creditors and be invalid accordingly. The aforesaid section also provides that, "for the purposes of this section the presentation of a petition for winding up in the case of a winding up by or subject to the supervision of the Court, and a resolution for winding up in the case of a voluntary winding up shall be deemed to correspond with the act of insolvency in the case of an individual." Turning to section 37 of the Insolvency Act we read that, "every transfer of property made by a person unable to pay his debts as they become due from his own money in favour of any creditor with a view of giving that creditor a preference over the other creditors, shall, if such person is adjudged insolvent on a petition presented within three months after a date thereof, be deemed fraudulent and void as against the Receiver and shall be annulled by the Court." On the strength of these sections Mr. Manohar Lal argues that the transfer was made in favour of the plaintiff with a view of giving him a preference over the other creditors of the Bank and should be regarded as of no effect. The two sections above quoted must, in our opinion, be read together and when interpreting what is meant by the words in section 231 "be invalid accordingly" we think we must be guided by, what seems to us, the clear object of section 37 of the Insolvency Act. In section 37 the words are "be deemed fraudulent and void as against the Receiver." The object of this section seems clearly to be to protect the interests of the whole body of creditors over whom an undue preference has been given in favour of other creditors. Accordingly, it has been held in Willmott v. London Celluloid Co. (1) and Willmott v. London Celluloid Co. (2), that a disposition of a company's property cannot be impeached on the ground of fraudulent preference except on behalf of the general body of the creditors. See also Lindley on Companies, 6th Edition, Volume II, page 901. The same view has been held in Mohandas Thakurdas v. Tikamdas Hotchand (3).

Mr. Manohar Lal himself admits that one creditor alone could not impeach the transfer on the ground of undue preference. It seems clear to us that if one creditor alone could not invoke the aid of section 231 of the Companies Act to impeach the transaction, a fortiori a person who is not a creditor of the Bank but only a debtor, cannot do so. This is the only point which has been argued before us, and the appeal accordingly must fail.

As regards the cross-objections, we can see no reason why interest should not be allowed up to the date of realisation. We decline, however, to enhance the rate beyond that of 6 per cent. per annum which is the usual rate of interest allowed by the Courts in such cases.

The appeal is dismissed with costs. The cross-objections are so far accepted that the sum decreed will bear interest at 6 per cent. per annum from the date of institution of the suit till realisation.

The Munagala Zemindari in the Kistna District is impartible, and succession thereto is regulated by the rule of primogeniture. [p. 983, col. 1.]

The succession of the widow of a Zemindar to his estate and of her daughter after her amounts to a denial of the claim of the junior branches of the family that the estate is either joint family property or owned by the family as tenants-in-common, and the possession of the daughter from the date of her succession is adverse to, and exclusive of, the claims of the other branches of the family within the meaning of Article 144 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act. Consequently, a suit for the partition of the estate, if brought beyond the period prescribed by that Article, would be barred by limitation. [p. 985, cols. 1 & 2.]

Article 127 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act, which covers suits by a person excluded from joint family property to enforce a right to a share therein, has no application to such a suit. [p. 985, col. 1.]

An authority to adopt executed in a Native State by a person domiciled therein is not inadmissible in evidence in a suit in British India by reason merely of its non-registration, as the Registration Act has no application to documents executed outside British India. [p. 986, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decrees of the District Court, Kistna, at Masulipatam, in Original Suits Nos. 50 and 45 of 1895.

Messrs. K. Srinivasa Aiyengar, P. Somasundaram and P. Narayanamurthi, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble The Advocate-General, Messrs. V. Lakshminarayana, K. Koti Reddi, Hon'ble Mr. T. Rangachariar, Messrs. S. Varadachariar, A. Krishnaswami Iyer and O. Rama Rao, for the Respondents in Appeal Suit No. 426 of 1914.

JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, C. J.—These are appeals from decrees in two suits which were tried together and disposed of by one judgment, Original Suit No. 30 of 1893 and Original Suit No. 38 of 1895, in the Subordinate Court of Ellore, re-numbered Original Suits Nos. 45 and 56 of 1895 in the District Court of Kistna.

In the first suit the plaintiffs sued at first as members of an undivided family to recover the Zemindari of Munagala from the 1st defendant, the Court of Wards, and the 2nd defendant, the alleged adopted son of the daughter of the last male owner, who died in 1854, on the ground that they had wrongfully taken possession of it on the death of the daughter in 1892. At a late stage, they filed an additional written statement in which they claimed, no doubt with reference to the plea of limitation, not as members of an undivided family, but on the footing that the joint family had become divided in status, and that in law all the family properties including this had been all along in their possession as tenants-in-common.

The other suit for practically the same reliefs was filed by the members of the family who claimed to be the next reversioners if the estate was impartible. For some reason which is not explained, possibly because of deaths among the parties and delay in bringing in the legal representatives, these suits were not disposed of by the District Court until March and April 1904, when the then District Judge dismissed the first suit without trial on the ground that the plaintiffs had entirely altered their cause of action in the additional written statement, and the second suit because the plaintiff had already claimed the same relief in the other suit. The judgments of the District Judge in the two suits were set aside and the suits remanded by the High Court, by orders of December 1909. Both suits were then tried and disposed of by Mr. F. A. Coleridge, District Judge of Kistna, by a common judgment on the 14th April 1914, more than twenty years after the filing of the first suit, and the appeals came on for hearing before us nearly five years after that judgment. The only explanation for these lamentable and almost unprecedented delays at every stage appears to be that many parties died and much time was taken in bringing in their legal representatives and serving them.

The District Judge tried the case very carefully and dealt fully with the various questions which arise in a very lengthy judgment which might, as he explains, have been shorter if he had not been writing against time so as to dispose of the case himself instead of leaving it to his successor. He has shown, in a careful examination of the evidence, that the plaintiffs have endeavoured to support their case by a number of spurious documents manufactured for the purposes of the case, and I may say at once that his conclusions in this respect have not been disturbed by the arguments addressed to us. I do not, therefore, propose to go over this ground again.

There are three important issues in the case, whether the estate is impartible, whether the 2nd defendant was duly adopted by the daughter of the last Zemindar, and whether the suit is barred by limitation. The District Judge has found on all these points for the defendants and has accordingly dismissed the suits.

The District of Kistna, in which Munagala is situated, forms part of the Northern Circars, which was at first under the Hindu Rajas, and then formed part of the Kingdom of Golconda which was conquered by Aurungzeb at the close of the seventeenth century. Subsequently, the Circars were included in the Subah of the Deccan and were governed by the Nizam until the middle of the eighteenth century, when they passed for a time into the hands of the French. Then, after Col. Forde's successful operations, Lord Clive obtained a Sanad from the Imperial Court at Delhi assigning them to the East India Company

Mr. James Grant, in his Political Survey of the Northern Circars, which was submitted to Warren Hastings in 1784 and is re printed as an appendix to the Fifth Report, Volume III, page 1 of the new Calcutta Edition, gives a full account of the condition of the country from the time of the Golconda dynasty which was overthrown by Aurangzeb in 1687. There is no reason to doubt that at the time the District or Pergunah of Munagala was in the possession of the last survivor of a very ancient Reddi family who held it as Deshmuk or Chaudhari under the ruling power. Mr. Grant's view as to the position of these Deshmuks and Chowdaris is very similar to that taken by Mr. Stirling in 1821 in his report on Cuttack on which the Privy Council based their judgment in Rama Kanta Das Mahapatra v. Shamanand Das Mahapatra (1). They were generally in the position of renters who, in consideration of the revenue, military and police services, were allowed certain Satarum or rent free lands in different parts of the district together with a fixed share of the collections. Sometimes the hereditary renter might be the head of a once ruling family, and, even when he was not, the office tended to become hereditary in the family of the holder, but the tenure was liable to be put an end to by the ruling power. The fact that the office was hereditary and held for some generations by the senior member of the family was held insufficient in the case last mentioned to prove a special custom of impartibility among the descendants of the holder with whom the British Government effected a settlement, so as to derogate from the statutory rule that, in the absence of custom, the estate was to be descendible according to the ordinary rules of inheritance.

Their Lordships observed: "They show, indeed, that the office of Chowdhari was held for many generations by a member of the family and that to the holder of that office certain lands were assigned as a part of his remuneration. But the grant was of an office only, and to an individual, to be held during good behaviour. It was clearly revocable at the pleasure of the sovereign, by whom it might be conferred, not merely on the eldest son, but upon any member of the family, or, indeed, on anybody. In the nature of things, the office could only be held by one person at a time, and, as Mr. Stirling points out, such offices were "generally heritable;" but these considerations, though they may suggest a presumption, are not sufficient to establish a right. For this purpose the evidence must be clear and unambiguous, which, in this case, it is not. Besides, it is hard to see how a family custom of succession to an estate not absolutely owned by the family could ever have existed." Rama Kanta Das Mahapatra v. Shamanand Das Mahapatra (1).

This decision, which was based on the facts of the particular case, must, however, be applied with caution, because a decision of this Court based on very similar grounds as regards the Zemindari of Devarakota, which is also in the Kistna District, was reversed by the Privy Council in Mallikarjuna v. Durga (2). Their Lordships considered it unnecessary to go back further than 1766, the date of the cession to the East India Company. They referred to the fact that before the Permanent Settlement the rights of the Zamindar had been recognised by the Company as opposed to the view of the High Court that changes of possession of the Zamindari were simply acts of administration, and, later in their judgment, they laid stress on the fact that the permanent Sanad issued under Regulation XXV of 1802 was a recognition of such hereditary right.

They said that Ankadu, the grantee, "thus acquired a permanent property in the land at a fixed assessment, but there was no grant of the land, and the rule of succession to it was not altered. The Estate remained entire, and there is no evidence of any intention of the Government to alter the nature of the tenure." In effect, they held that, even before the Permanent Settlement, the Zemindars had an hereditary estate to which the custom of succession by primogeniture could and did attach.

From 1766 the proprietary right of the Zemindar of Munagala does not seem to have been questioned. The name of Keesara Lutchey is to be found in the list of Zamindars in the Northern Circars in the Minutes of Consultation of the Government of Fort Saint George for 1766, Exhibit X. The Company, no doubt, dealt with her as the mother and guardian of the minor, Keesara Venkataramanah, the fourth Zemindar, in the pedigree A-1, to whom the Cowle, Exhibit D, was granted. The fact that the Company at the outset dealt with the mother of the minor as head of the family is a strong evidence both of their recognition of his proprietary interests and of the custom of impartibility in the family. Exhibit D 1, dated 12th April 1771, was granted in 1771 by the Governor of Fort Saint George fixing the assessment for three years for the Pergunah of Munagala then in his possession. In Exhibit X (a), which is an extract from the Minutes of Consultation of 31th August 1774, he is included in a list of Zamindars with whom tribute had been settled. Exhibit A is a pedigree of the "Keesarvar family of Moonagalah Pargunah" presented to Government at the time of the Permanent Settlement. Venkata Narasimah, aged 44, is shown as the "present Desmook." Exhibit XII, dated 21st January 1803, is a letter from the Collector reporting his death and stating that he had left a son, Kodandaramiah, "to whose succession to his father's estate I perceive no objection." The letter referred to the receipt of a permanent Cowle or Sanad for delivery to the Munagala Zamindar, and reported the Zamindar's death in order that the necessary alteration might be made. The son's name was accordingly substituted in the permanent Sanad, Exhibit XI, which recognised him as Zamindar and authorised him "to hold in perpetuity to your heirs, successors and assigns at the permanent assessment herein named the Zamindari of Moonagalah." As observed in the Devarakota case, there was no fresh grant but the proprietary right of the Zamindar was recognised and confirmed at a fixed assessment. In my opinion, in this, as in the Devarakota case, there was before the Permanent Settlement an hereditary property in this Zamindari to which the custom of primogeniture could attach, and I think that on this ground the case is distinguishable from the more recent decision in Rama Kanta Das Mahapatra v. Shamanand Das Mahapatra (1). If it were to be held that, prior to the Permanent Settlement, the Zamindars were only Deshmuks with no proprietary interest in the Zamindari and that the Sanad bestowed the Zamindari as private property on Kodandaramiah and his heirs descendible according to the ordinary rules of succession and, therefore, partible, this would be fatal to the claims of the plaintiffs who are not descended from him but claim as his collaterals. In that case the Zamindari was his self acquisition, and the 2nd defendant, if his adoption be proved, would be entitled to succeed as daughter's son of the last male owner. On the other hand, if the Sanad only confirmed a previously existing proprietary interest, then it must be held, on the authority of Stree Rajah Yanumula Venkayamah v. Stree Rajah Yanumula Boochia Vankondora (3), that the Sanad enured for the benefit of the family according to their interests, and did not deprive them of a right of partition if the estate was joint and partible. There is no reason to doubt that in the seventeenth century Munagala was held by the head for the time being of an ancient family as Deshmook or Chaudhari under the Golconda kings, and it may possibly be that the family itself was descended from former rulers. According to the tradition, which there is no reason to doubt, on the death of the last of the Reddis shortly before 1693 his widowed daughter-in-law secured it for her own family known as the Keesara family to which the parties belong. Exhibit IX of the year 1693, not 1725 as the District Judge supposed, is a written summons in Persian and Telugu. The Persian part bears the seal of the servant of the Emperor Aurangzeb or Alamgir (the name appears in the Telugu portion as Buda Chidanand) and calls on Keesara Mukund, the common ancestor of the parties, as Zemindar, to present himself with an armed force. The Telugu part is to the same effect but states that the Sardar is coming to punish the rebel Asway Row. This document appears to prove that Mukund was the recognised Zemindar of the District in 1693. According to the plaintiffs he was the second of the three brothers to whom their sister, the widowed daughter-in-law of the last Reddi, transferred half the Zemindari in 1690. The other half, they state, had been alienated by the last Reddi himself in 1684 and was bought back by the three brothers in 1705. The Zemindari was thus the joint acquisition of the three brothers and always remained joint family property. The originals of these deeds are not forthcoming but Exhibit BB series, a list of useful documents connected with the estate in the possession of the Court of Wards in 1893, includes such documents which are not now forthcoming. As secondary evidence, the plaintiffs produced from the Oriental Manuscripts Library a book of transcriptions from manuscripts deposited in the collection which included these three documents and also an incomplete kyfiat, Exhibit C3, forwarding them to some authority, probably the Collector as agent of the Court of Wards. The contents show that the kyfiat, if genuine, was written between 1816, when an amin was put in possession of the estate, and 1818, when it was handed over to the ward on his attaining majority. The District Judge was under the impression that the manuscripts copied into his book came from the well-known Mackenzie collection, but this is negatived by the date. Colonel Mackenzie, as appears from the introduction to the printed catalogue of his manuscripts in Madras, left the Northern Circars where he had collected manuscripts in 1807. He afterwards served in the expedition to Java, and made the collections there which are now in the India Office. He did not return to the Circars, and cannot have collected these documents. It has, therefore, not been explained how the copies which were transcribed into the book produced got into the Oriental Manuscripts Library here. Exhibit C of the year 1687 purports to be a transfer by the last Reddi of half of his Chaudhari Mirasi of the Munagala Pergunah for pags. 500 and provides that the transferees Siddalooru Venganna and Ramanna and their posterity are to discharge in perpetuity the office of Chaudhari. It appears that in the Bombay Presidency lands attached as endowments to offices and the offices themselves were often the subject of transfer, see Adrishappa v. Gurushidappa (4), but it is not shown that it was so on this side of India, where the general rule is that both the offices and the endowments are inalienable. It is not suggested that the transferees got into office under this grant. Exhibit IX shows that Mukunda was the Zemindar in 1693 and Exhibit C, on which the plaintiffs rely, is a copy of a deed of gift of 1690 by the daughter-in-law reciting that the Desaigiriship was in her enjoyment and transferring it to her three brothers, Keesara Peddi Reddi, Keesara Mukunda and Royappah.

It is not easy to reconcile this with the summons of 1693, Exhibit IX, which shows that the second of the three brothers was the recognised Zemindar although, according to C-2, the eldest brother Peddi Reddi survived until 1705. C-2 which is dated in that year purports to be a transfer by the representatives of Siddalooru Venganna and Ramanna to the three brothers, Peddi Reddi, Mukunda and Royappah, of the share of the Chaudhariship of Munagala which Venganna and Ramanna had purchased, not as in C-1 from the last Reddi, but from Nagappa Garu and another who, according to this deed, possessed a share in the Chaudhariship. According to the statement in the kyfiat Exhibit C-3 the Siddalooru family, not only never enjoyed the office but were expelled from the country for adhering to rebels and were living in exile at Conjeevaram, near Madras, when the three brothers, one of them the recognised Zemindar, arranged to pay Pagodas 2,000 for their unsubstantial rights and sent this sum to them in exile at Conjeevaram. It seems an extraordinary story, and I am not prepared to place much reliance on these documents which are first heard of in connection with a dispute between the Court of Wards and the family, between the years 1816 and 1818, as evidence that the Zemindari became the joint family property of the three brothers. It is wrothy of observation that all the pedigrees begin with Mukunda and do not include the name of his alleged brothers, Peddi Reddi and Royappah.

As to the custom of impartibility in this family, I agree with the District Judge that it is established by the evidence. The pedigree, Exhibit A, appended to the Collector's Report of 1824, Exhibit F, shows that the succession was according to the custom of primogeniture, the names of the successive Zemindars or Deshmooks being inserted in circles marked yellow to distinguish them from the other members of the family. As I have already pointed out, in 1786 the Company dealt with Lutchey, the mother of the minor Zemindar, and this is also evidence of recognition of the custom. Exhibit XII shows that at the death of Venkatanarasimha in 1803 his brother Booloka was alive, and it may be gathered from the letter that he did not claim as the eldest member of the joint family, that the permanent Sanad should be in his name but was willing to superintend the conduct of his young nephew Kodandaramiah to whom the Sannad was given.

Kodandaramiah died in 1814, and the estate was taken charge of by the Court of Wards under Regulation V of 1804 without objection, which had no authority to take charge unless the estate belonged to the minor. Exhibit XIII reports that the surviving cousin of the deceased declared the minor was the rightful inheritor and that his rights were fully acknowledged by the cousin of the deceased. Exhibit XIII (a) contains a pedigree (torn) and a statement taken from them. With reference to Kodandaramiah, the Istimrar Zemindar, the pedigree states that, although he was younger than his four uncles, the Sanad was bestowed upon him according to the former usage of their Samasthanam. This is the clearest recognition of impartibility. The statement says that, on his death-bed, Kodandaramiah commended the junior members to obey Venkataramiah who was the eldest of his uncles and they stated that according to usage the Zemindari should be in the name of Kodandaramiah's minor son, and that "the right of the Zemindar should be vested in him," and they could manage for him. This was signed by Nos. 2, 17, 27 and 34 in the pedigree. The eldest Dayadi accepted the office of Manager under the Court of Wards but, beyond paying the Kists, failed to account for the collections. The Collector also reports that it was set up that the property in the Nizam's territories belonged to another branch of the family, and he vainly attempted to obtain particulars about it through the Resident at Hyderabad. All he could ascertain was that the Keesara family had for a very long time enjoyed the Russoms and Savarams of a Zemindari of 13 villages in the Cumbummet Havelly or Perganah under the title of Deshmook, Exhibit I (b), dated 7th October 1915. As he could not get the member of the family in the management to account, the Collector removed him from office and put in an Amin, Exhibit XIV (b), 4th June 1816. It was at this stage that the kyfiat, Exhibit C-3, if genuine, was submitted in which it is sought to lay a foundation for representing the property as belonging to the whole family and the documents C, C-1 and C-2 were put forward in support of this case, while, at the same time, it was not denied that the estate had been ruled by Mukundappa. There are numerous inaccurate statements in the document. It is clearly an incomplete copy of the original, if any, and is, in my opinion, open to considerable suspicion having regard to the time when it came into existence. The estate was handed back to the Zemindar with the outstanding balance on his attaining majority on 5th January 1818, Exhibit XIV (c) and the junior members do not seem to have taken any exception to this.

In 1824 the Collector of Kistna presented a report on the Zamindaris in his District and his report on this Zamindari is the strongest evidence in favour of the plaintiffs. It is based on the old pedigree in the office, no doubt, Exhibit A-3, the one put in connection with the permanent Sanad and a new one "recently furnished by the present Zamindar together with the required explanation." After repeating the story of the acquisition by Mukunda and his two brothers, "it states that it is in the enjoyment of the descendants of Mukundappa as the two persons died without issue. Vankatanarasimha Rao, the present Zamindar, is the sixth person from the said Mukundappa. Although there were second sons in every generation of this family, yet it appears that no division of the Taluq was ever made between them, but the profits derived from it were enjoyed by all reserving only to the head of their family the title of Deshmook or Zemindar." Having regard to the facts that no such claim as this was put forward in 1803 or again in 1814, and to the fact that the estate balance was handed over to the Zamindar on attaining his majority in 1818 I cannot help doubting whether this information was not supplied to the Collector by the junior members of the family rather than by the Zamindar. This suspicion is enhanced by what took place on his death in 1835. He adopted a boy on his death-bed and by his Will, Exhibit H 2, appointed the boy's natural father as his guardian. The Will directed him to continue to provide for the four families, the descendants of the Istimrar's uncles. Exhibit H-1 is an arji addressed by the Zamindar to the Collector in which he asked that the Zamindari should be placed in the management of the Court of Wards and enclosed a bhootad list or list of allowances to be paid which, in my opinion, included the payments to be made to the junior branches for maintenance. The list is not forthcoming but some particulars of it are to be found in Exhibit H. The report, Exhibit H-3, makes arrangements for the management and estimates that a balance will be available for the Zamindar on attaining majority. It does not appear that on this occasion the family put forward any such claims as are stated in Exhibit F. Exhibits X I and XVI (a) show the difficulties which arose, and that the boy's natural father was placed in management under Regulation V of 1804. The fact that, on the occasion of the minorities in 1814 and 1835, the Court of Wards took possession on behalf of the minor without objection from the members of the junior branches is strongly against the plaintiffs' case, because, if it was joint family property, the senior adult male would have been entitled to manage. When the minor came of age in 1849 he was necessarily under the influence of his natural father who belonged to one of the junior branches. The properties in the Nizam's Dominions had been outside the Court of Wards' jurisdiction during his long minority and disputes appear to have at once arisen about them. In these circumstances, he joined in Exhibit K which provided for the management both of the Zamindari and of the Hyderabad properties by the Zamindar and a member of one of the junior branches for a period of fifteen years on what I will take to be terms of equal sharing. Exhibit K was modified by certain other agreements during his lifetime. At the time of his death there were disputes about to be referred to arbitration and, as appears from Exhibit R, dated 29th January 1855, at the time of his death he was contending that the villages had been obtained from him by fraud, intimidation, and intrigue. Exhibit K was only for 15 years and the Zamindar died about five years after its execution. On his death in 1854 his widow was put in possession by the Revenue Authorities as next heiress, apparently according to the opinion of the Pundits that the nearest heir to the estate of a person divided from his co-heirs was his widow, Exhibit R, and set up an authority to adopt under a Will. One of the junior members then filed a suit to recover his one-tenth share of the estate treating it as partible. This was traversed in the re-joinder put in by the widow, the 1st defendant, which has been exhibited as Exhibit XIX. The widow entered into a razinamah with the junior branches which was embodied in a decree, Exhibit W, after the objections of her mother-in-law, the 2nd defendant, had been overruled. The decree provided that the Gnatis should assent to the adoption by the widow pursuant to her husband's Will of Venkataraghava Rao, son of one of the Gnatis, that an annual allowance should be paid to each of the five branches and the balance of the collections should be deposited in Court on account, as I understand, of the Estate until the adopted boy attained majority.

It was argued before us that the impartibility of the Estate was acknowledged by this consent decree and that it barred the present suit. There would have been more force in this contention if the decree had directed that the balance should be deposited in Court on behalf of the minor until he attained majority. Possibly that was the provision in the original razinamah which is not forthcoming but it is by no means so clear in the consent decree. Whatever be the effect of the consent decree it did not, in my opinion, affect the possession which the widow had taken as heiress of her husband.

The boy who claimed to have been taken in adoption sued the widow to recover possession of the Zemindari in Original Suit No. 2 of 1863 in the District Court of Guntur. The widow died in the same year and her daughter, the alleged adoptive mother of the 2nd defendant in this suit, was brought on the record in place of the widow and also took possession of the Zemindari which she enjoyed till her death in 1892, the boy's suit having been finally dismissed by this Court on 3rd August 1872, Exhibit A X.

Now, the succession of the widow of the late Zemindar and of her daughter after her was a clear denial of the claim of the junior branches that the estate was either joint family property or owned by the family as tenants in common. The possession of the daughter from 1868 onwards was, in my opinion, clearly adverse to the claim of the junior branches that it was joint family property. Their case now is that the different branches had become divided by the suit of 1857 or earlier, and, if this is so, they are not, in my opinion, governed by Article 127 which covers suits by a person excluded from joint family property to enforce a right to a share therein. This Article, in my opinion, applies to suits by one or more members of a joint family against other members to enforce a right to share therein against other co-parceners, and does not apply to a suit brought after partition by some members of the family against others when they have become tenants in-common and the exclusion is, therefore, not from joint family property within the meaning of the Article. Neither condition is to be found here. The suit is not against another member of the joint family but against the 2nd defendant claiming through his mother as heir to the last Zemindar, and the plaintiff does not now claim to be entitled to a partition as a member of a joint family, but as one of several tenants-in-common. If the suit can be regarded as brought by the plaintiff as the heir of one of the tenants-in-common against the 2nd and other defendants as heirs of the other tenants-in common, then the suit must be governed by the Article 144. In this view the possession of the Zemindar's daughter from 1868 to 1892 must, in my opinion, be regarded as adverse to and exclusive of the claims of the other branches of the family and adverse to them from the first within the meaning of Article 144. She did not enter as a tenant-in-common with the members of the junior branches, but as heiress to her father and entitled as such to succeed to the impartible Zemindari. The case of the junior branches from 1868 to 1882 was, not that the Zemindari was partible but that the succession went not to the widow and daughter of the late Zemindar but to the senior Dayadi, and it was only in 1882 that they altered their position and renewed the claim that the estate was partible, a position they varied during the course of the suit by alleging that it was not partible joint family property, but as property enjoyed after partition by the family as tenants-in-common. The 2nd defendant's mother did not enter as heiress to one of several tenants-in common but notoriously as heiress to her husband and her possession was never that of one tenant-in common holding on behalf of herself and the other tenants-in-common, but adverse from the first to the claims of the junior members as tenants-in common and none-the-less so because of irregular payments made to them for maintenance. Such payments in those days having regard to the notions then prevailing in Southern India as to the nature of impartible Estates and the interests therein of the junior members of the family were attributable to their position as junior members of the family and quite consistent with the claim to hold the Estate as an impartible Zemindari adversely to the rest of the family. For the foregoing reasons, I see no reason to differ from the conclusion of the District Judge that the estate is impartible and that the suits for partition are barred by limitation. These findings do not, however, dispose of the case, because the plaintiff in the 2nd suit is the nearest Dayadi and the nearest heir of the late Zemindar if the 2nd defendants' adoption be not established, and he would be consequently entitled to succeed on the death of the Zemindar's daughter, if his rights have not become barred by limitation. Now, the rights of this plaintiff and the other members of the family as co-parceners or tenants-in-common or as preferential heirs to the Zemindar's widow and daughter have, in my opinion, become barred and extinguished under the Limitation Act, but the widow and daughter having taken as preferential heirs to the other members of the family I do not think the rights of the other members of the family to succeed on failure of the daughter's line have been affected. It is, therefore, necessary to consider whether the 2nd defendant's adoption is established. There is really no dispute about the factum of the adoption, and the only question is whether the authority to adopt is duly established. The first question which arises is, whether the provisions in section 17 of the Indian Registration Act which requires authorities to adopt not contained in a Will to be registered has any application to an authority to adopt given in Hyderabad outside British India by a subject of that State domiciled there. If not, such an authority is not a "document required by section 17 to be registered" within the meaning of section 49 of the Act, and is not affected by the provisions of that section. Now, the limits of legislative authority are territorial and the Indian Legislature in particular has authority to legislate only for British India and British subjects in Native States. Prima facie, therefore, its enactments are not to be construed to apply to acts done outside British India even by British subjects. The authorities on the subject of the territorial effect of Statutes are collected in the late Mr. Craie's Statute Law, 2nd Edition, pages 393—425, and I will only refer to Cooke v. Charles A. Vogeler Co. (5), Dulaney v. Merry & Son (6) and Suffle v. Attorney General for Ireland (7), where it was held that an Irish Statute enacting that, where one of the parties to a marriage was a Protestant, the marriage if celebrated in a particular manner, viz, "by a Popish priest" shall be null and void, had no application to the marriage so celebrated in Austria of a Protestant domiciled in Ireland. The Indian Legislature might, of course, enact that an authority to adopt, wherever and by whomsoever made, should not be recognised in India for any purpose unless it had been registered in British India pursuant to the provisions of the Indian Registration Act, and we should be bound to give effect to that provision, as effect was given in the Sussex Peerage case (8) to the provision of the Royal Marriage Act that no descendant of the body of George II should be capable of contracting matrimony without the previous consent of His Majesty, and that any marriage of any such descendant without such consent first had and obtained shall be null and void. There is, however, a strong presumption against attributing to it any such intention

The instruments of which registration is compulsory under the Act are enumerated in section 17, and the effects of failure to register are to be found in section 49. The documents which were required to be registered by the earliest Registration Acts all related to immoveable property, meaning, of course, immoveable property situated in British India; and it may be taken that the Legislature has sufficiently manifested its intention that none of the enumerated documents affecting immoveable property situated in British India should be valid unless so registered even if executed outside British India, as held in Hicks v. Powell (9), more especially as section 26 provides for the registration of such documents at any time within four months after their first arrival in British India.

Different considerations, however, apply to the provisions of section 17 (3), which were first enacted in 1871, that "authorities to adopt a son executed after the first day of January 1872 and not conferred by a Will, shall also be registered." That is a provision affecting status. The Indian Legislature has no authority to legislate as to the status of the subjects of Native States domiciled in such States and this provision cannot, in my opinion, on the well established rules of construction, be read as extending to an authority to adopt conferred in Hyderabad by a subject of that State domiciled there, whose only connection with British India was that his wife owned property there. Questions of the validity of adoptions made outside British India by persons who are not British subjects may arise in our Courts not only in connection with claims to succeed to immoveable property situated in British India but also in other ways too numerous to mention, and it would, in my opinion, be altogether opposed to the accepted canons of construction to attribute to the Indian Legislature, when it inserted in the Registration Act what is now section 17 (3), an intention to interfere in any way with a question of such adoptions which is a matter outside its competence. For these reasons, I am of opinion that the provisions of the Indian Registration Act did not apply to the authority to adopt the 2nd defendant, and that it is unnecessary to consider the further question whether these provisions were in fact complied with.

On the supposition that they were applicable, much manifestly false evidence has been adduced on behalf of the plaintiffs to show that the authority to adopt was taken to Masulipatam and shown to the Collector shortly after its execution, as well as some not very satisfactory evidence on behalf of the 2nd defendant which the District Judge has accepted, that, though the donee of the authority resided almost continuously in British India after her husband's death, the authority to adopt remained in the Nizam's dominions until shortly before the Registration proceedings. I do not consider it necessary to decide this question or the questions as to the construction of the Registration Act which arise, if it be held applicable to this authority to adopt. As regards these questions of construction, I am inclined to agree with the conclusions of my learned brother whose judgment I have had the advantage of reading.

I also agree with my learned brother, for the reasons given by him, that there is no sufficient reason for differing from the findings of the District Judge that the authority was in fact given and the adoption in fact made.

The appeals are dismissed with costs. The case is one of great complexity and, under rule 41 of the Appellate Side Rules, we grant a special fee of Rs. 3,000 to cover the Vakil's fees in both suits.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—Appeal No. 426 is against the decree in Original Suit No. 56 of 1895 on the file of the District Court, of Kistna, sitting at Masulipatam. The connected Appeal No. 427 is against the decree passed in the earlier suit Original Suit No. 30 of 1893, filed in the Subordinate Judge's Court of Ellore, but transferred to the file of the District Court above mentioned in 1895.

The earlier suit No. 30 of 1893 was filed in November 1893 and the plaint is dated November 1893 and this earlier suit will be treated as the more important suit and the several parties will be referred to in this judgment by the numbers given to them in the pleadings in this suit as far as possible.

The suit has taken 25-1/2 years from its inception before it could be decided by this Court. The delay has been extraordinary even for a heavy Indian Zemindari litigation in which great delay seems to be accepted as normal. The history of the suits up to April 1914 is given in paragraph 227 of the District Court's judgment. The suit was brought by 13 plaintiffs belonging to the Keesara family residing at Sirapuram in the borders of the Kistna District adjoining Hyderabad territory against five defendants. The 1st defendant was the Court of Wards who have since gone out of the record owing to the 2nd defendant for whom they managed the suit property, namely, the Munagala Zemin Estate, having become a major during the pendency of this litigation. The 2nd defendant is the Zemindar residing at Nadigudam near Sirapuram where the plaintiffs live. The defendants Nos. 3 to 5, (4th and 5th defendants being the sons of the 3rd defendant) are three other members of the Keesara family who were arrayed as defendants because they refused to join the 13 plaintiffs in bringing this suit.

It will be seen that the 2nd defendant is the principal defendant in the suit and may be shortly called the defendant. As might be expected, some of the plaintiffs, namely, plaintiffs Nos. 1, 4, 6 and 7 have died during these 26 years and three additional plaintiffs (Nos. 14 to 16) came in afterwards. The suit, shortly stated, was for recovery of possession of the Munagala Zemindari from the defendant. The suit was dismissed and the plaintiffs are the appellants before us. To understand the main allegations of the plaintiffs on which they based their claim, the following genealogical table and certain indisputable facts might be referred to here.

It will be seen from the genealogical tree (containing more than 60 names) that 10 persons (excluding the defendant) of whom 8 are males and 2 are females, have been marked and numbered separately (with red ink lined circles round the numbers). These have been recogised as the Zemindars and the Zimindarnees of Munagala entitled to be addressed as "Rajagaru" and "Zemindar" while the remaining 50 odd persons numbered separately were treated as entitled to maintenance allowance called "Bhootad." The fourth Raja (V. Ramanna) had five sons the eldest of whom was the fifth Rajah, his four younger brothers being Nos 1, 16, 26 and 34 in the genealogical tree. It will be seen that the dignity and status of Rajah or Zemindar was held only by a single member of this Keesara family from the time of the earliest ancestor Mukundappa and that it descended in lineal primogeniture till the 2nd Kothandaramiah (Rajah No. 8). Then it descended to his widow the 9th Rajah Rukkamma Row and then to the 10th Rajahgaru who was his daughter Latchamma Row. Exhibit A-1, a pedigree of the Keesara family prepared in 1824 and obtained from the Masulipatam Collector's Cutcherry, is a genealogical tree which shows the first seven Zemindars marking them Nos. 1 to 7, the numerical figures being enclosed in yellow line circles. The 3rd Rajah was, no doubt, the younger brother of the second Rajah, but the 2nd Rajah's senior line became extinct and so the 3rd Rajah came in. The 4th, 5th, 6th and 7th Rajahs came in as belonging to the eldest line though the 4th had a younger brother, the 5th had four younger brothers, the 6th had four uncles and the 7th had several seniors in age in the junior four branches when they respectively succeeded to the Pergana Estate.

[His Lordship here examines the history of the Zemindari from the time of the first Rajah and states his conclusion as to the nature of the estate as follows :—]

On the 6th August 1835, the 7th Rajah made his Will, Exhibit H-2, in favour of his adopted son, Kothandaramiah No. 2, the 8th Zemindar as follows :—

[His Lordship after setting out the terms of the Will, proceeded as to the Rajahs' minority.]

He, therefore, attained his majority on some day between 7th August 1848 and 5th August 1849. On the 14th April 1849, the Rajah as the second signatory and nine other persons belonging to the Keesara family executed the Samakhya (agreement) Exhibit K, in the presence of the Taluk Tashildar.

[Here his Lordship sets out the circumstances leading up to the execution of Exhibit K.]

Now, let us see what the arrangement itself is. It clubs the Munagala Zemindari, consisting of about 38 villages, situated within the Company's jurisdiction with three small Taluks containing about 11 villages in the Nizam's dominions belonging to the Keesara family. The income from the British Indian villages was then about Rs. 10,000 annually, whereas the income from the Native State villages seems to have been about Rs. 600 to Rs. 800. (See Exhibits XXIV (c) and XXXI and the evidence of D. W. No. 15). The document, Exhibit K, says that the management of the total income for the 15 years between 1st July 1849 and 1st July 1864 should be as follows :—

(1) From the 1st July 1849 to 1st July 1854 the Rajah Zemindar Kothandaramiah of Munagala and Venkatakrishniah of the 3rd branch (No. 15 in the genealogical tree) were to manage the joint income ;

(2) From the 1st July 1854 to 1st July 1859 the Rajah Kothandaramiah and one other man to be selected from six of the signatories to manage ; and

(3) From 1st July 1859 to 30th June 1864 the Zemindar Kothandaramiah again and one person to be selected by the three remaining signatories of Exhibit K. to manage the total income. The document provides that all debts incurred till then should be accepted as payable by these three sets of two managers in each set (the Zemindar being always one of the two managers) so that the Sowcar was quite safe. Rs. 2,750 was to be set apart for the maintenance of the five branches of the family at Rs. 550 for each branch. Nothing is said as to what was to become after the expiry of the 15 years' term, but evidently the parties thought that within that period, the debts of the Sowcar would be wiped out.

Disputes seem to have arisen at once and then the young Zemindar seems to have agreed to allow the four branches each to enjoy one or two villages for Bhootad, the income of each set of villages being estimated to amount approximately to Rs. 550 (see Exhibits M, M-2 and M-4).

* * * * *

While these disputes were going on this 8th Zemindar Kothandaramiah No. 2 died on the 22nd November 1854 (see Exhibit R-1). Then the Collector wrote Exhibit R. to the Commissioner for Northern Circars. I shall extract the following passages :—"It appears that Gopamma, the mother of the late Zemindar, and Rukkamma, his widow, aged respectively 45 and 21 years, are at peace with one another and willing and able to manage the estate with the assistance of such male members of the family and old servants as have been all along in their interest..... The only off-spring of the deceased Zemindar is a daughter reported to be five years old .....With regard to the debts of the estate it appears that the late Zemindar had in his lifetime made arrangements with Gonaguntala Seetaya, a Sowcar of Joggayyapet, by making over to him the usufruct of certain villages both for the liquidation of the debt and for the annual payment of the whole peishcush of the estate."

"With regard to the estate itself, I see no objection to its release from attachment and return of the several villages to those parties under whose enjoyment they were at the time of the death of the late Zemindar, that portion which was in the hands of the late Zemindar being given up to the mother and widow."

"The opinion of the Pandits of the Sudder Adalet appears to decide that under the Hindu Law the estate of a person divided from his co-heirs who dies leaving no male heirs devolve first upon his widow and then upon his daughter." This was in January 1855, evidently in accordance with the above opinion of Pandits and treating the Munagala Zemindari as impartible estate which belonged to Kothandaramiah No. 2 who was divided in interest from the other four branches of the family (see the decision of the Privy Council in Tara Kumari v. Chaturbhuj Narayan Singh (10) the estate was put into the possession of Rukkamma, the widow of Kothandaramiah, in 1855 itself. Thereupon the members of the other four families seem to have brought five suits, Original Suits Nos. 5 to 9 of 1857. We have got some of the records (Exhibits B, XIX, W, and W-1) in two of these suits. Exhibit B. is the plaint in Original Suit No. 9 of 1857. The plaintiffs in that suit belong to one sub-branch out of the two sub branches of one of the five main branches of the family. In the plaint it is alleged that the Nizam's dominion villages are in the enjoyment of the four branches alone and not of the senior branch in whose name the Munagala Zemindari proprietorship is registered. The plaintiffs sue for their one tenth share in the 33 villages yielding an income of about Rs. 13,500 gross and Rs. 9,000 net. The last sentence in the plaint says that even as regards the one-fifth share of the senior branch, the plaintiffs and the other members of the other four families are the next reversioners as the senior line became extinct for want of male issue. (The widow Rukkamma is impliedly acknowledged to be the widow of a divided member entitled to inherit his estate). In Exhibit XIX, Rukkamma Rao gave a "re-joinder" written statement in which she denied that the other four branches had any share in the proprietorship of the Munagala Zamindari and stated that the other four branches had admitted long ago before the Collector that they were entitled only to Bhcotad (maintenance allowances), that the plaintiffs and others have acknowledged that they were living separately, that "when my husband has executed a Will in accordance with the Hindu Law kinsmen who are not entitled have no right to say that it is contrary to law," that the words "Rajah" and "Zamindar" apply only to the "Rajah who is exercising overlordship" and that the plaintiffs owing to lack of such ownership cannot get the titles of Rajah and Zemindar. In fact, the divided status was clearly admitted by both sides and the only question was whether the estate of Munagala was a partible estate or an impartible estate. Then, the widow who had in the meanwhile pretended to have adopted a boy, one of her husband's cousins, compromised all the suits, the principal terms of that compromise being recited in the judgment, Exhibit W., dated March 1858. The terms are that though the other four families were receiving only each Rs. 400 for their "maintenance allowance" till then (the Rs. 550 mentioned in Exhibit K. had been reduced to Rs. 400 under Exhibit T. Series in 1857), it was agreed that the Rs. 400 should be increased to Rs. 500, that the plaintiffs in Suit No. 7 of 1857 (representing one of the two sub-branches of one of the five families) was entitled to Rs. 250 maintenance accordingly, that the widow should spend Rs. 50) for the maintenance of her own first branch, that she should meet the other usual expenses including festivals of deities, establishment charges and so on and that she should deposit the savings "till the age of 18 years comes to the adopted son" to the credit of Munagala Purgana. the The original razinamah itself is not before us. The recital of the terms in paragraph 5 of Exhibit W., leaves it rather obscure as to whether the other four families had any share in the proprietorship of the Zamindari though the maintenance allowances of each of the branches, namely, Rs. 500, was the same amount as that which the widow Rukkamma herself was to take out of the income for maintenance of the senior branch. The provision, however, that the savings should all be with her till her alleged adopted son attains the age of 18 years and that the whole management of the Zemindari should remain with her seems to negative the idea that the other four divided branches had any claim on those savings or any claim in the Purgana except that of obtaining maintenance out of his income. It seems to follow that they had no proprietorship in the Zemindari though they might have been co-sharers in the sense in which before Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (11) persons entitled by custom to maintenance allowance from a Zamindari estate as being descended in the junior lines from the common ancestor were loosely talked of as co-sharers though there was really no co-parcenary in the strict sense and no right to claim partition. The other four branches thus did not press their claim to a division of the Zamindari and abandoned their claim to recover past mesne profits which they were entitled to get if they were really proprietary divided co sharers with Rukkamma and her husband (see prayer in Exhibit B., the plaint in which such a claim for mesne profits is made) In the compromise, shares in the savings out of the whole income which may be received by the widow Rukkamma till the alleged adopted son attained majority are not expressly recognised or reserved in favour of the four divided branches. The reasonable construction of the compromise transaction seems to be that the members of the other four divided branches admitted the Munagala Zamindari to be a separate and (not a joint) impartible estate which had descended to the widow of (and then to the son alleged to have been adopted by her to) the previous Zemindar Kothandaramiah. The fact that the full proprietorship was exercised by Rukkamma Rao at once is shown by Exhibit 3 and 3-A, she as Zemindarni, having taken steps to dispossess her husband's Gnatis (who were enjoying some of the lands as ryots in the estate) of their ryoti land for their non-payment of the rent of Oist due to her as Zemindarni. (One of the plaintiffs as plaintiff's witness admits that she dispossessed them for two years).

(11) 10 A. 272; 15 I. A. 51; 5 Sar. P. C. J. 139; 12 Ind. Jur. 213; 6 Ind. Dec. 182 (P. C.).

After this compromise in 1858, Rukkamma Rao treated the estate as her own exclusive property though her husband's divided kinsmen went on intriguing against her. This is what one usually expects where a widow succeeds to an impartible estate and male agnates of her husband are alive. Exhibit XXI shows that in 1865 she published notices in the District Gazette that her husband's Gnatis were trying to cause loss to her estate. Shortly before her death, on the 10th May 1868, she wrote letter Exhibit XXII to the District Collector accusing her husband's Gnatis of having poisoned her and stating that she has made over the Zemin estate belonging to her "according to Dharma Sastra" to her daughter Latchamma. It will be seen that she ignored the adoption referred to in Exhibit W. She seems to have died the very next day at 4 P. M. The alleged adopted son Venkata Raghava Rao, had filed Suit No. 2 of 1868 in the Civil Court, Guntur District, for recovering the Zemin right

* * * * *

The daughter Latchamma who became the 10th Rajagaru Zemindar having succeeded against the alleged adopted son of her mother by the judgment of the High Court, Exhibit XX, began to manage the estate very ably and gradually raised the income from about Rs. 10,000 to Rs. 50,000 or Rs 60,000.

* * * * *

Meanwhile, Latchamma Rao's husband who was himself a Deshmuki living at Thorur in the Nizam's Territory (about 100 miles distant from Nandigoodem) died on 15th May 1875. About a week before his death he went to a village called Vavilala (about 8 miles distant for his ancestral village of Thorur) for treatment by a native physician there. He had been suffering for about 18 months from rheumatism and rheumatic fever, and dropsical symptoms had set in accompanied by swellings in hands and legs. On the 10th May 1875 at Vavilala (his wife Latchamma being then at Thorur) he executed in her favour the deed of authority Exhibit XXV, attested by four witnesses including his own natural father of the Rapaka family (he having been himself adopted to the Nayini family) of the four attestors one is a Deshmuki and two are Disapandias or Karnams. The fourth is the executants Purohit and the writer is Seeniah whose brother was employed under him. On the 11th May 1875, he reported by Exhibit XXVII that he had given on the previous day authority to his wife to adopt. This report was sent to the Aval Taluqdar who corresponds in the Nizam's Dominions to the District Collector. Then he went back to Thorur where his wife was staying and reached the place at about 8 A. M. on the 15th May 1875 gave into her hands Exhibit XXV (the authority to adopt) and died the same day at about 12 noon.

* * * * *

It will be seen that, from the 11th May 1838, when Rukkamma Rao died till 1883 when she made this adoption Latchamma Rao had been enjoying the Munagala Zemindari as heir of her father and as an impartible undivided and separated Zemindari estate for more than 15 years. Her father's Keesara kinsmen could not enjoy peace of mind when a woman who had become by marriage a Nayini was enjoying the estate Though they had abandoned in 1858 their claim to treat it as partible as a "boneless" contention (see Exhibits W. and XX) they seem to have in February 1879 (just before 12 years elapsed from Latchamma's taking possession) tried to induce the Board of Revenue to dispossess Latchamma and give the Zemindari to them but they failed [see Exhibit VII (b)]. Then, in June 1880, (after she had enjoyed for 12 years) they sent the arzee Exhibit VII (c) to Government directly. Paragraph 8 of this petition admits that the Zemindari was acquired by a progenitor from the Nizam 200 years ago. (This shows that it is an ancient Zemindari.) In paragraph 13 they admitted that the family became divided, that the Munagala Zemindari should be 'governed' (that is, as if it was a chieftain's estate) by the "first family heir" and that maintenance should be given to the divided junior members. Paragraphs 24 and 25 andthe 1st paragraph of 30 are as follow: "24. The reason why an ancient Zemindari cannot be partitioned is, that by partition it goes to pieces, becomes completely ruined, and for some reasons it will become destroyed or alienated, etc. That is, it means that a Zemindari is always an undivided estate." "25. While there are male members in the family of the propositus, and when it is clear that it cannot go to female issue or be alienated, the acting Collector of Kistna District by a mistake made over to her the right to the ancient Samasthanam (estate) which ought to belong to us. Therefore, the respect and name of our family became decreased and is destroyed."

"30. The said Latchamma by her acts commenced to cause loss to the estate. The act of giving three villages to a woman named Chinna Butchakka in the second family is one which is outside the scope of her power. Her strength lies in the advice of her servants. She is behaving in an improper manner but not in a virtuous manner. For these reasons we are entitled by 'Dharma Sastra' to obstruct her management and to attempt to remove her." The above seems to contain a clearer admission that this was an impartible estate, that Latchamma's father's Gnatis were all divided and that Latchamma had been strong enough to enjoy the property as exclusive heir of her father after her mother's death for more than 12 years notwithstanding that these people were trying to obstruct her management and attempting to remove her. They made a further attempt in 1882 by petitions [Exhibits VII (d) and (e)] to the Collector and the Board of Revenue to dispossess her."

It was in these petitions of 1882 that they set up for the first time after 1858 that the Zemindari was joint property, notwithstanding that they refer in paragraph 9 of Exhibit VII (d) to their former arice of 1850 which acknowledged the Zemindari to be a separate impartible estate. In fact, between the date of Exhibit VII (c) (June 1880) and the dates of Exhibit VII (d) and (e) (1882) they seem to have been advised to re assert their hopeless claim of 1857 which they had abandoned in 1858. In May 1852, Rajah Latchamma Rao wrote Exhibit KKK setting out all the facts and stating that from 1855 for 27 years she and her mother as heirs of her father had been in enjoyment (to the knowledge of her father's agnates) of the separate property of their father and that her father's agnates had not only no right at any time, but their alleged claims as co-sharers were hopelessly barred. The Collector in the same year 1882 sent to the plaintiffs the order Exhibit VIII (f) directing them to go to the Civil Court if they had any grievances and not to obstruct Latchmma Rao's enjoyment which had continued for 14 years. I shall, at this etage, give my conclusion on the two questions, namely, (a) whether the Munagala Zemindari was and is an impartible estate, (b) whether the plaintiffs' claim to treat it as a partible estate, in which they had rights as co-sharers became barred and when it so became barred. On the first question, numerous authorities were quoted on both sides. I do not think it necessary to consider them elaborately. It is, in my opinion, a question of fact to be decided on the whole of the evidence in each case. No one circumstance is conclusive. Whether it was an ancient Zemindari is one circumstance to be considered. Whether it was in the nature of a military tenure is another circumstance. Whether there had been a confiscation and re-grant whether the British Government divided the estate and re-granted the divided portions to strangers or to junior members, whether it had passed by sale or gift from the family which first held it to another family are all circumstances to be considered and the final conclusion must rest on the evidence taken as a whole. The course of descent for several generations in the line of primogeniture without partition notwithstanding that there were agnates of the reigning Zemindar belonging to junior branches, is, of course, the most important consideration though even that fact may not be taken as conclusive. The inner conviction of the members of the family as shown by their conduct and their declarations from time to time especially when there was no dispute is, of course, a very valuable test. When such declarations were made by the members of the junior branches against their own interests, they are, of course, of great value. What they tried to put forward when or after an actual litigation had commenced is of very little value though their subsequent conduct in giving up "hopeless" contentions is of much value. In this case, I have come to the clear conclusion on the evidence as a whole that the District Judge's view based mainly on the important documentary evidence from 1687 to 1882 above set out is correct, namely, that the Munagala Zemindari has been always an impartible Zemindari which has come down in the descent of lineal primogeniture and that it was the separate property of Rukkamma's husband at his death. He had, no doubt, agreed in Exhibit K. that its profits should be mixed up with the relatively very small profits of the divided Hyderabad Deshmuk property belonging to himself and his agnate relations and be held in common for a period of 15 years from 1849 for the purpose of discharging debts incurred during his minority by his natural father and by his other agnates but the ownership of the Munagala Zamindari remained, however, vested in him separately, there being nothing in Exhibit K. which made that estate also partible or divisible property, the arrangement in Exhibit K. having been modified even in his lifetime and having ceased to have any force at his death, which took place long before the expiry of the 15 years' term mentioned in it. It was superseded at once by other arrangements by which the enjoyment of some villages was given to the four branches for their maintenance and the enjoyment of two villages was given to the Sowcar for clearing of his debts. By reason of the decision in Exhibit W. and W 1 and of the enjoyment of Rukkamma and Latchamma, the property became vested in them as heirs to the separate estate of Rukkamma's husband. The fact also that the Court of Wards came in first in 1814 and then again during Rukkamma's husband's minority is wholly against the alleged co-parcenary right of the agnates of the other four branches, the Court of Wards having no power to take possession of an estate if it was the property of an undivided family unless all its co parceners are disqualified by minority, etc., (see section 17 of Madras Act I of 1902, Court of Wards Act, which expressly enacts what was implied in the former Regulation V of 1804 and what was followed in practice by the Court of Wards even before Act I of 1902 was passed. The appointment of managers and guardians can be made under this Act only if the disqualified proprietor is the sole proprietor of the estate taken charge of or if all the co-parcenary proprietors were disqualified). The vague reference in Collector Robert's Report, Exhibit F, to enjoyment by all the branches (though the eldest in the senior branch alone is admitted even in it to be the sole Zemindar) and the reference in some other documents to a sort of co parcenary among the five branches are not, in my opinion, of much value as it is well known that, prior to the well known decision in Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (11) followed in the Pittapore case [Venkata Surya Mahipati v. Court of Wards (12)], there was an erroneous idea that, notwithstanding that an estate was impartible (and the agnates of the junior branches cannot, therefore, sue for partition), they could be called undivided co parceners and were so styled even in judicial pronouncements (see the way in which this contention about their right as co-parceners and co-sharers was stated as following from judgments of the Privy Council itself by the Allahabad High Court at page 277 of I. L. R. 10 Allahabad 272 [Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (11)] that Court styling the right of the junior branches to be "dormant co-ownership—see also 9 Madras Law Journal report of the Pittapore case [Venkata Surya Mahipati v. Court of Wards (12)], where it was definitely met and negatived by their Lordships both during the argument and in the judgment, notwithstanding that Mr. Mayne strenuously contended that at least the long course of Madras decisions which prohibited alienation by a Zamindar enjoying an impartible estate, the prohibition being based on the theory of "dormant co-ownership" in his agnates, may not be disturbed so far as Madras estates were concerned. Even if Exhibit F. be construed as an admission by Rukkamma's husband that the Munagala Zemindari was co-parcenary property, the facts that Rukkamma and her daughter inherited it asserting that it was Kothandaramiah's separate property and that they enjoyed it as such for 25 years continuously, their possession being statedly adverse and exclusive created a bar which destroyed the rights of her father's divided agnates and vested in Rukkamma and Latchamma prescriptive rights in the estate (see Freeman on Co-tenancy, sections 228 to 230). In Meda Vengamma v. Mitta Chelamiah (13) it was held that a Hindu widow could obtain by prescription a woman's estate in property as if it was the separate property of her husband, if the title she asserted (during the time when prescription was maturing) was the title of a widow holding the property as representative of her husband's estate see [also Bapanayya v. Peddichalamaiya (14)]. I am unable to accept the contention of the plaintiffs that the fact that Rajah Latchamma Rao and Rajah Rukkamma were paying them allowances (Bhootad—maintenance) in accordance with the decree Exhibit W. prevented the enjoyment of the ladies being adverse to their claims to be co-sharers thereof. (Nor do I think it necessary to notice the equally untenable contention on the defendant's side that because Latchamma Rao entered in her account books the said payments towards maintenance as presents, she prescribed for a higher estate than that of the daughter of a separate owner who had inherited as his heir). That even the plaintiffs in this case considered their case of partibility and co-parcenary difficult to sustain is shown by their setting up one of them to bring the second suit on the basis of the estate being a separate impartible estate and also by their unscrupulous law agents having created for them documents Exhibits G L series, GG series and entries in Exhibits A A 4 and A A 5. I generally concur with the reasons given by the learned District Judge in paragraphs 89, 95, the last sentence in paragraph 129 and in paragraphs 143 to 51 and I agree for those reasons in holding that these are false documents.

I shall now consider the Issues Nos 7 to 10 in this case which relate to the questions connected with the fact of the defendant's adoption by Latchamma and of the authority to adopt alleged to have been given to Latchamma by her husband and of its validity. The 6th issue is partly based upon the defendant's allegation that, besides the written authority, Exhibit 25, given by Latchamma's husband, he had also given her an oral authority to adopt. That oral authority was, however, found against by the learned District Judge I entirely agree with him as only two witnesses [Exhibits XLII (e), XLI (aa)] speak to this oral Will which is alleged to have been given at Thorur before Latchamma's husband went to the small village of Vavilala and it is quite unsafe to act on the oral evidence of such ordinary witnesses in an important and heavy case like this.

The other part of the 6th issue relates to the genuineness of the alleged written authority, Exhibit 25.

* * * *

The genuiness of Exhibit 25 being, in my opinior, beyond doubt, its validity and also its admissibility in evidence are attacked on the ground that it was not properly registered. It was, as a matter of fact, registered after a very elaborate enquiry by the Acting Sub-Registrar of Bezwada in December 1892. It was presented to him for registration on the 20th August 1892 by Nayini Raghava Reddi (the defendant's natural father) the defendant then being a minor about 14 years old. The registration is, however, contended to be illegal on two grounds: firstly, that this authority to adopt executed out of British India in Thorur was not presented for registration in Bezwada within four months after its first arrival in British India as required by section 26, clause (b) of the Registration Act of 1877; secondly, that it was not presented for registration by any of the three persons who are entitled to present the same under section 4, (2) of the Registration Act, namely, the donor of the authority to adopt (who died in 1875) or the donee Latchamma who died in 1892 or the adopted son (the defendant) but by the defendant's natural father who was not even his lawful guardian. For the defendant it was argued (a) that Exhibit 25 having been executed in the Nizam's Dominions by Nayini Venkataramayya domiciled in the Nizam's territory to his wife Latchamma who, of course, was also domiciled in that territory like her husband, section 17 of the Indian Registration Act, clause (3), which makes the authority to adopt a son compulsorily registrable did not apply at all to Exhibit 25 as section 17, clause (3) must, according to reasonable rules of interpretation, be confined to authorities

(14) 9 M. L. J. 33.

given by a person domiciled in British India. (*b*1) Even if section 17 applied to this authority, it, as a matter of fact, came into British India only on 22nd April 892 within four months before it was presented for registration on 20th August, (*b*2) The time limit of four months in sections 23 and 26 does not apply to authority to adopt when presented for registration under section 41 (2) by a person other than the donor of the authority. (c) Even if the Sub Registrar erroneously thought that it was presented within four months of its arrival in British India once he effected the registration his irregularity in having registered it was cured by section 87 of the Registration Act. (d) The defendant having been a minor the presentation by the guardian for him in his interest is allowed by law. (e) His natural father who was his father's nearest agnate male relation and was also his de facto guardian was entitled to present it and, even though the defendant had been adopted away, his natural father was entitled in law to act as his guardian in all the steps necessary be taken to have the adoption established and hence, the natural father's presentation on behalf of the defendant is a proper presentation.

On the question of fact (that is, whether the document came into British India at any time more than four months before its presentation for registration in August 1892), I agree with the District Judge in answering the question in the negative.

* * * *

On this finding it is unnecessary to consider the other legal questions argued on both sides except the question of the validity of the presentment for registration by the defendant's natural father assuming that registration was necessary to make it admissible and to give it validity. On this last question, namely, whether section 17, clause (3) applies at all to a document executed out of British India by persons domiciled out of British India, I am inclined to agree with the contention of the learned Advocate-General that section 17 of the Registration Act which makes compulsorily registrable certain documents (compulsorily registrable documents being under section 49 incapable of affecting immoveable property or conferring power to adopt or of being received in evidence unless so registered) was intended to deal only, (a) with documents relating to immoveable property situate in British India (clause (1) of section 17) and (b) with authorities to adopt executed by a person domiciled in British India (clause 3). As regards the concession given in section 26 to have certain documents, including an authority to adopt, executed out of British India, presented for registration within four months after it is brought into British India, it was, in my opinion, intended to meet the case of a person domiciled in British India travelling abroad (in Europe or America, etc., or even in a Native State on a pilgrimage) and suddenly finding himself in a bad state of health, executing an authority to adopt in favour of his wife to be used by her. The observations in some English Cases [Cooke v. Charles A. Vogeler (5), Dulaney v. Merry & Son (6) and Swifte v. Attorney-General for Ireland (7) seem to me to establish that the Legislature could not have intended to make validity of a power to adopt executed in a Native State by a person domiciled within the Native State depend upon its being registered in British India, or even its admissibility in evidence without registration depend upon its having been registered in British India within four months of its arrival therein. I shall take a case to illustrate what I mean. A., domiciled in the Nizam's territory and holding large properties therein and owning no property in British India, gives his wife authority to adopt in 1875 and dies at once. His wife adopts accordingly a son B. in 1875. Two years afterwards, she starts on a pilgrimage to Benares, Rameswaram and other places and carries with her the box containing all her papers including the authority to adopt and returns to her native place after the pilgrimage in 1880. Then, in 1900, her husband's brother C. who had settled in Madras as a trader in 1885 dies in Madras leaving no nearer heir than his brother's adopted son B. residing in the Nizam's Territory. Can it be argued that the authority to adopt given by A. (which validates the adoption of B. under the Hindu Law) cannot be proved and is not valid because it was in the adoptive mother's luggage box forming part of her luggage during her pilgrimages in 1877 and had not been registered in British India within four months of that date? Is a person to lose his right as heir because he could not prophesy that, 23 years after his adoptive father gave his adoptive mother authority to adopt in the Nizam's Dominions, he might have to prove and establish the adoption in a British Indian Court? I think that if the status of a person as an adopted son has been established as valid in the domicile of the adoptive parents, that adoption must be held valid according to the principles of International Law in all other places where there is no express Statute Law to the contrary effect. In Maxwell on Interpretation of Statutes, Chapter VI, the whole question is considered. I shall quote a few passages therefrom. A State "has a right to impose its legislation on its subjects —natural or naturalised—in every part of the world." "On such matters as personal status or capacity it is understood always to do so." "In the absence of an intention clearly expressed or to be inferred either from its language or from the object or subject-matter, or history of the enactment, the presumption is that Parliament does not design its Statutes to operate on them" (that, is, even on its own subjects) "beyond the territorial limits of the United Kingdom. They are, therefore, to be read usually as if words to that effect had been inserted in them." "Every Statute should be so interpreted and applied as not to be inconsistent with the Comity of Nations or with the established rules of International Law. If, therefore the Legislature intended to exceed its jurisdiction, it must express its intention with irresistible clearness to induce a Court to believe that it entertained it. All general terms must be narrowed in construction to avoid it." "In general, Statutes must be understood as applying to those only who owe obedience to the Legislature which enacts them, * * that is, its own subjects,  but that, as regards aliens resident abroad, the Legislature has no concern to protect their interests, any more than it has a legitimate power to control their rights."

I shall now deal with the remaining contentions on the question of the validity of the registration. I am unable to agree with the learned Advocate-General that the plain words of section 23, that all documents other than Wills ought to be presented for registration to the proper officer within four months subject to section 26, do not apply to authorities to adopt and that the language of section 41, clause (2) overrides the language of section 23, and that if the conditions mentioned in section 41, clause (2) are satisfied, the document ought to be registered without reference to the time limits mentioned in sections 23 and 26. The terms of section 27 which expressly state that a Will may be presented for registration at any time, clearly preclude the contention that there is a right to present an authority to adopt also for registration at any time. The reasonable meaning of section 41, clause (2) is that, provided the other conditions mentioned in parts 4 and 6 are satisfied, an authority to adopt shall be registered if the Registering Officer is satisfied in respect of the three additional conditions mentioned in sub clauses (a), (b) and (c) of clause (2) of section 41.

I shall now come to the contention on the plaintiff's side about presentment. It was argued that, as section 40 only allows the adopted son to present, nobody could present it for him even if he is a minor. In fact, it was argued that even if the adopted son is an infant two years old, it was his hand that ought to present the document to the Sub-Registrar for regsitration. This would reduce to an absurdity the provisions of the Registration Act giving a right to present documents for registration to persons claiming under documents in the case of all documents executed in favour of minors or other persons under disability if the obligors or donors neglect or refuse to present them. Some English cases were quoted as regards the presentation to livings by minors, but I must frankly admit that I was unable to follow the argument. I referred to Simpson on Infants (pages 73 and 74, 3rd Edition) but I find that the guardian's concurrence is necessary when a minor presents to a living—no doubt, the mere act of making a mark and putting a seal by the hand of an infant guided by the guardian was held valid in an old case, the ground being that, "there can be no inconvenience because the Bishop is to judge of the qualification of the clerk presented." I do not think that there is any analogy between presenting a document for registration and presentation to a living under the peculiar historical and religious circumstances connected with English Equity and Ecclesiastical Law.

A guardian is a trustee (see section 20 of the

MA ME I v. MAUNG LAUK HNYA.

Guardians and Wards Act) and he is entitled to exercise, for the benefit of the minor, all powers and do all acts which the minor could do if he were a major, and such acts have the same legal validity as they would have if the minor did it after he attained majority. (See Trevelyan on Minors, pages 48, 49 and 139 as to guardianship being a trust and the guardian representing the minor fully). Presentation of documents for registration by guardians on behalf of minors has always been allowed by registration rules and officers as a matter of practice and it has been held to be valid in Appeal No. 200 of 1918 in this Court decided by Ayling and Napier, JJ., the donee of the authority to adopt (the widow of the donor) was a minor and her guardian's presentation for registration was held to be valid.

Under section 35 (1) (c) of the Registration Act, where an executant is dead, his representative can admit execution. But if the heir is a minor, his guardian should appear on his behalf according to rule 472 of the Registration Department Rules.

So also rule 493 says in regard to a question analogous to the one before us, "under general principle of law that a guardian may do all acts which are for the benefit of his ward, a Will may be accepted for registration after the death of the testator from the guardian of a person claiming under it."

Another contention on the defendant's side was, that section 87 of the Registration Act cures the defect of jurisdiction when a Registering Officer registers a document presented to him more than four months after its execution or after its arrival in British India provided that the Registering Officer bona fide believed that it had been executed within four months or had been brought into British India within four months. Let us suppose a case in which the Sub-Registrar in good faith reads a document dated in January as dated in June and registers it in October. I do not think this is a mere irregularity which could be cured by section 87.

Next, it was argued that under Hindu Law the natural father of the boy after he had been adopted away, ceases to be his natural guardian. Admitting that this is so, it has been held in a Bombay case [Nirvanaya v. Nirvanaya (14)] that the natural father would continue to be the proper guardian of his son so far as it is necessary to take all steps to assert and establish his rights to be the heir of the adoptive father as against his rival claimants.

The next question is one of fact, namely, whether the defendant was actually adopted by Latchamma. I think the evidence is simply overwhelming on this point in defendant's favour.

[His Lordship then goes into the evidence on the question.]

If the adoption is true and if the authority to adopt is genuine and if it is a valid authority to adopt as I have found, the plaintiffs have no case. As the 2nd defendant is the sole heir entitled to inherit the property as the daughter's son of Kothandaramiah No. 2, the dismissal of both suits by the District Judge has to be upheld.

In the result, the appeals fail and should be dismissed with costs of the principal defendant.

UPPER BURMA JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 444 OF 1919.

March 31, 1920.

Present:—Mr. Heald, A. J. C.

MA ME I—APPELLANT

versus

MAUNG LAUK HNYA AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Buddhist Law, Burmese—Gift by grand-parent to grand-child, nature and object of—Possession, delivery of, whether necessary—Donee, whether can sue donor for possession.

Gifts made by grand-parents to grand-children are an exception to the ordinary rule of Buddhist Law under which an actual delivery of possession is necessary to validate a gift. Such gifts are valid without any transfer of possession. [p. 1001, col. 1.]

These gifts are, however, merely contingent not actual, and the property so given remains absolutely at the disposal of the donors for their lifetime, the rules for such gifts operating not as between donor and donee, but as between the donee and his co-heirs, and affecting only the partition of the estate on the donor's death [p. 1001, col. 2.]

The intention of such gifts is to secure that the grand-children who, being presumably younger, might fare badly in competition with their elder uncles and aunts, shall receive such share of the inheritance as the grand-parents consider fair. [p. 1002, col. 2.]

MA ME I v. MAUNG LAUK HNYA.

Mr. N. M. Mukerjee, for the Appellant.

Mr. Maung Su, for Respondents Nos. 1 and 2.

JUDGMENT.—Appellant's case was that about 25 years ago, when she was a child of about eight, her grand-parents, U Kyi and Ma Kan, sent for her from Lower Burma after her father's death and gave her the palm-grove, now in dispute, along with other property so as to ensure that she should receive a proper share of their inheritance: that she left all the property so given in the custody of her grand parents and returned at once to Lower Burma; that about ten years ago her grand-mother, without her knowledge or consent, mortgaged the palm-grove to Lauk Hnya and Ma Ein Yin, who are the present second and third respondents, and that she was entitled to recover the grove from her grand-mother on the strength of the gift and from the other respondents on the ground that her grand-mother, having given the property to her, had at the time of her transaction with those respondents no interest which she could transfer to them.

So far as appellant's claim as against her grand mother is concerned, her suit was clearly collusive, since it was admitted that she and her grand-mother had together attempted to redeem the property from Lauk Hnya and Ma Ein Yin, and had been resisted on the ground that the transaction was a sale and not a mortgage. It was admitted also that appellant and her grand-mother on the one side and Lauk Hnya and Ma Ein Yin on the other had referred the dispute between them to arbitration, and it is clear that, when the attempt at arbitration proved abortive, appellant adopted the device of framing her suit as a claim against her grand-mother so as to avoid raising the question whether the transaction by which Lauk Hnya and Ma Ein Yin came into possession of the property was a mortgage or a sale.

The grand-mother, Ma Kan, died soon after the institution of the suit and her daughter, Ma Tun Gywe, who was of course appellant's aunt, being her father's own sister, was brought on the record as her legal representative. She filed a written statement alleging merely that the transaction with Lauk Hnya and Ma Ein Yin was a mortgage, but as that statement was manifestly inadequate she was examined on oath before issues were framed and she then said that on her brother's death, about twenty years ago, her parents gave the palm grove to appellant; that appellant was put into possession of the property but returned it at once to the custody of her grand-parents and returned to Lower Burma, and that about ten years ago her mother, Ma Kan, mortgaged the grove to Lauk Hnya and Ma Ein Yin. She admitted that her mother and appellant had attempted to redeem the mortgage and that Lauk Hnya and Ma Ein Yin then alleged that the transaction was a sale and not a mortgage.

Lauk Hnya and Ma Ein Yin filed a written statement putting appellant to proof of her title, which they expressly denied. They said that Ma Kan was owner of the grove and sold it to them outright for Rs. 80 about the year 1897.

It is clear that on appellant's suit, as framed, she had to prove not only the fact but also the validity of the gift which she alleged.

The Trial Court, after hearing the evidence, came to the conclusion that there was an oral gift and that the change of possession which was alleged to have accompanied it was merely verbal, but held nevertheless that such a gift was sufficient to give appellant a good title to the property, and that Ma Kan, who, by the gift to appellant, had divested herself of all interest, had no power to transfer that property to Lauk Hnya and Ma Ein Yin. The learned Judge, therefore, gave appellant a decree for possession of the property and for costs as against Lauk Hnya and Ma Ein Yin.

Lauk Hnya and Ma Yin appealed, making both appellant and her aunt respondents, and the lower Appellate Court pointed out that, in view of the fact that appellant was a mere child at the time of the alleged gift, it was doubtful whether she was capable either of accepting a gift of immoveable property on her own behalf or of making a valid transfer of possession of such property to her grand parents. The learned Judge also pointed out that the crucial test of the completion of gifts under Burmese Buddhist Law is actual delivery of possession, and that in the present case no such delivery of possession could possibly be held to have been made. He, therefore, held that the gift was invalid, and he went on to say that, in view of the fact that appellant's grandmother, Ma Kan, was in possession of the property as owner up to the time of the alleged gift and remained in possession as ostensible owner with appellant's consent during the 25 years which have elapsed since that gift. Lauk Hnya and Ma Ein Yin would be in the position of bona fide transferees without notice from an ostensible owner so that even if appellant's story of the gift were true and if she could prove that the transaction was a mortgage and not a sale she would still have to redeem their mortgage before she could obtain possession of the property. Appellant's suit was, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Appellant now comes to this Court on second appeal on the following grounds, namely :—

(1) that the gift was valid ;

(2) that the lower Appellate Court was wrong in holding that a minor acting on his own behalf cannot legally either accept a gift of a immoveable property, or transfer possession of such property ;

(3) that the lower Court had no right to decide such questions as to the capacity of a minor without specific issues ;

(4) that delivery of possession was not necessary to validate such a gift as appellant alleged ;

(5) that in any case delivery of possession was proved, and ;

(6) that, even if the gift was invalid, appellant was entitled to redeem the mortgage and ought to have been allowed to amend her plaint so as to claim redemption.

I have read the records and heard appellant's learned Advocate.

The argument on which the first and fourth of the grounds of appeal are based is raised for the first time in this Court and is based on a passage in May Oung's Burman Buddhist Law recently published. That argument is that gifts made by grand-parents to grand-children are an exception to the ordinary rule of Buddhist Law under which an actual delivery of possession is necessary to validate a gift, and that such gifts are valid without any transfer of possession. I have no hesitation in accepting that as a true statement of the Burmese Buddhist Law. In the miscellaneous collection of rules to be found at the end of the 10th book of Manugye where gifts generally are considered with reference to inheritance, the rule about gifts made by grand-parents to grand-children is clearly laid down in the following passage:—

"As for property divided by grand-parents let there be no question whether possession was given or was not given. As the property is given, so let the grand-child have it."

The other texts on the same subject collected in section 130 of Volume I of the Kinwun Mingyi's Digest give the same rule, which is also mentioned in the texts collected in section 256 of the same Volume of the Digest. I think, therefore, that there can be no doubt that the kind of gift mentioned in those passages is valid without transfer of possession.

But it does not follow that such a gift is a gift in the sense in which the word is ordinarily used in English Law or even in ordinary parlance.

Twelve kinds of gifts are mentioned in the passage from Manugye referred to, and for the validity of all but two of them actual transfer of possession is necessary. The two exceptions are, gifts made to a son on his entering the priesthood, which are commonly known as "Shinbyu" gifts, and gifts made by grand-parents. The rules governing "Shinbyu" gifts are clearly laid down in the 10th book of Manugye, and have been judicially recognized in the cases of Nga Pan U v. Mi Kyu (1) and Ma Pan Nyun v. Ma Hla Ein (2). In the latter of these two cases it was held that such gifts are merely contingent, not actual, and that the property so given remains absolutely at the disposal of the parents for their lifetime, the rules for such gifts operating not as between donor and donee, but as between the donee and his co heirs, and affecting only the partition of the estate on the parents' death. Such gifts would seem, therefore, to be mainly, if not entirely, a mere apportionment of inheritance and not gifts in any strict sense at all.

The question then arises whether the effect of the only other kind of gift which chattels was absolutely vested in trustees ten years before the bill was filed, for the sole benefit of the defendant." He states further on: "But the voluntary gift of part of his own property by one particeps criminis to another, is in itself neither fraudulent nor prohibited by law, and the present is not the case of a man repenting of an immoral purpose before it is too late and seeking to recall, while the object is yet unaccomplished, a gift intended as a bribe to iniquity. If public policy is opposed (as it is) to vice and immorality it is no less true, as was said by Lord Truro in Benyon v. Nettlefold (2) that the law, in sanctioning the defence of 'particeps criminis' does so 'on the grounds of public policy, viz., that those who violate the law must not apply to the law for protection."' Then, referring to a dictum of Lord Chancellor Campbell in Coulson v. Allison (3) and a decree of Vice-Chancellor Stuart in Wootton v. Wootton, he observes that: "It may be that the door of this Court is not closed against persons repenting of such an unlawful connection and desirous of extricating themselves from fetters which, if relief were refused, might practically bind them to it." The case referred to here is one of mutual settlement made on the occasion of a fictitious marriage, and the observation in this part of the judgment applies to cases of executed transfers for an unlawful purpose in which the Court will interfere to relieve the transferor but only when the unlawful or immoral purpose has not been accomplished and the transferor repents of his action in time. The law as propounded here has been followed in India in many cases but it is sufficient to refer to only some of them [Sidlingappa v. Hirasa (4), Petherpermal Chetty v. Muniandy Servai (5), Ram Sarup v. Kishan Lal (6), Thosi Muthukannu v. Shunmugavelu Pillai (7) and Tayaramma v. Sitaramasami Naidu (8).] It is, however, argued by the learned Pleader for the appellant that section 6 (h) clause (2), of the amended Transfer of Property Act has made a difference in the law in this country. That section says that "no transfer can be made for an unlawful object or consideration within the meaning of section 23 of the Indian Contract Act." The argument based on this clause is that the transfer for such an object or consideration is ipso facto void and, therefore, the transferor can come to Court and ask its assistance in getting back the property. I do not think that such a far reaching effect as the annulling of an established rule of law as laid down in Ayerst v. Jenkins (1) and followed consistently in the Indian Courts could have been intended by this clause. It may be pointed out here that, so far as the amendment goes, that is, the changing of the words "illegal purpose" into "unlawful objection", its sole object was to amend the law on a minor point with respect to an actionable claim. It would have been far from the object of the Legislature to think of modifying the well-established rules of equity as propounded in Ayerst v. Jenkins (1), by an indirect amendment of this nature. However that may be, the words of this clause do not necessarily bear out the extreme contention of the appellant. That clause does not lay down in what classes of cases the Court will or will not assist a person 'particeps criminis,' all that it says is that a transfer for an unlawful consideration cannot be made. The language is certainly not very happy, but all that was intended was that the Court will not enforce a transfer which would have the effect of carrying out its unlawful object. That is quite consistent with the well established doctrine of law already referred to. But we do not see that a further inference can be drawn that a person who made such a transfer for an immoral consideration, and who has achieved his object by that transfer can say now "I have achieved my unlawful and immoral object and the Court must give me back the property." That would be going directly against the policy which this very clause seeks to enunciate. We must overrule this contention and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

OLDFIELD, J.—I agree and only desire to notice one of the grounds of the lower Appellate Court's decision. The lower Appellate Court held that the suit document was executed in consideration of future cohabitation between the first defendant and the second defendant, but it went on to hold that such an agreement was not for an immoral purpose, because concubinage is not usually regarded as immoral in the caste to which the parties belong. We do not think that that is a proper test. It is not suggested by the lower Court that there is any question of concubinage in this case being regarded as equivalant to marriage and no reason has been shown why we should so regard it. The lower Court was not at liberty to rely on the sentiment of one section of the community as decisive with reference to a matter of ordinary morality. On such a matter, the law must have regard to the sense of the community as a whole.

UPPER BURMA JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 259 OF 1919.

January 5, 1920.

Present:—Mr. Heald, A. J. C.

MAUNG NGA—APPELLANT

versus

MA PYU—RESPONDENT.

Buddhist Law, Burmese—Divorce, suit for, frame of —Partition, whether must be prayed for, along with divorce.

Suits for divorce under the Burmese Buddhist Law should ordinarily be framed and tried as suits for one or other of the three kinds of divorce permitted by that law, or for one or more of those kinds of divorce in the alternative, and the question of the existence or status of the property to be partitioned between the parties should be left to be decided after the decree for divorce has been given. [p. 1008, col. 1.]

When once it has been decided which of the three forms of divorce is to be granted, there can be no doubt as to which method of partition is to be adopted. [p. 1007, col. 2.]

Mr. L. Pillay, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. Mukerjee, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Appellant and respondent had been husband and wife for some eight or ten years and respondent sued for divorce on the ground that appellant was addicted to drink and to gambling and threatened and ill-used her. She alleged that there was no jointly acquired property and claimed divorce as by mutual consent, that is, on terms of her being allowed to take back her own separate property. She said that of her separate property a house and a cart and two bullocks were in appellant's possession and that she proposed to sue him separately for possession of them. She admitted that there were certain presumably joint debts but she did not say whether or not she proposed to undertake liability for half of those debts.

Appellant objected to the divorce and denied the ill-treatment. He denied that there were any debts and said that the house, cart, and bullocks which respondent claimed as her separate property were really jointly acquired property, that there was also other jointly acquired property consisting of another house, two pieces of land and the produce thereof, besides Rs. 300 in money which was in respondent's possession. He said further that he had had to sell the cart for Rs. 45 to defray his expenses in connection with the suit.

The Trial Court dismissed respondent's suit on the ground that it was proved that there was jointly acquired property and that respondent could not sue for divorce without claiming partition of that property. The learned Judge also expressed an opinion that the cruelty proved or alleged was not sufficient under Burmese Buddhist Law to justify divorce.

Respondent appealed and the lower Appellate Court held that the Trial Court was not justified in dismissing the suit on the ground given, and, finding that cruelty sufficient to warrant a divorce as by mutual consent was proved, gave respondent a decree for divorce and remanded the case to the Trial Court for an enquiry about the jointly acquired property. Naturally, the respondent who had got all she claimed, namely, a divorce as by mutual consent, and who had already in her plaint said that she did not allege that there was any jointly acquired property, did not take any further trouble in the matter, and the Court holding, quite wrongly of course, that the burden of proof was on her, found that it was not proved that there was any jointly acquired property.

Meanwhile, however, the appellant had appealed to this Court against the lower Appellate Court's decree granting respondent a divorce.

His grounds of appeal are as follows :—

(1) that the lower Appellate Court was not competent to pass a decree for divorce until a finding had been recorded on the question whether or not there was jointly-acquired property ;

(2) that respondent's suit, being a suit for bare divorce without partition, was not maintainable, and

(3) that there was no proof of such cruelty as would warrant a decree for divorce.

I have read the records and heard the learned Advocates on both sides.

The case seems to me to illustrate the inconvenience of the view which has been held by this Court, that under Burmese Buddhist Law, no suit for divorce without partition of property lies. That view was last affirmed in the case of Mi Saw Bwin v. Nga San Nyun (1), in which the Privy Council's ruling in Maung Pe v. Ma Lon Ma Gale (2) was discussed and an attempt was made to show that it did not affect the previous ruling of this Court in Nga Chit Nyo v. Mi Myo Tu (3). That attempt was not, in my opinion, successful. Their Lordships of the Privy Council were dealing with a case in which the husband obtained a decree for bare divorce against his wife and then filed a separate suit for partition of the property. In the latter suit it was decided by the Chief Court of Lower Burma that he could not succeed because he could have sued for partition at the time when he sued for divorce and that, because he failed at that time to obtain the leave of the Court under Order II, rule 2, to institute a separate suit for partition, he could not be allowed to institute such a suit. The Privy Council set aside this decision on the ground that "the cause of action for the divorce was the misconduct of the wife, but the cause of action for the partition was the divorce of the wife founded on that misconduct."

Their Lordships went on to say that, "the partition may no doubt be treated as relief consequential upon the divorce and, therefore, dealt with in the same suit, but the evidence is different and the ground of divorce must be first and separately proved as a distinct cause of action before any question of partition can properly arise. There is, therefore, not necessarily any hardship on the defendant in severing the two matters. Indeed, it may, and generally would, be the more convenient course finally to settle the question of the divorce and the misconduct before entering upon an enquiry as to partition which would be altogether unnecessary if the decree were refused, or would be put on a different basis if the misconduct were disproved." With reference to these remarks the learned Judicial Commissioner who dealt with the case of Mi Saw Bwin v. Nga San Nyun (1) said that their Lordships "made some general observations in regard to divorce and partition which probably apply to most systems of marriage law, but are not consistent with the peculiar provisions of the Burma Buddhist Marriage Law." It is with these last words that I venture to disagree. I think that there can be no doubt that Sir George Shaw read into the texts from section 441 of the Kinwun Mingyi's Digest, on which he relied, more meaning than they were intended to bear. The rule that after divorce the parties should not re-marry until the property had been divided was obviously one of convenience, not of law. If quarrels which would bring in fresh parties were to be avoided, it was clearly desirable that partition should be effected before the divorced couple entered into fresh connubial relations, but the extract from Manugye says without ambiguity that the absence of partition is no legal bar to re-marriage, and in view of the remarks of the Privy Council as to the authority of Manugye made in the case of Ma Nhin Bwin v. U Shwe Gone (4), there can

I think be no further doubt on the point. Further, the Manugye makes the proper procedure clear when it says that "the division can be made according to the terms of the divorce." So far as the cases which ordinarily come before the Courts are concerned, it may be said that in the Burmese Buddhist Law three kinds of divorce are recognised and all three of them are mentioned in the case of Mi Saw Bwin v. Nya San Nyun (1). These three kinds of divorce differ from each other as to the grounds necessary to be proved and as to the effect of proof of those grounds on the method of partition.

The first kind is divorce for gross misconduct of the party sought to be divorced. The case of Maung Yin Maung v. Ma So (5) in this Court is a case of that kind, and in such a case the guilty party forfeits all property including his own separte property brought to the marriage as well as his interest in the property jointly acquired.

The second kind of divorce is what is generally called divorce by mutual consent or "as by mutual consent." The cases of Maung Hmon v. Ma Meik (6) and Maung Pye v. Ma Me (7), are cases of this kind. In such cases the parties each take back what they brought to the marriage and ordinarily divide the jontly acquired property equally but there are certain exceptions to the rule of equal division in respect of particular property and under particular circumstances, see the cases of Kin Kin Gyi v. Maung Kan Gy (8) and Mi Myin v. Nga Twe (9).

The third kind of divorce is that in which divorce is granted on the petition of one party without any grounds except the desire of the petitioner for divorce, and without any fault or consent on the part of the other party. The leading case of this kind of divorce, which, it may be remarked, has not been recognised in Lower Burma, is the case of Mi Kin Lat v. Ba So (10). The rule of partition in respect of this kind of divorce would seem to be that the petitioner relinquished all claim to any share in the jointly-acquired property and has to pay all the joint debts.

Between these three forms of divorce there are no intermediate stages or gradations.

There are only the three methods of partition mentioned, namely :—

(1) forfeiture of all property by the guilty party ;

(2) equal division subject to the rules for particular property and a particular relationship between the parties ;

(3) forfeiture of all interest in the jointly acquired property to the patry divorced.

This being so, it is clear that when once it has been decided which of the three forms of divorce is to be granted, there can be no doubt as to which method of partition is to be adopted. There is, therefore, no reason whatever why a suit for any particular form of divorce should not be instituted and decree without any reference to any property which the parties may possess and why the partition of the property should not be left to be made as Manugye says, "according to the terms of the divorce." This was doubtless what their Lordships of the Privy Council had in mind when they said that the enquiry as to partition "would be put on a different basis if the misconduct were disproved."

It seems necessary, however, to note, in view of cases which have recently been before me, that it would not, in my opinion, be open to the Court to decree a divorce, say, of the second kind, on a suit by a party who claimed a divorce of the first kind unless that party consented to accept such a decree and it would be still less open for the Court to give a decree of the first kind against a wife who sued for a decree of the first kind where the husband had not sued for divorce at all.

For the reasons set forth above I venture with all respect to suggest that it is not true that the observations of the Privy Council in Nga Pe's case are not consistent with the particular provisions of Burmese Buddhist Law and cannot be applied to those provisions. On the contrary, I think, that it would avoid delay, which in such matters is particularly inconvenient, and would also avoid much confusion of issues, if suits for divorce were ordinarily framed and tried as suits for one or other of the three kinds of divorce specified above or for one or more of those kinds of divorce in the alternative, and if questions of the existence or status of the property to be partitioned were left to be decided after the decree for divorce had been given. I see no reason, therefore, to believe that a decree for divorce ought not to be passed until a finding has been recorded on the question whether or not there was jointly-acquired property, provided that that decree be read, as the lower Appellate Court's decree in this case was evidently intended to be read, as a decree for a particular kind of divorce, that kind being in this case divorce of the second kind, which was clearly what the respondent intended to claim.

This finding disposes of the first ground of appeal.

As for the second ground, I see no reason to believe that if the respondent's suit was, as appellant alleges, a suit for bare divorce without partition such a suit would not lie. I have given reasons for this opinion in considering the first ground and all that I need now say is that the decision of the Privy Council in Nga Pe's case seems to me to suggest strongly that such a suit would lie.

The third ground deals with matters of fact and evidence on which the two lower Courts are at variance. The evidence is almost entirely that of persons who might be expected to be favourably disposed to appellant. His own sister gave evidence of his coming to her house and abusing respondent and attempting to assault her. Another sister or cousin living in the same house gave similar evidence and said that he sharpened a da and threatened to kill them for taking her into their house. She is the wife of a pensioned Extra Assistant Commissioner and her evidence is presumably trustworthy. Still another relation living in the same house gave similar evidence. Maung Yun, an Advocate, said that on one occasion respondent took refuge in his house and appellant came there drunk and abused her. About a month later again appellant came there again and used filthy abuse to respondent. This witness also said that he had often seen appellant drunk.

Appellant called no evidence and did not even go into the box himself to deny the allegations made against him.

On this evidence I think that the lower Appellate Court was right in holding that the respondent was entitled to a divorce as by mutual consent and in giving her a decree for such a divorce. Such a decree, as I have already said, normally involves each party's taking back the property which he or she brought to the marriage and an equal division of the jointly-acquired property, but in this particular case there was no need for the lower Appellate Court to frame issues as to what property there was. All that was necessary was to give a decree for divorce as by mutual consent and to leave the parties either to divide any property there might be amicably or to sue for partition or recovery of any property to which he or she might claim to be entitled as a result of the divorce.

I, therefore, confirm the decree for divorce as by mutual consent, but set aside the lower Court's order remanding the case for trial of further issues.

I note that the lower Appellate Court's order granting a certificate under section 13 of the Court Fees Act was illegal, in view of the fact that the order of remand did not cover the whole of the subject-matter of the suit, and that if the Court-fee has been refunded to the respondent it should now be recovered from her.

The appellant will pay the respondent's costs throughout.

Decree confirmed.

VOLUME LIX—1921.

Account, settled, when may be re-opened—Undue influence—Compound interest—Acquiescence—Interest after institution of suit, when may be awarded—Discretion of Court.

Settled accounts between two parties may be re-opened on the ground of substantial error or fraud; the existence of a fiduciary relation between the parties is not necessary

It is open to a creditor to ask his debtor to execute documents in a particular form, and the fact that a creditor writes to his debtor's servant to obtain his master's signature to that form does not raise the inference that undue influence was to be used

Where accounts contain clear and specific entries of compound interest, and they are accepted by the debtor without any objection on his part, it is a reasonable inference that he has agreed to pay compound interest.

The award of interest after institution of a suit is within the discretion of the Court and where, throughout the whole period of the dealings between the parties, compound interest has been charged and the total amount of such interest exceeds one-third of the amount of the claim, a Court would be justified in refusing future interest. Where an appeal in a criminal case is pending before the Privy Council and a free pardon is granted to the appellant, this of itself is a sufficient reason for the Board declining to entertain the appeal.

Once it appears that in a trial for sedition the principles of the law of sedition have been rightly understood by the Tribunal in India, the question whether those principles have been properly applied to the facts of the case is so much in the nature of a question of fact and depends so largely upon local conditions that it is difficult for the Board to interfere on this ground with the conclusions arrived at by the Court in India. P C KALI NATH ROY v. EMPEROR, 19 A L J. 65; 33 C. N. 567 439 ———— Agreement to refer, binding effect of—Contract, provision in, to refer to arbitration—Notice of intention to refer—Full period not given, effect of—Award, enforcement of—Duty of Court.

An agreement to submit to arbitration involves a submission signed by both parties, but an agreement to submit, provided it is an agreement, may be collected from a series of documents, even though connected by parol evidence, and the signature of any document forming part of the agreement is sufficient to bind the party signing to the submission contained in the agreement.

A contract was entered into between a firm trading in cloth at Cawnpore (vendees) and a firm of importers at Delhi (vendors) for the sale of cloth goods. The contract was in the form adopted by the Delhi Piece Goods Association, and provided for the submission of disputes to two arbitrators, one to be appointed by each party, it being agreed that if one of the parties on being requested by the other party to nominate an arbitrator failed to do so within 20 clear days of the request, the first party would appoint a sole arbitrator. A dispute having arisen the vendors intimated to the vendees their intention to appoint an arbitrator and that gentleman on 5th February gave notice in writing to the vendees to appoint their arbitrator and to attend for a final decision on 25th February failing which a decision would be arrived at by him alone in their absence. The vendees did not appoint an arbitrator, and the arbitrator appointed by the vendors submitted his award on the 25th February:

Held, that as the vendees were entitled to 20 clear days' notice and as the award was made only 19 days from the request to appoint an arbitrator, the failure to give the requisite number of clear days for the appointment was fatal to the appointment and jurisdiction of the vendor's arbitrators as sole arbitrator, and that, consequently, no arbitrator had been lawfully appointed with authority to act alone within the terms of the submission made by the parties, and his award was of no legal effect.

When a Court is asked to enforce an award, it must satisfy itself that the award is enforceable in the same way as a decree would be enforceable, if it were a decree An award which is either a mere declaration of the respective rights and liabilities of the parties in respect of a particular contract, or is an attempt to pass a sort of order or

The parties by an agreement submitted matters in dispute between them to arbitration, but owing to their conduct the arbitrators were unable to proceed. One of the parties then instituted a suit in the Court of the Munsif in respect of certain matters included in the submission, as the Munsif had no jurisdiction to deal with the entire subject-matter of the submission, but the suit was dismissed on the ground that it was not maintainable in view of the agreement to refer to arbitration which still subsisted. On appeal, the dismissal was set aside and the case remanded to the Munsif to take action under paragraph 18 of the Second Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code: the Munsif accordingly stayed the suit, and formally referred the matter to the arbitrators and umpire requesting them to proceed with the arbitration: the parties acquiesced in this decision, appeared before the arbitrators and the matter was fully litigated before this Tribunal: the arbitrators made their award, and an application to make the award a decree of Court was allowed by the Subordinate Judge notwithstanding the objection of the opposite party to the jurisdiction of the arbitration Tribunal to deal with the matter, and an appeal against this order proving unsuccessful, the matter came before the High Court in revision:

Where a share in a Survey Number is held by all the members of a Hindu joint family, notice to the manager of the family will ordinarily suffice for the purposes of section 206 (1), Berar Land Revenue Code. There is no presumption that where a manager does a certain act he does it in the capacity of manager.

There is nothing in the Berar Land Revenue Code to militate against the view that every co-parcener in an undivided Hindu family has an independent right of pre-emption which he can exercise by himself.

Bye-Laws, Municipal, validity of, test of—Interpretation, rule of.

In determining the validity of bye-laws made by public representative bodies under statutory powers, their consideration is approached from a different standpoint from bye-laws of Railway or other Companies which carry on business for their own profit, although incidentally for the advantage of the public. Courts of Justice are slow to condemn Municipal bye-laws as invalid, on the supposed ground of unreasonableness, and support them if possible by a "benevolent" interpretation, and credit those who have to administer them with an intention to do so in a reasonable manner. But, on the other hand, if a bye-law necessarily involves that which is unreasonable, it is the duty of the Court to declare it to be invalid. L B P. To justify a conviction under section 54 A of the Calcutta Police Act there must be reason to believe that the article in possession of the accused has been stolen or fraudulently obtained. The possession of an old chuddar is not enough in itself to arouse suspicion that the article was stolen or fraudulently obtained. C BAI DAS v. ALI BUX KHAN, 23 C. W. N. 1053; 22 CR. L. C. P. Tenancy Act (XI of 1898), s. 41 (2)—"Premium," meaning of—Sub-lease—Lessor agreeing to pay rent to creditor—Surrender of holding—Sub-lessee, right of, to possession—Joint family—One member tenant of holding—Other members, whether also tenants.

The term "premium" in section 41 (2) of the C. P. Tenancy Act means a payment made in lump when a lease is granted or renewed and should not be pressed so as to make it include what is ostensibly a merely periodical payment.

On 3rd July 1914 B. with the consent of the malguzar executed a simple mortgage-bond of his absolute occupancy holding in favour of L., and undertook to pay the amount due by 19 annual instalments. On the same day, B. gave a sub-lease to L's son J. of the holding for 19 years and agreed to pay the rent to the malguzar, and to pay to L. the rent payable by the sub-lessee. On 8th July 1914, B. surrendered the holding to the malguzar for a consideration, and the malguzar let the land to B's. son for a nazrana who, through his mother and guardian, executed a sub-lease in favour of the malguzar for a term of two years. On 16th April 1917 J., alleging that he had been illegally ejected in December 1914 brought the present suit for possession, and the question was whether the consideration for the sub-lease to J., viz, 19 annual payments, could be regarded as a premium:

Held, that the sub-lease to J. could not be treated as given in consideration of a premium and that he was entitled to possession thereunder.

Champerty, whether void in India—Transaction, when void—Compromise, fraudulent.

W. and Co. brought a suit to recover from the defendant losses on certain cotton contracts, based on an account the correctness of which was not disputed In this suit the third party, i. e, the party who undertook to indemnify the defendant against losses, appeared as a party, and put in an agreement of compromise between the plaintiff and defendant entered into after admission of the suit, and alleged that the effect of this agreement was that the defendant was to pay plaintiff half the sum for which the suit had been brought and as regards the balance he was to bring a third party notice against the third party that the plaintiff and defendant were to share the balance equally, and that defendant obtained this concession by agreeing to give evidence against the third party, and that, consequently, the agreement was fraudulent, collusive and against public policy, and that no decree should be passed against the defendant:

Held, (1) that as the account had been proved and also that the transactions entered therein did take place between the plaintiff and defendant which resulted in a loss for which defendant was liable, the agreement furnished no sufficient ground for not passing a decree against the defendant;

(2) that inasmuch as champerty is not void in India unless the transaction is not a bona fide one for the acquisition of an interest in the subject of litigation, but an illegitimate transaction got up for the purpose merely of spoil, or of litigation, disturbing the peace of families and carried on from a corrupt and improper motive, the agreement did not fall within the description of an illegitimate transaction, and was, therefore, not invalid. B WELD & Co. v. SHER AHMED EKBAL AHMED 10

Plaintiff sued the defendant at Lahore for setting aside an ex parte decree passed against him by the Munsif of Ferozepore. It appeared that notice of the suit in which the impugned decree was passed was issued to be served on the plaintiff in Lahore, but was not served and was returned with a report that he was evading service, whereupon the ex parte decree was passed. decision on the merits. The defendant applied for revision to the High Court :

Held, (1) that the order passed by the District Judge, being one passed on appeal against an order returning the plaint, was not appealable and that, therefore, a petition for revision was competent ;

The language of Order I, rule 3, Civil Procedure Code, is extremely wide, and even if there be only one question common to all the cases, that is sufficient to justify a joint trial.

Plaintiff sued for a declaration to the effect that certain alienations shall not affect his reversionary rights. He impleaded all the alienees as defendants in the case:

Held, that there being at least one question common to all the transactions, namely, whether the plaintiff, by reason of his relationship to the alienor, was competent to maintain the suit it was not bad for misjoinder of parties. L JIWAN SINGH v GARBHA SINGH 522

In determining the applicability of Order II, rule 2 of the Civil Procedure Code to a suit respecting immovable property the mere fact that the title to the property in dispute in both suits is the same and that the property is the same does not necessarily show that the cause of action is the same. Thus, in a suit by reversionary heirs for a declaration of their right and for possession after setting aside a deed of gift, and in a subsequent suit for possession as reversionary heirs of the estate, on the ground that they were in possession and were dispossessed by the defendant, the cause of action is distinct, and the mere fact that the cause of action in the latter case arose before the institution of the previous suit, did not make it obligatory on the plaintiff to include the claim in the previous suit.

It is not necessary that all the causes of action should be joined in the same suit, but the suit should include the whole claim arising out of the same cause of action, that is, the cause of action for which the suit is brought. C MANMATHA NATH BOSE v. JAGAT RAM ROY 517

When a Court takes an account as provided by section 13 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, it does not start the account with the particular bond or mortgage-deed, or whatever it may be which is pleaded as the basis of the suit. The account is taken of the transactions between the parties to the suit, and if those transactions began at an earlier date than a particular bond, whether a money-bond or a mortgage-bond, and if the transactions led up to that particular bond then the account is taken from the earliest of the preceding transactions and is continued right up to the date of the suit.

Defendant had had several transactions with the plaintiff. A balance was made up and, in order to secure payment of the balance, the defendant executed three mortgages in favour of the plaintiff. The latter brought a suit on one of the mortgages and obtained a decree. The account taken in the suit was limited to the particular mortgage which was sued upon. Subsequently, the plaintiff sued on the second mortgage :

The provisions of paragraphs 20 and 21 of Schedule II of the Civil Procedure Code have no application to cases where the matters referred to arbitration are already the subject-matter of a suit between the parties to the reference.

Where the parties to a suit agree to refer the matters in dispute to arbitration without the intervention of the Court and an award is made on such submission prior to the decision of the suit, the submission and the award can be recorded under Order XXIII, rule 3, of the Civil Procedure Code as an agreement adjusting or compromising the suit and a decree can be passed in terms of the award.

The procedure to be adopted by parties to a suit who enter into an agreement to refer the matter in dispute in the suit or part of it to arbitration without the intervention of the Court may be summarised as follows:—

They may make the agreement an order of Court and then paragraphs 1 to 16 of the Second Schedule apply.

If they do not make the agreement an order of Court;

a they cannot ask for the agreement to be filed under paragraph 17;

b they cannot ask for the award, if made, to be filed under paragraphs 20 and 21;

c if an award is made and both parties accept it, they can apply for a consent decree in terms thereof, and there will be no need to apply for an order recording the terms of the adjustment;

d if the plaintiff disputes the award for any reason, and proceeds with the suit, the defendant can plead the award and have the case set down for hearing on the issue whether the award is binding as an adjustment;

e if the defendant disputes the award, the plaintiff can set the case down for trial on the issue whether the adjustment should be recorded:

Although, as a rule, when a Will, of which Probate is sought, affects the interest of a minor, a guardian ad litem should be appointed for the minor, yet, until a contest arises, Order XXXII of the Civil Procedure Code has no application to the proceedings

The effect of Order XXXII is, that no person can be appointed a guardian ad litem without his express consent, and the question whether the person appointed as such guardian consented to act is always one of importance on the merits, and the refusal by such a person to accept a citation when tendered to him might be regarded as a refusal by him to act. C RADHASHYAM DASYA v RANGA SUNDARI DASYA, 24 C. Civil Procedure Code—contd.

An order appointing a guardian ad litem of a minor defendant without giving notice to the minor as required by clause 4) of rule 3 of Order XXXII, of the Civil Procedure Code is without jurisdiction and is liable to be set aside.

In appointing a guardian ad litem for a minor defendant it is desirable, if possible, that the Court should consider the wishes of the minor as to the person who should be appointed. Unless there is any valid reason for refusing to appoint either the mother or the grand-mother of a minor defendant as his guardian ad litem, the mere fact that she is a parda-nashin lady is not in itself a sufficient ground for rejecting her claims. Pat RAJENDRA PRASAD v. It is not necessary that the consent of the person to be appointed guardian, under Order XXXII, rule 4 (3) of the Civil Procedure Code, should be express: it may be implied from conduct, as, where notice is served on a person to show cause why he should not be appointed guardian, and he does not appear in answer to the notice appointing him guardian.

In the absence of anything to suggest that the interests of a minor have not been duly protected in a suit, and that he has been prejudiced by the appointment of a guardian, an irregularity in the appointment is not a sufficient ground for setting aside the proceedings at the instance of the minor. A CHATTER SINGH v. The object of Order XXXII, rule 7, is that when a guardian of a minor party to a suit wishes to take the decision of a case out of the hands of ordinary Courts of Justice and to have it decided by a Court chosen by the parties, the Court ought to take into consideration the circumstances of the case and see whether the reference would be to the benefit of the minor. The Court ought, in such a case, to apply its mind fully to the matter and see whether the reference would really be to the benefit of the minor. Proceedings held in pursuance of a preliminary decree are proceedings in the suit and not in execution.

The Registrar of the Patna High Court has power to receive and dispose of applications under Order XLI, rule of the Civil Procedure Code, but the only application and the only order contemplated by that rule are an application and an order for stay of execution The Registrar, therefore, has no power to direct a stay of proceedings in a suit pending the disposal of an appeal

An Appellate Court has jurisdiction to order stay of proceedings pending the disposal of an appeal, but it does so, not by virtue of statutory power under Order XLI, rule 5, but in the exercise of its inherent power for the ends of justice

If the proceedings are bound to be protracted, and the expense involved in the taking of accounts is likely to be great, the Appellate Court will exercise a proper discretion in staying proceedings: otherwise, in the event of the decree being reversed on appeal, such expense would be wholly thrown away If the proceedings, however, are not likely to be of any length, as for instance, proceedings to ascertain the market value of certain stocks and shares there is no object to be gained by stay of proceedings, and the Appellate Court will refuse to stay proceedings. Pat NEVA OJHA v. Civil Procedure Code—concld.

Once a party agrees to submit a dispute to arbitration, and the arbitrator proceeds to evidence, it is not open to him to withdraw from the arbitration.

The adjudication of disputes by arbitration should be the result of the free consent of the arbitrator to undertake the duties of arbitrating between the contending parties who have agreed to repose confidence in his judgment.

The Court has no authority to compel a private arbitrator to arbitrate against his own will.

The mere fact, however, that a Court has used threatening language towards an arbitrator is not a ground for interference under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code in the absence of anything to show that, in consequence of such language, the arbitrator was forced to arbitrate against his will. A BASDEO MAL v. KANHAIYA LAL, 18 A. Section 150 of the Companies Act, 1882, confers certain special privileges of which a third party cannot take advantage.

The Liquidator of the Doaba Bank transferred, with the sanction of the Court, certain book debts and calls due by the contributories of the Bank to certain persons on the 24th March 1918. On the 11th August he entered into an agreement with the vendees whereby he undertook to execute powers-of-attorney in their favour in order to enable them to obtain a payment order, and sanction of the Court was obtained in respect of this agreement also. The vendees then applied under section 150 of the Companies Act, 1882, for an order of payment:

Held, that, inasmuch as the application was made in the interest and for the benefit of third parties, it could not be said to have been made 'in the name and on behalf of the Company' as contemplated by clause (a) of section 144 of the Act, and was, therefore, incompetent. L DOABA BANK LD. v KUNDAN LAL, 18 P. Held, (1 that the intention of the original contract between the plaintiffs and the defendants that there should be delivery by the former to the latter was subsequently modified and there was in fact to be no delivery;

The parties entered into a contract in India for the purchase and sale of Alizarine at a certain rate: the contract provided that if there was any fluctuation in the Syndicate rates, the conditions of the contract regarding the price would become void, and the price would be fixed by mutual consent. The Syndicate was composed of a German firm and an English member or members and regulated the supply and fixed the price of Alizarine. The Great War broke out and deliveries continued for some time, and then ceased. The purchasers brought the present action for damages for breach of the contract to continue the deliveries, and the question was, whether the War frustrated the contract either generally or by destroying the Syndicate:

Held, that the matter was purely an Indian one and there was nothing in the contract which in terms made any modification of the obligation of the sellers depend upon the continuance of the Syndicate; that as there was no fluctuation or alteration in the Syndicate rates, by reason of the Syndicate not having been operative, or for some other reason, the condition avoiding the contract if there was such fluctuation never came into operation and the contract continued on the footing of the rates specified, and that as the contract was broken the buyers were entitled to recover damages. P C TOOLSIDAS TEJPAL v VENKATACHALPATHY IYER. Where one party is clearly in possession of property and another party wants to take forcible possession of it, there is no dispute as to possession of the property within the meaning of section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and the appropriate course is to initiate proceedings under section 107 of the Code.

An order under section 107, Criminal Procedure Code, can only be passed when there is a finding that the persons sought to be bound down are guilty of wrongful acts committed or sought to be committed by them. This can only be proved by overt acts against each individual.

When wrongful overt acts are committed or threatened to be committed jointly by a number of persons, the act is really committed severally and jointly by each of them, and all of them would be liable to the penalty of section 107 of the Code. Pat LACHMI SINGH v. EMPEROR, 1 P. The Police submitted a report that, in attempting to collect lac on plum trees standing on lands comprised in the holdings of the tenants of a Zemindari concern, the officers of the latter were opposed by the lessees of the tenants, and that there was every possibility of a serious breach of the peace at any moment between the parties: an order was thereupon made by the District Magistrate directing a proceeding under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code to be drawn up and the lac trees attached: this order was attacked in a revision petition to the High Court and the question was, whether the subject-matter of the dispute came within section 145:

Held, that "lac" did not fall within the meaning of the expression "land" in section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and that the proceedings held under that section were without jurisdiction; that the matter did not come within section 147, and even if it did, no order for attachment could be made.

Where a civil suit is pending for the determination of the rights of the parties in certain property, it is improper to start proceedings under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code: if immediate steps are necessary to avert a serious breach of the peace proceedings under section 107 to bind down the parties are more appropriate. C AL MUHAMMAD v. FAKIRUDDIN MUNSHI, 24 C. Where in a proceeding under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the dispute between the parties is not one concerning land and does not involve any question of actual possession, but, as in this case, concerns the rights of the respective parties to carry on boring operations for coal over a specific area, the Court has no jurisdiction to go into intricate questions of title and possession which arise between the parties. If, in such a case, there is a likelihood of a breach of the peace, proceedings which are simple in nature and which summarily and expeditiously dispose of the matter should be adopted, and proceedings under section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code are more appropriate in such a case than proceedings under section 45. C INDIAN IRON & STEEL CO., LTD., v. BANSO GOPAL, 32 C. L. J. 54: 22 Cr. L. J. 99 403

——— s. 145, scope of—Dispute embracing several items of property—Lumping items together, legality of—Possession, decision as to, in absence of parties, legality of—Preliminary order—Failure to record reasons, effect of.

Section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code gives a Magistrate a special jurisdiction to decide a dispute as to actual possession of immovable property, on his being satisfied that the dispute is likely to cause a breach of the peace, but a decision ought not to be arrived at arbitrarily, and should be a judicial decision arrived at after giving each of the disputants an opportunity of being heard. A decision arrived at in the absence of the parties, or either of them is illegal.

Where a dispute embraces several items of property, they may be lumped together in a single inquiry provided the disputants are the same for each item. Where, however, the disputants on one or both sides are different for different items of property, the disputants concerned in each item should be given an opportunity of being heard before a decision is arrived at on the question of actual possession, because in such a case the Magistrate would have no jurisdiction to decide the question of actual possession of a number of items after only hearing the parties who claimed possession of one or two of them.

The failure by a Magistrate to record his reasons for being satisfied that there is a danger of the breach of the peace, though a serious irregularity, does not affect his jurisdiction. M VELU MALAVARAYAN v. KUPPUSAWMI PILLAI, 12 L. W. 315; 22 CR. L. J. 90 378

Section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code contemplates the existence of a dispute regarding property likely to lead to a breach of the peace and proceedings thereunder are only initiated for this purpose. The main principle which should guide a Court in taking action under section 195 or section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code is, that no prosecution should be allowed to be instituted unless there is a reasonable probability of conviction. The mere fact that there has been delay in applying for sanction, or that the applicant is actuated by malice or vindictiveness, is no ground for refusing to grant sanction, where there is a probability of securing a conviction.

Inasmuch as an order under section 195 is appealable, the High Court will not interfere in revision, but it will do so in respect of an order under section 476, if that order is shown to be perverse. N KRISHNARAO v. SITARAM, 22 CR. L. J. 151 855

The acquittal of a person charged under section 338 of the Penal Code with having caused grievous hurt by rashly driving a motor car, on the ground that it is not proved that he was driving the car, is, under section 403, Criminal Procedure Code, a bar to the trial of that person under section 16 of the Motor Vehicles Act for driving the car without a license so long as his acquittal on the same facts for a diffirent offence remains in force, as, applying the principle of autrefois acquit, he cannot be tried a second time on the same facts cognate to, or involved in the offence with which he was previously charged. Even if the object of introducing such fictitious items is to scare away pre-emptors, reversioners can derive no advantage from that circumstance.

In such a case the real issue is, what is the contract between the vendor and the vendee? And if it is found that by consent of the vendor and the vendee a fictitious amount was included in the ostensible sale-price the only matter which remains for consideration is whether the real contract is one which should be binding on the collaterals. L PUNJAB SINGH v. ARJAN, 2 L. 22 776 ground that it is based on a nullity: a decree based on a void contract is good until it is set aside in appeal, and a decree based on a void mortgage contract cannot be otherwise regarded.

In a suit for foreclosure of a mortgage the parties arrived at a compromise and a decree was passed awarding possession to the mortgagee with the provision that the defendant could redeem one-half or the whole of the mortgage within one year, and so avoid wholly or in part the execution of the decree. The mortgagor failed to redeem, and the mortgagee obtained possession of the property as owner in execution of his decree. Subsequently, the mortgagor sued to redeem the mortgage:

Held, (1) that the effect of the previous decree was that the Court decreed possession to the mortgagee as owner, but suspended execution of the decree for one year during which the mortgagor could avoid execution in whole or in part;

Dekhan Agriculturists' Relief Act—concld.

The object of the Legislature in enacting section 10A of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act was to protect the mortgagor and not the transferee, if the mortgagor was sufficiently diligent in seeking to redeem the property.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 24, 132—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 164, 339 (2)—Confession, what is—Confession recorded by Magistrate, procured by Police Officer, admissibility of—"Compelled to answer," meaning of—Approver, confessional statement of, admissibility of, in subsequent trial.

Any statement made by a person which would suggest an inference as to his guilt may be a confession within the meaning of section 24 of the Indian Evidence Act.

If it is found that a confession recorded by a Magistrate under section 164 of the Criminal Procedure Code was procured by a Police Officer by the offer of an inducement, the confession becomes inadmissible under section 24 of the Evidence Act.

Unless a person objects to any question the answer to which is likely to criminate him he cannot be said to have been compelled to give such answer within the meaning of the proviso to section 132 of the Evidence Act.

Per Shah, J.—Section 24 of the Evidence Act would apply even if the person who is said to have made the confession was not an accused person at the time that he made the confession. It is sufficient if the person ultimately comes to be an accused person with reference to the charge in respect of which he is said to have made the confession.

Though the statements made by an approver may be given in evidence against him under sub-section (2) of section 339 of the Criminal Procedure Code, it cannot be said that the operation of section 24 of the Indian Evidence Act, is altogether excluded. Ordinarily, the inducement that would appear on the surface would be the inducement of the pardon legally tendered and accepted under the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code But if it is shown in any case that there was some other influence simultaneously proceeding from any other authority which would invite the application of section 24 of the Indian Evidence Act, then the confessional part of the statements would become inadmissible by virtue of the provisions of that section.

Per Heaton, Actg. C. J.—(Hayward, J., Semble).—A statement falling within clause (2) of section 339 of the Criminal Procedure Code is removed from the operation of section 24 of the Evidence Act. B EMPEROR v. CUNNA, 22 BOM L. R. 1247; 22 CR L J. 68 324

An expert witness, however, impartial he may wish to be, is likely to be unconsciously prejudiced in favour of the side which calls him. The mere fact of opposition on the part of the other side is apt to create a spirit of partisanship and rivalry so that an expert witness is unconsciously impelled to support the view taken by his own side. diction of Court passing final decree to consider effect of death on shares of other co-parceners.

Although, ordinarily, the rights of the parties to a suit ought to be determined as at the date of the institution of the suit, a suit for partition under the Hindu Law is treated as an exception, and, in order to save costs and to prevent multiplicity of proceedings, the Courts are entitled, and even bound, to take into consideration matters subsequent to the commencement of the suit.

In point of law, a partition action does not come to an end with the preliminary decree, but continues till the final decree is made, and the shares to be decreed to the parties must be those to which they are entitled on the date of the final decree. Therefore, where a co-parcener dies after the passing of the preliminary decree, the Court passing the final decree is competent to consider the effect of the death on the shares of the remaining co-parceners. Pat KRISHNA LAL JHA v. MANDESWAR JHA, 2 P. Where there has been a separation of a Hindu joint family, but not a division by metes and bounds, a suit for joint possession by one member of the family, who has been excluded from possession, is maintainable if he was in joint possession before his exclusion, and he is entitled to be restored to the possession which he held before he was interfered with A SHEODAN KURMI v. BALKARAN KURMI, 18 A. A testamentary disposition of joint family property by a Hindu co-parcener in favour of his wife is invalid under the Hindu Law, because on the date of his death, when the Will takes effect, there is nothing for the Will to operate on, his share in the property passing to the other co-parceners by survivorship.

——— Mitakshara—Adoption of a daughter's son, whether valid—Custom of Khatris of Amritsar—Inheritance—Adopted son, share of—Joint Hindu family—Property in the hands of member, nature of—Will devising joint property, whether valid.

Under the Hindu Law, the adoption of a daughter's son is invalid, but it is valid according to a custom prevailing among the Khatris of the town of Amritsar.

According to the Mitakshara School of Hindu Law, an adopted son takes one-fourth of the entire estate in the presence of a natural son.

All the property in the hands of the members of a joint Hindu family is to be treated as joint property, but it is open to any member to show that any particular property is his separate property.

In a suit for possession by partition of certain property left by one P., it appeared that he adopted the plaintiff in July 1905. About five years afterwards, he got a son, the defendant, who relied on a Will executed by the deceased whereby he devised his entire estate to his natural son:

Held, (1) that as soon as the plaintiff was adopted by P. he became a co-parcener with the latter, and that the latter could not dispose of any property which belonged to the joint family;

(2) that the Will could operate only upon the separate property of the deceased and was invalid

Where the management of a religious institution vests in the family of the founder, the management of one member of the family must be regarded as being on behalf of all the members, including females, and not adversely to them, and such member has no right to make a testamentary disposition of that right. M MEENAKSHI ACHI v. SOMASUNDARAM PILLAI, 12 L. The Munagala Zemindari in the Kistna District is impartible, and succession thereto is regulated by the rule of primogeniture.

The succession of the widow of a Zemindar to his estate and of her daughter after her amounts to a denial of the claim of the junior branches of the family that the estate is either joint family property or owned by the family as tenants-in-common, and the possession of the daughter from the date of her succession is adverse to, and exclusive of, the claims of the other branches of the family within the meaning of Article 144 of Schedule

The language of Acts which deprive the subject of the right of recourse to the ordinary Civil Courts must not be extended beyond its least onerous meaning unless clear words are used to justify such extension.

When the same word is used in the same context in two sections of the same enactment, it is reasonable to suppose that it is used in the same sense in both.

The word "claims" in section 53 (2) (ii) of the Upper Burma Land and Revenue Regulation means, claims as against the State and does not include disputes between private individuals. The claims referred to in this section are neither more nor less than the claims mentioned in section 24 (2) of the Regulation.

Section 53 (2) (ii) of the Upper Burma Land and Revenue Regulation, therefore, does not bar the jurisdiction of the ordinary Civil Courts over disputes between private persons regarding the ownership or possession of State land or any lien upon or other interest in such land or the rents, profits, or produce thereof. U B BURMA OIL CO., LTD. v. BAIJNATH SINGH, 3 U. Where a tenant relies upon the presumption contained in section 83 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code it is for the landlord to prove an agreement or usage as to the intended duration of the tenancy.

The word "judgment" in clause 15 of the Letters Patent means a decision which affects the merits of the question between the parties by determining some right or liability. It may be either final, or preliminary or interlocutory, the difference between them being that a final judgment determines the whole cause or suit, and a preliminary or interlocutory judgment determines only a part of it, leaving other matters to be determined.

An order refusing directions in third party proceedings under rules 130 and 131 of the Bombay High Court Rules is not a "judgment" within the meaning of clause 15 of the Letters Patent of that High Court and is not appealable under that clause. B CHARANDAS CHATURBHUJ v. CHHAGANLAL, 22 BOM. In order to obtain the benefit of an extension of the period of limitation under section 20 of the Limitation Act by virtue of a payment of interest "as such" there must be something to indicate that the debtor made the payment with the intention that it should be taken in reduction or satisfaction of interest due; the mere appropriation of the payment by the creditor towards interest is not such an indication nor is the fact that interest was due at the date of the payment. The fact that the amount paid and the amount due for interest were exactly the same, may amount to such an indication.

The question of the payment of interest "as such" is a question of fact, and a plea that such a payment has been made cannot be raised for the first time in second appeal. N JAGO v. MAHADEO, 709

Purchaser for value without notice, doctrine of, whether applicable to revenue sales.

The law of limitation does not put a bar of time to any defence in any case whatever, except where a suit falls under section 26 or section 28 of the Limitation Act.

When a decree is passed against a defendant in a civil suit and his property is put up for sale in execution proceedings and he does not ask for a stay of execution, the purchaser at the execution sale acquires a good title although it may happen that, eventually, the decree against the defendant is set aside on appeal. But there is a great distinction between sales in execution of Civil Court decrees and sales by the Revenue Courts for arrears of assessment. In the latter case, if it is found that, as a matter of fact, the defendant in the revenue proceedings was entitled to hold his lands free of assessment, any sale which took place on the footing that he was bound to pay assessment would be invalid and the purchaser in such a sale would not get a good title except by adverse possession.

The doctrine of a purchaser for value without notice does not apply to sales held by Revenue Courts. B MAHADEV NARAYAN v. SADASHIV KESHAV LIMAYE, 22 BOM. L. R. 1082; 45 B. 45 118

A suit for damages is maintainable against a person who supplied the information on which a prosecution was launched, though he may not have himself figured as the complainant in the Criminal Court.

Where a Trial Court misdirects itself as to the burden of proof, but the Appellate Court appreciates the evidence from a correct standpoint, the finding of fact arrived at by the Appellate Court must be accepted in second appeal. M SHUNMUGHA UDAYAR v. KANDASAMI ASARY, 12 L. W. 170 973

Plaintiff's mother acting as his guardian mortgaged a house belonging to the plaintiff to defendant. Under the mortgage agreement the plaintiff made himself liable for the cost of reasonable improvements, also for interest on the sum expended on improvements and for repairs :

Held, (1) that the condition relating to the cost of improvements did not justify the demolition and re-building of the house at a cost equivalent to several times the mortgage-debt ;

(2) that the condition relating to the payment of interest by the plaintiff was most inequitable and unconscionable, inasmuch as it amounted to an agreement by the plaintiff to pay interest to defendant on money spent by defendant on making himself comfortable. L SURAPU v. DIWAN CHAND 764

There is no presumption that a gift made by a Muhammadan husband to his wife in lieu of dower is an absolute gift, or that in such a case the wife is only to remain in possession of the property so long as her claim is not satisfied out of the profits of the property.

Where, however, the widow is in possession to satisfy herself out of the proceeds of the property for arrears of dower, her position is that of a usufructuary mortgagee, and she cannot by any act of her own so alter the nature of her possession as to make the Statute of Limitation run against those who are entitled to the equity of redemption. Pat HIRA SINGH v. SHEIKH MOSAHEB, 2 P. Defendant married plaintiff and agreed to pay the latter a certain amount of prompt dower. Five months after the marriage the plaintiff gave birth to a fully developed child. In order to constitute the offence of cheating it is essential, in the first place, that the person who delivers property should have been deceived before he makes delivery and, in the second place, that he should have been induced to do so fraudulently or dishonestly. The deception may be by words or by conduct.

Accused lent a sum of money to the complainant and got the latter to execute a bond. He also gave the complainant a kamiati parcha in respect of his homestead land. After some years, the complainant paid the money back to accused, but the latter refused to return the bond until the kamiati parcha was returned to him :

Where on the date of a sale the vendee's right of pre-emption is equal to that of a pre-emptor, the vendee does not forfeit his right by subsequently losing the property by virtue of the ownership of which he claimed an equal right of pre-emption. The mere fact that the vendee loses the property under a decree for pre-emption makes no difference.

A right of pre-emption is a jus ad rem alienam acquirendam and not a jus in re aliena; or, in other words, the pre-emptor can, if he so wishes, by adopting the proper procedure acquire another person's property in preference to third persons, whose rights to such property are inferior to his. ——— s. 37, object of—Companies Act (VII of 1913), s. 231—Fraudulent preference by company—Person who is not creditor, whether can impeach transfer.

The object of section 37 of the Provincial Insolvency Act is to protect the interests of the whole body of creditors over whom an undue preference has been given in favour of other creditors.

The same principle applies to a transaction which is sought to be impeached under section 231 of the Companies Act, so that a disposition of a company's property cannot be impeached on the ground of fraudulent preference except on behalf of the general body of the creditors.

Therefore, a person who is not a creditor of a company, but is a debtor, cannot impeach a transfer made by the company on the ground of undue preference. L KAM SARUP v. JAGAT RAM, 2 L. 102 977

Before it can be held that a rajinama and kabuliyat really do evidence a transfer of ownership, there must be either evidence or indications furnished by lapse of time and possession and so forth, that there was in fact an intention to transfer ownership. Where, however, a granthi succeeds to property from another granthi to the exclusion of natural heirs, there is a presumption that such property has been dedicated to religious uses, even in the absence of positive evidence of actual dedication.

Riparian owners, rights of—Natural and artificial streams, difference between—Water spreading itself along fields and again running in definite channel, whether stream.

The rights of riparian owners to natural streams are somewhat different from their rights to water flowing through artificial water courses. The natural rights do not depend upon a grant or upon the ownership of the soil of the stream, but are jure naturæ incident to the ownership of the soil of the land abutting upon the stream. The rights to water flowing through artificial water courses are rights of easement, and must rest on some grant or arrangement, either proved or presumed, from, or with the owners of the lands from which the water is artificially brought, or on some other legal origin.

The proper inference from the user of the water of a natural stream though flowing in an artificial channel is that the artificial channel had been originally constructed upon the terms that all the proprietors of lands situated on the artificial channel should have the same rights in regard to the use of the water as they would have had if the stream had been a natural one.

Where the channel of a stream continues as a definite water course up to a certain point, and then spreads along certain fields, but on emerging from those fields it again runs as a definite water course, the identity of the water is not destroyed and it remains the subject of riparian rights. Pat RAM KRIPAL SINGH v. HANUMAN SINGH, 6 P. ———, rights of, nature and extent of.

The right of a riparian owner does not depend on the ownership of the soil of the stream. It belongs to the proprietor of the adjoining land as a natural incident to the right of the soil belonging to him and he is entitled to the benefit of it, as he is to all other natural advantages belonging to the land, of which he is the owner It is not based on prescription or a presumed grant, but rests on the natural advantages arising from the situation. The stream may be permanent or intermittent; but so long as it has a natural origin and flows in a known or defined channel, the right of a riparian owner to use its water, when it flows alongside his land, continues unaffected. In addition to the right to take the water when the water flows adjoining his land, a person may also have an easement to go across the land of another, when the water recedes; but such a user can only be claimed by virtue of prescription or custom. O LACHHMI NARAYAN v. GANGA BAKHSH SINGH, 7 O. A. rented certain premises in which he had stored a large number of bales of piece goods, and put a watchman in charge, who, one night, lit a hanging lamp in the hall in close proximity to the bales of piece goods, locked up the premises and went away intending to return and sleep there. On his return he found the premises destroyed by fire :

Held, that the fire was caused through the default of A.'s servant in leaving a lighted lamp unattended for some hours; that such default amounted to a negligent act, and that A. was bound to make good the damage caused under section 108 (m) of the Transfer of Property Act. M GIRDARIDOSS RADHAKISHENDOSS v. PONNU PILLAI, 12 L. ——— S. 112—Fisheries, lease of—Lease, forfeiture of—Waiver of forfeiture.

Plaintiff obtained certain fisheries on lease from the Government on the condition that they should not be transferred without the permission of the Deputy Commissioner. In 1908 the plaintiff sub-let the fisheries and thereby incurred a forfeiture of his lease and, owing to this, the Deputy Commissioner in 1911 cancelled the lease. It appeared that rent for a period subsequent to the plaintiff's granting the sub-lease and before cancellation of the lease, and for the period subsequent thereto had not only been accepted but was realised by attaching the moveable property of the plaintiff:

Held, that, having regard to the provisions of section 112 of the Transfer of Property Act, there was a waiver of the forfeiture and the plaintiff was entitled to a declaration of his title to the fisheries under the lease, and to possession thereof. C BASANTA KUMAR CHOWDHURI v. SECRETARY OF STATE 273

No hard and fast rule can be laid down as to relief against a forfeiture clause in a lease, but the general principle of equity is, that the Court will relieve against forfeiture unless the tenant has done something to forfeit his right to bring himself within the principles of equity. 3 KRISHNAJI GOVIND v. SITARAM HANMANT, 22 BOM. U. P. Electoral Rules, r. 11 (2)—

Declaration appointing Election Agent not signed in presence of Attesting Officer, whether renders nomination invalid—Election petition, maintainability of, against order of Returning Officer—Objector, liability of, for costs.

date appointing himself his Election Agent is not signed by him in the presence of the Attesting Officer, does not render the nomination of such candidate invalid. When the declaration has been filed by a candidate, the presumption is that that candidate asserts that the signature on the declaration is his own, and the Attesting Officer will accept this position until some person interested has made an objection.

An election petition is maintainable against the order of a Returning Officer declaring the nomination of a candidate invalid.

Where an objection is filed to the nomination of a candidate, and such nomination is declared invalid, the objector is liable for costs upon an election petition against such declaration, in the event of the petition being decided against him. U P SHAKIR ALI v. ABDUL HAKIM 846

Upanayanam ceremony, performance of, when valid—Irregular performance of ceremony, whether bar to adoption.

In order to render the Upanayanam ceremony of a boy valid, it must be performed by the father, or, in his absence, by another kinsman in the family to which the boy concerned actually belongs, the performance of the ceremony in a family which the boy has not entered is invalid, and the irregular performance of the ceremony in a family into which the boy is wrongly believed to have entered is a nullity, and is no bar to the subsequent adoption of the boy into that family. M VADREVU RANGANAYAKAMMA GARU v. RYALI SOMASUNDARA RAO, 43 M. 876 609

Where a contract of sale specifically provides that the whole of the earnest-money deposited by the vendee shall be forfeited in the event of his failing to pay the balance of the consideration-money within a stipulated period, and it is found that not only was he not in a position to pay that money, but that he never offered to pay, either within the time fixed or at any time afterwards, the balance of the purchase-money, he is not entitled to recover the earnest-money paid by him. C ATUL CHANDRA KUNDU v. SARAT CHANDRA LAHA, 24 C. ——— Title, want of, in vendor—Vendee, right of, to damages.

Where the title of a vendor of land is superseded by a superior title, the vendee is only entitled to be indemnified in damages for breach of warranty of title, and to ask that the damages be assessed at the enhanced value of land at the time of the suit. He is not entitled to recover the property which his vendor has obtained in substitution for the property sold. M DHADA SAHIB v. MUHAMMAD SULTAN SAHIB, (1920) M. W. N. 710; 12 L. W. 603; 39 M. Water, damage caused by flow of—Suit to recover damages, maintainability of—Rights of owners of land.

An owner of property is entitled to protect himself against water which he has not brought on his land himself. He is entitled to divert water which threatens to do damage to his land. Likewise, his neighbours have a right to protect themselves against water which threatens to do damage to their properties.

Where the plaintiff and the defendant have equal rights to protect their own properties by turning the water which threatens to flow over their lands in times of flood into a ditch, and in consequence of that the combined water which would otherwise have gone on to their respective lands causes damage to the banks of the ditch on either side, it is the business of both parties to protect themselves against damage which may result when there is an excess flow of water in the ditch, and neither party can, in such a case, have a cause of action against the other. B SHIDRAMAPPA v. MAHOMED YUSAF, 22 BOM. Will, construction of—Life-interest, forfeiture of—Remainderman, suit by, to recover estate—Limitation.

A testator by his Will gave certain properties to his mother and widow absolutely and further provided that—

"The tank and the homestead which belongs to me will remain in half and half share in possession of my mother and my wife but they will not have the power to sell the properties. On the death of both my heirs will get it. If in the meantime they go elsewhere by leaving my homestead they will not get this property."

Some time in 1867 the mother sold the property and left the house, the widow ratified the sale and also left the house. The mother died more than 12 years before the institution of the present suit, and the widow died in 1908. In 1915 plaintiff, the heir of the testator, instituted the present suit to recover possession of the property from the purchasers from the mother and widow:

Held, upon a proper construction of the Will, that it was the intention of the testator that the interest of the mother and widow should cease in the event of their death and also in the event of their leaving the family-house; that there was a forfeiture of the estate by the widow and the mother leaving the house in 1867, and that the suit having been brought more than 12 years from that time was barred by limitation. C KALI KANT CHAKERBUTTY v. RAJANI KANTA CHAKRAVARTY 308

Will—concld.

The onus of proof lies in every case upon the party propounding a Will, and he must satisfy the conscience of the Court that the instrument so propounded is the last Will of a free and capable testator, and this burden is, in general, discharged by proof of capacity and the fact of execution.

A hostile witness is one who from the manner in which he gives his evidence shows that he is not desirous of telling the truth, and when such a witness is treated as hostile and examined by the party calling him, this must be done to discredit the witness altogether and not merely to get rid of part of his testemony.

Although, in order to prove due execution of an instrument requiring attestation, it is, in general sufficient, where several witnesses have subscribed, to call one of them, but in the case of a Will, it is desirable that all capable of being called should be examined to remove all suspicion of fraud. The mere fact, however, that one attesting witness to a Will is not called would not invalidate the Will provided there were two attesting witnesses as required by law.

Where unattested alterations occur in a Will, the presumption of law is that such alterations were made after the execution of the Will, but this presumption may be rebutted (1) by direct evidence showing that the alterations accord with the obvious intention of the testator, and (2) by internal evidence and by inferences drawn from the condition of the Will. C SURENDRA KRISHNA MONDAL v. RANEE DASSI, 24 C. ———Probate—Burden of proof—Suspicious circumstances.

Where circumstances exist in connection with a Will which, in Probate proceedings, excite the suspicion of the Court it is for those who propound the Will to remove the suspicion, and to prove affirmatively that the testator knew and approved of the contents of the document, and it is only when this is done that the onus is thrown on those who oppose the Will to prove fraud or undue influence or whatever else they rely on to displace the case made for proving the Will. L B PAUL v. THOMSON, 13 BUR. Proviso (a) to clause (1) of section 2 of the Workman's Breach of Contract Act merely provides that an order directing re-payment of the advance or performance of the contract shall not be made unless the employer moves the Court within three months of the breach of the contract.

The proviso has no application to a case where a complainant has already obtained an order under section 2, sub-section (1), and is applying for an order of imprisonment under clause (2) for failure to obey the order under clause (1). L B JESMUDIN v. ISADALLY, 10 L.
